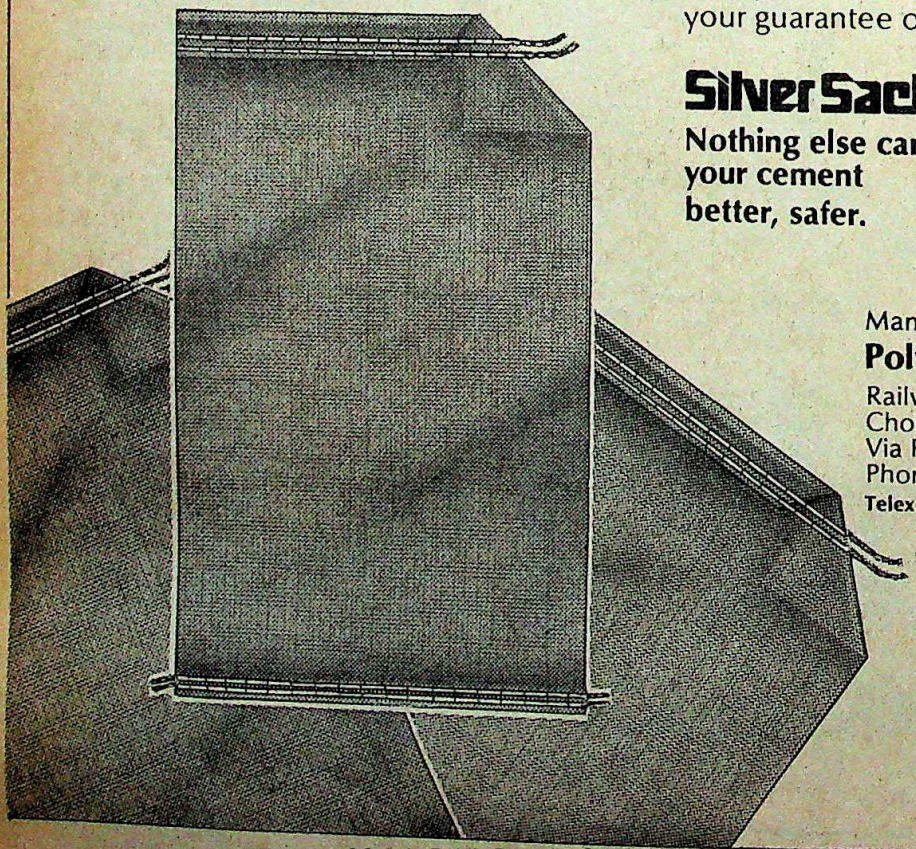
Nothing else carries your cement better, safer.



Manufacturers:

Polyspin Pvt. Ltd.

Railway Feeder Road,
Cholapuram 626 139,
Via Rajapalayam.
Phone : 2124
Telex : 0442-243 SACK IN

Efficient/407/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

only started compiling statistics about missing people about three months ago and we already have 186 names."

SO BRUTAL and reprehensible has been the crackdown and reprisals on the terrified Tamils that all they can do now is unemotionally list out the litany of the dead.

▶ On January 19, 1986, two policemen were killed in an ambush in Truthyapuram. In the cordon and search operation that followed, 23 youth were gunned down. They included labourers, students, watchmen and three church workers from the local Sacred Heart church. According to an eyewitness, the parish priest, the three church workers were told to run and then shot in the back.

▶ On December 1, 1985, a grenade thrown at an army jeep killed one officer. Subsequently, five innocent Tamil men were killed and their houses burned and looted. They were Kandapar Jeevanamdam, 40, Selvanayagam Kulanthavel, 34, Velupillai Ponnudarai, 35, Veerakulasingham, 30, Pillanayanthamby Kandaswamy, 36.

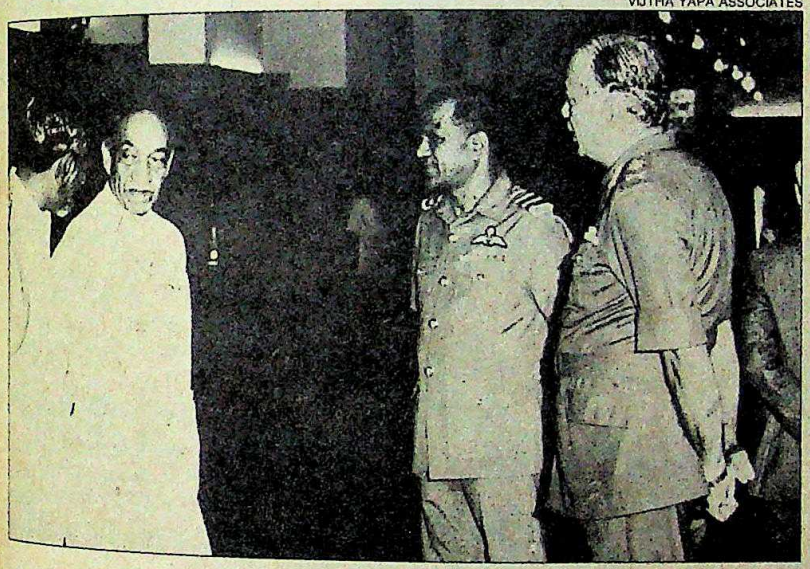
▶ Nine Tamil youths were shot dead on the Lake Road, Batticoloa, on November 11, 1985. Among them were two schoolboys studying for their A levels, Jude Koviliparampil, 17, and Sritharan Sockalingam, 17.

Says Father Chandra Fernando, whose driver was arrested and tortured so badly that he has lost the use of one hand: "The situation is so bad that I would say before we can talk of peace proposals all Tamils males between the ages of 14 and 40 must be taken out of the eastern province."

That, however, seems to be exactly what the security forces want. The Sri Lankan strategy over the last six months—to concentrate the repression by security forces in the eastern provinces rather than the Tamil-dominated north—has one basic and obvious objective. To dilute the Tamil demand for linkage of the north and east into a single linguistic province with this movement.

This is essentially why the crackdown and brutality on the Tamil population in recent months has centered around Trincomalee, the port city that holds the key to the success of the Sri Lankan strategy. The population of Trincomalee is equally divided between Sinhalese, Muslims and Tamils and in the past few months hundreds of Tamil settlements have been attacked and razed to the ground in an attempt to drive them northwards. According to Indian High Commission sources in Colombo, there are currently 8,645 Tamils in refugee camps in the Trincomalee district and another 19,800 whose livelihood has been seriously threatened.

VIJITHA YAPA ASSOCIATES



Jayewardene conferring with his service chiefs: double talk

What is less easier to understand is the strategy of the Indian Government in virtually turning a blind eye to the atrocities and banking heavily on the eventual success of the peace negotiations. The Indian High Commission in Colombo has been sending detailed accounts of the repression of the last few months but so far New Delhi has played a wait and watch game. Diplomatic sources say that Indian High Commissioner J.N. Dixit is becoming increasingly frustrated at New Delhi's ambivalence.

There is increasing agreement in Colombo's diplomatic circles that New Delhi is having the wool pulled over its eyes by the Jayewardene Government where the peace proposals are concerned. This was clearly evidenced by the last minute cancellation of foreign secretary Romesh Bhandari's visit to Colombo in early February when it was discovered that Jayewardene's 57-page response to the TULF draft proposals contained not a single concession to the three main demands.

Meanwhile, the hardliners in the Sri Lankan Government seem to be gaining increasing support in their call for a military solution to the problem from the majority Sinhala, the Buddhist clergy and the opposition parties. In Kandy, the Asgiriya Mahanayake, one of the five Buddhist head monks, told INDIA TODAY that the main Tamil demands were totally untenable. "Asking for the north and east to be linked is virtually creating a separate country containing two thirds of our coastline. As for their own police force, they will use it only to go to war with us." Leader of the Opposition in Parliament, Anura Bandaranaike added that in his view military repression "was necessary to control terrorism".

National Security Minister Lalith Athulathmudali, however, continues to deny that innocent Tamils are being killed. Referring to the Iruthyapuram massacre, he exploded: "Who told you they were innocent? This is typical of the Tamil disinformation service in Madras. It is simply not true. Everyone who was killed in Iruthyapuram was a terrorist."

Clearly, the Sri Lankan Government is convinced that the Tamil militants will have to be dealt with as a military problem quite separate from the political negotiations for ethnic peace. The militants, on their part, are convinced that they can hold out and eventually win in an armed struggle. With both sides unyielding, Sri Lanka is further away from solving the ethnic crisis than it was a year ago. There was, however, some indication last fortnight that the Indian Government had finally woken up to the fact that Colombo's pious posturing on the ethnic issue is merely an excuse to buy time. The foreign office is now busy undertaking a major review of its Sri Lankan policy and there are indications that in its future dealings with Colombo, New Delhi will take an infinitely harder line than it has so far.

—TAVLEEN SINGH in Batticoloa

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Now is the moment for the widely travelled, who have seen gracious living everywhere.
A world famous architect styles exclusive designer homes that blend the best of both worlds."

A.N. Haksar
Chairman
Gulmohar Estates Pvt. Ltd.

Garden E
condominiu

Welcome the world's la ternational ramesh Kho designer hon comforts wit countryside.

Professio
unique assu

The Boar leaders in ma you timely co without cost period.

Space ex

The use o and basemen and parking

The styli

This is tr
Estate. The t houses that own terrace unknown in

Never-be

100% sta anytime supp supply of wa disposal sys of aircoolin them all.

Full mai

Plumbers operators, se
all right ther

All basic

Petrol sta stations, Pos from the city nursery scho

Desig

Artist's rendering of a street showing the Estate Greens at Garden Estate in the Green Gulmohar Colony, just 15 minutes from New Delhi's city centre.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Garden Estate — India's first ever condominium

Welcome to the finest concept, of the world's latest living styles. An internationally acclaimed architect, Ramesh Khosla, expertly styles designer homes that combine city comforts with the tranquillity of the countryside. At Garden Estate.

Professional management offers unique assurances

The Board of Directors is a set of leaders in management. This assures you timely completion of your home without cost escalations in the interim period.

Space expertly, elegantly used

The use of central plazas, avenues and basements makes driveway space and parking space open and easy.

The stylish split-level concept

This is truly unique to Garden Estate. The two-storeyed duplex houses that give you the luxury of your own terraced garden; a privacy unknown in our humdrum lives.

Never-before facilities

100% standby power assuring you round-the-clock supply of electricity. 24-hour supply of water. Independent sewage disposal system. Centralised ducting for air-cooling all homes. You have them all.

Full maintenance services

Plumbers, electricians, lift operators, security personnel. They are all right there in Garden Estate.

All basic conveniences

Petrol stations, cooking gas stations, Post Office, transport to and from the city, medical facilities, nursery school, primary school,

Artist's rendering of the Central Plaza supermarket, shopping centre, plant nursery, laundromats.

All the fun facilities

Central Plaza Club with swimming, tennis, squash, and much more. Indoor games. A well-stocked video library, and more that makes life harmonious for a like-minded community.

Unusual, additional facilities

Housing for domestic servants. Adequate storage space. Ducting for airconditioning. Special kitchen fittings (optional).

Designer homes for your choosing:

Garden Bungalows: The sheer luxury of a splendid private residence.

Estate Greens: The same luxury on a split-level structure, superbly designed.

Terrace Greens: Terraced duplex apartments that combine elegance with convenience.

Manhattan Apartments: Up-to-the-minute style with gorgeous green views.

Penthouses: A top-of-the-world feeling of contemporary luxury.

The Promoters: The project is promoted by Gulmohar Estates Pvt. Ltd. whose Board of Directors are:

Mr. A.N. Haksar (Chairman)
Mr. L.M. Thapar
Mr. Mohinder Pal Puri
Mr. M.M. Sabharwal
Mr. Rakesh Aggarwal
Mr. S. Swarup

I'm interested in material giving more details of the Garden Estate offers.

Name: _____

Address: _____

_____

_____

Professional Status: _____

_____

415 Devika Tower, 6 Nehru Place
New Delhi 110 019.

GARDEN ESTATE

Designer homes by an internationally recognised architect.

GE/24/85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A stirring performance, a stellar role ... now, a Silver Jubilee hit!

It is the 1400th action-packed week at HPF – a name that characterises the spirit of self-reliance in photofilms.

A name that has been directing the growth of photofilm technology since 1961. Producing, in the process, over 100 million sq mtrs of high-quality photofilms – enough to cover the entire city of Calcutta.

HPF: sustaining a Rs 2500 crore industry

In its lead role, HPF has been meeting the entire needs of cine positive, cine sound negative and medical X-ray films. Plus, a significant share of industrial X-ray, graphic arts and roll film as well as bromide paper. Sustaining a total investment of Rs 2000 – Rs 2500 crores and an employment of 2,00,000 people.

Making profits, saving a fortune

HPF has emerged as a progressive, profitable public sector company employing 3200 people. In 1984-85, turnover crossed the Rs 100 crore mark and profit rose to Rs 6 crores. Taking the total foreign exchange savings to Rs 700 crores. Return on investment has nearly tripled – from 14% in 1978-79 to 39% in 1984-85. Through continuous Research & Development, HPF has also taken its capacity utilisation to 200% of the original rated capacity in 1984.

HPF: a responsible corporate citizen

HPF is continuously alive to its social responsibilities. From adopting the backward village of Ekoni to providing employment to the physically handicapped to nurturing the growth of a Rs 3 crore ancillary industry, HPF is living the role of a true corporate citizen.

Towards self-reliance and beyond

As HPF enters the Silver Jubilee year, it is ready to lead India into the 21st century in photofilm technology. It has a massive Rs 330 crore expansion plan to manufacture a whole new range of products in collaboration with best-known companies of the world.

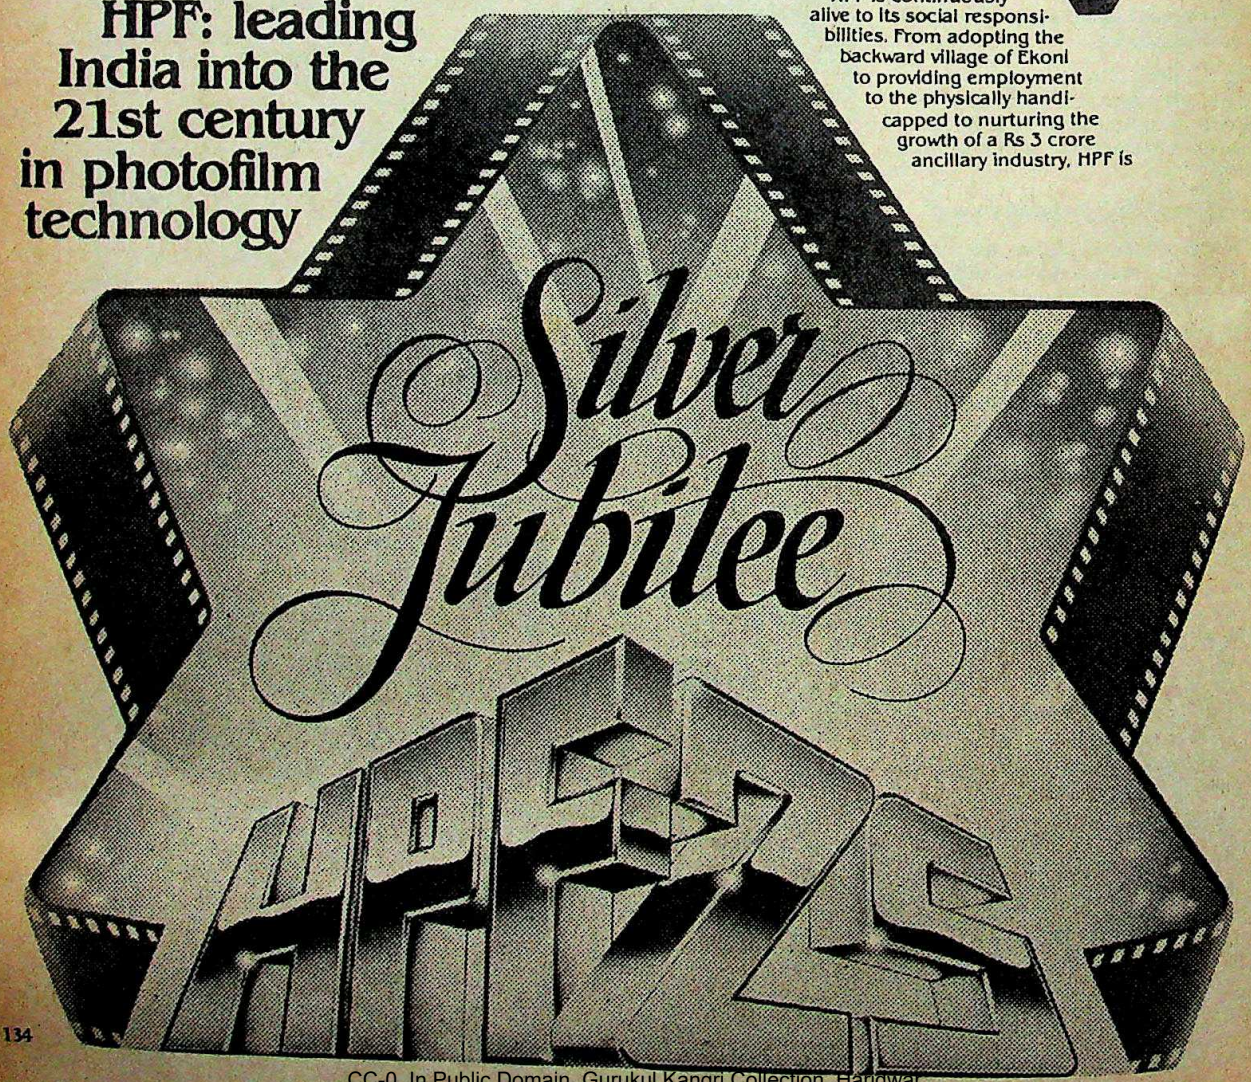
Yes, HPF today is very much a part of photofilms. You simply can't picture one without the other.

Hindustan Photofilms Mfg Co Ltd

(A Government of India Enterprise)
Uthagamandalam 643 005

INDU

HPF: leading India into the 21st century in photofilm technology



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HOCKEY

New Goals

NOT SINCE India was toppled from the pinnacle of world hockey by Pakistan two decades ago have the prospects in the national game looked so good. It isn't just the historic 6-3 whipping that the Indian team handed out to Pakistan at Hyderabad that has led to this optimism, though the fact that India has never scored as many goals against Pakistan or won by such a wide margin was cause for justifiable euphoria. It isn't also that Indian Captain Mohammed Shahid, whom Pakistan's Captain Hassan Sardar rates as the world's best forward, is finally coming into his own that accounts for the confidence.

It's all these and more. Everything seems to be coming together—responsive, active and far-looking administrators, dedicated coaches and a fine bunch of players with just the right mix of youth and experience. Irrespective of the final tally in the seven-Test series with Pakistan, it is now agreed that the Indian team has a sharpened cutting edge though it is possible that the team may fail to click on a particular day.

For India the series is part of a bigger plan to promote the game drawn up by the Indian Hockey Federation (IHF) President M.A.M. Ramaswamy. The first goal he has set before the team is the gold medal from the October Seoul Asian Games. Says Ramaswamy: "We have to give the big push from behind as hockey lovers and leave it to the expert coaches and players to get on with the job." Since the industrialist-racehorse owner slipped back into the saddle of the IHF less than a year ago, he has initiated several off-field moves to give hockey this "push", including:

- appointing a team of officials, including coaches and a doctor (former hockey player Susainathan Anthony Cruz), which will accompany the team till the end of 1986;
- launching a systematic talent hunt by organising the subjunior championship for under-15 at Lucknow in January and the juniors at Srinagar in May-June;
- increasing the daily out-of-pocket allowance of players from Rs 25 to Rs 40;
- giving former players only one-fourth of the earnings from a benefit match and stashing away the rest in the Players' Benevolent Fund;
- directing state associations and players' employers not to call the national team's players for other competitions before the Asian Games;
- chasing the Human Resources Ministry in Delhi and in the states to honour the offer of six synthetic surfaces made by the Society for the National Institutes of Physical Education and Sports;
- inviting foreign referees to supervise matches both in the nationals and internationals played in India.

Captain Shahid: driving force

Ramaswamy's calculated moves may seem more like a matter of logistics but cumulatively they are bound to have a great impact. Said the chef-de-mission of the team for 1986, D.S. Murthy: "Only if the same set of people accompany the players at least for a year can they build a personal rapport with the players and ensure they are in competitive trim." Added Manager Jhamanlal Sharma: "There have been embarrassing moments when a manager or a coach came a week before the team left Patiala for a major tournament and then tried to assess the plus and minus points of the players. Only a long-standing relationship in which we counsel players even on their personal problems keeps them free from worry."

The IHF has also appointed M.P. Ganesh, Harmik Singh and Charles Cornelius, all former Olympians, as the team's coaches and former India captain Ajit Pal Singh as an observer. Only this set of officials will travel with the team to all internationals this year. Shahid admits the incentives and encouragement "makes the player feel like a VIP and give off his very best". Says Ramaswamy: "Good sports administration means treating the player as supreme." Echoed The Hindu's correspondent: "This touch of realism is necessary. It is only in hockey that we are in the top five bracket among 105 hockey playing countries."

The IHF has also launched a plan to build a second 11 which can last a full 70 minutes and, like coach Harmik Singh says, "move up and down the field like a piston engine." India is to send these players to Malaysia in July for competition experience. As Ramaswamy sums his intentions: "Hockey must be made an addiction and have a vice like grip on our youth. Hereafter, the nationals will be played on synthetic surfaces only, more international teams will be invited so that more players can watch them and a championship on the World Cup lines in the memory of the great wizard Dhyan Chand will be held in Delhi in December." This, the golden jubilee year of the hockey nationals, could well be the start of a new era in Indian hockey.

—AMARNATH K. MENON

FORM IV (See Rule 8)

1.	PLACE OF PUBLICATION	: NEW DELHI
2.	PERIODICITY OF ITS PUBLICATION	: FORTNIGHTLY
3.	PRINTER'S NAME	: CHANDER M. RAI
	WHETHER CITIZEN OF INDIA?	: YES
	IF FOREIGNER, STATE THE COUNTRY OF ORIGIN	: DOES NOT APPLY
	ADDRESS	: K-BLOCK, CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001.
4.	PUBLISHER'S NAME	: CHANDER M. RAI
	WHETHER CITIZEN OF INDIA?	: YES
	IF FOREIGNER, STATE THE COUNTRY OF ORIGIN	: DOES NOT APPLY
	ADDRESS	: LIVING MEDIA INDIA PRIVATE LIMITED, K-BLOCK, CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001.
5.	EDITOR'S NAME	: AROON PURIE
	WHETHER CITIZEN OF INDIA?	: YES
	IF FOREIGNER, STATE THE COUNTRY OF ORIGIN	: DOES NOT APPLY
	ADDRESS	: K-BLOCK, CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001.
6.	NAMES AND ADDRESSES OF INDIVIDUALS WHO OWN THE NEWSPAPER AND PARTNERS AND SHAREHOLDERS HOLDING MORE THAN ONE PER CENT OF THE TOTAL CAPITAL.	: OWNER LIVING MEDIA INDIA PRIVATE LIMITED, K-BLOCK, CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001.

SHAREHOLDERS HOLDING MORE THAN ONE PER CENT OF THE TOTAL CAPITAL:

1. MR AROON PURIE, A/1, ANAND NIKETAN, NEW DELHI.
2. MR AROON PURIE, (HUF), A/1, ANAND NIKETAN, NEW DELHI.
3. MRS REKHA PURIE, A/1, ANAND NIKETAN, NEW DELHI.
4. MASTER ANKUR PURIE, (MINOR), A/1, ANAND NIKETAN, NEW DELHI. (UNDER THE GUARDIANSHIP OF MR AROON PURIE)
5. MRS MANDIRA PURIE FAWCETT, 5, CARLOW AVENUE, NEPEAN, ONTARIO K2 G O P 9, CANADA.
6. MRS MADHU P. TREHAN, APARTMENT, 11-K, 20 EAST, 9TH STREET, NEW YORK, N.Y. 10003, USA.
7. THE ALL INDIA INVESTMENT CORPN. PVT. LTD., K-BLOCK, CONN. CIRCUS, NEW DELHI.

I, CHANDER M. RAI, HEREBY DECLARE THAT THE PARTICULARS GIVEN ABOVE ARE TRUE TO THE BEST OF MY KNOWLEDGE AND BELIEF.

DATED: 1ST MARCH 1986

sd/-CHANDER M. RAI
SIGNATURE OF PUBLISHER

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PESTICIDES INDUSTRY

Poisonous Growth

THE ALARMING rise in cases of human pesticide poisoning in the country's agricultural belts has brought into sharp focus the workings of the pesticide industry. Research shows that formulators and factories have been blatantly violating the provisions of the Insecticides Act. The danger has been further compounded by the clear evidence of official negligence and control. Madras Correspondent S.H. VENKATRAMANI and Hyderabad Correspondent AMARNATH. K. MENON report:

GUNAPATI Pulliah, a 37-year-old farmer in Guntur district of Andhra Pradesh, was overcome by nausea one morning last November while spraying pesticide on his paddy crop just before it was due for harvest. Retching violently, he flung down his spraying equipment and ran to the nearest doctor. Ironically, he was partly a victim of his own actions—mixing just 10 litres of water to his usual brand of pesticide instead of the required 100 litres and neglecting to wear a mask. But while Pulliah recovered in due course of time, numerous others have not been so fortunate.

Some years ago, Harijan villagers in the Malanad region in neighbouring Karnataka, were crippled after eating crabs picked up from a paddy field—the crabs had consumed pesticide while feeding on the waterlogged paddy crop.

A study conducted by the Tamil Nadu Agricultural University at Coimbatore released last fortnight, revealed that samples of mothers' milk and cows' milk taken from all over the state showed residues of BHC (Benzene Hexachloride). Other studies have shown up residues of BHC and DDT (Dichloro-diphenyl-trichloro-ethane) in butter and wheat flour samples collected from Ludhiana in Punjab. Studies by the All-India Institute of Medical Sciences a few years ago showed that on an average there were 4.7 parts per million (PPM) of DDT in the fat tissues of Delhi residents.

Pesticides have left traces of toxic chemicals in vegetables. V.N.Iyer, general manager (technical) of the pesticide formulation company Coromandal Indag, says: "Some of the vegetables in our markets look fresh because of the lingering veneer of DDT and BHC." An official of a pesticide-manufacturing multinational pointed out that "research in the West has shown that both DDT and BHC have a lot of residue toxicity. Both these pesticides are abundantly used and have, therefore, a chance of causing cancer since they linger on in vegetables, grain and plants."

The rising trend in cases of pesticide poisoning in the agricultural areas of Andhra Pradesh was admitted by a state agriculture department official who said that for every cluster of 10 agricultural villages in Guntur and Prakasam districts, for instance, there were apparently over 75 such cases of pesticide poisoning during the last agricultural season. And the incidence of such cases throughout the country has risen sharply with pesticide consumption which has gone up a hefty 25 per cent in the last four years to 60,000 tonnes last year. The exact incidence of pesticides poisioning is hard to track because most cases go unrecorded since victims go to village doctors who don't maintain any statistics.

The pesticide industry has to take a lot of the blame for the poison that seems to be increasingly turning up as research and studies undertaken by environment and health conscious agencies indicate. Formulators and factories have been blatantly violating the provisions of the Insecticides Act, 1968, to ensure that pesticides killed only pests without causing harm to human beings.

For instance, manufacturers have not provided data on the toxicity of 130 basic chemicals and 400 formulations which were in use when the Act came into effect in 1971. The Central Insecticides Board (CIB) made things worse by giving permanent registration certificates to nearly 360 pre-1972 pesticides without receiving complete data on their poisonous effects. Admitted a top executive of Indian Explosives Ltd, which was the first to introduce BHC in 1952: "The CIB has given us permanent registration for our BHC without getting complete toxicity data." Echoed another executive of Monsanto Chemicals in Bombay: "The main problem has been the CIB's indiscriminate grant of registration certificates."

Sources in the board lamented the lack of awareness of the danger to human life posed by such pesticides and an official admitted: "Whatever safe limits and dilution levels are prescribed now for pesticides are based on data generated outside by the WHO, Food and Agricultural Organisation, and the US Federal Drug Authority." And the CIB cannot recall the registrations as "a registration once given is given," said CIB Secretary M.L. Saini.

Official negligence has compounded the manipulations of the formulators. The various testing laboratories have a singularly shoddy record in analysing market samples to check if they conform to the registered formulae. For example, three identical samples of BHC 50 formulation produced by a Guntur unit, were taken for testing by an insecticide inspector in 1984. The first testing by a state laboratory put the active ingredient in the formulation at 5.14 per cent, which is far below the permissible lower limit of 6.175 per cent. However, another laboratory gave the high safety figure of 6.25 per cent, while a Central laboratory put it at 6.03 per cent—again within the permitted limits. The reason for such wide readings lies in the conditions of the laboratories. A sophisticated gas liquid chromatograph has to be kept in an air-conditioned room but in the Guntur laboratory, for instance, such equipment is not used for lack of proper hydrogen supplies. The analysts are not properly trained and instances of wrong testing methods are frequent.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Worse still, official agencies have not

Formulators and factories have been blatantly violating the provisions of the Insecticides Act which was to ensure that pesticides killed only pests without causing harm to human beings.

Workers handling chemicals in potentially dangerous conditions deceptively close to those of formulators who register a particular product based on a specific formula and manufacture and sell something else by using a different solvent. The law says that if a formulator wants to change his solvent, he must apply anew to the CIB for registration and furnish researched information about the new product's toxicity.

SADANAND MENON

But as late as 1983, a Madras-based formulator issued newspaper advertisments saying that his company had changed the solvent in its 'monocrotophos' formulation from cyclohexanone to acetone and the CIB confirmed that the company had not obtained registration for its new product. Yet no action was taken and the company must have saved Rs 10 on every litre by illegally using the cheaper solvent. Pesticides consultant Narayanswamy observed: "When a pesticide product, based on its registered recipe, is itself not properly analysed for its efficacy and safety levels, it is a criminal offence to change the recipe. The object of such changes is only to reduce costs and increase profits. These savings are never passed on to the farmer."

Formulators blithely change the suppliers of their basic chemical without bothering to register anew. This was clear some years ago when a few pesticide firms obtained registration for a set of products citing a Bombay-based multinational as their source of supply for the active ingredient even though the company itself confirmed that it was not willing to do business with them. Said a company spokesman: "We were not willing to associate ourselves with some of the intending formulators who had cited us as the source but they got their registration and began manufacture."

OTHER rules are similarly bent. Practically all pesticide containers in the market carry labels which only identify the active ingredient and its percentage even though the law requires "the kind and name of active and other ingredients and percentage of each." Argues K.S.Mehta, director of one of the oldest pesticide formulators in India, the Bombay-based Bharat Pulverising Mills: "To specify the complete chemical composition of every product we formulate will be to give away all our trade secrets." But the preservation of such secrets is not encouraged in the parallel drug industry where every drug manufacturer has to give his complete formula on the label.

Other violations are in areas like packaging. The Indian Standards Institute prescribes a "mild steel or tinplate container suitably lacquered from within" for Malthion and DDT 50 per cent emulsifiable concentrate. But formulators in Ambattur and Velachery in Madras use high-density polythene containers because they are cheaper. One such container costs just about Rs 5 while a metal container of the same capacity is Rs 8. Tamil Nadu's Agriculture Director N. Athimoolan explains this away in these terms: "In our market checks we only see if the containers are misbranded and if they contain the quantity or volume of the product they are supposed to."

To take only another example of how the legislation has been violated, the Act expressly forbids the reuse of containers used for storing poisonous basic chemicals since traces of it remain even after repeated cleaning. But hundreds of such barrels can be seen lying around in many pesticide factories and small-scale formulators even resell the containers at a profit.

Instances where such containers

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

were bought by general merchants to store edible oils are not unknown, and even a single gramme, of say, phosphorus can cause considerable harm. Says a scientist working in a pesticide factory in Tiruchi: "One gramme of phosphorus can cause nausea, vomiting, diarrhoea and even paralysis." Observes a Gujarat Insecticides Inspector K.V. Kanjaria: "Used pesticide containers and packages are very much in use. No agency, not even the Government, has done anything to educate villagers on their harmful effects."

The industry is even more negligent of its responsibilities in ensuring the safety of its workers—25,000 of them employed in 400-odd pesticide factories and formulation units. The law requires that all workers wear protective gear like overcoats, helmets, gloves, gumboots and masks. But the case of 35-year-old Mohan, a worker in a small-scale formulation unit at Tiruvottiyur near Madras, is indicative of the situation prevailing in the industry. Half-naked, bare-footed and coated with fine sulphur dust, his condition is pathetic: "I get severe cough and bronchitis every now and then and my health is poor for my age. I don't know how long I can last out. I can't afford to consult a doctor and in our factory also, there are no facilities for medical treatment."

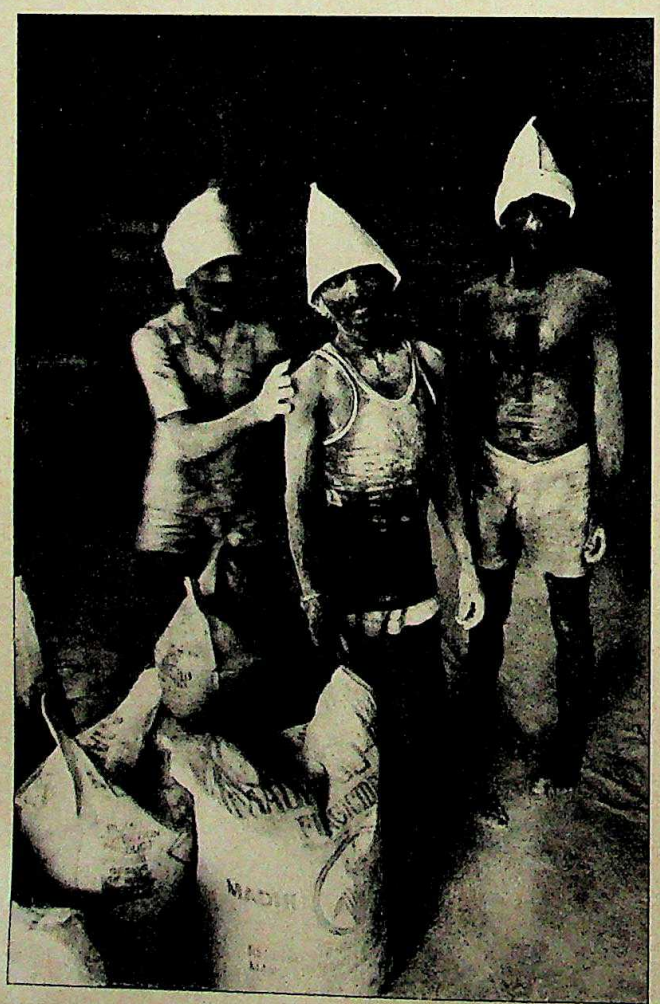
Most labour involved in pesticide applications is migratory and case histories are rare. A study by the Indian Institute of Management, Ahmedabad, in 1980, revealed that 50 per cent do not use any protective clothing, about 20 per cent do not even wash their hands and even those who do, a staggering 80 per cent never use soap. Another study conducted by Dr S.K. Kashyap, also of the Ahmedabad-based National Institute of Occupational Health, showed that 73 per cent of 160 male workers in five formulation units showed toxic manifestations; 35 per cent of the male workers had cardio-vascular and gastro-intestinal problems and 40 workers of an organo-phosphorus unit suffered from eye irritation.

Notwithstanding the fact that they are operating in dangerous violation of the Act, formulators plead helplessness. Asks G.Murali Manohar, a small formulator near Madras: "What can we do? We give our workers all the protective gear but they don't use them." However, Chunduru Venkateswarlu, a formulator in Nallapadu in Guntur district said: "It is difficult to get skilled labour because the work is seasonal and the effort at educating workers to use gloves, masks and boots is a waste. Moreover, they consider these as obstacles in their work." Echoed a Karnataka government official: "We notice that the workers themselves are reluctant to wear protective gear. They find it inconvenient and so we are trying to talk to labour unions about this."

The industry is even more negligent of its responsibilities in ensuring the safety of its workers who daily handle poisonous chemicals in poor safety conditions.

An official in the Rajasthan Agriculture Directorate's Plant Protection Wing, summed up the situation succintly. "In the formulation units in our state, overalls are not uncommon but helmets and gloves are hardly worn at all." But Andhra Pradesh Agriculture Director P. Ramakanth Reddy was the most candid. "We tend to wake up only after a jolt on such issues and it is possible that we are not careful about safety conditions."

The tardy implementation of the Act has been raised in the Lok Sabha and government has admitted its limitations. During the sole occasion it was debated in Parliament in August 1981, the then agriculture minister Rao Birendra Singh admitted that false records were created in many states. Bihar, for example, claimed to have analysed 18,000 samples of pesticides and plant protection chemicals while in fact, no sample was at all collected for analysis. However, comprehensive legislation on the manufacture, import, distribution and disposal of hazardous substances is to be adopted by Parliament and officials are examining existing laws with a view to plugging the loopholes. But this remains a good intention, and if it isn't followed through there will be more suffering for the industry's 25,000 workers and countless farmers in the country.

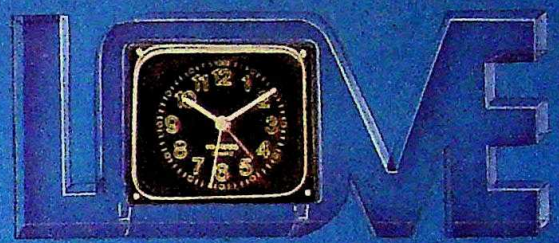


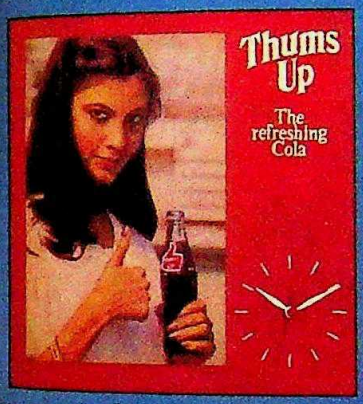
SADANAND MENON

Sulphur-coated workers at a formulation unit near Madras

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri





These big names trust one name

COPWUD®

Small wonder, then, that gift item manufacturers select COPWUD® quartz movements for clocks and alarms.

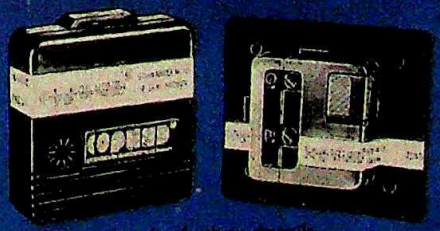
Quartz clocks and quartz alarm time-pieces! They make excellent give-aways, be it for sales promotion, gifts for dealers or corporate give-aways.

A quartz clock or alarm time-piece that carries a prestigious name on its face has a promise to keep— split second accuracy. With a COPWUD quartz movement, it can!

No wonder leading organisations and manufacturers of gift items alike trust COPWUD to provide the quartz clock movements and quartz alarm movements for their gift items. They are dependable and accurate.

Manufactured under licence from Henhart GmbH, West Germany, every quartz movement manufactured by COPWUD bears a mark of international quality. Strict quality control and testing of every movement on the most advanced electronic equipments ensure that only the best movements are marketed.

Next time you think of a useful give-away, think of clocks and alarms with COPWUD quartz movements and COPWUD quartz alarm time-pieces. They are accurate, reliable and make a great give-away.



Write today for further details.

COPWUD®

118-120 Sat Guru Nanik Industrial Estate, Western Express Highway, Goregaon (East), Bombay 400 063
Tel: 697479, 699697 • Telex: 74499 COPD IN Cable: PRITCHETU, Bombay 400 063.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

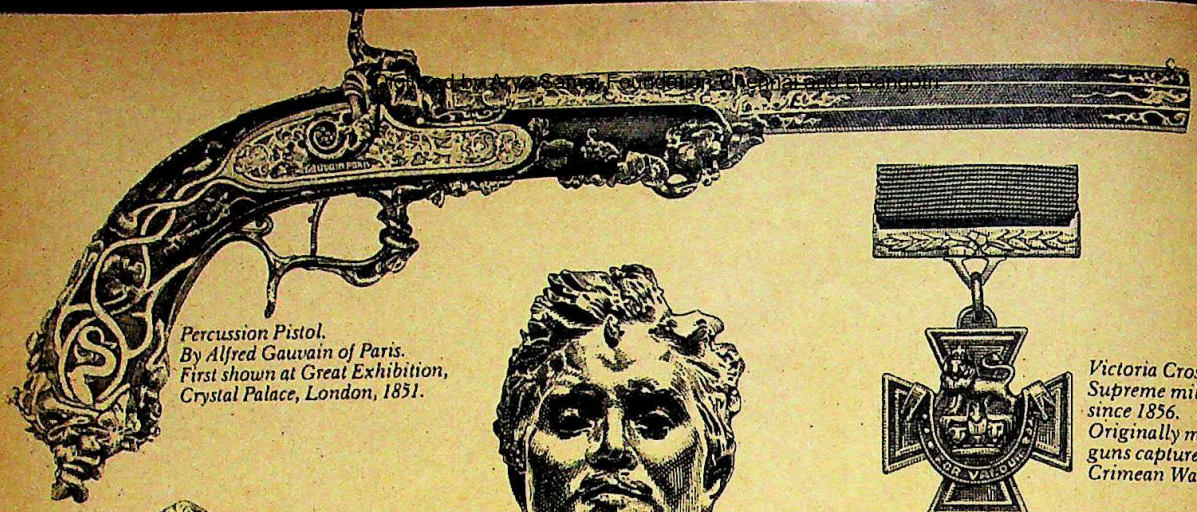
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

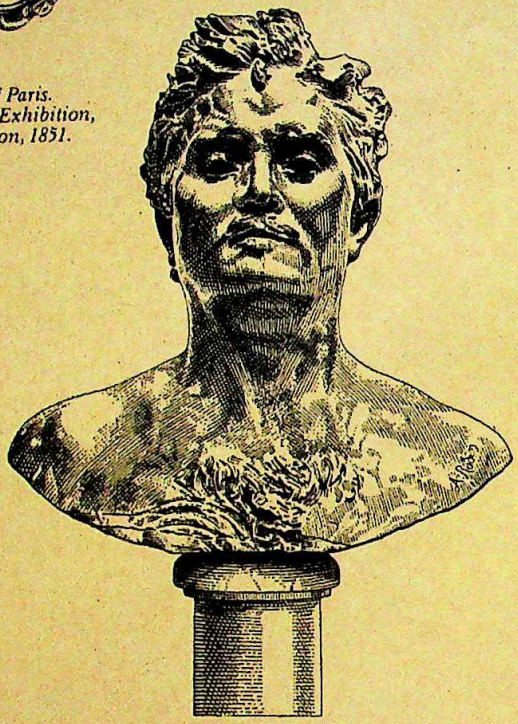
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

CC-0. Lokayan Sarai Foundation Collection. Digitized by eGangotri

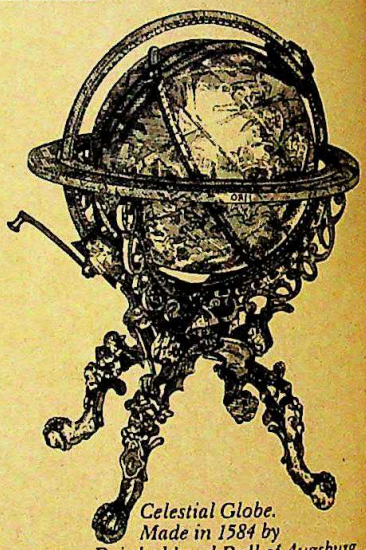


Percussion Pistol.
By Alfred Gauvain of Paris.
First shown at Great Exhibition, Crystal Palace, London, 1851.

Victoria Cross.
Supreme military honour since 1856.
Originally made from guns captured in Crimean War.



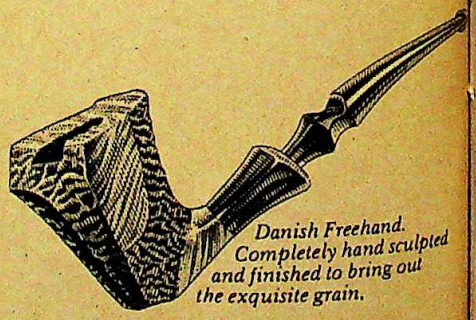
Head of Balzac.
Study in bronze by Auguste Rodin, 1840-1917.



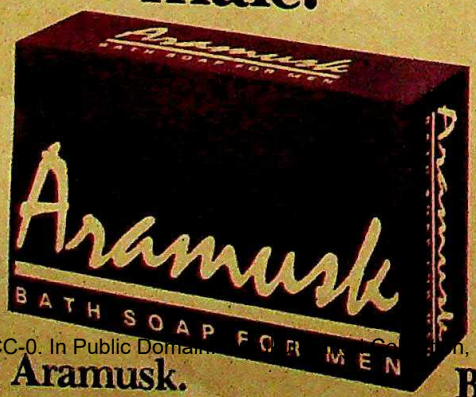
Celestial Globe.
Made in 1584 by Reinhold and Roll of Augsburg.
Almost certainly sold in 1854 to Emperor Rudolph II, Prague.

Waterford Decanter.
Classic full lead crystal brought to life by the breath of a master glassmaker.

Another certain something that's extravagantly male.



Danish Freehand.
Completely hand sculpted and finished to bring out the exquisite grain.



Aramusk. A bathing experience that pleasures the senses.
Capturing the timeless aroma of musk, said to be rarer and costlier than gold.
From Shaw Wallace.

Now available at select stores in Delhi only

Introducing Aramusk. Bath Soap For Men.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AHMEDABAD

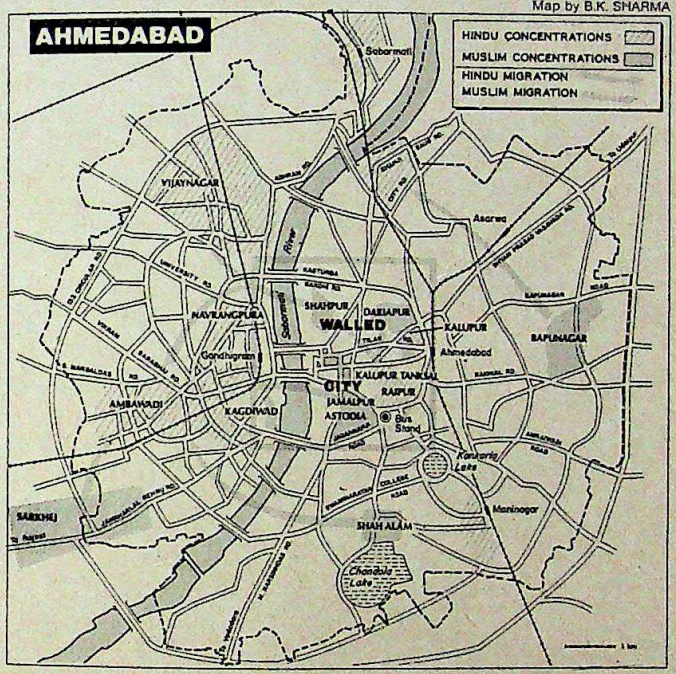
Dangerous Moves

RANCHODLAL Parekh, 36, a Gujarat State Transport employee, has just sold his ancestral house in Bhanderi Pole in Ahmedabad's Kalupur area, to a Muslim. He will take his family to live in rented quarters in Maninagar outside the walled city. "I do not want to shift," he says, "but I'll soon be the only Hindu in the area."

For Parekh, as for many others like him, the decision was not an easy one. It took more than just determination to break away from the house which his ancestors built and start life anew amidst strangers. But the choice was between familiar surroundings and the safety of his family; and he says he feels safer among people of his own community.

The trend is the same all over Ahmedabad. In a city where Hindus and Muslims always coexisted side by side, an increasing number of communal pockets are fast changing the demographic pattern. Over the past few months, scores of Hindu families living in Muslim-dominated areas like Sarkhej and Shah Alam Roza on the outskirts and in walled city areas have moved to Hindu-dominated areas outlying the walled city. Similarly, Muslims have moved within the walled city from Hindu-dominated areas like Bhanderi Pole in Dariapur and Kalupur Tanksal to predominantly Muslim areas like Jamalpur, Dariapur, Shahpur and Astodia; and from the walled city to safer areas outside.

Map by B.K. SHARMA



But little do the new migrants realise that this two-way exodus will only precipitate the growing communal divide. As Iqbal Khan, a resident of Astodia in the walled city, warns: "This is a dangerous trend. Soon Ahmedabad will be divided like Beirut." Nizamuddin Islahi, president of the state unit of the Jamaat-i-Islami Hind, echoes this sentiment: "We must live together and solve our differences. Both Hindu and Muslim leaders have to persuade their communities from migrating."

But the warning goes unheeded. The only thought is to get to the safe shelter of one's own kinsmen. "It has never been like this ever before," says Kalpana Khatri, whose family is thinking of moving from Lisa-ni-Khidki to some Hindu locality. "We lived all these years with so much affection. But strangely, people here have suddenly started mouthing communal sentiments. We cannot live here anymore."

The reasons differ from family to family. Some Muslims, for instance, moved because they felt that in the walled city, they were more vulnerable to persecution by the police, who they allege are communal and biased against them. Madina

"How can one live in the walled city? Most days it is under curfew and is tension-ridden."
MUMTAZ BANU

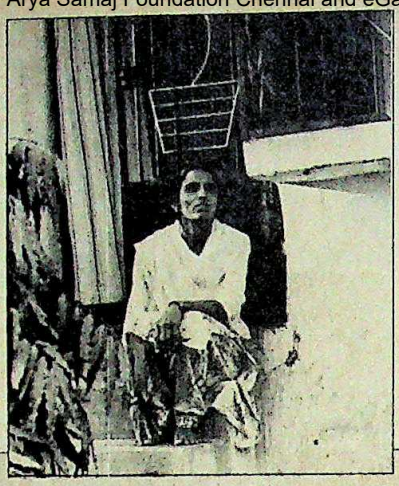
"People here have suddenly changed colour. We cannot live here anymore."
KALPANA KHATRI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Laliwala, who moved from Dariapur to Sarkhej, says: "We had to shift. We are not as much scared of the Hindus as we are of the police. For no rhyme or reason our menfolk get beaten up." Adds Ismail Laliwala, 61, whose two sons have been in jail for the last seven months for allegedly communal offences: "I never dreamt that a stage would come when I would have to sell my three-storeyed building and start living in a small house because of communalism."

Not that the exodus was unforeseen. In mid-1985, soon after coming to power, Gujarat Chief Minister Amarsinh Chaudhary, anticipating such a situation, had proposed an ordinance for declaring land transfers in the walled city null and void; but this never came about. The state Government was misled by its own records into believing that the problem was not so serious. The records showed that only 18 land transfers had taken place and Chaudhary, saying that it was "normal", decided to drop the ordinance plan.



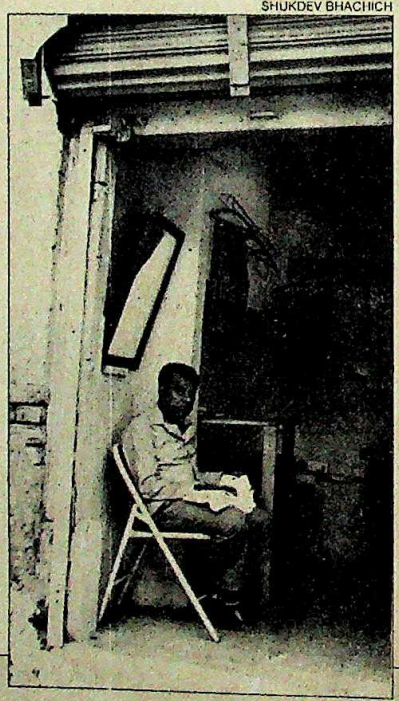
"We had to shift. We are not as much scared of the Hindus as we are of the police. For no rhyme or reason our menfolk get beaten up."
MADINA LALIWALA

However, the reality as usual is quite different. Though no records are available yet, unofficial estimates easily put the number of land transfers in the city at well over 1,000. A senior government official said that the possibility of clandestine transfers also could not be ruled out and the Government was now looking into it.

And yet, many people would have still not moved had it not been for the constant threat posed by communal hatred. Even after the riots had died down, local toughs went around threatening the minority in their areas and scaring them into moving to other areas. As a result, there were a number of distress sales but soon after this, prices of houses in the walled city went shooting up, as a natural corollary of the sudden demand. The fear psychosis had been built up so that both Hindus and Muslims in desperation were prepared to pay any price to move into a safer area. Mumtaz Banu, who has shifted from Dariapur to Sarkhej, says: "How can one live in the walled city? Most days it is under curfew and is tension-ridden."

Many businessmen are also planning to shift to areas outside the walled city since the frequent riots and prolonged bouts of curfew have left their businesses decrepit and battered. "The city has lost its charm," laments Rafiq Ahmed, who had to shut down his restaurant in Bhadra last year for over eight months. Says Ahmed: "Communal hatred has destroyed Ahmedabad. One does not feel like living here anymore."

SHUKDEV BHACHECH



Bipin Madhu, a tailor, is one of the few Hindus who stayed back in Astodia. But now he finds that his Muslim clientele refuses to patronise him.

The implications of this division of the city into Hindu and Muslim pockets are already making themselves felt, in trade and business and in everyday life. Bipin Madhu, a tailor is one of the few Hindus who stayed back in Muslim-dominated Astodia. But now he finds that he has very little custom left. His clients were mainly Muslims and they refuse to patronise him anymore. Miriambibi, who shifted from Delhi Chakla in the walled city to Rakhial on the outskirts, also stands to lose her livelihood. She used to make clay idols of Hindu gods and goddesses but her new neighbours will not let her practise her skill anymore.

Earlier, professional Muslim groups were concentrated in certain areas making for keen competition and a close social interaction. But ever since the intra-city migration began, these groups have been scattered all over the city, causing great inconvenience in everyday life. Many who moved from one area to another now find themselves far removed from their place of work and now have to commute over painfully long distances everyday.

More important, the change sweeping Ahmedabad threatens to alter the very fabric of the city, its basic structure—social, civic and economic. Asks an anguished Hidayat Memon, a doctor in Dariapur: "Will Muslims be forced to live in ghettos in the congested walled city because of communal hatred? Over the months, the gap between Hindus and Muslims has widened. Is there no hope?" On the other side, the Hindus sound equally troubled and helpless. But the division of the city continues, as vested interests stoke the fires of communalism.

What seems even more alarming is that the Government does not seem to be conscious of this threat at all. After the aborted ordinance plan of last year, the chief minister has taken little note of this ominous trend. The attitude of the administration seems to be that there is no cause for worry and even if there is, things will take care of themselves. Meanwhile, the demographic face of the city is changing forever and in a manner that can only deepen the divide between the two communities.

—RAMESH MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FOR SEVEN DECADES AND MORE, WE'VE KEPT AHEAD THROUGH TECHNOLOGY.

TO THIS DAY, OUR END PRODUCT IS 'EXCELLENCE'.

From fragrant sandal oil and soap to stearic acids and textile noodles. Between the two ends of the spectrum lies the fascinating world of a company called Karnataka Soaps.

Our premium products command respect the world over. Sandal oil that satisfies the demand of 75% of the international market. Luxury soaps like Mysore Sandal of world renown. On the home front, detergents like Point that are among the foremost. And raw material products that cater to a wide range of industries.

A broad gamut of activities. With one end product... excellence. Crafted with the latest in technology. Even the first sandal oil factory set up by the Maharaja of Mysore in 1916 is still considered one of the most modern in the world. Since then, constant upgradation of machinery and technology, and highly efficient production processes have made Karnataka Soaps the dynamic and multi-faceted organisation that it is today.

Ambitious plans are envisaged for the future expansion of our soap units. And with each new endeavour, the single link is excellence.

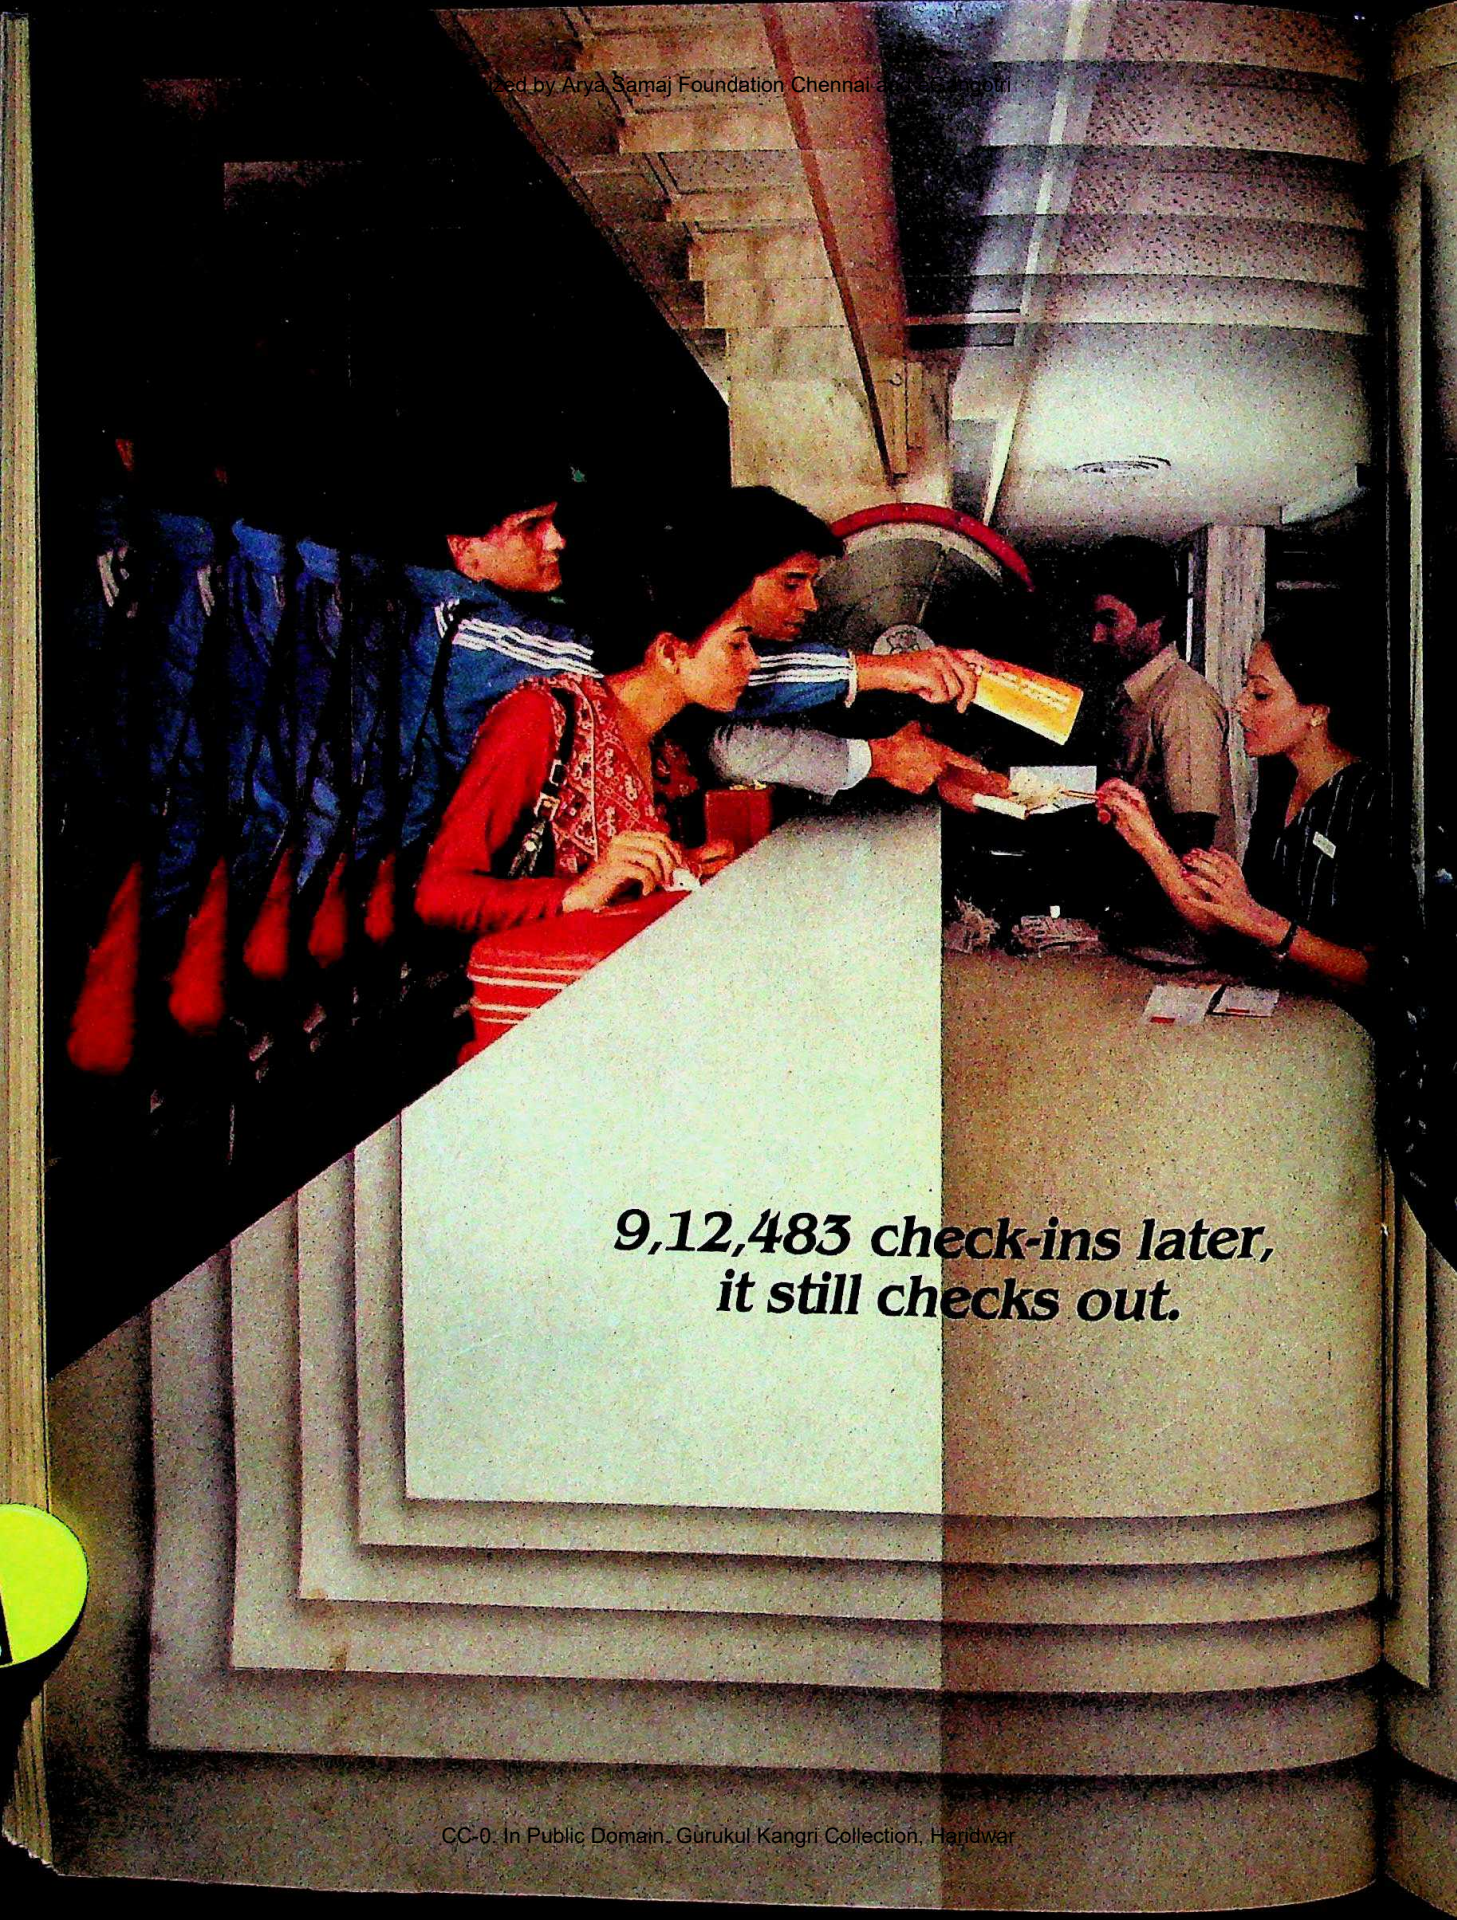
At Karnataka Soaps, we have a rare fragrance to preserve. A message from the past expressing an abiding faith in excellence. The sweet smell of success that, we are determined, will infuse our every new venture.

KARNATAKA SOAPS

Karnataka Soaps & Detergents Limited, Yeshwantpur, Bangalore 560 055 Mfrs. of Mysore Sandal, Point and other quality soaps & detergents

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Decolam lasts.

The check-in counters at Santa Cruz Airport, and many other airports in the country, are topped with Decolam.

The counters started functioning in 1980. Since then, thousands of travellers have dumped their tickets, their luggage and their children on top of them. They are still going strong.

Unlike cheap laminates, Decolam lasts almost forever. It's solid. It won't chip or crack. It's tough and very scratch-resistant. And it has the right thickness of 1.5 mm. So it smooths over any imperfections in the surfaces it tops.

Surfaces aren't the only things that Decolam tops. Look how Decolam scores over cheaper laminates in these tests for durability.

Brand	Wear Resistance	Impact Strength	Cross Breaking Strength
Decolam	100	100	100
Brand X	66	31	51.6
Brand Y	57	24	54.3

Figures have been indexed for easy comparison. Test results are available on request.

This means that Decolam protects your expensive furniture better, longer and more elegantly than anything else. Isn't it worth paying a little more for Decolam today?

The architect who designed the counters checked every brand of laminate available before he decided on Decolam. Now, for him, there's nothing to decide. Decolam checks out every time.

beautiful... forever.

A quality product of Bakelite Hylam.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

LINTAS SM DLM 30 2741

...ized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eG...

Some moments keep ticking
for a long, long, long time.

humt
WATCHES

HANDWOUND • AUTOMATIC
QUARTZ

Timekeepers to the Nation

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Inner Sphere

THE CIRCLE OF REASON
by AMITAV GHOSH
Hamish Hamilton, London
Pages: 423; Rs: 125

FIVE years ago a thunderstorm named Midnight's Children burst over the Indian literary scene, overnight transforming the arid and stony landscape. With the new freshness in the air, greenery stirred and sprouted, possibilities opened and flowered and it was clear the landscape would never be the same again. With that one novel, Salman Rushdie proved that (a) modern India was as rich a source of material as ancient India with its familiar and accepted myths and legends, and (b) the ungainly, ungrammatical language invented and spoken in the streets and bazaars did not merely deserve print but had an earthy gusto and verve that made it peculiarly suitable to convey the Indian character and spirit, atmosphere and conditions. Of course Rushdie was not working in isolation but belonged to an international school of writing that included Gabriel Garcia Marquez, Gunter Grass and Milan Kundera who are the acknowledged mouthpieces of the post-war, post-colonial ethos while continuing the ancient histories of their separate lands. Together they constitute a kind of warm gulf stream that has been coursing through the oceans and touching many shores, changing their climates and bringing about intriguing developments.

As might have been foretold, Rushdie's example set free the tongues of those young Indian writers who wished to express the contemporary spirit but had not found an authentic and relevant way to do so. His language proved one that could be imitated but none of them could marshal the historical and political ideas that gave his work its potency. An interesting new addition to such literature is Amitav Ghosh's first novel, The Circle of Reason. In a recent interview Ghosh failed to mention Rushdie but claimed as his literary forebears Cervantes and Melville. Candidly speaking, there is no novelist who is not indebted to these founders and innovators of the novel; Ghosh might have acknowledged the influence of a novelist closer to him in both time and space. Rushdie's spirit is everywhere. It is to be found in Ghosh's vocabulary—"spick-span", "Jaldi-toot-sweet", in lines like "a khichri of words—couscous, rice, dal and onions all stirred together", in whole passages—Ghosh's discourses on the cotton trade and weaving recalling Rushdie's odes to pickle-making and the embroidery of fabulous shawls in Shame, in the invention of bizarre characters with hilarious names like Kulfi and Dantu, and the extraordinary juxtaposition of ideas drawn from diverse fields, in Ghosh's case anthropology, science and economics. It is a literary enterprise far removed from the bildungsroman which most novelists must produce before they are free to proceed to something more objective.

EXTRACT

"Goat's Arse, the message said, had broken into and disrupted the most ancient of Ghaziri ceremonies, one that took place once every seven years, on the reigning Malik's birthday. This was the ceremony of the Ant-Frying, when the Ants under the Fort's south gate, a most ancient line of ants, were cooked in a shower of burning oil. The desecration of the Ant-Frying had placed the timeless traditions of the Ghaziri monarchy, and thus the prestige of the whole British Empire, in, yes, in jeopardy."

Like Rushdie in Midnight's Children—and Grass in The Tin Drum—Ghosh presents us with a hero who has an unusual distinguishing feature: while Rushdie's Saleem had a nose of uncommon size and sensitivity, Ghosh's hero has "an extraordinary head—huge, several times too large for an eight-year-old, and curiously uneven, bulging all over with knots and bumps" so that he is named, naturally, Alu. Unlike Saleem, Alu proves an oddly inert, unassertive hero, allowing subordinate characters to initiate and carry on with the action while he himself remains a quiescent and mostly overlooked spectator. In the interview mentioned above, Ghosh has come out in favour of fiction about the "outer" rather than the "inner" world, preferring the social to the psychological novel, and this may be the reason why Alu's inner world is left unilluminated.

The events in which he is involved, often peripherally, take place invisibly to the greater world—unlike the juggernaut of events in Rushdie's novels—in a small village near Calcutta, in the mythical town of Al-Ghazira, in Kerala and the Sahara, the journey—which proves circular—turning into a kind of quest for the Holy Grail which takes the unlikely shape of a sewing machine. At the end he learns "they make them better at home now".

On this seething, shapeless matter, Ghosh has imposed a form—like a raga, he asserts—by dividing the novel into sections entitled Satwa: Reason, Rajas: Passion, Tamas: Death, so it should have the categories endorsed by Hindu thought and philosophy. The divisions are not really so rigid and the narrative runs on from one to the other with the briskness that typifies the picaresque. He has a vivid sense of the dramatic and there are many memorable scenes—the attack by blood-crazed sharks on the hapless travellers in a small boat, the birth of the baby, Boss, below decks, and the advance of the "rationalists" armed with buckets of carbolic acid upon the cringing politicians clutching their banners under a banyan tree.

The book's chief strength lies in its rootedness in the soil of rural Bengal and the saltmarshes and souks of Al-Ghazira whose people, however eccentric and grotesque, display the energy and spontaneity of the creatures that dance and cavort, labour and struggle in folk paintings on village walls and the graffiti of city slums. Anyone who knows Bengal will recognise such types as Balaram the village schoolmaster whose god is Louis Pasteur and who believes in carbolic acid as other Hindus do in Ganges water, and Shombhu the weaver who steals toddy from the palms while singing the raga Lalit by moonlight, and such scenes as the second-hand book-shops, the tea-stalls and cinemas of Calcutta. Al-Ghazira, for all that it is an invention, convinces wholly by its salt and marine odours, its pullulating souk, its population of illegal immigrants and their entomological lives. Their histories, skilfully woven together in a pattern as complex as those created by Alu on the loom, have the engaging quality of the village folk-story-teller's pictorial representations or the modern-day comic strip in serial form. It will be interesting to see if they too take root and survive in the teeming Indian consciousness.

—ANITA DESAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

No other pick-up can pick up this much at no extra fuel cost!

Allwyn Nissan Cabstar is the only proven vehicle with a rated payload of 3 tonnes – with the ability to carry more.

This means, it can take, in one trip, the entire load that you would need two LCVs to carry ... Double the load without any extra fuel consumption. What's more, it offers you the flexibility of operating a wide range of loads, from one tonne upward, extremely economically. Because, its engine is highly fuel-efficient, compact and vibration-free. Plus, it has over-drive facility in the gearbox and a small knob to easily adjust 'idling speed', both features adding to fuel-saving. No wonder, over 900 proud owners of Cabstar have expressed their delight on this score.

Strength that others can't match

The Cabstar engine is extremely powerful – with 75 HP. Power that's backed up by many unmatched features, apparent from just one quick look.

A pressed steel rear axle that's 1½ times stronger. Springs that are 3 times stronger. A chassis with double the strength. A single-piece propeller shaft that is 50% bigger and 2 times stronger. A corrugated body for maximum strength – to take all the heavy loads, a remarkable vehicle that does the job of two LCVs single-handed – for double the return – on the lowest maintenance cost. Because, Cabstar is specially engineered to last longer under Indian road, load and operating conditions.

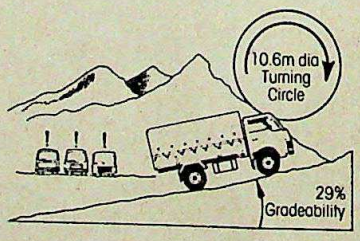
Easy does it

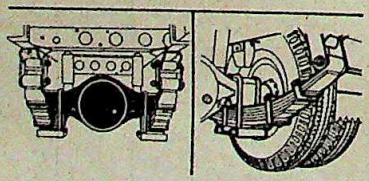
A major constraint overcome: low slung platform with three sides opening, makes loading, unloading easier and faster.

Uphill tasks solved



Its gradeability is 29%. Result: it climbs where other LCVs struggle.

Again, its tight turning circle – 10.6m dia – is game for any sharp bends. And all the wheels have dual-line circuit brakes, absent in some of the latest vehicles. Six wheels, as against the conventional four, make the tyres last longer, aided by uniform load distribution ensured by the structure of the vehicle.

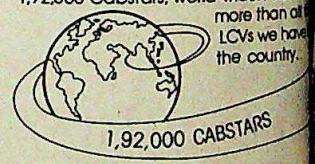


A nice place to work

Unlike other LCVs, a noise, vibration-free spacious cab, adjustable seats, the latest dashboard instruments, all-weather ventilation, single piece windshield, easy steering and a hundred and one innovative features, make driving safe, and a real pleasure.

The only competitively priced, proven vehicle, with the latest technology

Priced lower for the class of features offered, Allwyn Nissan Cabstar is a proven product of pioneering Nissan technology, testified by the performance of over 1,92,000 Cabstars, world-wide. And the more than all the LCVs we have in the country.



The right commercial vehicle

Allwyn Nissan Cabstar easily wins on price to performance ratio... More load, less fuel. Minimum maintenance cost, excellent dealer network for efficient after sales service. Ready availability of spares. Greater versatility and reliability. Sleek, Tomorrow's design features ... Yet priced low ... That's Allwyn Nissan Cabstar, the Right Commercial Vehicle, far more profitable for diverse transportation needs.

Adaptable to a wide range: Pick-up Van, Mail Van, Cash Van, Mini Bus, Ambulance, Municipal Van, Tanker, Police Van.

For further details, and literature, contact your nearest dealer.

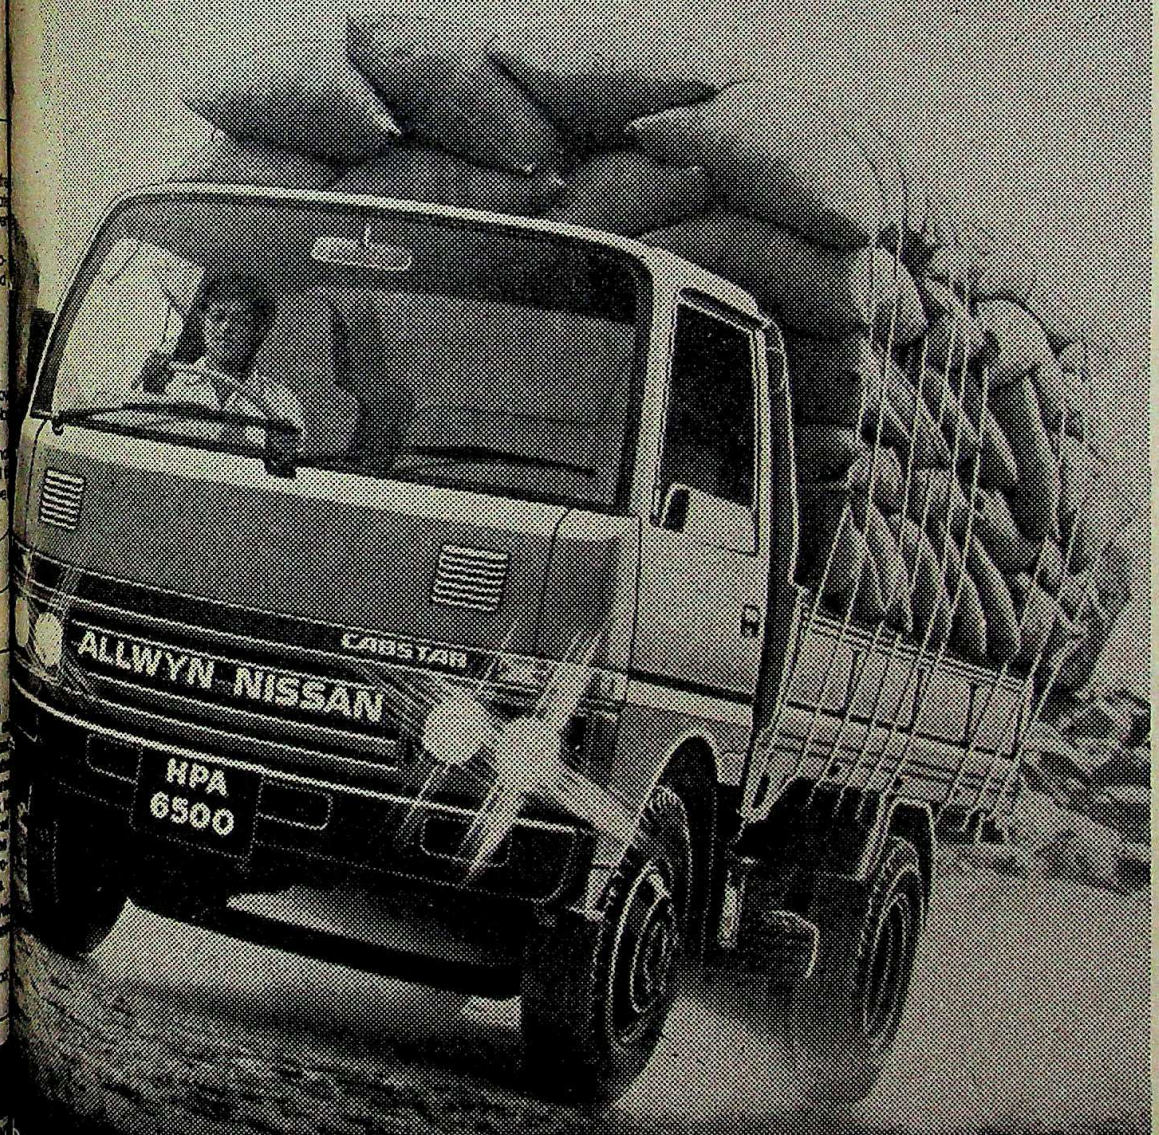
NISSAN NISSAN

ALLWYN NISSAN LIMITED
Allwyn Bhavan, Sanathnagar
Hyderabad - 500 018. (A.P.)

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ALLWYN NISSAN CABSTAR



The difference between the light commercial vehicle and the right commercial vehicle

Versatile and most profitable for a wide range of loads

SAA/AN/3505

a Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CLASSICAL MUSIC

The New Awa

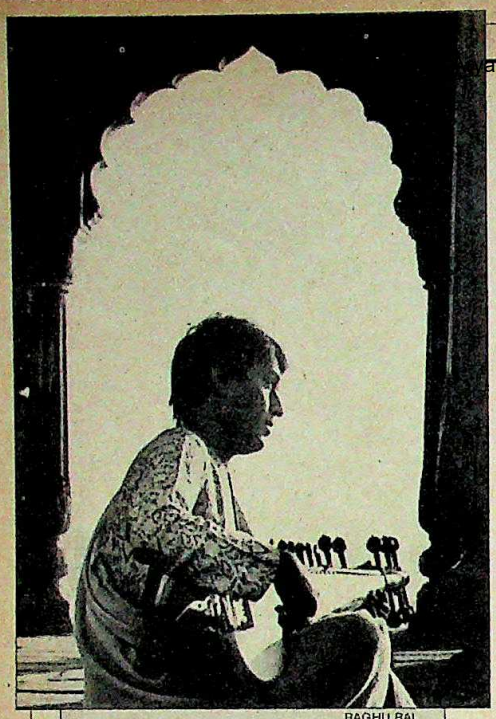
FOR DECADES, it had bloomed in isolation, the cactus flower of India's cultural heritage. From the gilded seclusion of princely palaces to the private homes of cultural dilettantes and sparsely-populated concert halls, Hindustani classical music had two decades ago seemed to be slipping out of the national cultural mainstream.

But today, the progress of Hindustani classical music has matched its musical imagery: the soft haunting strains of its exotic instruments building up with carefully measured tread into a gently cascading crescendo. Both its pace and its popularity are undergoing a remarkable transformation. Suddenly, and unobtrusively, Hindustani classical music has shrugged off its bonds of timelessness and dormancy and broken the commercial barrier.

Ragas are now all the rage and the signs can be seen everywhere—in the sales of discs and cassettes, in the number of festivals, in the star status that musicians enjoy, in the money they command, in the audiences that appear magically in the unlikeliest of places, in colleges where it enjoys a popularity so far reserved only for western music. From an elitist genre, Hindustani classical music seems headed for popular acceptability.

According to A. Salim, commercial manager of Music India Ltd, there has been a dramatic increase in the sale of classical music recordings in the last five years. He estimates that until the start of the decade, it formed only 5 to 7 per cent of total sales of discs and cassettes. But now, the figure has jumped to between 10 and 12 per cent. Says Salim: "Last year alone the increase was nearly 30 per cent."

Suresh Mathur, director-general of All India Radio (AIR), confirms the trend. "There is a distinct increase in the number of letters we get for our classical music programmes," he says, "and some major companies now want to advertise against



RAGHU RAI

AMJAD ALI KHAN

"Things have undoubtedly changed in the past decade. The students who hooted us in colleges, now welcome us with flowers."

SURESH PAREKH

PANDIT JASRAJ

"Every form of music—film, ghazal or any other—only clears another step for the advancement of classical music."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

New awakening

...ppear magi-
...s, in colleges
...y so far re-
...ic. From an
...ssical music
...ceptability.
...commercial
..., there has
... the sale of
... the last five
... the start of
...7 per cent of
...es. But now,
...veen 10 and
...t year alone
...per cent."
...-general of
...s the trend.
... the number
...ssical music
... some major
...rtise against

...ehem—that's certainly new. Live performances organised by AIR—be it at Rohtak, Rampur, Varanasi or Lucknow—always draw full houses and there have been requests by commercial firms to market music from our archives."

Kaushal Bhargava, secretary of Jaipur's Shruti Mandal, remembers that 30 years ago it was hard to get even 50 people for a classical music show. "But now we have four festivals each year and almost every performance draws a full house." And Vinay Chandra Maudgalya, chairman of the Akhil Bharatiya Gandharva Mahavidyalaya, says that the number of institutions under the organisation's fold has gone up from 275 to 425 in the last six years.

But what has largely fuelled the change is the fact that the new audience for Indian classical music has predominantly been the youth and students, till now considered exclusively hooked on western pop or Indian film music.

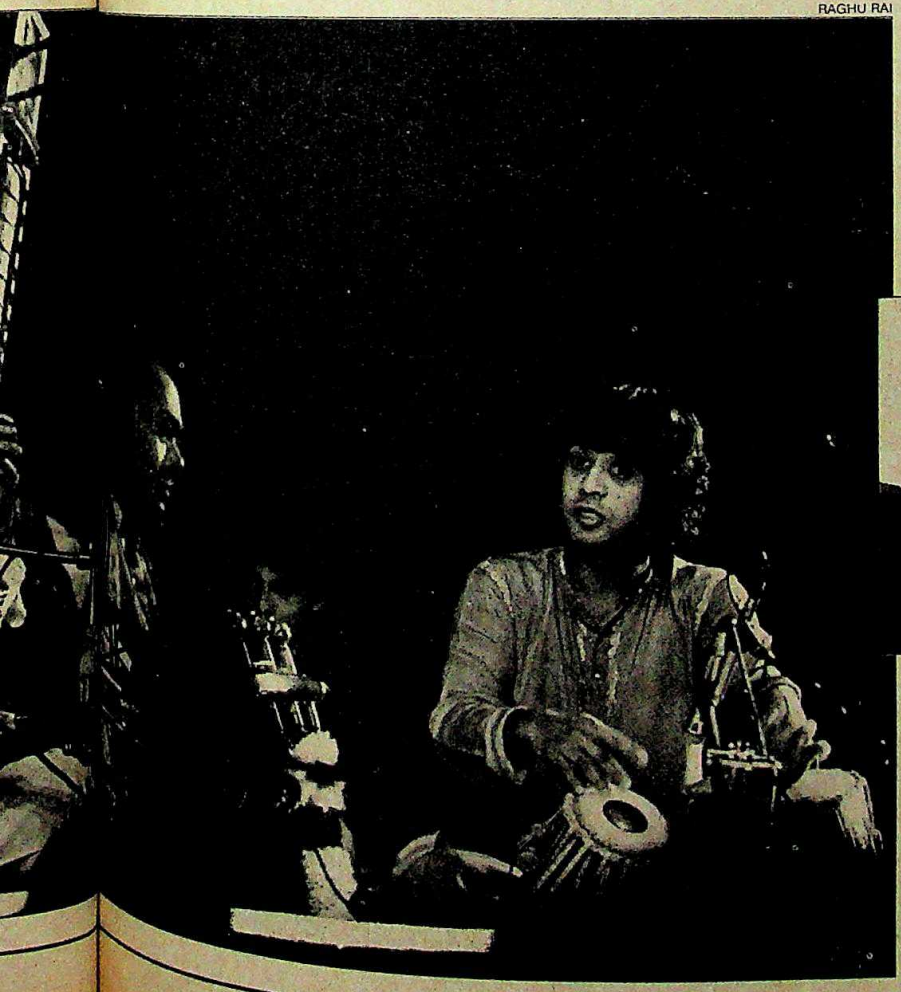
In several prominent Delhi colleges, classical music has succeeded in elbowing aside the traditional fare of western music. The highlight of college annual festivals now is increasingly an all-night classical performance rather than rock concerts. "Things have undoubtedly changed in the past decade," asserts sarod maestro Amjad Ali Khan, who has been performing publicly for about three decades. "The students who hooted us in colleges and could not be persuaded to sit quietly now welcome us with flowers and treat us with the greatest respect. They sit for hours on the floor, in the aisles, listening attentively."

Elsewhere, the signs all point in the same direction. A recent survey revealed that 60 per cent of the regular audience at Jaipur's Shruti Mandal were

Forward Studio

ALLARAKHA

"Because some established artistes permitted our role to grow, public recognition has finally come to us."



Allarakha, Ravi Shankar, Ali Akbar and Zakir Hussain in concert: growing appeal

RAGHU RAI

SHIV KUMAR SHARMA

"Classical music can pull people by its sheer depth but generations never got to listen to it. Now its availability has multiplied."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PROVEN QUALITY & PRECISION BUILT

pla RELAYS, REED RELAYS & ELECTRONIC TIMERS

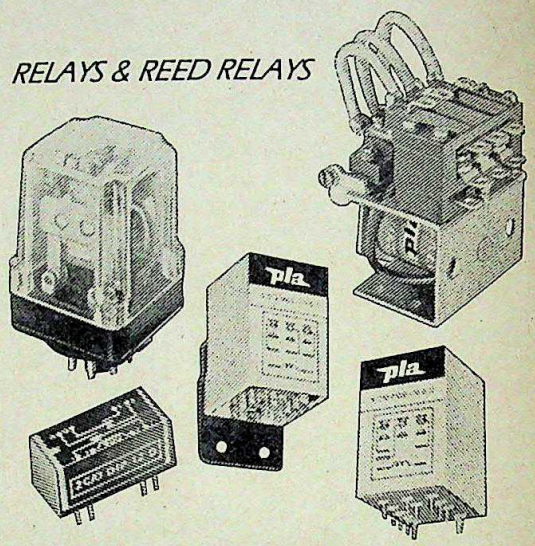
COMMITMENT TO QUALITY
Continuous product improvement and development by the committed R & D team, and strict quality control by PLA quality control cell ensure that only the best comes to you.

HERE ARE THE PROOFS
* PLA Relays & Reed relays are approved by LCSO/Defence and P & T.
* PLA Electronic Timers are approved by CIL/Defence/NTPC for specific applications.

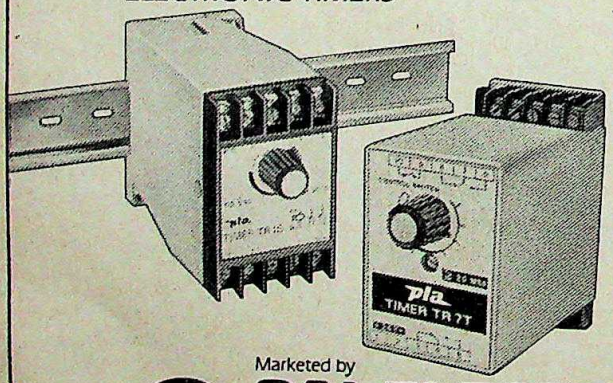
Some of the satisfied users of PLA products:
BEL, ITI, Keltron, Nelco, Uptron, CEL, Electricity Boards, NTPC, Siemens, L&T, KEC, HBB, BHEL, ECIL, BARC, MRPU, ISRO, LMW, MMC, Jyoti, IL Kota, GCEL, HIL, Bells Controls, Best & Crompton, Bharat Bijlee and BPL.

NATION-WIDE NETWORK
SAI is proud of its nation-wide network of committed and dedicated dealers and representatives with long years of association with the company. Their dynamism and expertise bring the best to you in terms of products and services.

RELAYS & REED RELAYS



ELECTRONIC TIMERS



THE WIDE RANGE

Series M	: General purpose Miniature relays in open/enclosed and plug-in-version — rated for 6 Amps. at 240V AC/24V DC. PCB mounting relays also available.
Series P	: 20 Amps Power relays upto 3C/O contacts.
Series DIP	: Dual-in-line Package reed relay with 1N/O, 2N/O, 1C/O and 2C/O contacts suitable for PCB/DIL Socket mounting.
Special Relays (not shown)	: R.F. Relays, High voltage relays, Textile relays, Proximity switches, Series DLM Dual latching relays, Series FFR Field failure relays, Series SIP, DRM, PRM, DRC and DRA Reed relays.
Series TR/TD	: Electronic Timers available upto 60 Minutes timing range with different timing actions e.g. ON Delay, OFF Delay and ON-OFF Re-cycling. DIN Rail mounting is also available.

Marketed by

SAI ELECTRONICS
A Div. of Starch & Allied Industries

ELECTRONIC DIVISION

Thakor Estate, Kurla Kirol Road, Vidyavihar (W), Bombay 400 086.
Cable: SAIELECT, Bombay 86, Phone: 5136601, 5131219. TLX: 011-72132 PLA IN

RADEUS/SE/2/85 MAG

AVAILABLE EX-STOCK

Ahmedabad: Radio Electronics Ph. 336535 o Uresh Electric Co. Ph. 380990
Bangalore: Manitronix Components Agencies Ph. 222160 o Deepam Electronics Ph. 221246
Baroda: Reliable Sales Corporation Ph. 553936 • Bombay: Ramesh Trading Corpn. Ph. 351624 Ramesh Electronics Ph. C/o. 351624 o Mahavir Electronics Ph. 254538 o Expert Enterprises Ph. 5128766
Calcutta: Printed Electronics Ph. 452091 o Krugg International Ph. 273025 o Naresh Electro (India) Ph. 265101 Venus Electronics (Cal) Ph. 275491 o Dinesh Electronics (Cal) Ph. 269029 • Cochin: Expo Electronics Components Ph. 31455
Coimbatore: Ingata Laboratories Ph. 25705 o Sunrise Electronics Ph. 35713 o Spinloom Associates Ph. 24586 Digitech Agencies Ph. 24148 • Delhi: Chawla Trading Co. Ph. 236031 o Kanbro Sales Corpn. Ph. 625206
Hyderabad: Aradhna Electronics P. Ltd. Ph. 822201 • Indore: Atlas Sales Agencies Ph. 33112 o Natwerlal & Co. Ph. 35328
Jaipur: El-tronics Ph. 65730 • Madras: Kins Electronics Ph. 411601
Poona: Fortibus Engg Pvt. Ltd. Ph. 34706 o Trio Radio Ph. 447129 • Trivandrum: Electrocraft Ph. 71443
Udaipur: International Electronics Ph. 27250.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

under 25 years old. Sitarist Vajayat Khan, 25, was instrumental in introducing classical music in Calcutta's St Xavier's College and within just two years it has already become a major event. At the other end of the country, the Indian Music Group in St Xavier's College, Bombay, has already become something of an institution over the past decade. Other than a three-night festival which draws 1,700 people, the group organises lecture-demonstrations each month and has a music library with more than 850 hours of recorded classical music, the bulk of it live.

But to a larger extent, it is the artistes themselves who have made a collective effort to popularise their music—or face virtual extinction. It began with the 'export boom' in Indian classical music in the mid-'60s. The dhrupad style is now firmly entrenched in France and Nasir Zahiruddin Dagar recalls that his elder brothers Moinuddin and Aminuddin went to France for the first time in 1965 with an invitation to perform at two venues. But so enthusiastic was the response that they ended up staging 27 concerts. Ever since, the Dagars have been a regular feature in France.

But the most high-profile exporter has undoubtedly been sitarist Ravi Shankar starting with his much publicised association with Beatle George Harrison in the mid-'60s. Shankar was later to say that Harrison could never have learnt however much he may have tried because he was not "cut out for that culture"—but the duo did invite tremendous international attention to the sitar and through it, to Indian music.

MORE important, Ravi Shankar and other musicians made an impact not only abroad but also back home where youngsters have been influenced by western trends. As Faiyazuddin Dagar says: "When people here saw the reception Indian musicians got out there and its neglect in its country of origin, it made them conscious and curious about their own music."

But in many cases it was perseverance that paid. Nearly all the country's top flight musicians have performed to near-empty halls initially but returned regularly to the same venues. Vocalist Pandit Jasraj walked out disgusted from a noisy conference at Bhopal's Gandhi Medical College three years ago. But Jasraj, and his colleagues, have grimly gone back year after year and ultimately converted large masses of students.

But the major role played in attracting the new audience has undoubtedly been by the Society for Promotion of Indian Classical Music and Culture Among Youth (Spic-Macay). It started as a student movement in 1972 when some Indian students heard dhrupad exponent Aminuddin Dagar at a function organised by the India Club of New York's Columbia University. What struck them was not only the quality of the performance but also the fact that they knew so little about their own music. When they returned to India they decided that if students were to appreciate classical music, they first needed an opportunity to listen to it.

The first show was in 1977 in the Indian Institute of Technology (IIT), New

AVINASH PASRICHA

Kumar Gandharva performs for an appreciative audience: full house

Delhi, where Spic-Macay's prime mover Kiran Seth, a publicity-shy man teaches mathematics. Gradually, and in the last three years with increasing tempo, the group has spread out across the length and breadth of India. In the last season, it organised 275 performances involving nearly every single great name in the music and dance world in about 50 cities and towns, ranging from Guntur to Ajmer and Pollachi to Hazaribagh.

What is more, the whole of this massive exercise is managed almost exclusively by students. Apart from concerts, the meets include baithaks for small audiences, lecture-demonstrations and now on a smaller scale, an attempt is also being made to introduce classical music at school level. In the Delhi College of Engineering, says student Rajiv Ahal: "Just one year ago we were having to herd students into the auditorium. Today they come by themselves." The musicians have themselves helped convert large masses of students to the new music by performing for Spic-Macay at a fraction of their normal fees.

Through the lean years, however, it was the media that kept the music alive, with the radio broadcasting it into millions of homes. Few of the top artistes today are willing to go to the studio, because they no longer need it, but when classical music was fighting to stay alive, the radio was a crucial instrument. Over the years, the familiarity grew and the unease with a complex musical heritage disappeared.

The Madhya Pradesh Government too has played a conscious promotional role, and the state's secretary for culture, Ashok Vajpayee, says that it took him totally by surprise when a thousand people turned up in Sagar recently to listen to Kumar Gandharva. And in Maharashtra, the groundwork was laid by musical plays that began gaining ground two decades ago. The state's cultural director, Kamalakar Sontakke, says some of the singers became full-time vocalists because it paid so much better: Rs 3,000 for a show instead of Rs 250 for taking part in a play. But the plays created the audience which nationally known musicians like Amjad Ali Khan and others then tapped in district towns and tehsil headquarters.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The recent upswing is related quite directly to the decline in quality of film music. The disillusionment is reflected clearly in figures—today, this segment makes up only about 50 per cent of the total sales of cassettes and records. Many people in the music business feel that the ghazal boom actually became a vehicle to introduce people to classical music. Says Pandit Jasraj: "Every form of music, film, ghazal or any other, only clears another step for the advancement of classical music."

ing its roots. It has been happening increasingly ever since Independence and the post-1947 generation is more concerned with society's cultural values than its predecessors," he feels.

THE RESULT has been the almost unnoticed but dramatic rise in the audience for classical music in almost every corner of the country. Explains Shiv Kumar Sharma, the santoor virtuoso who almost single-handedly gave this Kashmir instrument the following it has today: "Classical music can pull people by its sheer depth but previous generations never got an opportunity to listen to it.

Vinay Maudgalya instructing the young: enthusiastic response

There is also no doubt that the present heightened interest is the result of current trends in fashion. Classical music is 'in', particularly among the younger set and the affluent. But there are also important sociological reasons that Sontakke calls "a response to the awful sound pollution". Faiyazuddin Dagar explains: "We have been racing ahead so hard and for so long that we are tired of it. After all the peace of mind lies not in running but in aesthetics." Kiran Seth of Spic-Macay says that "somewhere along the line youngsters seem to have become aware of the power of this music. It is also a kind of reaction to the terrible de-culturisation that has occurred in urban areas."

Harish Khanna, director-general of Doordarshan goes further. "This is part of a society's search for identity, of discover-

Now its availability has multiplied manifold. After Independence there were hardly any public concerts—today I have lost count of them."

The status of the accompanist, especially the tabla player, has also improved and there are people like Zakir Hussain and Shafaat Ahmed who are often greater draws than the main artiste. Says Allarakha, Zakir's father, who at 66, has now been playing publicly for an incredible 58 years: "Because some established artistes permitted our role to grow, public recognition has finally come to us."

Quite understandably, the new mass following has left neither the musicians nor their music untouched. Popularity, and the new audience, has compelled the music to adapt by shortening the extended time frame originally strictly adhered to. In concerts, the standard duration has now come down to about three hours. Amjad Ali Khan finds nothing wrong with this trend. Says he: "An artiste's quality can show in minutes—he doesn't have to take hours over it. Fifteen years ago it had become a fashion with us to go on for hours on end. What were we trying to prove? The real danger comes from repetitiveness, not a shorter performance."

The biggest change, however, has been in the status and commercial value of the musicians. Many artistes are now stars in their own right while some have even achieved the status of superstars with the attendant fan following and big money. Asking for Rs 5,000 for a single evening does not embarrass even little-known artistes; Rs 10,000 for a show does not faze the larger organisers and the big names have been known to ask for—and receive—as much as half a lakh rupees for a single performance.

Today, classical music means big money and more and more promoters are getting into the act, following in the footsteps of big corporations like ITC and the DCM group which started the trend. Says a Bombay enthusiast who has witnessed the classical music scene for more than two decades: "My guesstimate is that more than 60 per cent of the organisers are in it for money, compared to say 20 per cent in the mid-1960s".

But musicologist Ashok D. Ranade at Bombay's National Centre for Performing Arts points out the dangers of excessive commercialisation: "Because the audience has grown large but less discriminating, and because the stakes are very high, musicians are unwilling to take risks any more. The fact that less than 50 of the best known ragas are actually in circulation today proves this point. Their repertoire has become restricted and the aim is to provide minimal music in a purchasable fashion. If the fast tempo is more popular today than earlier it is because on the one hand it cuts time and, on the other, that is something the public understands easily. The main priority is effect."

Classical music today faces the dilemma that confronts any art form—adjust to suit audience taste and thus create an even greater audience or remain the total purist with little regard for response. But the fact that the questions being asked today relate to its growth and not survival is in itself a major achievement.

—SREEKANT KHANDEKAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Every minute of the day somebody in the world is buying a Tandy 1000. And now the world's # 1 IBM PC compatible comes to you.

Presenting DCM TANDY 1000

An IBM PC compatible plus much more

Including DESKMATE the unique all-in-one multifunction package

1000

...blue compatible, the DCM-...1000 is here. A worthy ...t for waiting patiently while ...rs were rushing to buy so call-...PC compatibles. Some of ...m dubious sources. The ...dy 1000 is the result of ...association between DCM ...dy Corpn. USA—America s ...ame in little computers.

...seller with a touch of class

...Tandy 1000 is a MSDOS comp-...s way ahead of the crowd. Its ...es, unmatched quality and reliabil-...h astounding range of software ...es make it hard to beat. The Tandy 1000 is ...st selling IBM PC compatible in the world ...selling nearly one a minute. The Model ...ready-to-run user friendly programs, excellent documentation for self-learning, ...igned to bring immediate benefits to all ...Even first time users.

...Mate an all-in-one multifunction package

...cial attraction is the unique, easy-to-use, multi-...on DeskMate software (not available even on ...iginal IBM PC) that lets anyone use the system ...day one. It includes word processing, spread-sheet, electronic filing, communications, planning calendar and electronic mail.

Opening up a world of colorful computing

With use of up to 16 colors on the high resolution screen, high capacity disk storage and communication support the Model 1000 opens up an exciting range of applications to increase your productivity. It runs all the IBM PC software developed the world over including Lotus 1-2-3, dBase III, Multiplan, Scripsit, Versa CAD, pfs: series, DR Graph, MS- Word and more.

For more information write to:
Ravi Aggarwal, Product Manager
(Business Systems) DCM data products,
Vikrant Towers, 4 Rajendra Place,
New Delhi 110 008. Tel: 5719967,
5711569, Cable: 'DECEMDEPE'
Telex: 031-61830.

DCM data products

Technology supported by service

...Tandy 1000 color micro computer—the PC with big computer ...bilities from the country's # 1 micro computer company.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

...Desk-ate/TM Tandy Corpn., dBase III/TM Ashton-Tate, DR Graph/TM Digital Research, IBM/TM International Business Machines Corpn., ...1-2-3/TM Lotus Development Corpn., Versa CAD/TM TFW Inc., pfs:/TM Software Publishing

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SIXTH TRIENNALE-INDIA

A Confused Picture

THE ANNUAL Triennale is the high point in the Indian art world's calendar, except that it seems to have undergone a dramatic change in intentions. Though meant to bring together artists from all over to enable a cultural exchange, the event has increasingly become an arena where the dissensions and differences that have turned the Indian art scene into something resembling Dante's Inferno are heatedly aired. The Sixth Triennale-India, which opened in Delhi last fortnight, was no different.

While some complained about the "unpardonable waste of money" (the ten awards alone were of Rs 50,000 each, out of a total budget of about Rs 35 lakh) others grumbled about the "pathetically bad organisation" (there were no labels identifying the works and their artists, and the lighting and projection were poor). Still others questioned the very validity and relevance of such an event even as various pamphlets made the rounds of the Rabindra Bhavan galleries alleging nepotism and gross discrimination by the selectors.

There were some embarrassing moments when some irate young artists burst upon a press conference minutes before the opening and gheraoed Akademi Chairman Sankho Chaudhary and the Triennale's Honorary Director Krishen Khanna, accusing them of having influenced the jury's decision and manipulated the awards.

On the other hand there were those who commended the organisers—the Central Lalit Kala Akademi and Triennale Director Khanna—for making the most of meagre resources. What emerged from all the praise and criticism, however, was the very multi-dimensional nature of such an exercise. Said respected artist Raza, who had come from Paris especially as a jury member: "It's something very good. It's a golden opportunity for our artists to meet artists from all over the world and exchange notes."

Pigs by Pushpamala; and So What by Caur

Photographs by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

With 776 works from 36 countries on show, the fare was naturally mixed and varied and the conflicting responses hardly came as a surprise. But there was little consensus on the trends that may have been in evidence. While Paris-based Indian artist Francis Newton Souza thought that the Triennale indicated the return of the figurative, a much younger Amitava Das and wife Mona of Delhi saw the prevalence of informal tendencies and environmental preoccupations.

Though the exhibits were certainly not representative of their respective countries, certain definite patterns did emerge. For one thing, the exhibition confirmed the artists' weariness with avant garde idioms the world over. Instead, there now seems to be a heavy reliance on tradition and heritage, even if the expression remains modern and contemporary.

This marriage between the traditional elite and modern concepts was evident in parts of the Indian section, by far the largest with 160 works of 76 artists. And artists as diverse as Pushpamala and Arpana Caur (the two Indian awardees), Shamshad Husain and Jai Zharotia, and Basant Kashyap and N.N. Rimzon. Said noted artist Satish Gujral, who found this section better than the rest: "One trend that's evident is the tendency among younger artists to use certain native techniques like ceramics and other crafts. The terracotta sculptures of some artists are especially good."

The sculptures were indeed good. Pushpamala's prize-winning Girl with a Mask, Pigs and Girl Smiling were steeped in traditional form and medium, and yet the organic simplicity of her terracottas was at once conventional and contemporary. The subtle clay folds of her Pigs especially spoke volumes and it must have been this that decided the jury. The terracotta tradition was upheld by C. Dakshinamoorthy too in Meeting I and Meeting II, but this is where the mode stopped. It did not proceed beyond the earthy realism of the clay, as did Pushpamala's.

There was certainly more of figure than form. Going around the Indian section, which he found the best, Souza remarked: "I see a return of figurative painting, after that brief phase of non-figurative, non-objective painting that was evident at the previous triennale."

It was Rimzon's Man in a Chalk Circle that reaffirmed this trend of figurative

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

symbolism. The very nakedness of the fibre-glass statue conjured up a tangible defiance, enough to break the vicious circle encircling him. However, the artist failed to capture this vehement mood again, with the result that his other works almost bordered on the gross. The grossness of figurative expressionism came through most crudely in Basant Kashyap's Aa Chal Bhaag Chala, an awkwardly mounted assemblage of a wooden horse cart, its garishly dressed driver and a woman peeping through a door at a man who is about to urinate. The whole rig, perhaps, was intended to shock—which it did apart from assaulting one's senses with its misplaced grotesquerie.

In soothing contrast were Arpana Caur's oils, So What and Nirjan, which seemed to grow in impact as one watched them, providing an effective metaphor for existence. The texture of her shades played with a plurality of expression that undulated simultaneously on various transcendental planes. Certainly a mature artist, Caur seems to be striving for a definite, individualistic expression. More or less the same mystique hovered over Jai Zharotia's water colours Mystery I, Mystery II and Mystery III. A similar sense of mysticism came through in some very different kind of works: M. Sonathipathi's colour ink creations, which relied heavily on conventional intricacies and had all the ornate appeal of a Tibetan thankha.

On a more organic plane, it was Shamshad Husain whose Painting XV and Painting XVI brought out the complete texture and fullness of oil on canvas. His schematic gestures and simplistic renditions were lyrical and absorbing, and once and for all reaffirmed his artistic status as independent from his famous father, the legendary M.F. Husain.

Of course, there were the inevitable forays into the cubistic and the surreal. But most of these were poor copies of the West—at best tacky, at worst pretentious. So one had Rekha Rodwittiya doing a juvenile Piccaso in The Parade and Prabha Sahai doing a pathetic Dali in her Foliage. Perhaps it was this that prompted painter Jatin Das to remark that "the Indian artists are merely aping the West". And he was not running them down. Said Das: "A lot of them are more competent, but in this the soul is missing. They are painting pictures instead of paintings."

This reaction was perhaps due to the fact that the exhibition was hardly representative of contemporary art and artists. Gujral felt that it was a wrong step to have debarred artists who had participated in earlier triennales. "The very idea leaves little scope for representation," he said. "It does not give a clear picture of what is being created here." Das agreed: "A triennale is for the best of Indian art. So they should have taken people who have exhibited earlier. As it is, the Triennale does not do good to Indian art. I think we should concentrate on our own art and artists."

Meeting II by Dakshinamoorthy; Painting XVI by Shamshad Husain

But Triennale Director Khanna thought that the selectors had taken in the most that they could. "You can't possibly accommodate everybody," he explained. "We have tried to take in as many as we can. We even made last-minute admissions. But we also have our constraints of space and funds. We can't please everybody."

Many artists, however, thought otherwise. There had certainly been discrimination, they alleged, both in the selection by commissioners and the award by the jury. Said a het-up Yusuf Arrakal, the painter from Bangalore who spearheaded the protest: "I know for sure that I was selected for the award, along with two others—sculptor J.K. Chillar of Maharashtra and ceramist Ranjana Thapaliyal of Garhi. But Chaudhary and Khanna influenced the jury and made them select those two girls who are very close to Khanna." Souza, while saying nothing as categorical as that, nonetheless supported Arrakal and his friends. Said the soft-spoken artist: "Their protest is valid. There is a lot of politics and groupism."

It was these very snafus that prompted some artists to question the propriety of such events. Some young artists were for abolishing it altogether. Instead, they felt that it would be more meaningful if the same money was used to send Indian artists abroad on fellowships and exhibit their works in other countries. But senior artists like Das and Gujral thought that this would be a folly. While Das advocated a triennale only for Indian artists, Gujral felt that the Government should sanction more funds and space for the event. Gallery owner Kekoo Gandhy suggested a permanent organising outfit for the triennale, which would exhibit the works not just in Delhi but all over the country.

It may be thoughtless to abandon the Triennale altogether. But if things are going to remain the way they are—considering that this was the sixth such bungle—it would be more judicious to have second thoughts about its organisational aspects and the question of representation. The Indian Triennale may be one way of showing the best face of Indian art. But it also seems to wind up showing the worst.

—MOHAMMED ASLAM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

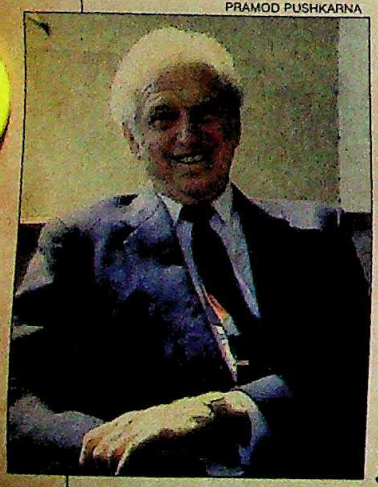
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

D.J. ANAND RAJ

Kumar and Sujatha with her parents: unusual alliance

◆ It rained torrents and yet, it was the dawn of a new era. One cloudy morning last fortnight, everybody who was anybody converged on Bangalore Palace for a most unusual alliance. The tie-up was between politics and media. And tying the knot were Sujatha, 24, daughter of Congress(I) leader S. Bangarappa, and Tilak Kumar, 32, director of the Deccan Herald group. Said the groom: "It's a little odd getting married into a politician's family. But I don't think that it is going to affect the paper's policy at all." The bride blushed: "I got married to him because he is Tilak Kumar, not because he is a newspaper magnate." The happiest was pa-in-law Bangarappa: "Naturally I am happy. As for people saying that now I will get more publicity in Deccan Herald, am I not getting enough already?" This is not all: Sujatha's sister will soon marry Shivanna, son of actor Raj Kumar. It's a small world, after all.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



Sheldon: the Indian mystery

◆ If Ramesh Sippy can plagiarise The Magnificent Seven into a block-busting Sholay, he can also produce some pretty authentic stuff. Guess what Sippy has brought in from the other side of midnight? Sidney Sheldon, no less, the master of the pulp fiction game. On the books is a collaboration plan that calls for Sheldon to pen an Indian story for the world market, which Sippy might then make into a film. The best-selling writer, who was on a week's visit to Bombay and Delhi last fortnight, has a soft corner for India. "Yeah," said the frizzy-haired American. "India is a place of mysteries, it gives me ideas." Great ones for the box-office, to be sure. But until the deal is signed, neither Sheldon nor Sippy is spilling the bloodline.

◆ Now has it or has it not come to roost at the Bachchans? The stork, that is. For well over a fortnight now, there have been rumours that Jaya Bachchan, 36, petite and mother of two, is expecting again—a third time. The Guddi herself is seen at parties radiant and glowing, and when asked to confirm, gives a nod and a smile that says it all. But when the newspapers box the item, ma-in-law Teji Bachchan denies it hotly and lashes out at the press for selling itself to spice and sensationalism. "It's a lie—a silly rumour," said Mama Bachchan last fortnight. "She's not—not in the near future, not in the present future." But back to the parties again, and there Jaya is—all nods and blushes and mysterious smiles. Now who will break this pregnant silence?

Bachchan: mother in waiting

BHAWAN SINGH

◆ By now, Shah Bano Begum, 73, is a household name. But the Begum is not content with being the Muslims' cause celebre. Egged on by her ambitious son, she now wants more—a Rajya Sabha ticket, if you please. In the capital last fortnight, Shah Bano declared with a twinkle in her kohl-rimmed eyes: "We have always been staunch supporters of the Congress(I) and now that I am so well-known, the party can use my name." Of course, there has been no offer from the party yet. "But if Rajiv asks me, I'm willing to stand for election."

HARI OM GULATI

Shah Bano: aiming high

SIGNPOST

Died: Jiddu Krishnamurti, 90, in California. Thinker, philosopher and seer non-pareil, 'Krishnaji' was a unique spiritual teacher. Beginning with the Theosophical Society, this modest, uneducated man went on to evolve a profound yet simple credo. Though he did not want to be deified, his followers are sad that "the seer who walked alone" will walk no more.

—Compiled by MOHAMMED ASLAM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

g high

w wants a ticket, if pital last declared ner kohl-have alupporters and now own, the ame." Of n no offer
. "But if willing to

S T

murti, 90, er, philos-
on-pareil, que spiri-
ning with ciety, this ed man profound hough he eified, his hat "the one" will

MED ASLAM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

12976

12975

12974

12973

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Crisis State

Maharashtra was once again plunged into political turmoil as chief minister Shivajirao Patil-Nilangekar resigned following the mark-sheet scandal. The imposition of Home Minister S.B. Chavan as his successor seemed unlikely to solve the state's political crisis.

COVER STORY.....72

Explosive Findings

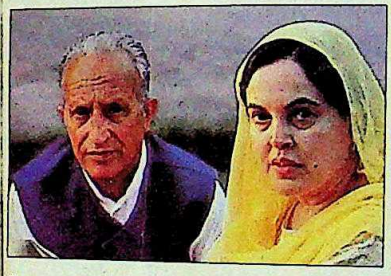
The Justice Kirpal Commission handed in its report last fortnight on the tragic Kanishka disaster. The report confirms that a terrorist bomb caused the crash and also lays out in meticulous and damning detail the sequence of events that led to the disaster.

SPECIAL REPORT.....26

The Gathering Storm

The Muslim Women's Bill is rapidly proving that the Rajiv Gandhi Government has painted itself into a tight corner. The issue has sparked off a heated national debate. But with growing opposition to the bill, the Government finds itself in an embarrassing position.

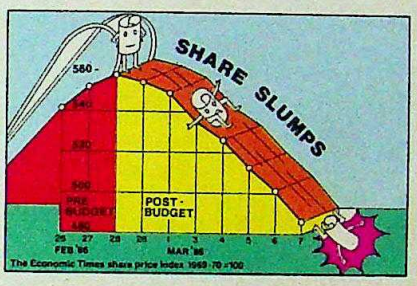
CURRENT EVENTS.....30



Suspended Animation

Bowing to mounting political and public pressure, the Congress(I) withdrew support from G.M. Shah's beleaguered government, paving the way for governor's rule. Jagmohan's efforts to streamline the administration have been widely welcomed.

SPECIAL REPORT.....82



The Balancing Act

The stock-market nose-dived, industry howled, and the middle class cold-shouldered new tax breaks while the Government slapped new taxes on consumer durables and made a determined bid to shed its pro-rich image. A comprehensive report on the Union Budget.

BUDGET.....98

The Master's Due

The paintings of Nobel Laureate Rabindra Nath Tagore have always been undervalued, but now, decades after his death, his artistic endeavours have suddenly become sought after in art circles at prices well beyond those commanded by any other Indian artist.

ARTS.....143

CONTENTS

COMMENT.....9
CAPITALOOK.....12
VOICES.....17
INDIANOTES.....23
SPECIAL REPORT
Justice Kirpal Commission: Explosive Findings.....26
CURRENT EVENTS
Muslim Women's Bill: The Gathering Storm.....30
Himachal Pradesh: Log Jam.....37
Punjab: Mounting Pressures.....43
Gujarat: The Solanki Strategy.....49
Gujarat: Pension Peril.....51
Andhra Pradesh: Backyard Neglect.....55
BJP: Veering Right.....61
Thakkar Commission: Passing the Buck.....62
Haryana: School for Scandal.....64
Karnataka: Record of Assault.....66
Kerala: Stalemate.....67
Bihar: On the Boil.....68
COVER STORY
Maharashtra: The Crisis State.....72
SPECIAL REPORT
J&K: Suspended Animation.....82
STATENOTES.....88
GLOBE-TROTTING
United Kingdom: Breaking Barriers.....92
NEIGHBOURS
Indo-Sri Lanka: The Colombo Chill.....94
TRADE WINDS.....97
BUSINESS
Budget: The Balancing Act.....98
Ahmedabad: The Washing Well.....105
Trade Unions: Making Capital.....106
Frog Legs Export: Cold Feet.....109
Cassette Piracy: High Stakes.....112
Banks: Wrong Target.....117
The Economy Monitor.....118
The Markets: Budget Blow.....123
EDUCATION
Private Colleges: Affiliated Problems.....124
PHOTO FEATURE
Mylara: Dogs of War.....130
LIVING
Gaur Sculptors: Hard Times.....138
THE ARTS
Tagore Paintings: The Master's Due.....143
RELIGION
Syrian Christians: Women's Victory.....149
AVIATION
Air-India: Double Dealing.....152
SPORTS
IOA: Olympian Fiasco.....156
EYE-CATCHERS.....160

Cover photograph by BHAWAN SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

'You want my opinion on a top-class suiting?'

'I've become a familiar figure on television screens around the country. When a cricket match is on, I'm in great demand for my expert opinions on where the captain went wrong, why a batsman got out, what a bowler must do to improve his line and length, when the pitch will start assisting spin...

That's as far as cricket goes. Sometimes I'm asked my opinion on other subjects – like clothes. Someone bounced me one the other day – 'What suiting do you recommend?' I didn't duck that one. I didn't need to. 'Gwalior, of course', I answered without the slightest hesitation.

Yes, Gwalior Suitings match up to the best anywhere in the world. I travel a lot, I see a lot of things. And I know class when I see it. I was so impressed I agreed to endorse Gwalior's latest range in Golden Glade Worsted Suiting and Dornfab. Take it from me – their inimitable designs and quality textures will just bowl you over!'

Gwalior Suiting – In a class of its own.

M.A.K. PATAUDI

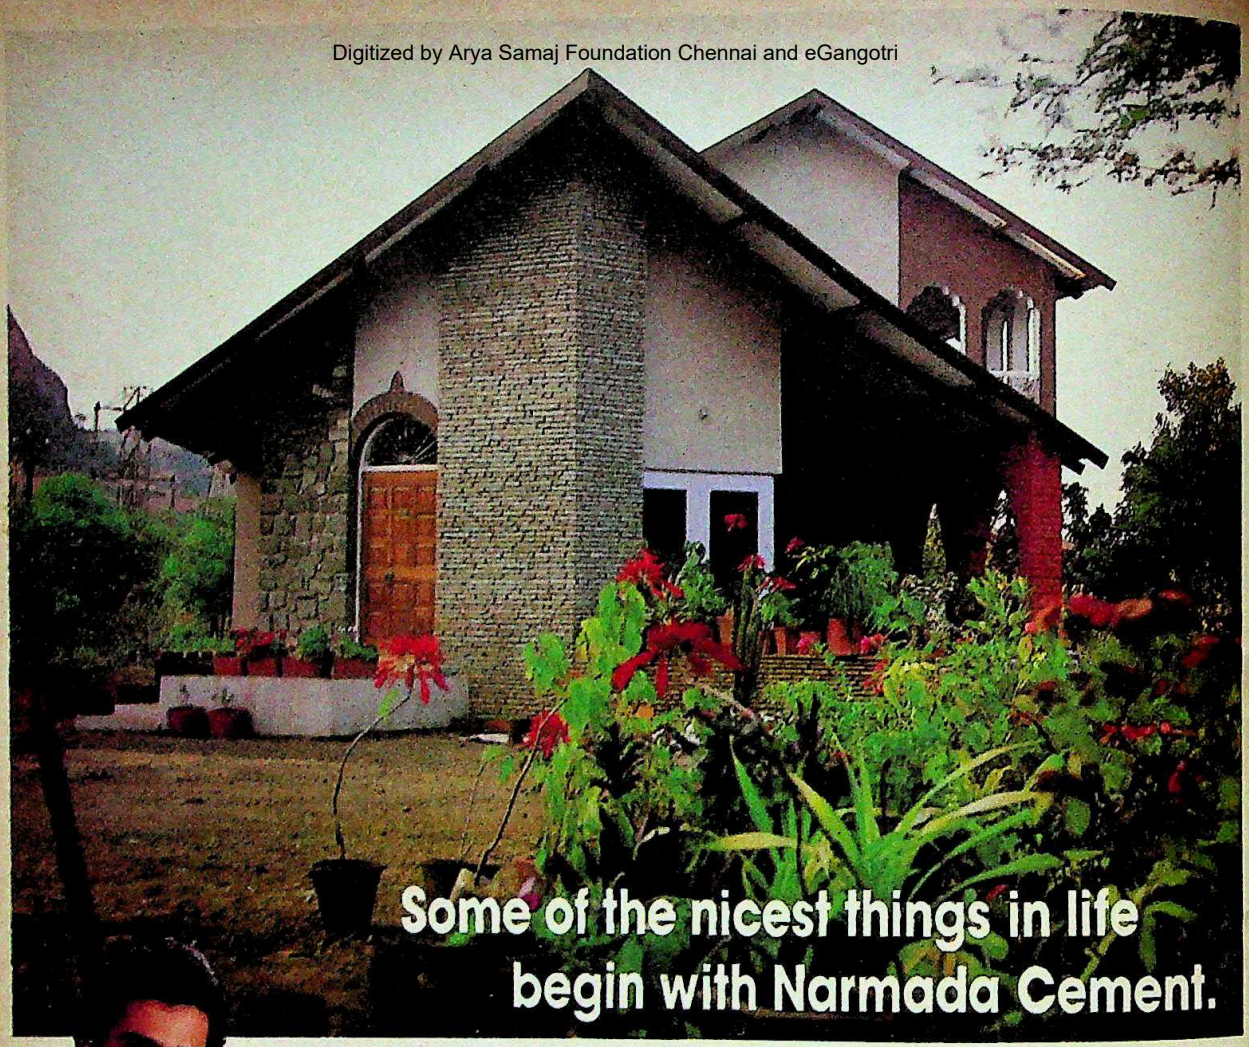
MAPP-GR-85-92 ENG

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

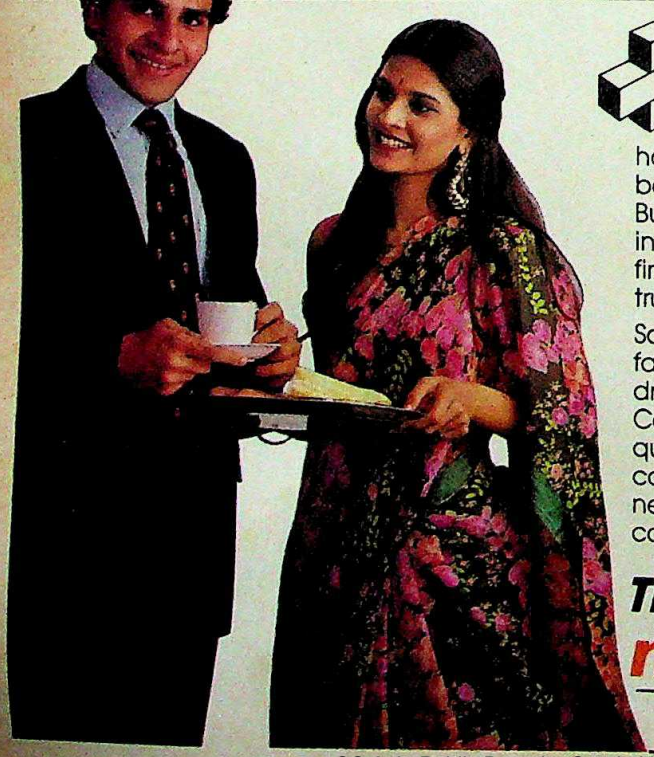
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Some of the nicest things in life begin with Narmada Cement.



Most happy scenes have a home in the background.
But homes are not built in the air. They need a firm foundation. Like a truly good cement.

Some of the happiest families have built their dreams on Narmada Cement. Its superior quality has been the cornerstone for many a never-say-die construction.

Along with long life, Narmada's finely grained cement brings another guest to stay at your house for good. Grace — it's reflected in the smooth finish of the floor, the roof — and everything in between.

The years will tell
narmada cement

Bakhtawar, Nariman Point, Bombay 400 021.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

SANKALP/NC/63/85

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

VOLUME XI NUMBER 6
FOR THE FORTNIGHT MARCH 16-31, 1986

EDITOR
AROON PURIE

MANAGING EDITOR — SUMAN DUBEY
SENIOR EDITOR — T.N. NINAN
PICTURE EDITOR — RAGHU RAI
FEATURES EDITOR — INDERJIT BADHWAR
ASSOCIATE EDITOR — DILIP BOBB
ASSISTANT EDITORS — PRABHU CHAWLA, AJAY KUMAR

CORRESPONDENTS

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT — RAMINDAR SINGH
NEW DELHI — SHEKHAR GUPTA, PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI, RAJ CHENGAPPA
AHMEDABAD — RAMESH MENON
BANGALORE — SRINIVASA PRASAD
BOMBAY — M. RAHMAN, JAGANNATH DUBASHI
CALCUTTA — INDRANIL BANERJIE
CHANDIGARH — GOBIND THUKRAL
HYDERABAD — AMARNATH K. MENON
JAIPUR — SREEKANT KHANDEKAR
MADRAS — S.H. VENKATRAMANI
PATNA — FARZAND AHMED
TRIVANDRUM — SREEDHAR PILLAI

NEW YORK — MADHU TREHAN
LONDON — RAMESH CHANDRAN

NEWS COORDINATOR — RADHIKA ROY

DESIGN CONSULTANT — AUROBIND PATEL

CHIEF OF PRODUCTION — SHIRLEY JOSHUA, ANURADHA KAPOOR

COPY DESK — ANUPAMA GOPAL, SIMRAN BHARGAVA, ANN NINAN

CHIEF PHOTOGRAPHER — BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHER — PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CARTOONIST — AJIT NINAN MATHEW

CARTOGRAPHER — B.K. SHARMA

LAYOUT ARTISTS — LOKESH BHARGAVA, ANUP GUPTA, PEALI DUTTA GUPTA

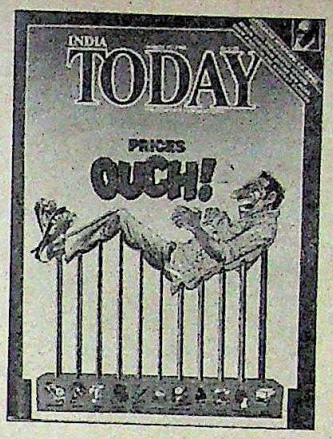
MARKETING DIRECTOR — MOHINI BHULLAR

ADVERTISING MANAGERS

BOMBAY — GEORGE SEBASTIAN
DELHI — NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA — MEERA PAUL
MADRAS — R. ANAND
BANGALORE — ANITA BAVEJA

GENERAL MANAGER — CHANDER RAI

● EDITORIAL OFFICE: LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD, F-40 CONNAUGHT PLACE NEW DELHI 110001. PHONE: 3315801-4. TELEX: 31-61345 INTO IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI ● SUBSCRIPTIONS: INDIA TODAY SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT, POST BOX 69, FARIDABAD HARYANA ● TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA TODAY CIRCULATION MANAGER, F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE, MIDDLE CIRCLE, NEW DELHI. PHONE: 3313076-8, TELEX: 31-4724 INTO IN ● ADVERTISING OFFICES: 28 A&B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER II, NARIMAN POINT, BOMBAY-400021. PHONE: 2026152, 2029326, 2025415. TELEX: 11-5373 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BOMBAY ● 13-K CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001. PHONE: 312841, 312600, 321776. TELEX: 31-5308 THOM IN. CABLES: LIVMEDIA, NEW DELHI ● PAGUN CHAMBERS, 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF ROAD, MADRAS-600105. PHONE: 477188,477770 CABLE: LIVMEDIA, MADRAS ● 74/1ST. MARKS ROAD, BANGALORE-560001. PHONE: 568448, 579037, 579089. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BANGALORE ● 2C EVEREST, 46C CHOWRINGEE ROAD, CALCUTTA-700016. PHONE: 445398, 447726. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, CALCUTTA ● COPYRIGHT 1984 LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD, ALL RIGHTS RESERVED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. REPRODUCTION IN ANY MANNER IS PROHIBITED. PUBLISHED BY CHANDER RAI FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD, NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT THOMSON PRESS INDIA LTD, FARIDABAD HARYANA ● INDIA TODAY DOES NOT TAKE RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL ●



PRICE PAINS

In his cover story interview, Finance Minister V.P. Singh ("One bandh costs Rs 450 crore" Mar 15) lamented that while the extra revenue from petroleum products will be Rs 530 crore, one bandh costs the nation Rs 450 crore. In other words, there is no gain from the increase in prices, as it is offset by the bandh. What then has the Government achieved by persisting in this increase except stoking the fires of inflation by imposing a burden of nearly Rs 1,000 crore (Rs 450 crore of the bandh and Rs 530 crore of the price hike) on the people? By what canons of justice and logic can we term this an act of courageous and responsible leadership?

Hyderabad — K. RAJAGOPALAN

■ The real cause for the excessive taxes and increased prices is the tremendous defence expenditure. While a few years ago, it was Rs 2,500 crore, now it is over Rs 8,000 crore. The real reason for the propaganda of Pakistan making the bomb is to build public opinion in favour of buying arms.

Indore — M.J. ANSARI

■ Let us not get hysterical about the price rise. No doubt it will force us to tighten our belts; but at the same time it will force us to tighten the screws on our discipline too. Thanks to the astronomical price rise, there will be, by and large, less and less of drinking, drug-abuse, gambling, smoking, immorality and so on. We will have no option but to make a virtue of necessity. As Shakespeare wrote: "Sweet are the uses of adversity."

Ahmedabad — K.S. VISHWANATHAN

■ Sailing in Rajiv's dreamship to the 21st century, we Indians can't conjure up a picture of prices in the next century. Will someone tell our speeding prime minister that the price forecast is very critical ahead and he has to do something about it?

Bangalore — K. CHIDANAND KUMAR

SPARING THE ROD

I fully agree with Surjit Singh Barnala when he says: "The rod is the only answer now for these spoiled boys. If we don't send the police in now, tomorrow the army will have to go." ("Avoiding a Showdown", March 15). When Barnala came to power he not only released these youths but also gave them employment. He gave an opportunity to these spoiled youths to become ideal citizens. But as soon as they were released, Punjab again saw violence and killings. The Barnala Government should now take the help of all Sikhs and take the Hindus into confidence.

Surajpur, Ambala — KAMLESH PRASAD

WRONG BILLING

Apropos your Comment ("Stepping Backwards", March 15), I would, while in full agreement with you, like to add that if Muslim fundamentalists feel all that bad about the Shah Bano court judgement and if they truly and sincerely feel hurt, then I would welcome it if a Muslim thief's hand is chopped off, and an adulterer stoned, like it is preached in the scriptures. This acid test should take care of the controversy for good.

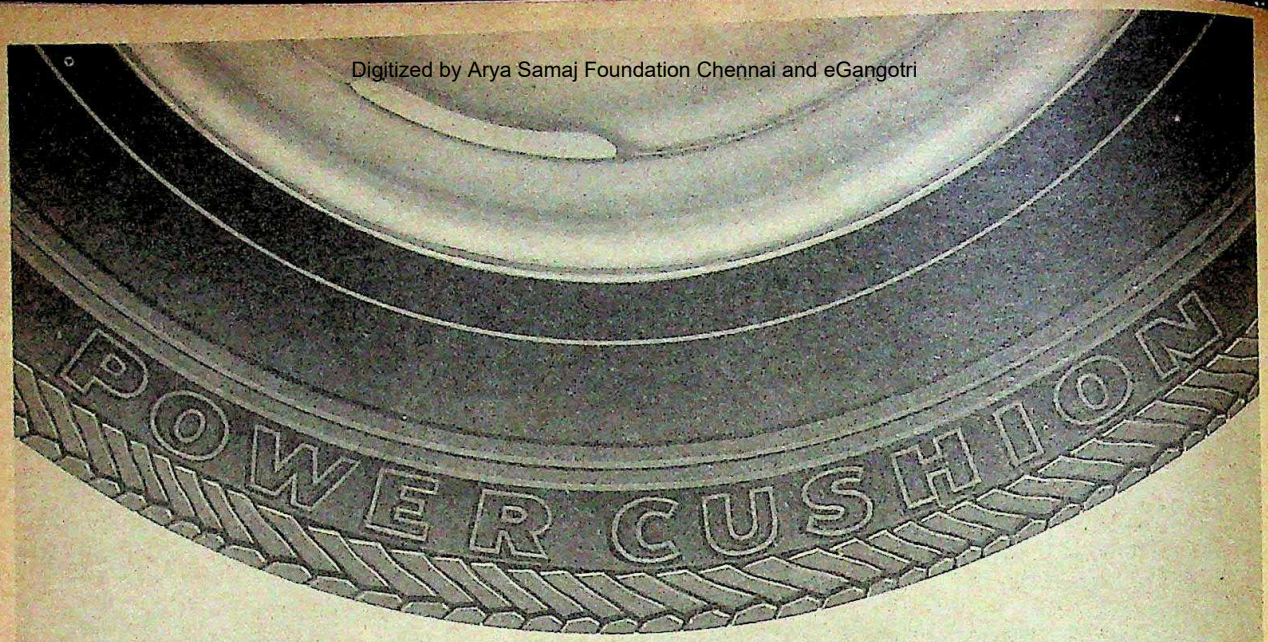
Shimla — PRAMOD SUD

■ You seem to be greatly hurt by Rajiv Gandhi's bold and realistic stand in introducing the Muslim Women (Protection of Rights on Divorce) Bill. One thing I can't understand is how can the protagonists of women's rights call it liberation and maintaining the dignity of women when, to maintain herself, a divorced woman would have to look to and depend on the same person who threw her out on the streets? Can anything be more insulting and ego-hurting than this? I don't think any self-respecting woman would go to such a person and ask for alimony after going through all those humiliations. Further, as per the Supreme Court judgement, if the husband is bound by law to pay maintenance to his divorced wife, he would kill and burn her or reduce her to a doormat instead. It was this humiliation and indignity that the Holy Quran wanted to save women from.

Delhi — SAEEDA MASROOR KHAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



The strong grip of leadership

Goodyear demonstrate leadership worldwide. In technology and research, innovation and quality, in popularity amongst users and performance on world race-tracks.

The largest earthmover tyre, the tyre that landed on the moon, the largest-selling car tyre in the world — each one is a Goodyear!

Right here in India Goodyear lead with Power Cushion. The tyre you have made an unquestioned leader. Well, that's Goodyear. The finest, the world over. As Power Cushion is in India.

And with all reason.

Deeper and Wider Tread:
More rubber on the tread than any other car tyre. (Consumers testify to over 50,000 Kms. of non-skid safety).

Computer chips in for more mileage, more safety:
Power Cushion's computer-perfected tread design ensures greater grip, more comfort, more safety as tread adjusts automatically to road profile.

Unique Arrow-Head Design:
For a quicker start-stop, lower rolling resistance, more fuel saving.

'3-T' Nylon Casing:
Resilient and abrasion-resistant casing that ensures more retreads.

That's Goodyear Power Cushion

GOODYEAR

LEADING THE WORLD IN TYRE TECHNOLOGY

Contract/GY-20/85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

■ Your editorial rightly concludes that the motivation for the Congress(I)'s volte face on the Shah Bano judgement is political. If the bill on Muslim women is passed, conditions like those prevailing before 1947 are likely to be created again. During 1940-46, the Congress kept accommodating one demand after another of the Muslim League. Ultimately it accepted the League as the sole spokesman of the Muslims, and agreed to the two-nation theory. The Muslims in India cannot be given the benefit of the doubt for being in a minority, because all of them had voted for the creation of Pakistan in the 1946 elections. They cannot be permitted to have their cake and eat it too.

Moradabad — V.S. GARG

■ I fully concur with your views on the bill. Section 125, CR PC is sustained by Article 15 of the Constitution and applies to all women equally. The exclusion of any religious community is a plain violation of the fundamental right to equality. It's high time our politicians started placing the interests of our 'secular' nation over their vote banks.

Bhopal — RAJNEESH BERDIA

■ Our young and dynamic prime minister wants us to reach the 21st century via the fifth!

New Delhi — P.K. MALHOTRA

MINORITY VIEW

The prime minister deserves to be congratulated for having introduced the bill on Muslim women respecting the sentiments of the Muslims ("The Muslims: Anger and Hurt", March 15). No country can prosper if its largest minority is isolated. The 125 so-called prominent Muslims referred to in your article can by no means claim to represent the overwhelming majority of the Muslims.

Adoni, Andhra Pradesh — SHER BANU

■ I think it is high time we stopped giving importance to religion and delinked it from politics to save our country from disintegration. By introducing the bill on Muslim women, I'm afraid Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi has taken one more step towards this disintegration.

Angul, Orissa — NIVEDITA SARANGI

FALL FROM GRACE

The shabby treatment meted out to G. Parthasarathi ("The Resignation Story", March 15) was totally uncalled for. As India's foremost expert on foreign affairs, GP today should have been at the helm of the Ministry of External Affairs. But then GP never did sell shoe-polish or paint nor pilot an aeroplane. He was for years the de facto foreign minister, yet he refused the official title. Publicity never appealed to him. And today he is a pariah. Rajiv Gandhi should realise that if the current trend of ignoring good people continues, his aeroplane will soon crash. As it is, a lot of engine trouble seems to have developed already.

Calcutta — NIKHIL SRINIVASAN

EDIBLE POISON

Your report on the pesticide industry ("Poisonous Growth", March 15) is alarming. Comprehensive legislation to check violation of the Insecticides Act must be brought about and complete scrutiny of data on the poisonous effects of pesticides must be made early. Enforcement of rules and regulations must be tightened and monitored vigilantly.

Coimbatore — N.P. LAKSHMINARAYAN

BUSINESS BLUES

By swooping down on companies, businessmen and industrialists, income tax officials are only behaving in the worst manner possible for collecting more tax ("Tax Raids: Tightening the Bonds", March 15). The arrest of top executives is a bad reflection on national integrity. The raids will only make the finance minister unpopular and unsuccessful. Instead, the Central Government should take steps to help the private sector raise adequate resources and expand productive employment.

Madras — K.V. RAJAGOPALAN

MONITORING ECONOMY

I was taken aback by your comment in The Economy Monitor (March 15) that the rate of growth in the money supply (M_3) is one variable that the Government seems to be keeping under tight control, despite the fact that the annual trend actually increased from 17 per cent to 18 per cent, and the growth in productive output is well below 5 per cent—a case of too much money chasing too few goods! The manner in which we control our money supply reminds me of the Vector theory of systems, which states that systems run better when designed to run downhill.

Cochin — IMON GHOSH

MUSICAL PEOPLE

"Classical Music: A New Awakening" (March 15) is final proof, if proof was indeed needed, that you are still in a comatose state. Classical music may be a cactus flower in the arid desert of the Hindi-speaking, dust-laden cow belt of the north, but down south no soul breathes which is so dead that it can't essay a few breezy notes, pluck a few strings or tap out a fetching rhythmic pattern in percussion. Classical music is as much an integral aspect of our ethos as temple towers, filtered coffee, Mysore rasam, Kanchipuram silk saris and Gonkura chutney.

New Delhi — K. VENKATESAN

■ It is most heartening that some of our promising classical singers and instrumentalists are trying their best to popularise classical music. While some music directors are trying to induct more western tunes and instruments into Hindi films, there are others who are using Indian instruments like tabla, sitar, mridangam, sarod and bansuri in background music.

Jamshedpur — B.N. BOSE

HEROIN HIGH

The heroin addiction problem is really hitting new highs (March 15). The lack of adequate hospital facilities for heroin addicts indicates that the Government is more inclined towards curing the symptoms instead of the problem. Rehabilitation therapy should be given more importance than the detoxification programme as such cases tend to relapse.

Ahmedabad — KETAN YAGNIK

■ Your special report made thought-provoking reading. It's easy to crack down on big organised gangs than to keep a check on the 'freelancers' who do not carry more than 2-3 kg of heroin. The trafficking can be stopped only when the market is cut off.

Shimla — VIVEK MOHAN

WRONG PICTURE

Apropos the article "Sixth Triennale-India: A Confused Picture" (March 15), as members of the international jury we strongly repudiate the insinuation made by Yusuf Arakkal that the jury was influenced by Sankho Chaudhary and Krishen Khanna.

Paris — GAUDIBERT, MELEHI and RAZA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Which child has leprosy?"

The chances are you won't ever be able to tell

Leprosy carries haunting associations of missing fingers and toes — yet, these manifestations need never occur.

Early signs

It could start with a pale or a red patch; a tingling or an 'ant-crawling' sensation along an affected nerve; and numbness, loss of hair and lack of sweating in the area. Deformities appear later, at an advanced stage, only if the disease goes untreated.

It isn't always infectious

Most people believe that all leprosy patients pass on the disease. This isn't true. Leprosy is the least infectious of all infectious diseases. Besides, only 20% of all leprosy patients suffer from the infectious kind of leprosy. Of those who come into prolonged contact with infectious cases, only 5% catch the disease.

Not just a poor man's disease

Leprosy doesn't spare the affluent. It can — and does — occur in any social and economic class. What's more, 30% of all newly detected cases are children.

It is curable

Leprosy can be cured completely, even at an advanced stage, though serious deformities cannot always be remedied. A full course of medication and treatment is what the patient needs. The duration of the treatment depends on the severity of the case.

If treated early, leprosy leaves no physical or psychological scars.

All the patient needs is :

- Early detection
- Early intervention
- Sustained treatment
- Community support throughout

Drive away the stigma

Encourage leprosy patients to lead a normal life. Remind them — and yourself — that they pose no threat to their family or friends. Only you can help them retain their place in society.

All you need is an open mind.

React-0411/85 D

TATA STEEL

Issued in the interest of better understanding and support for the leprosy patient — by TATA STEEL and UNICEF.

The real healing touch must come from you

The true identity of the leprosy patient has been concealed for want of community support.

For further information, write to :
Leprosy Awareness Campaign, C/o UNICEF
Information Service, 73 Lodi Estate, New Delhi-110 003.

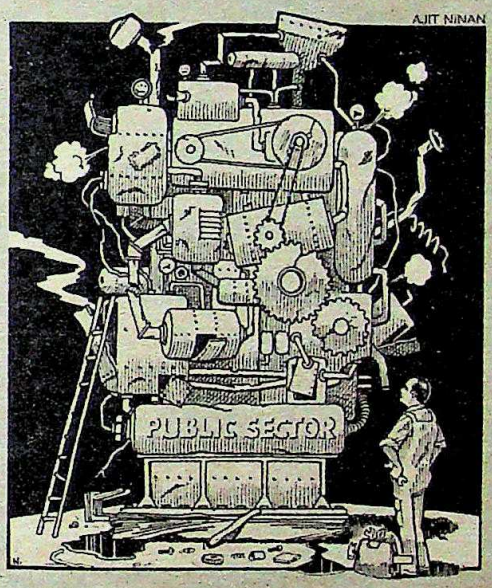
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Public Issue

SUDDENLY, the public sector is in the news. The Government is talking of new initiatives on several fronts where action is urgently needed, and some of the ideas being tossed about come like a breath of fresh air. But so far there has been more talk than action, and decisions on clear-cut proposals have been debated endlessly without anything concrete emerging.

The public sector is important, and the Government is increasingly conscious of this, because its success in meeting the seventh plan's investment targets depends critically on the public sector generating more surpluses. Every third rupee that the Government will invest in the plan is supposed to come from public enterprises. If they fail to provide this cash for investment, the economy's future growth is in jeopardy.



Investment in the public sector now totals more than Rs 43,000 crore. Yet, if one leaves aside the oil companies, the Government gets absolutely no profit on its investment. A 10 per cent return would generate more than Rs 4,000 crore annually: almost equal to the total revenue from both the income tax and the corporation tax.

But it should be clear that these returns will be impossible without basic issues being addressed, issues concerning management efficiency and accountability, the closure of un-salvageable units, the choice of areas for public sector investment, the speedy completion of projects, cost control, corruption and leakages, the type of people appointed to head public units, the nationalisation of units rendered sick by private managements, and much more.

The Government has, in fact, been doing some refreshingly new thinking on many of these areas. Right now, for instance, it is busy working out a new pricing policy for key public sector companies so that the burden of managerial inefficiency is not passed on to consumers through higher prices. This is welcome, because the whole economy has been paying the price for public sector inefficiency: one example is steel, another is the increasing power tariffs that result because of the sorry state of the state electricity boards.

The Government has also talked of closing down unviable units, of privatising some of the better-run companies so that they can attract funds from the public at a time when money is scarce, and of introducing the French system of dealing with public sector managements: the Government negotiates a contract with the management on key targets, and then leaves the management free from day-to-day interference, instead of judging it periodically on the attainment of the goals agreed to.

The problem is that most of these initiatives have remained in the realm of discussion and debate, without any final decisions emerging. For instance, a decision on partly privatising at least some leading public sector companies, like Bharat Heavy Electricals Ltd and Hindustan Machine Tools, has hung fire for several months; the industry minister first talked of this last year.

There has been even more toing and froing on the decision to close down a handful of government-owned companies, even though the Hindustan Steelworks Construction Ltd has had 5,000 idle workers on its rolls for the last five years, while Engineering Projects India Ltd has lost Rs 72 crore in the last three years alone. Other companies, like the Heavy Engineering Corporation at Ranchi, have wiped out their total capital with accumulated losses, but seem to retain the right to continue losing Rs 50 crore and more every year till eternity.

And, of course, there is no sense of direction concerning public sector investment. There is little reason for the Government to be investing in consumer industries, but it does—and loses money, to boot. There is equally little reason why Scooters India should be losing money year after year in the midst of a two-wheeler revolution.

There are other neglected issues, like over-employment, delayed projects, and corruption. The prime minister told some employees' representatives who met him some months ago that although he knew that a public sector company had 5,000 employees instead of 2,000, there was nothing he could do about this. As for delayed projects, the Vishakhapatnam steel project is a classic example of delays and cost escalations leading to a point where the project is doomed to lose money from the moment it starts production, and condemned to being dated technologically because of the long gestation period.

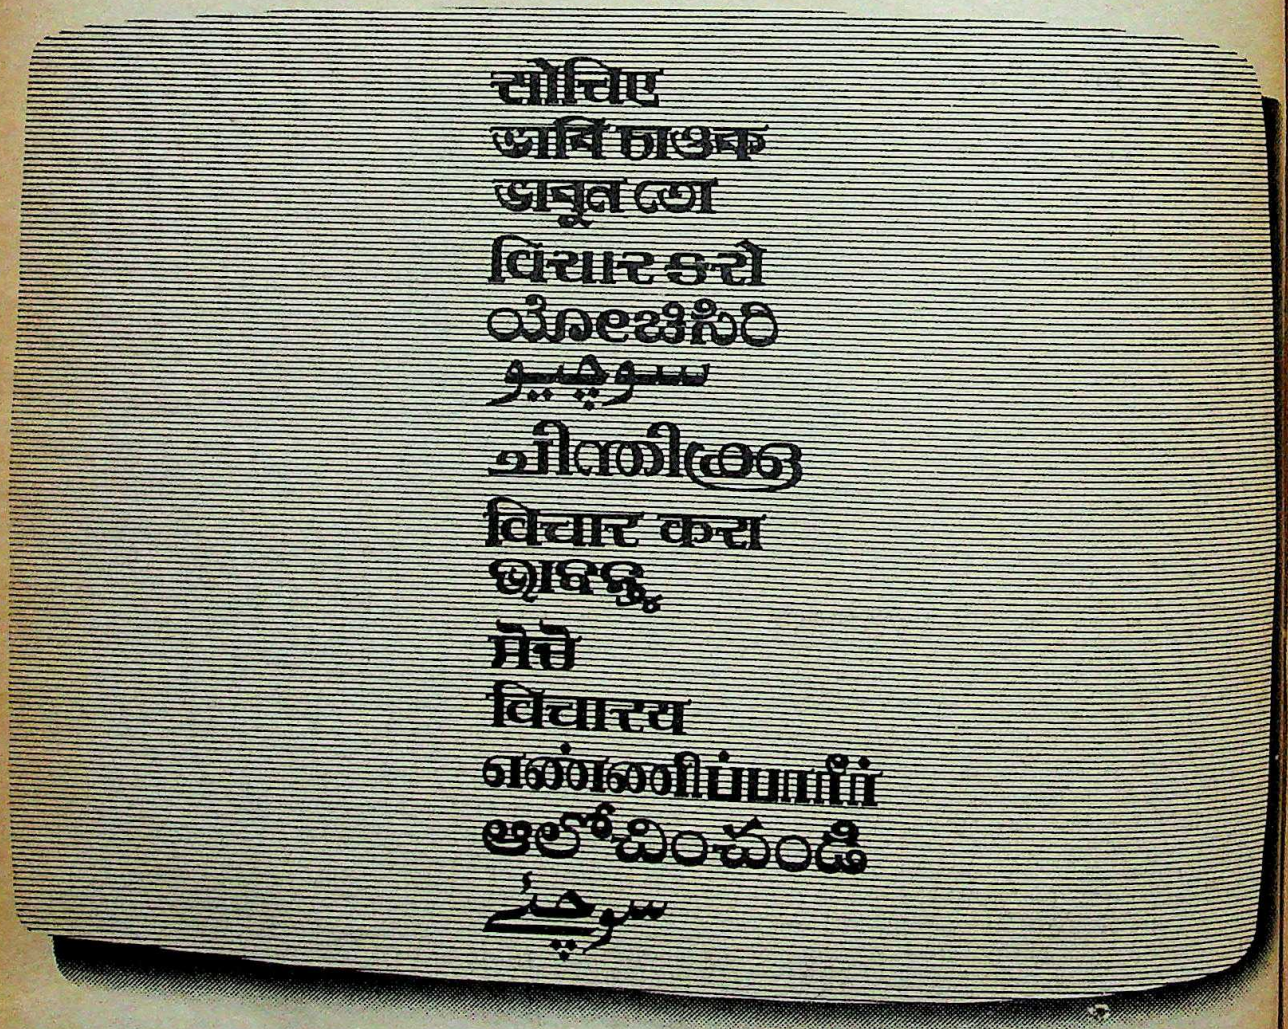
Equally distressing is the failure to rationally determine the level of government supervision required in the public sector. L.K. Jha made the eminently sensible point six months ago that greater governmental supervision of day-to-day functioning meant reduced accountability by the management. But the Government has still not put its relationship with public sector managements into a codified framework. The talk of introducing the French system has not been followed up with a decision.

All these raise key issues that must be sorted out. What is needed is a comprehensive look at the various problem areas, the speedy identification of solutions, and quick action aimed at getting to the end objectives. So far, what has been in evidence is the desire to get moving in at least some areas. But action itself has been at a premium.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Think of machines that help you think.

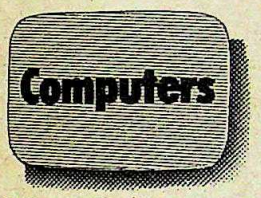


INTERNATIONAL DATA MANAGEMENT LTD.
BOMBAY: Express Towers, Nariman Point – 400 021. Tel: 2026020.Telex: 011-4702 IDMB
CALCUTTA: 28, Camac Street - 700 016. Tel: 444841.Telex: 021-7153 IDMC IN.
MADRAS: 3, Moores Road - 600 006. Tel: 476612. Telex. 041- 6641 IDMM IN.
NEW DELHI: Nehru House, 4 Bahadurshah Zafar Marg – 110 002. Tel: 3312461.Telex: 031-61347 IDMD
AHMEDABAD: H.K. House, Off Ashram Road – 380 009. Tel: 405886.
BANGALORE: 25/4, Lavelle Road – 560 001. Tel: 55757. Telex: 0845-8450.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Think of IDM. The Complete Computer Company.



A computer multiplies the power of the mind. It is a very effective tool at man's disposal. It helps in decision making, be it in commercial or scientific areas. It is really an extension of man's thinking power and helps to increase it many, many times. For growth. And for excellence.

And this technology is no longer something very expensive or exclusive, the preserve of a few. It is becoming available to more and more people, at prices that they can afford. The increasingly sophisticated technology makes possible higher performance at lower prices.

A computer today, however, is not just a piece of electronic hardware. It requires instructions that tell it what to do. Broadly, these instructions are known as Software. Good Software can vastly improve the usefulness of a computer, just as poor Software can shackle it.

Then there is the training and education of the people using the computer, so that they can make full use of it.

To make sure that the computer is up and working, it is essential to have trained people, test-equipment and spare parts available as and when needed. A regular supply of Printer Ribbons, Floppy Diskettes, etc. is also required for the smooth running of your computer.

It is also possible to use a computer without buying one. In a Computer Centre facility, one can get access to large, powerful computers, and professional help to make use of these. For the first-time computer-user this means the ability to step into computerization without the need for investment in equipment, space and staff.

Using computers successfully is an art. It's a blend of so many different elements. IDM knows this art. It is the only Computer Company in the country that offers you the complete range of products and services. Backed by a team of high calibre professionals. So that when you let IDM and its national support network work for you, you have at your service the Complete Computer Company.

IDM

Computers. And much more.

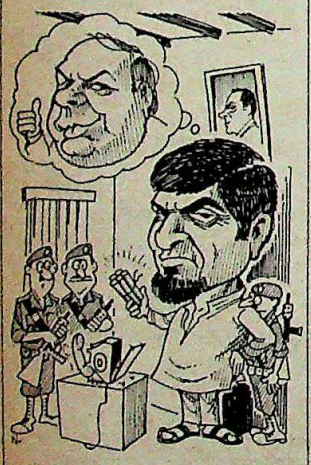
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Security Holes

● VIP security is a tricky thing these days, as the hapless men posted at Vice-President R. Venkatraman's house discovered recently. For, unknown to them, three men from one of the intelligence agencies were sent to check on the effectiveness of the security ring around the house. They posed as employees of the Telephones Department and landed up at the vice-president's residence on Maulana Azad Road, claiming that they had come to check VIP telephones.

As per usual procedure, the security men at the gate took them to the vice-president's secretary, who in turn passed them on to the vice-president's personal assistant, who took them into the house and showed them where all the phones were. He then left them to their devices.



Cartoons by AJIT NINAN

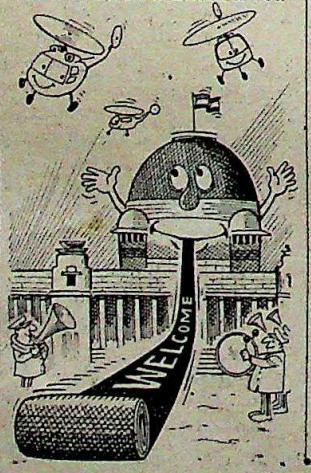
The intelligence men placed a dummy explosive device in Venkatraman's bedroom telephone, left, and reported to their chief. The chief rang up the vice-president's secretary and said there was an explosive device in the bedroom phone. The incredulous official refused to believe it at first, but then checked and found the story true.

Similar checks at the residences of Central ministers Buta Singh, H.K.L. Bhagat and Jagdish Tytler also testified to the poor quality of the security net around VIP's. In fact, Arun Nehru—who organised the checks—won a bet with Tytler that he would penetrate the security ring around him. But there would have been no fun and games if VIP security had been made fools of, not by intelligence men on the prowl, but by potential assassins.

Protocol Plans

● The red gravel front yard of the stately Rashtrapati Bhawan is going to be put to regular use—for the formal arrival and seeing off ceremonies of heads of state and VVIP's. The External Affairs Ministry is "rationalising" the procedures for ceremonial arrivals and departures, and the grounds of Zail Singh's imposing official residence have caught the ministry's eye.

The first dignitary to be so welcomed last fortnight was the South Korean Prime Minister. In his case the change of venue was dictated by necessity; he arrived and left by commercial flights and there was hardly any scope for ceremonial parades at the airport terminal, say MEA mandarins. Moreover, the Rashtrapati Bhawan on Raisina hill is a convenient and elegant setting for such ceremonies, surpassing the White House lawns where the US President usually welcomes visiting dignitaries. There is another reason for the switch. It will save the necessity of motorcades toing and froing from the airport.



Toiletry Training

● The Congress(I)'s proposed code of conduct exhorts abstinence in the face of temptation to buy such imported goodies as video cassette recorders. But it is silent on after-shave lotions and talcum powders. But a fresh set of directives from Rajiv Gandhi, albeit in a different context, affects toiletry items too.

The latest directive, in the form of a circular from the Home Ministry, concerns "courtesies to be shown to the dignitaries visiting states and union territories", and says that the "prime minister has given the following instructions regarding arrangements made for him during his tours".

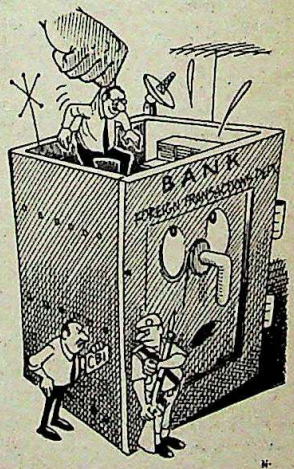
The instructions say that "expensive after-shave lotions, talcum powders, etc should not be supplied in the room where he stays for the night". Also, "felling of trees for VIP visits is to be strictly avoided". Rajiv does not want the red carpet treatment either, for the circular adds that "there is no need to lay out red carpets for his reception at helipads". (The over-zealous may please note that there is nothing against red carpets at airports).

Bank Spies

● Policemen began finding their way into universities as vice-chancellors some time ago. Now it is the turn of officials collecting economic intelligence to be nominated on to the boards of public sector banks, but perhaps with more justification than policemen had in trying to run universities.

Quite a few times in recent months, the Finance Ministry's enforcement directorate and the Home Ministry's CBI have had to ask government-owned banks for details regarding various international transactions with clients who may have transgressed the law. Invariably, however, the banks have refused to divulge the information asked for, and cited laws concerning the secrecy of banking operations in various countries.

Frustrated by this, the Government is now considering appointing officials from the enforcement directorate and the CBI as directors of the banks, so that they can then ask for this information as members of the bank's top management. But whether this will turn out to be an effective way of getting all the information that the Government wants, and whether, as a result, the banks will lose their standing with the clients who want secrecy remains to be seen.

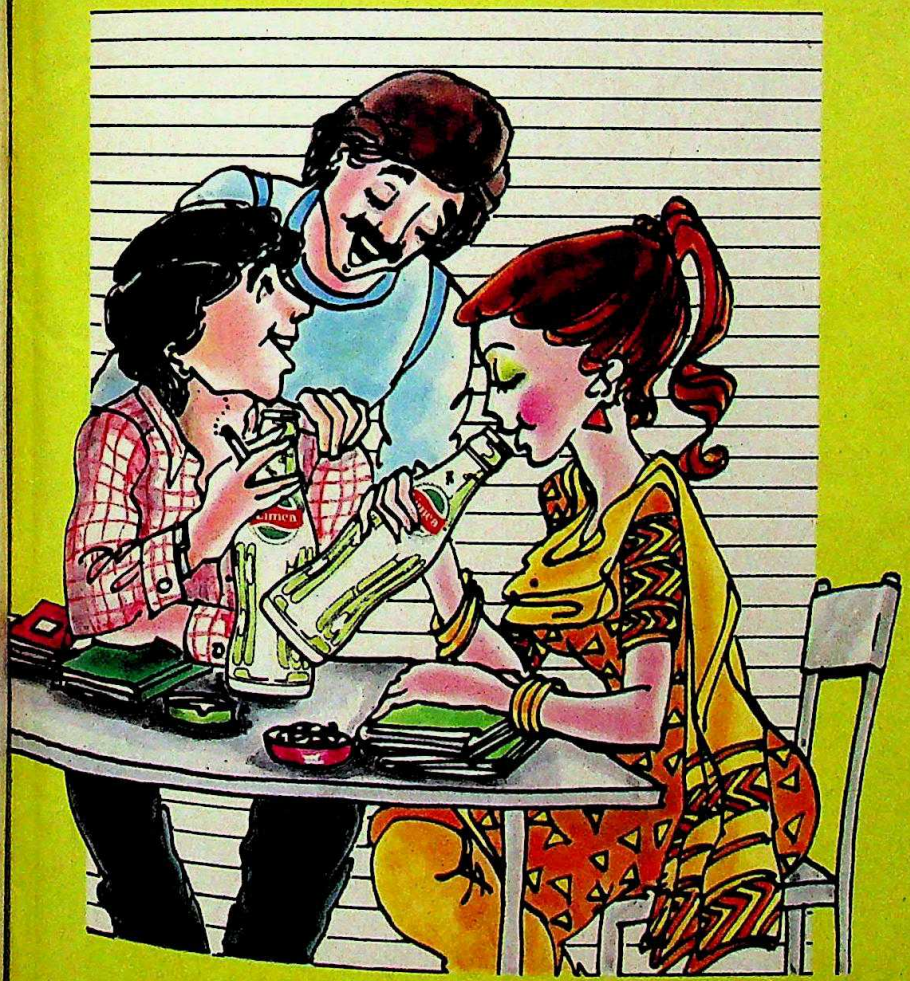


CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Remember your thirst day in college?

Remember your joy? The sense of freedom you felt? Remember your thirst Limca in the canteen? You can still taste that zingi lime 'n' lemoni flavour each time you have a Limca. The experience is unforgettable. Just like the thirst time.



Limca. Each time is the thirst time!

is veri veri lime 'n' lemo

Limca

SERVE CHILLED

ARTIFICIALLY FLAVOURED. CONTAINS NO FRUIT JUICE OR FRUIT PULP

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

GCEL

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The other side of beautiful Nature isn't so beautiful.

Beautiful Nature. More than anything else ,it has inspired poetry, paintings in this world.
Unfortunately, there's more to nature than evocative daffodils and sun-dappled, placid rivers. Floods, for instance. And there's hardly anything poetic about floods. Or, artistic.

And if you've seen the ravages of floods only on TV, you're fortunate. Thousands of people weren't last year. They lost everything they had built up spending the best years of their life, to floods. Angry, flash floods.

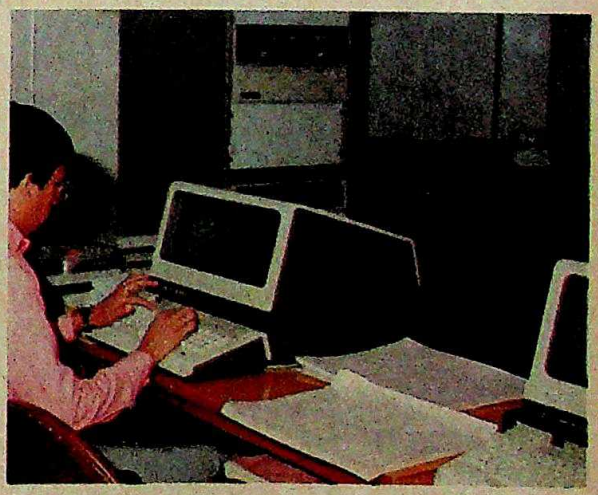
And floods never announce themselves. They never will.

GCEL'S Flood and Weather Forecast System

And that's why at GCEL, we have devised a Flood Forecast System. And have already installed it in Punjab, Himachal Pradesh and U.P. As successful U.N. - aided turnkey project. We have built a comprehensive Weather Forecast System too. That collects, collates, analyzes, and transmits data to various centres in the country. To keep a jump ahead of nature. To warn and save the maximum. So when we come to terms with nature, it's a little on our terms.

The Better Technology of GCEL

At Gujarat Communications and Electronics Ltd., our objectives are clear. And simple. Since 1975. That India's future is hi-tech. And every Indian should be part of it. Wherever he or she is in India. So at GCEL, we develop technology that's better and relevant. To help every Indian live a little better.



GCEL

Gujarat Communications & Electronics Ltd.
Regd. Office: Third Floor, Anurag Commercial Centre, Race Course Road, Baroda 390 005.

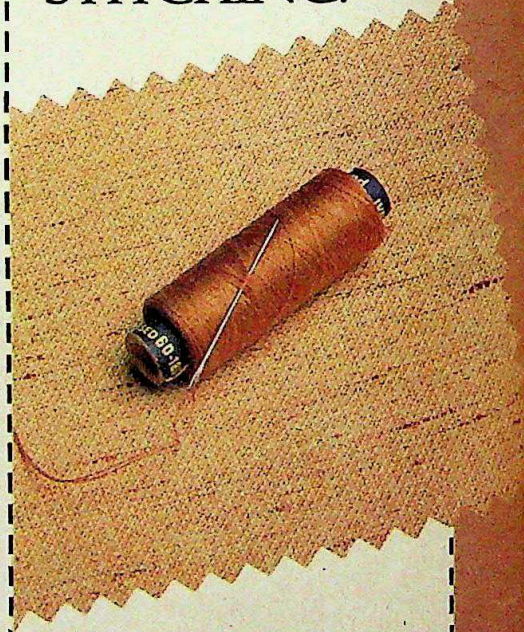
Live better. The better technology is here.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Mudra:A:GCEL:3000

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

EVER SINCE
I DISCOVERED
RAYMOND'S
READYMADES,
IT'S GOODBYE
TO POOR
STITCHING.



Trousers
•
Safaris
•
Shirts
•
Suits
•
Blazers

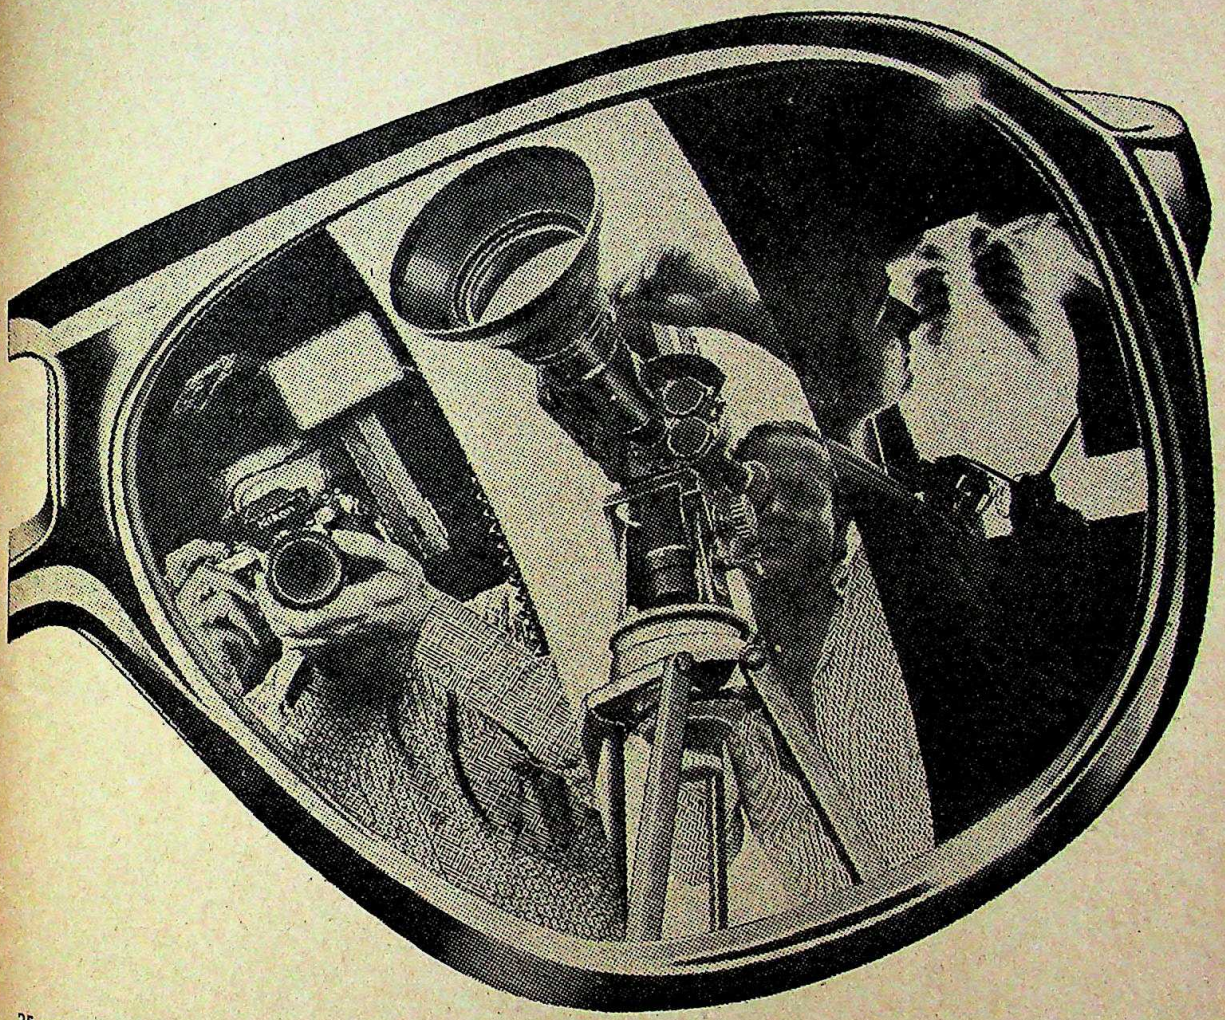
RAYMOND'S Mens Wear

Location courtesy: The Taj Mahal Hotel, Bombay.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gu

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

How HPF, a silver jubilee hit, is reaching for the gold



25 years and 100 million sq. mtrs of high quality photofilms after, HPF is again on a fresh new thrust of forward movement.

To lead India on to the 21st Century in photofilm technology.

How?

It is embarking on a massive Rs.330 crore expansion project to manufacture a whole new range of products – to meet tomorrow's challenges today.

That's HPF, a progressive public sector organisation that has been meeting the entire requirements of cine positive, cine sound negative and medical X-ray films. Plus, a significant share of industrial X-ray, graphic arts and roll film as well as bromide paper.

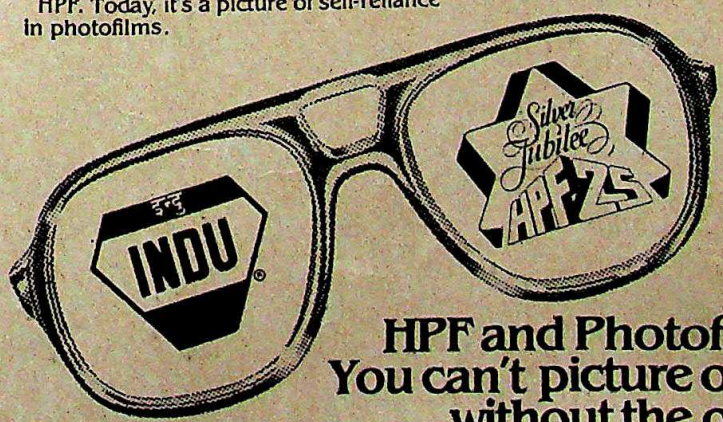
In the process, it is sustaining an investment of Rs.2,500 crores, providing a source of livelihood for 2,00,000 people.

Equally significant, till date, it has saved the country Rs.700 crores in precious foreign exchange.

And more. Through continuous Research and Development, it has taken its capacity utilisation to 200% of the original rated capacity in 1984.

HPF. Today, it's a picture of self-reliance in photofilms.

Hindustan Photo Film Mfg Co Ltd.
(A Government of India Enterprise)
Udhagamandalam 643 005.



HPF and Photofilms: You can't picture one without the other

SAA/HPF/3576

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
INTERNATIONAL EDITION

GIFT INDIA TO SOMEONE YOU CARE FOR...

GIFT FOR
ADDRESS
CITY CODE
COUNTRY

Please send one year's subscription of INDIA TODAY, International Edition and my gift card to the person named above. Enclosed is my cheque/DD/M.O. for Rs payable to Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.

MY NAME
ADDRESS
CITY CODE
COUNTRY

Send this advertisement and payment to:
Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.
Subscription Department
P.B. No. 69, Delhi-Mathura Road
Faridabad 121007, Haryana, India

Annual Airmail Subscription Rates

Rs 185
BANGLADESH
BHUTAN
NEPAL

Rs 345
AFGHANISTAN
BURMA
MALDIVES
PAKISTAN
SRI LANKA

Rs 385
BAHRAIN
CHINA
HONG KONG
INDONESIA
IRAN
IRAQ
KUWAIT
MALAYSIA
OMAN
PHILIPPINES
QATAR
SAUDI ARABIA
SINGAPORE
TAIWAN
THAILAND
U.A.E.
YEMEN

Rs 485
AUSTRALIA
EGYPT
ETHIOPIA
FRANCE
W. GERMANY
GHANA
GIBRALTAR
IRELAND
JAPAN
KENYA
SOUTH KOREA
LEBANON
LIBYA
MALAWI
MALTA
MAURITIUS
SEYCHELLES
SIERRA LEONE
SOUTH AFRICA
SUDAN
SWITZERLAND
SYRIA
TANZANIA
U.K.
ZAMBIA
ZIMBABWE

Rs 585
BAHAMAS
BARBADOS
BRAZIL
CANADA
FIJI
GUYANA
HAWAII
JAMAICA
NEW ZEALAND
PANAMA
U.S.A.

NH 943

● I give them (Sikh terrorists) at least another couple of years. Meantime, I am confident that the (Punjab) accord will work out and that the Barnala Ministry will face the extremists.

■ RAJIV GANDHI in Blitz

● You did display remarkable resilience and refreshing freedom from inhibitions while handling difficult issues...although I am afraid grave errors haunt your naive steps. Optimism is not opium.

■ JUSTICE KRISHNA IYER, former Supreme Court judge, in a letter to Rajiv Gandhi on the Muslim Divorce Bill

● The budget pulsates with the aspirations of the people and we have committed ourselves to their service.

■ V.P. SINGH, Union finance minister, in Indian Express

● In the 39 years that this country has been independent, no government has used the budget to make so blatant a play for popularity as that of Mr Rajiv Gandhi in its second year in office...It has given tax reliefs to those who neither needed nor deserved...and piled on fresh taxes on those who desperately needed some kind of relief.

■ Editorial comment in The Times of India

● I am a nice guy...Last year I paid Rs 33 lakh and was the largest individual tax payer in the country. By asking why I am not raided, you try to make me look like a thief.

■ AMITABH BACHCHAN in The Hindustan Times

● Any person who talks of the glory of Sikhs will not be spared by the Government and the Hindu-dominated press. All these years the Centre has been trying to break the Akali Dal.

■ G.S. TOHRA, former SGPC president, in The Week

● (Army officers are becoming) increasingly careerists, opportunists and sycophants. The standards of integrity have fallen and honour and patriotism are becoming unfashionable.

■ GENERAL K. SUNDARJI, chief of army staff, in a letter to all officers

● Our secularism does not mean that every man or woman must follow his creed or religion in the same manner. Our secularism is that there should be no persecution of those following their creed or religion in their own way.

■ ASOKE SEN, Union law minister, introducing the Muslim Divorce Bill in the Lok Sabha

● No one here ever sees my best work. The Bunuels. The Mahabharata of our times. The Ramayana series...All they are interested in are those stupid horses.

■ M.F. HUSAIN quoted in Gentleman

● I begin my day by seeing Laxman's pocket cartoon. Then I kick myself for not having thought of his idea.

■ BEHRAM CONTRACTOR in Bombay

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

...dation Chennai and eGangotri

SONY

REACH FOR THE TOP.

Top quality movies come easily with Sony's new Video 8. You don't even have to focus — a sophisticated Auto Focus system does it for you. While a highly advanced CCD Image Sensor gives you better picture resolution and improved sensitivity in low light.

Video 8 is so light and compact you can use it to make movies virtually anywhere. Up to 3 hours worth on a single cassette. And immediately review what you've shot through the unit's viewfinder. Or simply hook it up to any TV for instant playback.

And best of all, Video 8's 8mm cassette delivers a picture as impressive as that of a larger cassette.

So if it's top quality movies you're after, better start with the top video camera recorder — Sony's Video 8.

CCD-V8AF

CCD-V8AF

Video 8

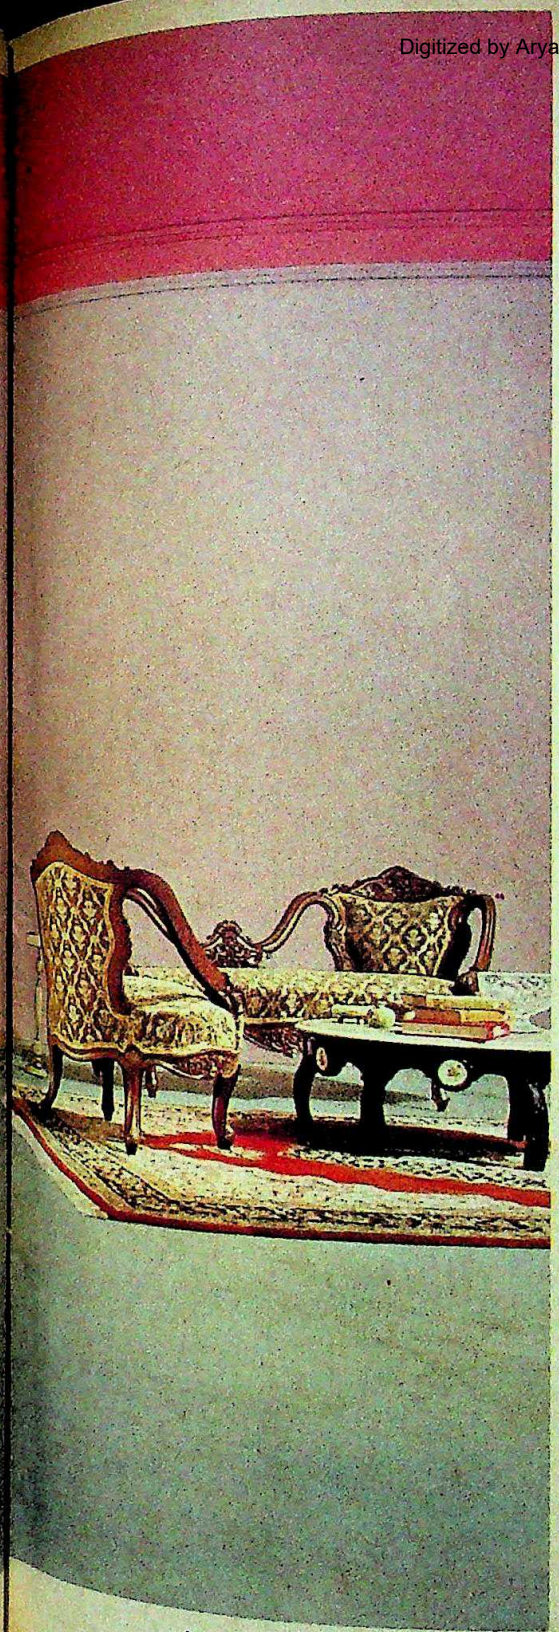
Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When elegance whispers, the world stops to listen.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Into this world of everlasting beauty and priceless collections, comes an exquisite new wall finish. Garcoat Petals.

Experience nature's most elegant expression. Captured in a paint so distinctive. So luxurious.

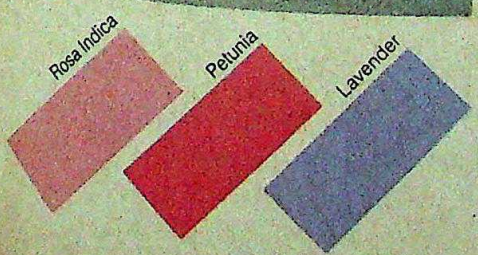
Surround yourself with the quiet feel of flowers softly blooming on your walls.

Let your home whisper your exquisite taste. With Petals. Garcoat Petals.

We've tied up for high performance paints, with Sherwin Williams, USA, the world's largest paint company.

GARCOAT PETALS

You have good taste. Let it show.



Garware Paints Ltd. GARWARE गरवारे

SPEER 112 86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai

For every moment of your life, in style..

Phagwara
POLYESTER FABRICS

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DAY OF THE DOG

■ Manmohan Desai made much of the colonial slur 'Dogs and Indians not allowed' in his masala monster Mard. One gentleman who would sympathise with Amitabh Tangewala when he rubs an ersatz Englishman's blood into the signboard is J.C. Akare, a Rajya Sabha member. But his circumstances were different.

For one thing, he was travelling in free India where dogs and Indians are allowed, even it seems, on trains. How else could the fiery Rajya Sabha jewel explain the fact that on the Nagpur-Dadar Express last month, another gentleman was occupying the adjoining coupe with not one, not two, but four dogs all yapping in the infuriating way dogs have. Akare ordered the conductor to get the beasts off, but received the spunky answer that the dogs had permission to travel. Akare saw red, shouted for a few seconds, then reached over and pulled the emergency chain.

The train screeched to a halt and a couple of hundred policemen piled onto Akare. He was eventually arrested under Section 108 of the Indian Railways Act for illegal chain-pulling. The train was delayed by 45 minutes. Just shows that every dog does have his day.

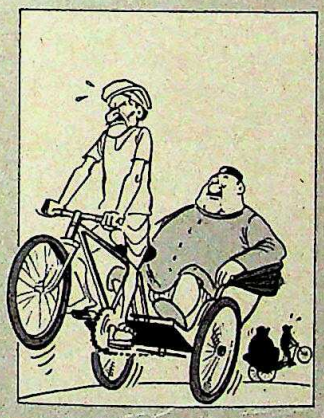
BIDDING POLITICOS

■ India is the world's largest democracy, as everybody is tired of hearing by now. But it is a functioning democracy which is something to be proud of. What is less cause for pride is that Indian political sophistication can take curious twists, as Manmangalam, a sleepy little village near Karpur in Tamil Nadu, demonstrated recently.

Manmangalam wanted a school but the thirus in Madras were either unaware of its existence or did not have the money, so the children played unlettered in its streets. However, the countryside has a genius for improvisation and somebody remembered that the panchayat president elections were to be held soon. "Eureka!" shouted Archichandran and leapt out of his bath.

That is how the post of panchayat president came to be auctioned one fine day in February with the proceeds to go to the school building fund. Auction it was, if not quite Christie-style—bids began at the figure of Rs 1,000, but when the auctioneer brought his gavel finally down R.K.Muthuswamy took the lot—for Rs 16,500. Well, elected representatives of the people have their uses too.

FLAB FLAP



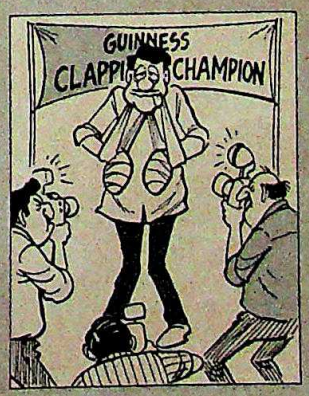
■ 'Fat is filthy.' Going by the number of advertisements offering to starve or squeeze the obese organisms into shape, that is the slogan of the century. In India, however, with its diet of pure ghee, vanaspati and sugar-laden sweets, fat is a way of life. But fat people are still the object of ridicule and discrimination, which explains the events in Giridih, Bihar, last month.

Satya Narayan Dalmia is a young Giridih businessman who makes even the strongest scales shudder and shake when he steps on them. But Dalmia is not apologising for his girth and in fact, has formed the Fat People's Association of Giridih to strike a blow for flab. The association is going to carry out a campaign against discriminatory treatment and one of their drives is aimed at getting the authorities to issue strict directions to rickshaw pullers not to refuse fat fares. (The rickshaw pullers, not having pure ghee as a diet, have a point). The association is also demanding fruits, milk and fruit juice at concessional rates. In a bold move, it has despatched copies of the resolution to the requisite departments of the state Government, who, no doubt, wondering if this conceals a new political threat, are huffing and puffing over it.

A BIG HAND

■ If any tourist goes to Veppur in Tamil Nadu, he should go to the Indian Overseas Bank branch and ask for V. Jayaram. When he meets him, he should be careful not to shake hands, not because Jayaram has some dreadful disease but because his palms are likely to be extremely sore. For this modest rural development officer is not your usual run-of-the-bigha rural development officer.

After December 15, 1985, Jayaram is a Guinness candidate—from 7 a.m. on December 13 until 1 p.m. on December 15, Jayaram clapped continuously, and fairly violently, for 54 long, noisy hours. If one takes two seconds for one handclap as the average speed, then Jayaram produced 97,200 claps, which is something even the robots at Supreme Soviet assemblies—where everybody is the first to clap the leader and no one dares to be the first to stop—would be proud of.



What now for the Clap Champion? A place in Guinness, perhaps: The previous world record was 50 hours and 17 minutes. No doubt everybody is applauding Jayaram in the south—after all, he taught them how to do so.

—Compiled by JAGANNATH DUBASHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

This is no time to break off

CALL HDFC INSTEAD

And start planning your own home. Right now. Join our Home Savings Plan. Get one of the lowest interest loans available in the country today.

Your very own home. A place that belongs to you in this fast, moving, changing world. Just think. With a little planning. A little thinking ahead. You could be halfway towards owning it already.

Join our Home Savings Plan. If you save under it, we give you one of the lowest interest housing loans available today. What's more, it's made for you. Because, it's up to you to decide how much to save every month. And for how long.(A minimum of two years is what we ask). We'd like you to join our Plan. Because, we want you to have your own home.

I am interested in HDFC's Home Savings Plan.
Please send me a free brochure.

Name _____

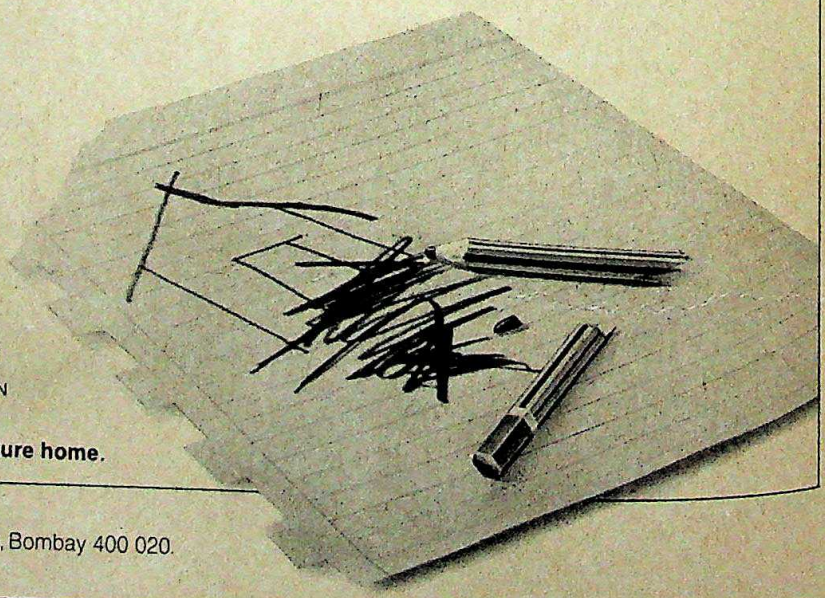
Address _____

_____

_____

H/IT

Of course, you'll need to decide very quickly and call us as fast as you can. Act soon. After all, it's your home we're planning.



HOME SAVINGS PLAN

HOUSING DEVELOPMENT FINANCE CORPORATION LIMITED

HDFC. When you're planning your future home.

Registered Office:
Ramon House, 169 Backbay Reclamation, Bombay 400 020.
Phone: 220265, 220282.

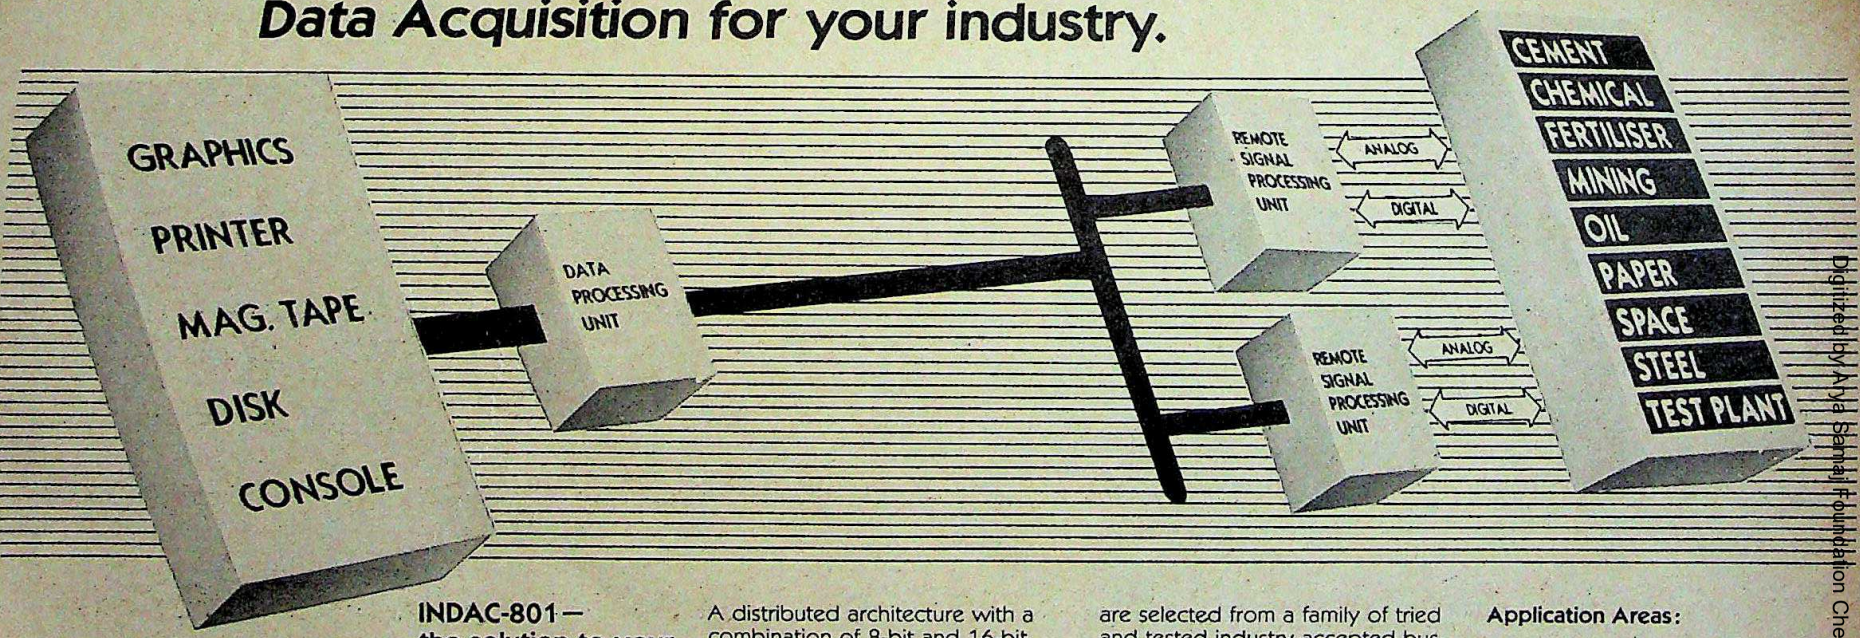
Branch Offices in:
Ahmedabad, Bangalore, Bombay (Parel), Calcutta, Cochin, Hyderabad, Indore, Jaipur, Lucknow, Madras, New Delhi, Pune.

SPEER 248 86

DON'T READ THIS

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

DON'T READ THIS
if you are not interested in Distributed Data Acquisition for your industry.



INDAC-801— the solution to your real-time monitoring and control problems in terms of accuracy and reliability.

A distributed architecture with a combination of 8-bit and 16-bit processors with powerful communication protocol ensures a cost-effective solution in terms of reliability, accuracy and saving in cabling. High speed, greater accuracies, expandability, modularity both in hardware and software, instant limit checking and alarm generation, computational capabilities and process control are the salient features of the INDAC 801 system. It ensures quick and correct decision-making in running your plant to offer increased productivity due to less downtime and reliable operation.

Remote Signal Processing Units:

These units, which are directly interfaced with the real-time process, are highly configurable, modular and expandable in terms of no. of acquisitions or control channels and are selected from a family of tried and tested industry-accepted bus-compatible modules for different types of inputs/outputs. These units, which may be geographically separated, are interfaced with the Data Processing Unit through suitable communication links.

Data Processing Unit:

With the configuration of the Data Processing Unit, we can offer powerful, inter-active menu-driven application software to run under popular operating systems like CP/M™, MS-DOS™, UNIX™, iRMX-86™ or RSX-11™.

Simple man-machine interface through colour graphics means a more acceptable form of data representation in addition to which hard copy in the form of printer or plotter outputs are available as per user defined formats.

Application Areas:

- Product Testing and Test-bed Automation
- Process & Engineering Industries
- Oil Rigs and Marine Navigation Equipment
- Environmental Monitoring for Hazardous Underground Mines
- Energy Conservation
- R&D Establishments

Total System Support:

BHEL's Industrial Systems Group at Bangalore today offers total system support from consultancy and conceptual design through detailed system engineering, generation of custom application software to supply, erection, commissioning and customer training.

बी एच ई एल BHEL

More than products— a total service for energy and industry.

For further details please write to Bharat Heavy Electricals Limited

Industrial Systems Group
25/1 Mahatma Gandhi Road, Bangalore 560 001.
Regd Office:
18-20 Kasturba Gandhi Marg, New Delhi 110 001.

ASP-BHEL-8602

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

JUSTICE KIRPAL COMMISSION

Explosive Findings

THE CRASH of Air-India flight 182 into the Atlantic nine months ago was the worst in Indian aviation history, and speculation since then has focused on a number of possible causes. The Kirpal Commission has now submitted its report on the subject to the Government. Assistant Editor PRABHU CHAWLA managed to get a look at the top secret findings of the commission and the various submissions made to it. His exclusive report:

HARI OM GULATI

The events that Justice Kirpal recounts in meticulous detail leaves little room for doubt that the one person who could have prevented the tragedy was a harassed Canadian Pacific Air agent in Vancouver.

THE FINDINGS in the 220-page report that Justice B.N. Kirpal submitted to the Government last fortnight are clear: the crash of Air-India flight 182 into the Atlantic last June was because of an explosion on board, and not because it was carrying a fifth engine, or because of the kind of structural problems that have been detected on Boeing 747s in recent weeks. The explosion, which sent 329 people to a watery grave, occurred in the forward cargo hold.

Though Kirpal does not say so, the events that his report recounts in meticulous detail and the various submissions made to the commission leave little room for doubt that the one person who could have prevented the tragedy was a harassed Canadian Pacific Air agent in faraway Vancouver. The agent allowed someone identified as M. Singh to book his baggage through on the connecting Air-India flight from Toronto even though Singh did not have a confirmed reservation.

That error was probably compounded by the failure of the X-ray baggage security system at Toronto, the use of a hand-held sniffer that had earlier been shown to be ineffective in detecting explosives, and the failure to correlate boarding passengers with checked in baggage. These allowed the suitcase carrying the explosive to be boarded on to the flight at Toronto, with the explosive undetected.

These revelations have come after six months of in-depth investigations during which the commission, assisted by a four-member assessment team and scores of advocates, visited Cork in Ireland, Canada and Japan (where a related explosion had taken place at Tokyo's Narita airport). Kirpal sifted through over 500 documents and 50 written statements, and spoke to more than 100 individuals and organisations involved.

In India, the commission was assisted by experts at the Bhabha Atomic Research Centre (BARC), the National Aeronautical Laboratory (NAL) and the Explosives Research and Development Laboratory. Abroad, it received cooperation from the Canadian Aviation Safety Board (CASB), the Canadian transport department (Transport Canada) and security agencies involved in airport safety.

The commission's basic conclusion, that the crash was caused by an "explosion in the forward cargo hold", is based on the findings of chemical tests and other examinations done by expert bodies:

► Metallurgical examination by BARC found that the forward cargo hold areas of the aircraft had been subjected to explosive force;

► S.N. Seshadri, an eminent BARC scientist, said that the noise heard on the cockpit voice recorder (CVR) was caused by an explosion;

► Chemical analysis by Dr S.Beweridge, a British scientist who submitted a confidential report showed evidence of explosives in the wreckage;

► And according to A.J. Laflamma of CASB and H.S. Khola of DGCA, the distribution of the wreckage and analysis of the CVR and flight data recorder (FDR) indicated that the aircraft had been subjected to an explosion. A Boeing expert came to a similar conclusion.

It was on the basis of Seshadri's report that the commission concluded that the "explosion occurred 40 to 50 feet from the cockpit". And BARC's report concluded that "various signatures of explosive fracture have been identified on the recovered structural members and fittings from the forward cargo area". The report added that metallurgical investigations "clearly indicate that the aircraft has been damaged by a powerful explosion in the forward cargo hold".

BARC's conclusion that the explosion occurred 40 to 50 feet from the cockpit are based on the analysis of holes in the metal pieces recovered from the Atlantic. For example, one piece from the front cargo section had as many as 25 holes in which multiple petals were curling outwards, indicating sharpnel shooting outwards. In the forward belly skin of the aircraft, BARC noted nine holes, with the "deformation" being from the inside outward. The BARC report concluded: "Even though only a small fraction of the wreckage was available for detailed examination, it was clear from the nature of damage to the forward cargo skin... that this section of the aircraft has suffered a severe damage due to powerful explosion inside."

With the cause of the crash established beyond reasonable doubt, the commission's second and equally crucial task was to pinpoint responsibility. But here, it has carefully refrained from any final judgement, apparently because none of the agencies involved—ranging from Air-India to Canadian officials—was willing to admit lack of vigilance. In fact, each agency has been trying to pass the blame on to the others.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

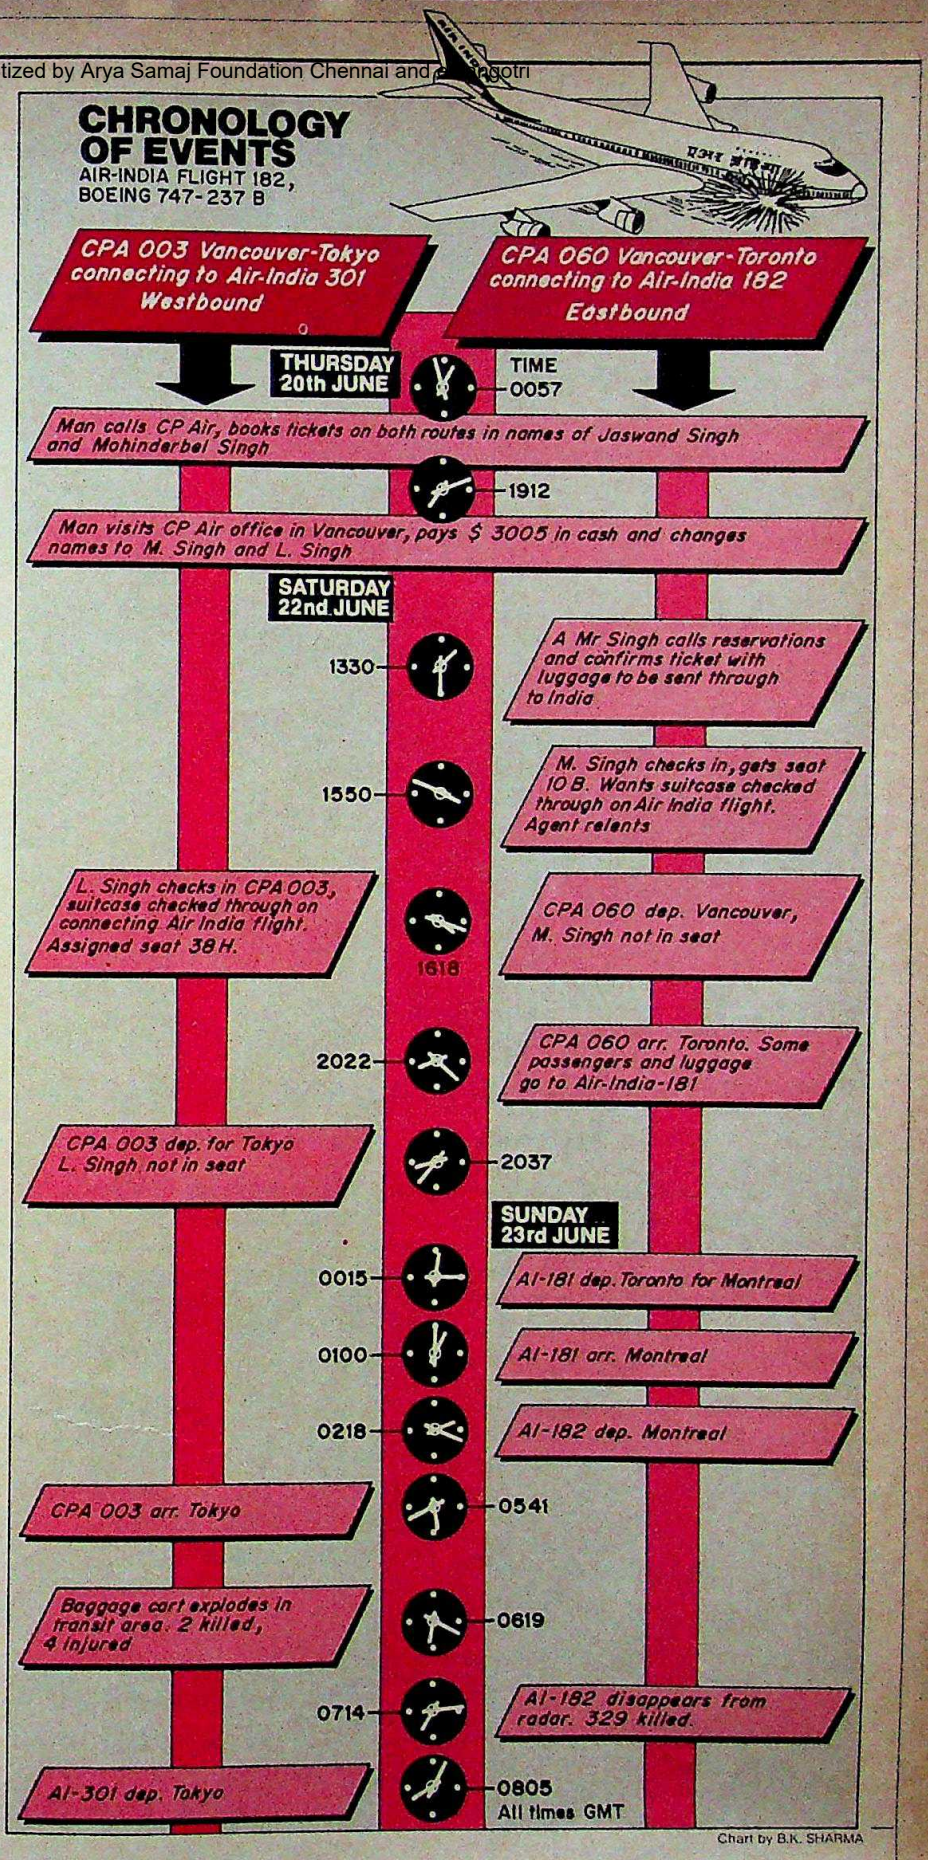
Thus, Air-India's advocate, Lalit Bhasin, submitted to the commission that Canadian officials had commended the airline's security 'programme', submitted in October 1982 when it began operations in Canada. The airline, nevertheless, reviewed its security arrangements and adopted a new security manual which according to Transport Canada had met the "requirements of Canadian legislation". Not satisfied, Air-India introduced additional measures like the X-raying of cabin and checked in baggage, neither of which was mandatory under Canadian law. Air-India has also argued that "It is implicit that primary security check of the passengers will be carried out by the airport authority or its agency and not by Air-India. This position is undisputed and uncontroverted."

IN CONTRAST, the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, in its own report submitted to the commission, implicitly suggests that a lot of the responsibility for the explosive being loaded onto the aircraft rests with Air-India.

The chronology of events that eventually led to the crash and the related explosion at Narita makes for a chilling account. The story began on June 20 in Vancouver, at a little before 1 a.m. GMT (6 pm, local time the previous day), when a man rang CP Air reservations and, after discussing a number of routings, booked a one-way ticket by CP Air to Toronto and onward on Air-India 182, under the name of Jaswand Singh. He also booked a ticket on CP Air to Tokyo, connecting with an Air-India flight to Bangkok, in the name of Mohinderbel Singh. Seventeen hours later, a man showed up at the CP Air ticket office and paid $ 3,005 in cash for the tickets, but changed the names to M. Singh and L. Singh.

On June 22, at 1.30 p.m. GMT (6.30 am, local time), a Mr Singh called reservations and confirmed his ticket to Toronto with luggage to be sent through on Air India. And two hours later, M. Singh checked in and was given seat 10B to Toronto on CP Air. Although he did not have a confirmed seat on the connecting Air-India flight, he insisted that the baggage be checked through to India. The agent resisted, but with a long queue of passengers getting impatient with the argument, eventually relented.

In less than an hour of this, L. Singh checked in on the CP Air flight to Tokyo, with the baggage checked through on the

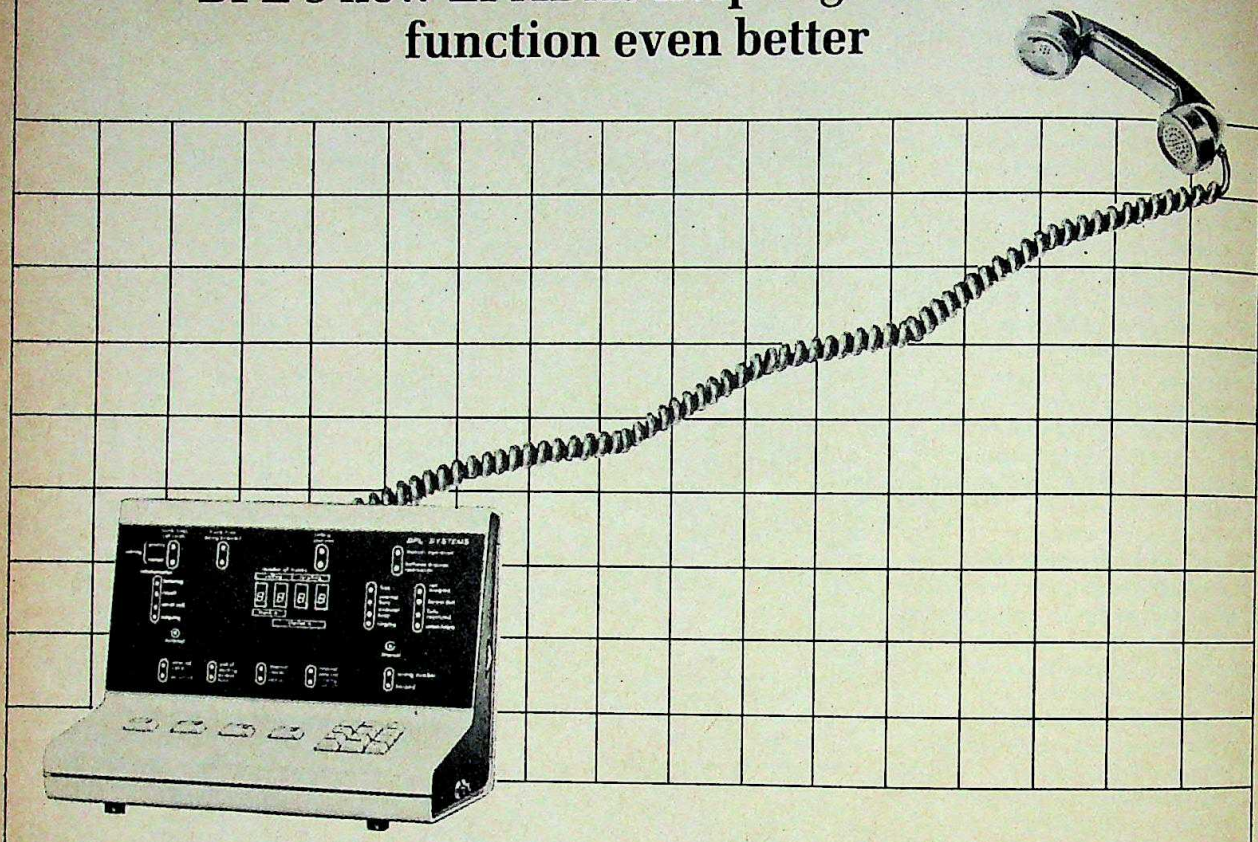


CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Experience proves it

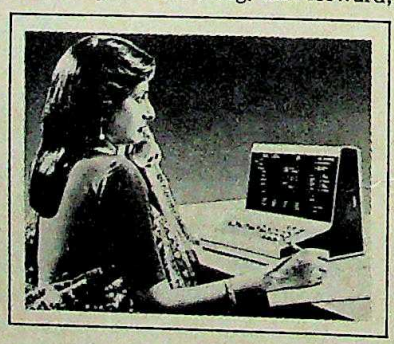
BPL's new EPABXs help organisations function even better



Ask Canara Bank, Colgate Palmolive, Johnson & Johnson, Madura Coats...

BPL is the first company to give the country a microprocessor based electronic PABX. An exchange to match international standards. Enhance office productivity. Control telephone expenses. Today, BPL's EPABXs are functioning satisfactorily in a number of Banks, Government offices, Corporate and Multinational organisations. All over the country. And the unique functions of the EPABX continue to keep it way ahead of the rest.

Take a look at some of the features of the EPABX. It can truly revolutionise the way your people talk and listen. Multiway conferencing, Call forward,



Follow me, Auto call back, Priority and many more. It's just the system you've been looking for. A system that you can depend on. Get one to work for you – Now!

BPL's EPABX manufacturing infrastructure is supported by seven integrated factories, three R&D units, facilities for in-house manufacture of critical components, comprehensive tool rooms and PCB plants.

The Electronic PABX from BPL – The Single Largest Integrated Source of Office Automation Products in India.

BPL-INDIA

In pursuit of perfection

Computers ● Communication ● Components
Instrumentation (Industrial, Medical & Measurement) ● Office Automation ● Consumer Electronics

Central Marketing Organisation: BPL-Centre, 32, Church Street, Bangalore – 560 001. Tel: 572321/2/6. Telex: 0845-511.
Branch Offices at: Bangalore, Bombay, Calcutta, Hyderabad, Madras, New Delhi, Palghat.

1193

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

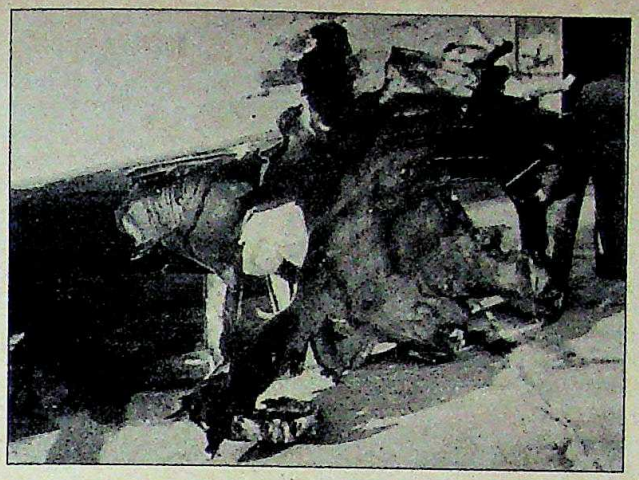
connecting Air-India flight to Bangkok and given seat 38H.

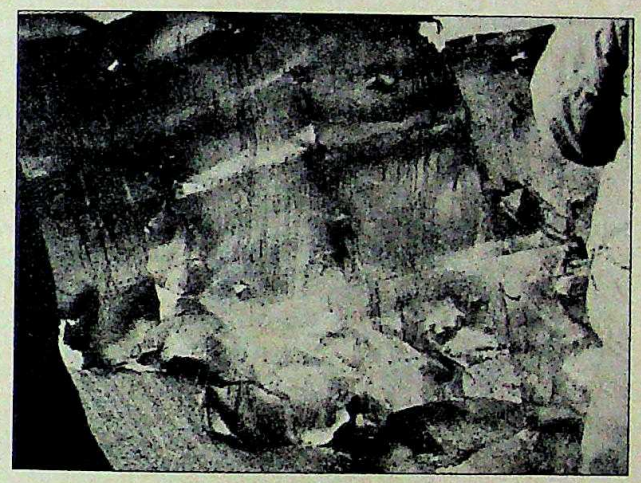
Both planes took off within a short while: neither Singh was on either plane. While Air India was not expected to do the headcount for its passengers because none of the Singhs was holding a confirmed seat in its plane but CPA allowed its Tokyo flight to take off without Singh on board which is normally not permitted in aviation rules. The CPA could have offloaded Singh's baggage when it was found that he was not in the plane. There probably were not two persons involved, but just one acting in various names.

The CP Air flight offloaded baggage at Toronto, and the suspect suitcase was to be loaded on to the Air-India flight. And here, the security breakdowns begin. The X-ray machine being operated to screen all baggage broke down around the time the explosive-bearing suitcase would have gone through, but it is not clear from the submissions whether the breakdown occurred before or after the killer suitcase would have gone through. The Air-India security officer on the spot had meanwhile asked the staff of Burns International Security Services (hired by Air-India for passenger and baggage security checks) to use a sniffer.

It turns out, however, that the same or a similar sniffer had been tested five months earlier by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, which found that the sniffer "could not detect a small container of gunpowder until the head of the sniffer was moved to less than an inch from the gunpowder".

The Canadian Aviation Safety Board says that "Rather than using the (hand-held) sniffer, it would have been more effective to open all bags and physically inspect them." It adds that "Had a passenger-baggage correlation been carried out in Toronto, the suitcase...would have been detected." Such correlation was in fact done at Montreal, where the flight halted before taking off for London, but this was restricted to passengers boarding from Montreal, and could not detect the missing passenger who was to board from Toronto.





Wreckage of the ill-fated aircraft indicating an explosion

Within a few hours, flight 182 crashed off Cork, and a baggage cart explosion killed two handling operators at Narita in Tokyo, shortly before the Air India flight to Bangkok took off.

Even if this chain of events is revealing, the commission does not pass any final judgement on who bears the responsibility for having allowed the baggage to be loaded on to the various aircraft. And given the conclusion that this was an act of terrorism, the terrorist(s) still remains at large, undetected.

The commission report does, however, show the mounting threats that had been faced by Air-India after Operation Bluestar in June 1984. The first warning was given to the authorities by Air-India as early as January 8, 1985, when the airline requested Transport Canada to provide a dog for sniffing baggage. The request was turned down. Again, on May 17, 1985, the Indian high commissioner in Canada presented a diplomatic note to the Canadian foreign office regarding the threat to Indian diplomatic missions and Air-India. This was followed up by Air-India in June 1985 with a request for "full and strict security coverage and any other appropriate security arrangements for the protection of our aircraft".

Normally, such a request should have led to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police taking full charge of security but this did not happen. Meanwhile, subsequent inquiries by the Canadian Government have confirmed that the procedures followed for baggage check-in were not foolproof. For example, the Canadian attorney-general admitted in his statement to the commission that "procedures followed on June 22, 1985, were unable to detect whether an explosive device was lodged in checked-in baggage". He also admitted that the "procedures followed were unable to prevent unaccompanied baggage reaching Air-India 181."

Nevertheless, the commission refrains from fixing responsibility for the baggage getting through. According to legal sources attached to the commission agencies like the Boeing company, the Canadian Government and Air-India were able to make strong cases to show that they were not culpable. And the stakes are high, because an adverse finding would lead to loss of prestige and, the inevitable law suits.

Even before Kirpal could submit his report, the relatives of the crash victims had filed a suit for $ 200 million against Air-India, Lloyds Insurance and the Canadian civil aviation authorities. And Lloyds, acting on behalf of Air-India, filed a case against the Canadian Government, suing for damages.

Meanwhile, back home, Air-India has already spent more than Rs 3 crore on the payment of damages to the relatives of the crash victims. But while the dead rest in peace, the Kirpal Commission's findings are likely to add yet another dimension to the fight between the various organisations involved in one of the biggest disasters in aviation history, while the man or men responsible for it remain at large.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MUSLIM WOMEN BILL

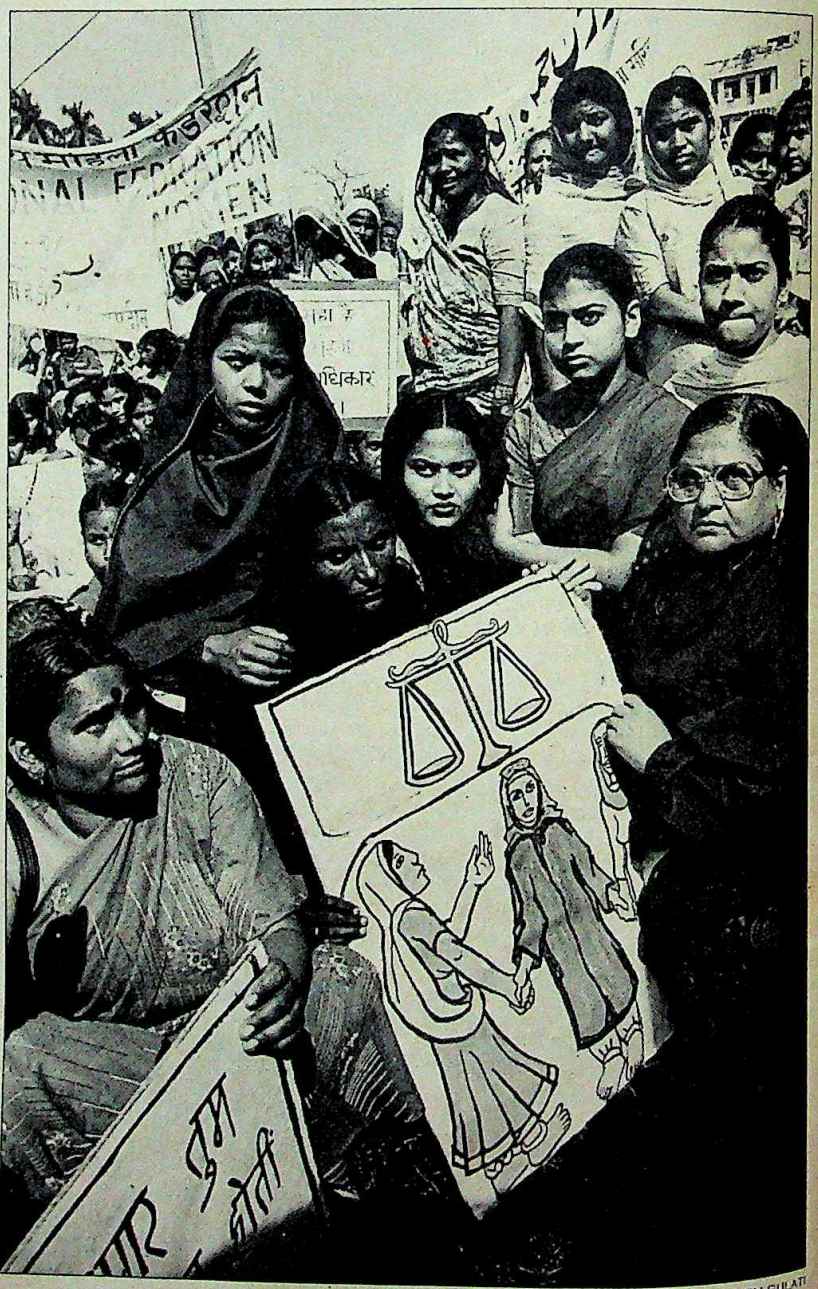
The Gathering Storm

NOTHING else that Rajiv Gandhi has done in his 16 months in office has earned him so much opprobrium. The Muslim Women (Protection of Rights on Divorce) Bill has already provoked the resignation of a Central minister, Arif Mohammed Khan, triggered unrest in the Congress(I) and set off an avalanche of criticism in the press. With neither the Government nor Muslim leaders cogently justifying the bill till late last fortnight—save for a spirited defence by Rajiv in the Lok Sabha—the impression quickly spread that not only was the Government on the defensive, but that most Muslims were not in its favour. Coming a bare three weeks after the controversial price hike, the bill left the Government with an even bloodier nose.

Arun Shourie took up the cudgels on behalf of the vast majority of people opposed to the bill. In two cogently presented articles in The Times of India, he showed that Rajiv had not merely done a turnabout with Khan (first encouraging him to defend the Shah Bano judgement and then abandoning him when Rajiv decided to buy peace with the Muslim fundamentalists), but that he had ignored the advice of the law ministry and the home ministry. Both ministries had said that the judgement did not contravene Muslim personal law in any way. Arif, argued Shourie, had quoted the Quran in support of his argument that a Muslim husband should provide maintenance to his divorced wife, and that nine Muslim countries provided for this in law. He also pointed to a Pakistani Alim's argument in a Lahore paper that the Indian fundamentalists' charge that the Shah Bano judgement was against the Shariat is derogatory to Islam. Since the Government did not bother to counter Shourie's arguments, the impression stuck that the Government had no case.

In his Lok Sabha reference, Rajiv gave the bare outlines of the bill's rationale and its positive aspects—that the Supreme Court judgement had caused "certain uncertainties in the minds of certain communities" who were "afraid that certain guarantees given at the time of Independence were being diluted"; that acknowledging the right of communities to have their own personal laws did not weaken but strengthened secularism; that Muslim women would get more under this bill than what Section 125 of the Criminal Penal Code (under which Shah Bano won her case) gives them; and that while the personal laws of other communities were codified, Muslim laws have not been and Parliament should welcome this first step towards that. But the reference was so brief that virtually no supporting arguments were given. Most important, neither the prime minister nor any of his ministers explained how the bill had been worked out and who had been consulted.

Apparently, Rajiv was convinced as early as last October of the need for such a bill. His appreciation for Khan's 90-minute speech in the Lok Sabha (made on September 23) was genuine but this was before intelligence reports had established the point that the overwhelming feeling in



Women protesting: sharp reaction

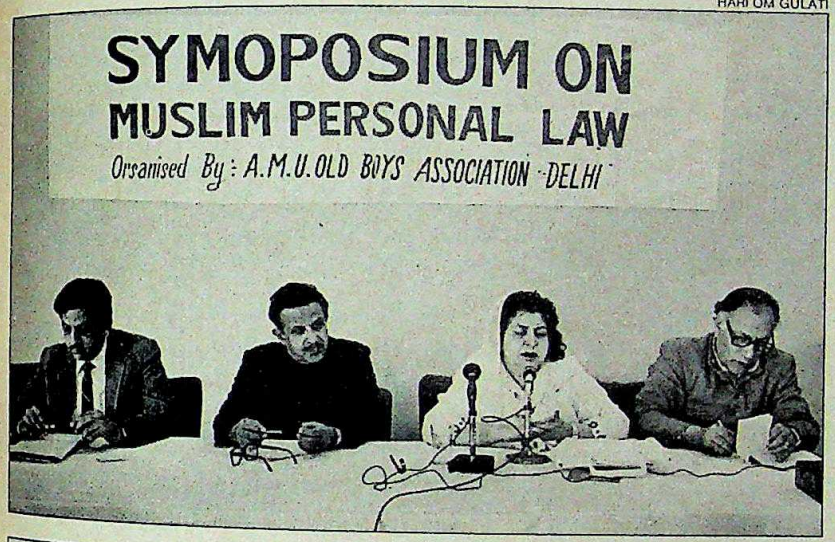
HARI OM GULATI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the community was against the Shah Bano judgement. It was thereabouts that Tahir Mehmood, an acknowledged expert on personal laws, met Rajiv and explained the Islamic concepts of marriage, family relationships, divorce and maintenance, and their adaptation into the Shariat laws. Islam's stress on equality between the sexes, he argued, had been doubly distorted: first by faulty interpretations of the personal laws by British jurists and, more importantly, by their loose implementation by ignorant maulvis in the thousands of mosques across the country.

HARI OM GULATI



A pro-bill seminar: weak defences

With neither the Government nor Muslim leaders cogently justifying the bill the impression spread that the Government was on the defensive and most Muslims were not in its favour

Says Mehmood: "No other aspect of Islam has suffered so much misconception and distortion as its personal law. Today, the common Muslim in India naively practises an awfully distorted Shariat law."

Rajiv was soon convinced of the socio-legal case for the bill, and of the need to work with the All India Muslim Personal Law Board (AIMPLB). It was against this background that he promised at the Momin conference in early December that the Government would not interfere in any communities' personal laws. But he had one important concern—that the interests of Muslim women should be protected. When 17 AIMPLB members, along with Mehmood and a Supreme Court lawyer, the Cambridge-educated Salman Khurshid (son of Khurshid Alam Khan), met him in the third week of December, it was this aspect that Rajiv wanted them to look at. He wanted a "package deal". If they could suggest measures that would give the Muslim women more than what Section 125 gave them, they could draft the bill in accordance with the provisions of their personal laws.

In return, said one of those present at the meeting, the AIMPLB members asked the prime minister: "Are you looking for safeguards for divorced Muslim women or do you want the husband to be punished?" Once Rajiv emphasised that it was the former he was interested in, they got down to specifics. Rajiv hinted that he would like an ordinance to be issued before the Congress(I)'s centenary session in Bombay, a bare four days away. Within three hours of this meeting, the AIMPLB had presented its draft of the bill to Union law ministers A.K. Sen and H.R. Bharadwaj.

But the Government was halted in its tracks by The Pakistan Times article which Shourie referred to. Rajiv was sent the article with a note saying that this was the correct interpretation of what the Shariat says and that he was being misled by Indian fundamentalists. Rajiv gave the article to Najma Heptullah to check out. By the time Heptullah got the clarification from Mehmood—that the argument was not only against the tenets of Islam but represented the view of a "microscopic minority" among Muslims—a month had passed. All doubts clarified, Heptullah went to Rae Bareli with a draft of the bill to be shown to the president of the board, Ali Hussan Nadwi, an Islamic scholar of international repute.

Muslim opinion-makers interviewed, including Mehmood, journalists Shahid Siddiqui (editor, Nai Duniya) and Ahmed Syed Malihabadi (editor, Hind Azad), and politicians like Janvadi Party leader Syed Ahmed Hashmi and Sulaiman Sait, say the bill is an honest attempt to offer more to Muslim women by not only drawing on the Shariat but even going beyond it. Specifically:

- Instead of one man being made responsible for an indigent Muslim woman under a law which is an insult to a woman's dignity (Section 125 of the Criminal Procedure Code deals with vagrancy), here a whole chain of blood relatives is being made lawfully responsible for her, thus giving teeth to what is anyway an Islamic injunction.
- Section 125 gave her a pittance after a long and costly court battle (Rs 179.50 to Shah Bano after six years in the courts) and has been difficult to enforce. The bill enjoins the magistrate to give within 30 days all the woman's dues—including money equivalent to the mehr (dower) and the value of her properties before and after her marriage. Earlier, she had to fight a costly civil suit to get her rights.
- Where there are no relatives and the woman has no property, the Wakf boards will take care of her. It is incorrect to say that all Wakf boards are bankrupt.

They also have a cogent defence against the major criticism of the letter of the bill—that it lets off the husband too easily. According to the bill, he is only required to pay maintenance for the iddat period (roughly three months) if the woman is not pregnant and for two years if she has children. Khan had argued that this was contrary to the Quranic injunction that the husband must provide a "reasonable" maintenance to his divorced wife.

Mehmood and others maintain that Khan's interpretation of the Quran represents a minority opinion as it is based on only one of the seven accepted schools of Islamic jurisprudence. Besides, they argued, he wants the husband to pay mandatorily what the Quran only enjoins the "pious" to do. No Muslim country grants maintenance to divorcees beyond the iddat period. Further, Islam's concept of family and marriage differs dramati-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

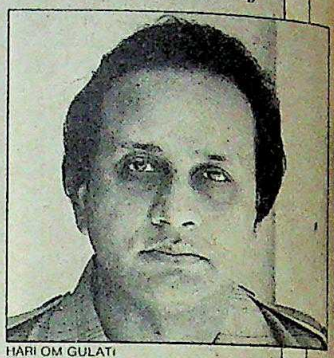
HARI OM GULATI

ZOYA HASSAN
associate professor
Jawaharlal Nehru University

"Rajiv Gandhi has gone back on his promise to bring out a background paper and consult all sections of Muslim leadership."

TAHIR MEHMOOD
Law Faculty Professor
Delhi University

"Only one man in the government is convinced of our case and that is Rajiv Gandhi. All Muslims should rally behind him."



HARI OM GULATI

cally from the Hindu concept. Said Mehmood: "There is no kanyadaan in Islam. Unlike among the Hindus, a Muslim girl never severs her relations with her nuclear family. All that marriage does is to temporarily shift the responsibility for her maintenance from her family to her husband. Once the marriage breaks, the liability is restored." The bill implicitly acknowledges this.

Far from giving in to obscurantists, the bill shows that the Muslim leadership is not resistant to change, even if it means going beyond the Shariat, to find a solution to the genuine social problem of poor and helpless Muslim divorcees. The Shariat merely says that the umoom (Muslim brotherhood) should look after indigent women but the AIMPLB agreed to let the Wakf boards shoulder that responsibility, if nobody else could help her. This spirit of accommodation is indicative of the attitude of moderates like Nadwi, who is opposed to any agitation on the Ram Janmabhoomi temple-Babari masjid issue. Said Siddiqui: "I welcome the bill not because it is a surrender to so-called fundamentalists but because it strengthens the hands of moderates like Nadwi saheb."

The other reason why they are supporting the bill is that it marks the beginning of the codification of Muslim Personal Law. In fact, Rajiv had wanted them to do this in tandem with the bill, but the AIMPLB leaders felt that the bill could not wait. More importantly, the dust the bill has raised will compel the Muslims to have a look at the admitted defects in their society, like the inferior status of women and the ridiculously easy divorce provisions. Says Siddiqui: "Reforming the divorce laws is the real battle and you can take it from me that we will fight it." Like the critics of the bill they blame the maulvis for their social ills: instead of trying to reconcile divorce-seeking Muslim husbands with their wives, as the Quran enjoins them to, they grant divorces too easily. Says Mehmood: "Muslims need to set their house in order."

For them, Rajiv is more than a saviour. Says Mehmood: "There is only one man in the Government who is convinced of our case and that is Rajiv Gandhi. If for no other reason than this, I think all Muslims should rally behind him." Adds Siddiqui: "Rajiv is a hero among Muslims today. The Muslim who was fast losing faith in the system now feels reassured that there is somebody who cares for them."

But, of course, virtually all other sections of society see no justification in the bill whatsoever. The most important concern voiced was that the bill gave in to communal elements when the country's secular fabric was already strained. The bill would widen the divide between the two major communities when the cancer of communalism was spreading. Said former Supreme Court justice V.R.Krishna Iyer in an emotional letter to the prime minister: "Secularists will be a sore minority at the elections, and should the sleeping Hindu giant be provoked into communal frenzy? Every measure to buy the Ayatollahs' pleasure alienates the 'Vishwa Hindu' incendiaries."

Others voiced related concerns. Zoya Hassan, associate professor at the Jawaharlal Nehru University and convenor of the Committee for Protection of Rights of Muslim Women, argued: "Under the guise of freedom of religion and personal law, Muslim women are being denied human and constitutional rights." More, the move towards a uniform civil code, enshrined in Article 44 of the Directive Principles, would now receive a setback. Wrote S.Sahay in The Statesman: "Article 44 may be considered as good as dead." Said Upendra Baxi, former dean of the Law Faculty of Delhi University: "This bill is a fraud on the Constitution."

That was not all. Instead of moving towards the 21st century, said the critics, Rajiv Gandhi is taking the country backwards. The Government has struck a deal with the fundamentalist Muslim leadership to win back the support of its one-time vote bank. Said Baharul Islam, Congress(I) MP and former Supreme Court justice: "If the bill is passed, divorces among Muslims will shoot up." Women will find it even more difficult to get sustenance since the responsibility does not devolve on one person, unlike in Section 125. Fumed N.Krishnan, national council member of the CPI: "The so-called protection is nothing but an impractical hoax, adding insult to injury."

Worse, it seemed that the Government was trying to bring in the bill through the backdoor and then ram it through on the strength of its steamroller majority in Parliament, stifling all, including intra-party, dissent. Said Hassan: "Rajiv has gone back on his assurances that the Government would bring out a background paper and that all sections of the Muslim leadership would be consulted." While partymen had been kept in the dark, the prime minister had only consulted the 'fundamentalist' members of the AIMPLB, who have always opposed any

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When the immaculate taste of aristocracy spills beyond classic cars and stately mansions...

...it finds colour in Aristocrat

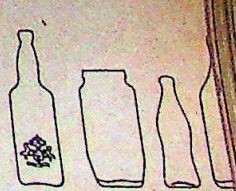
Jagatjit Industries Limited

The Spirit of Excellence

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

For your requirement of coloured and flint glass, write to Jagatjit Industries Limited.



Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation

"Rasna... three times a day!"

Mudra:A:PI:2949

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SO ORANGIE-ORANGIE!

India's largest selling Soft Drink Concentrate

Rasna

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

INTRODUCING MICO-SUPER

INDIA'S FIRST BI-METAL ELECTRODE SPARK PLUG WITH PROJECTED INSULATOR

A new generation spark plug for the new generation of Indian vehicles

Vehicle technology is undergoing a rapid evolution in India. Keeping pace is MICO. With a new spark plug that has two unique features, for greater reliability and performance.

A projected insulator tip for super starting

Deposits on the nose of a spark plug can lead to misfiring. The longer the nose, the less likely misfiring will occur. The Super's long insulator nose is highly heat-absorptive – and helps the spark plug reach burn-off temperature quickly. Which in turn means super starting, every time!

A bi-metallic centre electrode to protect against overheating

The Super's composite electrode is made of two metals – nickel and copper. This enables it to have much lower electrode temperatures. The centre electrode's high heat-conductivity protects against thermal overload. That's why the Super has a wider heat range than conventional spark plugs with solid chromium-nickel electrodes!

Better starting, better acceleration and longer life

The Super is a premium spark plug for today's vehicles. Designed by BOSCH engineers in West Germany, the Super is now brought to you in India by MICO – leaders in spark plug and fuel injection technology.

Before fitting a Super in your vehicle, make sure you're buying the right type!

- W8DC
  FOR MARUTI
- W5BC
  FOR RAJDOOT - YAMAHA 350 CC

Super spark plug for all other Indian vehicles will follow.

① Composite centre electrode
High heat-conductivity (copper core) and wear resistance (chromium-nickel coating)

② Air gap
To compensate for different expansion characteristics of centre electrode and insulator under heat

③ Long insulator nose
Highly absorptive of heat, reaches burn-off temperature quickly

THE NEW MICO-SUPER. SPARKING OFF A REVOLUTION IN SPARK PLUG TECHNOLOGY.

MICO

LICENCE BOSCH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

progressive measures.

Leaders of all the major political parties, including the BJP and the two communist parties, were equally critical. At the very least, demanded opposition leaders, the bill should be sent to a select committee, effectively putting it in deep freeze. But the greatest upheavals came in the Congress(I). Several Congressmen, prominent among whom was Baharul Islam, openly congratulated Arif Khan. The 41 Muslim Congress(I) MP's supporting the bill were isolated. Said one MP: "I feel sorry for them. They huddle in one corner of the Central Hall, talking to one another. Nobody has anything to say to them."

Partymen demanded, and were granted, a full meeting of the parliamentary party. But the meeting was postponed for a day during which three Union ministers met MP's to convince them of the Government's viewpoint and ward off a threatened revolt in the meeting. The hour-long meeting itself was adroitly managed with only 12 handpicked members allowed to speak. The party agreed to do as Rajiv desired, but dissent simmered and the brave agreed with Shourie that there should be a conscience vote.

There is little doubt that Rajiv's image as a man of the times with an eye on the future has taken a battering. The middle class is agitated that its saviour seems to have feet of clay—first the unjustified petroleum price rise and now this. Women, his greatest fans, have begun wondering if he really has their interests at heart. Worse, he is seen as a man who is willing to set aside his own convictions in order to woo an electoral minority. And finally, he has for the first time found the more liberal, modernist section of nationalist opinion ranged vehemently against him.

While critics of the bill have had a field day, the Government has been deafening in its silence on its rationale and Muslim leaders seeking to justify it have not been able to make the same impact as its detractors. Hindu communalists are sure to exploit this void. The bill, which is to be taken up for discussion after the budget has been passed, is like a communal time bomb. Unless the Government and the responsible sections among the Muslim opinion makers strive to defuse it, it will continue to send off sparks till it explodes. A government white paper is a must: the bill has raised too many shackles and created too many misapprehesnions.

—AJAY KUMAR

HIMACHAL

Log Jam

IT WAS a case of the pot calling the kettle black. Kewal Ram Chauhan, a disgruntled former Congress(I) politician facing prosecution on charges of illegal felling and smuggling of timber, sprung a major surprise last fortnight by hurling identical charges at Himachal Pradesh Chief Minister Virbhadra Singh and his family. The matter would have received only cursory attention but for the widely known fact that Chauhan, a former MLA who was denied a Congress(I) ticket and was subsequently defeated when he ran as an independent in last March's assembly elections, is a protege of former chief minister, Ram Lal Singh's arch foe.

"This is a last ditch effort by the organised forest mafia to damage me," fumed Singh, the portly and affable former raja of Bushair state. "I'm not going to be cowed down. If anything, my determination is further strengthened to enforce the law of the land no matter who is involved." Singh described Chauhan as the "kingpin of the forest mafia" who was responsible for all the political patronage. "He controlled the bureaucracy and the spoils system," he said. All cases of violations of forest laws, Singh said, "are now being vigorously pursued. They think Virbhadra Singh is a menace. Our biggest asset is our clean image in this state so they keep slinging mud in the hope that some will stick."

"If he's clean," Chauhan retorted, "I can throw tons of mud and it won't stick. Why doesn't he sue me for defamation? If I'm the mafia, he should remand me to police custody or try me in court." The former Congress(I) politician insists that he has exposed "only the tip of the iceberg. I'll go all the way to the Supreme Court if I have to. I am being persecuted because I was close to Ram Lal."

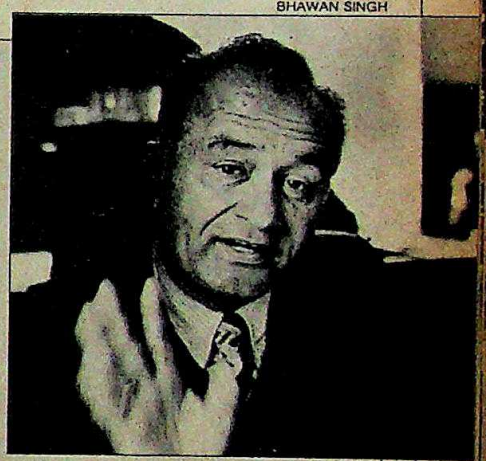
The chief minister denies any political vendetta. "Why should there be one?" he asks. "After all Chauhan is a defeated politician. The fact is that raids in Punjab, Haryana, and Uttar Pradesh have produced incriminating documents against him. He has been arrested in one case. There are atleast 10 other investigations pending. New challans will be filed in court by the end of April."

Interestingly, public sympathy in Himachal Pradesh by and large appears to be with Singh who is widely applauded for pursuing the "forest mafia" which, according to several sources has amassed crores of rupees in wealth through the exploitation of forests, illegal felling and smuggling timber.

Meanwhile, Singh has submitted a comprehensive reply—not yet made public—to the prime minister's office on the charges levelled against him. According to documents examined by INDIA TODAY Singh appears to have a substantial defence. Examples:

In an attempt to circumvent land ceiling laws Singh is charged with gifting land, which should have been surrendered to the Government, to his two daughters who illegally sold trees which were planted on that land.

BHAWAN SINGH



"I have exposed only the tip of the iceberg. I'll go all the way to the Supreme Court. I am being persecuted because I am against rajas."

KEWAL RAM CHAUHAN
former Congress(I) politician

Documents reveal, however, that after implementation of land reform Singh was left with 3,494.12 bighas of ceiling land. After surplus land was vested with the Government, Singh was left with 205 bighas under law. Of this he gifted 39 bighas to one daughter, Jyotsana, and 38 bighas to Abhilasha, the second daughter. Under the state's laws, trees standing on land can be exploited for commercial purposes only after a 10-year cycle. Some 80 trees standing on the land gifted were sold only after completion of the 10-year cycle to the state forest corporation in the open market.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The chief minister is also charged with protecting his brother, Rajendra Singh, who has auctioned, for commercial purposes, trees standing on his land.

But documents show that Rajendra, was given some land by the former ruler—before merger of the states. Rajendra's guardians later auctioned the trees. The auction was disputed by the state Government on grounds of legal ownership of the trees in the late 1950s. The state high court ruled in favour of Rajendra but the judgement was repealed by the divisional bench. Rajendra has now appealed to the Supreme Court. The money from the auction is being held in escrow.

Two kilometres of road were allegedly constructed specially for the convenience of Singh's apple orchard, and the PWD spent an additional Rs 2 lakh to erect a breast-wall.

Documents show that the chief minister's orchard does fall on the road in question but construction of the road was completed before Singh became chief minister. In fact, the road cut Singh's orchard in half. In such cases, the PWD is duty-bound to construct a breast-wall to protect the orchard as well as the new road. The cost of the wall was about Rs 17,000.

Kunwar Bhawani Singh, "a relative of the chief minister" supposedly failed to comply with the requirements of the Land Reform Act under which land was to be ceded to the tiller.

Singh denies that Bhawani Singh is any relative. In any case, the dispute over the land is currently being handled by the high court.

The chief minister is accused of maintaining four residences at government expense in Shimla and Delhi, and his properties in Rampur and Sarhan have been renovated at official expense.

But the record shows that Singh's only residence in Shimla is Holly House, his ancestral home for which the Government only pays telephone expenses. A second house in Shimla is used by the chief minister as his office, while Himachal Bhawan in Delhi and a house on Mathura Road—allotted to him when he was a member of Parliament—are used by state officials as guest-houses. The house at Sarhan belongs to his mother and has not been renovated for the last 10 years. Rampur House, which belongs to the chief minister, has been fitted with new bathrooms for which Singh has paid himself.

BHAWAN SINGH

> "This is a last ditch effort by the organised forest mafia to damage me. I am not going to be cowed down."
> VIRBHADRA SINGH
> chief minister, Himachal Pradesh

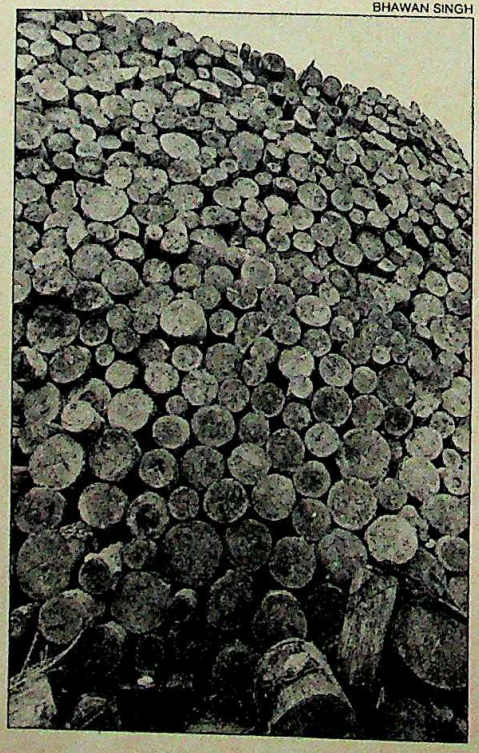
BHAWAN SINGH



Smuggled timber in Himachal

The chief minister is accused of receiving a kickback, in the form of an artificially high contract bid of Rs 4.6 lakh for his apple orchard, from a firm represented by an R.S. Thadda, in return for the chief minister's helping the firm acquire a forest for commercial exploitation after an auction.

But the record shows that the Punnan Forest in the Kotgarh Division had been given more than 10 years ago to a private contractor for exploitation. The contractor had left his work half finished. The Forest Department wanted to auction the forest off again for completion of the work. The firm represented by Thadda made a bid of Rs 39 lakh for the forest but it did not get the contract. Another firm, Sanjay Kumar and Company of Yamunanagar, offered Rs 42 lakh for the forest and won the auction.

None of the charges, however, appear to have succeeded in casting any doubts on the chief minister's integrity. During the 1985 mid-term poll, the Congress(I) bagged 58 seats in the 68-member Assembly, 22 more than the last time around. Consequently, the Himachal Pradesh Assembly is full of fresh Congress(I) faces, most of them young and below 40—and educated. Their legislature party statement backing Singh against the charges made by Chauhan added: "Virbhadra Singh's name is a byword for honesty and integrity. Any attack on him is not a personal attack. It is an attack on decency and morality in public life."

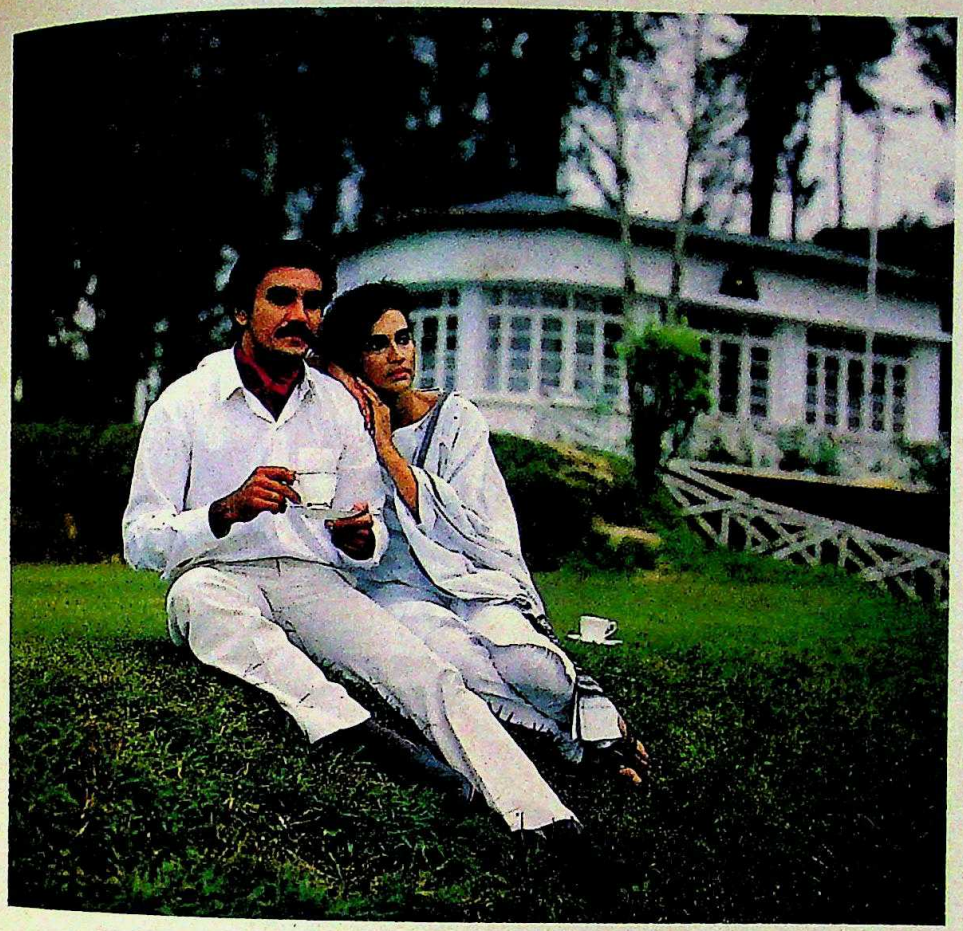
A clearly weary but undaunted Singh said: "I've been a politician for two and a half decades. But I seem to have created more enemies in the three years I've been chief minister than in the past 25 years. They are threatening my reputation and they are even threatening my life. But I cannot let sleeping dogs lie."

The Himachal Pradesh imbroglio could become a test case for Rajiv's "clean image" politics, part of which calls for keeping politicians with a "bad" image out of positions of power. But in continuing to support his "clean" colleagues, Rajiv must walk a fine line in seeing that corruption charges are not summarily whitewashed by the Centre.

—INDERJIT BADHWAR in Shimla

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



From the mist-wrapped slopes of the Darjeeling hills comes a tea so distinct, so impeccable in flavour...

Nurtured in the finest tea estates. Carefully and discerningly hand-picked. And sealed into a unique gold foil pack to retain that garden-fresh flavour.

FLAVOUR SO DARJEELING, IT DESERVES A GOLD LABEL.

Brooke Bond GOLD LABEL

The very essence of Darjeeling

BBI-1834

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

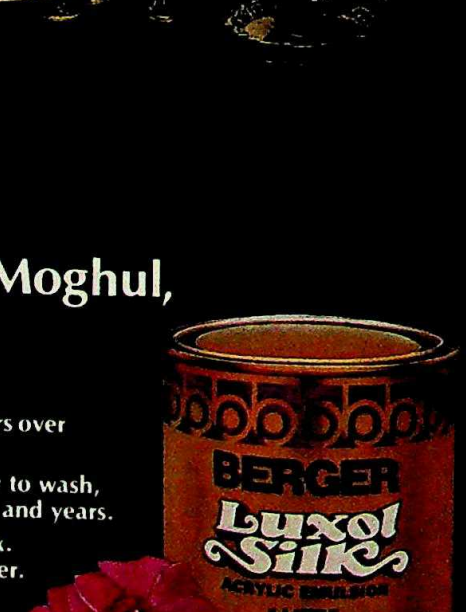
ed by Arya Samaj Foundation

When the miniature is Moghul, the walls are Luxol Silk.

Luxol Silk. It is the only emulsion paint you an tell with your eyes closed. Just run your fingers over he silken, super-smooth finish.

Luxol Silk. Its perfect silk finish makes it so easy to wash, o easy to keep bright and clean looking for years and years.

Luxol Silk. Choose from over forty shades of silk. nd from a whole new range of whites that whisper.



rape your walls with Luxol Silk – the richest emulsion in the world.

Luxol Silk

British Paints
BERGER

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUNJAB

Mounting Pressures

ON THE face of it, Punjab Chief Minister Surjit Singh Barnala has never been more firmly in command. Over the last fortnight, the inheritor of the troubled state constituted the Akali Dal's working committee to his liking, expanded the ministry by co-opting five hand-picked members and removed the all-powerful Shiromani Gurudwara Prabandhak Committee (SGPC) president Gurcharan Singh Tohra. No other Akali leader has simultaneously been the chief minister, the Akali Dal president and the effective religious head of the Sikhs. What is more, say his aides, Barnala is finally becoming very much his own man. At no stage did he consult his number two, Finance Minister Balwant Singh.

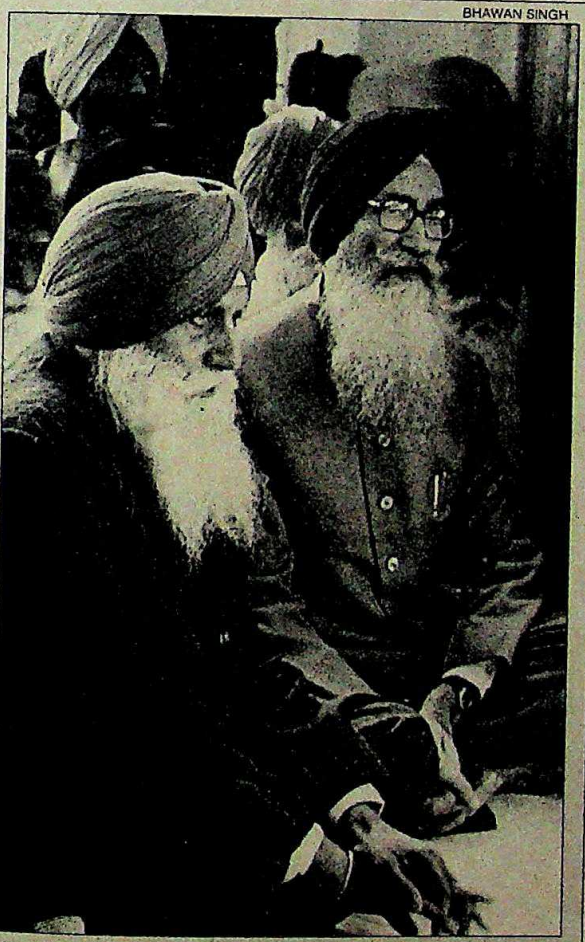
Undoubtedly, Barnala is successfully exploiting the contradictions between his rivals, Tohra, former chief minister Prakash Singh Badal, Speaker Ravi Inder Singh and Agriculture Minister Amarinder Singh. As long as they keep feuding and the Sikh masses support him, he is safe. But his perch at the peak is fraught with danger. Directly holding three reins, he has nobody beside him. Any slip-up and he takes the blame. And he has yet to show that he can walk three tightropes at the same time.

The flak has already started mounting. The pre-budget meeting of the Akali Dal's Legislature Party was unusually stormy with the party's growing impatience with the non-implementation of the Punjab accord featuring prominently. "Don't play second fiddle to the Centre or you will come to grief," many MLA's told Barnala. Today, Barnala has twice as many detractors within the party as he had six months ago.

Tohra, too, is far from neutralised. His offer to resign was so timed that he came across as a martyr being sacrificed at the altar of panthic unity at Delhi's bidding. The 14-member SGPC executive debated the offer inconclusively at Amritsar for three hours before they agreed that Barnala should take the final decision. When they next met at Chandigarh, nine of the 14 were still in favour of retaining Tohra. Even Kabul Singh, vice-president of the SGPC who later became the officiating president, was against removing Tohra.

Ultimately the executive fell in line but only after Barnala promised to personally look after the SGPC. In fact, two senior executive members, Shiv Singh Khushipur and Darshan Singh Issapur, bluntly told Barnala: "Nine of the 14 here think that the acceptance of the resignation of Tohra is being done at the behest of Delhi. You can do it but you will have to make it clear this sacrifice will not go waste. You will get the accord implemented in letter and spirit. Get the detained Sikh youth released and the deserters back to the army."

Tohra's group of 18 MLA's, including two ministers, is still steadfast in its loyalty. Barnala knows that Tohra has the wiliness of a fox and the patience of an elephant. Even his critics are nervous now that Tohra has no responsibilities. Says Balwant Singh: "I wanted Tohra to be retained." The AISSF and the Damdami Taksal leaders have welcomed Tohra's resignation but their support can only be poor consolation.



BHAWAN SINGH

Barnala knows that Tohra has the wiliness of a fox and the patience of an elephant. Even his critics are nervous now that Tohra has no responsibilities.

Badal does not have Tohra's guile or as much public support, but he too continues to hold out. Barnala even offered to make him executive president—No. 2 in the party—but Badal said the party should elect him to the post. "I need no position to work. I am with you," he told Barnala. His actions, however, spoke otherwise—he did not attend the first meeting of the working committee nor was he present at the swearing-in of the new ministers.

Barnala's continuing grip over the vitals of the Government—he still holds the major portfolios of food and supply, irrigation and power—is also causing resentment. Kasturi Lal, one of the five new ministers and the only Hindu in the ministry, has been given the relatively unimportant charge of labour and employment. None of the other four has been given independent charge.

With the pressures mounting, Barnala has increasingly been forced to harangue Delhi leaders. After Lok Sabha Speaker Balram Jakhar referred to Punjab as a "butcherland", Barnala asked angrily: "Where was he when 4,000 Sikhs were killed in Delhi and other places? Where was he when the army marched into the Golden Temple to kill scores of innocent people?" He said in the Assembly. "We in Punjab are fighting the battle on behalf of the country. We have an unfriendly neighbour who is trying to destabilise the country. Operation Bluestar caused grievous wound to the Sikh psyche and resulted in scores of young men crossing over to Pakistan. These brainwashed young men, whom the BSF is letting in through Punjab and Rajasthan, are creating all the trouble. Whose fault is this? A small bit of violence in Punjab is splashed across the newspapers and on TV, but why is everybody keeping mum about the worst carnage in the history of the country?"

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The attack on the Centre was calculated to assure his critics that he is no stooge. But Barnala knows his real challenge comes from the terrorists. As he declared: "We have geared up our efforts. We are equipping our forces with good weapons and training. I have inherited a totally mismanaged state where the rulers were a party to terrorism." But the odds on his success are only getting longer.

—GOBIND THUKRAL

KAPURTHALA

Ambushed

IT WAS around 7 p.m. on March 6 and the residents of Kapurthala, a bustling town (pop:60,000) 20 km off the Grand Trunk Road, were hurrying indoors. Kapurthala district is one of the four worst terrorist-infested districts in Punjab. Here, only the brave venture out at night. Suddenly the peace of dusk was shattered by the burst of Sten-gun fire. When the shooting stopped some 20 minutes later, the terrorists had fired over 250 shots and left eight innocent people dead over a 3-km trail. Never have more people been killed in a single terrorist attack in Punjab.

The political reverberations were felt immediately. Thundered Gurbinder Kaur Brar, Congress(I) Legislature Party leader, in the Assembly: "The Barnala Government should resign or the Centre must dismiss it." It was an undoubtedly severe setback to the Barnala Government's new strategy to combat terrorists. Under this, Amritsar, Gurdaspur, and parts of Kapurthala and Ferozepur districts have been divided into 16 sectors which are now policed by the Central Reserve Police Force.

Admitted Barnala: "It's a very tragic incident," but, in the same breath, vowed: "We will gear up our efforts to isolate and crush terrorism." The good news was that the five-member committee of the Damdami Taksal and the AISSF looking after the Golden Temple condemned the killings as a "crime against Sikhism and humanity". This is the first time the hardliners in the two bodies have condemned terrorism.

The terrorists' target was Deputy Superintendent of Police Jarnail Singh Brar, a marked man because of his incisive interrogation of terrorists. He was returning home when five terrorists in a green jeep sprung the ambush. Brar related what happened: "We were a short distance from the SP's house when we had to slow down because some rickshaws were parked on the road. Just then came a burst of Sten-gun fire from a jeep parked in a lane on the right. I told the driver to speed up but the green jeep followed us. Just then a car carrying Kabul Singh, acting president of the SGPC, came between the two jeeps. They fired at his car also, thinking it was a police vehicle (since it has a flashing red light, like the one on police cars). His bodyguard returned the fire but his driver lost control of the car. We rushed into the SP's house, took position and returned the fire. They fled, spraying bullets along a 3-km trail. A police jeep chased them but they dipped into an alley and got away."

Kabul Singh in hospital

The unlucky victims were Ravel Singh, manager of a gurudwara who was travelling in Kabul Singh's car, Nazar Singh, a driver, Kanta Devi, a stenographer in the Development Department, Balwinder Singh, of Damogranwala village near Kapurthala, Hiralal, a businessman, and Ram Lal and Manohar Lal. Brar and three other policemen were hit by bullets on their thighs while Kabul Singh's shoulder-blade was fractured.

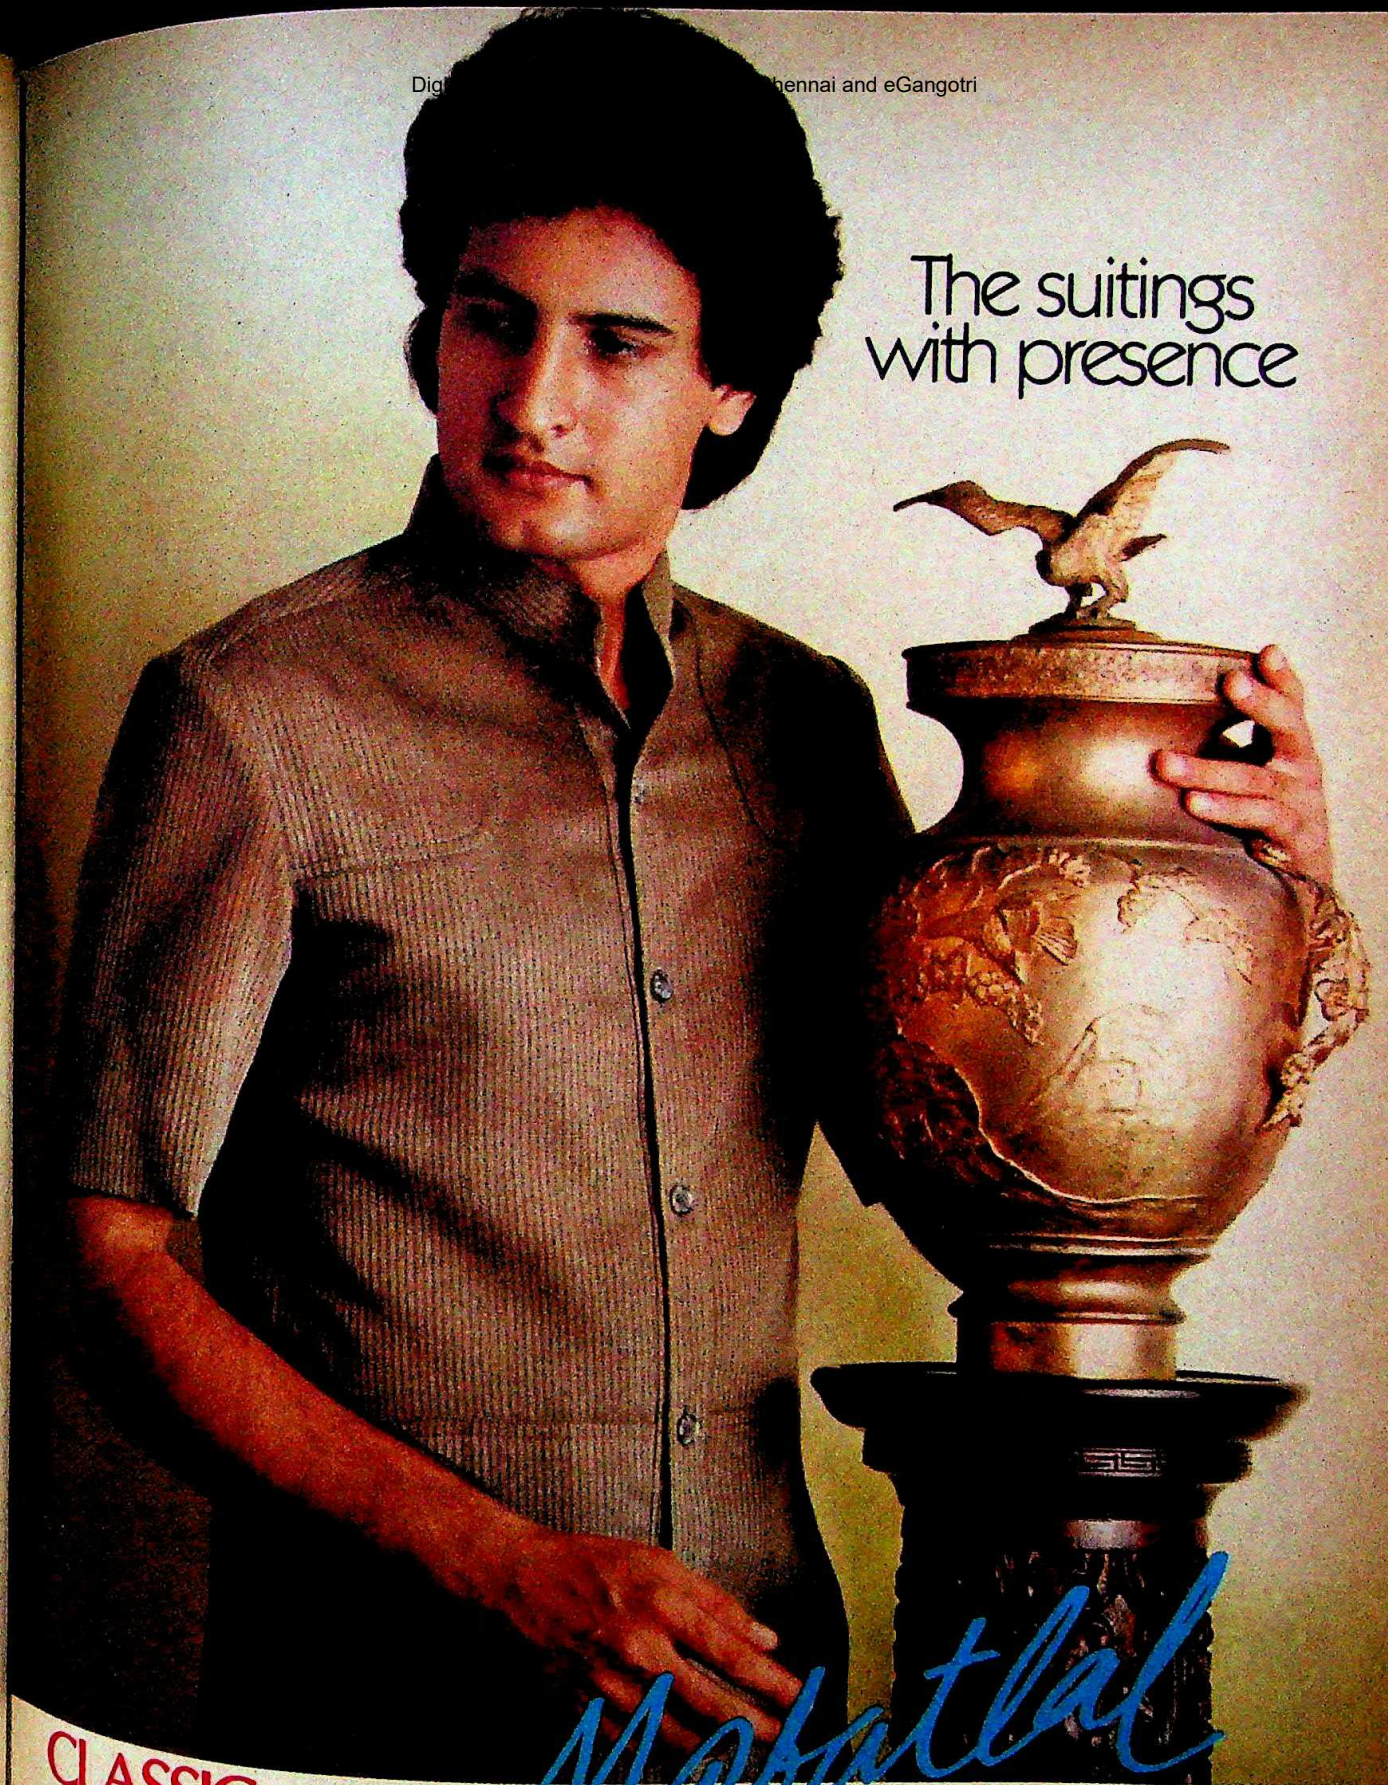
The ambush was obviously an act of desperation. The district police, under the no-nonsense SP Mohinderpal Singh Aulakh, has foiled all three major terrorist attacks in the last five months. What is more, after every attack it either killed or captured the terrorists. The sophistication of the weapons used in the latest attack—the terrorists had the most modern weapons including a 9 mm machine-gun—and the meticulous planning, with the escape route all worked out, shows that the terrorists realise they must wrest the initiative to continue their reign of terror.

The same terrorists struck the next day also, burning down the house of police inspector Jaskirit Singh in Kassochal village. They left behind a handwritten note vowing to get Brar and Singh, a relative of Punjab minister Sukhjinder Singh, the next time. Says Aulakh: "We thought we were doing a good job since we had succeeded in foiling earlier attempts. But we shall have to be more vigilant and devise a different strategy."

—GOBIND THUKRAL in Kapurthala

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digi hennai and eGangotri



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The world is going s

Now Skybags brings the Soft Revolution to India. This exciting new range of nylon luggage from VIP is the ultimate in travelling style and comfort. Light-weight, really roomy, beautifully functional. And sensationally tough.

Fashioned from strong, tear resistant nylon, Skybags survive the torture of travel with remarkable ease. Only VIP's special care in manufacture and high quality standards could create such beauty with such toughness.

So before you pick your next destination, pick your Skybags from a dazzling selection of styles, colours and shapes. They're guaranteed to make you soft on them from the word Go!

SOFT. STRONG. STYLISH.

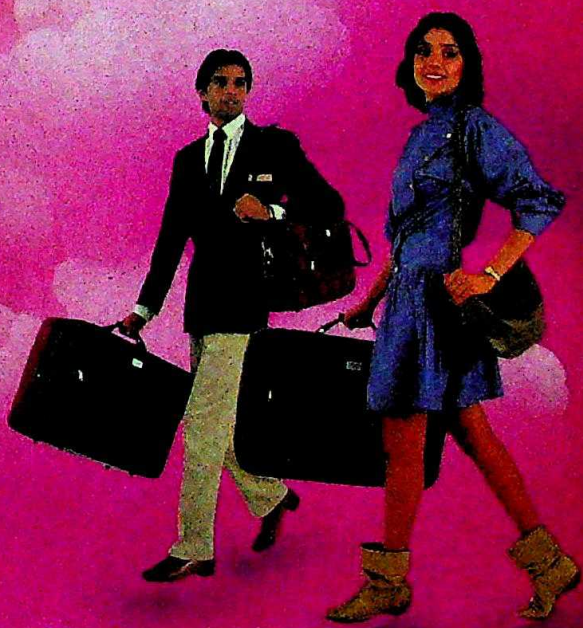
LINTAS VIP S 4 2740

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ng soft today

..... and feeling lighter for it!



Skybags

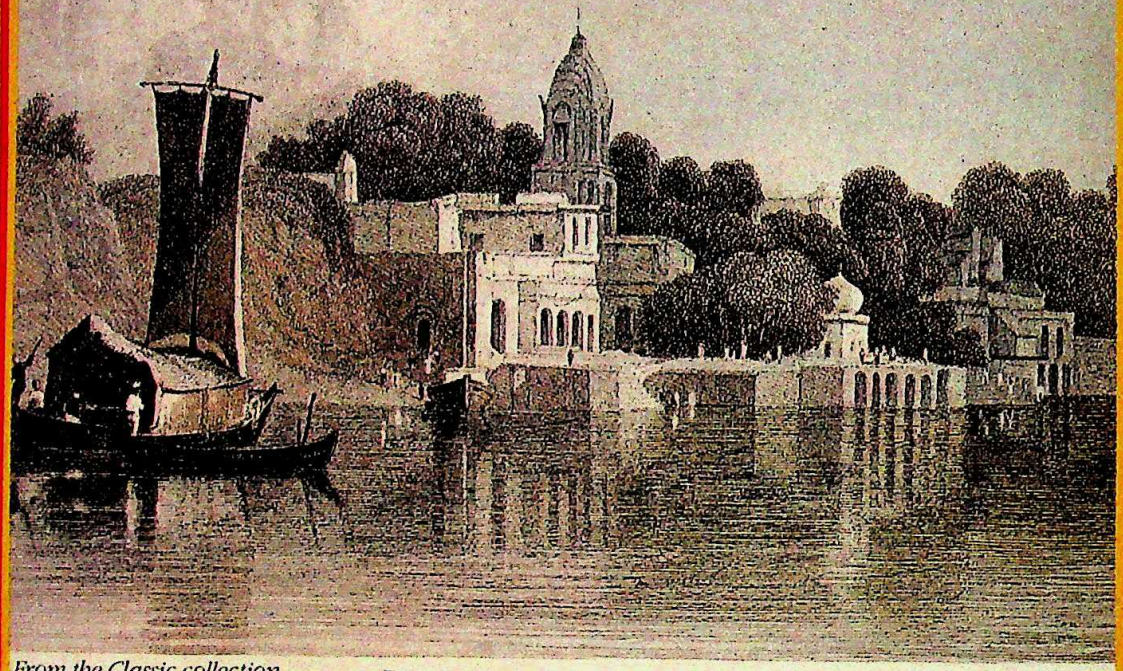
Nylon luggage from the leader VIP

"V.I.P. Skybags is manufactured by V.I.P. Industries Ltd. and marketed by Blow Plast Ltd."

CC-0. Mumukshu Bhawan Varanasi Collection. Haridwar

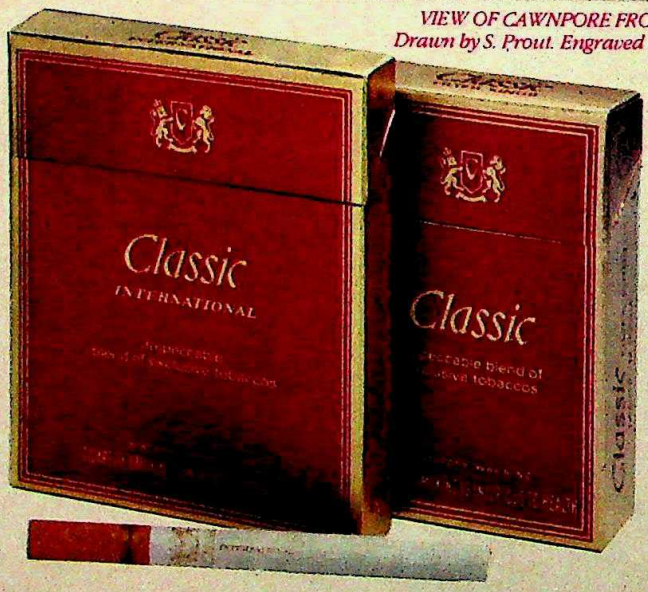
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For those who value taste



From the Classic collection at ITC Ltd., 37 Chowringhee, Calcutta

VIEW OF CAWNPORE FROM THE RIVER. Drawn by S. Prout. Engraved by C. Mottram.



Contemporary Classics from ITC

CLARION C-CL-2

STATUTORY WARNING: CIGARETTE SMOKING IS INJURIOUS TO HEALTH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GUJARAT

The Solanki Strategy

IN A POLITICAL culture where most Congressmen live in awe of the leadership, a blatantly obvious move to put the party leader on the hook is bound to create ripples. And so it was when former Gujarat chief minister Madhavsinh Solanki handed over a long note to Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi, chiding him for government policies which are rapidly eroding the party's image. No former chief minister has been so daring and it is obvious that Solanki had decided to stand up and be heard. Ostensibly private, the letter was leaked to the press for obvious reasons.

The tremors were felt immediately. Said Gujarat party chief Ahmed Patel: "If the letter has been deliberately leaked to the press by Solanki then it is a very serious matter. It is a direct attack at the party and the Congress president." Two dozen Congress(I) MLA's marshalled by Narsi Makwana, MP, who has a love-hate relationship with Solanki, including party whip Manohar Singh Parmar, launched a signature campaign to ask the central leadership to take disciplinary action against Solanki.

But Solanki brushed aside charges of violating party discipline, arguing that there was nothing wrong in writing the letter as he was just voicing the feelings of partymen. Nor, he maintained, is he thinking of forming a regional party for: "The idea will not succeed here."

The fact is Solanki cannot be ignored in Gujarat. Even critics like Jinabhai Darji agree on that. He was the architect of the stupendous Congress(I) victory in the last assembly poll and most of the 148 Congress MLA's (in a house of 182) were handpicked by him. If there was a democratic election to choose the legislature party leader today, Solanki would win hands down. Chief Minister Amarsinh Chaudhary has not been able to inspire confidence in his eight months tenure.

Solanki has been following a strategy calculated to bolster his grassroot support. Gujarat is reeling under an unprecedented drought and he has been touring affected areas for the last two months. By April-end he intends to tour 16 out of the 19 drought-affected districts. Says Darji: "Solanki has been using these trips to assess his strength and it is quite obvious that he continues to have tremendous clout. Every trip makes him feel more confident."

Solanki's note to Rajiv Gandhi chided him for government policies which are rapidly eroding the party's image. No former chief minister has been so daring.

"If the letter has been deliberately leaked to the press by Solanki then it is a very serious matter. It is a direct attack at the party and the Congress president."
AHMED PATEL
AICC general secretary

His other sources of strength are the backward classes and tribals who feel Chaudhary has sold out to the higher castes. Last fortnight, staunch Solanki supporter Jashwant Chauhan rallied around 22 MLA's from the backward castes and put forward the demand for re-imposition of the 18 per cent reservation which the Chaudhary Government had dropped. Congress(I) sources say Chauhan has Solanki's blessings.

It was with this backdrop that Solanki gave in his four and a half-page note to Rajiv. Among the more important points it made were:

- Frequent reshuffle of Union ministers, chief ministers, party executives and bureaucrats has generated a feeling of instability and an impression that decision-making at the highest level is very ad hoc. Worse, replacements have not proved better than the "oustees".
- The communication gap between old and new Congressmen is increasing alarmingly. The safari-clad elite leadership is creating vibrations which may one day rock the party.
- Measures giving direct and immediate benefits to the poor must be taken up immediately. Subsidised rations, medicare and mid-day meals to children could be some of them.
- Cheap production of mass consumption goods, curbs on vulgar display of wealth and a frontal attack on tax evasion, smuggling and foreign exchange violations are musts.
- The party leadership should grow up from the grassroot level. Party offices should be run by full-timers. Members must interact with professionals like economists, social scientists and political analysts. And the party should have its own newspapers.

For the time being, Solanki's limited purpose is to make it clear that the party can ignore him in Gujarat only at its peril. Political observers feel the ultimate aim of his tours is to "capture" the PCC(I) when party elections are held. But he will obviously not be satisfied with sops. When party Vice-President Arjun Singh asked Solanki last month if he wanted a party post, he reportedly asked Singh if he was happy being pushed around every few months from one post to another. The outlines of Solanki's ambitions are clear. The future promises to be exciting—and tumultuous.

—RAMESH MENON

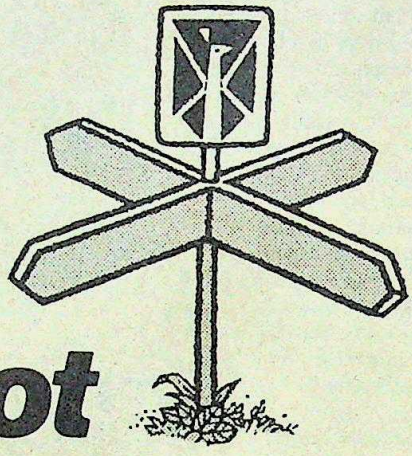
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Frankly we will not let you. Because we are taking insurance into the remotest interior, up the least habitable mountain and deep into the jungle.

You will find National Insurance represented in Churu and Jaisalmer in the Rajasthan Desert, in Anantnag, nestling in the snowy Himalayas and in Tura, located deep in the terai of Meghalaya.

By the end of 1985 we will have expanded to include 146 Divisions and 404 Branch offices, providing insurance to the farmer and the industrialist, the cattle and the tea bush.



If we are not available in every taluk, call on our competitor.

Our journey inward into unrepresented areas is a reflection of our commitment to bring insurance to the masses and to extend it from the traditional to the non-traditional. Through our own developmental plans, we now look for risks and design policies to cover them, instead of waiting for risks to come to our desks. A measure that means encouragement and protection to the self-employed and the entrepreneur, the economically depressed and the naturally vulnerable.

And if for some reason we are not represented in any area, you can be sure we are on the way.

National Insurance Company Limited
(A Subsidiary of General Insurance Corporation of India)

Putting service first

50

CLARION C-NIC-9

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GUJARAT

Pension Peril

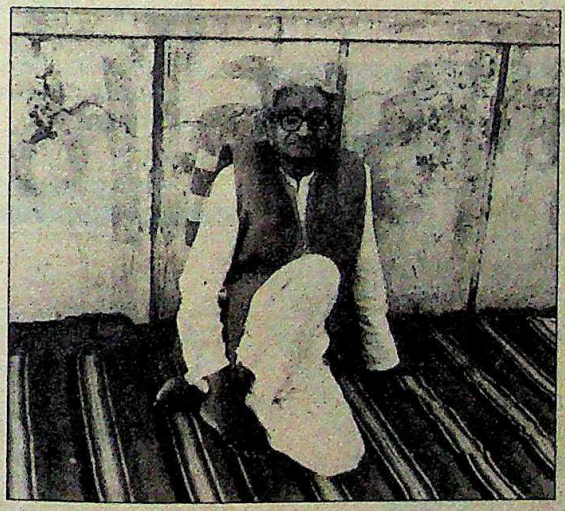
THE DEBATE over the question of parliamentary privileges is as old as the institutions themselves and of late, has been largely dormant with MP's and MLA's increasingly wary of the strong negative reaction from the people on any attempt to increase their perks. Gujarat is one such prime example where attempts by MLA's to get the Government to give them pensions have been repeatedly torpedoed by the people.

Way back in April 1984, a bill to give MLA's a pension of Rs 500 a month with Rs 60 for every additional term was introduced in the state Assembly. But former Janata chief minister Babubhai Patel, backed by the Gujarat Lok Samiti, formed by Jayaprakash Narayan, and some opposition leaders opposed it. Calling on citizens to agitate against this "immoral act", they took their protest to the streets and organised bandhs, paralysing life throughout the state. The Government beat a hasty retreat and the then governor K.M. Chandy, did not sign the bill.

But his successor, B.K. Nehru, put the cat among the pigeons when he signed the controversial bill into an Act on the eve of laying down his office. The reaction was expectedly strong. Last fortnight, former MLA and Sarvodaya worker Mahendra Desai, 72, protest-fasted in Ahmedabad demanding that the act be scrapped. Significantly enough, Desai had undertaken a 21-day fast two years ago over the same issue. The Lok Samiti also threw its weight behind him and called for a people's movement against the bill. Opposition stalwarts like former MP Purshottam Mavlankar and BJP member Ashok Bhatt, also rallied to Desai's side.

Chief Minister Amarsinh Chaudhary was embarrassed. But he could hardly disavow it when his own party MLA's were threatening to go on a counter-fast against Desai. Three Congress (I) legislators—Ramlal Ruplal, Vajubhai Jani and Khodidas Thakkar—charged Desai with "character assassination" of the people's representatives and maintained that since the bill was passed before the assembly elections and the people had voted solidly in favour of the Congress, the bill in fact, had popular assent. The argument was hardly calculated to impress and Chaudhary feebly sought to save face by claiming that he had not even seen the file on the subject and therefore, could not say if the governor had assented to it. The cat was out of the bag, however, when he buckled under to opposition questioning and admitted that the bill had been signed. But he flatly refuted opposition charges that the Government had pressurised Nehru into signing the bill a few hours before his retirement.

Governor B.K. Nehru put the cat among the pigeons when he signed the MLA's pension bill into an act on the eve of laying down office



Desai's protest fast in Ahmedabad

Seeking a way out of the situation, the chief minister tried to persuade Desai to give up his fast arguing that the bill was meant to help those MLA's who usually had to fend for themselves after the end of their terms. But with opposition from every quarter, barring Congressmen, and the Lok Samiti's call for a state-wide agitation hotting up, Chaudhary announced that the bill would not be implemented "till a practical solution was found in consultation with the concerned parties".

Having won the first round, Desai called off his fast but the Lok Samiti president and noted Gandhian, Chinubhai Vaidya, challenged the Government to hold a referendum on the issue. He pointed out that the "concerned party" were the people and nothing should be done without their consent.

That the entire move to grant pensions is ridiculous was amply brought out by the agitation. Babubhai Patel, who stands to gain at least Rs 1.75 lakh in arrears if the bill gets through, has given in writing that he would never accept a pension. He also reminded MLA's that they got over Rs 16,000 a year as allowance even though most of them rarely attended the proceedings of the Assembly. A government employee, on the other hand, had to slog for close on 30 years to get a pension, he said and added: "The Government should not give effect to the act keeping in view the strong sentiments of the people. The argument that some states give pensions is no argument. Gujarat has to show the way by taking a moral stand." Echoed Independent MLA Jaspal Singh: "If these MLA's were hankering after pensions, they should have joined government service rather than politics. It is also unfortunate that ruling party MLA's are demanding an extra pound of flesh when the country is passing through a severe economic crisis."

The fate of the bill is thus a matter of speculation. For those who have been legislators since 1962, the arrears would work out to over Rs 1.75 lakh—and the state will have to cough up a few crores of rupees keeping in view the number of MLA's in the state. A decidedly tall order when the financial dislocation caused by the prolonged reservation agitation has yet to be sorted out. But the fact that 78 MLA's have announced that they would not accept any pension is a creditable move. The distasteful part is that of the MLA's who have refused what amounts to a small fortune, only one—Madhavlal Shah—is a Congress(I) member.

—RAMESH MENON

CLARION C-NIC-9

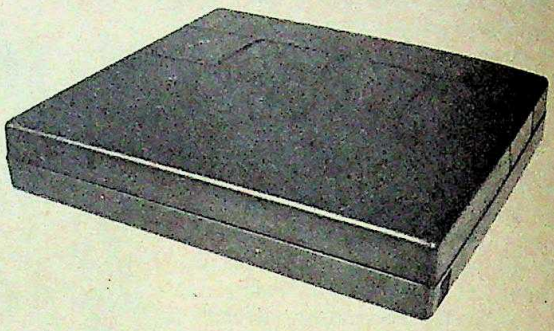
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PLUG IN. AND YOU'RE PART OF

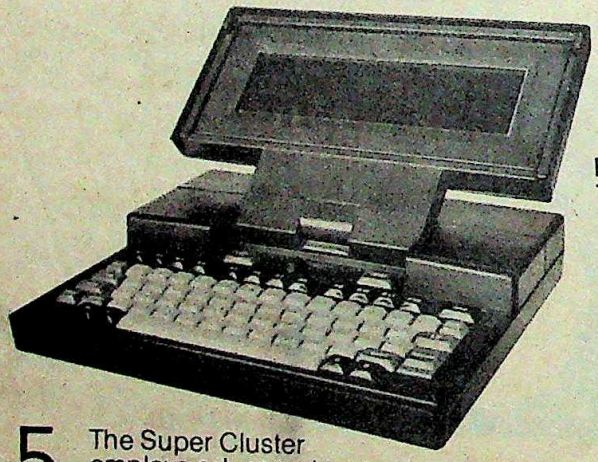
1 14th Friday. The Supermanager has been at work from six in the morning. Processing vast volumes of information. Planning, projecting, forecasting — generating accurate, viable options.
9.30 am. The Supermanager arrives in his office. Ready to plug into the Super Cluster. With the incredible machine that made his morning possible. The Prodigy.

2 The Prodigy. Under 4 kg in weight. A memory of 256Kb expandable to 1 Mb. And a speed that most 16-bit PCs in the market will envy. With a user-friendly price tag



• 80186 full 16-bit processor • 256K battery backed RAM/upto 384K of ROM • 80 character 16/25 line display • Runs standard DOS • Serial-Parallel ports • Bus expansion socket • ROM-based bundled resident software • Built-in Cluster communications • Application packages

IBM & PC-AT are trademarks of IBM Corporation,USA.



5 The Super Cluster employs advanced technology to step up information flow. And with it you have instant access to information on anything from production planning to process control, manufacturing to marketing and accounting to administration. The communication capability of the Prodigy makes possible interactions over communication lines or even through a PABX.

6 The Prodigy. With its industry standard operating system and IBM-compatible disc drives, you have access to a vast range of software packages. Whatever your profession, whatever the application.

UNPLUG. AND TAKE THE POWER

OF A SUPER CLUSTER.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

3 The Prodigy. It's an advanced decision support system and more — completely power independent.
Built-in bundled software provides one-button access to word processing, spreadsheets, data base management and schedule planning. Insert another software module — and you have a computer tailor-made for your specific need.

4 The most exciting thing about the Prodigy is the fact that it can link up to a host computer, and be a part of a Super Cluster. Which means every user can access, transfer, manipulate and process information right at his desk. Share resources like printers and disc drives. All at the stroke of a key.

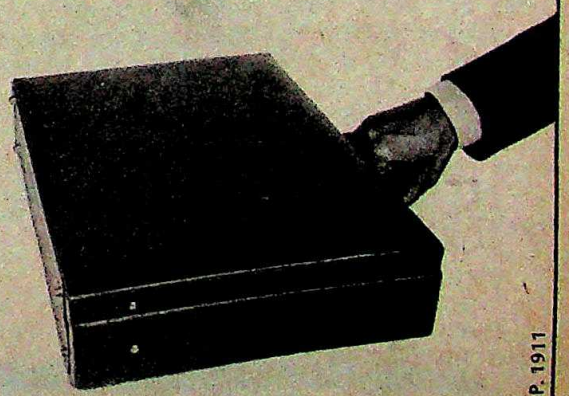
Write in for more details on the design, working and advantages of the Prodigy in a Super Cluster, around a PC-AT or your existing host computer.

Computers. Communications. Control Systems

Best Crompton

312, Anna Salai Madras 600 018

Regional Offices at Bombay, Delhi, Calcutta.



7 4.30 pm. The updated data has been transferred back to the host computer. The Prodigy holds in its memory just the information necessary for the next morning's meeting. Humming his favourite tune, the Supermanager unplugs the Prodigy. Slips it into his briefcase and sets off to catch his flight.

WITH YOU.

PRODIGY

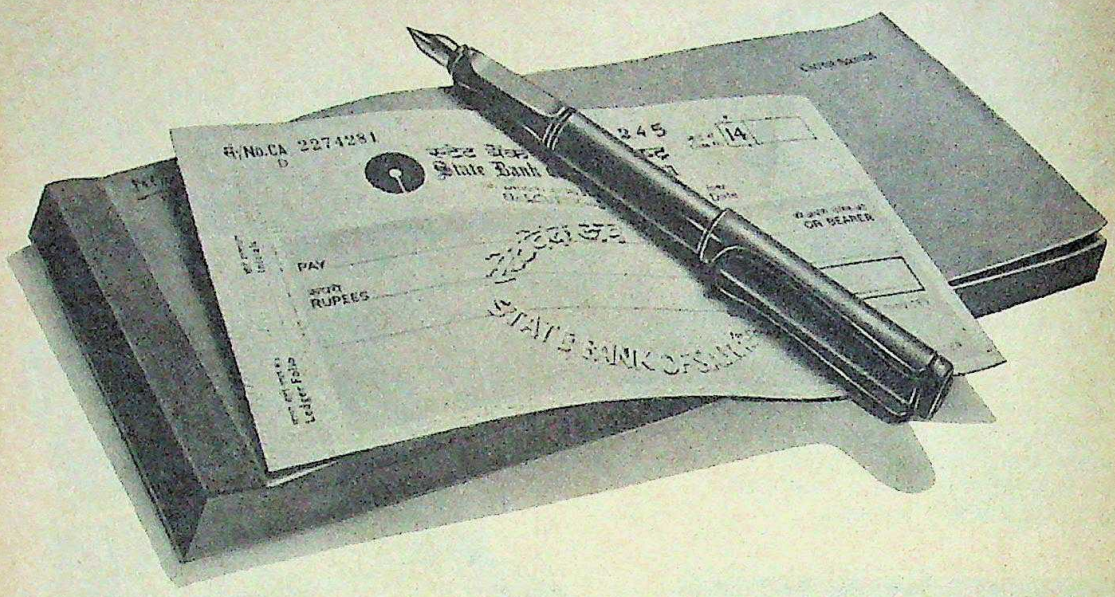
Take the power with you

BCP. 1911

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When big business comes to Bihar



This is our welcome note

If you have set your sights on Bihar and are expanding, setting up or modernising, and need finance for capital equipment, step into BICICO.

BICICO'S EQUIPMENT FINANCE SCHEME

This scheme covers 80% of the cost of capital goods and equipment to be acquired subject to a ceiling of Rs. 1 crore per project.

Rate of interest—14% per annum. Commitment charges on the unutilised sanction—nil.

OTHER SCHEMES

BICICO offers a range of other highly attractive financial assistance schemes:

1. Term Loan
2. Seed Capital Assistance Scheme
3. Underwriting/Direct Participation in Shares
4. Bridging Loan
5. Modernisation/Rehabilitation Scheme
6. Interest-free Loan
7. Subsidy on Captive Power Units
8. Power Tariff Subsidy
9. Capital Investment Subsidy.

MONEY ON TIME

We know how fast you need the money and try us for speed. Write to us TODAY.

BIHAR STATE CREDIT AND INVESTMENT CORPN LTD
Patna 800 001 Bihar
Phones 24131-5 Gram 'BICICO'

BICICO

There's money in Bihar

CONTAD/BI/1/86.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NTR launching the Grameen Kranti Patham: abandoning his electorate

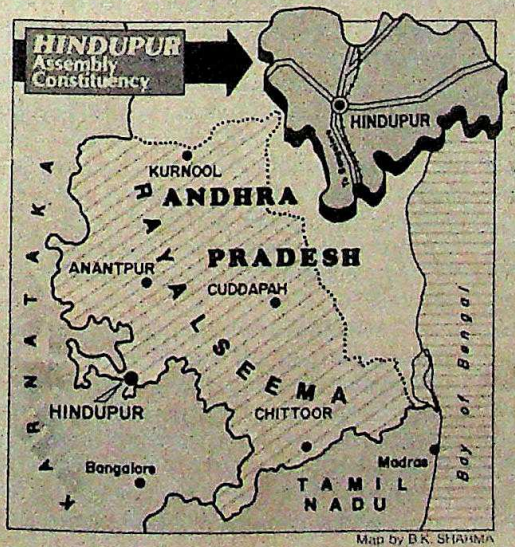
ANDHRA PRADESH

Backyard Neglect

"PRIOR to Vikari year (1779), there was only a petty fort and no town here, but the Sultan (Haider Ali) induced people to settle there by giving concessions and remissions of taxation. Thereafter, the traders came and established shops and markets."

So reads a manuscript from the Mackenzie collections about Hindupur in the old Madras Presidency. But for the present-day inhabitants of Hindupur—who voted in N.T.Rama Rao as chief minister of Andhra Pradesh a year ago—the fond hope that their latter day "sultan" would continue the 18th century tradition of patronage and concessions has crumbled rapidly. Contrary to his election promise of transforming Rayalaseema (land of stones)—comprising Hindupur and four other parched southern districts of the state—into a "Ratnalaseema (land of diamonds)", the electorate are discovering that belonging to the chief minister's constituency might not have been such a good idea after all.

Rama Rao, in fact, was elected from three different constituencies in the March 1985 elections—Gudivada on the coast, Nalgonda in Telengana and Hindupur—but he chose to retain the Hindupur seat where he had won by the largest margin. Within six weeks of his election, a micro-plan for the development of Hindupur block 1985-90 (area 1643.60 sq km, population 2.62 lakh) was drafted on the lines of the late prime minister Indira Gandhi's plans for Medak. But by the end of the first year, the micro-plan remained just what, ironically, its drafters had claimed it to be: "a modest plan dreamt of within a short time".



Map by B.K. SHARMA

Over the last year, the chief minister has condescended to visit his constituency only thrice and that too for largely ceremonial reasons—to cut ribbons, open a blood bank, inaugurate a bus station and unveil foundation plaques for the labour room of a maternity ward or a state-run residential school. The only time he stayed overnight was in January this year, when he started off contributory road-laying and repair work and construction of bus shelters at 10 places. Such activity, while having its own uses, has not touched the core of Hindupur's problem—chronic drought.

Hindupur is a part of the larger Anantpur district, and all 63 revenue mandals in Anantpur are facing drought for the third successive year. Drought-relief and provision of irrigation facilities has remained restricted to short-term sops ladled out to make the burden of living momentarily easier. Rationalised District Collector Asoke Kumar Tigidi: "Our task is to manage with scarcity and not plenty. Rainfall is scanty, sporadic and scattered and only 9 per cent of the cultivated area is irrigated. The rest of the area depends on the vagaries of nature."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It isn't as if Rama Rao has done nothing. Less than a fortnight after his second visit to Hindupur on October 16 last year, the Government put off collection of arrears on land revenue, loans, cesses and special land tax. Commercial and cooperative banks and other financial institutions were asked to liberalise credit rules and give fresh loans and reschedule the dues on existing ones. Bankers admit that the chances of banks getting back even a fraction of the 7,868 loans amounting to Rs 3.07 crore, given to Hindupur block residents in 1985, appear pretty bleak.

But the tragedy is that most of these loans were given for welfare schemes, not for development projects. Said a senior official in the biggest bank in the area: "There is no doubt we have increased the amount under the loaning programme by a crore as it covers the chief minister's constituency, but it is a futile exercise in sinking money. Water is the most needed resource for any development programme to click and only desultory attempts have been made to tackle this problem. Engineers of the Andhra Pradesh Irrigation Development Corporation tried half-heartedly to dig some 35 tube-wells but gave up after digging around 100 feet." Consequently, the banks are going slow in advancing 9,096 loans totalling Rs 4.13 crore under various development schemes planned for this year.

The easiest and perhaps the most practical solution to the problem would have been a request to Karnataka to supply a few million cubic feet of water to irrigate parts of Rayalaseema. But the ongoing dispute with that state over the sharing of the Krishna Waters has precluded the chief minister from making any such request. Even more, his seeming indifference has irritated local leaders. Said Redappa Reddy, Anantpur Zilla Parishad chairman and Congress(I) activist: "The chief minister is a distinguished member of the parishad by virtue of being an MLA. But he has not found time to come to even one meeting of the parishad." The Hindupur Panchayat Samithi President and Congressman B. Narayana Reddy, sarcastically commented: "It is easier to have darshan of Venkatswaraswami at Tirumala than Rama Rao in Hindupur or Hyderabad. People here do not have enough money to buy food and he wants them to contribute for road laying and repair works!"

Even some Telugu Desam activists are getting increasingly disillusioned by the chief minister's lack of initiative in pushing through more concrete programmes. Said Venkata Rama Reddy, president of the Hindupur Taluk Ryot Seva Sangham: "The only important change after Rama Rao was elected from here is that officials no longer say: let us see. They now say: we will get it done. But it does not always happen. Loans under various welfare programmes and housing schemes are sanctioned to create an overall impression that things are being done, but the real problems are still ignored."

Cattle-runners at work: cashing in

G. SAMPATH KUMAR

About the only 'dynamism' shown in the area is by cattle-runners who are cashing in on the distress sale of cattle by drought-hit farmers.

The chief minister's attitude has percolated down to the lowest levels of government. No official has bothered to visit villages like Obulapuram near Lepakshi (famous for its Nandi bull) and the menfolk of the Boyas, a backward community, are forced to trek across the state's borders to work in the silk units in and around Doddalballapur in Karnataka as casual labour for a pittance of Rs 13 a day. "We go to work there for 25 days a month to earn enough to buy rice. This village is ignored," lamented Venkatappa, an aged Boya.

Compounding matters is Rama Rao's attempt to put the cart before the horse. He recently launched with great publicity the Telugu Grameen Kranti Patham—a programme involving voluntary contribution by villagers to meet half the cost of laying new village roads and repairing existing ones. But as even Telugu Desam activists point out—when the poor have been forced to pawn off their household belongings for cash and still do not have enough money to eat, how can they possibly be expected to contribute to this fancy rural development programme?

Development strategists and former collectors of this district have called for large-scale cultivation of mulberry and industrialisation as a way out of this mess. In fact, the sericulture development programme has been a signal success in Cholasamundaram where some 20 Harijan families are assured of at least Rs 1,750 a month. A similar project, named after the chief minister himself, has been taken up in Malgur but the programme cannot escalate unless water is available.

Similarly, plans for industrialisation have also not made any headway since the unveiling of a foundation plaque on October 16 last for a 300-acre industrial estate at Thoomakunt near the Karnataka border. About the only 'dynamism' shown in the area is by cattle-runners who are cashing in on the distress sale of cattle by drought-hit farmers. Admitted Mohammed Ismail, a cattle runner: "Sales have increased but prices have crashed and this is why we herd 30 and more animals in a lorry."

Yet, hope still exists in Hindupur that Rama Rao will, like he has done in countless of his films, come to their rescue. But with Hindupur's basic problem of water still not been given a serious thought, and the seeming satisfaction of Rama Rao's constituentswith getting a kilo of rice for two rupees, it does seem that even having a chief minister as an MLA is unlikely to make much difference to Hindupur's pace of progress.

—AMARNATH K. MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Make room for Special Effects.

Special Effects. The Premium Acrylic Emulsion Paint.
Transforms the walls of your home dramatically.
Making them stand out. So you discover an extra dimension to your room.

You'll just love coming home to the excitement of Special Effects, day after day. Its soft splendour will touch your eyes. And you'll see the glimmer of its rich sheen in someone's eyes.
Your walls never had luxury in such a range of new shades.
Shades that will make even the rainbow blush. And the magic of Special Effects is so easy to keep.

Special Effects
The ultimate luxury for your walls.

Jenson & Nicholson

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

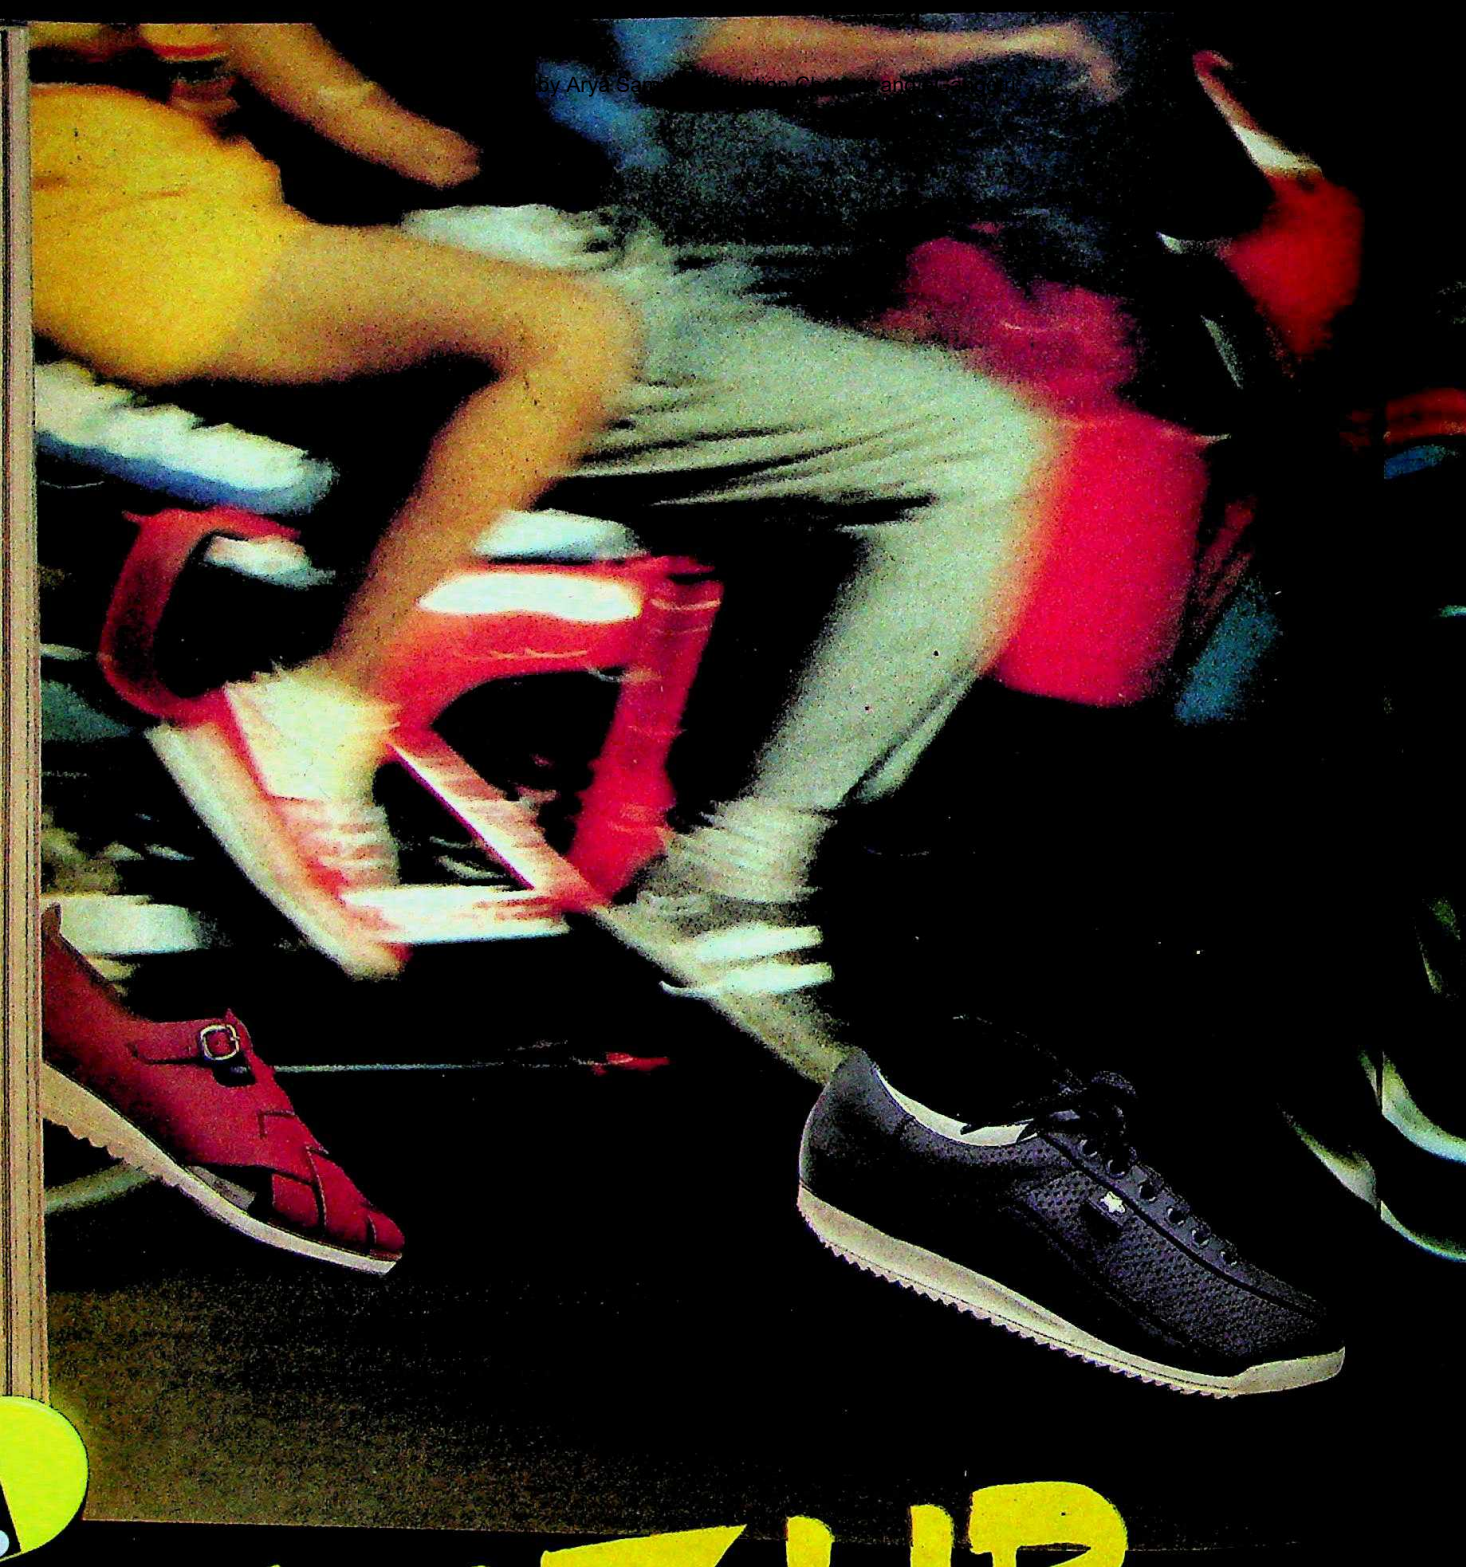
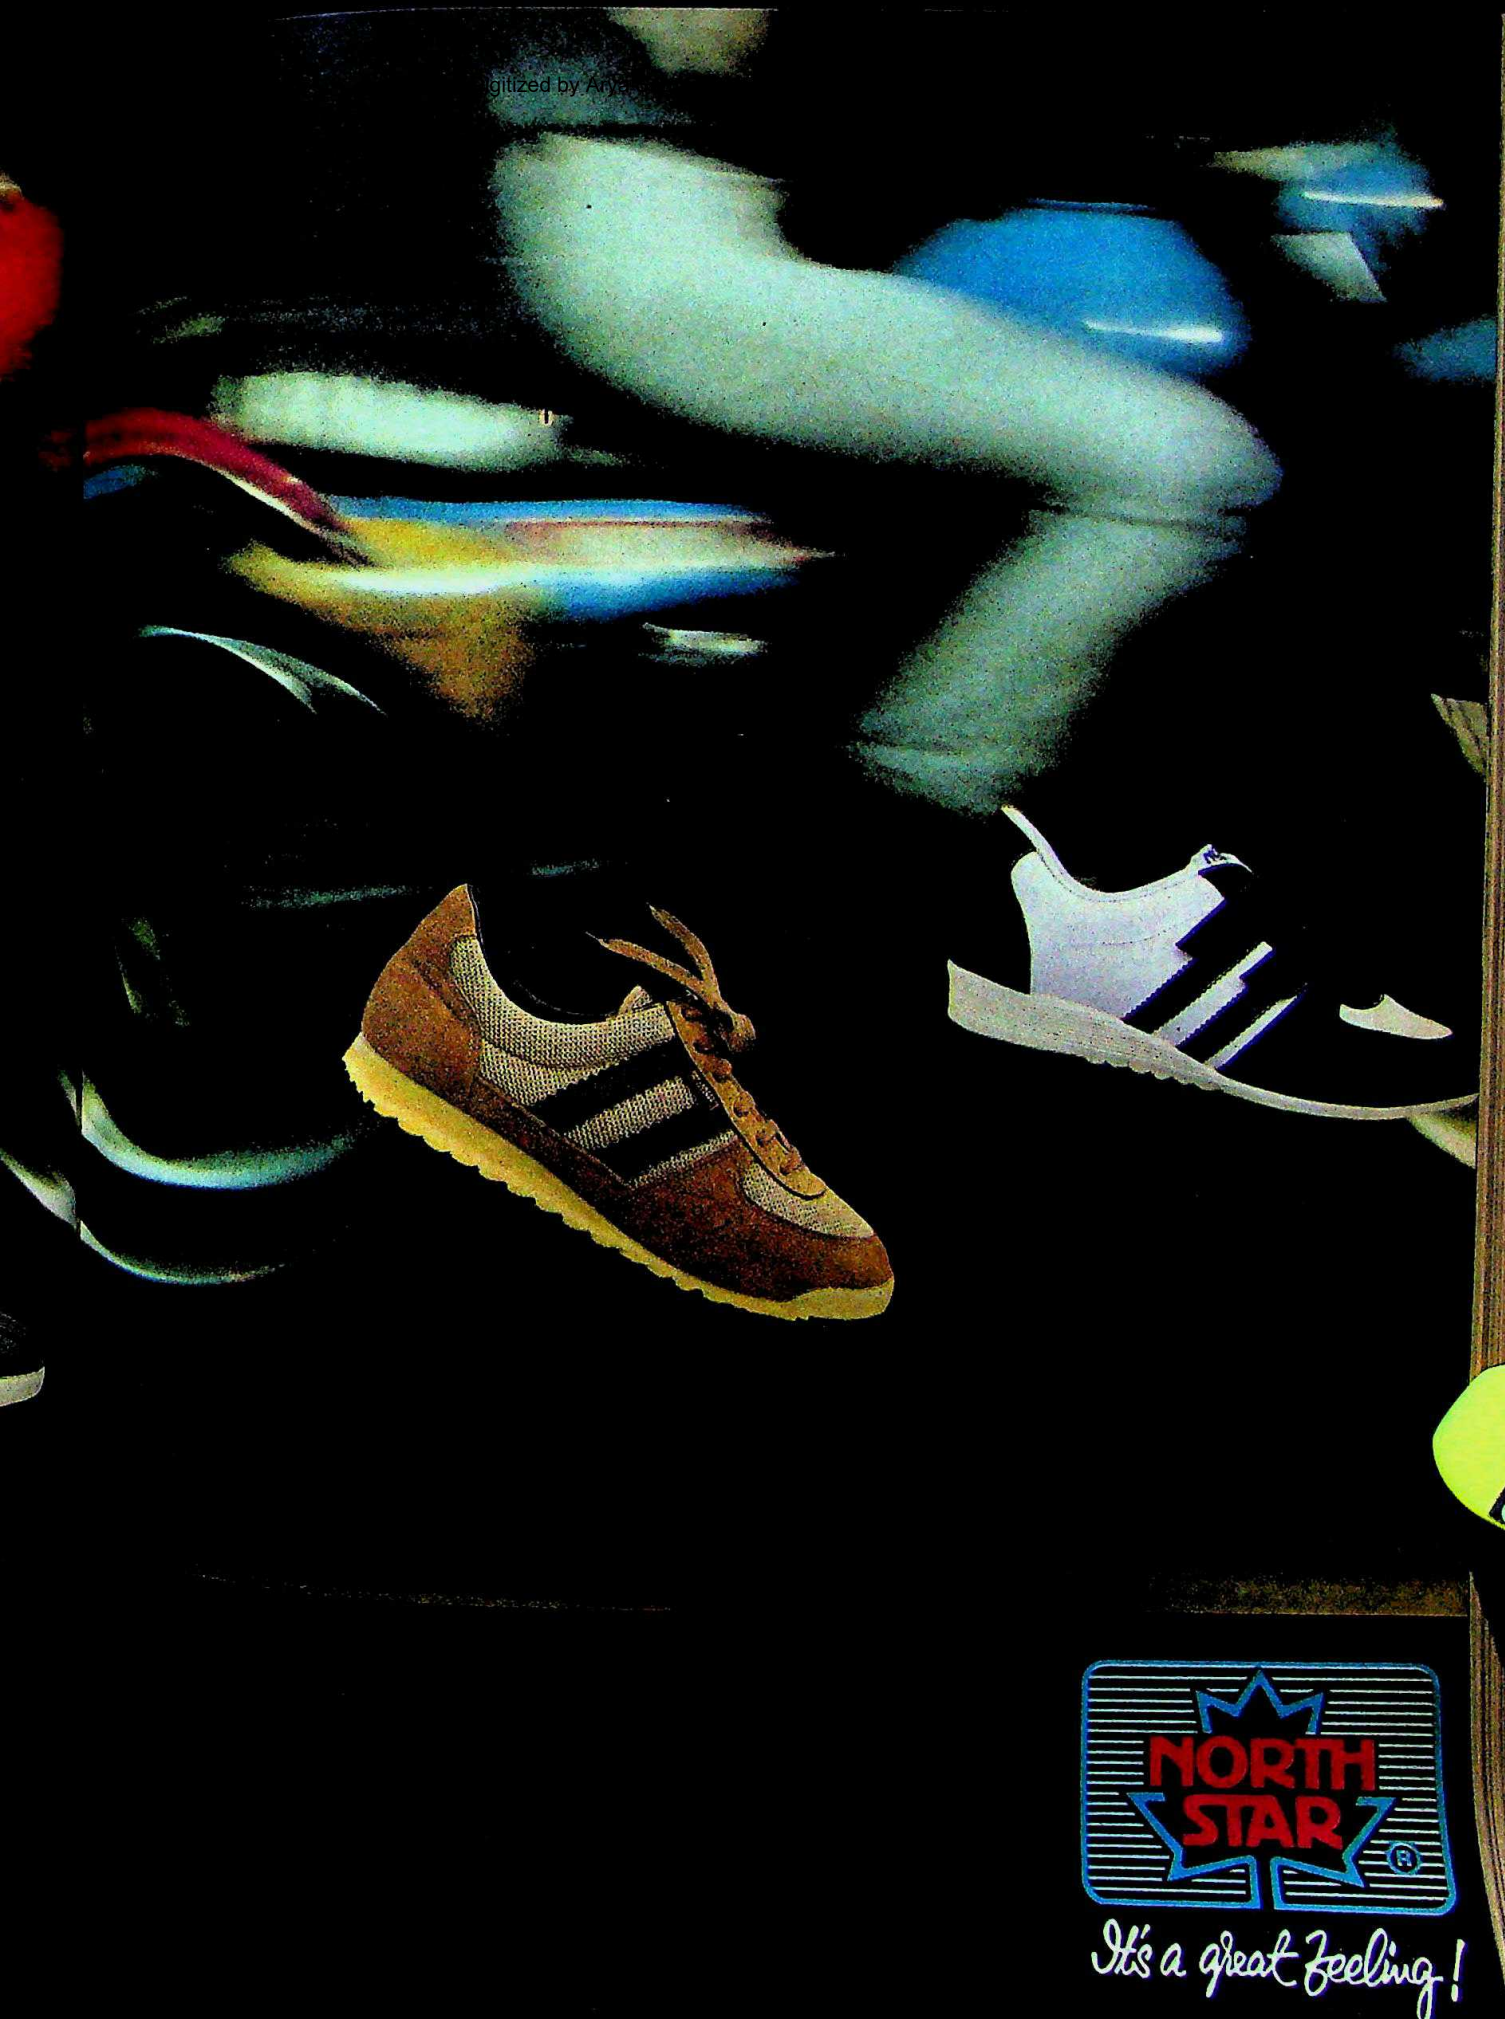
by Arya Sam



FOOT LIB

Available at select Bata & BSC stores

gitized by Arya



Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AT LAST, YOU HAVE IBM PC COMPATIBLE SOFTWARE THAT'S TUNED TO INDIAN NEEDS.

When it comes to PCs, you truly have a wide spectrum to choose from. But when it comes to PC software, your options are limited.

The fact is, up to now you had to depend on software developed abroad. Naturally, it wasn't custom-tailored to suit Indian conditions. And it wasn't easy to modify to your needs.

Today, all that has changed. With SoftPro.

SOFTPRO IS WORLD-CLASS

SoftPro is premium quality. It's available right off the shelf. It runs on all IBM PC compatible machines now being sold in the country.† And best of all, it has been specially designed for the Indian market. By WIPRO.

That's just the beginning. SoftPro is hard to beat on a number of counts. Such as support. Training. Enhancements. High quality documentation. Integration. All of it, perfectly tuned to Indian needs.

SOFTPRO IS INTEGRATED

SoftPro offers you a wide range of software packages. There's a comprehensive Office Productivity Series. And a fully integrated Business Systems Series.

Take the Office Productivity Series. You'll find five separate packages that work together as a family. The integration of these packages is smooth and logical. You can have a powerful Data Base, a full featured Word Processor and a versatile Spreadsheet. And transfer data from one package to another at the touch of a key! So the Office Productivity Series offers you the power of fully functional independent packages on one hand. And all the advantages of integration on the other.

The Business Systems Series comprises eight packages designed to streamline your Financial Accounting.

What's special about this series is its ease of customisation. We're setting up a network of SoftPro VARs (Value Added Resellers) who can custom-tailor the complete package to suit your specific requirements. So you don't have to adapt to SoftPro.

It adapts to you.

Whether it's the Office Productivity Series or the Business Systems Series, you'll find it's priced very competitively. And all of it is of international quality. That's very important. Because, remember, your PC is only as good as your software is.

Demo Diskette

See SoftPro in action. Visit any of our dealers for a 'hands-on' demonstration. Or write in for our special Demo Diskettes* designed to operate on any IBM PC compatible.

* SoftPro invites you to send for its Demo Diskettes on both the Office Productivity Series and the Business Systems Series. For each diskette, send a cheque for Rs 100, in favour of WIPRO SYSTEMS LIMITED, to Wipro Systems Limited, 3rd Floor, HVS Building, 1 Edward Road, Bangalore 560 052.

† Such as the HCL Busybee, the DCM Tandy 1000, the Chi 2 from Chowgule, the SNPC from Hinditron and the Wipro PC.

SoftPro
PREMIUM QUALITY SOFTWARE FROM WIPRO

SoftPro is available at:
Computer City, New Delhi (Ph: 3317033) Computer Point, Bangalore (Ph: 569617), Bombay (Ph: 4930543), Madras (Ph: 441192) and New Delhi (Ph: 699421) Computer Shack, Bombay (Ph: 223404)

WSL-1859 C

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Vajpayee (left) and Advani: new look

BHARATIYA JANATA PARTY

Veering Right

DROWNED in the din of the more tumultuous developments on the national political scene, a subtle yet significant change in the BJP got only passing notice last fortnight. In a matter of fact fashion, the presidentship of the party passed from the hands of the charismatic, crowd-pulling personage of Atal Behari Vajpayee to his long-time alter ego, Lal Krishan Advani, who has a relatively low-profile image but is a high-tensile organisation man.

For the capital's large corps of political observers, however, there was more to the change than merely the contrast in the personalities of the two men who have more or less controlled the erratic destiny of the party over the past decade and who have, since the BJP lost the Delhi municipal election in 1983, seen its political fortunes dip quite dramatically.

In a disciplined, cadre-based party like the BJP, which over the years has more or less steered clear of the personality cult, it is hard to expect a new president to bring about a sea change in its policy, approach or electoral fortunes. Nevertheless, the change has serious political implications. For one, Advani is considered closer to the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh (RSS), in other words the strong, original core of the BJP which has been rueing the loss of the party's Hindu vote bank in the northern and central parts of the country. Secondly, Vajpayee is the biggest crowd-catcher, after Rajiv Gandhi, at least in the Hindi-speaking areas, and as Advani acknowledges, the BJP has been realising in the recent past that it needs him in the field rather than have him wasting his time solving the day-to-day hassles of the party in its small office Ashok Road in downtown New Delhi. More significantly, party spokesmen point out that in today's political ethos any suggestion of change is only going to do good to the image of the party. "Someone has been ruling this country with a mere illusion of change. The party had to do something like this to counter that deception more effectively, credibly and convincingly," said Jaswant Singh, Rajya Sabha member and one of the secretaries of the party.

Vajpayee had for long been insisting on handing over the baton, particularly after discordant voices began to rise in the party in the wake of the December 1984 general election debacle. "There were not too many of them, but some people had begun to complain. Moreover, there was no way I could persuade people lower down to make way for youngsters unless I set an example myself," said Vajpayee, in a qualified admission of the fact that a vocal section of the party had begun to blame him for its continuing woes. What is significant, however, is that these were predominantly the elements who are known to be closer to the pro-RSS lobby in the party.

Among the party's cadres it is being openly said that the change in the leadership firmly establishes the trend towards a slow shift back to the party's Hindu moorings that was first endorsed at the national council meeting of the party at Bhopal last July, where Deen Dayal Upadhyaya's doctrine of "integral humanism" was taken out of the party's cupboard and restored to its place as the party's guiding philosophy like in the Jan Sangh days.

Advani is considered closer to the RSS than Vajpayee, though both have been members of the organisation. He is also less unabashed than Vajpayee in talking of the party's relationship with the controversial organisation and is thus more acceptable to the RSS hardliners who believe that the BJP cannot afford to distance itself from the RSS. "Remember what happened to the party when we parted ways briefly in the 1984 elections," remarked a senior leader of the party. They believe that the installation of Advani, who is less of a "hypocrite" about his RSS loyalties, will rectify that anomaly.

Advani himself maintains that the RSS issue is a bit of a non-debate but Vajpayee, the most candid of all the BJP leaders, admitted: "The RSS and the party are coming closer again." Arguing that the distance between the party and its sword-arm had come about as a consequence of the "unusual happenings" of 1984, he added: "They (the RSS) were also affected by what happened and then our relationship was overtaken by events. There was a communication gap. But now we are all realising that the distance was unnecessary."

On a purely political plane, that goes well with the current thinking in the party, a result of the soul-searching over the past year, that the decline in the party's fortune began with this "confusion and loss of perspective which has made us lose even our Hindu vote banks." As a result, the changes that are taking place today are mainly geared to regain this lost territory.

In the months to come, and particularly at the forthcoming plenary session of the party in New Delhi next May, the BJP under Advani is expected to move even more decisively towards regaining its moorings. This will amount to reversing the shift towards a more liberal outlook, which Vajpayee stood for personally; but the party has no alternative. There is no other way to get back its Hindu vote.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THAKKAR COMMISSION

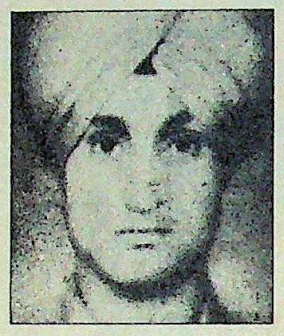
Passing the Buck

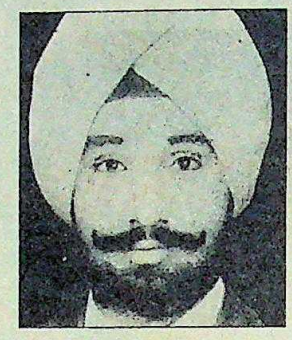
THIS IS the off-season at Vigyan Bhavan and the capital's massive convention centre generally wears a deserted look. Except for the adjoining office complex, the Vigyan Bhavan Annexe, where there is unusual activity. On the two top floors, sentries, clutching bayoneted rifles, tensely confront visitors. Access is through a metal detector arch.

The security, officials say, has to be extremely tight here, for the two floors house the headquarters of the two most sensitive commissions of inquiry in the country's recent history: the Justice M.P. Thakkar Commission and the Anand Ram Commission inquiring into the assassination of Mrs Indira Gandhi, to fix responsibility for the security lapses that led to it and to determine whether the murder was the result of the vengefulness of a few Sikhs in Mrs Gandhi's security set-up or had its genesis in a conspiracy.

Some answers to these questions were expected to surface last fortnight as Justice Thakkar submitted his final report to the Government within a few days of the extension of the term of his commission by a year. But as senior officials scrutinised the report, it became clear that the commission had refused to answer most of the key questions. Said a Home Ministry official: "The report is full of references to security failure, carelessness and even suggestion as to who could have been responsible for all this. Beyond that, there is nothing substantial. It does not fix responsibility and does not deal with the issue of conspiracy."

But even while hedging his bets on this, the most crucial question of all, Thakkar has made some remarkably candid observations on the issue of security lapses that led to the assassination. Thakkar, who examined over 200 witnesses besides studying hundreds of pages of official records and analysing the VVIP security manuals and instructions issued by the security officials from time to time, traces in detail the sequence of events on the morning of October 31, 1984. The commission has established that:





Satwant Singh (left) and Beant Singh: part of a deep-rooted conspiracy

► In violation of all security norms, personnel in the prime minister's security staff were frequently able to make mutual exchange of duty shifts.

► The whole security system round the prime minister was structured in such an amorphous manner that it was impossible to hold any one person accountable for her protection. This particularly applied to Ram Nath Kao, virtually her most influential security advisor, who had a lot of power with "no accountability at all".

► There were frequent and serious differences of opinion between the Intelligence Bureau and the Delhi police, the two agencies mainly looking after the prime minister's security, leading to lack of coordination.

In the reconstructions of the hazy sequence of events on the morning of October 31, the commission has unearthed a startling find. It seems that on that fateful morning, Mrs Gandhi's proposed interview with Peter Ustinov was delayed by half-an-hour for apparently inexplicable reasons. This crucial 30-minute period coincided with a hurried visit to the toilet by both Beant Singh and Satwant Singh. "That could have been out of a bout of nerves or to sort out some last-minute detail of coordination," said a commission official. But from this the judge has inferred that, but for the last-minute change in the prime minister's schedule, she could have safely walked past the gate for her interview with Ustinov, with her would-be assassins locked up in the toilet.

It is apparent that the commission is not prepared to blame this entirely on providence and it is this factor which compelled the commission to search hard for likely accomplices of the assassins within the inner sanctum of 1, Safdarjang Road with the burden of suspicion inevitably falling on R.K. Dhawan, the powerful personal aide who had accompanied Mrs Gandhi through a decade of fluctuating fortunes. Besides, the commission suspected him of being careless in not getting the right import of Mrs Gandhi's insistence on retaining the Sikh guards in her security staff. According to the commission's view, Dhawan failed to ensure that while these guards were posted to maintain the Government's secular image, they should not be allowed to get close to the prime minister "particularly when it was being openly said at two gurudwaras in Delhi that Mrs Gandhi will be killed by her own security guards". While the judge

HARI OM GULATI

The Thakkar Commission has raised more questions than it has answered. It has added a whole new dimension by suggesting that the assassins could have had backers within the prime minister's inner circle.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

squarely blames the Delhi police for not sensing this mood at the gurudwaras correctly, the main suspicion falls on Dhawan, now living in virtual retirement. This led to the lengthy exchange of notes and letters dutifully leaked out to reporters.

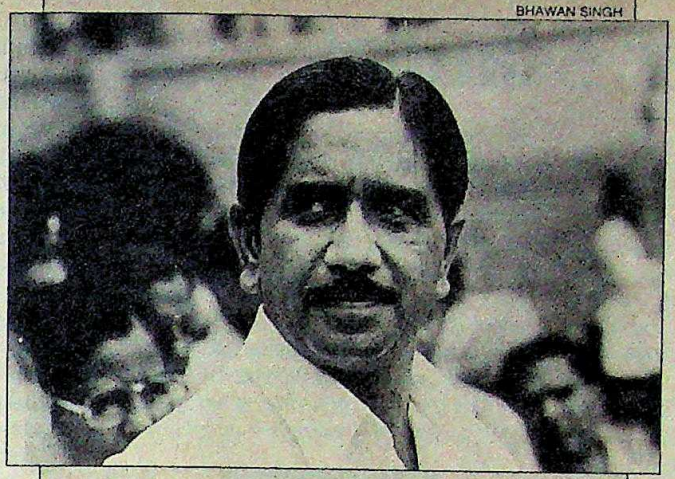
The commission's concentration on Dhawan was largely the result of rumours that he had been feeling insecure for a few months because of reports that Mrs Gandhi was planning to sack him. In fact in one of the notes the commission pointedly asked Dhawan if, at any time in the 1983-84 period, Mrs Gandhi had shown any lack of confidence or displeasure with him. Dhawan denied all this and then firmly refused to accept the commission's suggestion for taking the polygraph (lie-detector) test. To begin with, he raised technical questions about the nature of the test and later conveyed to the commission that it could result in his coming out with secrets he had become privy to during his days close to Mrs Gandhi and that "many of these may not be fitting to the memory of the late prime minister."

The commission, however, spent much time in examining Dhawan's conduct and closely questioned a number of officials, including Mrs Gandhi's then personal security officer D.K. Bhat, who had been sent on a punishment posting to the Andamans. And even though nothing substantial has been discovered to fault Dhawan, the commission has suggested that the Anand Ram Commission, which is still investigating the conspiracy charge, keep Dhawan's role in mind.

From one point of view, that is by far the biggest letdown. The report has not revealed any conspiracy though it has obliquely suggested that there was one. In fact the judge has recommended that the conspiracy issue be examined separately now by the Anand Ram Commission.

But that is a tricky proposition. Sources in the Union Home Ministry explain the reasons behind the commission's unseemly hurry in rushing through its report and shying away from the issue of the conspiracy in the perspective of the recent conviction of Satwant Singh, Balbir Singh and Kehar Singh for Mrs Gandhi's assassination. This is not the best situation for the prosecution to be in. Any suggestion of a further inquiry into the conspiracy theory will only weaken the prosecution's case when the appeal of the three convicts comes up for hearing before the Delhi High Court. Senior officials connected with the Thakkar Commission say that the defence in the case was likely to seek postponement of the trial till the completion of the commission's inquiry.

BHAWAN SINGH



Dhawan refused the lie-detector test by conveying to the commission that it could result in his coming out with secrets and that many of these may not be fitting to the memory of the late prime minister.

YET THE Anand Ram Commission, which is officially incharge of the prosecution case in the assassination trial continues to work on hundreds of other leads brought in by its investigators spread all over the region now. Among the officials there is still a strong feeling—some of it resulting from the evidence collected over the months—that there is a deep-rooted conspiracy waiting to be unearthed. But the Government cannot even talk about it because it will destroy the prosecution case.

To begin with, the commission officials have the initial statement of Bimal Khalsa, Beant Singh's widow, who had clearly mentioned that a number of people (Sikhs) used to frequently hold quiet confabulations with her husband. The commission has only been able to collect vague descriptions of these people, and has also interrogated Sikhs detained on charges of sedition or extremist activity. These include Simranjeet Singh Mann, the dismissed IPS officer now in the Hazaribagh jail. But no evidence has been found. Some of the descriptions, according to sources close to the inquiry, matched Attinder Pal Singh, a student from Bhopal who is now widely believed to be in Pakistan, and Gurinder Pal Singh, an extremist believed to have been killed in a recent encounter with the Punjab police.

Besides, the investigators are still looking for answers to some of the inconsistencies in the evidence brought up before the Thakkar Commission. For example, it is widely believed and has been stated before the commission that Beant Singh had refused to accept the 100-rupee gift Mrs Gandhi made to each of her security men, thereby expressing his resentment. But his widow's first statement says clearly that he had brought the money home though he kept cursing himself for having done so.

That the Government still firmly believes in the existence of a deeper conspiracy is obvious from the fact that even while the Thakkar Commission is more or less in the process of winding up, the Anand Ram team was, till January, seeking more investigating personnel from the state police forces all over the country. Said a Home Ministry official: "Initially they had the dual role of building the prosecution case in the trial and assisting the Thakkar Commission. But now while the inquiry into the conspiracy theory continues, the commission may also become a kind of permanent agency to keep a watch over the Sikh extremists."

As things stand thus, the Thakkar Commission has raised more questions than it has answered. Besides casting serious doubts on the basic system of VVIP security it has added a whole new dimension to the story by making the veiled suggestion that the assassins could have had backers within the prime minister's inner circle. The indications last week were that the Government was planning to hand the report over to the Anand Ram Commission whose turn it will now be to delve into the hazy and complex dimensions of the second most significant political murder in the history of the country.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HARYANA

School for Scandal

AS SCANDALS go it did not set the Ghaggar on fire. Haryana has seen bigger scandals which came to naught. But the nasty can of worms opened up by the Vice-Chancellor of the Maharishi Dayanand University (MDU), Professor Ram Gopal, who accused his predecessor, Hardwari Lal, of tampering with the answer sheets of the medical entrance examination, was showing signs of having serious political consequences.

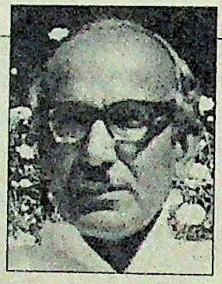
The charges and countercharges have exposed to public view the way universities in Haryana function and how senior appointments to academic positions are made. Hardwari Lal, 75, the main accused, is the Congress(I) MP from Rohtak and educational adviser to the Haryana Government.

On February 24, The Times of India carried a front page story saying that Hardwari Lal had been "implicated" in the falsification of examination results by an inquiry panel set up by the MDU vice-chancellor to look into charges of malpractice in the 1984 medical entrance tests. Events moved fast after that. Ram Gopal says he was summoned by the Governor S.M.H. Burney who is the chancellor. He alleges that Burney told him: "You have done a very wrong thing by damaging the image of a Congress(I) MP. Hush up this inquiry or I will suspend you." Ram Gopal immediately issued a statement saying he had been threatened with suspension. A few days later, he was asked to meet Chief Minister Bhajan Lal in Delhi, who told him : "The governor is very angry with you. He wants you to resign or accept a transfer to Kurukshetra otherwise he will suspend you."

Ram Gopal says he was given 24 hours to decide and when he refused the offer, Bhajan Lal said the governor had ordered him to transfer Ram Gopal's son—who is superintendent of police in Ambala—and daughter—who is the city magistrate of Rohtak. On March 6 he received his own suspension orders from Burney.

Said Ram Gopal: "I am challenging my suspension before the high court. It does not mention any charge nor has any charge-sheet followed. I was the only non-IAS vice-chancellor in Haryana universities. Now they have removed me. I have been getting threatening phone calls." In a letter to Burney on March 3, he had written that "the irregularities committed by Hardwari Lal in the conduct of the medical entrance examination held in July 1984 find no parallel in the academic history of the world".

Hardwari Lal had appointed himself paper setter, and then altered the marks given by the examiner, raising the marks of roll number 318's English paper from 10.5 to 28. The answer book carried Hardwari Lal's initials. (INDIA TODAY found that the same candidate's chemistry marks had also been increased and those of other candidates reduced, some drastically.) Further, he wrote that Hardwari Lal had "kept with him unused answer books collected from the examination centre... and attendance charts of the candidates who appeared in this examination...As a result of this, he manipulated the replacement of original answer books of some candidates by fake answer books attempted outside the examination centres."



"The irregularities committed by Hardwari Lal in the conduct of the medical entrance examination find no parallel in the academic history of the world."

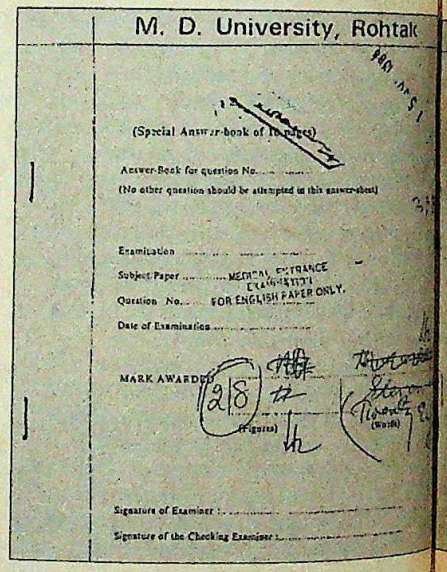
RAM GOPAL
vice-chancellor
MD University, Rohtak

The five-man inquiry committee which had examined the evidence went even further. In its interim report, the committee said that the answer books used by at least four candidates were not the original ones issued to them at the centre where they took the examination. "It indicates that (these) candidates did not write their answers in these answer books at their respective examination centres but at some other time and place outside the examination hall." Many answer books and the final "award list" did not carry the signature of any examiner, yet they had been accepted by the Controller of Examinations, R.C. Bhardwaj, who was suspended. These irregularities, the committee said were "only the tip of the iceberg". Ram Gopal informed the governor that Bhardwaj, who started out as a stenographer, rose to become controller of examinations in just six years.

These are extremely grave charges which Hardwari Lal emphatically denies. He had set the 1984 English paper "for the sole purpose of preserving the secrecy and integrity of the test". The medical entrance exam had to be cancelled in 1983 after the papers leaked out. New papers had to be set overnight. "After that I did not want to give the English paper to anyone else to set." Hardwari Lal asserted he was never concerned with the tabulation of the results. "If Dr Ram Gopal's panel saw any snags in the tabulation, they should have confronted the controller of examinations...the inferences drawn are a total distortion...." In any case, he alleged that the teachers on the inquiry committee were not free from animus and as vice-chancellor he had sought explanations from them.

All answer books, he argued, had to be

Telltale MDU answer book with Hardwari Lal's initials and altered marks



M. D. University, Rohtak

(Special Answer-book of Teacher)

Answer-Book for question No. .....

(No other question should be attempted in this answer-sheet)

Examination .....

Subject-Paper ..... MEDICAL ENTRANCE EXAMINATION

Question No. ..... FOR ENGLISH PAPER ONLY.

Date of Examination .....

MARK AWARDED (28) (Twenty-eight)

Signature of Examiner : .....

Signature of the Checking Examiner : .....

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

destroyed after nine months unless otherwise decided by the academic council. In this case, the council had not cleared retention of the answer books. "I treated destruction of the answer books as a routine matter. If I had done anything improper I would have got them destroyed myself."

About the changes in marks on some of the answer sheets, he replied: "I distributed the answer books. I may have gone through them again and my judgement may have been different." To the best of his recollection, he "got a number of examiners to set papers in other subjects and he selected one paper for each subject at random out of the lot". He denied knowledge of the unused answer sheets which Ram Gopal says were found in the cupboard at the vice-chancellor's residence. "I dont know at all. It should have been the responsibility of the examination branch. This is not my job."

Last fortnight, Hardwari Lal filed a defamation suit against his accuser and tabled copies of his correspondence with Burney in which he says that Ram Gopal was appointed vice-chancellor simply because he belonged to Bhajan Lal's Bishnoi caste. "Ram Gopal (was) appointed to my sure knowledge, at the instance of Mani Ram Godara Bishnoi, earlier an enemy and now a friend of the chief minister." To ingratiate himself with the-then Haryana PCC(I) chief Sultan Singh, Ram Gopal had appointed Sultan Singh's daughter-in-law—a 2nd class M.A.—as a lecturer in the Hindi Department without advertising the post. Better qualified teachers, some holding doctoral degrees, were available if the job had been advertised, Hardwari Lal claims.

Ram Gopal on his part responded with equally serious charges. After he was suspended, he issued a press statement saying that the governor was "hand in glove with Hardwari Lal and has gone out of his way to shield him in every possible manner". He said Burney had earlier shown "special undue favour to Hardwari Lal" and ordered him to be paid gratuity though his terms of service did not entitle him to gratuity.

Apart from drawing Burney, Bhajan

"If Dr Ram Gopal's panel saw any snags in the tabulation, they should have confronted the controller...the inferences drawn are a total distortion."

HARDWARI LAL
former vice-chancellor, now educational adviser to Haryana

Lal and party functionaries into the vortex of the controversy, the MDU squabble has split the university faculty down the middle into pro-Ram Gopal and pro-Hardwari Lal camps. "We see the hand of Hardwari Lal in these developments. There was a general feeling that the 1984 exam was unfair but everyone was afraid to talk," said MDU's Professor of Chemistry O.P. Agarwal. "The way the 1984 exam was conducted has brought a bad name to the university," confided the former registrar, B.K.Raizada , a member of the inquiry committee.

But another senior faculty member criticised Ram Gopal's actions saying he "had no business conducting an inquisition against his predecessor. Whatever shape the university has today is due to Hardwari Lal," he said. Dr Sarup Singh, former vice-chancellor of Delhi University, described what had happened as "shameful. It has devalued the institution of vice-chancellorship."

Hardwari Lal's dislike for Ram Gopal is pathological and vice versa. The history of their ill feeling is fairly old. Hardwari Lal said that as vice-chancellor, he had undone the seniority unfairly given to Ram Gopal's daughter, a history lecturer in the university. "Ram Gopal came to me a number of times abjectly begging for the position to be continued. I practically rebuked him. That started the trouble." Hardwari Lal said he had stoutly opposed Ram Gopal's appointment and written dozens of letters to the governor, copies of which he proudly reads. Here is a sample of one such letter: "Here is a man (Ram Gopal) who cannot be described in one word. I would not be satisfied if I called him stupid. I would not be satisfied if I called him stupid and mean. I would not be satisfied if I called him stupid, mean and stubborn. He defies description."

Hardwari Lal revealed that he along with the HPCC(I) chief, Virendra Singh, had met the governor on February 1 to plead that the university should be rid of Ram Gopal. He says the governor promised to send Ram Gopal a charge-sheet. It is quite possible that Ram Gopal got wind of this move and the inquiry into the examination, the breaking open of the cupboard and institution of the inquiry commitee could have been only to preempt action by the governor. In any case, the speed with which the inquiry committee completed its report in two days and it was published in a Delhi newspaper, even before the report was sent to the governor raised many eyebrows. What is more intriguing is that an official known to be close to Bhajan Lal went around offices in Delhi trying to hawk the story along with photostats of the tampered documents.

There is obviously more to this story than meets the eye, and the sordid tale of academic corruption and brazen malpractice is rooted deep in the kind of political intrigue that today atrophies academic institutions. In case of Haryana, in particular, the syndrome is compounded by the existence of age-old caste rivalries. But coming as it did close on the heels of the shockingly similar scandal in Maharashtra, the Haryana affair underlines the fact which, in any case, should constantly nag the minds of those drafting the new educational policy for the country—that a large number of universities across the length and breadth of India have become schools for scandal.

—RAMINDAR SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KARNATAKA

Record of Assault

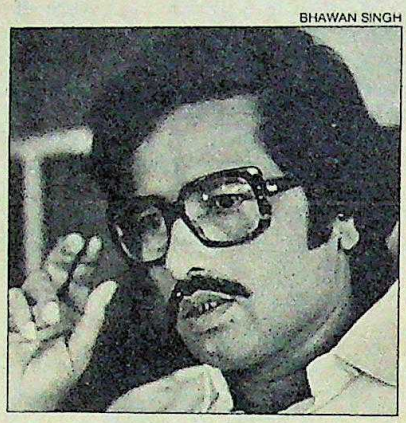
POLITICS in Karnataka has a way of getting entangled in tape, not the familiar red bureaucratic variety but of the recording kind. The latest to discover this was leader of the Congress(I) in the Assembly, S. Bangarappa. Even as another Congress(I) leader M. Veerappa Moily was preparing his affidavit for the judicial inquiry into the infamous "Moily tapes", Bangarappa was confronted with another tape allegedly proving his involvement in an assault on former PCC(I) chief, K.H. Ranganath, in November last year.

Predictably, Bangarappa protested vehemently, maintaining that the tape was concocted and his voice could have been mimicked. But his heated denial could not even silence his own party colleagues. Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde took an ambivalent attitude. While he gave the impression that the disclosure was made entirely at the initiative of the Janata MLA Ramesh Kumar, who produced the tape, he seized the opportunity to hit out at Bangarappa, accusing him of taking money from two excise contractors who failed to get contracts for arrack bottling.

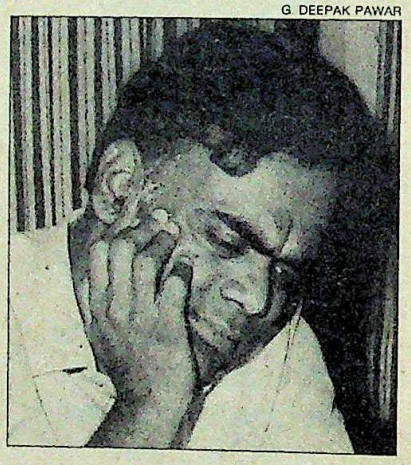
"I have sufficient proof," taunted Hegde. Bangarappa in turn accused Hegde of having taken Rs 12 crore from excise contractors for giving them the bottling contracts. Hegde, somewhat predictably, promptly declared that both the allegations would be referred to the Lok Ayukta and announced a judicial inquiry into the assault on Ranganath and the murder of V.G. Nanda Kumar.

Bangarappa was away in Delhi in connection with the council elections when Home Minister B. Rachaiah read out in the Assembly what he claimed was the taped "confessional statement" of Nanda Kumar, who had attacked Ranganath with two other rowdies. Shortly before he was killed by some gangsters, Nanda Kumar had told the police that it was Bangarappa who had instigated him to attack the then PCC(I) chief.

BHAWAN SINGH



G. DEEPAK PAWAR



MUSHTAQ AHMED

(Clockwise from top left) Bangarappa, Ramesh, Nanda and Ranganath: tape ties

The voice in the tape sounds very much like Bangarappa's with all his accent and intonations. In the tape the voice tells Shiva Murthy, a follower of Bangarappa and a former MLA, that Ranganath "should not be allowed to grow because he is a Harijan". Those who know Shiva Murthy have no doubt that the other voice on the tape is his. The telephonic conversation apparently took place soon after Ranganath was appointed president of the PCC(I).

In the course of the nine-minute conversation in Kannada, the voice makes many derogatory remarks and abuses Ranganath, calling him a "holeya(a derogatory reference to Scheduled Castes), a rascal and someone not born to human beings". It asks Shiva Murthy to mobilise people to disturb Ranganath's meetings. It also advises him: "You be in the background. Let the disturbances of his meetings come out in newspapers and he will be later replaced. He is a Harijan he should not be allowed to grow. Tomorrow it will be a question of leadership."

Nanda Kumar, against whom 26 petty criminal cases were pending, told the police in his confessional statement that Bangarappa often used him for disrupting meetings and creating trouble. He told the police that 15 days before the incident, he met Bangarappa at the party office and asked him to secure two seats in the S.J. Polytechnique for two friends of his. Nanda Kumar says it was explained to him that he would get the seats if he threatened the life of Ranganath and put the blame on Gundu Rao. "I do not know politics and I did what I was told to do," he told the police. Since Nanda Kumar was known to be a close associate of B.K. Hari Prasad, former slum board chairman and a close follower of Gundu Rao, the idea apparently was to create the impression that it was Gundu Rao who had organised the assault.

Nanda Kumar had gone to the Congress(I) office with two associates, drunk and armed with a sickle, and threatened to kill Ranganath who happened to be talking to some party men. When the partymen overpowered him and his accomplices, they ran outside and managed to escape in a waiting autorickshaw. Two days later, the three were caught by the police but not before Nanda Kumar had swallowed two bottles of an insecticide and plenty of sleeping pills. The police, however, managed to take him to the hospital in time and after pumping out the contents of his stomach, extracted a confession.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The disclosure of the tape and the confession has split the already-fractured state Congress(I) unit. A meeting of the legislature party called by Bangarappa to garner support degenerated into a slanging match between Bangarappa-baiters like B. Basavalingappa and K.H. Patil and supporters. The former wanted the party to be kept out of it since this was a "personal allegation of (a) very serious criminal nature." Patil told Bangarappa: "You make a statement in the house and try to extricate yourself from all this but we will all be silent." As a sideshow, Moily and T.N. Narsimha Murthy, long time political foes, almost came to blows in the meeting. Said a senior party leader: "I do not remember a more stormy meeting in recent years."

LATER, Bangarappa's critics sent off a memoranda to the high command backing the Janata's charge. Said one Congressman gleefully: "Bangarappa is finished now." Although Bangarappa denied reports about the infighting, he confessed to his confidants that he was peeved at the "betrayal" by his partymen.

Ramesh Kumar added to the mystery by refusing to disclose how he had got possession of the tape but insisted that Hegde had nothing to do with it though he had got the chief minister's "reluctant acceptance" before making the disclosure. Said Ramesh Kumar, who had defected from the Congress(I) to the Janata before the 1985 elections: "I got the tape some eight months ago from some people but decided to come out with it now because I wanted to disprove Bangarappa's claim that he had no association with any criminals." Yet, the timing of the disclosures—months after Nanda's confessional statement—did raise certain doubts. The disclosures, observers feel, may be part of a Janata strategy to outmanoeuvre Bangarappa, who had succeeded in somewhat denting Hegde's Mr Clean image with the bottling scandal.

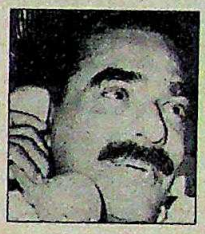
Wallowing in the publicity, Ramesh Kumar said ecstatically: "Bangarappa will now lose whatever credibility he has." However, a more impartial verdict will have to wait till the promised judicial inquiry into the affair comes out with its findings. Till then, Kannadigas cannot help but marvel at how political scandals in the state always seem to have some tapes attached to them.

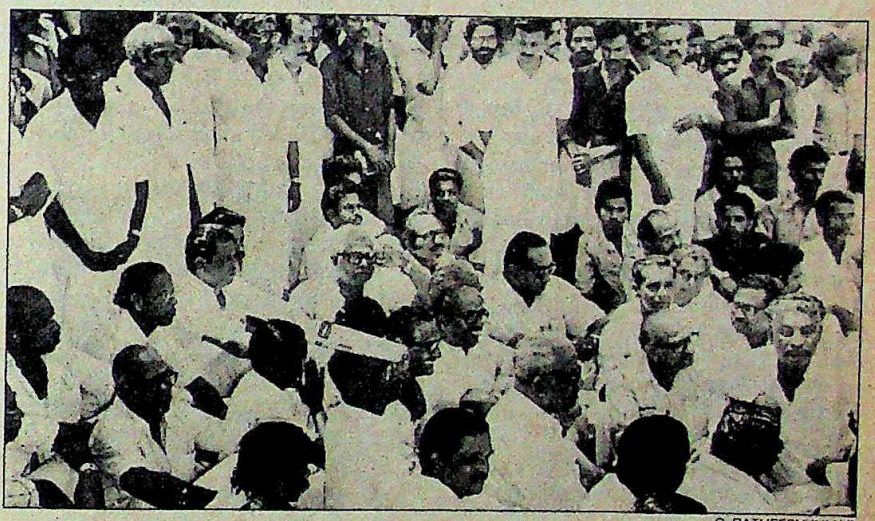
—SRINIVASA PRASAD

KERALA

Stalemate

KERALA'S canny Chief Minister, K. Karunakaran, has weathered many a political storm. But his five-month-old attempts to persuade the Centre to permit a cabinet reshuffle, which would strengthen his hands vis-a-vis his coalition partners, finally bit the dust. Faced with an unyielding high command intent on preserving the coalition, Karunakaran surrendered to the demands of the Kerala Congress (KC) and the Muslim League and summoned the budget session of the Assembly.





C. RATHEESHKUMAR

(Above) Mani and Karunakaran, and opposition leaders: political force

The surrender was humiliating—it was a widely-known fact that Karunakaran did not want his (KC) rival, Finance Minister K.M.Mani to present his record ninth budget and also wanted to drop Home Minister Vayalar Ravi from the Cabinet. He drafted his resignation but was dissuaded from pressing it by Congress(I) Vice-President Arjun Singh. The result was a continuing political stalemate which Ravi, his bitter critic, ascribed solely to Karunakaran's stubborness.

Said Palode Ravi, a trade union leader close to the home minister: "Karunakaran wanted to browbeat the Kerala Congress and his detractors with the threat of dissolution of the Assembly and the much tom-tommed mid-term poll. But it backfired on him. Ravi was able to persuade Arjun Singh to come to Kerala and make an on-the-spot study of the political situation." Added Mani: "We were able to convince the high command about the futility of a mid-term poll and the urgency of remaining together."

That argument, perhaps, clinched the issue for a high command faced with trouble in Maharashtra and Kashmir and wary of losing its only foothold in the south. With defeat writ large on his features, the chief minister, reading from a prepared text, said at a hurriedly-convened press conference: "Today's meeting entrusted the chief minister to fix a suitable date for the budget session. Immediately after the session, necessary steps would be taken for bettering the performance of the UDF."

Congress(I) sources claimed that Mani had agreed to give up his portfolio after presenting the ninth budget, as the first step towards bettering the UDF's performance. But the KC promptly denied it.

Later the CPI(M) led a massive rally to the state secretariat demanding dismissal of the ministry "which is practically dead and the corpse stinks". Argued former chief minister and opposition leader E.K.Nayanar: "This farce cannot continue. It is high time the people came out strongly against this rudderless and paralysed government which clings on for the sake of power." With the budget session due, there is little doubt that the last word on the current crisis is yet to be heard.

—SREEDHAR PILLAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BIHAR

On the Boil

EVEN as Chief Minister Bindeshwari Dubey completed a year in office on March 12, growing dissidence within the Congress(I) and the political dust kicked up by Janata Party President Chandra Shekhar's "kranti march" gave him little cause for celebration. Though Dubey himself claimed to be fully in command, his detractors, notably Jagannath Mishra, left no opportunity to embarrass him while the disquiet in the party mounted to panic proportions.

It was this panic that drove over a 100 Congress(I) legislators to the house of Kumbh Narain Sardar, MLA, to voice concern over the "inaction" of both the chief minister and PCC(I) chief Dumar Lal Baitha in the face of the "resounding success" of the Opposition-sponsored February 26 Bharat Bandh in Bihar and the growing enthusiasm for Chandra Shekhar's padyatra. Said a rebel: "If we depend on this leadership the party will be wiped out."

A delegation of the dissidents led by Jaikumar Palit rushed to Delhi to submit a memorandum to T.Anjaiah, AICC(I) general secretary in charge of Bihar. They claimed that Anjaiah told them he had informed the high command that if Dubey was to continue as chief minister, Mishra should either be removed from the party or given his due place. Encouraged, the three groups of dissidents decided to join hands against Dubey.

K.M. KISHAN

Chandra Shekhar on padyatra

In a fierce attack in the Assembly soon after this, Mishra criticised the state's "surplus budget". Said Mishra: "By showing a surplus, the state Government has forfeited its right for special Central assistance." The budget, showing a surplus of Rs 22.53 crore, only confirmed Mishra's allegation that funds had not been utilised.

But Dubey argued that the surplus was only an affirmation of the Government's success in mobilising additional resources, not of its inability to spend them. "A state which can mobilise additional resources should not necessarily go for a deficit budget," he argued.

Though Dubey's aides said the chief minister was unruffled by all the political buffeting, the chief minister decided it was time he shored up his flanks. Said Dubey at a CLP meeting: "You elected me the leader with the consent of the high command and if you have any grievance, you should tell the high command instead of rushing to the press. We are all party colleagues and I have to be with you whether I remain chief minister or not." The meeting had its desired effect as a majority of the legislators present expressed confidence in his leadership. Dubey called another CLP meeting on March 10 to chalk out the party's strategy to counter the march. It was here that the rebels asked him to step down, saying he no longer enjoyed their confidence, and walked out chanting anti-Dubey slogans. They later held a meeting at the house of MLA S.P. Roy, where it was decided to request party Vice-President Arjun Singh to send an observer.

There is little doubt that a major political confrontation is building up. The Save Democracy Front led by leader of the Opposition Karpoori Thakur and comprising all the major opposition parties save the BJP, has already called for dissolution of the Assembly on the grounds that last March's poll had been rigged. They also announced launching of an agitation to press their nine-point charter of demands from March 19.

Chandra Shekhar's kranti march, slated to climax with a huge meeting in Patna on March 18 to coincide with the day 11 years ago when JP gave his call for a "total revolution", has added to the state's political tempo. The paradox is that many of JP's associates who were in the forefront of his movement—including Narendra Kumar Singh, Dr Ramjatan Singh and Dr Jagdish Sharma—are now Congress(I) MLA's while those who had vehemently criticised the movement—like Shankar Dayal Singh and Raghunath Jha—are now in the forefront of the kranti march. Quipped Saru Roy, head of the JP Vichar Manch: "The padyatra is in fact a pad-yatra (walk for post)." Bihar's confusion is only getting more confounded.

—FARZAND AHMED

Dissidents' meet in Patna: open revolt

RAJEEV

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

An enormous amount of time, patience and talent go into the preparation of the traditional dishes of Thailand.

Magnificent curries, for example, spiced to perfection.

Succulent seafood dishes seasoned with subtle herbs.

And delicious noodles cooked a hundred different ways.

On Thai International, dishes from all over the world are prepared and served with the same characteristic skill and attention to detail.

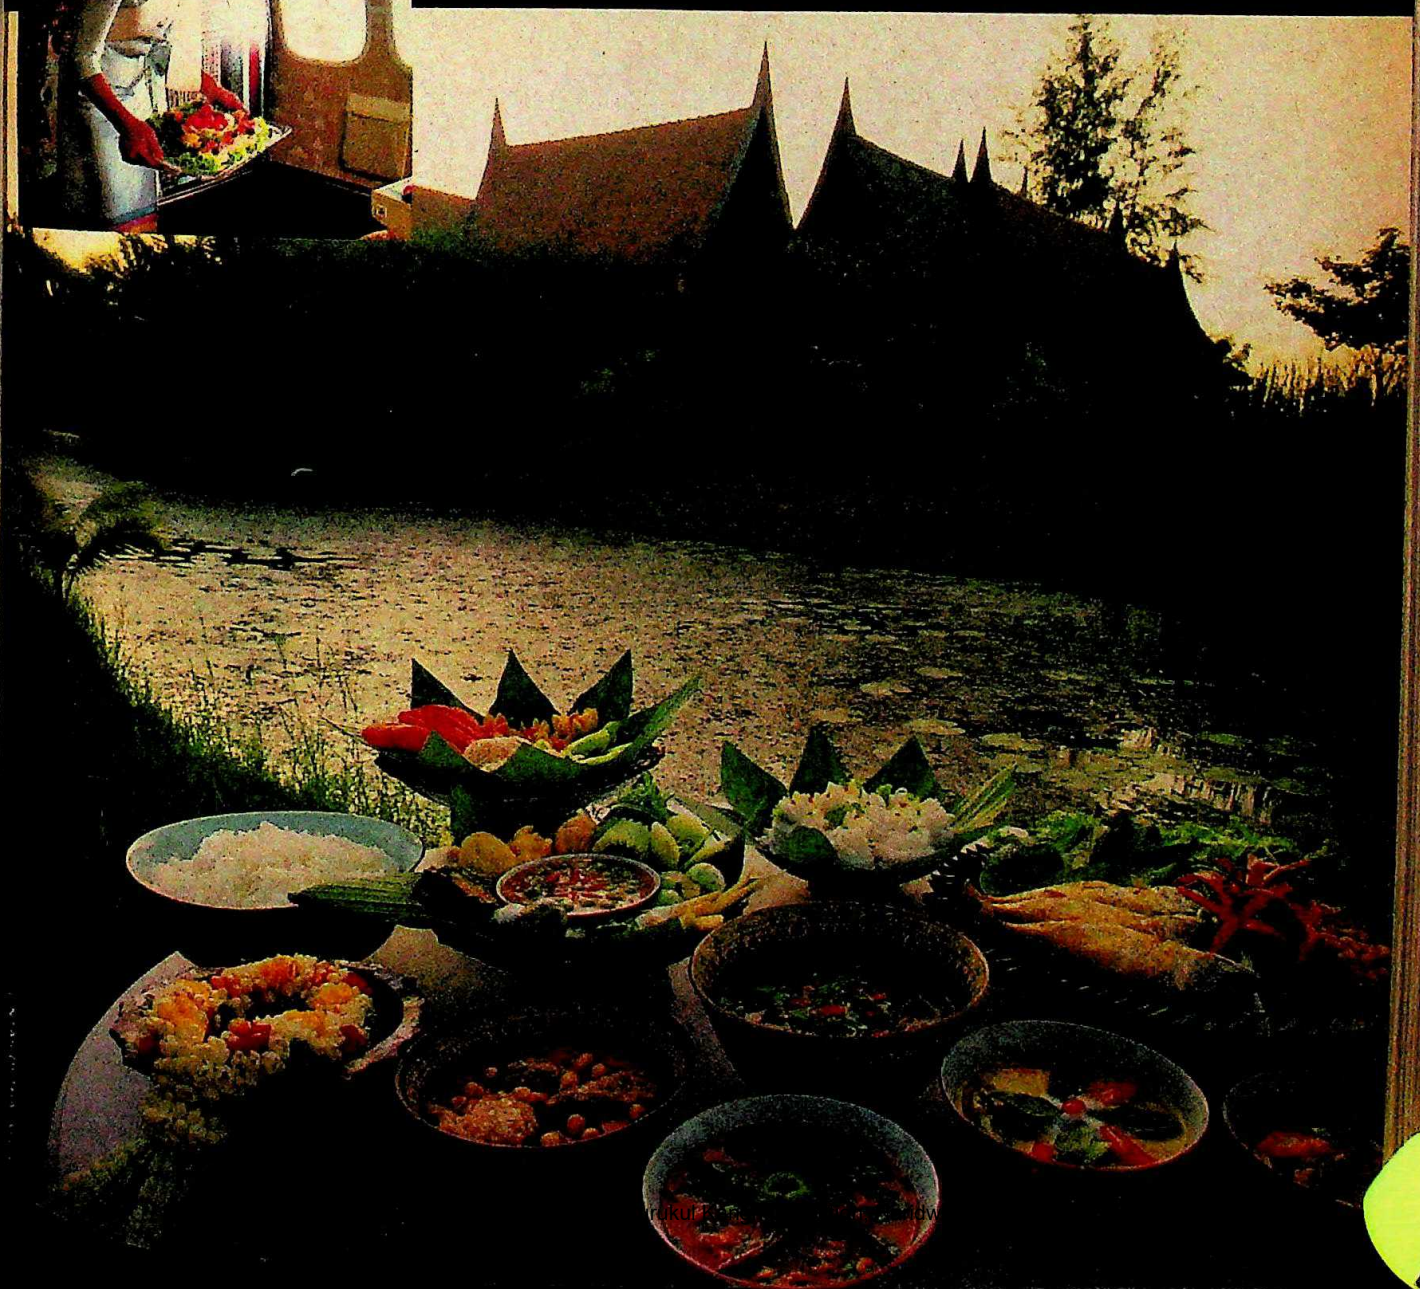
Thai now celebrates 25 years as an international airline and we'd like you to fly with us...

... Twice weekly to Amsterdam, thrice weekly to London and eight times a week to Bangkok from Delhi and Calcutta.

You'll find that good food is just one of the many things that make Thai's Royal Orchid Service so popular.

Thai

Smooth as silk.



SPARTEK FLOORS: Elegant, tough, easy to maintain

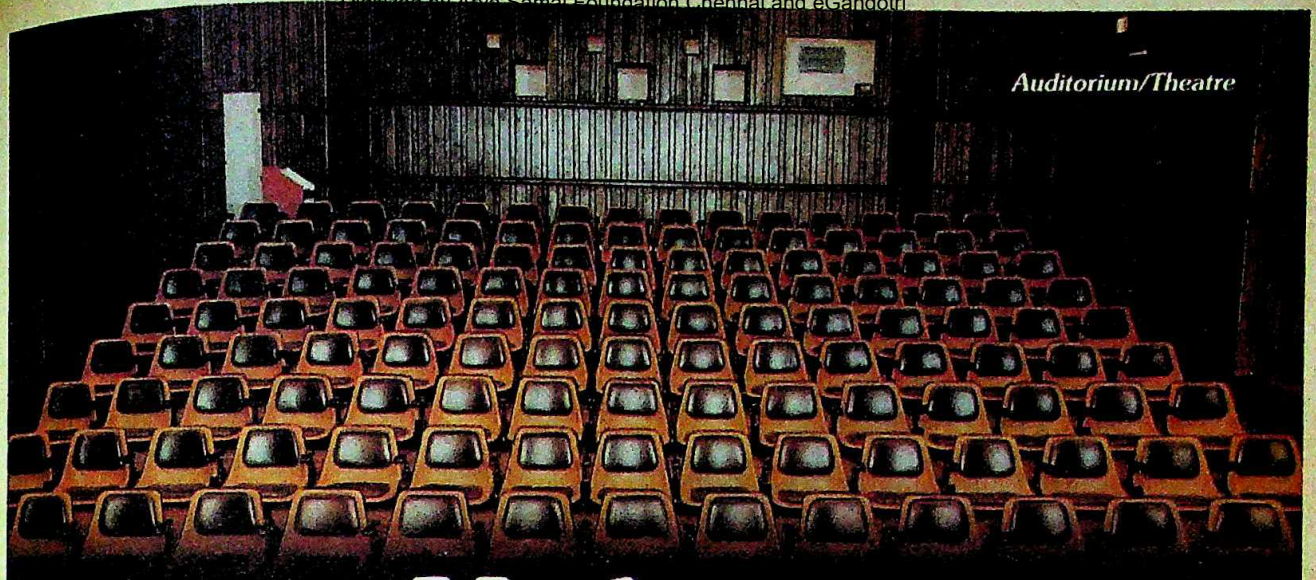
SPARTEK FLOOR TILES are now made in India, in collaboration with CeramicUS of USA...leaders in ultra-modern Ceramic technology. Technology that offers you unlimited decor options · in terms of colours, designs, textures, sizes and shapes · in a flooring material that has the most advanced physical anti-wear properties till date. Including the incredible advantage of being so easy to lay that it's ready for live-in use in a matter of 48 hours.

For more details write to:
SPARTEK CERAMICS INDIA LIMITED
52 CHAMIERS ROAD,
MADRAS 600 028.

SPARTEK
Now made in India in collaboration with CeramicUS.

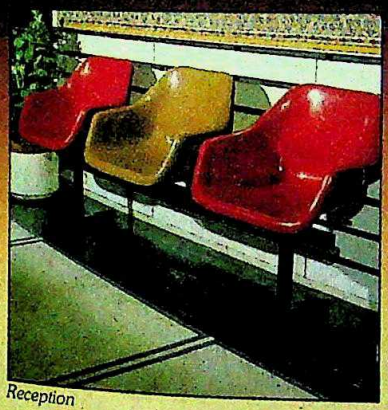
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



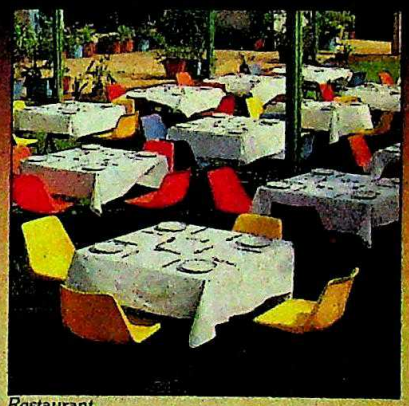
Moderna

The international concept of sitting pretty. Just anywhere.



Reception

Training Centre / School



Restaurant

Residence

Elegance and functionality perfectly blended. That's Moderna.

Totally flexible. Eminently adaptable. Moderna Seating System is tailor-made to meet the needs of any seating situation. Indoors and outdoors.

Made from the wonder material, polypropylene, Moderna is lightweight. Portable. Tough. And it's ergonomically designed to provide maximum seating comfort for years and years. But that's not all. Moderna needs the minimum of looking after. No painting. No polishing. Just an occasional wash keeps it clean and bright.

Moderna. Offers you exciting ways to sit. In comfort and elegance. In a blaze of beautiful, non-fading colours.

Moderna. Naturally at home... in stadia, auditoria and theatres. In canteens, lounges, conference rooms and at poolsides. In a balcony or in a dining room.

Moderna. The functional seating system that offers you the best value for your money. Come, discover its many benefits.

Blow Plast Ltd.
V.I.P. House
Prabhadevi
Bombay 400 025.
Tel: 430 1011
Telex: 011-71595 BPL-IN Grams: BLOWPLAST, Dadar.
Bombay 400 014.

MODERNA
the versatile seating system

FIRA MEMBER

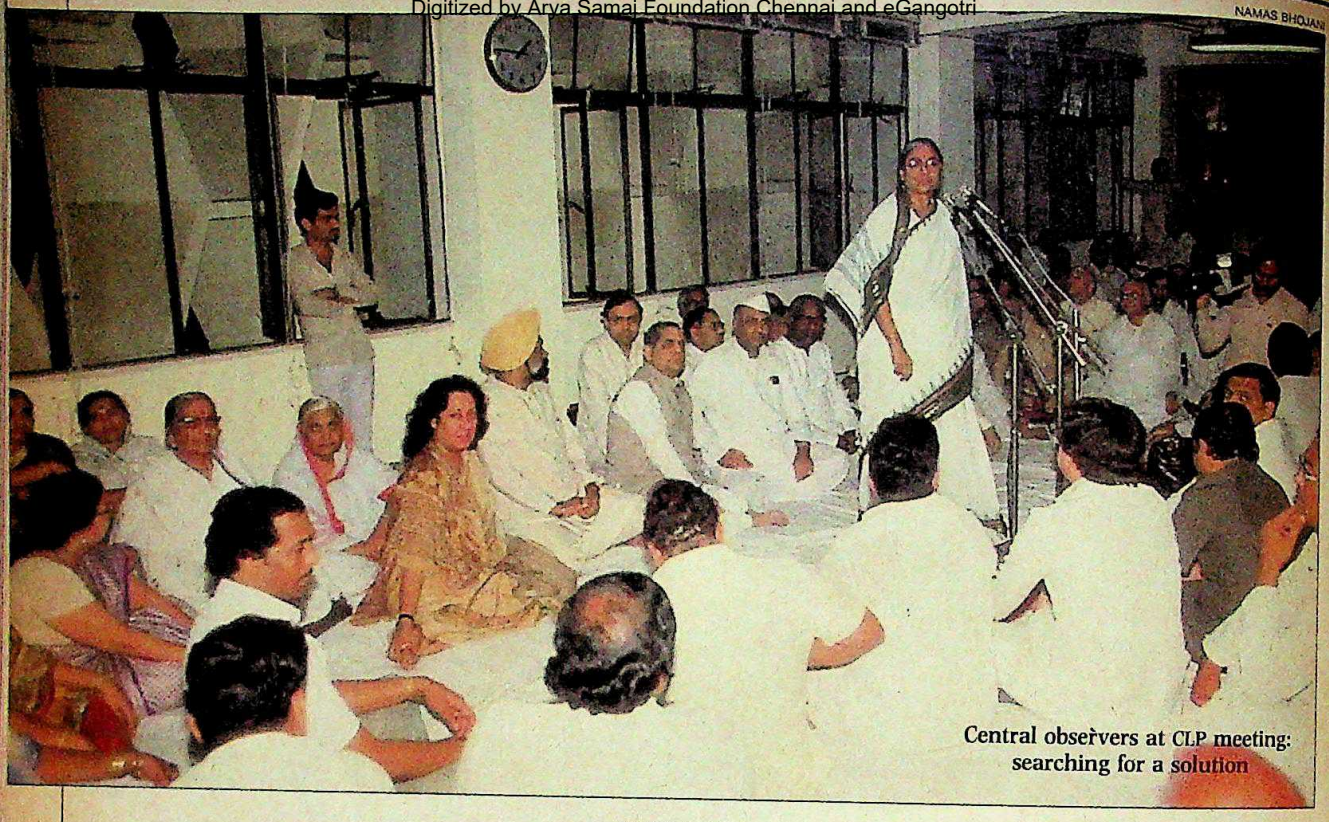
Regional Offices: Bombay: V.I.P. House, 88C Old Prabhadevi Road, Bombay 400 025. Tel: 4301011. Delhi: Rattan Jyoti, 6th Floor, 18 Rajendra Place, New Delhi 110 008. Tel: 5719820. Calcutta: 19, R.N. Mukherjee Road, Calcutta 700 002. Tel: 234025/230768. Bangalore: No. 5, Siddalah Road, Bangalore 560 002. Tel: 226706.

Contour Ads-BP-669A/85R1

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NAMAS BHOJANI



Central observers at CLP meeting: searching for a solution

MAHARASHTRA

The Crisis State

IT WAS a pleasant enough formal assignment to have, representing India at the swearing-in of Portugal's new President Mario Soares. And the portly Home Minister, Shankarrao Bhaorao Chavan, must have welcomed his brief respite from such problems as Punjab and Jammu & Kashmir, which had dogged his heels in the last few weeks. But Chavan's fleeting visit to Lisbon turned out to be even less of an interlude than he had planned. The Maharashtra marks scandal had undoubtedly stirred things up in Bombay before he left, but Chavan had no inkling that it would alter the course of his political career in a matter of days.

The first hint of impending change was a message from the prime minister's office to return home early. The second was the summons to the heavily guarded Race Course Road residence in the dead of the night, the moment Chavan's plane touched down. And then, as Chavan himself puts it, the unexpected offer—would he take over the chief ministership of Maharashtra if asked to do so?

BHAWAN SINGH

Chavan: challenges ahead

Chavan felt he had no choice in the matter: "As Congressmen and disciplined workers we have to abide by the high command's directive even if we don't like it personally," he told INDIA TODAY (see interview). But the odd thing was that even the Congress(I)'s Maharashtra MLA's who had gathered in Bombay's Vidhan Sabha building to elect a new leader had no real choice in the matter. For the vast majority of them preferred the continuance of outgoing chief minister Shivajirao Patil-Nilangekar, with industries minister Sudhakarrao Naik as the second choice and legislative affairs minister N.M. Tidke the third favourite.

But the party high command had its own mind on the issue; and in the ultimate analysis the choice fell on a man who was not the MLA's favourite and who himself was not keen on moving from Delhi. Indeed, the high command was clearly in a tight spot looking for a man to fill a post that has turned out to be jinxed. An Antulay had to go, committed to trial for financial irregularities. A Bhosale found the job beyond his abilities. Even a Vasantrao Patil, well bronzed in the heat of political battle, decided to call it a day rather than be humbled by the high command. And just as Nilangekar seemed to be settling in, he too fell victim to what has quickly been dubbed the Maharashtra marks scandal (see page 77).

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

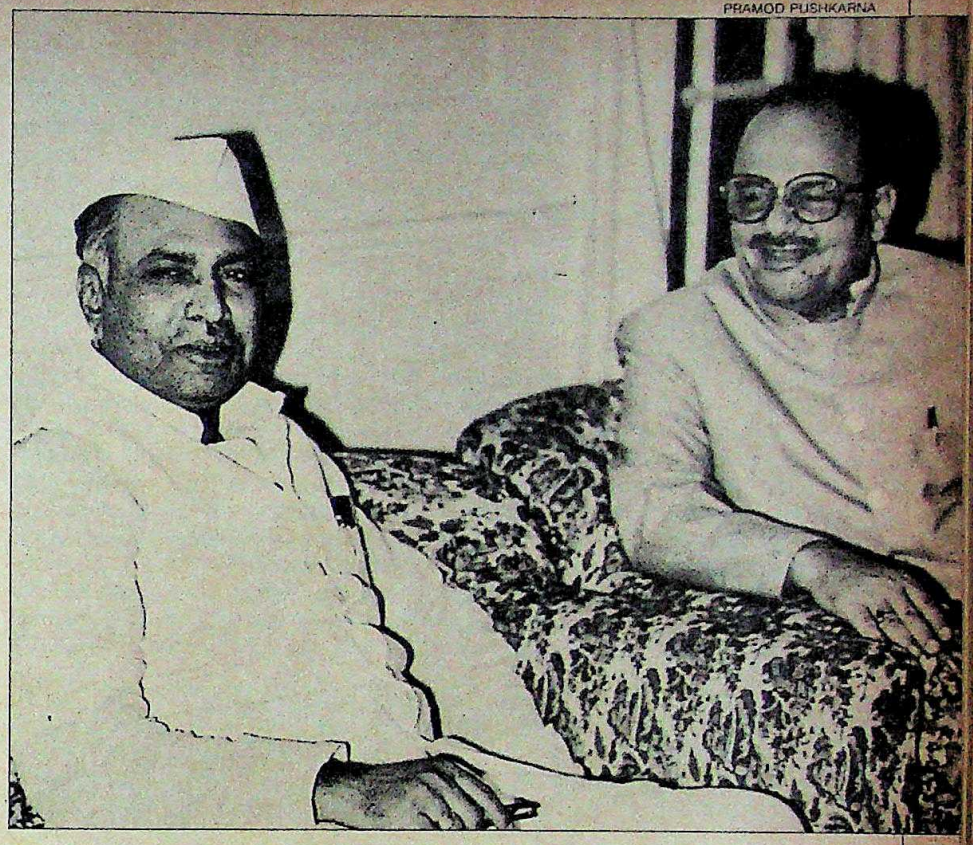
The crucial question at the end of last fortnight, therefore, was whether Chavan would fit the bill: control the faction-ridden party in the state, get the administration moving, keep the image of the Government clean, and above all, last it out till the term of the Assembly ends four years from now. There were no easy answers to these questions. Rajasthan Governor Vasantrao Patil, after all, had openly come out against Chavan and might well choose to create trouble for the new incumbent by using the large complement of MLA's who owe him allegiance. But Chavan indicated quickly that he was not going to give in to groups, or indeed to pander to the MLA's demands.

THE SHIFTING of the country's home minister came at the end of 10 days of political drama and academic scandal that had clearly caught the Centre off-guard. As early as mid-January, Rajiv received a memorandum detailing various charges against the Maharashtra chief minister. Among them was a reference to the admission of his daughter and son-in-law in medical courses. But the memorandum was dealt with in the normal manner—it was docketed for eventual action.

Even when the chief minister came to Delhi a day after M.S. Gore, the then vice-chancellor of Bombay University, resigned, he was not asked for any explanation. The chief minister along with the party's Bombay unit president Murli Deora, discussed the accounts of the centenary session and, later, development projects in the state. It was business as usual later on as well when Rajiv and Nilangekar thrashed out the possibility of a cabinet expansion and the chief minister's desire to contest the by-election from the seat vacated by his son earlier. Admitted Sitaram Kesri, AICC(I) treasurer: "We were all under the impression that this case had no political implications."

But when the high court judgement finally came, it plunged Maharashtra into yet another bout of political uncertainty. Admitted Congress(I) Vice-President Arjun Singh: "We had a very stable chief minister who was appointed only few months ago. He was not facing any major dissidence and was running the state reasonably well but he decided to resign on moral grounds."

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



Nilangekar meeting Arjun Singh in Delhi

New Delhi was plainly worried that if Congress(I) chief ministers continued to fall like ninepins, it might lose the state altogether, as happened earlier in Andhra Pradesh. Maharashtra, after all, has seen eight chief ministers in little more than a decade. Worse, Nilangekar seemed to be following in Antulay's footsteps with a signature campaign to get himself re-elected—and seemed to be carrying the party's legislators with him. There wasn't much time to be lost, especially when Maharashtra veterans Shivraj Patil and V.N.Gadgil warned the prime minister and his advisers that the party would suffer if Nilangekar was able to foist his own man on the Assembly—just as Antulay had nominated Bhosale and Vasantdada had brought in Nilangekar. At the same time, the party couldn't be seen to be going against the will of the legislature party, and Shiv Shankar, one of the three observers sent to Bombay to oversee the election of a new leader, opined: "Our brief is to ensure that the legislature party elects its own leader. Rajivji wants that the people who have to work locally should elect their own leader." But that brief changed as the events unfolded.

Initially, Rajiv had taken one decision: that whoever replaced Nilangekar should be able to carry on till the next assembly elections due in four years. He instructed his observers to let the MLA's know that the high command would not hesitate to order a mid-term poll if they failed to throw up a consensus candidate for the chief ministership.

But the search for a new man was suddenly complicated when Vasantrao Patil, setting aside all gubernatorial norms, walked into the AICC(I) office and met Arjun Singh to canvass support for his candidate. Talking to various other leaders as well, Patil argued that the party was making a big mistake in imposing "leaders without mass support" and also stressed the point that Maharashtra needed a chief minister with a free hand to run the state. Patil finally told the high command that he would not like his arch enemy Chavan to replace his protege, the outgoing chief minister.

With the loyalty of some 60 of the party's 159 MLA's in his pocket, Patil couldn't be ignored, and his unilateral entry into the decision-making process

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

suddenly changed the rules of the game, but in a manner quite contrary to what Patil had in mind. When Rajiv received a detailed report about Patil's activities in Delhi, he summoned Arjun Singh and senior cabinet colleagues for consultations and to take a final decision about the new chief minister. Rajiv was well briefed about the rebellious, pro-Patil mood building up in Bombay, and after an hour or so he seemed to have decided to deal firmly with Patil's challenge lest it be mistaken for a sign of weakness.

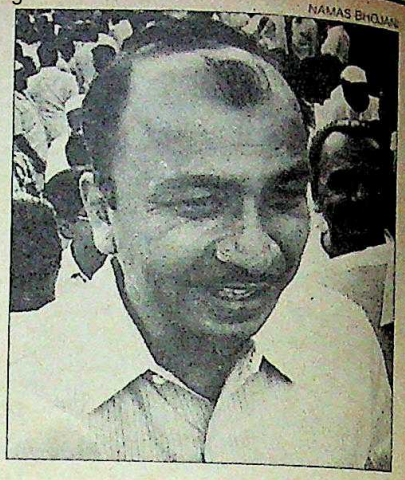
So it came about that Chavan emerged as the high command's candidate for the job. Arjun Singh justified the choice saying: "Chavanji was the only leader who had a clean image, varied experience of running the Government and qualities of leadership. At this stage, Maharashtra needs them all".

The party's vice-president was not off the mark. But what finally tilted the scales in Chavan's favour was Rajiv's firm resolve to once and for all put an end to group rivalries in the state's politics by finding a leader who was being opposed, not on merit, but on personal animosities. After being assured of the party's support, Rajiv kept the decision to himself. Later, Shiv Shankar was contacted by the prime minister's office and informed about the decision to get Chavan's nomination formally approved.

CHAVAN'S imposition is also a clear message to politicians like Jagannath Mishra, Madhavsinh Solanki, Gundu Rao, Pranab Mukherjee and their ilk, that Rajiv Gandhi is in a mood to assert himself. Said G.K. Moopanar, AICC(I) general secretary: "All of us must learn to express our opinions in party forums and accept the decision taken finally by the high command."

None of this tortuous decision-making process was, of course, known in Bombay where high drama was unfolding quite independently. Rajiv had telephoned Nilangekar late at night on March 6, asking him to resign. The prime minister also asked the chief minister to come to Delhi on Sunday evening, March 9, to meet him. On March 7, sitting in front of a

NAMAS BHOJAK



S.B. CHAVAN

"Frankly, I was not very keen"

SHANKARRAO Bhaorao Chavan, 66, gives the impression of being a stolid, dependable man who can be counted upon to keep his head in a crisis. These were all qualities that he needed to draw upon in full measure last week. Chavan arrived from Lisbon after midnight on March 11-12, and drove straight to the prime minister's residence where he spent an hour discussing the Maharashtra situation after being informed about his new assignment.

The next morning, he unhurriedly went about his daily household chores as if nothing had really happened to once again re-direct his personal political compass. He milked his cow in the morning, spent an hour playing with his granddaughter and finally called up his personal staff and told them to start packing for his next job as the 10th chief minister of Maharashtra. Before leaving New Delhi, he gave an exclusive interview to Assistant Editor PRABHU CHAWLA at his residence. Excerpts:

Q. Did you know that you were being shifted to Maharashtra?

A. It came as a total surprise to me. I returned to India at 12.45 a.m. and was asked to see the prime minister immediately. When I met him at his residence he asked me whether I would be willing to go to Maharashtra as chief minister. He also told me that it is linked with the final choice of the legislature party. But I was not very keen myself frankly. If they felt that I had to go then I have to go.

Q. So you readily gave your consent?

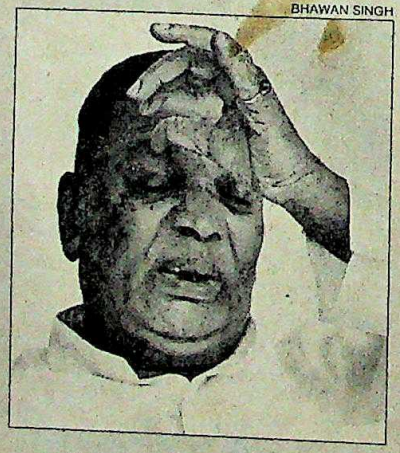
BHAWAN SINGH



A. There was no question of consent. As Congressmen and disciplined workers we have to abide by the high command directive even if we don't like it personally.

Q: What difference do you notice in Maharashtra politics now, compared to 1976 when you were chief minister?

A. I have to go there and assess the situation. People talk about the emergence of various groups in Maharashtra politics but I don't believe in group politics. I would like to take the best talent from within the party and encourage young people who have not been given a chance to perform, irrespective of group affiliations.

Q. But successive chief ministers have had to quit due to group politics.

A. I would not like to comment.

Q. How did the party allow people without any mass base to take over the state's leadership?

A. I don't agree entirely with your question. But something strange happened in 1980 when some people who could have provided leadership in the state chose to come to Parliament. I could not understand this tendency at that time. In the 1984 parliamentary elections a similar trend was repeated. That is why we find that those who could do something for the state have come to Parliament.

Q. Was this by design or accident? Can't they go back now?

A. It happened just like that. But the trend cannot be reversed now because we don't want to get people elected through by-elections.

Q. Won't you face problems because most MLA*'s are loyal to a former chief minister who is hostile to you?*

A. I don't think that is correct. For securing the ticket to the Assembly,

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Shinde (left) and Naik: a scramble for succession frieze of Shivaji's durbar in the conference room at Varsha, his official residence on Malabar Hills. Nilangekar announced his resignation. But he first read out a long list of his achievements as chief minister and alleged that attempts were being made to bring instability to the state "by whatever means". He then opened a pink file of newspaper clippings on his family members' scandals, read out the headlines and recited a litany of complaints against the press.

That signalled to those present that Nilangekar wasn't going to give up easily. Even as the countdown began in Delhi, he began to shore up his own case with a signature campaign asking for re-election, besides spreading the word that strongman Vasantdada was backing him solidly. Not knowing Delhi's views, most MLA's were in a quandary and found themselves signing the memorandum addressed to Rajiv Gandhi and asking for Nilangekar's re-election almost as if it was a visitor's book at Varsha. By the time Nilangekar left for Delhi on the evening of March 9, signatures of 128 of the party's 159 MLA's had been collected: but oddly enough, he failed to take them with him.

The climax came on Tuesday, March 11. That morning, Nilangekar's lieutenants went around to the three MLA's hostels in the city with the message that Rajiv Gandhi had agreed to his re-election. Some ministers were told to come for a cabinet meeting at Varsha. About 60 MLA's and all the ministers gathered at noon in the formal reception hall on the ground floor of the chief minister's bungalow and were told that the decision had been taken to re-elect Nilangekar.

From Varsha, Nilangekar, his ministers and the legislators set off for the plush Sahyadri state guest-house where first Nawal Kishore Sharma and then Buta Singh had arrived on the morning flight from Delhi. Nilangekar, exuding confidence, met Buta Singh in his suite along with a few ministers. Education Minister Ram Meghe was overheard saying that the party MLA's had unanimously decided people approach certain individuals. But that doesn't mean that they owe allegiance to that particular person. I don't think any Congressmen should claim the personal loyalty of MLA's.

Q. So you expect full cooperation from all the factions?

A. I don't see any difficulty on that front. I know the background of each one of them and it will be unfair to allege that they would create hurdles for me.

Q. What are the immediate problems that you face as chief minister?

A. I consider drought the number one administrative problem. A large number of villages are suffering from unemployment, shortage of drinking water and other infrastructure facilities.

Q. Don't you think that corruption and misuse of power for personal gains is also a major problem?

A. I need not comment on this issue because the people of Maharashtra know my nature. My going there will solve half the problems of corruption and the remaining half I will solve by my actions. Some people will have to be dealt with rather severely. I want to make it clear so that everybody understands that on the question of corruption I will not compromise with anybody.

Q. The state has faced political instability because of intra-party squabbles. Don't you agree that a chief minister should be allowed a full term?

A. Normally, that should be the position. But in the cases of Nilangekar and Antulay, court judgements caused their exits. Of the remaining two, one resigned on his own.

Q. But the high command, by appointing a hostile PCC(I) chief, created a situation in which Vasantdada had no alternative but to quit?

A. I don't subscribe to the theory that the PCC(I) chief should be merely a rubber stamp for the chief minister. The organisational chief should have his or her own independent existence also. So long as the PCC(I) chief doesn't create any problem for the chief minister, the confrontation will never arise.

Q. How do you assess your performance as home minister at the Centre?

A. It is for you people to judge. But I am satisfied that the Home Ministry was instrumental in solving two of the most important problems of the country. We were able to sign accords with Punjab and Assam leaders which led to the establishment of democratically-elected governments in these states.

Q. But aren't you sad that the accords are not working properly?

A. I appreciate the problems which the Akali Dal is facing in implementing the accord. The Central Government, instead of maintaining neutrality, should help the state Government in coming to grips with the situation. The people the Akalis are trying to win over are hard-core terrorists. The Akali Government has realised now that these people have to be treated as a different class altogether. In Assam, we do not forsee any major problem.

Q. What difference did you notice between running a state as chief minister and the country as its home minister?

A. At the national level, we take decisions keeping in view their implications for the entire country. But as chief minister one can't possibly do this. In the state if a chief minister takes any wrong decisions, he gets a reaction immediately. As home minister, the reaction comes quite late.

Q. Do you believe that a chief minister has to yield to local pressures which are not there at the Centre?

A. Local pressures are bound to exert themselves on a chief minister because they are directly affected. But one should not succumb to wrong pressures.

Q. But a chief minister can't survive if he doesn't concede MLA's demands.

A. Fortunately for me, all the MLA's know my mind. I will not go out of my way to oblige anyone for wrong work even at the risk of losing my job.

Q. But you are at the mercy of these MLA's who can throw you out.

A. If support of the MLA's means doing wrong things then I certainly don't need it. But it is not correct that MLA's always ask for wrong things to be done. Once they realise that they can't pressurise a chief minister they will be afraid of approaching him for illegal work.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

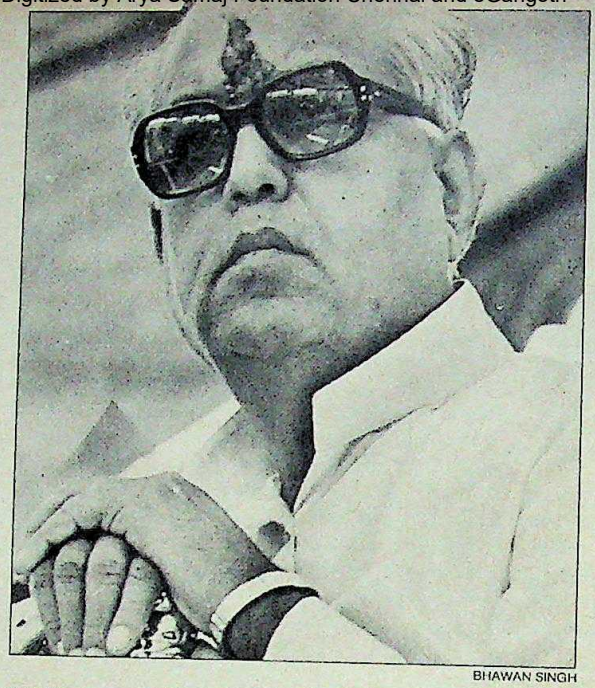
that Nilangekar should be re-elected. They were directed to the suite occupied by Nawal Kishore Sharma, who told them that nothing could be decided until the observers spoke to the party's MLA's.

But the way the MLA's were spoken to was instructive. Said one MLA from western Maharashtra: "They asked me who is my first choice and I told them it is Shivajirao. They said 'no, we are not talking of re-election, think of a new candidate'. So I said Sudhakarrao Naik and then Tidke. They asked me if I had anyone else in mind and I said that if the high command would like to make someone the chief minister then you can tell us and we will support him."

These individual meetings dragged on till 8 p.m. Shiv Shankar then flew in from Delhi on an evening flight, and the formal meeting of the legislature party was postponed from 9 p.m. to 11 p.m. and still later. Legislators sat around the massive oval but water-less fountain in front of the main entrance, or wandered about the Nariman Point business district—all without the remotest indication of who was going to be the next chief minister.

Reprieve came at around 1.30 a.m. when Buta Singh and Shiv Shankar arrived in a cream-coloured Ambassador with Nilangekar, followed by Nawal Kishore with Sushilkumar Shinde and Najma Heptullah. The meeting began, but till 2.25 a.m. there was no indication of what was in store. And then the call from the prime minister—who had been consulting Chavan—clinched it. A bare five minutes later, Shiv Shankar, accompanied by Murli Deora, returned to the hall to confirm what a group of MLA's were rushing out to declare: "It's SB, it's Shankarrao". Shiv Shankar had only a little while earlier told Nilangekar of the high command's choice, giving rise to a tricky situation: Nilangekar was obliged to propose the name of a person he couldn't abide by, while the runners-up in the local popularity stakes (Naik and Tidke) had to second Chavan's candidature.

With that assertive fiat from the party chief, a bizarre poltical drama ended, cutting short the poltical career of a chief minister who had yet to be elected to the Assembly, and foisting another whom precious few in the Assembly seemed to want. With his ignominious exit,



BHAWAN SINGH

Vasantrao Patil: violating gubernatorial norms

Nilangekar established yet another record of sorts, spending fewer days in office (278) than any chief minister since 1960. And with his unsung ouster began Chavan's second term in office—he'd been chief minister during the Emergency—after a gap of almost 9 years.

BUT CHAVAN'S re-election failed to receive the kind of applause usually associated with stage-managed legislature meetings which are called to elect a new leader. Said a party worker waiting outside: "Normally when the leader is elected we can immediately make out by the sound of the applause. But this is a strange election where there seems hardly any enthusiasm."

Later, Nawal Kishore explained that the CLP meeting was delayed because they were waiting for Chavan's return to Delhi from Lisbon. He also said that if Nilangekar wanted to contest the by-election from Nilanga he would get permission from the high command. When asked about the possibility of a "big group" opposed to Chavan splitting the party, Nawal Kishore replied with characteristic self-assurance: "That's your information, not mine. Forget about a big group, there's not even a small group within the party."

Nevertheless, political speculation late last fortnight centred on the possibility of an unhappy Patil teaming up with the only leader left in Maharashtra with a mass political base, Sharad Pawar of the Congress(S). Pawar's much talked of return to the Congress(I) is now out of the question since Chavan is an old political rival. And observers wondered whether Patil's 60-strong following in the Assembly and Pawar's group of 54 would come together to unseat the Chavan Ministry.

Amidst such political kite-flying, few gave a thought last fortnight to the record in office of Nilangekar. For Nilangekar was an inconsequential, nondescript politician who did not command a following outside his home district of Latur. He had boasted last year that "I will rule for the full term" and declared soon after his elevation that no member of his family would be involved in any scandals. But both forecasts proved wrong.

Mantralaya officials confirmed that Nilangekar's was a totally lacklustre administration, with files piling up in the chief minister's secretariat for long periods. An official said: "His whole approach to administration was petty minded also. One got the distinct feeling that he had a small-town concept of exercising power and authority." However, officials also maintained that during his reign the phenomenal corruption of earlier chief ministers was not there.

At no time after the MD examination scandal broke out did Nilangekar seem to give it the significance it deserved. Perhaps he imagined that political manipulation would get him out of trouble. Even when he spoke to INDIA TODAY around midnight on the day of his resignation, he blamed the press for all his problems.

Chavan's return to Maharashtra politics is likely to be welcomed most in Mantralaya. He has the reputation of being an excellent administrator. Even his political opponent Sharad Pawar acknowledged before the election: "If Chavan becomes chief minister it will be good for the administration but bad for the party." Chavan had proved himself earlier as a chief minister during the Emergency and later on during his long innings of five years as Union minister. Even earlier, as a minister for more than a decade in Maharashtra, he was rated as one of the most successful in the state; and he has a clean image: even in a department like irrigation, no major scandal took place. Says Murli Deora: "SB is known for his frankness and straightforwardness. He would not allow his government to be misused for promoting personal interest even if it harms him personally."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Even at the Centre, Chavan was firm in his dealings with people. For instance, during his stint as education minister, he gave directions to the various grant-disbursing agencies like the University Grants Commission to combat lawlessness on the campuses with a heavy hand and, in the matter of releasing funds, dealt firmly with universities which were closed because of politicisation. When he took over as planning minister in 1981, he ruled that states would not be allowed to ask for Plan funds for any scheme that they started without Planning Commission approval. His close monitoring led to the detection of over 100 unauthorised projects which various state goverments were trying to push in.

It was perhaps his disciplinarian attitude that brought him to North Block as Union home minister after Rajiv's election in December 1984. And during his 14 months in office he was a party to historic decisions like the accords on Punjab and Assam. It was during this period that most of the assemblies went to the polls, and a breakthrough was made in the troubled Union territory of Mizoram. But he was later eclipsed somewhat ignominiously by the appointment of the powerful Arun Nehru as his minister of state, his nominal deputy.

Chavan tends to be impatient with politicians, and was clearly not keen to move to Bombay. But since he has been chosen, he is likely to bend his efforts to taming the mercurial politics of the state, which has seen political instability ever since Antulay's slide began in 1981. Indeed, so devastating has been the effect of political uncertainty that the state is on the verge of losing its supremacy as one of the most affluent in the country with both capital and manpower looking for greener pastures elsewhere. But above all, his primary task is to refurbish the tarred image of the party in the state where the Congress's popularity is at its lowest ebb in recent years. With a hostile political environment at home but solid backing from the Centre, it remains to be seen whether this Maratha from Marathwada can turn the tables on his adversaries. On his success also depends the authority of Rajiv Gandhi, who has gambled in imposing a leader on a state.

—PRABHU CHAWLA and M. RAHMAN

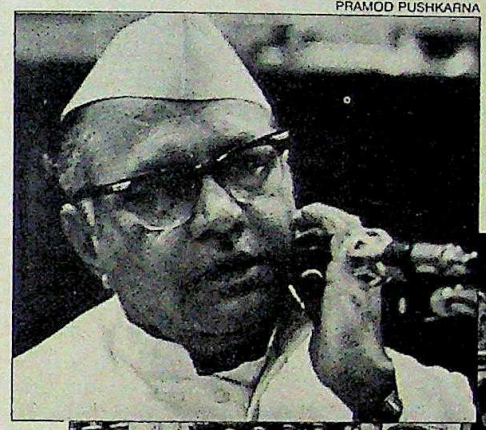
SHIVAJIRAO PATIL-NILANGEKAR

Shame and Scandal

IT WAS, ironically enough, in the same courtroom—number six on the ground floor of the Bombay High Court building—that an earlier judgement four years ago had led to the resignation of A.R.Antulay from the chief ministership of Maharashtra. On March 6, another chief minister followed in Antulay's footsteps when Justice M.L. Pendse, after inaudibly dictating his verdict for a record two hours and fifty minutes on a writ petition challenging the MD (obstetrics and gynaecology) results of the Bombay University, told a packed courtroom that a "reasonable inference" could be drawn that the fraud in the exam results was committed "at the behest" of Chief Minister Shivajirao Patil-Nilangekar and his daughter Chandrakala, one of the candidates for the MD degree.

The hearing reached its climax after two days of intense drama: the gradual unravelling of the fraud as sealed examination records were opened and examined, an astute judge trenchantly ques-

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



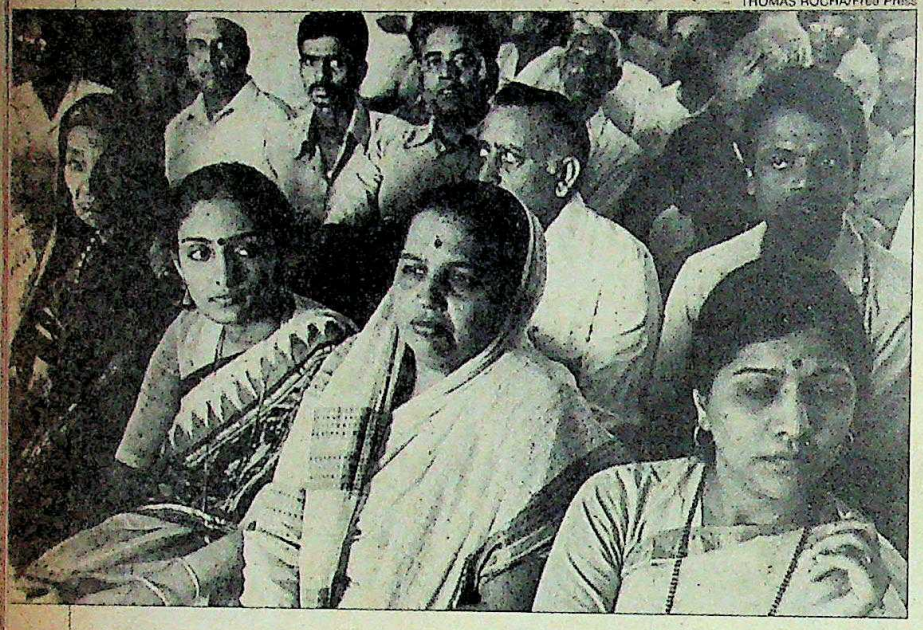
NAMAS BHOJANI

Nilangekar (inset); and crowds at the high court: reasonable inference

CC-0. Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THOMAS ROCHA/Free Press



Nilangekar's family with Chandrakala (extreme right)

tioning the accused examiner's advocate, the panic after a bomb hoax on the second day of the hearing emptied the courtroom within minutes, and finally the excitement and jubilation as the verdict was announced. The hero of the legal battle, of course, was the young, intense-looking petitioner, Dr Mahesh Madhav Gosavi, whose stubborn pursuit of the scandal after the MD results were announced last November led to the fall of a chief minister. The high points as the scandal unfolded:

November 30, 1985: The University of Bombay declared the results of MD (obstetrics and gynaecology) examinations held in October and November. An amazing 72 per cent of the candidates—34 out of 47 who sat for the tough post-graduate medical exam—were declared passed. Rumours began circulating in medical colleges that the extraordinary results were linked with irregularities committed to pass Nilangekar's daughter Chandrakala, who had already failed thrice to secure an MD degree.

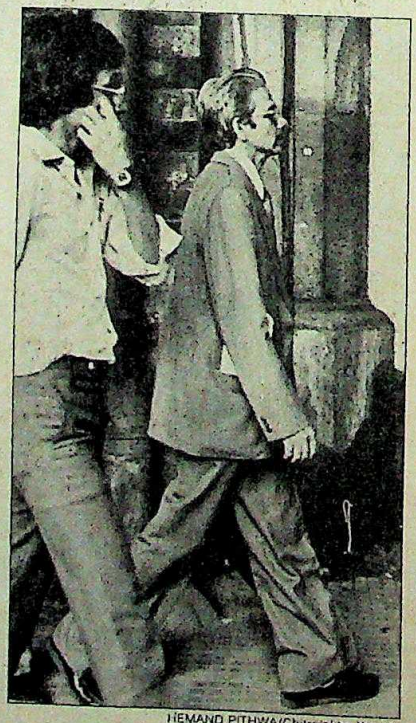
December 3: Dr Mahesh Gosavi, an assistant medical officer at the King Edward Memorial (KEM) Hospital, who had failed in the MD examination, met professor Balasubramaniam Arunachalam, the university's officer on special duty (examinations) to demand a revaluation of the results. Gosavi's subsequent meetings with Arunachalam confirmed the rumour that the convenor of the MD exams, Dr Mahesh V. Raval, had tampered with the grades to pass Nilangekar's daughter and another candidate, Smita Gnanesh Thacker, said to be a favourite of Raval's at the KEM Hospital. In the process, Raval had to bend the rules for passing another 10 candidates.

January 16, 1986: Even as Arunachalam prepared a report on the exam fraud for the university's executive council, Gosavi approached the Bombay High Court. Justice S.P. Bharucha ordered that all documents relating to the exams be sealed and handed over to the court.

January 24: Arunachalam filed the university's detailed affidavit in response to the petition in which he stated that

- investigations had showed that the grades of two candidates had been tampered with;
- Raval had told him that he had been authorised by the other examiners to alter the grades;
- he (Arunachalam) had pointed out to Raval that the passing of candidates with six P minuses was "too much of a deviation" from the accepted practice (grades are given for each of the 16 questions in the MD theory and practical exams. These grades are: G for good, P plus for above average pass, P for pass, P minus for borderline failure and F for fail). At most, candidates are passed if they have two P minuses out of 16 grades, and only if they have simultaneously scored a few above average pass grades. Chandrakala had originally scored 12 P minuses and four P's—a resounding failure.
- the university had discovered that one of the two candidates was the daughter of the chief minister.

Raval: bending the rules



HEMAND PITHWA/Chitrakatha Weekly

January 24: Vice-Chancellor M.S. Gore, who was in hospital with a heart ailment, was informed by the university's lawyer, S. Radhakrishnan, of a message conveyed through a senior member of the Bar to "pass the petitioner and settle the case". Gore told the lawyer that the university should proceed with the case.

January 30: Justice S.P. Barucha admitted Gosavi's 20-page writ petition and observed: "The affidavit made on behalf of the university discloses a horrifying picture. There is no doubt in my mind that the petition must be investigated...this matter will be investigated by the court, it cannot be left to the university."

The same day, a meeting of the university's executive council resolved that the court should be asked to let the university investigate the scandal.

February 21: Registrar G.M. Rajashri was called to Raj Bhavan by the university chancellor, Governor Kona Prabhakar Rao, and in the presence of Advocate General Arvind Savant, who was representing the chief minister in the case, instructed that the university lawyer should be changed in consultation with Savant (a clear conflict of interest for the advocate general, whose role in the entire affair has left the legal community aghast). Rajashri informed the vice-chancellor of Kona Prabhakar Rao's orders. The governor later denied it.

February 22: Gore sent in his resigna-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

M.S. GORE

A Question of Principles

AFTER a distinguished academic career as director of the Tata Institute of Social Sciences in Bombay, Dr Madhav Sadashiv Gore, 64, retired in 1982 to take up a Homi Bhabha Fellowship on the leadership of the backward class movement in Maharashtra. After completing 10 months of the two-year fellowship, he was appointed vice-chancellor of Bombay University in 1983. Even at that time some of his close associates felt that Dr Gore was too upright a person to survive in the politics-ridden atmosphere of the university. Near the end of his term, shortly after he returned to work after being hospitalised for a heart ailment, Bombay's 129-year-old university was rocked by its most sensational examination scandal involving the then chief minister Shivajirao Patil-Nilangekar's daughter. Dr Gore chose to resign rather than be a party to hushing up the case. Typically, the day after he left the university, he was trying to arrange for a car to visit his private residence in new Bombay as "it would not be right to use the official car". Dr Gore now plans to resume the Bhabha Fellowship work. He spoke to Chief Correspondent M. RAHMAN about the background to his sensational resignation. Excerpts:

Q. Dr Gore, first the question everyone has been asking: Why did you resign?

A. On the evening of February 21, I received a message through the registrar that the chancellor felt another, more senior counsel should be engaged for the case filed against Bombay University in the high court. I did not agree, because I thought that our case had been properly presented in court. Normally I would not have reacted the way I did, but in the light of earlier events and since in any case I was not in good health I sent in my resignation the next day.

Q. Was there any pressure on the university earlier to settle the case out of court?

A. When I was in hospital the university lawyer came and informed me on January 24 that he had been approached by a senior counsel of the bar saying that "they" would like to "explore the possibility of settling the case". I told him that my instructions were very clear, our affidavit stands and he should proceed with the case.

Q. What happened when you met the chancellor after resigning?

A. The chancellor tried to persuade me not to resign. I told him that since I did not agree that we should change our lawyer, I would like to move out and let the chancellor and the executive council decide. He said there was a misunderstanding, he felt the university case had not been properly represented, and that we had probably furnished facts in the affidavit which we were not required to, and that we should have given a paragraph by paragraph reply to the petition. I told him that to the best of my knowledge that is what we had done. The chancellor replied it does not matter then, and that I should not let it stand in my way (in changing the decision to resign).

Q. What made you change your mind subsequently?

A. At the executive council meeting on February 27 three or four persons said that the council's decision that the university enquire into the case had not been represented to the court and so we should engage a senior counsel. I could have said I did not agree and recorded my dissent. But partly because of what had happened earlier, and partly you might say that I was cowed down by the situation and the atmosphere that had been created, I did not say anything and the resolution was passed.

But I was not happy with what had happened. The next day I had a discussion with the pro-vice chancellor and told him that by keeping quiet I had let down the officer on special duty (examinations) and the lawyer who was doing an honest job for us. The same day I wrote out a letter to the chancellor saying I would like to press my resignation. I received a reply saying that the chancellor would like to see me again since nothing had transpired since our last meeting to change the situation. I immediately sent a reply in which I said to the contrary a number of things had happened.

The executive council had passed this resolution and I had failed to record my dissent. I wrote that since I had failed in my duty to advise the council and compromised the position of my colleagues, I would like to step down.

Q. Was the university threatened with the withdrawal of government grants?

A. No, not that I am aware of.

Q. How do you look back on your term as vice-chancellor?

A. When I became vice-chancellor in June 1983 I had said I don't expect miracles to happen. To my mind it has largely been a "holding operation". We are going to continue to be in very difficult circumstances, financially as well as with state patronage of the higher education system in India. The credibility of the whole system is in doubt, and not only in Bombay. We have to try and hold it together and make it function with some credibility, and that's what we tried to do in Bombay University.

Q. Finally, do you think the consequences of this latest scandal could be positive for Bombay University?

A. It's very difficult to say. But I hope it will help make people aware that there are certain things that should not be done.

Q. And that even very powerful people cannot hope to get away with it?

A. That, of course.

Former vice-chancellor Gore: restoring credibility to Bombay University

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

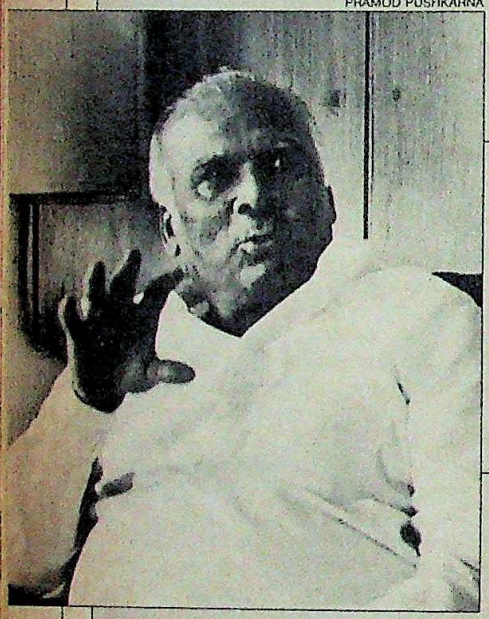
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

K. PRABHAKAR RAO

Suspect Role

MAHARASHTRA may go down in history as the only state where both the governor and the chief minister have been accused of exploiting their positions to get relatives admitted into medical courses. Former chief minister Shivajirao Patil-Nilangekar's son and son-in-law were admitted to post-graduate medical courses in two Bombay colleges after admission rules were flouted. And Governor Kona Prabhakar Rao's granddaughter, Kona Padmaja, allegedly secured a seat in the MBBS course at the prestigious Jawaharlal Nehru Institute of Post-Graduate Medical Education and Research (JIPMER) in Pondicherry last year under the quota allotted to Sikkim.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



Fifteen seats in the JIPMER MBBS course are reserved annually for students nominated by the Union Government. In July last year, press reports charged that Rao, who was governor of Sikkim before he moved to Bombay's Raj Bhavan in May, had got the Sikkim Government to recommend his granddaughter's name to the Union Government for admission to JIPMER after she was certified as a Scheduled Caste girl.

Padmaja had just then passed the inter-science examination with 53.8 per cent marks, which hardly qualified her for admission to any medical college in the country. She was a student of St Theresa's College in Eluru in Godavari district, in Andhra Pradesh, where her grandfather had once been a Congress(I) minister before taking up his first assignment outside the state as lieutenant-governor of Pondicherry.

Sitting at his desk in the Raj Bhavan, Rao said that there was no truth whatever in the allegations against him. "Firstly, I wasn't the governor of Sikkim when my granddaughter applied, and secondly I didn't certify that she is a Scheduled Caste candidate. Even the Government of Sikkim has denied that she got admission as a Scheduled Caste candidate. How could she when her school certificate shows her as a Brahmin?"

Rao's granddaughter allegedly secured a seat in the MBBS course at the prestigious JIPMER in Pondicherry under the quota allotted to Sikkim.

However, the governor added: "Sikkim is a small state without any professional colleges so it is allotted a certain number of seats in different colleges in the country. When I was coming away from Sikkim because the altitude and climate did not suit me, the chief minister approached me and said you have done so much for the state but I haven't done anything in return for you. My granddaughter applied some time in June or July after I had left the state and got the seat. In any case, nobody in Sikkim was denied a seat because of her."

But the story had a sad ending for Kona Padmaja. The governor revealed that his granddaughter had dropped out of the MBBS course at JIPMER recently and returned to Nellore in Andhra Pradesh, where her father is a police sub-inspector. Will she seek admission in another medical college now? "No, she found the pressure too much," the governor said.

tion to the chancellor, but agreed not to press it after a meeting at Raj Bhavan.

February 27: At a stormy meeting of the executive council, it was resolved to change the university lawyer in consultation with Savant, and to once again try and take back the case from the court for investigation by the university.

February 28: Gore again wrote to the chancellor pressing for the acceptance of his resignation as he felt he had failed in his duty to oppose the executive council's resolution.

March 3: An appeal filed by Nilangekar to delete his name from the list of respondents was rejected by a division bench of the high court.

March 4-6: After a two-day hearing of the sensational case, Justice Pendse announced the gist of his judgement. His verdict: Though there was no concrete evidence, the reasonable inference could be drawn that the MD results had been manipulated by Raval at the behest of the chief minister and his daughter. Pendse instructed the university to debar Raval from any kind of examination work in future, and to review the results of the 12 candidates.

March 7: The chancellor accepted Gore's resignation. Nilangekar handed in his resignation.

THERE was, in the end, an almost weary inevitability about the Nilangekar affair. If A.R. Antulay displayed an irresistible weakness for collecting money for trusts, Vasantrao Patil for political patronage and land deals, Nilangekar showed yet another distinctive trait: collecting degrees for himself and his family members. Shivajirao Patil-Nilangekar, BA, MA, LLB, found time even as chief minister to submit a PHD thesis to Nagpur University on 'political awareness, mobilisation and change in Marathwada'.

It is, by any reckoning, an extraordinary inventory of professional degrees that the Nilengekar clan accumulated, even as the head of the family exercised his clout as a minister in various cabinets since the early '70s. But it was only after Nilangekar unexpectedly became chief minister last June and came into the limelight that the scandals involving the family's pursuit of degrees started becoming public.

Sharad Patil, Nilengekar's second son, was admitted to the MS course at the Lokmanya Tilak Memorial Medical College (LTMMC) in Bombay last December even though he plainly lacked the necessary qualifications. According to the rules, a medical graduate is eligible for the post-graduate course only if he has passed the subject he wants to specialise in (Sharad's case, general surgery) less than three attempts, and the whole MBBS examination in less than four attempts. Sharad had cleared the surgery paper as well as the MBBS examination on his third attempt from the Government Medical College in Nagpur, but the first part of the admission rule clearly denied him eligibility for the two MS seats at the LTMMC.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

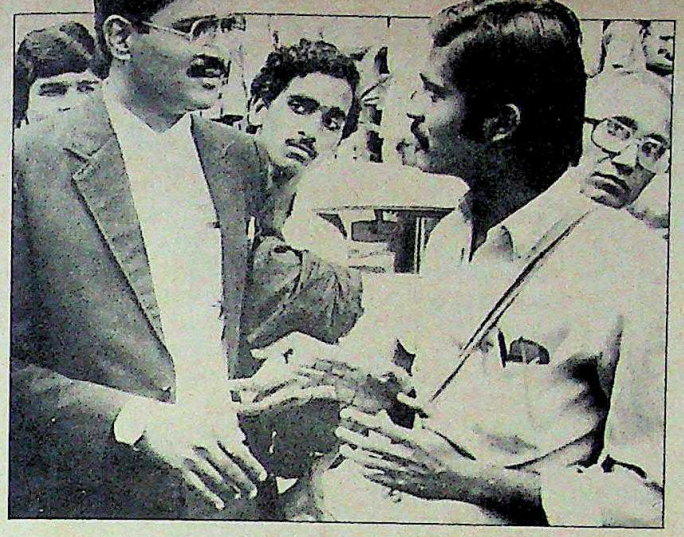
But Sharad was admitted to the post-graduate course after the college authorities were prevailed upon to consider only the second half of the admission rule. That still left the problem of a candidate who was denied a seat even though he was ranked higher than Sharad on the merit list. The deprived candidate slapped a writ petition in the high court which he withdrew after the college hastily created another seat to accommodate him.

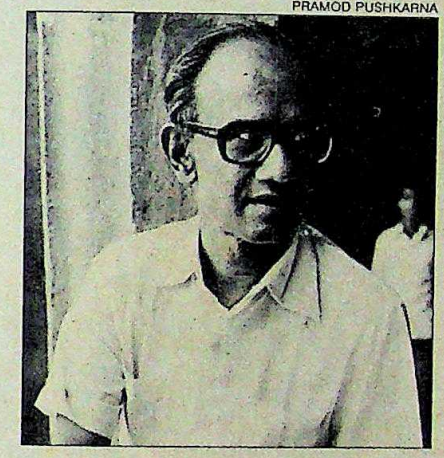
Chandrakala's husband, Arun Dawle's quest for specialisation in cardio-thoracic surgery has an even more scandalous history. He held a non-transferable post as lecturer in surgery at the Swami Ramanand Teerth Rural Medical College at Ambejogai in Beed district of Maharashtra when, in 1982, he married Chandrakala Patil-Nilangekar.

Dawle's fortunes changed shortly after. On April 15, 1982, the state director of medical education and research ordered Dawle's transfer from Ambejogai to the Grant Medical College (GMC) in Bombay. His appointment as lecturer in surgery at the Bombay college was subject to two conditions: that his services would be terminated when the Maharashtra Public Service Commission (MPSC) selected a candidate for the post, and that he would not be allowed to enroll himself for any post-graduate course.

Just three months later, Dawle applied for the MCH (cardio-thoracic surgery) course. Besides the fact that this was explicitly ruled out at the time of his transfer, he was ineligible since he had not held any hospital housepost in cardio-thoracic surgery. In his letter opposing Dawle's application, the head of the department of surgery at GMC, Dr Jejuriker also pointed out that it would not be possible for Dawle to be a lecturer and work in the cardio-thoracic ward at the same time. Jejuriker was soon faced with open defiance from Dawle. His insubordination and irregular absences from college were repeated, and no amount of pleading from a helpless Jejuriker to higher officials about Dawle's behaviour made any difference.



PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



Gosavi and Thorat (above); and Arunchalam: legal drama

All that happened was that letters were exchanged between Mantralaya, the Directorate of Medical Education, the Pay and Accounts Office, the college and Dawle. Finally, hardly a month after Nilangekar became chief minister, Jejuriker was summarily transferred to Sholapur. The transfer orders, quite extraordinarily, were signed by the chief minister himself. Jejuriker, a respected senior professor, immediately took voluntary retirement.

But this was not all. Long before Jejuriker was transferred, in October 1983 the director of medical education and research ordered the appointment of Dawle to the more specialised post of lecturer in thoracic surgery, in place of Dr Y.C. Agnihotri who was transferred to Aurangabad. But when Agnihotri filed a writ petition his transfer order was withdrawn and he was promoted as a reader.

Dawle's appointment as lecturer in thoracic surgery clearly stated that it was "on purely temporary basis for a period of one year...or till the post is filled through the Maharashtra Public Service Commission". Last year Dr Krishnarao Narayan Bhosale was selected by the MPSC for the post of lecturer in thoracic surgery at the GMC. But before Director of Medical Education B.R. Kate could issue the appointment order, he was summoned by Nilangekar, now chief minister, on October 25 and instructed to withhold the order "till he (the chief minister) goes through the relevant file of Dr Bhosale's appointment.." That is where the matter of Dr Bhosale's appointment stood until the MD examination scandal involving Chandrakala surfaced and Dawle was quickly posted back as lecturer in surgery.

As if these scandals reverberating through several colleges in Bombay University were not enough, a newspaper report from Nagpur suggested there were problems with Nilangekar's PHD thesis as well. He submitted it last December, but the doctoral candidate's MA degree identifies him as S.B. Gaikwad. Questions were raised at a meeting of the Nagpur University's academic council, but Nilangekar's guide, an old college friend, gave the assurance that "the name would be corrected". A Congress(I) MLA from his district confirms that Shivajirao B. Gaikwad is in fact Nilangekar's real name—he changed it to the more high-sounding Maratha title Patil to help him along in politics. But there were also accusations that material for the thesis was actually collected by someone else, that the thesis could have been ghost-written and that PHD candidate "S.B. Gaikwad" never visited the university even though the rules require that he should conduct research work there for at least two years.

And, it is now clear, when the children lacked the calibre to acquire the degrees on their own, there was the doting father ever willing to use his political clout to help them along.

—M. RAHMAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

JAMMU & KASHMIR

Suspended Animation

THE END, when it came was completely in character, not a swift, clean termination like the scything of a rice stalk but a reluctant, lingering demise more like that of an over-ripe Kashmiri plum finally falling, decaying and malodorous, to the ground.

Like most things political, there was more than an air of the theatre and a touch of the farce to the demise of the state Government in Jammu & Kashmir last fortnight. Here was chief minister Ghulam Mohammad Shah demurring on March 6 at urgent summons from Governor Jagmohan in Jammu, pleading on the long distance line from Delhi that he hadn't got a ticket on the morning flight. Two weeks after communal riots swept the Kashmir valley, the Congress(I) had withdrawn its support of the Shah Administration, and he knew what the summons were all about. When a special aircraft was laid on for him the next day, Shah decided he wanted first to go home to lunch before stopping by at Raj Bhawan.

Not unexpectedly, Shah wasn't alone at 'lunch', hosting 10 of his Cabinet colleagues. And suddenly his party—the National Conference(Khalida) (NC-K)—which had shouted from the roof-tops that Farooq Abdullah was corrupt and anti-national (a Cabinet subcommittee had even published a detailed report to prove this) announced its own dissolution and merger with the National Conference(Farooq) (NC-F)! But wait a minute, said some of Shah's colleagues, this isn't what we had bargained for. At least six of them immediately announced that they had no intention of rejoining Abdullah whom they had deserted in a dawn defection on July 2, 1984. Three days later, spurned by the NC(F), 14 of Shah's ministers announced that since the NC(K) had ceased to exist, they were forming a separate group of their own, leaving Shah and his wife Khalida to their own devices.

By then the curtain had long come down on one of the most blatantly contrived state governments in the country (INDIA TODAY, July 31, 1984). On the afternoon of March 7, unwilling to await Shah's pleasure any longer, Jagmohan had despatched a four-line dismissal even as Shah, armed with his letter and the NC(K) dissolution resolution, finally arrived at Jagmohan's doorstep. Thus the dismissal and resignation crossed each other on one of Jammu's overcrowded streets leaving a nice little conundrum for future historians—to decide whether Shah had resigned or been dismissed.

Governor Jagmohan listening to grievances in Srinagar: welcome move

But the reaction to Jagmohan's act of suspending the Assembly and declaring Governor's rule was no mystery. Like the almond blossoms that made a premature appearance in the Kashmir valley last week, it promised the start of a new season of hope, ending a 20-month regime in which, according to a calculation made by Panthers Party chief Bhim Singh, curfew was imposed in one location or other a full 157 days. "We will give our full cooperation and strengthen the hands of the governor," declared Begum Abdullah, Farooq's mother and NC(F) MP for Anantnag whose party had been agitating for precisely this all these 20 months. Abdullah's political partner, Mirwaiz Maulvi Farooq of the Awami Action Party (AAP) said: "We must restore health to Kashmiri politics, the state of affairs was such that Governor's rule was necessary for a while." People's Le[illegible]

MLA Abdul Ghani Lone said it was "a step in the right direction, we've been asking for it for a long time". Congress(I) leaders saw it as a vindication of their growing distrust and dislike of the Shah regime and Srinagar industrialist Ghulam Moiuddin Mattoo expressed a widely held view when at a meeting of leading citizens he told Jagmohan: "People are not normally happy at the imposition of Governor's rule, they want popular government, but it is a fact that today there isn't a child who hasn't welcomed it."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Jagmohan himself said that the widespread popular reaction was evidence that he had done the right thing. Hartals and agitations that had become daily occurrences in the wake of last month's communal disturbances abruptly ended. Meeting scores of political representatives, leading citizens and common people, Jagmohan moved quickly to phase out the curfew that had been in force in parts of the state since February 19. He said: "My first priority is to bring about communal harmony and confidence among the minorities. We have to reform and reorganise the administration, to give it a humane and enlightened face, to make it more progressive. We will concentrate on development and the environment."

With typical zeal, Jagmohan lost no time in getting to grips with the state's bewildering problems, and his early actions and words reflected much of what had gone wrong. Turning down demands for an inquiry into alleged corruption during Shah's rule—which would keep officials tied up investigating the past rather than focussing on the problems at hand—Jagmohan nevertheless began to undo several of the wrongs perpetrated by the Government. For instance, he reinstated Srinagar Divisional Commissioner Hamidullah Khan and Deputy Inspector General of Police A.M. Wattali, who in December 1984, had successfully prevented any rigging of the Lok Sabha election in which Abdullah's men trounced the candidates of both Shah's party and the Congress(I).

Shah's government had last year superseded the state's 3,000-odd panchayats, local bodies, elected municipalities and town area committees and appointed its own people to run them—and handle the vast sums of money they controlled—triggering off widespread charges of favouritism and corruption. Said Abdullah: "He got rid of all the democratically-elected institutions, be it the municipal committee, or the panchayats which are the basis of our democracy. He disbanded them and put his own people there." Jagmohan quickly undid this decision, handing over responsibility for these bodies to the concerned deputy commissioners.

SUMAN DUBEY

RAJU KERNI

Shah with newsmen after his resignation

MUCH of the criticism of the Shah government had to do with alleged nepotism and corruption in appointing people to government jobs. Recruitment boards were abolished a year ago, and appointments were effectively being made by ministers. A pamphlet put out by the state Government in December said the jobs of 5,000 teachers had been regularised and another 10,000 people had been appointed to government jobs cutting through red tape. In fact, these appointments are widely alleged to have been made out of political considerations.

"This is the only state in which MA's and BA's were ignored and matriculates appointed schoolteachers because they happened to be related to ministers," said one highly placed individual. Last month the Kashmir Times published a still-undenied verbatim transcript of a quarrel between Shah and his agriculture minister Dilawar Mir at a cabinet meeting, which suggests that only 70 per cent of police recruits were taken on merit—the remaining being made at the instance of ministers. According to instructions issued recently, ministers had to clear all appointments, even those of casual labour and Class IV employees. Bhim Singh, who has filed over 100 writ petitions in the Jammu & Kashmir High Court and the Supreme Court challenging the decisions of the Shah government, alleges that the jobs carried hefty price tags.

Jagmohan intends to set up a statutory services selection board along the lines of a Public Services Commission to appoint people to government jobs. He intends to put eminent people on a guaranteed three-year tenure in charge so that they are insulated from political pressures. The board will make senior appointments and lay down guidelines and policies for all others, whetting them before they are finally made.

Among other things on the cards are a flying audit squad to look into alleged fiscal malpractice at short notice and an institute that will prepare people of the state for competitive jobs, such as elsewhere in the country. "The UGC awards 1,000 merit scholarships each year; there hasn't been one from Jammu & Kashmir," says Jagmohan.

But it wasn't these alleged malpractices or even the allegations of cor-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ANANTNAG

A Tragic Tale

ON THE afternoon of March 3, a venerable kazi, or priest, at the Anantnag mosque tells a well-attended prayer meeting that a Muslim deputy superintendent of the armed police (DSP) in Jammu has died, slain by marauding mobs, defending the honour of his wife. The next day, the state administration fetches the DSP and his family to Anantnag and presents him to a public gathering of 2,000 people to prove that the kazi is wrong. Rumour.

In Qaimoh village in Anantnag district, Mohammad Amin shouts angrily as he talks of a Muslim gujjar girl stripped naked in Jammu by Hindu mobs, an event the local administration in the city avers has never taken place. Rumour.

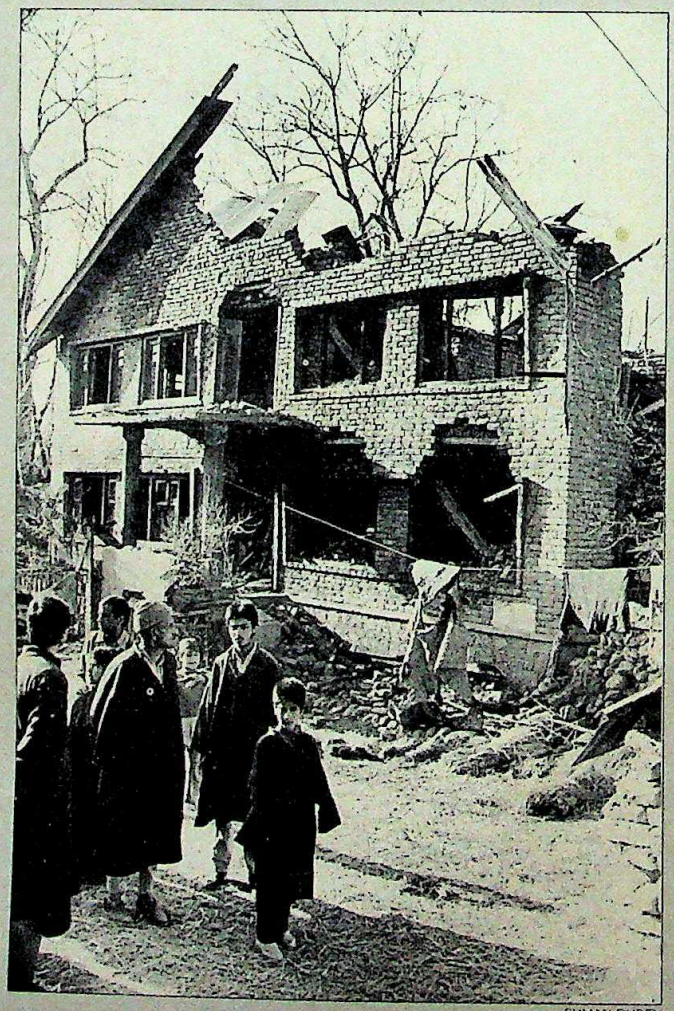
In Anantnag, a police officer says that bus-loads of migrant workers arriving in the valley alight at the first villages along the main road and speak of the massacre of Muslims across the Banihal and the imminent arrival of "truck-loads of dead bodies". More rumour.

In Delhi, the local Kashmiri Samaj puts out a "fact sheet" using highly charged words and phrases like 'genocide', 'mass-scale rape and molestation of women' and 'people beaten or stabbed' to describe what has been happening in the valley. Still more rumour.

Any one of these bits of fiction which swept Jammu & Kashmir last month would have sufficed as a spark in a dry tinder-box. In the face of the barrage of misinformation, the wonder is not that there was communal violence in the emotionally surcharged atmosphere that came to prevail in the state, but that it did not take a still greater toll. Violence there was in plenty: scores of homes burnt and looted, temples destroyed and damaged, shops raided, moveable property ruined, people threatened. But in a manner that could only be peculiar to Kashmir, not one person was killed, not one person deliberately injured, not one woman molested in a bout of violence that eventually undid a government.

Sadly, for a region that has prided itself on communal harmony, it was the first eruption of communal violence in living memory. "In all of Jammu & Kashmir, we have never fought on communal lines as in other parts of India. We have always participated in each other's festivals and processions," said former Janata Party member Jagat Mohini. "We are ashamed of these things, and we will make sure they never happen again," said Awami Action Party leader Mirwaiz Moulvi Farooq.

House destroyed on February 20



SUMAN DUBEY

In the heat of the moment, the miniscule Kashmiri Pandit community, which numbers a mere 60,000 to 70,000 in a population of nearly 6 million in the state and was the target of the violence, spoke agitatedly of abandoning their villages and homes and resettling elsewhere in the country. Political delegations that toured the affected areas reported a break down of administration.

There were scores of scattered incidents of stone-throwing, looting and arson in places as far apart as Baramulla, Sopore, and Srinagar. But it was in Anantnag district, the region that straddles the Jammu-Srinagar national highway as it cuts out of the Banihal range and enters the valley of Kashmir, that the worst events took place.

Dhanau is a small village of some 110 homes, 60-km south of Srinagar. Retired sub-inspector of police Janaki Nath Butt belongs to one of some 30 Kashmiri pandit families in the village, many of whom live in well-built new homes decorated on the outside with colourful floral patterns that make them easy to identify. Last fortnight the three-storeyed home he shares with two brothers was a blackened shell, surrounded by the charred relics of arson: burnt books, furniture, clothes and paraphernalia.

"It was around 2 p.m. on February 20 when my neighbour Mohammad Maqbool came to me and warned that there was a juloos (procession) heading towards our village," he recalls. Butt had someone carry his 90-year-old mother into a neighbour's home and had her dressed in Muslim clothes. He hid his scooter and fled to another neighbour with his brothers and their family members. Then the mob struck. "There were about 300 or 400 and they robbed us of everything gold and cash, and they burnt my scooter." As the residents tell it, the mob came from the nearby villages of Khadwani, Redwani and Qaimoh. They burnt seven homes and damaged and looted another seven. Among the other casualties were two temples and a dharamshala.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Another village that bore the brunt of the violence was Wanpoh, on the main highway 52 km from Srinagar and within a stone's throw of Anantnag. H.N. Razdan was celebrating his birthday on February 20 with a puja when the mobs—again from the same villages centered on Qaimoh—struck. Swami Damakakji's samadhi built in 1982 by Hindus and Muslims was damaged, as were two temples, several shops and homes. Tej Nath Kaul lost an oil expeller for which he had taken a Rs-50,000 bank loan. Avtar Krishan Raina's radio shop was burnt and he managed to save the situation by halting a military convoy that happened to be passing.

TIME and again, it was elderly Muslim neighbours that came to the help of the besieged Pandits. Shyamlal Butt of Wanpoh was at work in Anantnag but his wife was taken into Abdul Khaliq's home. Bhushan Lal Bal was saved by Dilshada Akhtar, an elderly neighbour, who held up the Quran and had the courage to tell the scores of young marauders that they were acting against its teachings.

"I know who they were but I'll never reveal their names," said schoolteacher Shyamlal with unexpected fervour. "After all, I have to live among them. They were small children when I taught them, today they have moustaches." Not everyone regards the future with such stoicism. Most of the victims have refused anything more than immediate relief. They've spurned the Rs 5,000 per destroyed house and Rs 3,000 per plundered shop and home that the administration sanctioned immediately.

Like many others of Qaimoh, from where some of the mobs allegedly came, Abdur Rahman was worked up over what he believed was injustice against the Muslims and violence against them in Jammu. In an impassioned diatribe, he spoke of convoys that came from the southern, Hindu dominated part of the state bearing families of Muslim government employees fleeing for their lives, of the Babari mosque in Ayodhya being converted into a temple.

Unlike so many other rumours, there was unfortunately an air of plausibility about some of this which seems to have triggered off last month's violence. Earlier in the year, in a bid to facilitate Friday prayers and prevent Muslim employees of the Secretariat from absconding every Friday afternoon, chief minister G.M. Shah ordered a disused store be converted into a prayer room. Such a room had been prepared in the Srinagar Secretariat without fuss. D.D. Thakur, who was Shah's deputy, said that the decision "could have been avoided", and he would have advised against it had he been in Jammu at the time.

Unfortunately for Shah, the room chosen was allegedly part of a samadhi and the city's Shiv Sena, a rag tag organisation of a few hundred set up with the ostensible purpose of protecting Hindus, immediately protested. The authorities say that the Shiv Sena has more muscle than popular following, but Shah chose to bend to its demands—giving it a new found status. Worse, he decided to allow the construction of a temple for secretariat employees. Not only that, Shah, the assembly speaker, and several MLA's attended a feast, to mark the occasion which gave the Shiv Sena added respectability.

Events—and communal passions—snowballed after that. When the Ayodhya affair took place, the Shiv Sena took out a procession in which provocative slogans were mouthed and weapons allegedly carried and fired without police intervention. The city's Hindu Raksha Samiti, eyeing the growing stature of the Shiv Sena with alarm, organised its own campaign, opposing the temple and mosque close to the Secretariat.

The crunch came on February 19 when the Sena, the Samiti and the Muslim Action Committee, which includes functionaries from Shah's National Conference (Khalida) (NC-K), organised separate protests, the last named demanding that the Government provide protection to its Muslim employees in Jammu for the winter. At a meeting addressed by G.M. Bhadrawahi, a minister in Shah's cabinet, the committee demanded the dismissal of the Chief Secretary R.K. Takkar and Director General of Police M.M. Khajuria for allegedly allowing the Shiv Sena to run riot. Shortly after that, a number of Muslim families were reportedly loaded into trucks and sent off to Srinagar. With this backdrop, the violence could have been anticipated.

—SUMAN DUBEY in Anantnag

ruption (INDIA TODAY May 31, 1985) that proved to be the undoing of the Shah government. The immediate provocation for Shah's departure was, of course, the communal violence aimed at the Kashmiri Pandits (see box) and the sharpening of communal tensions in a state known hitherto for its communal harmony. Trouble in the state in 1983, in Punjab in 1983 and 1984 and continuing uncertainty these past weeks played havoc with the state's tourism earnings, and the economy suffered. But the deeper reason was that the illegitimacy of the Government finally caught up with it. Shah came to power in July 1984 on the shoulders of defectors from Abdullah's National Conference. The defections reduced Abdullah to a minority and the Congress(I), plunged in to support the defectors—and get a slice of power without actually participating in the Government.

NOT THAT Shah was an unmitigated disaster. He did begin to undo the eclipse of the IAS and Indian Police Service, a direction which had been set by Sheikh Abdullah's government. During his time, the state Government had asked the Centre to reduce the cadre strength of the IAS from 107 to 78 and proposed to elevate the status of the Kashmir Administrative Service. Four months ago that request was withdrawn.

But the arrangement was doomed from the start, and survived only because it was being propped up by New Delhi, anxious to have a regime in Srinagar which it could control by proxy. Unfortunately, that isn't the way the electorate saw it. In the public mind, Shah was a usurper, he lacked legitimacy. Not surprisingly, Shah and his ministers remained confined, unable to address public meetings or move about freely. The longer it went on, the worse it became. Dependent on each of his ministers for his political survival, Shah couldn't control them even if he had wanted to. Lacking cadres and public support, the Government sought help no matter from where it came, even if it meant patronising such dubious bodies as the Shiv Sena in Jammu (see box) and turning a blind eye to the rapid growth of influence of the Jamaat-e-Islami in the Kashmir valley. "He was a captive chief minister, captive to a set of circumstances he himself created in July 1984," says one official. "It was history taking revenge."

It was, in fact, a farcical situation. Shah ruled not knowing what the next day would bring. His partner in power, the Congress(I), began to criticise him openly.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

and raised a clamour for his removal. His ministers, knowing that they were in it for a brief while, focussed less on governance than on their own interests. The Congress(I) didn't know whether to function as a coalition partner or an opposition, and finally the governor made little attempt to conceal his distaste for the kind of politics that the state had fallen to. Some people called it a political vacuum, others total chaos, a state without leadership, without administration and with growing anarchy.

It couldn't last, and challenged by an increasingly more popular Farooq Abdullah, the cracks in the Shah regime widened. Shah's enigmatic and abrasive personality had more than a little to do with it. He seems to have had few friends even within the circle of his own party, and one of his colleagues admitted that there were temperamental problems in the Cabinet. Ministers fell out and it was no secret—as subsequent events have proved—that many of them quarrelled openly. Deputy chief minister D.D. Thakur resigned last December but was persuaded to take back his resignation. The state unit of the Congress(I), recognising that it was losing public credibility, began to press the Centre to terminate the arrangement. Said Congress(I) MP from Jammu, Janak Raj Gupta: "We were feeling suffocated, but for the sake of party discipline we remained silent witnesses to all that happened." For the last few months, there were no meetings of the coordination committee of the NC(K) and the Congress (I).

It wasn't only the politicians that were protesting. Jagmohan's gubernatorial reports emphasised the alarming breakdown of the administration, widespread corruption and the growing alienation of the Government from the people, a particularly dangerous occurrence in a sensitive state subject to interference and extremist instigation from across the border. But the Centre appeared to be reluctant to take the plunge fearing that Governor's rule might be seen as external interference and could be grist to the mill of anti-national elements as happened in Punjab after the dismissal of the Darbara Singh ministry in 1983.

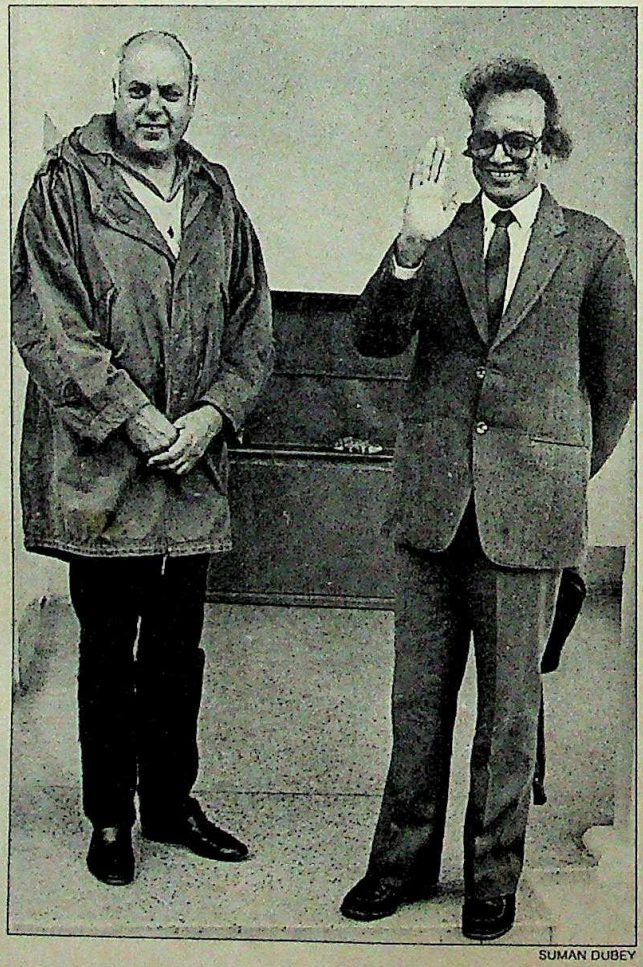
MORE important, of course, was the realisation that with Shah and, in tandem, the Congress(I) losing ground, the main beneficiary of Governor's rule would be their common political foe, the NC(F). Abdullah's standing in the Kashmir valley has risen dramatically since his dismissal as chief minister in 1984. The imposition of Governor's rule would naturally be seen as a victory for Abdullah who has been agitating for it ever since then.

These considerations weighed heavily when Congress(I) Vice-President Arjun Singh visited the state for an on-the-spot study in early February amidst widespread expectations that a change was imminent. Singh seems to have encouraged the feeling when he told newsmen that the Government would "keep the national interest in mind" in whatever decision it took. Summoned to Delhi, Shah and Thakur talked with Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi—and earned a reprieve which demoralised a highly expectant Congress(I) in the state.

The communal riots that erupted on February 20 were the last straw—yet the Centre took its own time in pulling the rug from under Shah's feet. Mounting unpopularity prevented Shah and Thakur from visiting the affected areas, and it was left to Jagmohan to offer succour to the victims, to seek the active cooperation of Abdullah and the Mirwaiz—and bring back the story of administrative breakdown and police inaction on February 20 and the days immediately following. At least four Congress(I) MLA's from Jammu, fearful of a complete erosion of their credibility with their voters, let it be known that they intended to vote against Shah in a no-confidence motion scheduled for March 3 (the Assembly session was, in fact, postponed to March 8 and then March 18). But action didn't come till both former Union home minister S.B. Chavan and Minister of State for Internal Security Arun Nehru had visited the state. Jagmohan again appealed for action, and the aggrieved Kashmiri Pandits demonstrated in the capital.

Even so, Shah and Thakur made a strong bid to continue in office. As Thakur said: "It was wrong to terminate the arrangement at the time of communal riots when the atmosphere was surcharged. We argued if you want to, do it in a different context, but doing it now would indicate that the Government was being dismissed because it didn't act strongly enough against the majority community."

The argument didn't carry, though, and after prolonged consultations on March 6—aimed mainly at trying to see if any other arrangment could be worked out to salvage the Shah government—the high command gave Congress(I) state chief Mufti Mohammad Syed the signal to pull out. Later that night, Maulvi Iftikhar Hussain Ansari, leader of the party's legislature wing, sent a letter to Jagmohan withdrawing the party's support to the NC(K). Said Mufti: "Shah couldn't manage it."



Farooq with Jagmohan: promise of support

SUMAN DUBEY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Police battling rioters in Srinagar couldn't manage the party or the law and order situation."

For his part, Jagmohan doesn't have much time to manage things either. Six months is what the state's constitution permits, and though there are probably ways of extending Governor's rule if it is found necessary, the chances are that the state will begin to get restive if elections aren't called soon. NC(F) spokesmen are already asking why the governor did not dissolve the Assembly. Said former law minister P.L. Handoo: "If the Assembly is not dissolved, I fear that there will be horse-trading." Charges former education minister Mohammad Shafi: "It has already begun, the Congress(I) is chasing people with bags of money."

ABDULLAH has already made it clear that he intends to take no one from the Shah group, and that he is not interested in forming a government till after the elections. Earlier, he spurned overtures from the Congress(I) and has spoken harshly of the defectors who brought down his government in 1984. "I've learnt to differentiate between friends, opportunists and enemies," he says. Indeed, the state's administration is in such a mess that a popular government would find it virtually impossible to push through the kind of reforms necessary. And, it is just as well that the governor happened to be a man who has considerable hands-on experience at running administrations. Jagmohan's Emergency tenure in Delhi was controversial, but he has considerable experience of—and interest in—urban planning and renewal, and his spell in Goa, and in Delhi at the time of the Asian Games proved him to be a man of action.

Even so, Governor's rule will mean unpopular decisions, difficult decisions which may, for instance, affect those who have encroached on the Dal Lake, or undeservedly got themselves jobs they cannot handle. Says Abdullah: "Governor's rule is meant to be unpopular. He is sitting in a seat where he will have to take unpopular decisions to straighten up the state. I'm saying he should go ahead because I'm the man who will have to face the people tomorrow and tell them why this was done. You can't straighten up a state by putting sweets in everybody's mouths."

Nor is it a permanent solution, but if Jagmohan is able to bring the state's administration to good health and facilitate the installation of a popular government he will have played an invaluable role. As the Mirwaiz said: "The lesson to everyone is that a policy to disregard the established leadership will not serve any purpose. A kind of chaos, uncertainty, confusion will develop and the tendency of violence and communalism can grow. If the people feel their will has not been respected, this affects their thinking."

Shah and his fellow party men, in whatever manner they describe their political colours now, are the obvious losers. The irony is that the July 1984 toppling has probably undone much of the progress the Congress(I) recorded in the state, increasing its share of the vote in the valley almost three-fold to 28 per cent in the 1983 election over 1977, and it is doubtful if the party has emerged unscathed. With popular feeling on both sides of the Banihal running against those identified with Shah, Farooq Abdullah has emerged as the only winner out of the sordid events of the past two years. And if the next elections, whenever they are held, return him to office another state will have been thrust irrevocably, once again, into the grip of a regional party.

But this time, perhaps, there will be a difference. Abdullah believes that he was dismissed because the late prime minister Indira Gandhi was sent the wrong signals about him, because there was "an atmosphere of mistrust, basically a loss of communication. This time I'm going to make sure that the communication will remain with the Centre, and I will not wait but personally go there to explain, to clarify the situation rather than allow it to drift. One learns from experience."

—SUMAN DUBEY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Burning Issue

A LEGISLATOR almost immolated himself last fortnight in Bihar. The drama began to unfold at the Assembly complex in Patna shortly before the budget session when Janata Party MLA Taslimuddin Ahmed sat on dharna and threatened to burn himself outside the Assembly on the opening day of the session if the Government did not punish the police and subdivisional magistrate of Araria in Purnea

Ahmed on dharna: seeking justice district. These authorities, the legislator alleged, had implicated him in a false criminal case to settle scores and destroyed his house worth lakhs of rupees on the pretext of attaching his property. The authorities and the legislator traded allegations but before things could get worse, the Government promised an inquiry and Ahmed withdrew his threat.

K.M. KISHAN

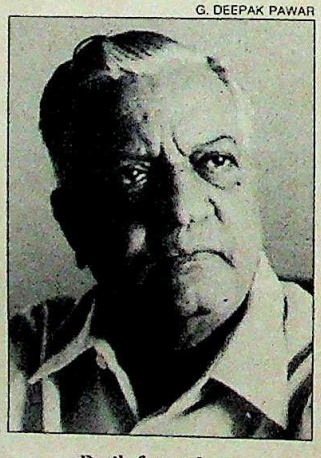
Hitching Hitch

G. DEEPAK PAWAR



Patil: few takers

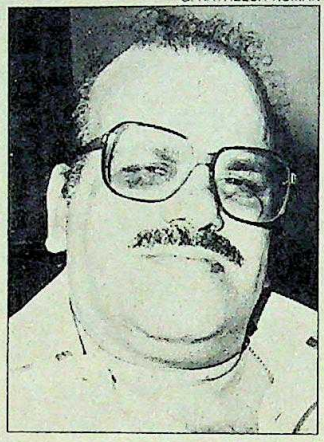
KARNATAKA Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde has devised a scheme to help poor couples get married without any expense. Under the scheme, every couple who ties the knot gets a pair of free dhotis for the groom and a pair of saris, blouses and a gold mangalsutra for the bride. To identify couples for the scheme, the Government has stipulated that either the bride or the groom should have the 'green card' that entitles poor families to subsidised rice and cloth. Another condition is that at a time, not less than ten couples should get married. Perhaps it is because of these conditions that the scheme, started early last year, has found few takers and only 398 marriages have been performed so far. But Social Welfare Minister V.L. Patil doesn't think that the scheme has failed. He says: "This is still something new and not known well enough to attract more couples."

Child Marriage

CLOSE on the heels of the Indra Vishnoi case has come the case of another minister involved in a child marriage. Kerala Irrigation Minister M.P. Gangadharan was accused in court by journalist T.A. Rajendran of marrying his daughter Bindu off before she could be 18. Rajendran alleged that the minister had the daughter's age changed in her school register after the complaint. The first class magistrate at Kunnakulam in Guruvayoor issued summons to Gangadharan, his son-in-law and son-in-law's father finding a prima facie case of violation of the Child Marriage Abolition Act. But the minister said that the complaint was not valid as it has been filed more than a year after the marriage. Saying that the issue was too "minor" to merit a resignation, he threatened to move the high court. But before the fortnight was through, Gangadharan had quietly resigned.

Gangadharan: defiant

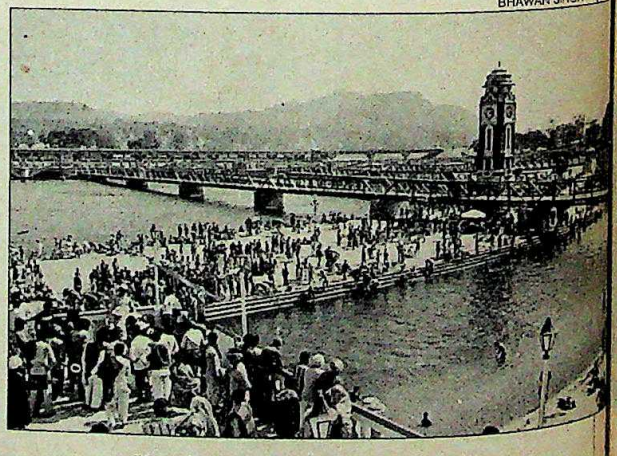
G. RATHEESH KUMAR



Mela Mess

ALL ROADS coming into the Doon Valley in Uttar Pradesh led to the Kumbh Mela last fortnight which went into high gear on March 14 with the first mass holy dip in the Ganga. The festivities, expected to attract an estimated 30 lakh pilgrims, were being held along a 68-square-mile area stretching along the Ganga river from Haridwar to Rishikesh.

BHAWAN SINGH



Har-Ki-Pauri: poor arrangements

But arrangements were poor. Congestion above Haridwar's famous Har-Ki-Pauri made movement almost impossible. And the stench from the open public latrine was odious and overpowering. The arrangements—or the lack of them—made the troubled pilgrims wonder what had happened to the estimated Rs 10 crore which had been allocated for drainage, sanitation and other facilities at the mela.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Capture a divine moment. Take it home.

Now the honeymooners can spend a quiet week discovering each other rather than discovering other honeymooners.

Vayudoot, India's only feeder airline, offers you the holiday of your lifetime. With fabulous package tours ranging from a mere Rs. 495 to Rs. 2150 per person.

Here's a preview of the destinations: The pink city of Jaipur built in the likeness of the 'tone of the autumn sunset'. Jaisalmer, with its historical relics preserved inside a rugged stone wall three miles round. Cherrapunji, the wettest place on earth. Shillong, with one of the most beautiful golf courses in the world. And the magical and mystical Kulu Manali: a veritable paradise for honeymooners.

The package includes to-and-fro airfare, hotel accommodation, and of course transportation between the airport and the hotel, and to all the local sightseeing spots.

For more information on these package tours, contact a leading travel agent. Or any one of Vayudoot's offices listed below.

Discover India Discover yourself

वायुदूत Vayudoot

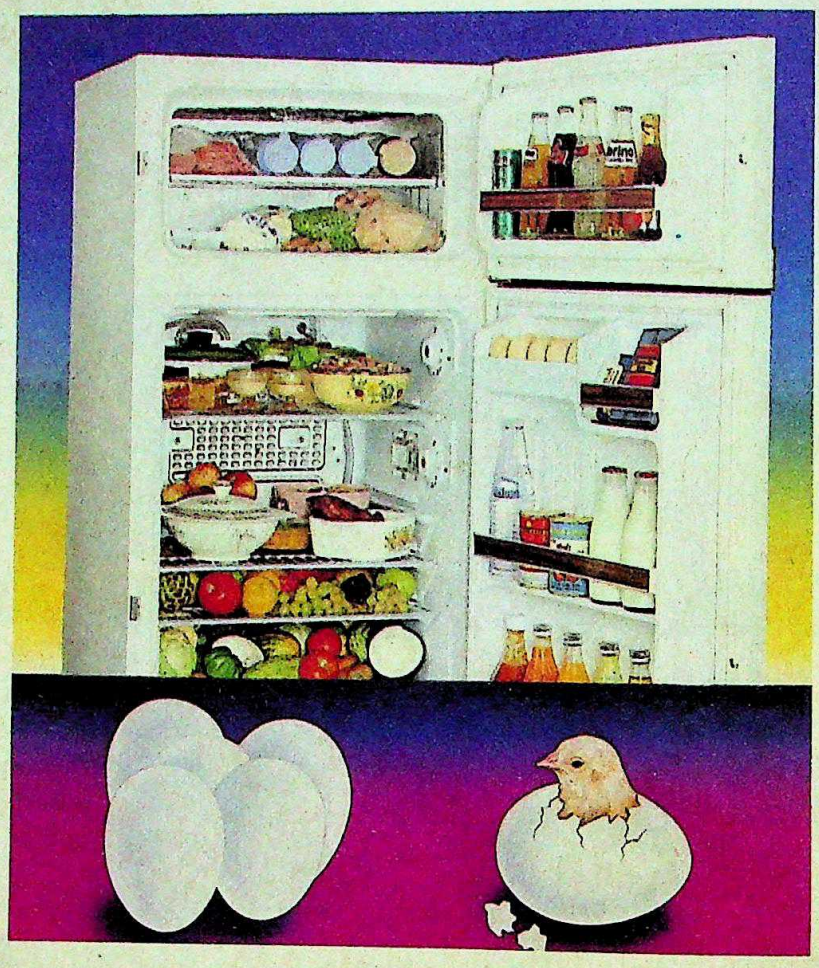
Vayudoot Package Tours. There's one for everyone.

Vayudoot Limited: Malhotra Bldg., F Block, Connaught Circus, New Delhi 110 001 Tel: 311 2587, 311 2379, 311 5768 • Air Lanka Wing, Terminal I, Bombay Airport, Santa Cruz, Bombay 400 099 Tel: 6121405, 6121397 • Esso Substation Bldg., Dum Dum Airport, Calcutta 700 052 Tel: 447062 • First Floor, Terminal Bldg., Begumpet Airport, Hyderabad Tel: 70171 Ext. 263.

Rediffusion/DT/4542

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Why some people wait for an Allwyn



Japanese technology is the reason why Allwyn always sells to a waiting list.

Unmatched trouble-free service. Unbeatable performance. Smooth, silent efficiency.

That's the new Allwyn 2000 SL series of refrigerators for you, backed by the confident guarantee of Japanese technology.

A compressor made under licence from Hitachi sets the pace ... for smooth, silent operation.

The unique Roll Bond freezer offers "super-cooling" in double-quick time.

Allwyn consumes 10% less power. It is designed to operate on 170 to 250 volts. No need for a voltage stabiliser.

A self-draining system makes for easy defrosting.

Allwyn comes in 85, 165 and 300 litres single door models; and 165, 300 and 380 litres double door models, giving you the freedom of choice — by design.

Finally, a life-time of Instant service. Available from the largest network of dealers throughout the country.

And that is yet another reason why ...

7 YEAR GUARANTEE

ALLWYN

2000 S L REFRIGERATORS

UNDER LICENCE FROM HITACHI

An Allwyn is for always

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UNITED KINGDOM

Breaking Barriers

JUST AS Britain's astringent film critics were singing a collective requiem for the country's cinema soon after celebrating British film year, they have suddenly sat up to take notice of a small-budget, unpretentious, made-for-television film, My Beautiful Laundrette.

Directed by Stephen Frears and written by Hanif Kureishi, Laundrette is an impressive commercial and critical success having won the highly-rated London Standard's best film of the year (1985) award last month. Laundrette was originally made for channel four television—the country's innovative-minded network—but prudently released in the movie circuit and first attracted attention during the Edinburgh film festival.

The two principal protagonists of Laundrette are Omar, a sleek and supple Pakistani youngster (played with a whippy, feline deftness by Gordon Warnecke, a London-born actor who has worked in a variety of fringe and community art theatre) and Johnny (Daniel Lewis, seen recently in Gandhi and The Bounty), a strutting, punk-coiffed, unemployed white youth who has latterly become enticed by the execrable strong-arm politics of the National Front.

The setting is unspecifically in South London's skinhead-haunted Purlieu, placed against the dark smouldering background of friction between blacks and whites. However, the focal point of the film is pitched on the brittle relationships within a sprawling and securely settled Pakistani family.

The kingpin of the family is the resourceful plutocrat, the middle-aged Nasser (played with an artful, vulpine dexterity by Saeed Jaffrey), owner of several prosperous businesses. He is an energetic, self-confident entrepreneur who is able to take anything offered by "this country we so love and hate".

Confronted by his expatriate chums as to why he is so busy "trying to keep this damn country in the black", Nasser responds with one of the film's most telling indictments: "I am a professional businessman, not a professional Pakistani." Radically different from Nasser is his brother—a somewhat scholarly, left-wing journalist (another finely-judged, laconic performance by Roshan Seth)—Omar's papa—who lies in bed all day fuelled by his intellectual principles and his vodka bottle.

What else can Papa do but recommend his 18-year-old Omar to his well-heeled brother? 'Omo' is seduced by his uncle Nasser to look after a laundrette ("I'm not in the dole queue, Mrs Thatcher will be pleased with me"—says the wily Nasser). He is also seduced unsuccessfully by his lubricious female cousin Tania (Rita Wolfe), but with greater elan by Johnny, his former school buddy who is caught between a political passion for the coarse tenets of the National Front and an incisive raw sexual passion for "Omo".

Using money nicked from a slithery, drug-smuggling relative, Salim (Derrick Branche), Omar and Johnny revamp the run-down laundrette into an amazing palace with flashy, lurid neon-signs on the facade, hokusai-style wave murals, fruit machines and piped puccini for their bewildered clientele. The bizarre laundrette flourishes briefly, as the film—hitherto a spry and jaunty comedy—takes a dark turn when Omar and Johnny become lovers—unexpected passionate clinches in a darkened car, kisses in a love-nest in the back of the laundrette. Director Frears and writer Kureishi attempt to evolve a form of stylised racial integration thru L'amour Fou as taboos, both social and sexual, political and interpersonal begin to disintegrate, along with the main characters.

Lewis (left) and Warnecke in Laundrette

Nasser's bustling entrepreneurial zeal (he had only recently advised Omar; "You must know how to squeeze the tits of the system") flags as his problems escalate. His sexual life is in ruins when his dignified and untarty white mistress, the fur-dripping Rachel (Shirley Ann Field), leaves him when Nasser's cuckolded wife puts a spell on her. Omar's papa is anxious about his son's libido. His Smirnoff-ravaged brain cannot comprehend why on earth his Omo will not marry the luscious Tania. He demands of his son if his penis is in working order. The old radical has not discovered his Omo is in fact a homo. Vividly revolving around the story is a gang of zero-IQ skinheads who force a final showdown with their erstwhile mate Johnny.

Laundrette is a perilously poised parable. It has been condemned by the expatriate Pakistani community for "pandering to western tastes" and portraying immigrants as grotesque caricatures. The real objection however is to the stark homosexuality—a feeble argument by any account. The flaws in the film appear to lie elsewhere. To begin with—its format—the flat and square television image—is a problem. Its slender story line notwithstanding, Laundrette has missed a fine opportunity to portray the cross currents and confusions of contemporary Britain's melting pot.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The excruciating dilemmas confronting Nasser's family—especially his hapless, conservative wife, his liberated daughter, hardly gets a look. In Britain, debates about its multiracial society abound. While in such centres of immigrant concentration like Southall and Wembley, Leicester and Bradford, many Asian families struggle to make adjustments—tradition-bound elders speaking chaste Urdu or Punjabi striving to come to terms with their cockney-speaking youngsters brought up on a diet of television sitcoms like Eastenders and rock music. Such issues and the problems of inter-racial manners are bypassed in Laundrette. There are fleeting references about home as one chic Karachi expatriate nostalgically speaks about "bridge, booze and VCR". Another hates the thought of going back to a country "sodomised by religion". Where this subversive comedy succeeds is that Kureishi has managed to prise the glutinous and mindless focus of Britain away from the Raj. One English critic described Laundrette as a gay "west side story" transposed to Thatcherite South London. It seems a pity that this whimsically crackpot tandem—the odious National Front teaming up with the seraphic Indian subcontinent—does not produce a fresh, revealing and spin-dried view of the anxieties and predicaments of immigrants in the United Kingdom.

(From left) Warnecke, Field and Jaffrey in a scene from the film

—RAMESH CHANDRAN
in London

HANIF KUREISHI

Cult Figure

FROM writing steamy porno stories to becoming one of Britain's most fashionable young playwrights, Hanif Kureishi, 32, has come a long way in a remarkably short time. Half-Pakistani, half-English, Kureishi has in a flash become the toast of the tottering British cinema having authored this season's voguish, popular hit, My Beautiful Laundrette.

He was born in South London of a Pakistani journalist father who works with the high commission and an English mother. He went to an "ordinary" English school and later read philosophy at King's College. He was, he says, raised to be a writer and had his first play Soaking Up The Heat, presented at the Royal Court when he was just 18, while his second play, The King And Me, was produced as a Soho play in January 1980. His first full-length stage play, The Mother Country, won him the Thames Television Playwrights award for 1980. His subsequent plays like Borderline and Birds of Passage received a fair measure of critical consecration.

As Kureishi told INDIA TODAY, the clamorous reception accorded to Laundrette by London's normally sulphurous critics and its commercial success has left him "pleasantly surprised". Currently, Kureishi is writing a book called The Rainbow Sign about the England of the '60s—the bilious years of Enoch Powell—and the Pakistan of the '80s where Islamic culture has consciously been made pre-eminent. His comments on contemporary Pakistani life-styles are now likely to create a fresh rumpus.

Kureishi: provocative

A preview of what is in store was revealed when an extract was published by the magazine Time Out in which he argues that Islamisation under the martial rule of General Zia hasn't bred a society of zealots but a generation bent on hooch, heroin, videos and yoga—a generation that longs to leave Pakistan.

He argues that the over-emphasis on dogma and punishment strengthened the repressive, militaristic and nationalistically aggressive state with the added bonus that in Pakistan, god was always on the side of the Government.

His provocative views have rankled the sensibilities of immigrant communities in the past. He once refused to be on the panel to judge the work of black writers because he thought they should not be considered a race apart. When he took Borderline to Southall—bastion of the Sikhs—some radical groups were furious. They tried to get it banned since it showed an Asian girl sleeping with her boy-friend. In his defence, Kureishi says: "All I can say to these people is, are there no homosexuals in the Pakistani community and do not Asian girls sleep with their boy-friends?" He feels Asians ought to be depicted like anyone else—neither as saints nor sinners.

—RAMESH CHANDRAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDO-SRI LANKA RELATIONS

The Colombo Chill

IF YOU have to sup with the devil use a long spoon, is an adage that the Tamil militants battling for a separate Eelam state in Sri Lanka have long believed—and practised. It is, in hindsight, a tactic that the Indian Government is ruefully realising would have perhaps served them better in its dealings with the Jayewardene Government over the Tamil issue. The sudden and strident exchange of charges and countercharges telegraphed between the two countries last fortnight clearly marked an ignominious and abrupt end to the cosy honeymoon New Delhi had naively embarked upon with Colombo. It also signalled the Indian Government's belated determination to adopt a markedly tougher posture in its role as peace-broker between the two warring sides.

In what was easily the strongest statement to emanate from South Block since Rajiv Gandhi came to power, the Indian Government accused Sri Lanka of trying to "find an alibi for the failure to engage in constructive negotiations", and of "casting personal aspersions" on External Affairs Minister Bali Ram Bhagat, who in the midst of a stormy Lok Sabha debate over the Indian Government's handling of the Sri Lankan crisis, had issued the provocative remark that the action of Sri Lankan security forces had "the elements of genocide". Bhagat also suggested that it was time the Sri Lanka Government came up with a time frame in which to find a political solution to the problem. Bhagat's remarks predictably produced an equally provocative tirade from Colombo, which fell back on its time-worn tactic of once again accusing India of assisting and encouraging training camps for Tamil militant groups in Tamil Nadu. Colombo's statement also said that: "The value of the proferred good offices of the Indian Government stand impaired and its credibility diluted."

The Indian Government then put the seal on its abrupt about-turn by taking the rather extreme step of stopping the Indian cricket team's impending visit to Sri Lanka for the Asia Cup, scheduled for end-March. The sudden and mutual escalation in the verbal war has fragmented the fragile hopes for peace that the negotiation process initiated by the Indian Government in 1983 had tentatively raised. But in many ways, it was somewhat inevitable. "There was a growing chasm between the professions of the Jayewardene Government and their actions", says a Foreign Ministry source. "There were just too many contradictions in their approach to the issue."

Senior Indian diplomats involved backstage in the covert negotiations between the two governments produce a long drumroll of instances to prove the point, starting with Jayawardene's initial acceptance of the 'Annexure C' proposals stitched together by then chief Indian negotiator G.Parthasarathi, and his subsequent about-face. More recently, a prominent Indian columnist tape recorded an interview with Jayawardene in which he flatly stated that they were only interested in a military solution, a statement he has now denied.

The clincher came when Colombo sent signals that they were willing to consider the three crucial issues contained in the latest amended proposals worked out between Foreign Secretary Romesh Bhandari and the moderate Tamil United Liberation Front (TULF)—the land settlement issue, the law and order proposal asking for a Tamil police force and the proposal to merge the northern and eastern province. Sri Lankan strongman Lalith Athulathmudali, indicated that they were willing to give in substantially to the first two and would even be willing to negotiate further on the third. The peripatetic Bhandari once again put a Colombo sticker on his bags and flew to Madras en route to Sri Lanka. The day he left, a special courier arrived from Colombo with a 58-page document containing the Sri Lankan reaction to the TULF proposals. "They bore no relation to the discussions we had been engaged in uptill that time," said a foreign ministry source. An embarrassed Bhandari had to fly back from Madras, sadder but wiser.

The bottomline, however, is that the Indian Government seems to be finally convinced that President Jayewardene and his advisers have decided that there is only one solution to the problem—the military option. Sri Lanka's indisciplined security forces, bolstered by the recent

The Indian Government is finally convinced that Jayewardene has decided that there is only one solution to the problem—the military option.

RAGHU RAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

acquisition of a wide variety of weaponry from rather dubious sources, have escalated their brutal anti-Tamil offensive alarmingly in the past two months through their cordon-and-search operations (INDIA TODAY, March 15). The fact that the main victims of the crackdown—concentrated in the eastern province—have been innocent Tamil civilians put additional pressure on South Block to undertake a major review of their policy.

Finally, political realities, hitherto ignored, put the torch to the funeral pyre of India's peace initiative. Apart from the uproars in Parliament last fortnight, with members, not just from Tamil Nadu, baying for the Foreign Ministry's blood, the AIADMK Government in Tamil Nadu has made it clear to the Congress(I) that the sole reason for its shock defeat in last month's municipal elections was the electorate's disgust with its attitude towards the Sri Lankan situation. In the latest round of high-level meetings chaired by the prime minister to review the Sri Lankan policy, the participants included G. Parthasarathi, who had been sidelined on Sri Lankan affairs at the request of the Jayewardene Government, and Tamil Nadu's Electricity Minister, S. Ramachandran.

Neither could the Indian Government ignore the fact that the refugee population from Sri Lanka has started to reach alarming levels in terms of the financial burden involved in their upkeep. Since December 1983, a total of 1,24,828 Sri Lankan Tamils have fled across the Palk Straits in fear of death or destruction of their homes by the Sri Lankan security forces. In fact, the Indian Government has now asked Sri Lanka to share refugee expenses.

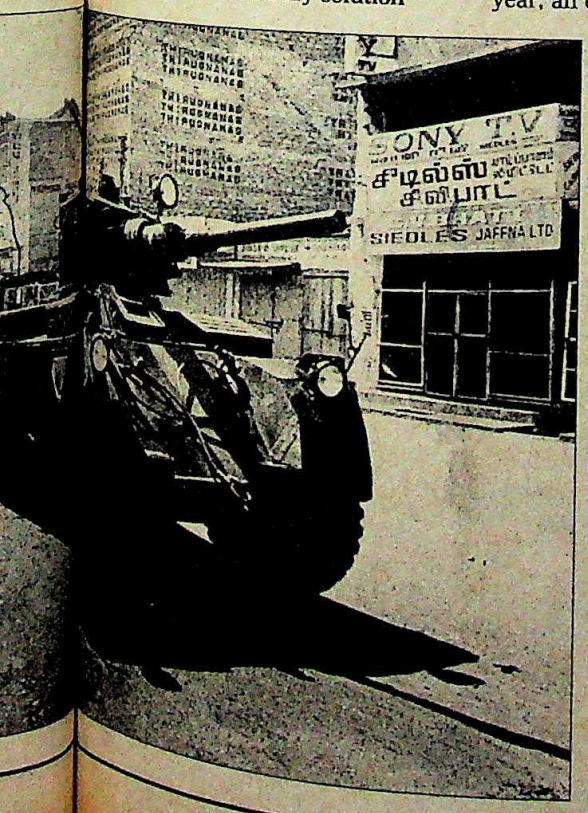
THAT Colombo had decided to concentrate on its desperate search for a military solution was patently obvious. But the increasing involvement of Pakistan in that hitherto futile search was added reason for India to harden its stand. According to defence and intelligence sources, the major source of Sri Lanka's arms acquisitions in recent months has been Pakistan, followed by South Africa, Israel, UK, China and Singapore. From Pakistan, the Sri Lankans have acquired a large amount of heavy and medium artillery in the form of 25-pounder field guns, 130 mm medium guns and rocket-propelled grenades, apart from an estimated 10,000 small arms in the form of rifles, light machine-guns and mortars. Latest reports say that the Pakistan Government has also promised Colombo six helicopter gunships.

Pakistan's involvement extends well beyond weapons supply. In the last one year, an estimated 8,000 officers, junior commissioned officers and other ranks have returned from Pakistan having completed courses in counter-insurgency, artillery, junior commanders training and basic training. Pakistan is also reportedly training Sri Lankan air force and naval pilots. In Sri Lanka itself, their security forces are being trained by the comically-named Keeny Meany Services, an outfit made up of former Special Air Services (SAS) veterans who have served earlier in Oman and usually do not operate in foreign countries without the tacit approval of the British Government.

In addition, Sri Lanka has acquired 150 armoured cars and personnel carriers from South Africa and Israel, 21 Bell helicopters from Singapore which are being converted into gunships, six SIA Marchetti aircraft from Italy for strafing and an equal number of Cessna 337's for surveillance. It has also bought 50 patrol boats and 40,000 land-mines in the past year. All these acquisitions have inflated the country's defence budget from Rs 17.71 million in 1982-83 to Rs 57.65 million in 1985-86, and encouraged further confirmation that the only course the Government is bent upon taking is a military one.

The Indian strategy, with its peace initiative having virtually collapsed, is to mount an international campaign to put external pressure on Sri Lanka. Much of its hopes rest with the US. During his recent visit to Washington, Bhagat raised the issue with the US Administration which has reportedly expressed support for the move to get the Jayewardene Government to exercise more restraint on its security forces and adopt a more reasonable attitude towards finding a peaceful and mutually acceptable solution to the ethnic crisis. At the same time, India strongly condemned Sri Lankan atrocities before the Human Rights Commission in Geneva last week, indicating that New Delhi is determined to pull out all the stops. But that could also mean that New Delhi might just be in the mood to allow the Tamil militants to resume their arms training on Tamil Nadu soil, which would put the clock back to a level where it would once again resemble the ticking of a time-bomb.

—DILIP BOBB

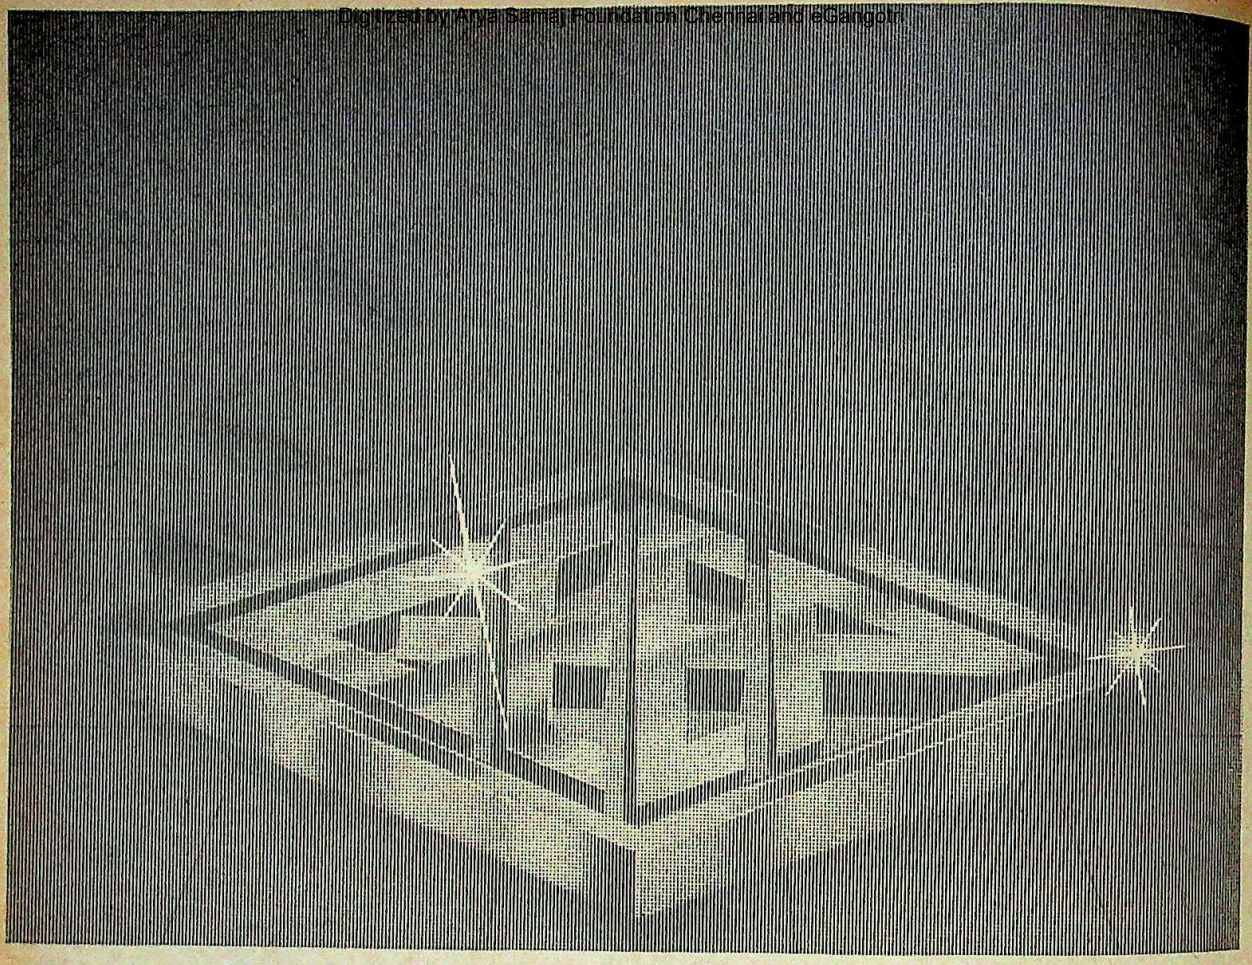


Sri Lankan armour prowls Jaffna streets; search for a military solution

External Affairs Minister Bali Ram Bhagat issued the provocative remark that the action of Sri Lankan security forces had the elements of genocide.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Symbol of Growing Indian Confidence

Late forties. A great civilisation took rebirth as a modern, vibrant nation. It was only during those days, GEEP (then Great Eastern Electroplaters Ltd.), under the pioneering leadership of Late Mr. M.R. Shervani, dedicated itself to the Indian people.

Inspired by the national will of self-reliance, GEEP produced the first Indian torch with a total indigenous effort. Later, it added dry cells and miniature bulbs to its product line.

GEEP. Now a vast manufacturing and marketing conglomerate. A product of totally Indian effort. Driven by a philosophy of reliability and care. Care for its shareholders, employees, customers and the society in which it exists.

GEEP

(A Shervani Enterprise)

Geep Industrial Syndicate Limited

A national pride

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IN THE PIPELINE

THE GOVERNMENT has added yet another dimension to the suspense-filled story of the Hazira-Bijaypur-Jagdishpur (HBJ) pipeline contract. After two official bodies have already examined the matter and given in their recommendations, the Government has appointed another committee to look at which of two types of turbines—aero-derivative or industrial gas—should be used in the compressor stations that will help pump gas through the 1,700-km pipeline. The five-member committee has been given a fortnight's deadline to hand in a verdict. The word in the construction industry is that the Government could decide to delink the supply of turbines from the rest of the pipeline-laying contract. If that is true, the committee's appointment may not lead to further delays in awarding the job to one of the four consortia in the running for it. But it will almost certainly spark off a controversy over the chopping and changing of the contract, for it could affect the decision on which company gets what contract.

BACK AND FORTH

THE INDUSTRY Ministry has shot down an attempt by the Department of Electronics (DOE) to swing the controversial optical fibres project to the Madhya Pradesh State Electronics Development Corporation. The Public Investment Board had earlier given the green signal to Hindustan Cables Ltd to manufacture the high-tech substitute for the copper cables that transmit telex and telephone messages. Nevertheless, DOE apparently pursued the Madhya Pradesh unit's case, arguing that funds would not pose a problem because a private company could be roped in for funds. The Ministry has now pointed out that the project is reserved for the public sector. The much delayed Rs 29-crore venture could be delayed further: a fresh round of tendering by foreign firms is now on.

FRESH LOOK

THE DEJECTION among automobile industry aspirants over the Government's new cold-shoulder attitude may not last. For, contrary to reports that the Cabinet has rejected all applications for new car projects, the Government has merely postponed its final decision. Meanwhile, it has asked the Industry Ministry to prepare a comprehensive policy paper on the automobile industry, taking into account all the relevant issues, including economies of scale, the expected foreign exchange outgo and the overall transport policy framework. This policy paper will be ready in a month, after which the Government will look afresh at the applications for car manufacturing licences.

SURGEON'S SCALPEL

THE GOVERNMENT is going ahead with its proposal to close down five major public sector companies or merge them with other units. The Tanneries and Footwear Corporation of India, Scooters India, Engineering Projects India Ltd, the Cycle Corporation of India and Hindustan Steelworks Construction Ltd have incurred total losses to the tune of over Rs 200 crore. While Engineering Projects employees pointed out that the company's major losses arose on two foreign projects, Hindustan Steelworks' unions claimed that the firm had hefty orders in hand. But the Government remains unconvinced.

HARD ON SOFTWARE

THE FUR could soon fly on the computer software front. Software manufacturers have banded together to form an association and at least two firms, Computer Point and Indian Organics, are seriously thinking of sueing a high-profile pirate. The software industry is plagued by piracy, and even a few well-known computer companies have not been above importing cheap software, plagiarising it and flogging it in the domestic market. But a host of firms is poised to launch software in the country, and they can make a go of it only by coming down heavily on pirates. So some plan on taking recourse to an amendment in the Copyright Act about 18 months ago which enlarged the scope of the law to cover software. The Government too is worried that software exports may not take off if piracy is rampant: foreign firms may prefer to place manufacturing orders in a country where their software will not be copied.

MINUS POINT

WHATEVER credit Finance Minister V.P. Singh may get for his achievements on the tax front, he has failed on one crucial issue: getting a surplus on the revenue account in the budget, for use as investment under the capital account. The budget used to have such a revenue account surplus till 1978-79, but this gave way to a revenue account deficit in 1979-80 of Rs 694 crore. By the time Singh took charge of the ministry, this deficit had grown to Rs 3,497 crore. This year, the originally budgeted deficit figure on the revenue account was a phenomenal Rs 6,060 crore, but has been revised to Rs 6,446 crore. Worse, the revenue deficit is expected to grow next year to Rs 7,308 crore.

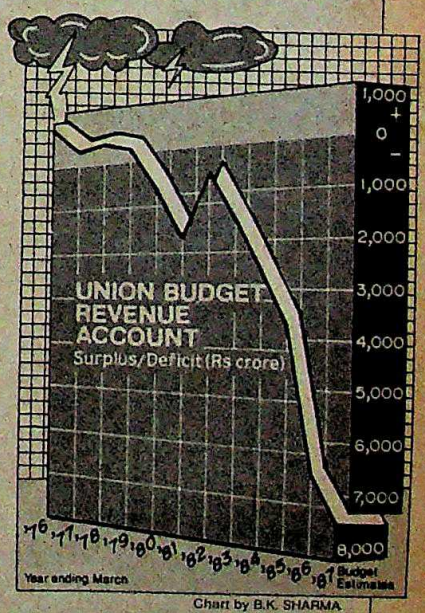


Chart by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE BUDGET

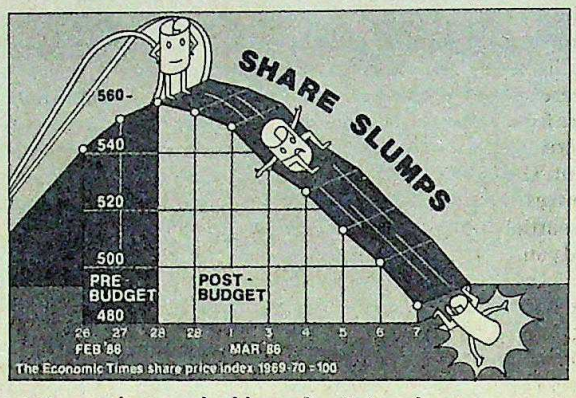
The Balancing Act

THE STOCK-market, as always, is a barometer of the economic mood. And if Finance Minister Vishwanath Pratap Singh's maiden budget last year sparked off an unprecedented boom in share prices, his repeat exercise last month had the opposite effect: the share price index headed for a precipitous crash before finally beginning to pull out of its tail-spin late last fortnight.

That initial reaction was understandable. For Singh's budget was greeted with an uproar of protest from industry, both big and small, while the middle class—almost delirious with the tax breaks it had got last year—was lukewarm this time despite his handing out tax concessions of close to Rs 50 crore to salaried employees.

More important, the Government seemed anxious for the first time to get rid of its pro-rich image: it announced unprecedented increases in the outlays on anti-poverty programmes, the same programmes which a leading government spokesman had been dismissive about a year ago. And, trimming its sails still further to the political winds, the Government reversed its earlier tax policy on a wide variety of consumer durables and slapped on new levies that will make everything from cars to television sets and refrigerators more expensive. Finally, in a significant step that indicated official disappointment with the textile industry's response to the tax cuts announced last year as a part of the new textile policy package, some of the taxes on textiles were moved up again.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

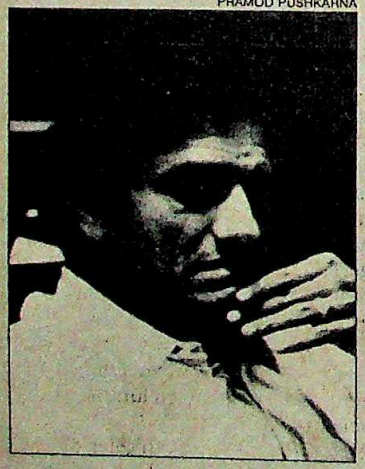


The lesson of the budget was clear: if economics shapes politics, the reverse is just as true, and politics is now beginning to re-shape the Government's economic policy. While doing this, if Singh tried a finely balanced tightrope act by trying to counter the impact of the new levies with evenly distributed carrots, the end result was not what he may have expected: broad swathes of taxpayers turned on the Government in anger and dismay, while a precious few were rooting for the tax changes and the new spending patterns announced.

Inevitably, the loudest cries of protest last fortnight were from the very sections that had been hailing the Rajiv Government a year ago, for the budget rocked the corporate world. Small businessmen threatened to launch a nation-wide protest, Maruti Udyog's cars and vans were likely to cost Rs 12,000 more, and TV manufacturers warned that sales would drop 35 per cent because of the increased duties.

All three—small industry, automobiles and electronics—constitute the fastest growing sectors of industry, and all three will suffer some setback in terms of growth. For good measure, some of the

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



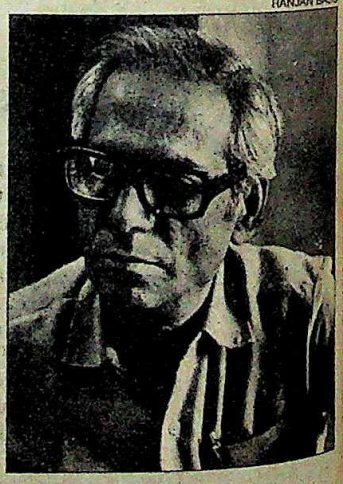
"Certain provisions in the budget have eroded the confidence generated by the last budget."

RAMESH MAHESHWARI
president, AIEI

"The small print in the budget has greater punch than the headlines."

ASHOK GARWARE
vice-chairman and managing director Garware Nylon

RANJAN BASU



"It is a pity that one arm of the Government gives, another takes away."

N. DUTTA
president, FASSI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

fastest growing companies in the country said their own growth rates would falter because their tax burden would go up following the fiat against capitalising interest charges on projects (see box) and the scrapping of the investment allowance. Meanwhile, a run was feared on the Unit Trust of India (UTI) because of the withdrawal of a tax concession on inter-corporate dividends: companies were expected to pull out over Rs 200 crore from UTI and invest the money elsewhere.

Chaos reigned on the excise front. The Government announced that the prices of trucks would drop because of the partial shift from excise duties to a modified value added tax (Modvat), but both Ashok Leyland and the Tata Engineering and Locomotive Company (TELCO) quickly announced that they would, on the contrary, be forced to jack up prices. Maruti held back deliveries of 1,400 cars and vans, hoping that the Government would do some rethinking.

For good measure, lawyer and tax expert Nani Palkhivala came down hard on a new provision empowering income tax inspectors to walk into people's homes as part of a drive to rope in tax evaders, and termed it the first step towards creating a police state. And on the other end of the political spectrum, leftist economists criticised the small increases in plan outlays on core sectors of industry.

The Government seemed taken aback by the negative reaction. Although a Finance Ministry spokesman argued that the Government was by and large satisfied with the public response, and that the points of criticism focused on a handful of proposals ("This is inevitable in any budget," he said), the Government gave every indication of getting ready to reconsider some of the more controversial points in the budget.

SINGH himself told Parliament that the new powers to income tax inspectors would be reviewed and guidelines laid down to prevent abuse, and UTI may be let off the hook through an amendment of the fiat on inter-corporate dividends being taxed. Even Maruti, it seemed, might get some limited reprieve.

Nevertheless, businessmen remained critical. "The budget," said Orkay Silk Mills Chairman Kapal Mehra, "is a cocktail, a blend of everything that can only result in a hangover." Ramesh Maheshwari, president of the Association of Indian Engineering Industry (AIEI), said: "While the budget has some commendable features, certain misconceived provisions in it have eroded the confidence generated by the last budget." And Ashok Garware, vice-chairman and managing director of Garware Nylons, added: "The small print in the budget has greater punch than the headlines."

Amid this chorus of criticism, the good points of the budget were ignored, partly because the Government itself failed to highlight some of the tax concessions, the best example being the one on house rent allowance. Also, the level of plan spending is unusually good: Rs 20,100 crore will be spent this year (the original estimate last March was only Rs 18,500 crore), and another Rs 22,300 crore next year. So almost 45 per cent of the total seventh plan central sector outlay of Rs 95,500 crore will have been spent in the first two years of the plan, whereas the normal achievement is barely 35 per cent. So, although the Government has failed to keep down the deficit or the subsidy bill, it has maintained the development tempo.

Also, some of the criticism was overblown. For one thing, the budget proposals will not have the kind of sweeping impact that was initially feared: companies like Reliance Industries, for instance, were anxious to emphasise that their tax burden would not go too far out of line because of the withdrawal of the investment allowance and the refusal to permit the capitalisation of interest. For another, a leading multinational company worked out sums to show that the lower corporate tax rate and the substitute for the discontinued investment allowance more than make up for the scrapping of the invest-

INCOME TAX

Saving Grace

INDIA is supposed to be one of the most heavily taxed countries in the world. But, with the new tax concessions granted in the budget by Finance Minister V.P. Singh (the higher standard deduction limit and the improved tax break on house rent allowance), it is possible to earn close to Rs 4,000 a month, and still pay no income tax.

Among the several people who realised this a couple of days after Budget day was Rajiv Vaidya, a 32-year-old middle-level executive in a construction firm in New Delhi. Vaidya gets a basic salary of Rs 2,575, plus 30 per cent of that as house rent allowance (Rs 772), and another Rs 500 as conveyance allowance. The total: Rs 3,847.

Vaidya stays in a three-room flat in north Delhi, and pays Rs 800 every month as rent. He also has some basic savings: 8 per cent of his pay is deducted by the company for his provident fund (Rs 206). The monthly premium on his Rs 30,000 life insurance policy, which he took when he got married, is Rs 94. And he has made it an annual practice to buy national savings certificates worth Rs 2,500, which he hopes will build up to a tidy sum by the time his 3-year-old daughter is of marriageable age. For this, he sets aside Rs 200 every month in a recurring deposit account with his bank.

So his total monthly savings (if you include the company's matching contribution to his provident fund account) come to Rs 706.

He is finally left with after all the savings and after paying his house rent, Rs 2,547, which Vaidya finds a reasonably comfortable sum for running his scooter, paying the fees for his daughter's nursery school and for meeting his domestic expenses.

Vaidya's office accountant worked out the accompanying table, to show him he would be paying no income tax in the coming year.

RAJIV VAIDYA'S PERSONAL FINANCES

	(In Rupees)
BASIC PAY	2,575
30% HRA	772
CONVEYANCE	500
TOTAL SALARY	3,847
DEDUCTIONS:
PROVIDENT FUND (8% of basic pay)	206
INCOME TAX	Nil
TOTAL DEDUCTIONS	206
TAKE HOME PAY	3,641

CALCULATION OF TAXABLE INCOME

	(In Rupees)
SALARY	2,575
HRA to extent taxable (10% of salary)	258
CONVEYANCE ALLOWANCE (not taxed as spent on duties)	Nil
GROSS TAXABLE INCOME	2,833
LESS STANDARD DEDUCTION (30% of salary, with a ceiling of Rs 10,000 p.a.)	833
DEDUCTION ON PF, LIC & NATIONAL SAVINGS CERTS.	500
TOTAL DEDUCTIONS	1,333
NET TAXABLE INCOME	1,500
TAX EXEMPTION LIMIT	1,500
INCOME TAX BURDEN	Nil

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ment allowance. The AIEI disagrees with this finding, but clearly the effects of the new tax regime are not going to be disastrous.

Also, most of the changes had been mentioned in the long-term fiscal policy last December, and discussed endlessly since. And Bimal Jalan, chief economic adviser in the Finance Ministry, maintained that small-scale industry should have no real reason to complain: "The Government has given small business tax concessions worth no less than Rs 75 crore in the budget."

Nevertheless, sections of small industry may be badly hit. N. Dutta, president of the Federation of Associations of Small Scale Industries (FASSI), illustrated this with the case of a stainless steel utensil unit in Malda, West Bengal. The unit got an investment subsidy of Rs 1 lakh by going to a backward district, but it is no more exempt from excise duties and will now have to cough up Rs 93,000 in taxes. Said Dutta bitterly: "What one arm of the Government gives, another takes away."

BUT THE real disappointment in the budget may turn out to be Modvat, the innovation that industry has been clamouring for over the past decade. Based on the principle that taxes on inputs are taxed again in the final product (leading to a cascading effect), Modvat modifies this by giving set-offs for taxes on inputs. The result, however, has not been the drop in costs and prices that both the Government and industry had been hoping for; indeed, prices in most cases have gone up with the introduction of Modvat. A government official grinned at the unexpected result of the innovation, and said: "May be industry was wrong, then, in talking so much about the cascading effect of taxes."

Right or wrong, there were indications that after the initial chorus of protests, industry was beginning to recognise that it could live with the new tax regime. If this was the message of the late upswing on the stock-markets, then V.P.Singh may well have managed to survive his tightrope walk by balancing the stick with the carrot.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI
with bureau reports

INDUSTRY

Crying Foul

AT LEAST two companies deferred their bonus issues, the stock-markets plunged, and firms gloomily faced the prospect of having to cough up hefty amounts to the Government. Inevitably, a rising chorus of corporate voices forecast mayhem.

The bear that mauled the market and sent many businessmen into a tizzy is a complicated accounting practice that the Government now proposes to abolish retrospectively from 1974. Following a favourable court verdict which the Supreme Court confirmed in 1974, companies had begun tagging on to the cost of assets the interest on the money borrowed to buy the assets. "Capitalising" interest had the obvious advantage of inflating asset values in balance sheets. On the bloated asset values, firms could claim higher depreciation write-offs and claim more of the investment allowance that the Government granted them till this year.

The Institute of Chartered Accountants of India has always frowned on the practice, and chartered accountants have repeatedly added cautionary notes while certifying the annual accounts of the companies that resorted to it. But backed by court verdicts, many firms went ahead nevertheless. The Economic Times reported last fortnight that 26 companies have capitalised Rs 424 crore, while another study put the amount at over Rs 500 crore. The companies include such corporate stars as Reliance Industries (about Rs 190 crore), J.K. Synthetics (about Rs 40 crore),

"Giving a clarification after twelve years on the capitalisation of interest issue is not fair."
F.C. RUSTAGI
president, J.K. Synthetics

Lohia Machines (Rs 13 crore), Ambalal Sarabhai Enterprises (over Rs 10 crore), Orkay Silk Mills (Rs 7 crore) and Wimco (Rs 1.6 crore).

Many of them will have to repay the exchequer some of the rebates obtained on the basis of the higher asset calculation. Exactly how much each will have to shell out is not clear, but last fortnight companies were anxious to clarify that their liabilities would not be back-breaking.

Nevertheless, the criticism was loud and harsh. Said F.C. Rustagi, president of J.K. Synthetics: "The Government had said that the fiscal policy would be long term—prospectively, not retrospectively. Giving a clarification after 12 years is not fair." Added Kamaljit Singh, the vice-chairman and managing director of Wimco, one of the companies that deferred bonus issues: "It is unfair and could create havoc."

After Reliance shares tumbled on the stock exchange, the company hastily issued a press release that its liability would run to Rs 8 crore, claiming that unutilised investment allowance would offset most of the money it would normally have been expected to shell out. Wimco's Singh says that the match company will have to fork out Rs 60 lakh, while Orkay officials put their company's liability at Rs 1 crore.

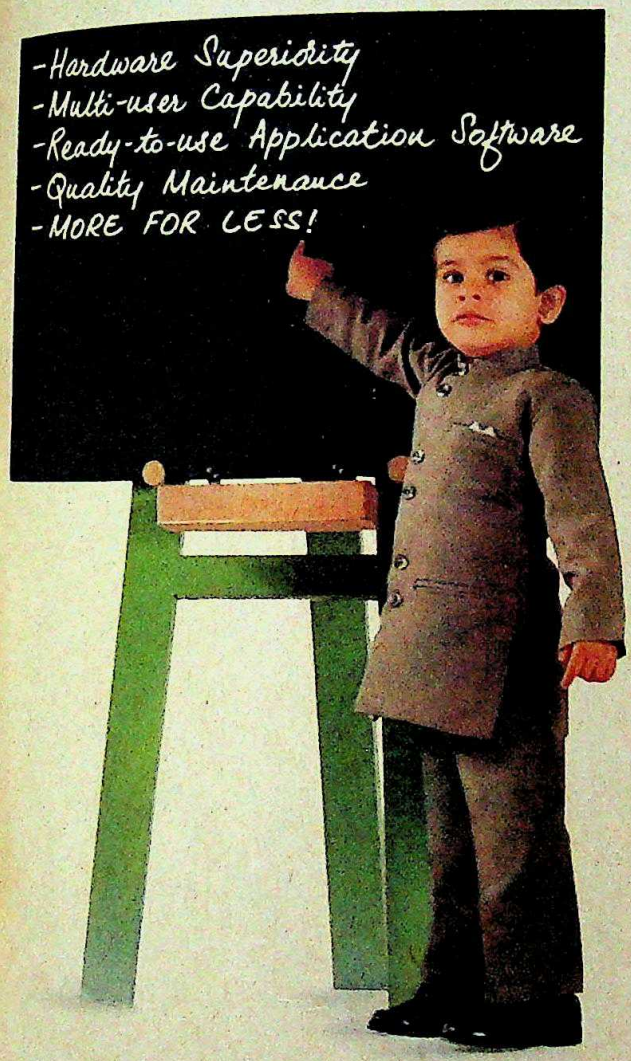
The official edict could have other consequences. With assets being worth less than what balance sheets have been listing, the affected companies' creditors could now ask for more security. The companies will also have to revise their annual accounts for the last several years.

"There will be a lot of other complications," notes Vinay Kumar Jain, chief executive (corporate planning) at Lohia Machines. "Under company law, dividends can be distributed only after the profit is arrived at correctly. The Government's decision means that companies have paid dividends based on incorrect profits." The Government may not put companies in the dock for this. But that will be small comfort to industrialists up in arms over an accounting practice that has finally been buried by V.P. Singh. —PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MOST PCs ARE CREATED EQUAL.



THE WIPRO PC DARES TO DIFFER.

The biggest name in minicomputers now offers you a small business computer.

The WIPRO PC.

It comes with a unique package of benefits.

To begin with, it doesn't stop at being IBM PC compatible. So you can run the entire library of IBM PC software. From Lotus 1-2-3 to Wordstar... dBase III to Flight Simulator. As well as a large number of ready-to-use software packages designed specially for the Indian user. For aspects such as Financial Accounting, Sales Analysis, Order Processing and Inventory Control.

Then, apart from the single user MS-DOS Operating System that runs on the IBM PC, you get the multiuser DBOS†. As well as multi-terminal support. So, up to three people can use the same resources. To run different programs simultaneously.

You also get the multi-tasking Concurrent CP/M Operating System, which lets up to four programs run on the same terminal. Simultaneously.

What's more, it offers extra on-line storage up to 40 MB. An extra large 14" colour or monochrome display. 14 extra keys. Two extra terminals. Four extra IBM PC compatible slots. A whole lot of features that give it the edge!

And the fact that it's from WIPRO means you'll get nothing less than the very best as far as service support goes. Whether it's hardware maintenance or software implementation. Support that makes WIPRO the most trusted name in the computer business.

And even when it comes to price, this package is unbeatable. For Rs 48,000, you get a completely operational, ready-to-use WIPRO PC. Including 256 K Bytes of memory.

So come get your hands on the WIPRO PC. The only limit to how much it can do is your imagination.

The WIPRO PC/XT, which includes a 10 MB Winchester disk drive, 256 K Bytes of memory and a printer, is priced at Rs 70,000.

† Supported only on the WIPRO PC/XT.

To see, hear or know more about the WIPRO PC, call or write to:

WIPRO Information Technology Ltd.
S B Towers
88 Mahatma Gandhi Road
Bangalore 560 001
Phone: 569622 Telex: 845-8356

WIPRO PC

IBM® PC, IBM are registered trademarks of International Business Machines Corporation.
MS-DOS is a registered trademark of Microsoft Corporation.
CCP/M is a registered trademark of Digital Research Inc.

A great deal more. For a good deal less.

WITL-1847

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Mudra APRIL 2019

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

There's no stopping us.

The best way to travel to London is with British Airways. Because we operate a total of fourteen flights a week to London, eight of these being non-stop. Which is more than any other airline.

Add to this our matchless international network from Heathrow, and our Indian stewardesses and vegetarian meals.

For our business passengers connecting from other airports, the new India Gateway Service meet and greet at Bombay and Delhi, plus our Indian Visitors Service at London and you'll find an airline that's renowned for its care and professionalism worldwide. You could say that there's no stopping us.

BRITISH AIRWAYS

The world's favourite airline.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AHMEDABAD

The Washing Well

KARSANDAS Patel may not have realised it when he launched his Nirma washing powder. But Ahmedabad has been turned into the national capital for the detergent industry: not just because of Patel's whitening success, but also because other entrepreneurs in Ahmedabad have jumped on to the bandwagon. Products like KT, Vimal, Hippolin, Amar and Ranjit have copied Nirma's formula for success and are doing comparably dizzying climbs up sales graphs. Today, over 400 such small-scale units dot the industrial suburbs of Ahmedabad.

Of the annual detergent powder production of about five lakh tonnes, three lakh tonnes are produced by the unorganised sector. Of this, Ahmedabad itself accounts for 2.5 lakh tonnes, worth Rs 190 crore, of which Nirma alone is responsible for Rs 110 crore. But the others are not far behind. Vimal already has a turnover of Rs 20 crore, and Hippolin Rs 22 crore.

If Nirma succeeded because of an advertising budget that has grown to Rs 1.5 crore, and a jingle that was heard on practically every street-corner and in millions of homes across the country, the me-too manufacturers have taken a leaf out of Karsandas Patel's book. Almost all of them have opted for expensive advertising through television, created their own jingles that sometimes sound suspiciously like the Nirma original, strengthened the sales network, and shown an unabashed disregard for such virtues as investment in research and development (R&D). Asks one of the manufacturers: "Why should we sink money in R&D? In spite of all its research, Hindustan Lever's Surf will never be able to catch up with us."

Gujarat is, of course, the ideal place from which to launch a detergent revolution. Both the main ingredients for the detergent, soda ash and linear alkyl benzene (LAB), are readily available in the state. Gujarat produces 90 per cent of the country's soda ash, and LAB is produced by the Indian Petrochemicals Corporation Ltd (IPCL) of Baroda.

Inevitably, the personal rags-to-riches stories rival Patel's too. In 1970, when Bhupendra Shah, one of the partners of Hippolin, churned out just one tonne of detergent a day, he never thought that he would one day be producing 35,000 tonnes a year. Armed with an advertising budget of Rs 1 crore and 200 agents in practically every state (compared to Nirma's 400 agents), Shah foresees a sparkling future for himself.

Ahmedabad has been turned into the national capital for the detergent industry. Today over 400 small-scale units dot the industrial suburbs of the city.

Detergents on sale: shining success

Not very different from the Hippolin success story is Vimal's. Started in 1976, producing just 500 kg a day in a shed in Rakhial, the factory has shifted to a 10,000-sq metre complex at Ramol and produces 30,000 tonnes of detergent a year. Amrit Patel, one of the partners of Vimal, said candidly that he got into the business because he saw quick money. He was right. Vimal also plans to come out with a toilet soap next year, at a mechanised plant in Kalyanpura.

Ojas, one of the foremost detergent powder manufacturers in Ahmedabad, hasn't been so lucky. While the others have grown multifold, Ojas still produces 1,200 tonnes a year. With the advantage of having started in 1969, when it had virtually no competitors, it nevertheless stagnated because it took the market for granted and was not adventurous.

Not surprisingly then, the market for the product has burgeoned. In 1980, detergent powder accounted for only 22.4 per cent of the total production of washing soap. This has already increased to 41.2 per cent last year, and is expected to rise to 50 per cent this year. This is mainly due to the easy availability of cheap detergents and the rising prices of soaps because of the scarcity of oils.

Not satisfied with dominating the detergent powder market, Nirma and its competitors are now readying to capture the detergent cake market as well: it seems the only way to be able to cut into the rural scene. Says Jitubhai Kothari, a manager at Nirma: "In villages, the concept of soaking clothes with detergent powder and then carrying it to the pond is alien. So we are making cakes now. Most of them also bathe with the washing soap. So is it not better that they bathe with a soap which is kinder to their skin?"

There is, however, a fly in the detergent. Observing the boom and the colossal profits that the industry was reaping in Ahmedabad, Finance Minister V.P. Singh decided last year to clamp an excise duty of 15 per cent on all units with sales of over Rs 7.15 lakh. The detergent manufacturers protested loudly that they were being singled out unfairly, and blamed the impost on large manufacturers who have been unable to face the competition in the market. But the Government has been adamant. "This stepmotherly treatment has affected us all," wails Surendra Patel, secretary of the Gujarat Detergent Manufacturers' Association.

But the competition, tax burden and mud-slinging notwithstanding, the boom in the detergent industry remains unaffected. The money is still flowing in, mini-Nirmas are born every other day, and the flood of detergent jingles on the box threatens to drown out all the rest.

—RAMESH MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TRADE UNIONS

Making Capital

HE DOESN'T look like your unfriendly neighbourhood moneylender. Short, stooped, with a shock of white hair and lens-magnified eyes, R.J. Mehta is an unlikely candidate for Shylock's role. One of the most respected trade unionists in the city, if not the country, his clutch of engineering, chemical and textile workers adds up to 1,25,000. But for the last few years, between gate meetings and tending his magnificent roof-top garden, Mehta has found time to lend money to a score and more small companies, often at rates as high as 2 per cent a month compounded.

A few kilometres away, at the head of the dusty P. D'Mellow Road which runs along the docks, in a building whose wooden stairs creak ominously, are the headquarters of the New India Cooperative Bank Ltd (total deposits from 12 branches: Rs 28 crore) which has advanced about Rs 16 crore to companies big and small. Such capitalist doings wouldn't be unusual in themselves, but the 18-year-old bank is a trade union enterprise, the brainchild of flamboyant anti-capitalist George Fernandes and his Hind Mazdoor Kisan Parishad (HMKP).

A stone's throw away from the Bombay Central Railway Station is a huge smelly apartment block, one tenement of which is occupied by the Bombay Taximen's Union (BTU). Its General Secretary, Anthony Quadros, a puffy man who sits hunched as if over a steering wheel, manages the affairs of about 40,000 taxi-drivers in Bombay, besides running two petrol pumps and two spare parts shops. For good measure, he is also setting up a small battery-manufacturing unit in Vashi. Six years ago, BTU had hit the headlines by trying to buy the giant Firestone Tyre and Rubber Company.

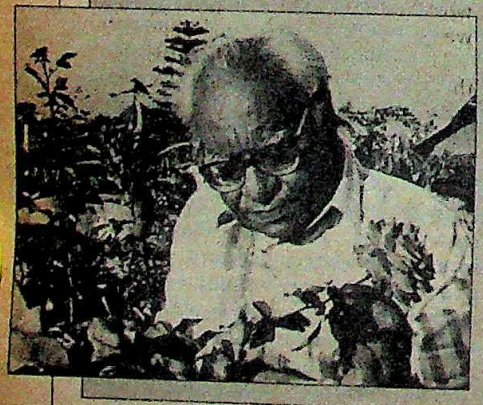
Is all this what Marx would have expected of the leaders of the working class? Perhaps not, but the fact is that some Bombay unions are flush with funds and are branching out into businesses well beyond the trusts and welfare set-ups normally associated with them. Thus S.R. Kulkarni's Port and Dock Workers' Union runs some commodity shops and has bought a small hotel in Lonavla where workers can holiday for a nominal sum and has also loaned Parchas of Holiday Home Rs 15 lakh. But this is a far cry from lending money to the Tatas' flagship companies, as Fernandes' bank does.

But the unions themselves do not see the running of such businesses as deviationist strategy that might subvert the revolution. In fact, as Mehta tells it, he started on the Shylock path in 1973 purely as a goodwill gesture to save the jobs of 650 workers of the Fancy Corporation Ltd, at Lalbaugh—makers of the Hakoba range of fabrics—who were in danger of being thrown on the streets because the partners had fallen out, the coffers were empty and an expected polyester import licence had not come through. The workers were members of Mehta's Bombay Textile Mazdoor Sabha; and to save their jobs the union lent the owners Rs 5 lakh as start-up money at 18 per cent interest. "We did not ask for any security or collateral," recalls Mehta. "All we took was a plain promissory note. After all, 650 jobs are more important than Rs 5 lakh."

However, he found the transactions to his taste and continued along the so far untrodden path. Today, 13 years later, he has 29 companies on his books and has lent a total of Rs 1.78 crore—mostly to save jobs, ensure the payment of wages, and allow closed units to open again. Among his clients are people as varied as the evening paper Midday (Rs 5 lakh), Pure Drinks Pvt Ltd (Rs 3 lakh) and Simplex Woollen Mills Pvt Ltd (Rs 27 lakh). The rates of interest vary, but never drop below 18 per cent and on quick short-term loans could go as high as 30 per cent.

And Mehta is no longer satisfied with promissory notes as security. The Shaparia Dock and Still Manufacturing Company—the oldest ship and barge-making firm in Bombay—mortgaged a large house in Mehta's favour for a Rs 24-lakh loan. The directors of Laxmi Spinning, in hock to the tune of Rs 6 lakh, handed their flats over. Trans Auto directors, at their wits' end because the banks had refused loans, gave away their shares to Mehta in exchange for a life-saving Rs 2.5 lakh. And the owners of Kanti Engineering, a sizeable firm with 150 employees, went so far as to pledge ornaments and diamond rings to the union.

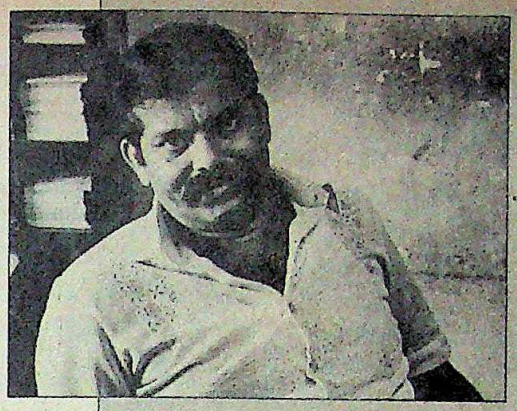
Debtors acknowledge that the rose champion is not a bad loan master. As Shiv Prakash Seth of Simplex Woollen Mills (turnover: Rs 5 crore), which has not made a profit in the last two years, acknowledges: "all our 1,100 workers would have lost their jobs if Mehta had not bailed us out." He admits that the interest at 2 per cent a month compounded is a bit steep, but adds that "there was no other way we could get the money". He calls Mehta "both hard and soft" when it comes to repayment: hard because he



R.J. Mehta has 29 companies on his books and lent a total of Rs 1.78 crores—mostly to save jobs, ensure the payment of wages, and allow units to open again.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Quadros manages the affairs of two petrol pumps and two spare parts shops. He is also setting up a small battery manufacturing unit.

insists on payments on the due date, and soft "because he always listens to reason". Seth and fellow managers obviously dare not push the union leader too far: for one he controls their workforce, and for another he holds their shares in Simplex as well as three flats.

Mehta can afford to make such payments because, among other things, his workers pay him 10 per cent of whatever arrears they receive as the result of a settlement and 5 per cent of their bonus takings. So, in fact, his union activity finances his loaning activity. But the New India Cooperative Bank was born quite differently, and was the result of an idea George Fernandes had when he visited Germany in the 1960s and saw that the second biggest bank in the country was run by unions. Besides, labour leaders back home realised that they had to have their own sources of money. Taximen, for instance, were being sucked dry by Multani money-lenders who charged an anna in the rupee a month (about 75 per cent per annum), and textile workers were in similar straits. "We had to inculcate the savings habit among the workers," says Vice-Chairman Anjit Bhanu. The Bombay Labour Cooperative Bank began in 100 sq ft of borrowed space with Rs 2 lakh as share capital.

The New India Cooperative Bank Ltd, with total deposits from 12 branches: Rs 28 crores, the brainchild of George Fernandes, has advanced about Rs 16 crores to companies big and small.

The bank's name was changed in 1976 because the managers felt they could attract more people if the word 'labour' was dropped. Today, it is opening a 13th branch, discounts bills for TELCO, has received the final instalment of a Rs 20-lakh loan given to Garware Enterprise at 17.5 per cent interest, and has the proud distinction of financing about 20 small-scale industries from scratch. It also gives out innumerable small loans to people, and a major part of its work is financing taxi-drivers at concessional loan rates.

NEVERTHELESS, the bank appears to have realised that big loans given to single borrowers are better than lending money to a crowd of small borrowers. For it has begun to look out for potential borrowers in a consistent way. Satish Bhatt, a partner in the block-making firm of Liberty Process Works, tells the story of how one of the bank's managers badgered him to take a loan to modernise and buy new equipment. Bhatt says he first tried to get money from a nationalised bank and was mauled in the process: "The bank treated me as if I was a criminal." So he met this manager and was persuaded to take a loan of Rs 1 lakh. And now he says: "I had never borrowed money from anyone in my life, but I found that with the advanced machines I had purchased, my business trebled in size and I was able to pay back the loan very quickly. The bank is a very good creditor. The funny thing is that they don't want me to return the money so quickly as they lose interest on it." Today Bhatt oversees a turnover of Rs 50 lakh, has paid back about two-thirds of the Rs 9 lakh he eventually borrowed, and is daringly thinking of going in for a Rs 25 lakh modern scanner—and asking the bank for the money.

Among the unions which got together to become Bhatt's benefactor was BTU, whose own businesses are doing very well. It had bought two petrol pumps in the 1970s to supply quality fuel to its members. The pumps, bought for about a lakh each, now turn in about the same as yearly profit. The union pays an annual dividend of 12 per cent to its members from the pumps as well as from two profitable spare parts shops. Says Quadros: "We sell genuine stuff, but we don't give concessional rates to anyone. They are run like ordinary business." The union has constructed a 542-flat cooperative housing society in Kurla, and set up a cooperative credit society to give quick and cheap loans to taxi-drivers.

Now it's getting ambitious. By June, it will start constructing the shed for a small-scale battery plant just outside Bombay to produce 500 batteries a month. The total investment is Rs 6 lakh, partly financed by contributions of Rs 500 from each member. Explains Quadros: "A battery today costs anything from Rs 800 to Rs 1,000. We estimate that we can make and sell them profitably at Rs 400 each with no compromises on quality." Such enterprise is only to be expected from BTU—after all, way back in 1980, it had the temerity to bid for Firestone.

But for all their flourishing business activities, Mehta, the New India Cooperative Bank and BTU appear to be the exception rather than the rule, for few unions have the money or the inclination to set up shop in a big way. Indeed, many of the others object to diversification into undiluted business. For instance, S.R. Kulkarni says: "Trade unions are not there to do business. They are there to help workers. What would happen to us if we were consumed by the profit motive?"

Another man says much the same thing, in harsher language. Dr Datta Samant claims a following ten times as large as Mehta's and his union is said to be one of the richest in the city. He has had a huge house built for himself in Vikhroli, the butt of much caustic comment by fellow trade unionists. But he is clear about his priorities: "Isn't there any other work for the trade unions? The larger tasks go unheeded." Perhaps, but what's wrong with a little capitalist seasoning in the socialist stew?

—JAGANNATH DUBASHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Another enterprise of Empire Industries

Empire Finance Co. Ltd.

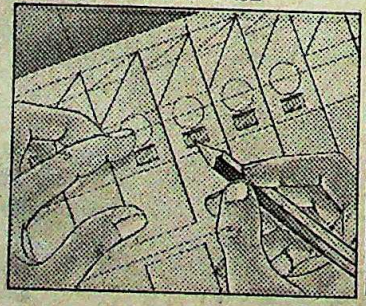
We offer wide-ranging financial services to help you get your business off the ground.

Empire Finance Co. Ltd. provides financial services in the fields of Leasing, Hire Purchase, Warehousing, Commodity Finance and Bill Discounting. Tailor-made to suit you. Ensuring maximum tax and financial advantage to clients. Catering to your needs of financing plant and machinery, electronic equipment, computers and more.

Of course Empire Industries Ltd. are doing a lot more than dealing in finance. Their manufacturing and marketing operations cover the additional areas of Medium and Heavy Crane manufacturing, Machine Tools, Instruments and Instrumentation Systems, Glassware and Textiles.

The other enterprises of Empire Industries Ltd.

Garlick Engineering, Empire Machine Tools, Empire Instrumentation, Vitrum Glass and Empire Dyeing.



The Empire Finance Co. Ltd.

AN ENTERPRISE OF

EMPIRE INDUSTRIES LIMITED

Empire Industries Ltd.
414, Senapati Bapat Marg,
Lower Parel,
Bombay-400 013.
Phone: 4920304/4920003
Telex: 011-73888 (EMPR IN)

Where Excellence Leads

6369

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FROG LEGS EXPORTS

Cold Feet

FROG legs exports from West Bengal have literally been put in cold storage. At Calcutta's Hindustan Ice and Cold Storage complex, stacks of cartons containing nearly 300 tonnes of frozen frogs legs destined for European and American gourmets have been awaiting shipment since September last year. The Calcutta customs authorities are refusing to clear the consignment without permission from the Department of Environment, which has been fighting to put an end to the frog trade.

Harassed Calcutta-based exporters only last fortnight managed to convince the Environment and Forest Ministry to allow shipment of frog legs already processed and ready for export. But the ministry has granted permission on the condition that the export be done only through a government agency. And even if this consignment goes through, it will perhaps be the last time frogs from the paddy fields of West Bengal will end up on western tables.

The ministry appears to have relented this time only because the Union Commerce Ministry had given advance permission to the exporters to send out up to 500 tonnes of frog legs during the current financial year. Moreover, export contracts had already been signed and the exporters were incurring losses of Rs 6.5 lakh—on cold storage and interest charges—every month since the Environment Ministry ban six months ago. Now exporters have been allowed to ship the ready consignments through the West Bengal Fisheries Development Corporation. "We are ready to do anything to clear our stocks since we cannot store frog legs for more than six months," says Kishore Samtani of Veejay Exports, one of Calcutta's biggest frog legs exporters.

"The root of the problem," explains Zoological Survey of India, Deputy Director Dr A.K.Ghosh, "is the Environment Ministry's belief that the trapping of frogs in West Bengal violates the norms laid down at the Convention of International Treaty on Endangered Species (CITES) held in Buenos Aires in April last year." The two species of edible frogs—Rana Tigrina and Rana Hexadactyla—exported from India are now considered endangered and the CITES rules aim at severely restricting, if not altogether stopping, the indiscriminate killing of the amphibians in India, Bangladesh and Indonesia—the three biggest frog legs exporters. To get a CITES permit from the Environment Ministry, the state Government has to certify categorically that the exports will not be detrimental to the survival of the species and that the amphibians are not being obtained in contravention of the wildlife protection laws of the state.

"Frogs, unlike crocodiles and shrimps, are not artificially cultured but are trapped from the paddy fields in Bengal," says Ghosh. Field studies conducted by the Zoological Survey of India in the state suggest an alarming decline in the availability of frogs. Yet the state Government and the exporters are continuing to lobby for liberalisations in frog legs exports. Calcutta-based exporters contend that the ministry's decision is unfair because exporters from Cochin, Madras and Bombay are still in business and there are no studies to prove that the availability of frogs in West Bengal is poorer than in other states. "We also know that trappers are sending out frogs from here to other states for export," claims an exporter, "and the entire objective of the CITES restrictions is being defeated."

The Environment and Forest Ministry has granted export permission but it will be perhaps the last time frogs from West Bengal will grace western tables.

Indeed, field studies carried out in parts of Marathwada and the Konkan by environmentalist Humayun Abdulali show that West Bengal is not the only state with declining frog population. Abdulali also pointed out that attempts at restricting the killings of frogs have had little impact. Although frog legs are being exported since 1963, environmentalists woke up to its potential perils only in 1981 when exports peaked at 4,368 tonnes from an average of 500 tonnes per annum in the 1960s. Considering that frogs consume at least one-tenth their own body weight in insect and other pests every day, it was pointed out that eliminations of several thousand tonnes of frogs over the years would lead to serious ecological imbalances, and increased use of toxic and expensive pesticides.

The early 1980s also witnessed the Salmonella infection scare in Europe and America, as a result of which frog legs exports plummetted. Various international organisations—like the World Wildlife Fund—also began campaigning against the frog legs trade, pointing out, among other things, the cruelty of the methods used for frog leg preparation.

In 1982, the Central Government introduced a quota system to regulate frog legs exports with the ultimate objective of bringing it down to negligible levels. Thus, every year the quota was being brought down and in 1984-85 the export limit was fixed at 2,500 tonnes. At the same time, the Government also

Frog legs' cartons: shelved

KALYAN CHAKRABORTY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sun drenched days & Cozy cool nights your home on hill

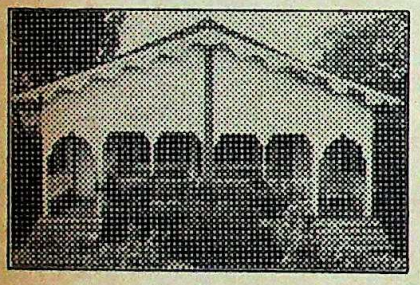
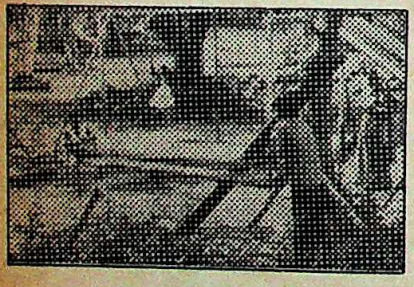
The extra ordinary comforts & conveniences of each of the cottages will make you feel thoroughly at ease.



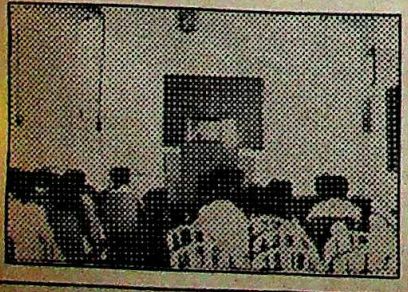
for toddlers to teenagers

The vast lush green grass playground will help you to lumber up your limbs.



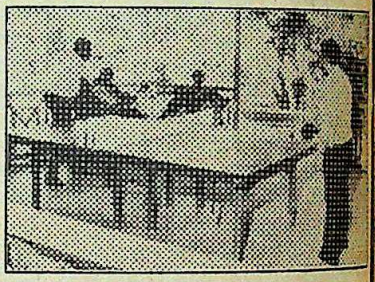
for one and all

At dusk when the crimson clouds turn grey and the twinkle of stars become visible, you can retire to the T.V. lounge before and after dinner.



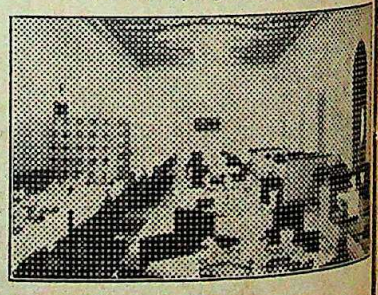
for the young at hearts

For those who consider only a vigorous workout to be adequate exercise, there is the table tennis room.



for the connoisseurs

The dining hall where you can inhale the heady fragrance of flowers and grass in the company that cheers.



HOTEL RUGBY WINTER PACKAGE

Rs. 725/- 3 days per couple
Rs. 625/- 3 days per couple
From 1-2-86 to 15-4-86
Taxes extra as applicable

With more of frees:

• Welcome drink • Breakfasts & Meals
• Child below 12 years • One horse ride coupon

And less of extras:

• Each extra person on room sharing basis
• Extension on pro-rata basis

RUGBY hotel
Matheran, Via: Neral,
Maharashtra. Phone: 91-92

RUGBY & MATHERAN
a combination that is irresistible

For reservation contact:
Between 10 am & 3 pm • 6 pm & 10 pm
Our Associates:
Thackers Restaurant, 1,
B.K.K. Chowpatty, Bombay-7.
Phones: 351614, 356859, 364...

COMMISSIONABLE TO TRAVEL AGENTS

CC-0. Mumukshu Bhawan Varanasi Collection. Digitized by eGangotri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

banned the procurement of frogs during the mating season—June 15 to August 15—and also stipulated that immature frogs should not be trapped. There is, however, no administrative machinery to ensure that the frog trappers and exporters comply. Not unnaturally, environmentalists like Ghosh feel that the Government's measures are simply not enough to protect the frogs.

After the CITES meet last year, the export quota was slashed and the Environment Ministry tightened regulations. But state officials feel that the ministry regulations are not very clear. Exporters came to know of the crackdown only in September last year after they had already exported about 100 tonnes frog legs worth Rs 73 lakh during the current financial year and had signed contracts for supplying another 300 tonnes. The state Government tried to help the exporters by granting them legal procurement licences for getting the 300-tonne export consignment cleared by the ministry. But the ministry declined to issue a CITES permit by pointing out that the frogs were not procured by licenced trappers. "This makes it all the more curious how the Environment Ministry can allow exports from other parts of the country!" a Calcutta-based exporter wonders.

Exporters are also lobbying for increased quotas by pointing out that the country earns between Rs 7 crore and Rs 12 crore in foreign exchange every year from the exports, while thousands of trappers and other workers are provided employment by this lucrative trade. On the other hand the ministry points out that indiscriminate killing of frogs only increases the population of agricultural pests. The ministry seems to have made West Bengal the test case to see if it can fight the export lobby. But the Government's allowance to the exporters last fortnight only proves that the trade will resist all attempts to put it in deep freeze.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE

FRESH FOOD EXPORTS

Bad Taste

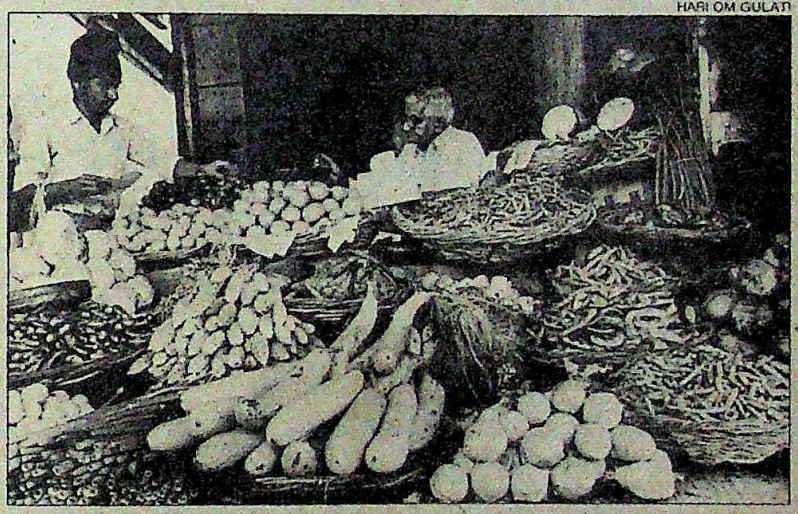
IT'S A classic boom and slump story. But the boom is elsewhere, and the slump is in India. And though the action is in something as insignificant as exports of fruits and vegetables, this could be a cautionary tale.

Till a few years ago, the member-countries of the European Economic Community (EEC) bought virtually no fruits and vegetables from the developing countries in South America, Africa and Asia. But this trade now totals one lakh tonnes annually, worth $85 million (Rs 100 crore). That's not an awful lot of money, going by the normal levels of world trade, but it could become bigger. The problem is that just when trade in this still unnoticed area has been taking off elsewhere, India's exports have slumped 48 per cent in the last two years.

There has to be an explanation, of course, and it comes from a study conducted by the Commerce Ministry, which says that the villain of the piece is none other than Air-India. For while airlines across the world have been cutting their freight rates for this burgeoning trade item, Air-India has stuck to its old rates. Today, as a result, its freight charges for fresh fruits and vegetables are between 80 per cent and 155 per cent higher than those charged by African airlines, 58 per cent higher than the Carribbean, and 44 per cent higher than Pakistan. Result: Indian exports are not competitive.

The irony is that this is an item in

HARI OM GULATI



Fresh fruits and vegetables on sale: lost opportunity which India has a natural trading advantage. Of the EEC imports of $85 million, $58 million are accounted for by items which India can supply: fruits like mango, papaya, guava, chikoo, and vegetables like okra (bhindi), fresh ginger, sweet potatoes, karela. Mangoes themselves account for EEC imports of $20 million. Yet, though India is the world's largest grower of mangoes and accounts for a mammoth 62 per cent of global production, it ranks eighth in the list of suppliers to the EEC, behind such countries as Mali, Mexico, Upper Volta, Brazil, South Africa, Kenya and Pakistan.

In fact, the Commerce Ministry's study points out that importers abroad have "evinced a keen interest in the Indian mango" and explains that this is because India grows quality mangoes through a greater part of the year than most countries: February-March in Malabar, April-July in coastal Andhra, May-August in Mysore, and June-August in northern India. "All these regions have good quality mangoes conforming to specifications of European importers," the report says.

With 3 million hectares under fruit and vegetable cultivation, India has a large production base. And its location north of the Equator is an added advantage. But as the study points out, "Despite there being a taste preference for Indian fruits and vegetables, it is not possible for importers on the continent to import large quantities of these products. Importers in the surveyed countries contended that air freight rates from India to continental destinations should be at par with those of other developing countries." The moral of the story is clear: an opportunity to capture a rapidly growing market is slipping by.

—INDERJIT BADHWAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CASSETTE PIRACY

High Stakes

SOMEWHERE in Bombay, in one of the offices along the busy Fort area, sits a man who has a most unusual job. A lawyer who heads the newly-formed anti-piracy cell of the Indian Phonographic Industry (IPI), his job is to deal crippling blows to one of the biggest and the most open illegal rackets ever.

Last fortnight, when the IPI met to celebrate 50 years of existence, its members took stock of just how virulent that plague was. In 1985 legitimate companies sold five million cassettes while the pirates sold 180 million, or 95 per cent of the market. The potential loss was Rs 450 crore in sales. No wonder that the three biggest recording companies—Gramophone Company of India (GCI), Music India Ltd (MIL) and CBS—have accumulated losses of Rs 15 crore over the last three years on a total turnover of Rs 25 crore. Says Sukumar Shidore, secretary, IPI: "We realised that if anybody was going to do anything about musicassette-piracy, it had to be ourselves. Hence the setting up of this cell."

Funded by a 32,000-Pound Sterling grant from the International Federation of Producers of Phonograms and Video-grams (IFPPV), its aim is to enforce the provisions of the Copyright (Amendment) Act, 1984, which allows for imprisonment up to three years and fines up to Rs 2 lakh for second and subsequent offences. Still, says IPI and GCI president Pradip Chanda: "It seems that the police do not give this problem any importance. That's a great pity, because it costs the exchequer Rs 80 crore in income tax and sales tax revenues every year." Chanda feels that with the formation of the cell, the industry will be able to carry out organised raids at the places where the raids will hit the most—the duplicating centres where machines churn out 500 cassettes an hour from one master cassette.

Musicassette piracy is comparatively new in India. Industry spokesmen reveal that, while in 1980 pirates had just 10 per cent of the market, by 1985 legitimate producers had been reduced to barely 5 per cent of the market. In 1980 the two biggest companies, GCI and MIL together controlled three-fourths of the market and sold 9.41 million cassettes and long-playing records (LPs). In 1985 their combined sales were just 9.82 million, a growth rate in sales of less than 1 per cent a year. GCI now has losses of Rs 12 crore and CBS of Rs 1.2 crore. Only MIL made a tiny profit of Rs 11 lakh last year, mainly because of its aggressive championship of ghazal singers.

But the industry has been driven to the wall and there's nothing left to do but fight. Says A.S. Subburaman of CBS: "How are we expected to promote new music when we are not making any profits at all? The pirate can choose the successful cassettes to copy, he has none of our overheads, he pays for no promotional campaign and he can lure the dealer with margins that are twice the ones we offer." He points out that the harm done by piracy is not just monetary, but also aesthetic, for newer artistes cannot be promoted. The 100-odd senior artistes whom the industry features on its inlay cards lose an estimated Rs 57 crore in royalty every year.

What is more, the pirates now turn out slicker copies—identical down to the copyright warning—which are sold at just a few rupees below the legitimate price. A significant portion of these upmarket pirated cassettes is marked the "T" series. This is also the legitimate brand of Supercassettes Industries Pvt Ltd of Delhi, a fast-growing enterprise run by Delhi-based Gulshan Arora. Arora now prints his posters with the warning that customers buy original cassettes only. Both the "T" series—legitimate and pirated cassettes—use the same kind of ground glass cases, but spokesmen of the industry deny the possibility that Supercassettes could be doing both legal and illegal business.

The stakes in the battle against piracy are very high. Vijay Lazarus (MIL) feels that the entry of the compact disc notwithstanding, the cassette as a sound carrier will continue to rule the roost well into the 1990s. Says Subburaman: "Nothing is going to replace the cassette as an inexpensive, convenient medium for the next 10 years. So it is all the more urgent that we kill piracy now, otherwise it will grow to horrendous proportions." Clearly, much hope hinges on that nameless lawyer in his office.

—JAGANNATH DUBASHI

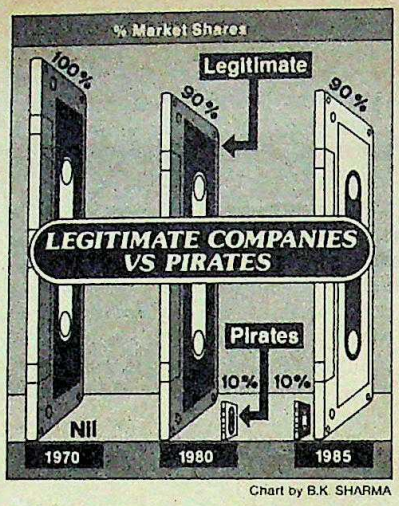

Chart by B.K SHARMA

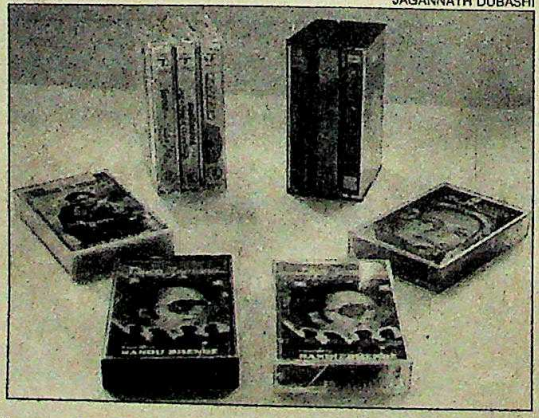
PRADIP CHANDA
president,
Indian Phonographic Industry

"The police do not give this problem any importance. It costs the exchequer Rs 80 crore in income tax and sales tax revenues every year."

JAGANNATH DUBASHI

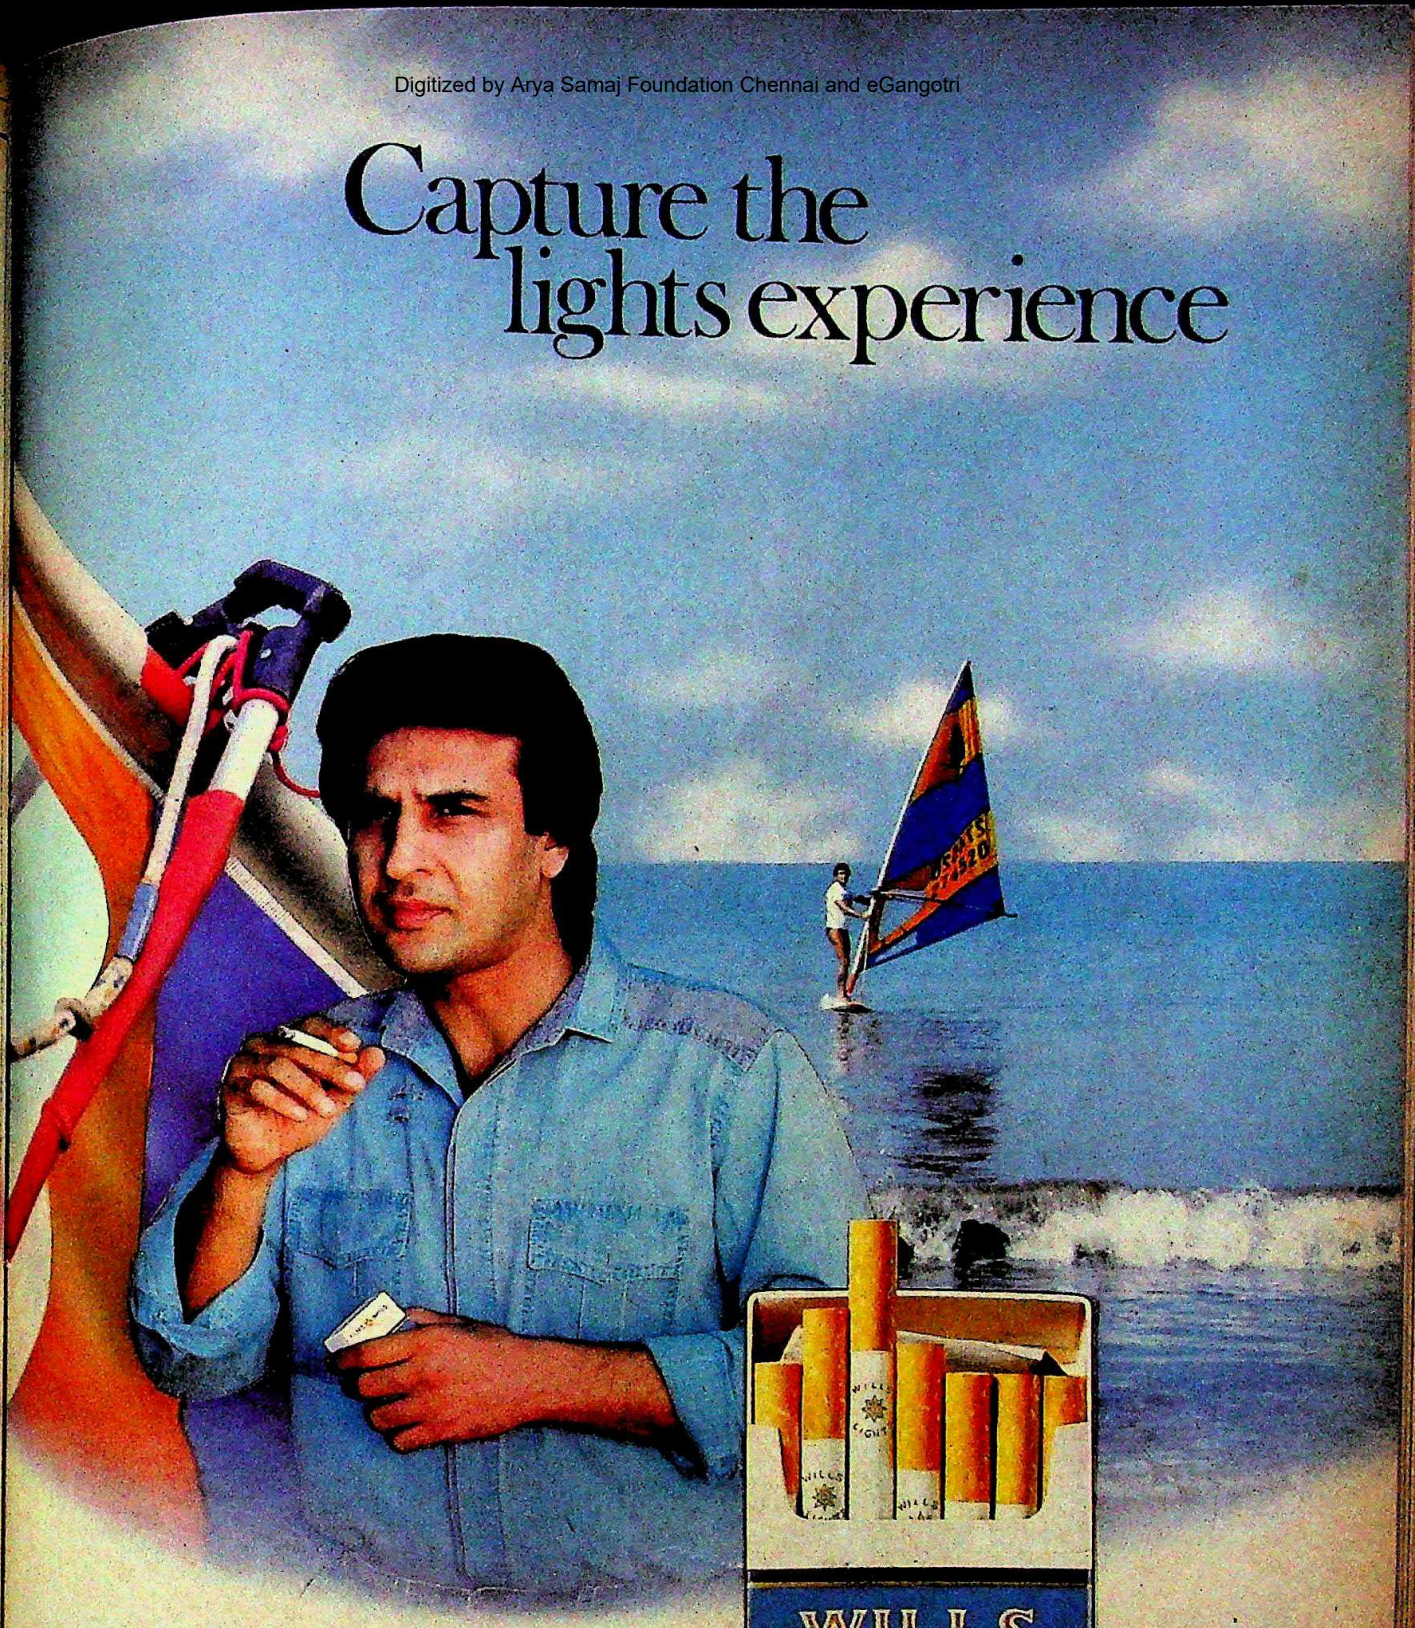


Pirated cassettes: cornering the market

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Capture the lights experience



Wills Lights

It's got the taste

Wills Lights. With a taste, all its own: subtle and definite. Like you.

STATUTORY WARNING
CIGARETTE SMOKING IS INJURIOUS TO HEALTH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A great new idea gets off the ground!

Royal House

Designed to take the floor!

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Royal House Cushion Vinyl Flooring

The roll-out, lay-flat, stay-flat floor. That lives with you for years.

It's the latest concept in flooring that's come to India after covering much ground abroad. The promoters of Royal Touch introduce Royal House Cushion Vinyl Flooring. Made in technical collaboration with Gerland of France. One of Europe's largest manufacturers of vinyl coverings.

Choose from a wide range of beautiful colours, wonderful patterns — all designed to leave you floored!

It's soft, but it's no softie!

A cushion vinyl product, Royal House is delightfully soft underfoot. But don't let that softness fool you! Royal House has a built-in toughness that resists dents. And its tough wear layer doesn't let scuffs or scratches leave their mark on it.

Make a clean sweep of it!

A simple sweep and swab routine is all it takes to keep a Royal House floor looking its best. Stains and marks just can't cling to it. They're removed in a swipe.

Roll out the benefits!

Royal House flooring comes in a convenient roll, 2 metres wide. And can be installed in a couple of hours. Once it's been laid out, it lives with you for years. And it is so reasonably priced, you can afford a change to match a change in decor.

So come along. Say goodbye to boring flooring. Now that Royal House is here — to take the floor!

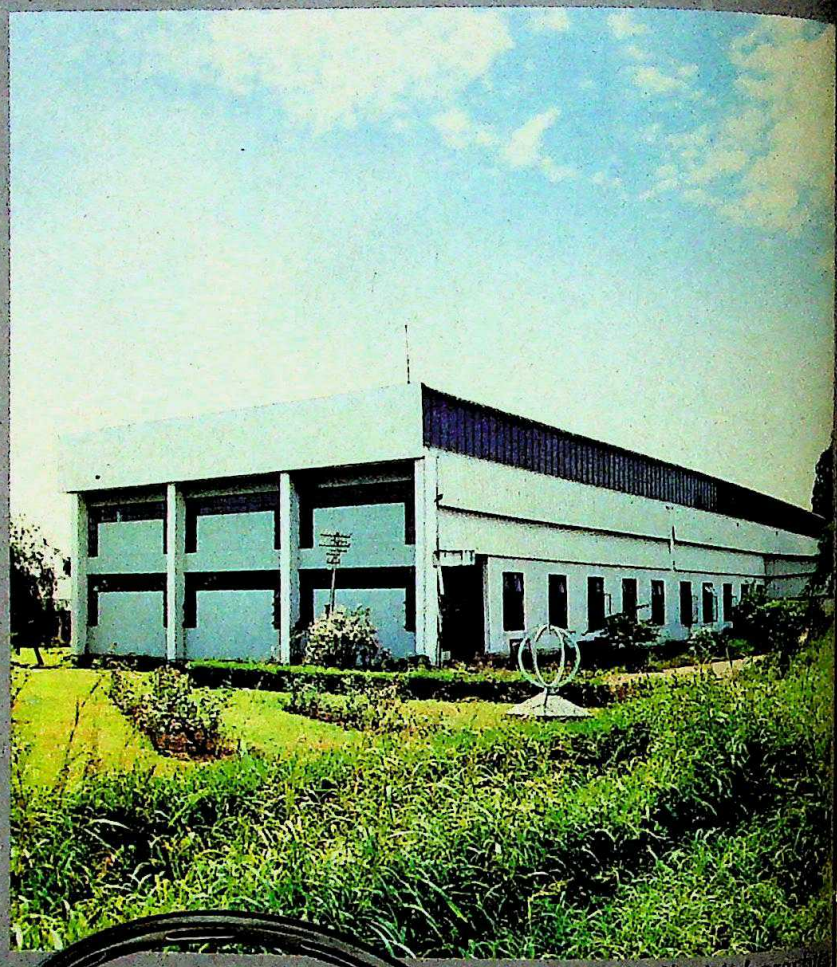
Bamkrupa, 25, Parekh Street, Prarthna Samaj, Bombay 400 004. Tel: 352497

ROYAL CUSHION VINYL PRODUCTS PVT. LTD.

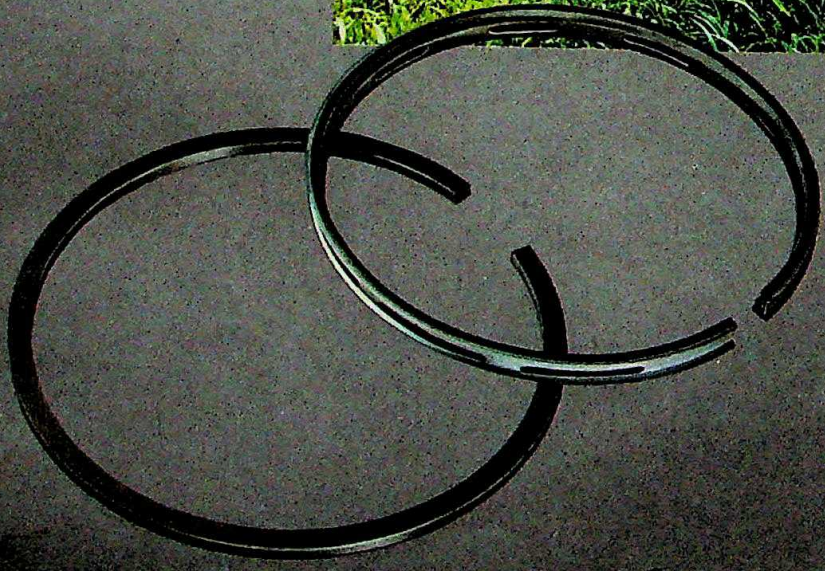
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Where Perfect Circle Victor designs piston rings to fit every engine made.



Nasik, Maharashtra



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Perfect Circle Vict

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BANKS

Wrong Target

IT WAS billed as the banking scandal of the decade: the London-based Indian businessman Rajendra Sethia was alleged to have defrauded three Indian banks of countless crores. Sethia himself landed in jail, awaiting trial, the chairmen of the Punjab National Bank (PNB) and the Central Bank of India (CBI), which had lent Sethia most of the money, were sent packing. And PNB's London-based general manager, Amarjeet Singh, was transferred to Delhi, then summarily sacked and finally arrested on the charge of having conspired with Sethia to defraud PNB.

An outraged nation and Parliament were mollified by the swift retribution. But last fortnight, it was the Government that had egg on its face: because, it now turns out, it got the wrong man.

In a stinging verdict that must mock the Banking Deparment and the PNB, the Delhi High Court quashed Amarjeet Singh's dismissal and not only awarded Singh compensation of Rs 1 lakh, but also awarded him legal costs totalling Rs 75,000. Singh had challenged his dismissal and argued that he had been the victim of a conspiracy hatched by other officials in the bank.

But even as the case got under way, it became clear that the Government didn't have a very clear idea of what it was doing in the whole case concerning Sethia. Lawyers representing the Central Bureau of Investigation had initially said in court that the "amount of total fraud may run into $ 1,000 million", but then clambed down somewhat shamefacedly to no more than $ 10.4 million.

The bank's defence in the case that Singh filed against his dismissal was no more convincing. While PNB submitted that Singh had "entered into several transactions which have put the bank in a difficult position and may lead the bank into loss of crores of rupees", it was later forced to admit, again in court, that it had not relied on Sethia's accounts while deciding to dismiss Singh. There was little else the bank could have done. Of the $92 million that was owed by Sethia to PNB at the time of Singh's arrest, all but $1 million were backed by securities or irrevocable letters of credit.

In the stinging verdict that must mock the Banking Department and the PNB the Delhi High Court quashed Amarjit Singh's dismissal

Indeed, Singh's lawyer Lalit Bhasin was able to argue in court that Singh had been one of PNB's most successful officials, and that he had been rewarded with quick promotions because of his track record. Bhasin claimed that during Singh's four-year term in London, he had taken the bank's London deposits from barely 9 million pounds to 185 million pounds, while profits had soared from 200,000 pounds to 6 million pounds. Bhasin argued that by dismissing Singh the bank had ruined the career of a "brilliant" official, and the court agreed when it said that the "present case is one of stigma, and a stigma is not removed until the order is demolished".

Singh's strongest argument, predictably, was that the bank's money that he had lent to Sethia was safe because of the securities pledged to the bank. In fact, Sethia's advocate said that PNB had already recovered $40 million from various securities since 1984 and Singh argued last fortnight that the bank would get more than its due if it decided to sell the shares in Jokai India pledged to it. Asked Singh: "Why aren't they selling the securities lying with them? They are not doing it because they are not interested in recovering the money. Every penny advanced to Sethia was secured with three pennies worth of securities."

Meanwhile, the intriguing question remains: why did the Government go with a vengeance after a PNB official when most of the bank's loans to Sethia were secured, unlike the loans given by the Central Bank of India, which has so far recovered only 10 per cent of the money that was due to it a year ago? —

—PRABHU CHAWLA

ORKAY

New Twist

KAPAL Mehra is something of a stoic, but on February 25 he was grinning from ear to ear. The chairman of Orkay Silk Mills had just heard that the Bombay High Court had struck down an excise order for Rs 10.5 crore imposed on June 1, 1985.

More important were the strictures that Justice M.L. Pendse passed against the former director of anti-evasion (central excise), M.S. Bindra. He scolded the now compulsorily retired officer for a number of sins of omission and commission. Specifically, since Bindra supervised the raids and the subsequent investigation of allegedly undeclared production of 535.5 tonnes of yarn, he should not have judged his own case.

Also, the method of passing the order "creates serious suspicion in mind about the bona fide exercise of the powers," for Bindra had claimed to have dictated the 130-page order in eight hours in two sessions over two days—one of them a holiday.

Further, Pendse discovered that about three-fourths of the original order was missing, and that there were corrections and interpolations in the remaining of which some were not in Bindra's handwriting. Pendse concluded that either Bindra had written out the order before the hearing or that somebody else had written it and Bindra had merely signed it without reading.

Mehra: 'justice has been done'

The judge also pointed out that Bindra had, in the "atrocious order" levied a personal Rs 50 lakh fine on Mehra—without a show cause notice. However, the order only quashed the Bindra order and not the show-cause notice which led to it, so the entire process will start all over again. Mehra merely said: "Justice has been done".

—JAGANNATH DUBASHI

CC-0. In Public Domain: Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

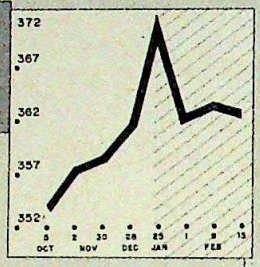
WHOLESALE prices have continued to rise while industrial production and manufactured outputs show a rather sluggish trend. In spite of a reduction in commercial bank credit, money supply is rock steady. Power generation is not growing as rapidly as before. There has been a sudden bullishness in the bourse and, come hail or high water, gold prices continue to fall.

All data are seasonally adjusted. The current trend is computed on the basis of the past six months data to which a regression is fitted.

Wholesale Price Index

1970-71 = 100

Current Trend
7.2% p.a.

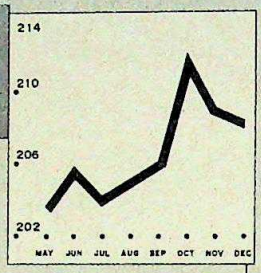


De-seasonalised, the wholesale price index has gone up without accounting for the new price rises which, with leads and lags will show up later.

Industrial Production Index

1970 = 100

Current Trend
6.5% p.a.

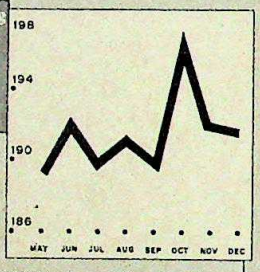


Growth would have to be more than 6.5 per cent to fulfil seventh plan targets and offset a production drop of 2.69 per cent.

Manufacturing Output Index

1970-100

Current Trend
3.3% p.a.

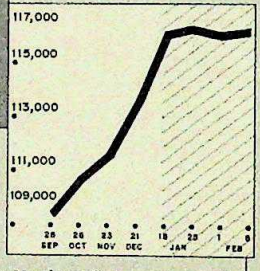


Manufacturing fell 2.69 per cent from October to December—industrialists are seemingly not chewing the Government's many carrots.

Money Supply (M3)

Rs Crore

Current Trend
17.8% p.a.

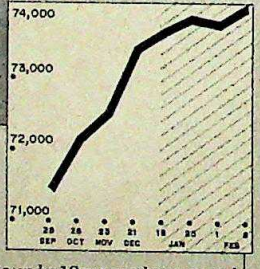


As steady as the Northern Star, money supply remains between 17 and 18 per cent. The RBI has been in unusually successful control.

Commercial Bank Credit

Rs Crore

Current Trend
9.5% p.a.

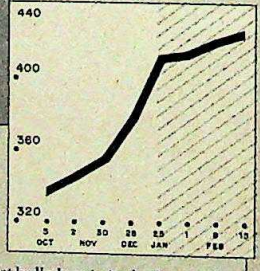


Bank credit fell to under 10 per cent between end of January and early February, either due to supply tightening or the lack of demand.

Share Price Index

1970-71 = 100

Current Trend
40.7% p.a.

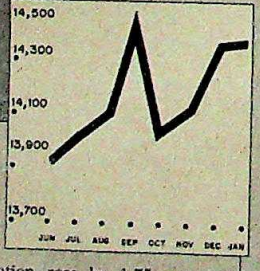


The share market bulled again in the first week of February with prices jumping by 2.8 per cent, contributing to the rise in the long term trend.

Power Generation

Million KWH

Current Trend
2.8% p.a.

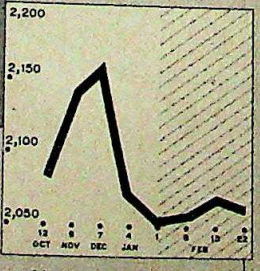


Though generation rose by 1.75 per cent between November and January, the long term trend is under 3 per cent per year.

Closing Gold Price

Rs per 10 gms

Current Trend
–9.% p.a.



The steady fall in gold prices continued. Is this because of a jump in supply or are people investing in other things? It is too early to say.

INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION

Growth of Items in October, 1985

	%Growth
Ferro-Alloys	111.10
Rubber Footwer	98.48
Jute Machinery	75.96
Sugar Machinery	53.34
Paper Machinery	48.23
Coffee Curing Works	41.48
Railway Rolling Stock	40.39
Storage Batteries	38.81
Insecticides & Pesticides	37.06
Tobacco Manufacture	34.94
Linoleum & Similar Products	30.75
Earth Moving Machinery	29.74
Locomotives	22.93
Conveying Equipment	20.45
Hand & Small Tools	18.52
Footwear	17.77
Typewriters & Duplicators	17.05
Compressors	16.55
Electrical Motors	16.24
Paints & Varnishes	15.84
Electrical Machinery	13.80
Bolts & Nuts	13.70
Matches	12.87
Cosmetics	12.66
Chemical & Pharmaceutical Machinery	12.15
Iron & Steel Structurals	11.92
Bakery Products	10.55
Tyres & Tubes	10.45
Jute Textiles	10.14
Grain Mill Products	8.92
Telecommunications	8.47
Motorcycles & Bicycles	8.04
Paper	7.73
Pens & Pencils	7.58
Cotton & Blended Yarn	7.39
Machine Tools	7.31
Paper & Straw Board	6.60
Buses, Trucks & Jeeps	6.38
Textile Machinery	6.22
Cotton & Blended Mixed Fabrics	5.04
Mining & Quarrying	4.94
Dairy Products	4.64
Steam Generating Plants	3.78
Synthetic Resins & Plastics	3.75
Electrical Lamps	3.70
Hydrogenated Oil	3.62
Organic Chemicals	3.27

Of the 86 series considered, 58 of them with a total weight of 57.603 had a positive growth and 28 of them with a total weight of 30.372 had a negative growth.

SELECTED INDICATORS

	1986	1985
Nitro-Fertilizer Thousand Tonnes, January	407	406
Phosphate Fertilizer Thousand Tonnes, January	139	104
Thermal Plant Load Factor Percentage, January	55.5	54.5
Industrial Licences Issued Number, January	58	51
Letters of Intent Issued Number, January	42	54

Compiled by THE POLICY GROUP/ICRA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When she won't accept diamonds
and can't be bothered with trinkets...
give her something she'll really love
...Amul Chocolates.

Six delicious varieties...
Amul Coffee, Amul Crisp,
Amul Bitter, Amul Milk Chocolate,
Amul Fruit & Nut, Amul Orange.

Amul Chocolates
a gift for someone you love

Soft and creamy, like Swiss chocolates...

its creaminess sealed in silver foil...

and foil-board carton to keep it fresh.

Marketed by: Gujarat Co-operative Milk Marketing Federation Ltd., Anand.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Sportif. Run your eye over the bodyline. And you'll admire the sleekness of French design.

Get astride and settle down and you'll see what comfort really means – right up to your fingertips.

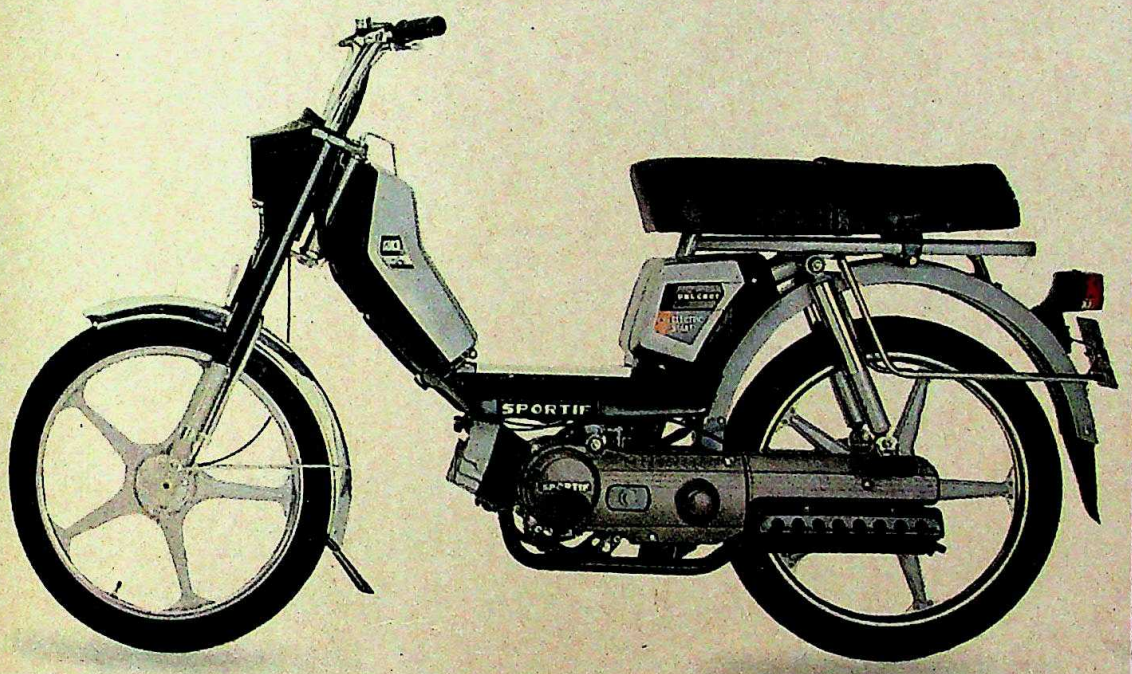
Thumb the self-starter button and feel the Sportif come alive. Powered by a 50 cc engine that purrs with grace. And an autogear system that lets you glide effortlessly. On smart, stylish mag wheels.

Sportif. On performance alone it would make heads turn. But trust the French to do it in style.

-CLASS TELLS . . .

SHREE CHAMUNDI MOPEDS LIMITED Hirehalli, Tumkur 572 168

Trust the French to do it in style



SPORTIF

E NOTHING ELSE-

COPYRIGHT Rudi Dallas Sportif Digital Collection Hardware

In collaboration with PEUGEOT of France

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The yawning gap between our Maharajah Class and an ordinary First Class

Our way of making you feel like a Maharajah, of course. Or rather, our many ways:

- Every seat a luxurious Slumberette on all our 747s.
- A choice of continental and delicately spiced Indian cuisine served in style, on elegant china and silverware.
- A selection of the finest wines and liquor.
- Gracious service by traditionally dressed hostesses. In the spirit of Indian hospitality.
- Decor reminiscent of a Maharajah's palace.
- Maharajah lounges at most airports.
- Separate and exclusive check-in facilities.

So, rather than yawning of boredom anywhere else, step aboard our Maharajah Class, put your feet up, recline on a Slumberette and feel like a Maharajah.

AIR-INDIA

The airline that treats you like a Maharajah

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

Budget Blow

IF THE budget last year sparked off the most explosive boom India's stock-markets have ever seen, this year's fiscal packet fell like a sledge-hammer on what had till recently been the rising curve of the share price index. Trading immediately after the budget proposals were known indicated early disappointment, and this was confirmed the next day, when share prices dropped further. If any doubts still remained as to how investors viewed Union Finance Minister V.P. Singh's Friday evening announcements, they were dispelled during trading on the following Monday, when scrips suffered a pronounced setback after the market had been able to assess the full implications of the budget.

This distinct bearish trend was not without good reason. For the finance minister had made the imports of both raw materials and capital goods and technology costlier, he had also failed to implement some of the promises made in the long-term fiscal policy—he did not abolish the surtax on company profits, nor cut corporate income tax by the promised 5 per cent. And the reforms on the indirect tax front did not go beyond what had been promised in the December policy statement, and stopped short of the kind of changes he had initiated in direct taxes a year earlier.

Several other prominent features in the budget aided the bearish trend. The withdrawal of the investment allowance the reduction in earlier tax concessions to the polyester industry and the move to stop capitalisation of interest charges was a third blow. On top of all this, the finance minister withdrew the tax concession available so far on inter-corporate dividends. There was no mention in the budget of the kind of capital gains reliefs that would have made investment in shares more attractive for investors.

One or other of these budgetary features is bound to affect the prospects of most companies in the country. And despite the occasional silver linings—like the concessions in excise duty on life-saving drugs and the reliefs in the rate of excise duty on edible and solvent extraction oils—the overall message signalled to the market was not very favourable.

The market had already been nervous before budget day, and the investors' worst fears would seem to have been confirmed. Thus, between budget day and March 5, Wimco had dropped 32 per cent, Ceat 21 per cent, Zuari, Blow Plast, Straw Products and Peico 14 per cent, Hindustan Aluminium 13 per cent, and so on down the line. These are not small drops, and almost every share available on the market lost value. It now remains to be seen how long the market will take to fully discount share prices for the impact of the budget and begin to show some optimism again regarding the future.

ACTIVE STOCKS

	1986 HIGH	LOW	CLOSE 5.3.86	Change in Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	45.00	37.50	37.50	2.00 –
Associated Bearings	990.00	775.00	890.00	65.00 –
Associated Cement	389.00	341.00	345.00	27.00 –
Atlas Copco	92.50	77.00	81.00	7.50 –
Bajaj Auto	2775.00	1950.00	2500.00	240.00 +
Ballarpur	65.50	55.00	56.00	nil
Baroda Rayon	490.00	390.00	390.00	30.00 –
Bata India	82.50	70.00	70.00	3.00 –
Bayer	680.00	445.00	600.00	40.00 –
Bharat Forge	86.00	55.00	55.00	14.00 –
Birla Jute	97.00	47.50	47.50	45.50 –
Blow Plast	160.00	105.00	116.00	4.00 –
Blue Star	110.00	87.50	92.50	2.50 +
Bombay Dyeing	120.00	86.00	90.50	0.50 –
Brooke Bond	95.50	74.00	86.00	1.00 –
Ceat Tyres	520.00	240.00	400.00	50.00 –
Century Spinning	1690.00	1430.00	1465.00	170.00 –
Chloride India	122.00	98.00	98.00	5.00 –
Cimrgia	65.00	47.00	47.00	3.00 –
Colgate	262.50	215.00	220.00	15.00 –
Cyanamid	100.00	70.00	87.50	3.50 +
DCM	58.50	37.00	37.00	6.00 –
Dunlop	74.50	49.75	64.50	3.50 –
Elecon Engg.	117.50	82.50	95.00	nil
Escorts	94.00	70.50	71.00	3.00 –
Food Specialities	285.00	230.00	242.50	10.00 –
Gearware Nylon	61.50	40.00	40.50	2.50 –
Glaxo	87.00	66.00	74.00	2.00 –
G.E. Shipping	36.00	24.50	25.00	2.00 –
Gujarat St Fertilisers	1700.00	925.00	1385.00	120.00 –
Gwalior Rayon	88.00	74.50	74.50	8.00 –
Hindustan Lever	163.00	127.50	139.00	7.00 –
Hindustan Motors	128.50	116.50	116.50	8.00 –
Indian Explosives	84.50	69.00	72.00	4.00 –
Indian Hotels	157.00	115.00	135.00	2.50 –
Indian Organic	90.00	74.50	75.00	6.50 –
Indian Rayon	151.00	114.00	116.00	18.00 –
Indrol	390.00	285.00	350.00	25.00 –
Ind. Suzuki	81.00	58.00	62.00	7.00 –
Ingersoll-Rand	480.00	360.00	415.00	5.00 –
ITC	76.50	53.00	68.00	2.00 +
J.K. Synthetics	132.00	106.00	115.00	7.00 –
Kinetic Engineering	325.00	270.00	282.50	7.50 –
Kirloskar Cummins	715.00	580.00	580.00	10.00 –
Lakme	195.00	120.00	120.00	67.50 –
Larsen & Toubro	204.00	175.00	175.00	15.00 –
Lipton	69.00	46.50	59.00	4.50 –
Lohia Machines	70.00	50.00	52.00	10.00 –
Mahindra & Mahindra	86.00	66.00	66.00	7.00 –
Motor Industries	910.00	680.00	680.00	65.00 –
National Organic	777.50	585.00	705.00	12.50 +
Nirlon	77.00	54.00	55.00	4.00 –
Orkay Silk Mills	167.00	125.50	143.00	10.00 –
Peico Electronics	104.50	62.00	62.00	7.00 –
Premier Auto	745.00	632.50	655.00	37.50 –
Ranbaxy	160.00	115.00	135.00	6.00 –
Raymond	97.00	79.00	82.00	nil
Reliance Industries	367.00	226.00	331.00	5.00 +
Sandoz	88.00	62.00	83.00	1.00 –
Shriram Fibres	88.00	70.00	72.00	9.00 –
SPIC	184.00	129.50	154.00	13.00 –
Tata Steel	1440.00	1142.50	1340.00	20.00 +
Telco	910.00	735.00	745.00	70.00 –
Vulcan Laval	162.50	85.00	105.00	37.50 –
Wimco	98.00	58.00	69.00	28.00 –
20th Century Leasing	77.50	55.00	63.00	nil

WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	8.6032	8.5199
Austria	Schilling	100	77.6352	76.3741
Bahrain	Dinar	1	33.8732	33.6530
Bangladesh	Taka	100	42.8660	42.3130
Canada	Dollar	1	8.6723	8.5902
Denmark	Kroner	1	1.4746	1.4615
Egypt	Pound	1	15.3722	15.3012
France	Franc	1	1.8066	1.7652
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	1.5682	1.5567
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	1.1330	1.1011
Iran	Rial	100	15.5001	15.4332
Italy	Lira	100	0.8030	0.7900
Japan	Yen	100	6.8187	6.7593
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.7870	0.7701
Kuwait	Dinar	1	44.9910	44.7332
Malaysia	Dollar	1	4.8647	4.7859
Mauritius	Rupee	1	0.9032	0.8730
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.6130	0.6001
Netherlands	Guilder	1	4.8337	4.7930
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7990	0.7832
Singapore	Dollar	1	5.6706	5.6150
Spain	Peseta	1	0.0860	0.0803
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4590	0.4513
Sweden	Kroner	1	1.6931	1.6757
Switzerland	Franc	1	6.4368	6.3769
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.7823	0.7701
Thailand	Baht	100	48.7320	48.6002
UK	Pound	1	17.8173	17.6959
USA	Dollar	1	12.4075	12.2925
UAE	Dirham	1	3.4332	3.4001
USSR	Rouble	1	14.3632	17.3231
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	5.6242	5.4854

These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo Limited, New Delhi and quoted between the banks on 7.3.86.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GEORGE FRANCIS/Scorp News

Maruthi college; and (below) students who have left: wasted effort

PRIVATE COLLEGES

Affiliated Problems

WHEN V. Narayan registered at the Maruthi College of Engineering (MCE) in Chittoor district in 1983, the year it opened its impressive doors, he thought his future was secure. With the affiliation of the college to the International University (IU) at Missouri in the US, Narayan had visions of completing his education with a fancy foreign degree. Today, his ambitions have met a dusty death. "This college has completely ruined my life. I am now over-age for trying for admission to any other engineering college and don't know what to do."

One hundred and forty students of the MCE now face a bleak academic future since the university it is affiliated to is not recognised by the US educational authorities. Frustrated over the fact that their years of effort had come to nought, the students of the MCE quit late last year, foregoing in many cases, handsome amounts paid by way of donation at the time of admission. Filling their cup of sorrow is the refusal by other Indian engineering institutes to allow them to sit for their qualifying examinations since MCE is not recognised by them. T. Krishnababu, a student, echoed the feelings of the others when he lamented: "We were all told at the time of admission that this international university affiliation was only a temporary arrangement and that the college would be trying for affiliation to a local university. After all, not many students would be interested in going to the US for higher studies when they can get a locally recognised engineering degree."

Their disillusionment reflects their sense of shock when it was revealed last year that the IU was not accredited to the US council of post-secondary education. Said Geeta Nayar, student advisor of the United States Educational Foundation in India: "International University, Missouri's degrees in engineering and technical areas awarded upon completion of course work in India may not be recognised by accredited institutions." The situation might have continued had it not been for a student agitation about non-affiliation to local universities which forced the college management to suspend admissions for the 1985 academic programme. The agitation assumed such major proportions that the state Technical Education Minister, Ayyanah Pattrudu, told the Assembly in November last that the state Government was investigating cases of institutions like MCE claiming affiliation to foreign universities. The state law department was examining last fortnight whether any law could be made to check such practices.

It will not be too soon. The mushroom growth of locally unaccountable private institutions claiming foreign affiliation has assumed the dimensions of a plague, and not only in Andhra Pradesh. In Madras, 18 students joined the Sri Krishna College of Engineering and Technology (SKCET) to study computer science for four years when it was started in early 1984. This college also claimed IU affiliation. Many students had to cough out large donations of Rs 5,000 each to gain admission. But one and a half years later, in November 1985, 11 of the 18 students have left the college and are starting their professional education all over again. Incredibly enough, the remaining seven have joined the MCE to study electronics knowing fully well that the same fate might await them here too.

Such academic malpractices extend to institutions of management courses

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

...o figure out in the corporate world

...i Arbuda Mills

We produce more than 80 lakh metres of finest Dress Material

More than 60 lakh metres of excellent Shirtings and Suitings

200 beautiful designs in not less than 3500 shades of colours

...Cottons, Polyesters and blends-Year after year.

Shri Arbuda Mills Ltd.

Where craftsmanship turns into traditions

Shaili Pancham - AM 1-86

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Hero Honda CD 100 It keeps the promise.

High performance
On the road all over India, the Hero Honda CD 100 is fulfilling the promise it made. A motorcycle that combines power with elegance, total comfort and safety, trouble-free performance and unbelievable economy.

4 Stroke engine
The Hero Honda CD 100's 4 stroke engine gives maximum fuel efficiency. No carbon on plugs and no decarbonising required. Virtually no engine oil consumption. No need to mix oil with petrol. And no smoke.

Phenomenal fuel efficiency
We promised you hi fuel efficiency. The H Honda CD 100 gives 80 km/litre (at 40 k with a load of 130 k which is even less 9 paise per km.

HONDA R&D

nology from d's No. 1 da's highly ucated R& made it a h e in 150 cou world leader
eeler techno
Honda CD 1
duct of the la
dia technolog

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HONDA R&D

nal fuel

sed you ncy. The 100 gives e (at 40 d of 130 ven less r km.

nology from the ld's No. 1 ld's highly isticated R&D efforts made it a household
e in 150 countries and world leader in eeler technology. The Honda CD 100 is a
duct of the latest in da technology.

Honda service standards
At Hero Honda authorised service centres in India, you get what Honda motorcycle drivers all over the world experience. Prompt, efficient and courteous service, from technicians specially trained by Hero Honda.

HERO HONDA

Committed to total customer satisfaction.

ULKA-D-HH-1061

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Pan Am. The Easiest Way To The USA.

One Ticket, One Check-In, One Airline All The Way To Over 45 US Cities.

Pan Am has got the USA well covered.

So instead of crossing the Atlantic with one airline, then changing to another to fly inside the States, Pan Am gives you one airline service all the way. And you only need to check-in once.

Only Pan Am Has India And America Under One Roof.

Catching a connection at JFK, New York? Arrive on another carrier and if you haven't got to switch airlines, you'll certainly have to switch buildings.

Not so with Pan Am. For Pan Am has the only terminal, Worldport,® with all international and internal US flights under one roof.

So instead of struggling with your bags halfway round the airport, your connection is just a few steps away.

ALBANY	CHARLOTTE	MIAMI
ATLANTA	CHICAGO	MINNEAPOLIS/ ST. PAUL
AUSTIN	CINCINNATI
BOSTON	CLEVELAND	NASHVILLE
BUFFALO/ NIAGARA FALLS	DALLAS/FT. WORTH	NEWARK
	DETROIT		NEW YORK	TAMPA/ST. PETE
BURLINGTON	ELMIRA		ORLANDO	UTICA/ROME
	HARTFORD/ SPRINGFIELD		PHILADELPHIA	WASHINGTON D.C.
	HONOLULU		PITTSBURGH
	HOUSTON		RALEIGH/DURHAM
	INDIANAPOLIS		ROCHESTER
	ITHACA		ST. LOUIS
	KANSAS CITY		SAN ANTONIO
	LOS ANGELES		SAN FRANCISCO
	MEMPHIS		SEATTLE/TACOMA
			SYRACUSE

Only Pan Am Has Its Own Free Helicopter Service.

Also at the Pan Am Worldport is another bonus for First and Clipper® Class travellers. A free helicopter service that takes about 8 minutes to Manhattan, 15 to Newark.

hassle, you get a lot more comfort too. For every flight from Delhi and Bombay is a luxurious 747 with three classes to choose from.

Pan Am Has All 747 Service To The USA.

International travel on Pan Am doesn't just mean you avoid a lot of

So fly the easy way to the States, fly Pan Am. From Delhi each Monday, Wednesday, Thursday and Saturday, and from Bombay on Tuesday, Friday and Sunday.

For information and reservations see your Travel Agent or call Pan Am: New Delhi 345222/345244 or Bombay 2029048.

Pan Am. You Can't Beat The Experience.

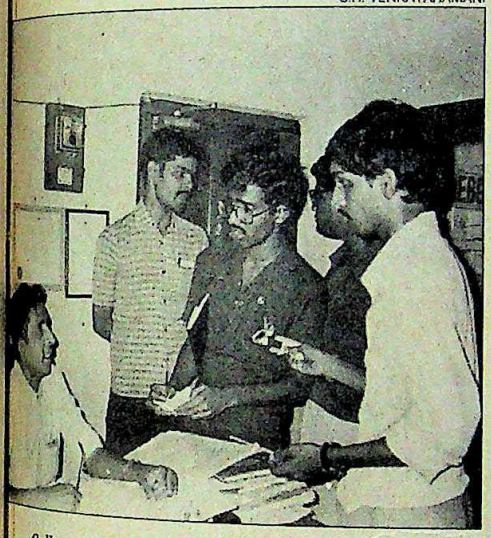
Helicopter service is operated for Pan Am by Omniflight Helicopter Services Inc.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

also. The Andhra Pradesh College of Business Administration, Vijayawada, which got IU affiliation in April 1983, has now been dis-affiliated by the American university itself. Explained Dr G.K. Kothari, advocate who is the representative of the IU in India: "Affiliations of four institutions were cancelled because they were found to have indulged in unfair educational practices. We may point out that our rules prohibit any affiliate from charging any premium or capitation fee for giving admission. Affiliates can charge only college fees. In the case of the MCE we have not received any complaints from students for us to investigate."

S.H. VENKATARAMANI



College Chairman Parthasarthy and agitating students: shattered dreams

Dr Kothari revealed that there were 15 IU affiliates in India at the beginning of 1985. Altogether 35 private Indian institutions had obtained IU affiliation so far but the affiliation lapses unless renewed periodically. IU conditions for affiliation stipulate only such institutions that can organise the necessary expertise to impart training in the chosen field of study, can keep a reasonable security deposit and can pay the required fees. He claims that the IU undertakes periodic inspection of its affiliates to ensure that they conform to reasonable academic standards. There are only six IU affiliates still functioning in India—two in engineering, two in management studies, and one each for computer training and maritime studies.

The City University of Los Angeles and the Newport University of California also have a few affiliates in India. Once again, the problem is that since none of these universities has been recognised by the US Department of Education, degrees from these universities will be virtually valueless in India.

To add to their problems, the students are not qualified to sit for examinations conducted by institutes like that of the Electronics and Telecommunications Engineers and the Institute of Mechanical Engineers. Memberships of these institutes help students get government jobs in case foreign engineering degrees do not get local recognition.

But N.M. Parthasarathy, chairman of the Vellore Educational Trust which runs the MCE, is unfazed by all the controversy. He says: "I didn't want affiliation to any university in Andhra Pradesh at all, because it would have meant that applicants for admission into my college would have had to go through the common engineering entrance exam in the state. Also 95 per cent of the students admitted would have to be Andhra Pradesh domiciles and the remaining 5 per cent would have to be admitted according to an inter-state exchange arrangement." The explanation rings hollow in light of the fact that the Vellore Educational Trust filed a case in the Andhra Pradesh High Court challenging the grant of local university affiliation to two engineering colleges started in the state after MCE was denied local affiliation. It lost the case and is now planning to appeal again to the Supreme Court.

He also started a parallel Maruthi Institute of Technology (MIT) in 1984 affiliated to the City University of Los Angeles and took in 25 students that year and 23 the next. And now classes are being conducted jointly for both MCE and MIT students with the Sri Krishna students also being thrown in for good measure. To cap it all, Parthasarathy has clubbed the third year and second year students so that they attend the same classes—a practice unheard of in the annals of engineering education. But as long as students are willing to join such institutions, and the state Governments dilly dally over clamping down on them for flying under somewhat false flags, unheard of educational practices are bound to force their way into the groves of academe.

—S.H. VENKATRAMANI

SAVE RS. 39/-

Every fortnight INDIA TODAY gives you the complete perspective on subjects determining the nation's destiny.

Can you afford to miss out?

Here is my annual subscription of Rs. 105/- by Cheque/M.O/D.D

No. _____

Please mail my copy to:

Name _____

Address _____

_____

City _____

State _____

Pin Code _____

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

Mail to:
Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.
Subscription Department
Thomson Press Building
P.B. No. 69, Delhi-Mathura Road
Faridabad 121007 (HARYANA)

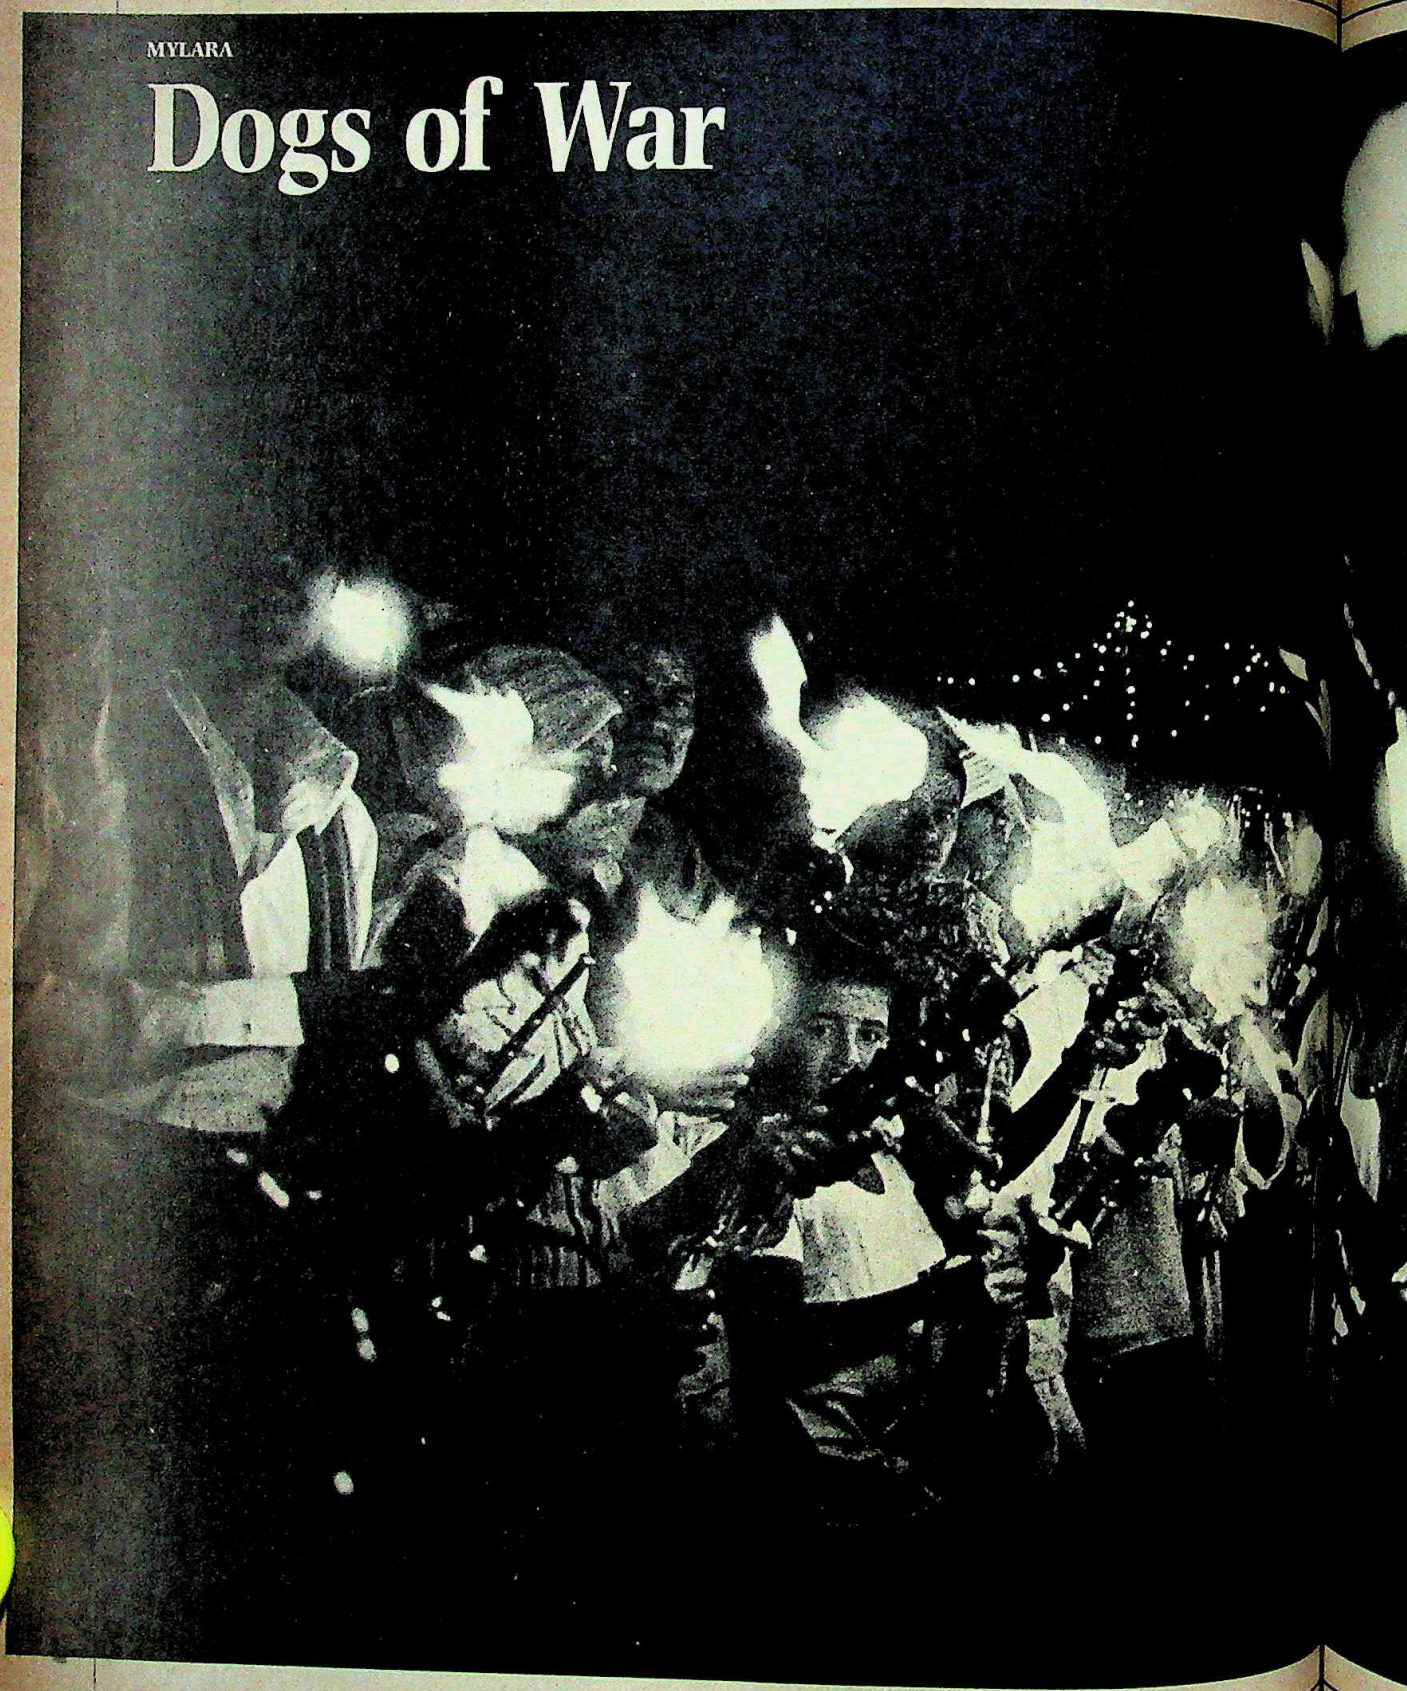
DU 601

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MYLARA

Dogs of War



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MYLARA is a sleepy little village in Karnataka's Bellary district, some 250 km from the state capital of Bangalore. But once every year in February, it springs to unusual life, transformed into a colourful and epic-related 'battlefield' complete with ancient rites and voodoo-like prophecies. For three emotion-charged days, Mylara transports itself back into the age of legend and mythology, of gods and demons, and warrior-kings and witchcraft.

Two days after the first full moon in the month of February is sighted, 'armies' march into Mylara from parts of Karnataka, Andhra Pradesh and Maharashtra comprising followers of a cult which enacts the mythological battle between Lord Shiva and the two demon kings, Mallasura and Manikasura. Shiva, according to the legend, defeated the demons by making his soldiers, numbering 7 crore, take the form of dogs, horses and other animals. The entire sequence is re-enacted on the site where the battle is supposed to have taken place.

Last fortnight, Mylara echoed once again to the sounds of barking dogs, the cracking of whips and victorious war cries as Lord Shiva's soldiers once again engaged the demon twins in epic battle. The ceremonial start to the enactment is as solemn as it is sinister. A black flag is hoisted amid the hush, signalling the start of the battle. Rows of torch-bearing devotees file past like ghosts in the night while other devotees, called Gorravas, clad in black robes, carrying trishuls, brass bowls and fans made of black animal hair dangling from their necks, form a menacing backdrop.

Lord Shiva's 'soldiers', possessed by God, drop to the ground on all fours, barking like dogs or prancing about like horses, whipping themselves with quirts. The mock battle, staged in an open field under the scorching sun, is fast and furious with the din raised by the 'dogs' and 'horses' lending cacophonic accompaniment. And as the sun sets and the dust settles, the battle ends with the torch-bearers walking in single file to a nearby hillock where they let out full-throated victory cries, thus declaring the armies of Shiva the victorious side. The Gorravas lift their brass bowls symbolising the done believed to have been used by Shiva and his army for the victory feast. The black robes they wear are meant to represent the black cloak worn by Shiva during the battle to disguise himself.

The womenfolk join in the victory celebrations, some of them carrying bags made of leaves with betel nuts inside. The bags are placed reverentially on the palanquin of Lord Shiva and then taken

Torch-bearers line up for the 'war'; and (below) a 'soldier' portraying one of the dogs of Shiva's army

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

home to be worshipped. The rites continue at the main Shiva temple in the village which forms the centrepiece of the ceremonial side of the drama—families bring their sons to the temple to be given their first hair-cut.

The 'battle' over, the crowds gather in eager anticipation for the main event—the annual prophecy by the temple's 'prophet'. The prophecy is made at sunset and the believers start congregating on an open patch of ground near the hillock to gain vantage points. Some scramble for a place on the slopes of other hillocks, others squat in the dried fields parched from the prolonged drought that has affected the area, while the more enterprising clamber into the branches of nearby trees. Chants of elu koti, elu koti, meaning 7 crore, punctuate the animated debate on what possible predictions the prophet will make for the coming year.

As the historic moment approaches, a hush settles over the crowd and all eyes are rivetted on the area marked out with bamboo stakes. A huge, collective sigh goes up as the foot-long shoes, supposedly worn by the God and the Goddess, are brought in to be followed by a 'soldier' bearing a shining five-foot-long sword, heralding the arrival of the head priest of the Mylara temple, Shri Guru Jayachandra Wodeyar Swamy, riding a sleek white horse and followed by his sons and selected devotees holding an umbrella over his turbaned head. The priest circles the 70-foot circular arena thrice, his expressions alternating between the aggressiveness of a warrior and the benevolence of a victorious God, to seemingly ensure that all is in order for the arrival of the prophet.

THE APPEARANCE of prophet Karnik Malappa—undoubtedly the star of the show—is elaborately staged for maximum dramatic effect. First arrives a huge, 15-feet bow borne aloft by devotees, believed by those present to be the same weapon used by Shiva to slay his demon enemies. The simultaneous arrival of the prophet, also carried into the arena on the shoulders of devotees, is the signal for breathless silence. In the midst of the quiet, betrayed only by the rustle of dry leaves, the prophet touches the feet of the head priest and seeks his blessings for the awesome task he must now perform.

As the sun dips below the horizon, the bow is lifted up and Malappa nimbly shins up the elevated bow and once on top, gazes at the sky and announces his prediction. The entire rite takes a bare 30 seconds and after uttering the prophecy, he falls back into the waiting arms of his devotees below. This year, the prophecy, which the cult accepts as gospel, was sufficiently ambiguous to lend it the appropriate air of mystery and magic.

The four Kannada words he spoke were: "Akashake gundu toogitale, parak," which left those assembled initially puzzled since most of the villagers translated it

Women take out the sacred procession; and (below) the black-robed Gorravas

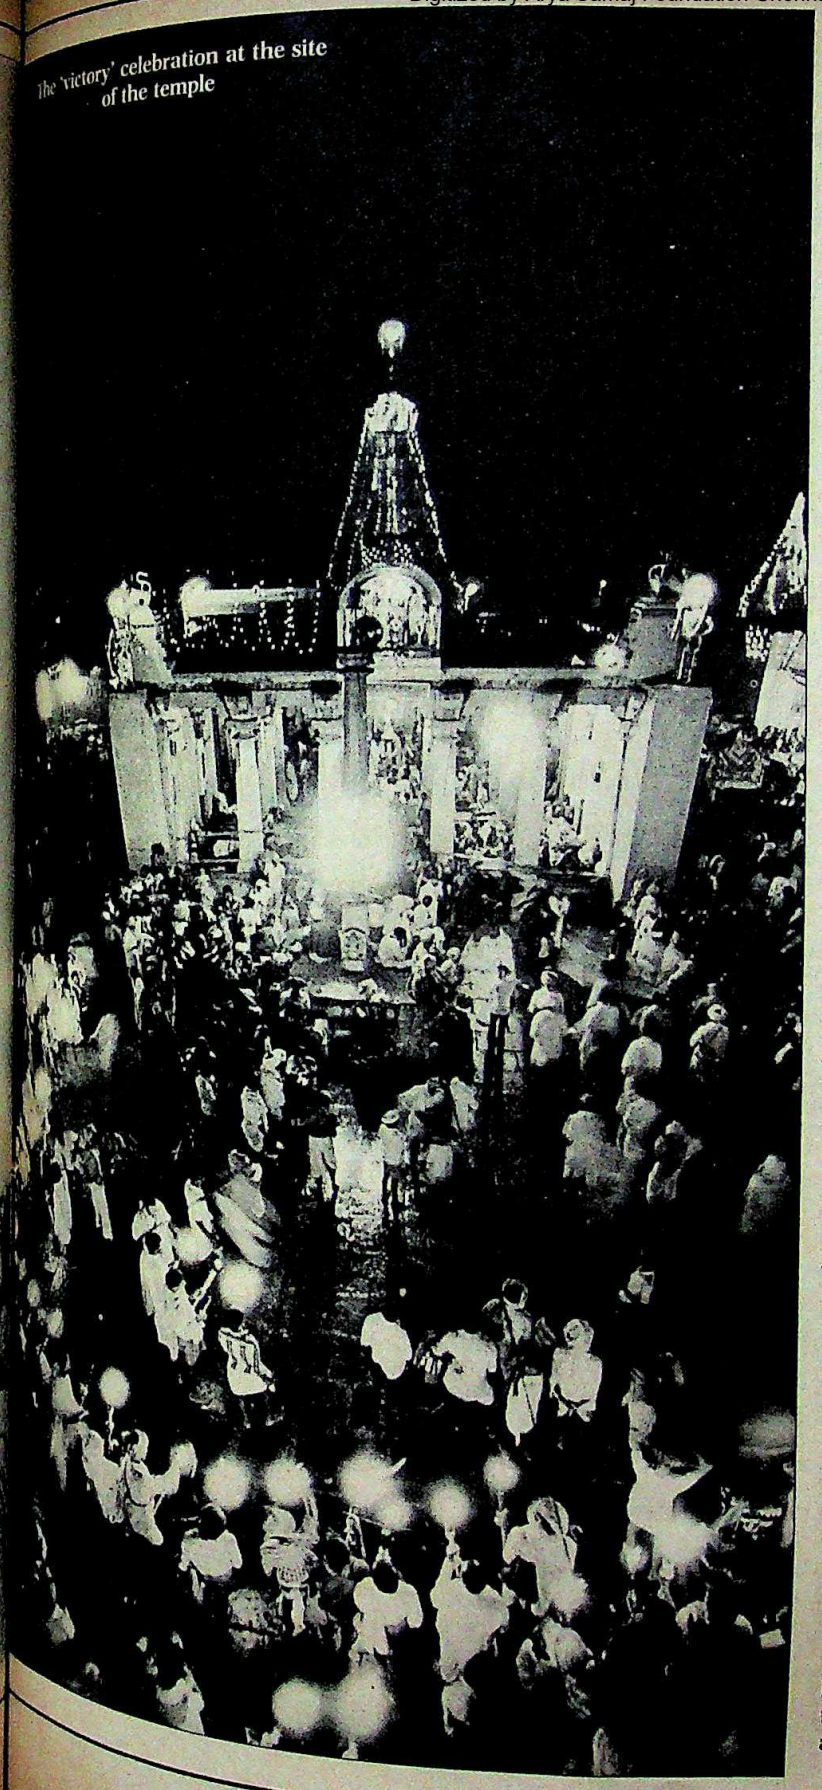
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The prophet making his prediction for the coming year

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



The 'victory' celebration at the site of the temple into: "The earth and sky are joining. Beware." But the special deputy commissioner overseeing arrangements translated it as: "Bullets are hanging in the sky, be careful." He felt the prophet was warning the world about the implications of US President Reagan's Strategic Defence Initiative, or Star Wars programme as it is more commonly known. However, state Agriculture Minister M.P. Prakash, who is a devoted follower of the cult, insists that the correct translation is: "Bullets are being fired at the sky. Be careful."

IN FACT, official patronage of the Mylara jathra is in abundant evidence. Policemen take part in the flag-hoisting ceremony and salute the head priest who garlands them and their weapons and smears their foreheads with sacred turmeric powder. A special deputy commissioner of police is drafted to make arrangements for the event and he receives the head priest when the latter arrives for the ceremony. Prakash, who belongs to the area, even ordered the Irrigation Department to release 900 cusecs of water into the drought-affected Tungabhadra river that flows past Mylara and is considered sacred by the cult's followers. In fact, till 1953, when the village was transferred from the then Madras state to Karnataka, the annual prophecy was dutifully recorded in the Government's gazette.

The prophet's post, like that of the temple head priest, is a hereditary one handed down from generation to generation. "My ancestors were blessed by the head priest's ancestors to do this job and my family has been doing it since," says Malappa, 50, who took over from his father 20 years ago. He admits that his prophecies are open to various interpretations. "Even I don't know what I am going to say. I am in a trance when I utter the words. I have to ask others what I said." Last year he prophesied that the Universe would be "covered by darkness", which local devotees interpreted to mean that the prolonged drought they have been experiencing in the state would intensify. It did. In 1983, his prediction was that there would be heavy rains and in 1984 he prophesied that "there will be pearls everywhere" which was translated as farmers would have a good harvest. Neither came to pass though the prophecy is admittedly meant to apply to the "universe". This year again, the prophet had left his prediction sufficiently vague to add that much more mystery to the Mylara aura.

—SRINIVASA PRASAD in Mylara

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SYLVANIA & LAXMAN LTD.

CHAIRMAN'S STATEMENT

Laxman S. Agarwal

Ladies & Gentlemen :

I extend to you all a hearty welcome on behalf of myself and my colleagues on the Board to the 23rd Annual General Meeting of the Company. The Annual Report and the Statement of Accounts for the year ended 30th September, 1985 have been in your hands for quite some time now and with your permission, I shall take them as read.

OPERATING RESULTS

During the year under review, our turnover has increased only marginally primarily due to stiff competition in the market in the face of Lighting Industry over-production viz-a-viz. demand, particularly GLS. The profitability of your Company is also under pressure due to escalating input and operational costs.

As a measure of diversification, your Company started marketing both Colour and Black & White Television Receivers under its own brand name. But due to teething trouble in the initial stages, which is not unusually abnormal, your Company could not achieve its targets. However, it is expected that the Electronics Division will break even in 1986.

DIVIDEND

You will be pleased to note that your Directors have recommended that Dividend on Equity Capital be stepped up to 23% this year against 22% last year. You are requested to approve it so that payment thereof can be made to the members whose names appear on the Company's Register of Members.

BONUS ISSUE

The General Reserves of your Company as at 30th September, 1985 stood at Rs. 301.03 lacs compared to the issued and paid-up Equity Share Capital of Rs. 198.70 lacs. In view of the healthy free reserves of the Company, your Directors recommended issue of Bonus Shares in the ratio of 1 : 2 for which the proposal is before you for approval, subject to further approval of the Controller of Capital Issues and the Reserve Bank of India.

ECONOMIC SCENE

Since assuming office, our new Prime Minister has initiated many new policy decisions which has created a new, more challenging economic environment. The Government Policy liberalising measures for improvement in industrial activities, de-licencing, broad banding of industries, permitting higher production over licenced capacity, increase in MRTP Ceiling, relaxing various controls, restructure and rationalisation of corporate and personal taxation keeping them stable for five years and other long term fiscal policies have begun, to make suitable impact in widening the production base to generate revenues and creating upsurge in Tax Revenues as well.

It is expected that all these measures will prove favourable for the growth of business provided there is also normal industrial peace and stability. In such an environment your Company would further gain its position of strength.

FUTURE OUT-LOOK

(A) LIGHTING DIVISION

In the first four months of the current year, your Company has achieved a turnover of Rs. 1008 lacs compared to Rs. 912 lacs in the previous year registering a growth of 10.5%. The profit in the same period also increased from Rs. 64 lacs in the year 1984-85 to Rs. 70 lacs in the year 1985-86. However, the GLS segment has become extremely competitive due to unrestricted competition with corresponding erosion on GLS margin. But the prospects in the Fluorescent Tubes sector is encouraging. Therefore, we are expanding the capacity of Fluorescent Tubes by installing a Plant for Slim Line 26" Tubes with a licenced capacity of 2.5 million pcs. P.A. The Plant & Machinery has been received and the same will be installed for production in NOIDA, U.P. where the Company will enjoy Sales Tax exemption for a period of 5 years. In addition, your Company is making investment in our Associated Company—Ajay Electrical Industries Ltd., which is installing a Fluorescent Tube Manufacturing Plant as a measure of diversification of its Product Line which will also augment the captive supply of Fluorescent Tubes to the Company. To cater to our existing and captive additional requirement of Plain Glass Tubes, your Company has decided to install a more modern Glass Tube Draw Plant involving a capital expenditure of about Rs. 125 lacs. This will enable the Company to boost the production from the existing 5 million Plain Glass Tubes to 9 million Glass Tubes per year of better quality and at more economical cost.

Your Company has also taken steps for expansion in allied fields like Lamp Caps, Lamp Filaments and Lamp Making Machinery Projects.

(B) ELECTRONICS DIVISION

As you know that your Company has already made a steady entry into the field of entertainment electronics with the introduction of its Televisions in the market in the year 1984-85. In the first four months of the current year, the Electronics Division, despite competition in the market, have achieved a turnover of approximately Rs. 2 Crores.

We have entered into a memorandum of understanding with SABA of West Germany for technical co-operation in the field of entertainment electronics. The first 1000 high technology TV Sets using know-how from SABA are expected to be released this month. It has a cord-less Remote Control with a Digital display for Volume, Colour, Contrast, Brightness, Compatibility with Teletext and Personal Computers and a host of special facilities. With this product introduction, we expect to firmly establish your Company's name in the highly competitive TV market.

Although the TV market is competitive it is nevertheless very large considering the population coverage of TV Transmitters shall increase from the present 80% to 100% over the year. The Company is already marketing a range of Colour and Black & White TV Sets including Portable Models and Table Models and with the introduction of SABA Sets, the range shall be complete and attractive to our Dealer net work.

Your Company has also arrived at a memorandum of understanding with a multi-national US Company for establishing a joint venture in India for the manufacture of latest technology Microwave Ovens and Laundry Equipment.

Therefore, the future of your Company is expected to be bright both in turnover and profit.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

I would like to place on record the cordial relationship that exists between the Management and the work force of your Company. The results your Company has achieved would not have been possible without hard work and excellent co-operation of the employees at all levels particularly the Managers.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

Before I conclude, I wish to express my sincere gratitude on behalf of my colleagues on the Board and on my own behalf to the Financial Institutions, the Banks and Messrs. GTE International Inc., U.S.A., our Foreign Collaborators, for their co-operation and assistance.

I also wish to thank you all, the esteemed shareholders, particularly those who are present here, for the continued trust and confidence in the Management of the Company.

Dated : February 26, 1986

LAXMAN S. AGARWAL
CHAIRMAN

This does not purport to be the proceedings of the Annual General Meeting

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Tempered, honed and polished to perfection

Erasmic Supreme.
Crafted to the minutest detail, tempered, ground, honed, polished and Teflon coated for a flawless finish.
Erasmic Supreme.
The blade with the diamond edge.
The blade with the edge that cares for your face.

Erasmic Supreme

The blade with the diamond edge

A QUALITY PRODUCT FROM SHARPEDGE LIMITED

LINTAS (D) SHP ESP 172 417

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GAUR SCULPTORS

Hard Times

HIS FACE is gaunt and dry. His frame is emaciated and his fingers have been worked to the bone. With these fingers, Bhagwan Das Gaur has chipped and chiselled images of the gods from lifeless stone over the years, working out a rocky symphony with hammer and chisel. The ravages of his 70 long and barren years are all too obvious as he spreads out his calloused hands and says: "Nothing has changed in my life. Our fate is as hard as the rocks and even the gods do not want to give it shape."

He is not alone in his suffering. In the village of Pattharkatti at the foot of the rocky Vishnupad range, 37 km northeast of Gaya, the sound of hammer and chisel reverberates throughout the day as this small community of Brahmin artisans tries to carve its destiny out of barren stone. They are the descendants of the 900 Gaur Brahmin artisans who were brought from Rajasthan about 300 years ago by the Maharani of Indore to build the Vishnupad Temple at Gaya and stayed on, giving the village its name.

But little has changed for the artisans since that ancient era. While the artisans grapple with hardship and want, their art is on the verge of fading out. "Lack of state patronage, lack of raw material, exploitation by middlemen and poverty have led to the death of this rare traditional art," says Rama Swaroop Gaur, an aged sculptor. And Ramesh Chandra Gaur adds: "We have been making Vishnu, Parvati, Ganesh, Saraswati, Laxmi and Buddha for generations but none of them has come to our rescue."

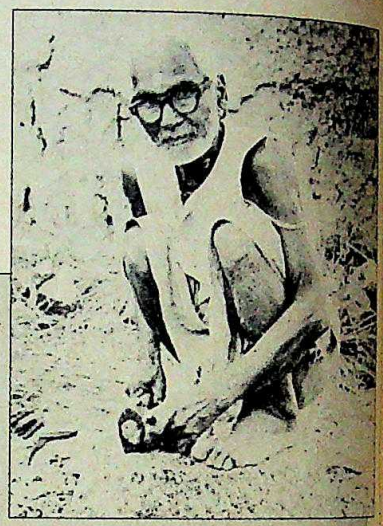
The artisans get next to nothing for their work. Ramesh Chandra laments that it takes between one and two weeks to produce one piece. The middlemen buy it for Rs 50 and sell it at exorbitant prices ranging from Rs 500 to Rs 5,000. The artisans have little option since they cannot handle the distribution and sale on their own. Says Bhagwan Das: "Everybody tries to exploit us. Art pieces worth Rs 2 lakh are lying with us unsold and uncared for."

The situation grew so bad that the whole community would have fled the area had it not been for the then district collector of Gaya, J.C. Mathur, an art-loving ICS officer, who used his discretionary powers and helped them by distributing free food, helping them get loans and setting up a cooperative society. Later, the Government also set up a Pashanpatra Vikas Kendra (stoneware development institute) in the village.

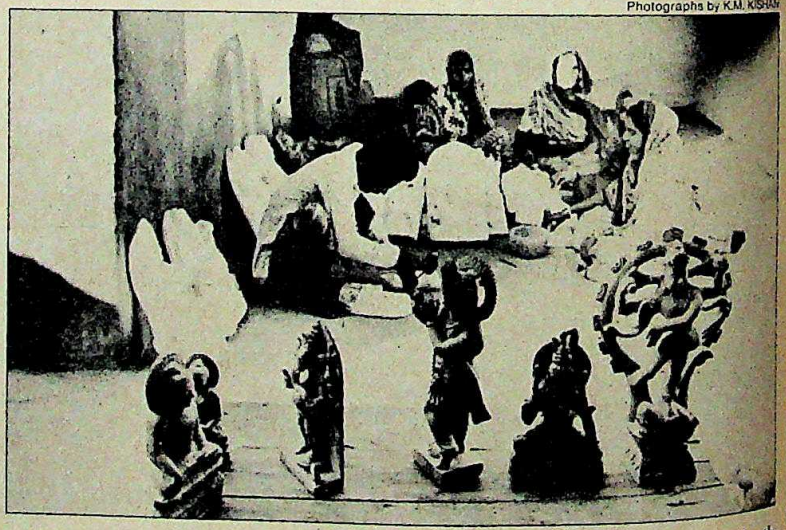
But this has hardly helped matters. Dinanath, skilled artisan at the institute, asserts that the fear of a bleak future and lack of official patronage has all the artisans in the grip of insecurity with barely 20 artisan families now left in the village.

To make matters worse, the artisans are now finding it difficult to get raw material. The Vishnupad range, which provided most of the stone for the Vishnupad temple, used to be rich in special stones like Tamra, Motia, Kasauti, Dham-Mahua and Pagijeet.

> "Our fate is as hard as the rocks and even the gods do not want to give it shape."
> BHAGWAN DAS GAUR



Photographs by K.M. KISHAN



Artisans at Pattharkatti with their works: rocky road

But parts of the range are caving in as the artisans have practically tapped its reserves to the core over the years.

The Government, on its part, says it is doing all that it can to improve the lot of the artisans. Minister of State for Handlooms and Handicrafts Khalied Rashed Saba says that the Government has decided to set up a Rs 18-lakh common facility centre at the village and Rs 3.18 lakh have already been released for the construction of sheds and clearing the stone mines. Saba claims that the Government will open two showrooms exclusively for these artisans—one in Patna and the other outside Bihar. Efforts would also be made to create a market for these objects outside India through the export corporation and the Government would make an in-depth study of their problems. "We are committed to preserve this art," he added.

But the villagers are pessimistic about the future. Such promises and studies have been made in the past and have hardly helped—witness the continued migration from the village and the destitute state of those who have remained and now visualise a rocky end to their rare craft unless the gods they make so lovingly finally decide to smile on them.

—FARZAND AHMED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

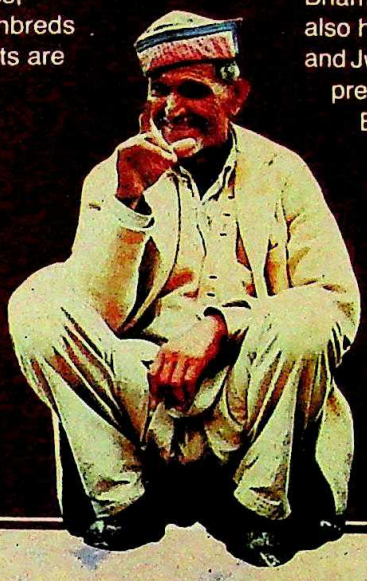
HIMACHAL

We Are Travellers All ...

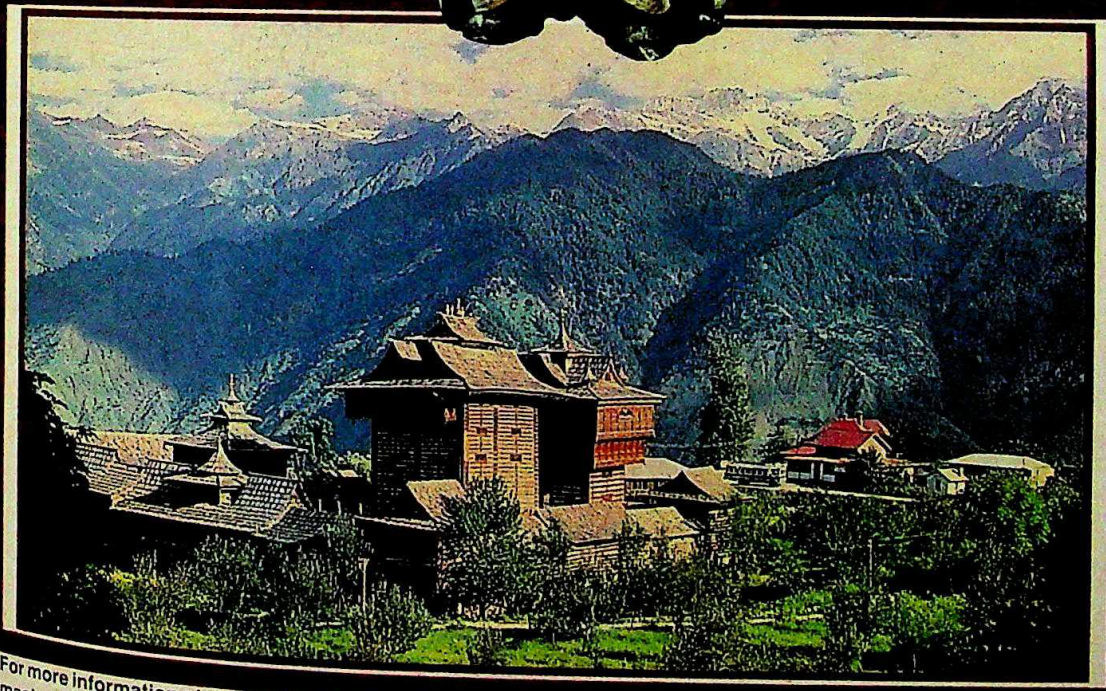
Pilgrims, honeymooners in search of quiet romantic places and cupids bliss, businessmen in a hurry and the thouroughbreds - nature lovers, trekkers, sports enthusiasts are all travellers. In fact, we are travellers all.

And Himachal is as multifaceted as people. Apart from the serene beauty of its mountains and lakes there are myriad opportunities for those interested in trekking, fishing, river rafting and sking.

For the devout ones with a deep interest in temples and Godheads, Himachal has a lot to offer. Temples of great architectural excellence and beauty are spread throughtout the state. Some of them are Chaurasi in Bharmour and Baijnath in Kangra. Kangra also has the famous Naina Devi, Chintpurni and Jwalaji, shrines of the Holy Mother, whose presence is also felt in the Bhimakali temple in Sarahan shown here against the picturesque backdrop of the Srikhand range. Himachal also offers picturesque spots as varied as Dalhousie, Dharamsala, Manali and Shimla.



Where to stay: For accomodation there are many hotels to suit all budgets in Himachal, both privately run and others managed by Himachal Tourism Development Corporation.



For more information please write to the Commissioner Tourism, Himachal Pradesh, Daizy Bank Estate, Shimla - 171001. Tel. 2028. 3136, or contact H.P. Tourist Offices at :

Delhi: Chanderlok Building, Janpath, New Delhi - 110001. Tel: 345320. Bombay: 36, World Trade Centre Cuffe Parade, Bombay - 400005 Tel: 219191/284. Calcutta: 25, Camac Street, Calcutta. Tel: 446847. Madras: 28, C - in - C, Madras - 600015. Tel: 812955. Chandigarh S.C.O. 1048-49, Sector 22B. Tel: 26494.

HIMACHAL TOURISM

Tick one or more of the following and obtain colourful folders on any of the following aspects:

Adventure Sports ☐ Flora and Fauna ☐ Temples and monuments ☐ Lakes ☐ Fishing ☐ Fairs and Festivals ☐ Winter in Himachal ☐ Kulu-Manali ☐ Dalhousie-Chamba ☐ Simla-Chail-Narkanda ☐ Kangra-Dharamsala-Jawalaji ☐ Nahan-Renuka ☐ Name

Add.

Cut out this coupon and mail to the Commissioner Tourism, Himachal Pradesh, Daizy Bank Estate, Shimla-171001.

ASTIKA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Finishing Touches

When you have time to yourself in a Parryware bathroom, you can celebrate personal victories.

Wasn't it just yesterday that the zillionth person told your husband he had a charming wife?

Remember how you proved to the world that you would build that beautiful house of your dreams.

Why, you're probably the only person who can get back into the cholis you wore at 18, in spite of 2 children.

Parryware bathrooms let you relive moments of pride.

They have a modernity to make you feel young.

A heritage to be proud of.

A finish that says you've got style.

Colours to complement your sophistication.

And a beauty that inspires you to get the very best out of your life.

Parryware
VITREOUS

Manufactured and marketed by EID Parry (India) Limited - Ceramics Division, Dare House, P B No 12, N.S.C. Bose Road, Madras 600

the pleasure of a beautiful bathroom

CC-0. In Pub

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Give her the gift of time

Remember when you had just married. She always seemed to be waiting for you to come home. Peeping out shyly. Surrounded by her new family.

Remember that first movie you took her to. The long walks ... Spending hours together. Getting to know each other. Those were the good times.

Then came parenthood. Astonishing the amount of work and time small infants demand.

Suddenly, she had no time left. Between the nappies and the midnight feeds she fit in the cooking for 3-meals-a-day. Shopped daily, to not waste a thing. Washed. Cleaned. Ironed. Stitched. Looked after your parents. Even you!

Now that you can afford it ... give her the one gift she hasn't had for years. Give her the gift of time. Bring home a Kelvinator. And bring back the good times.

Sold & serviced by :

Expo Machinery Limited

Pragati Tower, 26, Rajindra Place,
New Delhi-110 008.

BRANCHES :
New Delhi, Bombay, Calcutta, Madras, Ahmedabad, Alwar, Bangalore, Bhopal, Bhubaneshwar, Chandigarh, Cochin, Dhanbad, Ghaziabad, Hyderabad, Jaipur, Kanpur, Kundli (Haryana), Patna, Vijayawada, Visakhapatnam.

Bring home happiness
Bring home a

Kelvinator®
Refrigerator

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

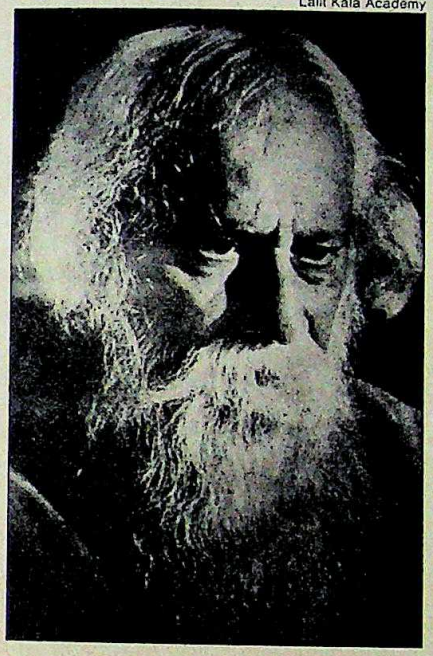
TAGORE PAINTINGS

The Master's Due

"I know not who paints the pictures on memory's canvas; but whoever he may be, what he is painting are pictures; by which I mean that he is not there with his brush simply to make a faithful copy of all that is happening."

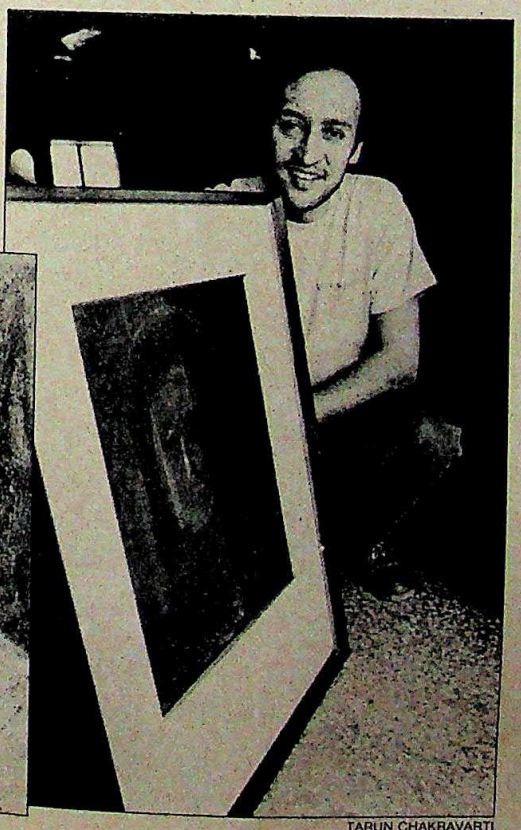
—Rabindranath Tagore in Jivansmriti (Memoirs)

Lalit Kala Academy



THE FACES are gaunt and sombre. The highlights on their surface defy all principles of optics, as if lit up by unexpected chinks in some cloistered studio of the psyche. The landscapes are marked by lines that change their course and hardness following some inner dictate of the soul. The lines are far from geometric, as if corresponding to some nervy impulses of auto-drawing. But regardless, the paintings of Rabindranath Tagore have left art-lovers stunned by their simplicity and the artist's ability to paint from the heart.

But Tagore the artist never really received the commercial acclaim his works deserved—till now, that is. For the past year, Calcutta's traditional art dealers have been receiving enquiries for "any Tagore" with cash offers of Rs 1 lakh or above, the highest offer for the bulk of work of any modern Indian painter, alive or dead. Film actor Victor Bannerjee, who is also an avid collector and the owner of Calcutta's first commercial gallery, bought in 1982 an unnamed portrait by Tagore, painted on paper and not larger than 18 x 10 inches, for only Rs 10,000. Today he is being offered Rs 80,000 to Rs 1 lakh but he refuses to part with it. "I must hold on to it till the temptation is too great, and the pride in possessing a Tagore may eventually outweigh all financial temptations," declares the actor.



Tagore, Bannerjee (right) with his painting; and Kadambari's portrait

TARUN CHAKRAVARTI

Rani Chanda, who authored many books on Tagore and now lives at Santiniketan, jealously guards her eight Tagore paintings from dealers foraying to her home with offers of Rs 5 lakh for the entire collection. Pradip Roy Chowdhury, a dealer who possesses seven paintings by Tagore, besides an extensive collection of documents, manuscripts and other Tagore memorabilia, would not sell "even a scrap of paper" because he senses that the prices are on a steeply upward curve now.

Of the 3,000-odd paintings that Tagore had done in the last four decades of his life (1901-1941), a little over 2,000 are to be found in the catalogues of various museums of the world, the lion's share of course being accounted for by Visva-Bharati, the university founded by the poet-painter, whose museum has 1,600 of them. Though 1,000 paintings are now held by private collectors, many of whom had family associations with Tagore and often got the paintings gratis, very few have a chance to surface now—such being the fierce pride in their acquisition. Since 1985, no Indian museum has been able to identify potential buys because of the price factor.

The most recent purchase of privately-held Tagore paintings was made by Rabindra Bharati museum, located in Tagore's ancestral house at Jorasanko in old Calcutta, when it acquired two of them late in 1984—one called Faust and the other a landscape—at a price which its curator, Samar Bhowmik, would not disclose. All facts can never be known in the world of art purchase, and dealers hide the names of potential buyers till the last moment. But a museum in Bombay, owned by a large industrial house, is believed to have paid an "earnest money" of Rs one lakh to a dealer in Calcutta to identify and acquire on its behalf a modest collection of Tagore paintings at "any price".

The popularity of Tagore is not altogether a freak phenomenon accountable only by the passing vagaries of art connoisseurs. Says celebrity painter M.F. Husain: "Even though Picasso had painted a lot of child art late in his life, it was essentially cerebral painting. But Tagore as a painter had a pristine quality about him—something unprecedented in the history of art." The famous erasures in Tagore manuscripts began as early as 1874, when he was only 13, but his most intense phase as a painter started with his exposure in the early 1920s to the Bauhaus painters—Wassily Kandinsky, Lionel Feininger and Paul Klee. He absorbed contemporary western influences and created what is regarded as a one-man genre.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It is this distinctiveness which perhaps explains the phenomenon of the rising prices. "Add to that," says Roy Chowdhury, "the aura of a poet of world renown, the age to which he belonged, and the fact that he being a dead artist, there is a natural limitation on the number of his available paintings."

MEANWHILE, forgers have started cashing in on the new demand. Bhowmik was approached last year with two portraits, allegedly by Tagore, for which a suspiciously modest price was asked. A close check of the paper showed that it did not carry the obligatory monogram of Visva-Bharati, nor did the signatures at the back tally with Tagore's own which changed with the passing years so regularly that one can always place them in time provided they are genuine. But by the time the two paintings were established to be fake, the fly-by-night dealer had disappeared. Roy Chowdhury says the fake Tagore paintings have a burgeoning market in middle class homes whose owners would buy the stuff knowingly, "in the spirit of buying a copy". But the price of even a crude copy—it is not easy to imitate Tagore's spontaneous lines—has soared to Rs 2,500 or around if the buyer is conscious of what he is buying; otherwise the tag can be even higher.

The estimate of 3,000 paintings are based mostly on versions of close Tagore-watchers and his personal staff and friends. But Bhowmik agrees that "there may be a lot of paintings freely afloat in private homes". Except a few well-known private collections, like the Sarabhais' in Ahmedabad or industrialist B.K. Birla in Calcutta, no individuals are known to possess Tagore paintings in any large numbers. The last collector to sell in bulk was Nirmal Kumari Mahalanabis, widow of the statistician P.C. Mahalanabis, who parted with all her 37 paintings—often for a song—in the four years between 1977 and 1981. Those who dealt in the Mahalanabis collections now repent having allowed them to pass into collectors' hands without anticipating the rise in the prices.

In the art market, spiralling offers often push the paintings under the carpet until the bids plateau off at a high level. "Tagore paintings are passing through a period of speculative hoarding," says Bannerjee. But, even at the present level of bidding, Tagore far outstrips Abanindranath Tagore, Nandalal Bose and Jamini Roy—all celebrated masters of the Bengal school—whose works are continuously changing hands at prices well within the Rs 5,000 to Rs 10,000 range.

The last exhibition of Tagore paintings was held in Calcutta in April 1983 at the Birla Academy of Art and Culture in which 50 collections, all drawn from the repertoire of private collectors, were on display. Though bringing out in the open only a fraction of the paintings and sketches that are privately held, it gave a fair indication about the current owners. Maitreyi Devi, novelist, essayist and an associate of the poet, had seven paintings on display; the owners of the Ananda Bazar group of papers had 14; Roy Chowdhury had six; Bannerjee had his lone possession as an entry; Birla himself had four; dealer Dilip Roy had six; and the Academy 11. Of the two entries from Nihar Ranjan Chakraborty, a well-known city businessman, the one that is considered priceless is the portrait of Kadambari Devi, wife of the poet's elder brother who had committed suicide leaving a void which literary critics have often traced to his later works.

Museologists say there is no way of knowing how many of the sketches and paintings Tagore had gifted away and how many of those painted during his long sojourns abroad have still been lying outside the country. It was only last year that the Rabindra Bharati Museum acquired from West Germany a 1935 portrait by Tagore of Mussolini, the fascist leader, drawn with a ringing satirical force which is quite uncharacteristic of him. The British Museum has a dozen of his paintings, all acquired from non-Indian sources. But, as a collector says, "it is the Bengali elite of Tagore's lifetime, connected to him in the social circuits, which has the lion's share". And, at the rate their prices are spiralling, the full scope and value of Tagore's artistic endeavours might finally be forced out into the open.

—SUMIT MITRA in Calcutta

Five persons, scene from freedom struggle and Portrait at Lahore

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

troducing Eveready Super
ith advanced Zinc Chloride technology
uper charged for maximum power and life

Eveready presents a new generation of high technology Zinc Chloride batteries.
New Eveready Super.
Eveready Super's advanced technology
is designed to give you unmatched performance
in your power-hungry
modern machines like two-in-one,
cassette recorder, Walkman,
electronic toy and photoflash.
In your modern machines nothing
outlasts Eveready Super.

New Eveready Super

Designed just for your modern machines.

EVEREADY

Rediffusion/UC/4222

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

There're only two ways to see the world's finest one-man collection: either you happen to be a friend of Theodore Papadarakis, the Greek shipping tycoon or you are in Hyderabad.

The Salar Hyderabad is man collectio intriguing arra includes Emp hunting dagge Antoinette's w has priceless ivory and porc furniture, cloc its 36 halls.

Hyderaba
Jang Museum
Shahi Tombs
Golconda For
Temple of Nau
City's Sagar L
the Char Mina

Wander ar bazaars and y
the bangle se priceless pear jewellery in th
And, of course mouth-waterin
— a pounded

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Salar Jang Museum in Hyderabad is one of the finest one-man collections in the world. An intriguing array of treasures, which includes Emperor Jehangir's thumbing dagger and Marie Antoinette's writing table, it also has priceless collections of jade, ivory and porcelain. Exquisite furniture, clocks and paintings fill its 36 halls.

Hyderabad is not just the Salar Jang Museum. It has the Qutab Shahi Tombs — just outside the Golconda Fort; the imposing Temple of Naubat Pahad by the city's Sagar Lake; and of course the Char Minar.

Wander around the quaint bazaars and you'll hear the call of the bangle sellers ... Browse for priceless pearls and Banjara gypsy jewellery in the city's old quarters. And, of course, you must taste the mouth-watering cuisine; Haleem — a pounded wheat cooked with tender meat and garnished with crisply fried onions. Traditional Biryani — spicy and sumptuous. And almond-flavoured Birinj sprinkled with rose petals.

Hyderabad can be easily reached by rail, road and air. Conducted tours for sight-seeing are available in and around Hyderabad. Hotels ranging from Rs. 325/- per day to Rs. 25/- per day, and dharamshalas, guest-houses and youth hostels welcome you.

Discover India
Discover yourself

Come as a scholar, come as a layman, come as an artist. Come as a tourist, come as a student, come even as a friend of Theodore Papadarakis. Come any way you like; Hyderabad will beguile you, intrigue you, and ultimately captivate you.

Department of Tourism
Government of India

For more information about travelling in India, write to any one of our Regional Offices at:

BOMBAY
123 M.K. Road, Churchgate,
Bombay-400 020.

CALCUTTA
'Embassy', 4 Shakespeare Sarani,
Calcutta-700 071.

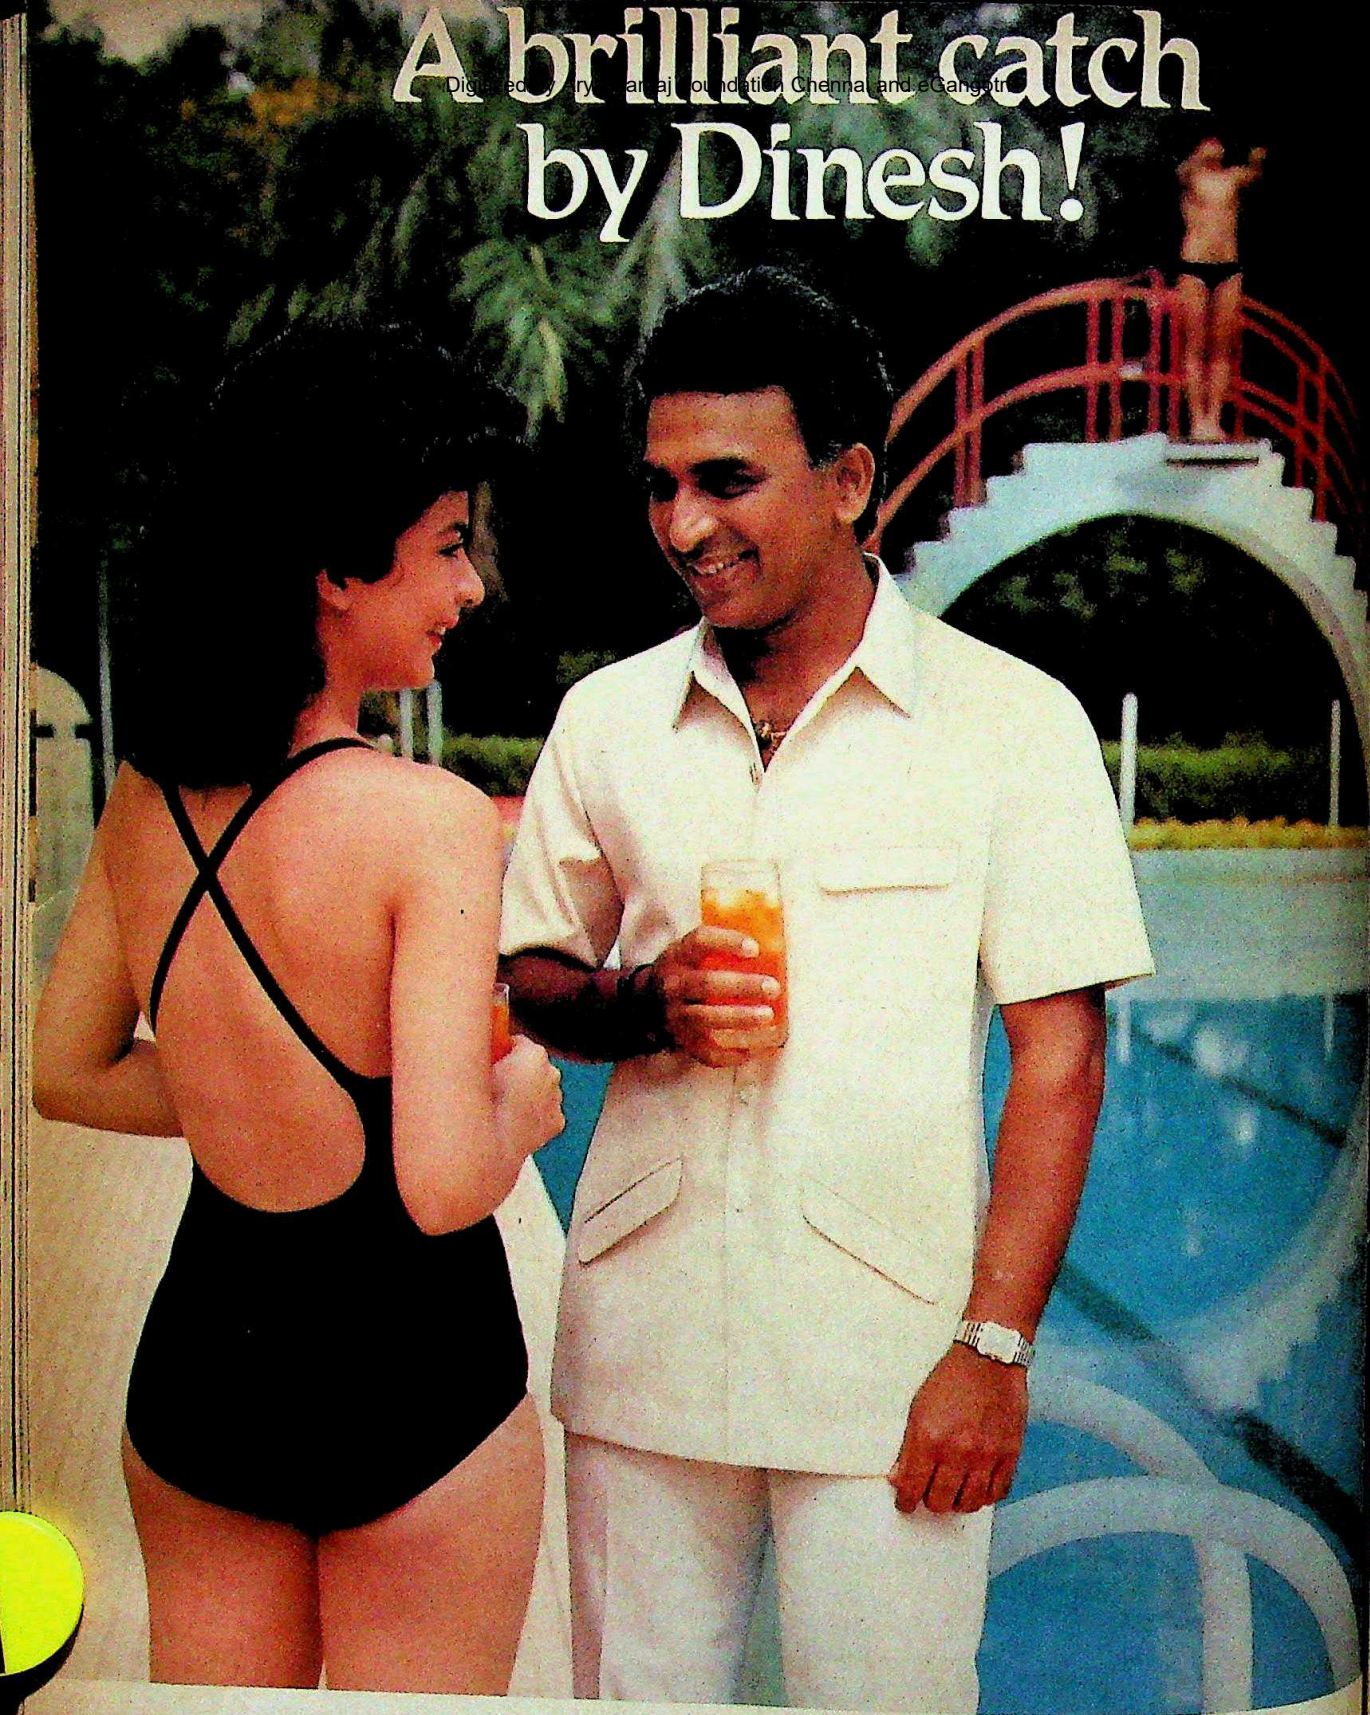
DELHI
88 Janpath, New Delhi- 110 001.

MADRAS
154 Anna Salai, Madras-600 002.

In India you'll see the world.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Crisp, lightweight Dinesh Safaris have caught even Sunil Gavaskar's eye. Because Dinesh Safaris are perfect complements for people with a cool composure and class.

Dinesh Safaris. In a repertoire of shades that are just right for Sunny days!

dinesh Safaris

Give you a distinct identity.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IAN CHRISTIANS

Women's Victory

IT HAD become a cause celebre in Kerala's Christian community by the time Mary Roy finally won her three-year-long battle in the Supreme Court last fortnight, allowing her and other Christian women to claim an equal share in ancestral property. It was a victory for gender equality—more so because Kerala has had a reputation for liberated womanhood despite the archaic law that allowed ancestral property to pass mostly to men.

The Travancore-Cochin Christian Succession Act dated back to 1916, and stated that if the head of the household died without leaving a will, his widow could only claim a maintenance allowance, and daughters could claim only a quarter of each son's share, or Rs 5,000, whichever was less. The law had general social sanction because most women in the community took substantial dowries with them at their marriage, so it was considered natural that they should not get a share of their father's estate. The church approved, and got a small percentage of the dowry paid.

But there were the exceptions, including Mary Roy, who married a Bengali but then was divorced, and because she couldn't claim a share of her father's estate was thrown out of a bungalow owned by her father.

Two other women who impleaded themselves in the case had also been affected by the inequity of the law. One was Elikutty, a retired nurse, who had to move out of her ancestral house along with her mother although she had once been the family's bread-winner and had helped educate or marry her brother and sisters. The other was Mariakutty, a former schoolteacher who never married because there wasn't enough money offered as dowry, and who was left virtually homeless because she had no stake in her father's property.

Given the fact that there were numerous other such cases in the state, there was barely a whimper of protest in the community over the verdict. Said Trivandrum Archbishop Mar Gregorios: "The time and conditions when the law was made (in 1916) have changed. I am happy that women have been given equal rights, and the church will not stand in their way." Nevertheless, the church had failed to come out in Roy's favour before the judgement, despite repeated appeals, and the state Government, opposing her petition, had said in court that "the Christian community has not asked for a change in the law".

This is a major victory for Indian women's fight for equality, especially when the Government has done a volte face on the rights of Muslim women.

MARY ROY

Roy herself sat triumphant in her office at the prestigious Corpus Christi School that she runs in Kottayam, an hour's run from Cochin, and said: "This is a major victory for Indian women's fight for equality, especially when the Government has done a volte face on the rights of Muslim women."

Roy said she had fought not for the money (she's comfortably off, but nevertheless stands to gain her fair share of property valued at Rs 1 crore), but because she couldn't stomach the injustice meted out to her.

Roy had advertised in the newspapers, asking other women to help her fight the battle. She said that "The response was tremendous, but almost everyone backed out because of pressure from the male members of their families." The exceptions who fought it out with her were Elikutty and Mariakutty.

The court verdict has also set off changes in the community. Until now, large dowries were openly sought and paid. But with the passing of a new anti-dowry bill by Parliament last October, Christians in the state had resorted to camouflaged payments. Now, with the latest court verdict, matrimonial advertisements have begun to mention "girl with property worth..." instead of the earlier "will give dowry for...".

Nevertheless, the death of the dowry system cannot safely be predicted in a community where it has common acceptance, and the rapacious hunger for large dowries often dictates the choice of daughters-in-law. According to a businessman from Kottayam: "Those who have already received a fortune as dowry will now insist that they get an equal share of their father's property; this will mean a lot of bad blood and litigation." Added Roy Matthew, a private financier from Kozhencherry in central Travancore: "The Supreme Court judgement precludes dowry, but I don't think there will be any overnight changes."

Elikutty (top) and Mariakutty: joining hands

But Mary Roy said she wasn't concerned with people who could afford to pay large dowries. "It is the common Christian girl exploited by her family while she works as a nurse in the Gulf or a teacher in north-eastern states or becomes a nun, who will benefit from the judgement." Added Oommen Chandy, one of the leading politicians in the state: "Unlike the Shah Bano case, the Mary Roy case will not even create ripples in the Christian community or the church. Christians as a whole welcome it, and I personally feel there should not be any kind of discrimination against women."

Mary Roy, however, is not content. She next plans to take up cudgels on behalf of Muslim women.

—SREEDHAR PILLAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Maruti Udyog selects HGE for effluent treatment.

The little Fantail Warbler approves.

The Warbler lives amidst the grasses on the Yamuna's banks. From his low perch, he watches happenings in the river. It worries him that so many factories send their wastes into the water which supports his life. And that's why he really appreciates Maruti Udyog's appointment of HGE. HGE treats the wastewaters from its electroplating and painting shops, making them totally safe before they reach the river. If only more companies would do the same, the Yamuna would be clean and safe again — just the way the little Warbler likes it.

HGE — Turnkey Capabilities

HGE (Hydraulic and General Engineers Ltd), a subsidiary of Batliboi, is the only company with turnkey capabilities in industrial effluent treatment. From concept to commissioning. With dependable after-sales service. Since HGE houses all the skills — manufacturing, engineering, contracting — it can keep costs low and guarantee timely execution without cost overruns. HGE is also a leader in Sewage Treatment Plants, trusted by Municipalities and Water Supply and Sewerage Boards the country over.

HGE — Clients

Besides Maruti Udyog, HGE's other clients for industrial effluent treatment include —

* Gwalior Rayon Silk Mfg. (Wvg) Co.
* Century Pulp & Paper Mills
* Century Spinning * Harihar Polyfibres
* Corn Products * Rashtriya Chemicals & Fertilizers * National Newsprint & Paper Mills * Parle Products
* Bharat Petroleum * Dairies, Sugar Mills and Pharmaceutical Plants

So if you have an effluent treatment problem — just hand it over to HGE. And it becomes HGE's responsibility — totally.

HGE
BATLIBOI

Hydraulic & General Engineers Ltd.
203 Arun Chambers, J. Dadaji Road, Tardeo, Bombay 400 034
Subsidiary of
Batliboi & Co. Ltd.

HGE. We'll help you keep your reputation clean.

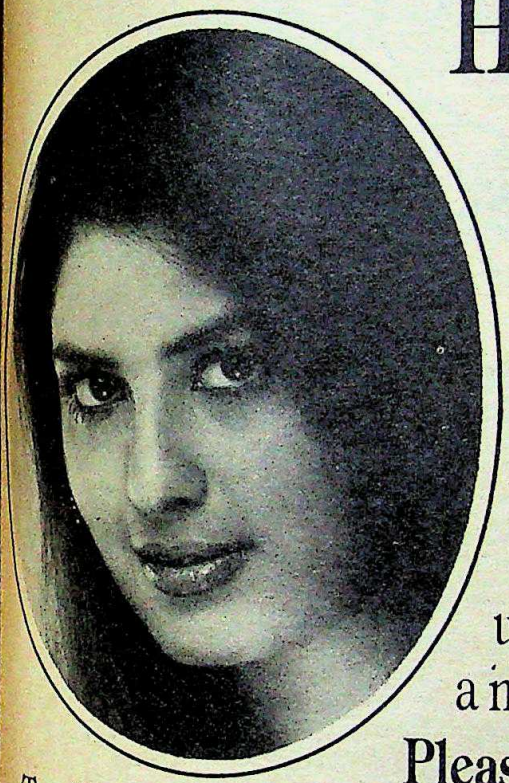
CHAITRA-B 88

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Tru-Tone From HELENE CURTIS
The Hair Dye you can trust

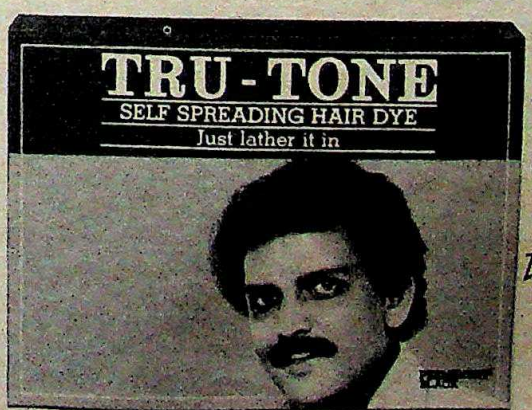
New Easy to apply! Tru-Tone Self-spreading Hair Dye.



Self-spreading action:
Just apply the dye and lather it in.
It spreads evenly by itself.

Longer lasting, deep-dye action:
New Tru-Tone comes with the unique deep-dye action to give you a natural colour that stays on longer.

Pleasantly perfumed, with conditioner:
Tru-Tone keeps your hair soft and manageable.
Looking younger was never so easy!



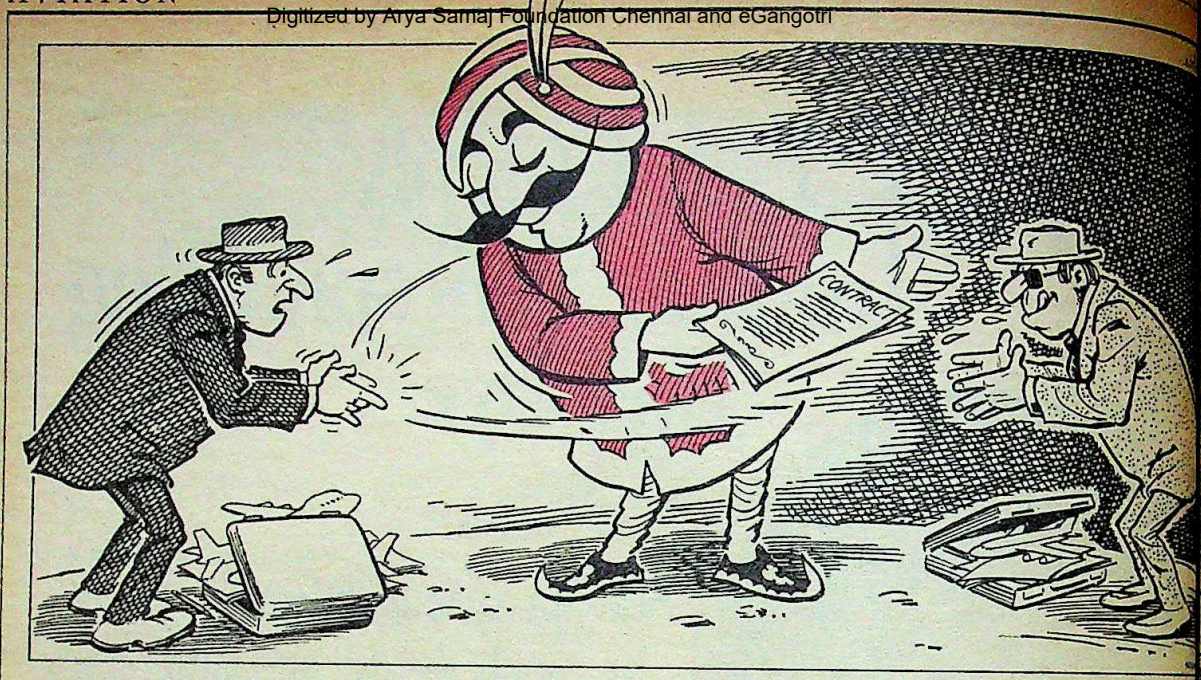
New

For a free folder on hair dyeing, please write to J.K. Helene Curtis Ltd., Pokhran Road, Jekegram, Thane 400 606.

everest/85/JKHC/603

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



AIR-INDIA

Double Dealing

AIR-INDIA's corpulent corporate symbol, the Maharaja, may acquire the reputation of a shabby wheeler-dealer as a result of the manner in which the airline's top management has negotiated two major contracts. The deals, one relating to the lease of three cargo aircraft and the other involving the purchase of a Boeing 747 Jumbo jet to replace the ill-fated Kanishka, have raised eyebrows in international aviation circles because of the questionable manner in which they were processed.

The leasing arrangement has already been questioned by several influential members of Parliament who have written letters to the prime minister as well as to the Ministry of Transport pointing out that in signing the contract, Air-India ignored offers which would have saved about Rs 10 crore per year in foreign exchange for the country.

The story began when Air-India put out a global advertisement for the lease of three cargo aircraft last year. It received several offers. But the one from London-based Connector Ltd was attractive because it provided for an "Indianisation package". It agreed to accept 40 per cent of the remittances in rupees, provide an Indian crew based in India, and to form a taxable Indian corporation to conduct the entire operation.

The advantages were obvious. In addition to corporation taxes that would accrue to the Government on the profits of the new company, and the creation of new job opportunities for pilots and engineers, India would save about Rs 10 crore in foreign exchange per year.

Bose (left) and Sidhu: odd choice

Connector's offer, however, was turned down on the plea that it was received after the closing date for bids, a condition which was waived in case of Evergreen International, the company which was finally selected. While Connector was offering a deal involving no payment, another firm, Cargolux, offered a dry lease for a Boeing-747 for $ 170 per hour and a DC-8-63 at $ 600 per hour with a minimum guarantee of three years and an escalation clause of 7 per cent per year.

But to everyone's surprise, Air-India ignored the Connector and Cargolux offers and signed the deal, instead, with another US-based company, Evergreen International, which offered none of the benefits and was costlier in the long run—the operating rates worked out to $ 4,[illegible] per hour for a Boeing, $ 2,[illegible] for a DC-8-63 and $ 2,48[illegible] for a DC-8-73.

Even more surprising is the fact that Evergreen was nowhere in the negotiation picture till the last moment. When Air-India's already existing two-year cargo lease contract with National Airways of America terminated in June 1984, a letter went out from headquarters to all its regional directors asking them to locate potential companies willing to offer freighter planes on wet lease in which the company would provide the crew and other support staff. Air-India, inexplicably, did not consider a dry lease whereby it could have used its own pilots thus saving huge amounts of foreign exchange. In response to its inquiries, six companies offered various aircraft for lease. Evergreen's rate was US $ 2,058 per hour which was later reduced to $ 2040. Air-India failed

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

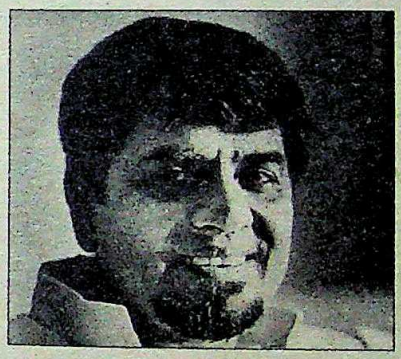
...final decision and chose, instead, to ...the life of the existing contract for ...few months. The regional offices ...then asked to secure revised bids. ...Once again seven companies made ...offers. A committee scrutinised these ...recommended acceptance of an offer ...by National Airways of a DC-8-63 ...Boeing 747. In September 1984, Bose ...a letter to the ministry seeking its ...for signing a contract with Na... Airways and also recommended ...extension of its contract till December ...According to the letter, Air-India ...to sign the contract with National ...at the rate of $ 4,798 per hour for ...Boeing and $ 2,334 for a DC-8-63. ...was not mentioned in the ...list of three parties.

THEN aviation secretary, M.M. Kohli, turned down the request on the ground that the offers were not ...and broadbased enough and ...Air-India to once again invite ...bids. In January 1985, Air-India ...issued advertisements inviting of... ...for cargo planes on wet lease. The ...companies repeated their offers, ...of which were naturally higher, ...Air-India to spend more than they ...originally have. In the revised ...Cargolux also offered dry lease ...but it was not even considered by ...management. In February, Connector ...in its offer which was rejected on ...grounds that it was received after the ...of the last date for bids.

The five-member committee recom... ...in March 1985 that the airline ...DC-8-63 from National and a ...from Cargolux. But Bose did not ...the committee's recommenda... ...to the Government. Instead, in April ...wrote a letter enclosing a chart of ...figures of offers made by ...one of the six parties to Aviation ...S.S.Sidhu, seeking approval to ...a contract with Evergreen for hiring a ...a DC-8-73 and Boeing 747 for ...years. The comparative statement ...offers which, significantly, was not ...by any of the parties, contained ...which were incorrect. For in... ...the rates mentioned for Cargolux ...the chart were higher than their actual ...Bose was not willing to explain how ...discrepancy had crept in, a discrep... ...that finally tilted the balance in ...favour of Evergreen. According to Bose, ...Evergreen's terms were the cheapest. ...Sidhu cleared the proposal after secur... ...the aviation minister's approval. But ...Jitender Singh, joint secretary in the ministry, while conveying the Government's approval recorded that:

- Air-India had not properly assessed the financial viability of Evergreen.
- The other offers were not properly assessed or examined.
- The period for terminating the earlier cargo lease agreement was unduly long.
- Air-India had not considered the possibility of a dry lease.

MP's who have got details of the deal have now begun to raise serious objections. In a letter to the Transport Ministry, Jaideep Singh Baria, Lok Sabha member from Gujarat, pointed out: "I find that the price offered (by Connector Ltd) is most competitive and perhaps the cheapest. In spite of these advantages, this offer was not considered." Andhra Pradesh MP K.L.N. Prasad, dashed off a similar letter requesting "a re-examination" of the entire deal. And S.B.Singh, MP from Doongargarh, wrote a confidential letter to Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi asking for an examination "of the antecedents" of the company which had received the contract.



"I have received representations from various MP's and am looking into it. If there is something wrong, none will be spared."

JAGDISH TYTLER
Minister of State for Civil Aviation

Admits Jagdish Tytler, the minister of state for civil aviation: "I have received various representations from MP's and am looking into it. I can assure you that if it is found that there is something wrong, none will be spared."

According to Air-India officials, Connector's offer was not considered because it came in after the last date for the receipt of offers. Also, its "effective lease rate works out to be higher than the lease rate finalised." They based this calculation on the premise that while Evergreen is charging $ 4,673 per hour with a guarantee of 260 flying hours per month, Connector was demanding $ 4,450 per hour with a guarantee of 300 hours per month.

But a close scrutiny of the contract reveals that the Evergreen deal includes a 5 per cent escalation clause which effectively raises the hourly charge to $ 4,800. Baria has asked the ministry to examine the Evergreen contract for possible loopholes in the termination clauses and performance guarantees.

Air-India may have been less than candid about the closing date of the contract. Says a senior Connector official: "The deal was finalised with Evergreen on June 15. Even if Air-India does not acknowledge that our proposal was sent to them a month earlier, they cannot deny that I met their top officials on June 11. I met the minister for civil aviation on June 12, and on June 14, I met Finance Minister V.P. Singh and informed him about our pending offer. We gave Air-India benefits which no other company gave them. But it's obvious now that these considerations don't matter a damn."

Similar charges are being aired about the other major deal involving Air-India's proposed purchase of a Boeing to replace the Kanishka. The deal should have been worked out last fortnight with Trans World Airlines but has been delayed because of allegations, again levelled by Connector, that the deal was struck behind closed doors between Air-India officials and the sellers on the basis of confidential information provided by Connector to Air-India. Connector is now threatening to go to court.

"We have been taken for a ride," fumed Connector Chairman David M. Morrell in a telephone interview with INDIA TODAY: "We have become the victims of subterfuge. We were in the midst of negotiating the deal with Air-India and had provided them detailed information about the availability of the aircraft. But as soon as they got this information they leaked it to somebody else and cut us out of the picture. We will have no option but to recover our losses."

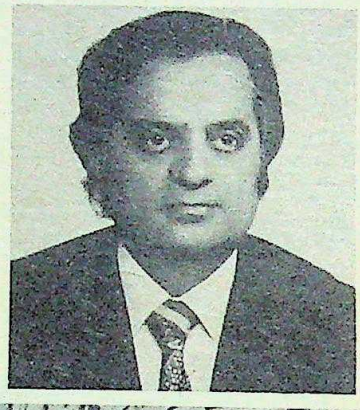
But if the reaction from government sources is any indication, Air-India is unlikely to reverse its decisions on either the cargo lease or the Boeing purchase, however questionable the manner in which it was done or the obvious financial disadvantages involved. Maharajas, after all, are a law unto themselves.

—INDERJIT BADHWAR and PRABHU CHAWLA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"To create an ideal home today one turns to the condominium approach; and tries to wed laid back country luxury with full city comfort. These designer homes do just that."



Ramesh Khosla
Winner of the Aga Khan Award for Excellence in Architecture for his the Hotel Mughal Sheraton, Agra

Artist's rendering of the Central Plaza at Garden Estate, on the Gurgaon-Mehrauli Road, only minutes away from New Delhi's city centre

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri arden Estate—India's first ever ominium

inutes away from Delhi, ing in the green arc is a prize
And there the finest concept of orld's latest living styles takes
e. An internationally acclaimed itect, Ramesh Khosla, expertly es designer homes that combine mforts with the tranquillity of countryside. At Garden Estate.

Designer homes for your choosing:

Garden Bungalows: The sheer ury of a splendid private residence.

Estate Greens: The same luxury a split-level structure, superbly anged.

Terrace Greens: Terraced duplex ments that combine elegance convenience.

Manhattan Apartments: Up-to-minute style with gorgeous green ews.

Penthouses: A top-of-the-world
ing of contemporary luxury.

Never-before facilities

100% standby power assuring you ninute supply of electricity. 24-hour ply of water. Independent sewage osal system. Centralised ducting ervolling all homes. You have m all.

Professional management offers ure assurances ur Board of Directors is a set of ts in management. This assures imely completion of your home ithout cost escalations in the ven period.

Space expertly, elegantly used

The use of central plazas, avenues basements makes driveway space parking space open and easy.

Artist's rendering of the kitchen

The stylish split-level concept

This is truly unique to Garden Estate: The two-storeyed duplex houses that give you the luxury of your own terraced garden; a privacy unknown in our humdrum lives.

Full maintenance services

Plumbers, electricians, lift operators, security personnel. They are all right there in Garden Estate.

All basic conveniences

Petrol stations, cooking gas stations, Post Office, transport to and from the city, medical facilities, nursery school, primary school, supermarket, shopping centre, plant nursery, laundromats.

All the fun facilities

Central Plaza Club with swimming, tennis, squash, and much more. Indoor games. A well-stocked video library, and more that makes life harmonious for like-minded community.

Unusual, additional facilities

Housing for domestic servants. Adequate storage space. Ducting for airconditioning. Special kitchen fittings (optional).

The Promoters: The project is promoted by Gulmohar Estates Pvt. Ltd. whose Board of Directors are:

Mr. A.N. Haksar (Chairman)
Mr. L.M. Thapar
Mr. Mohinder Pal Puri
Mr. M.M. Sabharwal
Mr. Rakesh Aggarwal
Mr. S. Swarup

I'm interested in material giving more details of the Garden Estate offers.

Name: _____

Address: _____

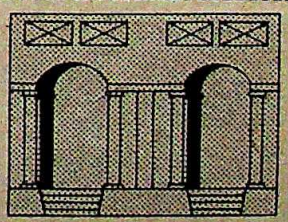
_____

_____

Professional Status: _____

_____

415 Devika Tower, 6 Nehru Place
New Delhi 110 019.



GARDEN ESTATE

Designer homes by an internationally recognised architect.

GE/26/85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IOA

Olympian Fiasco

TILL THE last minute, the Indian Olympic Association (IOA) was confident that the Government's permission for its bid for the 1992 Olympics was only a formality. Its dapper president, Vidya Charan Shukla, even caught an early morning flight to Japan on February 27, the same day that the Union Cabinet was expected to formally back the bid. Even as the Cabinet met at 7 p.m. to deliberate the matter, two officials had reported for an Air France flight to Geneva enroute to Lausanne, the headquarters of the International Olympic Committee (IOC), where the bid, duly endorsed by the Government, had to be submitted the next day. They were only waiting for the affirmative documents.

Instead, they got the copy of a telex message which the Sports Ministry had sent to the Indian Embassy at Berne saying that, contrary to earlier instructions, the IOA representatives were not to be handed $ 1000 (to be given along with the bid) should they land up. That was how the IOA learnt that its five-year-old dream of bringing the Olympics to India had gone up in smoke.

"Till now that copy of the telex message is the only intimation we have had from the Government. There has been no explanation, not even a letter," said a dispirited C.L. Mehta, secretary-general of the IOA. On his return from Japan, where he had gone for the Winter Asian Games, Shukla sounded just as despondent. "I am very disappointed. Not only did we have a good financial case for our bid, we were sure we would have been allotted the Games. The Olympics would have given a big spur to sports in the country. Now I am left to wonder why the Government decided the bid was unworthy of its endorsement." Asked a bitter IOA functionary: "If the Government had to say no, why didn't it say so in 1981 when we first broached the suggestion? Or why not last year when we put in an informal bid? Or why not in January when we took members of an IOC commission to meet Union ministers? Why encourage us all along and then say no at the last minute?"

The answers came just as firmly from the Government. Said Union Finance Minister Vishwanath Pratap Singh: "We felt that the commitments would be more than what the country could afford at the moment." Added Minister of State for Sports and Youth Affairs Margaret Alva: "The Cabinet felt that we couldn't afford to take the risk that we would have to divert the nation's resources and energy to what we felt was a non-priority event. Though the IOA had submitted a no-cost-to-government bid we felt, on the basis of the report of a team of officials we had sent to Seoul last month, that the IOA's proposals were somewhat optimistic."

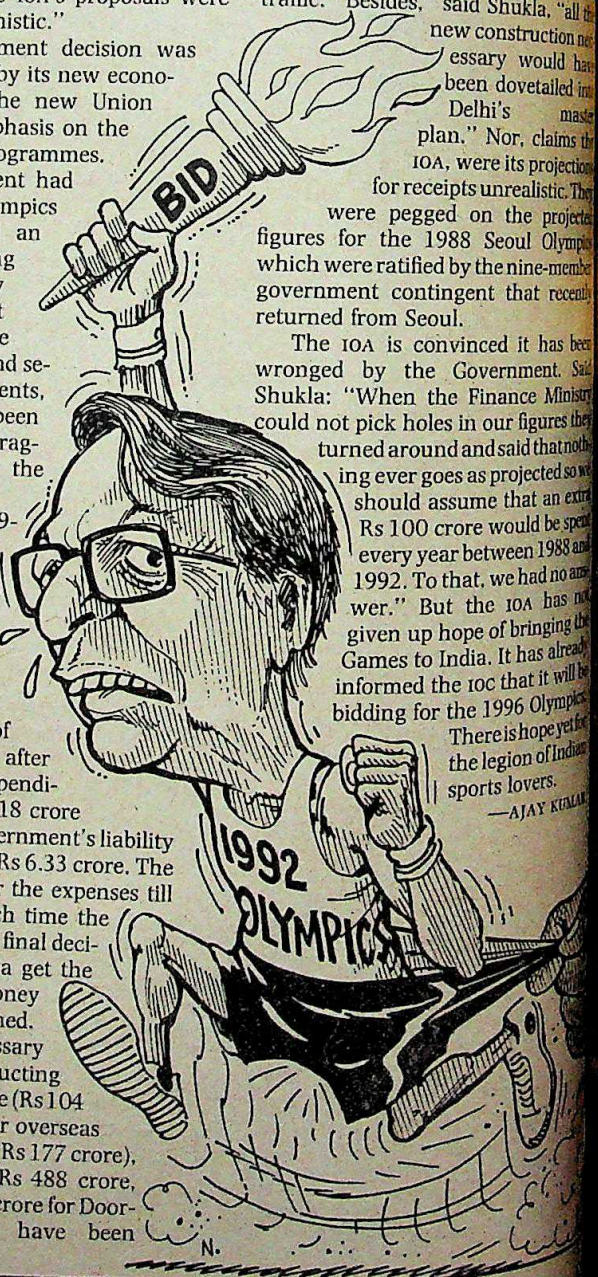
The government decision was also influenced by its new economic policies. The new Union Budget laid emphasis on the anti-poverty programmes. If the government had cleared the Olympics which involved an indirect spending of Rs 200 crore by the Government in improving the infrastructure and security arrangements, it would have been accused of encouraging elitism in the name of sports.

The IOA's 19-page proposal, submitted to the Government last November, had shown that the Games would leave a surplus of Rs 246.07 crore, after incurring an expenditure of Rs 1,016.18 crore in which the Government's liability would be a mere Rs 6.33 crore. The sum would cover the expenses till October, by which time the IOC would take its final decision. Should India get the Games, the money would be returned. All the necessary expenses—constructing the Olympic village (Rs 104 crore), facilities for overseas communications (Rs 177 crore), media coverage (Rs 488 crore, including Rs 300 crore for Doordarshan)—would have been borne by the IOA.

The Government would also have... meet the expenditure on security, ... ening of roads for the new structures ... civil aviation facilities but these, argue... Shukla, would have been minimal. Of... five additional stadia would have had ... be constructed but they would be sma... capacity ones (7,000 against ... 25,000-seat Indira Gandhi Stadium ... and would be located on Delhi's ou... skirts; the existing hospital facilit... would have been enough with only ... Central dope-testing centre to be set u... the Indira Gandhi airport would ha... been enough to handle the Olympi... traffic. "Besides," said Shukla, "all th... new construction ne... essary would have ... been dovetailed int... Delhi's master ... plan." Nor, claims th... IOA, were its projection... for receipts unrealistic. The... were pegged on the projecte... figures for the 1988 Seoul Olympi... which were ratified by the nine-member ... government contingent that recently ... returned from Seoul.

The IOA is convinced it has been ... wronged by the Government. Said ... Shukla: "When the Finance Ministry ... could not pick holes in our figures they ... turned around and said that nothing ever goes as projected so we should assume that an extra Rs 100 crore would be spent every year between 1988 and 1992. To that, we had no answer." But the IOA has not given up hope of bringing the Games to India. It has already informed the IOC that it will be bidding for the 1996 Olympics. There is hope yet for the legion of Indian sports lovers.

—AJAY KUMAR



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DL COMFORTABLE,
LEGANT... THE UMMERWEAR FOR THE CONNOISSEUR

Unmistakably...

DIGJAM

GOLD CREST, SNOW FLAKE, FLAMING GRACE, PALM BEACH,
MONARCH, ELEGANCE

AJAX/DWM/86 S

CC-0. In Public Domain. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

On the eve of the 21st century why make such a fuss about sand

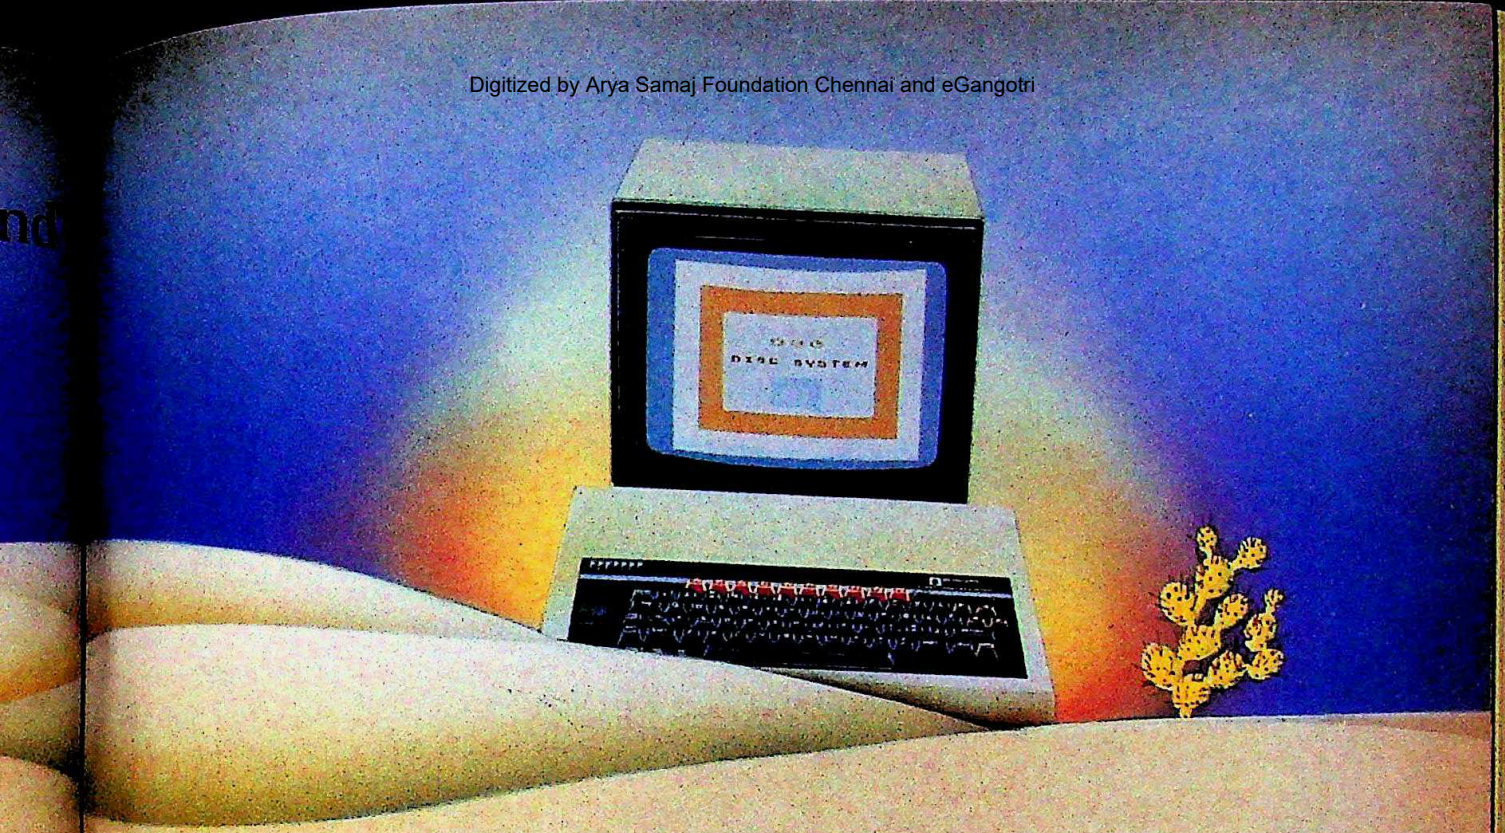
THE SCL UNICORN

The only computer
that's born and brought up in India

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Because the future is written in sand. The chip, which human ingenuity has devised from silicon, or refined sand, is the invention that is going to revolutionise everything in the future.

And who brought this technology to India? SCL. India's first manufacturer of the chip, SCL also makes microprocessors and, yes, computers!

The SCL Unicorn is the only computer that can apply for an Indian passport. Because it's Indian. From start to finish. From PCB to cabinet. Even the software being developed is indigenous, to meet national needs.

Which is why it's rugged, built to match Indian conditions. So successful in the CLASS programme. And the most popular personal computer in the country.

- ★ 73-key full-travel keyboard with 15 user-defined keys and 10 function keys.
- ★ Built-in interfaces for everything which any modern computer will need.
- ★ Unmatched ruggedness.
- ★ A high-resolution graphic capability, unrivalled in its class.
- ★ Tremendous versatility and upgradability.
- ★ Analog to digital conversion.
- ★ Sound facilities.
- ★ Networking.

Semiconductor Complex Ltd.

(A Govt. of India Enterprise)
Registered Office: Phase VIII, S.A.S. Nagar-160059 (Punjab)
Tel: 87443, Gram : CHALSI, Telex: 0395-270 LSI IN

...based on the SCL Unicorn Personal Computer Modules are available from:

...Aided Learning Systems Pvt. Ltd. New Delhi, Tel: 6419534 Tlx: 031-4884 • Computer Kinetics, Srinagar, Tel: 74072 • Computer Point (I) Ltd. ...Bangalore, Tel: 578718, 578452, Bombay, Tel: 4930543, 4936716, Delhi, Tel: 699421, Madras, Tel: 441192 • Crescent Computers, New Delhi, ... • CMS Computers Pvt. Ltd. Bombay, Tel: 242774, 222370 • 21st Century Electronics Pvt. Ltd. Noida (U.P.), Tel: 805-3185 • Datek Marketing Group, ... Tel: 666607 • Dedicated Digital Machines Pvt. Ltd. New Delhi, Tel: 6411905, 6413111 Tlx: 031-3974 • Digital Innovations Pvt. Ltd. Baroda, Tel: 66544, ...875-389 Gram: DIGISYSTEM • Electronics Systems Punjab Ltd. Chandigarh, Tel: 87492 Tlx: 0395-391 Gram: SYSTEMS, MOHALI • Informatic ...systems, New Delhi, Tel: 662734, 656114 • Integrated Data Systems, Hyderabad, Tel: 225315 Gram: DATALINE • Kerala State Electronics ...Corporation Limited, Trivandrum, Tel: 60621 (10 lines), Tlx: 0884-273, 0884-283 Gram: ELECTRONIC • Microelectronics Inc. Madras, Tel: 450217 ...Consultants Pvt. Ltd. Bangalore, Tel: 561234 Tlx: 0845-8116 Gram: NAMTECH • Pascal Computers Pvt. Ltd. Calcutta, Tel: 434092 Gram: ARPINTCO ...Microsystems Pvt. Ltd. Calcutta, Tel: 228059, 228936 • Rapid Computer Services & Spares Pvt. Ltd. Bombay, Tel: 392067, 352099, 358537 • Safeguard ...Electronics, Ahmedabad, Tel: 2584, 2680, 2687, 2374 Gram: SAFEGUARD • Sujatha Sales & Electronics Ltd. Bombay, Tel: 222999 Tlx: 011-3855 Gram: ELECTECH ...Tel: 442845, 431915, 431091 Tlx: 021-2242 Gram: BENTRONICS Gram: SUVIKAS, JODHPUR • Technotek Innovex, Madras, Tel: 422135, 423893 • Webel Computer

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

VIKAS VATS

Dimple: true to life

◆ She bundled her hair into two ear-flanking buns, squeezed into a bikini and danced her way into the hearts of a generation. Now the heart-throb of the '70s has got the role of her lifetime: Dimple Kapadia in and as Dimple. The latest venture of Mahesh Bhatt, the life-story specialist (Arth, Saraansh and Janam), the film will chart the erratic and exciting course of the actress' life—from the breathless euphoria of Bobby to the famous midnight seaside proposal by the then superstar, to her stormy marriage and her sudden decision to throw it all away and the regret and second stardom that followed. Naturally Dimple is excited about her tailor-made part. And guess who plays Rajesh Khanna? Vinod Khanna—the film will also mark the swami's comeback.

◆ What does it take to be a beauty? A pair of hazel eyes, a 34-24-35 figure and a bubbly giggle that will bring a smile to the grumpiest of faces. So when Poonam Gidwani, 21, soft-spoken and winsome, undulated down the catwalk in New Delhi last fortnight, the judges knew that this was it. The Bombay girl scored over an assortment of Indian beauties to bag the crown of Miss India 1986. "Oh, I can't believe it!" she gushed the next morning. "I couldn't sleep the whole night and I'm still trying to get over it." Get over it she certainly will, when she reaches Tokyo for the Miss International later this year. For the time being, she's concentrating on her modelling. "I've been modelling for two-three years. I love my profession and plan to continue with it." And, pre-empting the inevitable question, she adds: "No, I'm certainly not interested in films."

RANJAN BASU

Gidwani: crowning glory

◆ He began as a dot on Delhi's morning horizon. Silhouetted against the red expanse of North Block-South Block, the dot grew and took on a familiar shape. Spectators at the Sunday Otto Peltzer races did a double-take and rubbed their eyes. It was...no, it couldn't be...but yes it was...Kip Keino, the legend of middle-distance running in person. A sprightly 46, the former Olympic gold-medallist from Kenya streaked across the 6.5 km course in 23 minutes 3.4 seconds. Said the retired runner, who is in India to coach the Indian team for the World Cross Country Championship: "It was good competition, very enjoyable, very neat." Of his trainees, the coach said: "We are like a friendly family. I wish they break all records and come back with a bunch of medals." Which is not unlikely with a coach like Keino.

◆ Mario Joao Carlos Rosario de Brito Miranda may be an unfamiliar name. But Mario Miranda isn't. So when the irrepressible cartoonist opened an exhibition of his drawings and sketches on New York in New Delhi last fortnight, crowds thronged to the American Center to find him in his element—with a difference: the artist had also dabbled in colour, for the first time. Otherwise, there was the same sharp wit and the same boyish mischievousness. There were the dogs and cats with their tails up, the busty women with trailing brats and bent and bow-legged figures in crowded street corners.

Miranda: New York!

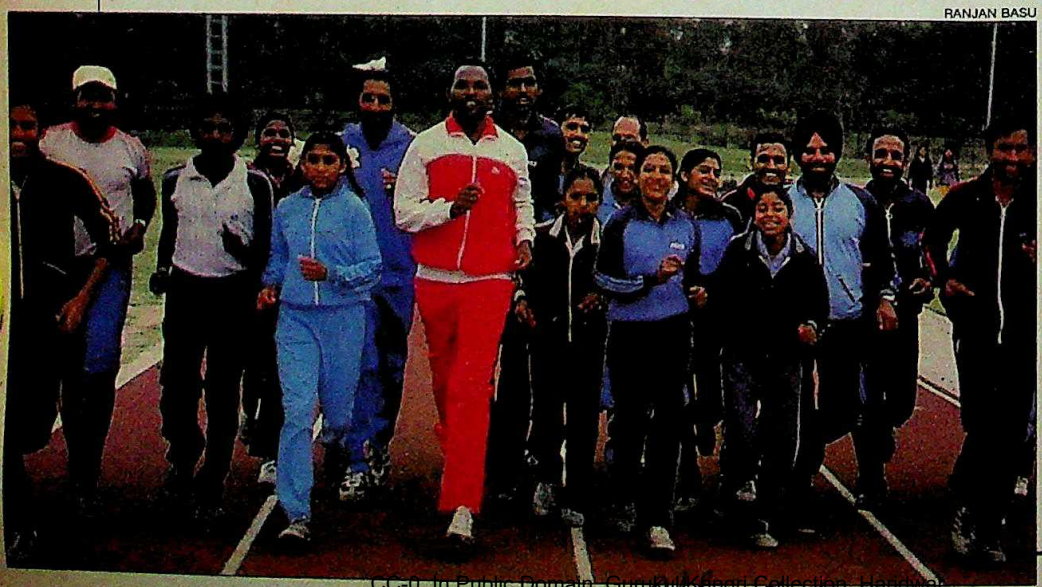
Only, the street corners belonged to seedy alleys in Manhattan, and the crowded pathways in Central Park. And towering all over the cityscape were the ubiquitous skyscrapers. But what took the cake was Little India, with a shop selling good ole dhaniya-mirchi bang in the middle of Big Apple, and the signboard requesting: "Please to step inside.

—Compiled by MOHAMMED ASLAM



RANJAN BASU

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

12980
12979
12978
12977

IN FOC

Upsurg

As the t mounted d Hindus an element. C
the militan savage sieg
COVER

The Esc

The dram from the top set off one of history. Whi core of Tihar, hiding in Ind
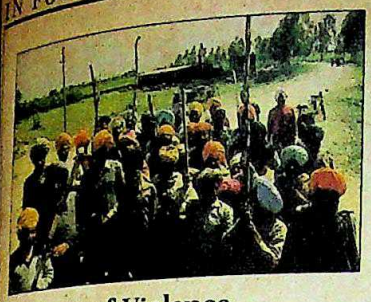
CRIME.....

ONTEN

COMMENT.....
CAPITALOOK
VOICES.....
INDIANOTES
COVER STORY
Punjab: Upsu
CURRENT EVE
Maharashtra:
Nagaland: Sh
Kerala: Arabi
Pranab Mukh
Tamil Nadu:
CPI: Hour of
Baba Amte: N
Bureaucracy:
Tihar: Rallyin
Orissa: Muzzli
Jammu & Kas
STATENOTES...
SPECIAL REPO
Uttar Pradesh:
GLOBE-TROTT
Morocco: The

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

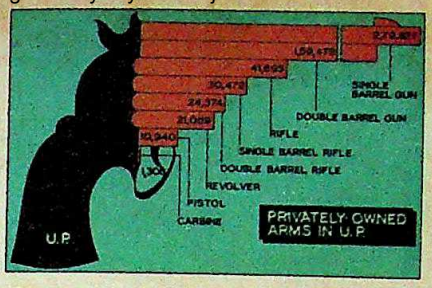
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Upsurge of Violence

As the toll of terrorist killings in Punjab mounted daily, communal friction between Hindus and Sikhs added a dangerous new element. Coupled with the rising defiance of the militants, the state was suddenly under savage siege.

COVER STORY.....26



Operation Disarm

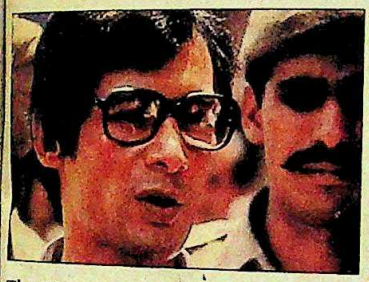
Faced with the alarming discovery that Uttar Pradesh has the largest stockpile of privately-owned arms in the country, senior officials under Chief Minister Bir Bahadur Singh have launched a massive operation to curb the menace.

SPECIAL REPORT 78

Dressing Up for the Future

Mohan Murjani has revolutionised the fashion industry with his Gloria Vanderbilt jeans and his Coca Cola clothes. Now, Murjani is all set to launch his new line of top-of-the-market designer jeans and a new electronic shopping project.

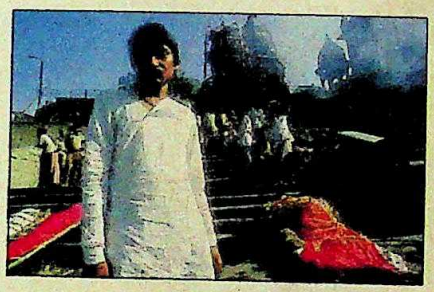
BUSINESS.....92



The Escape Scandal

The dramatic escape of Charles Sobhraj from the top-security Tihar jail last fortnight set off one of the biggest manhunts in Indian history. While the escape exposed the rotten core of Tihar, police believe that Sobhraj is still hiding in India.

CRIME.....120



The Dues of Death

Varanasi's Shamshaan Ghat, the fabled cremation ground where Hindus traditionally burn their dead, is also the kingdom of the Dom Raja, the wealthy traditional owner of the ghat and keeper of the holy flame. A pictorial essay.

PHOTO FEATURE.....130

Reliving the Legend

The fascinating life of Jim Corbett, the famous conservationist, author and hunter of maneaters, is now being brought to celluloid life. A British television crew is currently filming Corbett's life in Naini Tal, resurrecting the legend.

CINEMA.....142

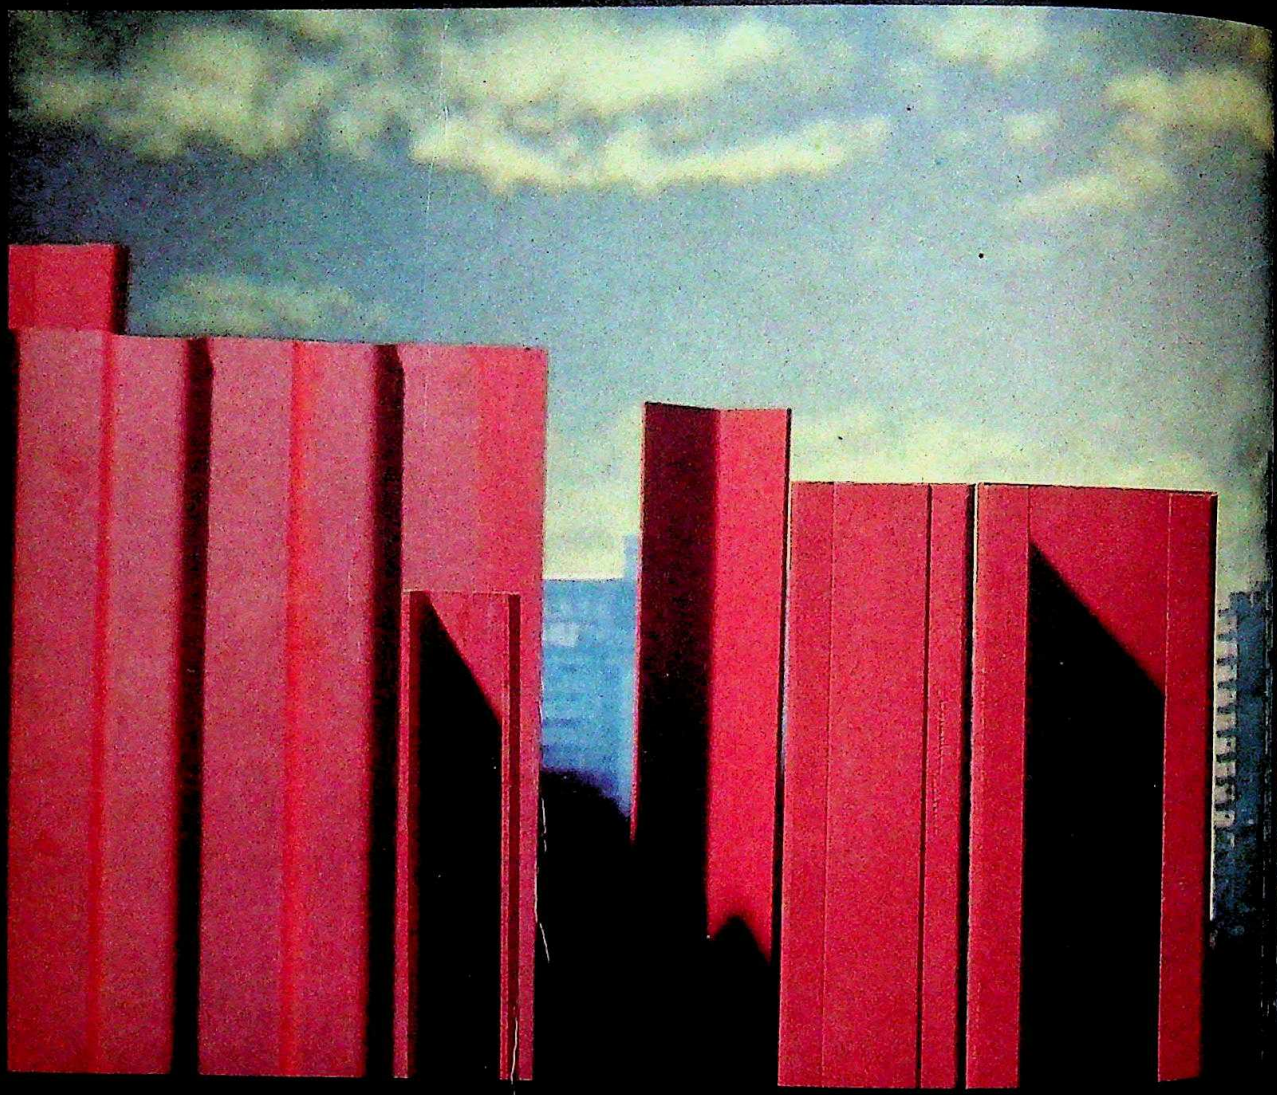
CONTENTS

COMMENT 9
CAPITALOOK 12
VOICES 18
INDIANOTES 23
COVER STORY
Punjab: Upsurge of Violence 26
CURRENT EVENTS
Maharashtra: A Cautious Beginning 40
Nagaland: Showdown 43
Kerala: Arabian Affair 44
Pranab Mukherjee: Under Attack 49
Tamil Nadu: The Fading Star 52
CPI: Hour of Reckoning 56
Baba Amte: New Crusade 61
Bureaucracy: Poaching Problems 62
Bihar: Rallying Cry 67
Orissa: Muzzling Media 68
Jammu & Kashmir: Cleaning Up 73
STATENOTES 77
SPECIAL REPORT
Uttar Pradesh: Operation Disarm 78
GLOBE-TROTTING
Morocco: The Sahara Mirage 82
DEFENCE
The Spending Spree 86
TRADEWINDS 88
BUSINESS
Murjani: Dressing Up for the Future 92
FICCI: House Divided 100
Swraj Paul: The Raider's Revenge 105
Telephone Nigam: Hopeful Signs 107
Banks: Vulnerable Targets 108
Analgesics: Ridake Row 110
TCIL: Smart Moves 111
The Markets: Sharp Setbacks 112
The Economy Monitor 117
MEDIA
Doordarshan: The Money Machine 118
CRIME
Charles Sobhraj: The Escape Scandal 120
PHOTO FEATURE
Varanasi: The Dues of Death 130
CINEMA
Jim Corbett: Reliving the Legend 142
SCIENCE
Astronomy: Halley Hysteria 149
DEVELOPMENT
Sone Canal: Course of Tragedy 152
THE ARTS
Dance: Motions of Change 154
RELIGION
Karnataka: A Naked Defiance 156
EYE-CATCHERS 160

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WHEN DOES TECHNOLOGY ENTER THE REALM OF FANTASY?



When engineering skills explore the unknown. To reveal the possibilities. And open up challenging new avenues.

At TI Engineering this enterprising spirit is manifested in our technological capability. We have the largest input of steel in our business – of different grades. We conduct applied research into the chemistry of steel. We have the special processing knowhow that alters the characteristics of a steel strip, forms it to meet the most demanding applications.

This unusual insight into the heart of steel enables us to exploit its potential.

We were the innovators in India of welded precision tubes. We are currently engaged in extending within the Indian engineering industry the benefits of cold roll forming – such as a greater strength to weight ratio, design flexibility and ultimate economy.

Our re
equiremen construct utomatic pecificat consisten ubes in n enefits t
TI Eng

Our revolutionary Z-purlins that cut the steel requirement by 30% substantially reduce construction costs. By employing the Hydraulic Automatic Gauge Control, we have met stringent specifications in cold rolled strips. We are consistently replacing seamless tubes with welded tubes in numerous applications to offer economy benefits to our customers.

TI Engineering, a division of Tube Investments of India Ltd., represents a synergy of strengths ... Metallurgical and process knowhow backed by the resources of TI of the U.K. Application engineering. Innovative design. Forward thinking. And a reputation for committed customer service.

That's why, whether it's strips, tubes or sections, you can rely on TI Engineering to provide the best value for your needs. Today .... and in the years to come.

TI ENGINEERING

TIE-1904

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Colour by Weston!

Weston®

SERVICE CENTRE FOR HITACHI

The electronics people

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

VOLUME XI NUMBER 7
FOR THE FORTNIGHT APRIL 1-15, 1986

EDITOR
AROON PURIE

MANAGING EDITOR — SUMAN DUBEY
SENIOR EDITOR — T.N. NINAN
PICTURE EDITOR — RAGHU RAI
FEATURES EDITOR — INDERJIT BADHWAR
ASSOCIATE EDITOR — DILIP BOBB
ASSISTANT EDITORS — PRABHU CHAWLA, AJAY KUMAR

CORRESPONDENTS

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT, NEW DELHI — RAMINDAR SINGH
NEW DELHI — SHEKHAR GUPTA, PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI, RAJ CHENGAPPA, MADHU JAIN
AHMEDABAD — RAMESH MENON
BANGALORE — SRINIVASA PRASAD
BOMBAY — M. RAHMAN, JAGANNATH DUBASHI
CALCUTTA — INDRANIL BANERJIE
CHANDIGARH — GOBIND THUKRAL
HYDERABAD — AMARNATH K. MENON
JAIPUR — SREEKANT KHANDEKAR
MADRAS — S.H. VENKATRAMANI
PATNA — FARZAND AHMED
TRIVANDRUM — SREEDHAR PILLAI
NEW YORK — MADHU TREHAN
LONDON — RAMESH CHANDRAN

NEWS COORDINATOR — RADHIKA ROY

CHIEF OF PRODUCTION — SHIRLEY JOSHUA, ANURADHA KAPOOR

COPY DESK — ANUPAMA GOPAL, SIMRAN BHARGAVA, ANN NINAN

CHIEF PHOTOGRAPHER — BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHER — PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CARTOONIST — AJIT NINAN MATHEW

CARTOGRAPHER — B.K. SHARMA

LAYOUT ARTISTS — LOKESH BHARGAVA, ANUP GUPTA, PEALI DUTTA GUPTA

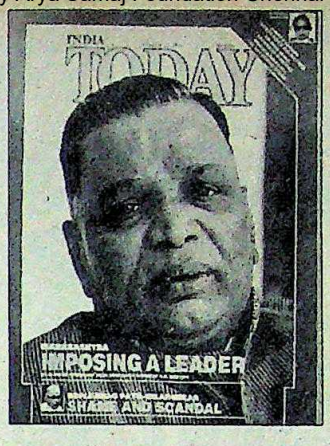
MARKETING DIRECTOR — MOHINI BHULLAR

ADVERTISING MANAGERS

BOMBAY — GEORGE SEBASTIAN
DELHI — NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA — MEERA PAUL
MADRAS — R. ANAND
BANGALORE — SRINIVASA RAGHAVAN

GENERAL MANAGER — CHANDER RAI

● EDITORIAL OFFICE: LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT. LTD. P-40 CONNAUGHT PLACE NEW DELHI 110001. PHONE: 3315801-4. TELEX: 31-61345 INTO IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI ● SUBSCRIPTION: INDIA TODAY SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT, POST BOX 69, FARIDABAD HARYANA ● TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA TODAY CIRCULATION MANAGER, P-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE, MIDDLE CIRCLE, NEW DELHI. PHONE: 3311076-8. TELEX: 31-4724 INTO IN ● ADVERTISING OFFICES: 28 A&B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER II, NARIMAN POINT, BOMBAY 400021. PHONE: 2026152, 2029326, 2020418. TELEX: 11-5373 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BOMBAY ● 11-A CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001. PHONE: 312841, 313776. TELEX: 31-5308 THOM IN. CABLES: LIVMEDIA, NEW DELHI ● FAGUN CHAMBERS, 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF ROAD, MADRAS-600105. PHONE: 477188,477770. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, MADRAS ● 74/1ST. MARKS ROAD, BANGALORE-560001. PHONE: 564448, 579037, 579089. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BANGALORE ● 12CE CHOWRINGHEE ROAD, CALCUTTA-700016. PHONE: 445198, 447726. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, CALCUTTA ● COPYRIGHT 1986 LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT. LTD. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. REPRODUCTION IN ANY MANNER IS PROHIBITED. PUBLISHED BY CHANDER RAI FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT. LTD. NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT THOMSON PRESS INDIA LTD. FARIDABAD HARYANA ● INDIA TODAY DOES NOT TAKE RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL ●



BLACK POLITICIANS

Shame, scandal and Shivajirao Patil-Nilangekar ("Imposing a Leader" March 31) thankfully made a combined exit on March 7. But not before he had virtually hammered the last nail into Bombay University's much maligned coffin. One hopes Chavan will last out the full term for a change.
Bombay — MUSTAFA ATTAR

■ Chavan's return to Maharashtra clearly shows that the Congress(I) culture of imposing leaders from above has prevailed at the cost of internal democracy. Such a pity.
Korattur, Madras — A. SESHAGIRI RAO

■ After reading about the families of chief ministers and governors moving the earth in their pursuit of degrees, can we remind such public men, that while performing their political and state duties they are not supposed to be indulging in personal political barter trade.
Bombay — SARYU

■ I am disappointed that Naval Kishore Sharma, the Congress(I) observer, should, inspite of the scandal surrounding the ouster, say that Nilangekar can, if he wants, fight the elections to Nilanga. Rajiv Gandhi is going back on the promise of providing a clean administration that he made after the general elections.
Gwalior — KAMLESH PRASAD

■ Nilangekar's indictment in the marks scandal that rocked the state should serve as an eye-opener to the Congress(I) leadership. It is ironic that the scandal should take place in the city that hosted the party's centenary celebrations. Obviously, Nilangekar did not take Rajiv Gandhi's admonitory speech on the corruption in the party seriously.
Ahmedabad — M.V. RAVINDRAN

■ The astounding facts unearthed by the high court have made the public more suspicious of the quality of the doctors churned out by medical colleges. However, this should serve as a lesson to universities against stooping so low as to allow political interference. Politicians have only self-interest in mind.
Madras — FRANKLYN STANLEY

■ The headlines and stories in your March 31 issue move me to tears. School for Scandal, The Gathering Storm, The Crisis State, Suspect Role, Affiliated Colleges... What is our future?
Madhya Pradesh — V.B.K. SATNA

■ Last month's happenings in Maharashtra have all the ingredients of a filmi drama. If Chavan had the required qualities why the farce of 'electing' a leadcer?
New Delhi — VIDYA SAGAR

■ The political process in India is not only rotten to the core but also rotten from the core. A small point perhaps, but nontheless worth making.
Meerut — RASHMEE ROSHAN LALL

PROS AND CONS

Reference to the ongoing debate on the Muslim Women's Bill ("Gathering Storm" March 31). No secular minded person would like to praise or support a bill that not only undoes the Supreme Court's decision but also hurts the feelings of Muslim women. Rajiv Gandhi seems to be thinking of going it alone in the 21st century.
Jaipur — RAVINDRA MISRA

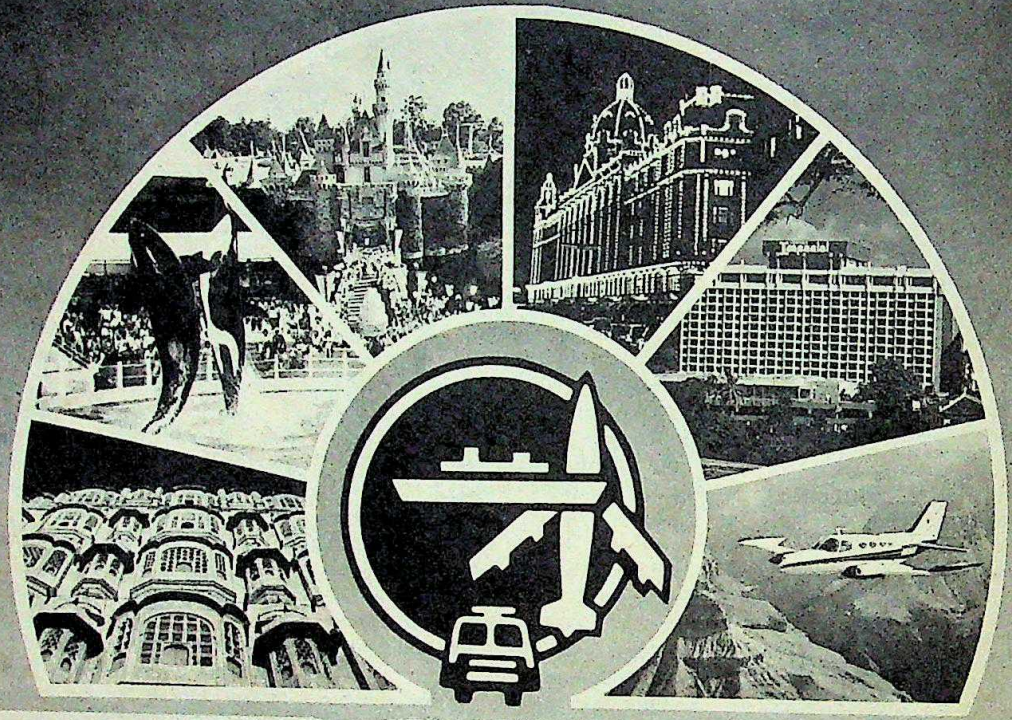
■ The country is not going to become secular overnight by modifying Muslim personal law. The point is India never was and is not a secular country. In schools, especially government ones, why do children have to recite the prayers of a particular religion and why does Doordarshan telecast the teachings of one religion only? Secularism is not manufactured, it is only realised.
Guwahati — A. HAZARIKA

■ The Muslim community is supporting the bill because Section 125 interferes in personal law. Not even the prophet had sanctioned maintenance beyond the iddat period—that is 3 months and 10 days. Hence to support the bill is a religious duty. Also, the mehr factor was ignored by the Shah Bano judgement, which the bill suitably corrects. If the bill is not passed, the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAJ HOLIDAYS 1986



MONDAY DEPARTURES :
- MAURITIUS
- KASHMIR ECONOMY TOUR
- KASHMIR DELUXE TOUR

TUESDAY DEPARTURES :
- SOUTH EAST ASIA
- ATHENS/MADRID WITH EUROPEAN CONNECTION
- TRANS WORLD AMERICA WITH ATHENS OR WITH CAIRO

WEDNESDAY DEPARTURES :
- GRAND EUROPE
- U. S. EXPERIENCE

THURSDAY DEPARTURES :
- KASHMIR WITH KATHMANDU

FRIDAY DEPARTURES :
- FAR EAST ADVENTURE
- MINI EUROPE
- MOSCOW WITH EUROPEAN CONNECTION
- KULU-MANALI-SIMLA
- KASHMIR WITH DELHI, AGRA AND JAIPUR

SATURDAY DEPARTURES :
- FAR EAST SPECTACULAR
- SHOPPING PARADISE
- ROYAL ORIENT
- AUSTRALIA
- HIMALAYAN HIGHLIGHTS
- RELAXING SOUTH

SUNDAY DEPARTURES :
- SCANDINAVIA WITH EUROPEAN CONNECTION

ALSO OFFERS PACKAGE TOURS TO :
- VANCOUVER EXPO '86
- YELLOW STONE NATIONAL PARK (From 1st June to 31st August)

TRADE FAIRS & EXHIBITIONS :
- DRUPA · PHOTOKINA · BAUMA
- LEIPZIG · CEBIT · CONSTRUCTA
- HANOVER · WIRE · K '86

IATA

OM-RT-86

SUBJECT TO R.B.I. APPROVAL
F.T.S. PASSENGERS ONLY

IN CO-OPERATION WITH AIR-INDIA

VEGETARIAN FOOD : Delicious Indian Vegetarian Lunch & Dinner throughout the tour prepared everyday by our expert Bombay cooks in our Europe based kitchen caravan driver along with our luxury coach. (Except in London). Indian Vegetarian breakfast in Far East tours. (Except in Japan).

BHARAT JETHVA

SHREE RAJ TRAVELS & TOURS PVT. LTD.

HEAD OFFICE : 27, PANCHRATNA, GROUND FLOOR, MAMA PARAMANAD MARG, OPERA HOUSE, BOMBAY-400 004 • TEL. : 361415 • 361416 • 361417 • 357880 • 363034 • 388252 • TLX : 011-76310 VIVA IN AHMEDABAD : 18, SWASTIK SUPER MARKET, ASHRAM ROAD, NAVRANGPURA, AHMEDABAD-380 009 • TEL. : 403564 • 404861
MADRAS : 603, MOUNT ROAD, RANI SEETHAI HALL, OPP. GEMINI STUDIO MADRAS-600 003 • TEL. : 473088 • 479382
SRINAGAR : 6, POLO VIEW, SRINAGAR, KASHMIR-190 001 • TEL.: 75199

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

country's Muslims will lose all faith in the system of governance.

NAVEED YAR KHAN
Delhi

■ Why is there such a hue and cry about the plight of divorced Muslim women? Muslim ladies are allowed supreme position as laid down in the Quran. The community is not divided on this issue as seen from the mammoth protest rallies all over the country. The legislation before Parliament is not retrograde but progressive.

PARAYIL MOHAMED
Tirur, Kerala

■ Rajiv must learn to take even unpleasant decisions in the public interest rather than trying to appease fanatic elements in a particular community and indulge in cheap gimmickry to win favour.

B. RAMMURTY
Lucknow

■ A referendum exclusively for the Muslims might decide if they want or don't want to accept the jurisdiction of Indian courts in matters of divorce and alimony. Perhaps there is an overwhelming majority of women fearful of raising their voices, who could use the referendum without endangering their position.

JOHN M. JACOB
Hyderabad

■ I wonder what Gandhiji would have to say on secularism if he were alive today. He had often been blamed for being unswayed by generally populist measures and sticking to what he believed was the right. Our leaders seem to have buckled down completely under populist pressure.

NEERAJ THAKUR
Patna

■ Bowing down to a policy of appeasement will destroy the basic structure of secularism and human justice and dig the graveyard for the Government.

C.L. AGGARWAL
Sonepur, Orissa

■ Those advocating a change in Muslim personal law say they want Muslim women to enjoy the fundamental rights granted to every Indian. Following our own religion and our own personal law is our fundamental right and hence no one should stop us.

T.M. ABDUL JABBAR
Alkhobar, Saudi Arabia

■ Will the Government reintroduce sati, untouchability, child marriage, and the caste system in the spirit of its Muslim Women's Bill in the next session?

S.K. JAIN
New Delhi

■ Secularism and nationalism have increasingly come to mean being anti-Muslim. People's energies should be channelised into trying to improve the country instead of hounding a community.

IRFAN A. SIDDIQUI
Faizabad

■ The bill serves to heal the hurt feelings of the Muslim minority, in a country which is manoeuvring to make them a mass of identity-less people, deprived of their own culture, traditions and way of life.

NAZIR HUSSAIN PATEL
Saudi Arabia

■ The Government should have also simultaneously introduced a constitutional amendment bill for the deletion of the word secular from the preamble to the Constitution.

RAJNEESH BERDIA
Bhopal

■ The bill suggests that a divorced woman's parents or relatives must maintain her because blood relationship is stronger than a marital relationship. Can I ask the framers of the bill what is to happen to the children in these cases. Is their relationship with their own father also considered dissolved by the application of the same inescapable and cold logic?

S. BHATTACHARYA
56 APO

CORRECTION

In your article ("Gathering Storm" March 31), the caption given below a photograph of a symposium organised by the Aligarh Muslim University Old Boys Association, is misleading. The symposium was not a "pro-bill seminar" as you said but an impartial discussion on the constitutional and social aspects of Muslim Personal Law with specific reference to the Shah Bano case. The symposium was neither in favour of nor against the bill.

KHWAJA M. SHAHID
New Delhi

SECTARIAN FALLOUT

What happened in J&K ("Tragic Tale" March 31) was the result of the tension around Babari Masjid and the happenings in Jammu. Though police officers in Anantnag were suspended immediately after the violence, no action was taken when Muslims were the target. Such a policy must change or this will prove prejudicial to the interests of our nation.

BASHIR AHMAD
Kashmir

■ Your special report has ignored the fact that communal passions were aroused in Anantnag after the minority community in Jammu was subjected to harassment and shops next to a police station were burnt. While the ugly incidents in the valley must be condemned, the part played by the Jammu communalists in triggering off the disturbances need to be equally condemned.

ISMAT
Srinagar

BENIGHTED SECTOR

The Comment ("Public Issue" March 31) neatly sums up the plight of the public sector institutions. There is an urgent need to streamline the present system in order to achieve the goals of the five year plans.

T. S. SHANKARAN
Bangalore

■ Your article is timely and an eye-opener. Unfortunately, the public sector has become excessively bureaucratised and recruitment to top positions has been largely dictated by political considerations. Barring a few, most public sector enterprises are incurring heavy losses and are a drain on the nation. Corrective measures are urgently required.

JAYATHIRTHA. K. PUJAR
Bangalore

■ The failure of the public sector idea makes it now appear that socialism was a pleasant daydream.

MRITUNJAY P. SINGH
Ratlam

SCAPEGOAT

Reference to "Log Jam" (March 31). To err is human but to blame it on others is politics. Finding a scapegoat is the easiest thing in the world and Kewal Ram Chauhan did just that without a qualm.

VIVEK MOHAN
Shimla

FOR THE RECORD

Your report on Maruti ("Rewarding Links" February 28) has missed these facts. I qualified in automobile engineering from the UK and have also specialised in shipping and transport systems. The dealership was awarded to our company only after Maruti Udyog was satisfied with the facilities available at our end. Our workshops in Calcutta, Siliguri and Durgapur are perhaps the best in eastern India.

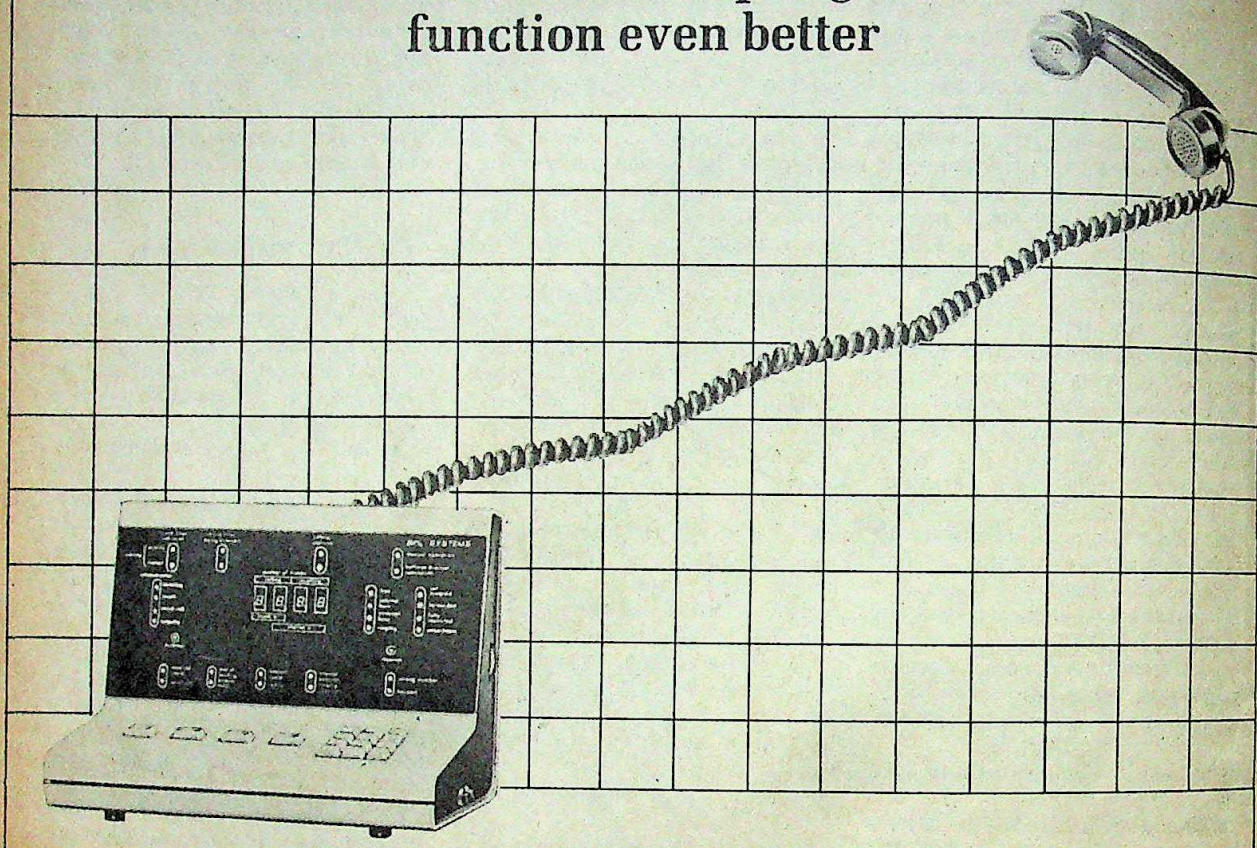
M.D. JINDAL
managing director
Machino Techno Sales Pvt Ltd.
Calcutta

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Experience proves it

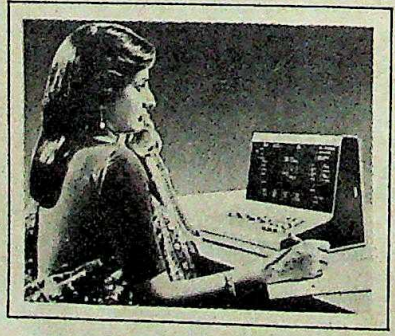
BPL's new EPABXs help organisations function even better



Ask Canara Bank, Colgate Palmolive, Johnson & Johnson, Madura Coats...

BPL is the first company to give the country a microprocessor based electronic PABX. An exchange to match international standards. Enhance office productivity. Control telephone expenses. Today, BPL's EPABXs are functioning satisfactorily in a number of Banks, Government offices, Corporate and Multinational organisations. All over the country. And the unique functions of the EPABX continue to keep it way ahead of the rest.

Take a look at some of the features of the EPABX. It can truly revolutionise the way your people talk and listen. Multiway conferencing, Call forward,



Follow me, Auto call back, Priority and many more. It's just the system you've been looking for. A system that you can depend on. Get one to work for you – Now!

BPL's EPABX manufacturing infrastructure is supported by seven integrated factories, three R&D units, facilities for in-house manufacture of critical components, comprehensive tool rooms and PCB plants.

The Electronic PABX from BPL. – The Single Largest Integrated Source of Office Automation Products in India.

BPL-INDIA

In pursuit of perfection

Computers ● Communication ● Components
Instrumentation (Industrial, Medical & Measurement) ● Office Automation ● Consumer Electronics

Central Marketing Organisation: BPL-Centre, 32, Church Street, Bangalore – 560 001. Tel: 572321/2/6. Telex: 0845-511.
Branch Offices at: Bangalore, Bombay, Calcutta, Hyderabad, Madras, New Delhi, Palghat.

1193

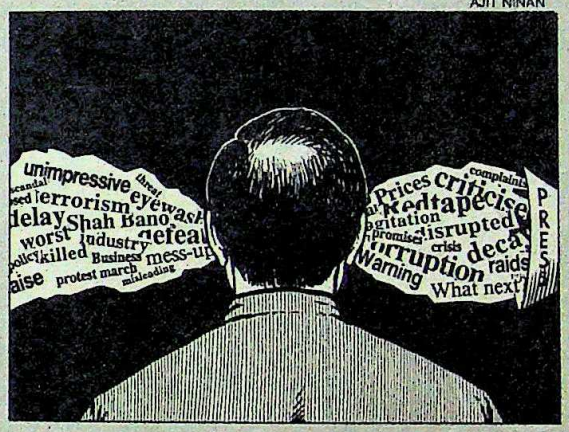
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Critical Facts

IT IS hallowed tradition in politics to blame bad news on the messenger who brings it and Rajiv Gandhi seems to have fallen prey to the temptation. At a press conference in Ahmedabad last fortnight, the prime minister called the national press "unpredictable and irresponsible", and said it was behaving in a "very fickle manner". Shortly before this, he told a Calcutta newspaper in an interview that the raids against businessmen "had marked the turning point in the attitude of the press". Rajiv also said in Ahmedabad that while the press had turned critical of his Government, his "love affair was with the people of India and that still continued". Clearly, he believes that the press does not reflect public opinion, and seems to be making the unworthy suggestion that journalistic criticism is motivated by newspaper proprietors who may be annoyed by the raids on businessmen.

AJIT NINAN



When things start going wrong, as they must during any government's term in office, the easy way out is to attack the press. Richard Nixon did this in the United States, and the late Prime Minister Indira Gandhi did it in India before virtually shutting herself off from Indian journalists. But this fortress mentality gets a politician nowhere, and over time shuts him or her off from reality.

Rajiv Gandhi started out differently. He was open to the press, he even seemed to welcome criticism. This was easy enough when the press was falling over itself praising him for his undisputed achievements during his first year in office. If the country had been short of heroes, he appeared to be one. But now that the ride isn't quite as smooth, Rajiv's comments hark back unpleasantly to the tone that his mother used to employ in her more embattled days.

It is nobody's case that the press is correct in everything it says, or that it is free from defects. Indeed, sections of the press did not cover themselves with glory in reporting on several recent flashpoints, be it Kashmir, Gujarat or Punjab. But a moment's reflection should convince the prime minister that the new tone of press comments on his Government cannot have been orchestrated by anyone. The press in India speaks in a multitude of voices, ownership patterns vary quite sharply, and the leftist press has in fact been more critical of his Government's record than the mainline publications. So if there is any kind of consensus of opinion reflected in the criticism, it must be based on commonly perceived facts that are observable on the ground.

He is also over-reacting. Despite the increase in critical comments in recent weeks, he has not yet run into an unfriendly press, barring perhaps a couple of publications (and these will always exist in a free, unorchestrated media). Even on the contentious question of the raids, no one has questioned the motive behind the raids (as has been done in the case of earlier governments), or indeed questioned the integrity of the men ordering them. And the record will show that more print has been given to government statements and accounts of raids than to those who have been raided. The only change occurred when newspapers started reporting the comments of the raided as well. Editorially, the criticism has essentially been not against the raids but over the question of whether the Government was adhering to the due process of law. The finance minister himself admitted in an interview that some of the raids had been excessively publicised, and the prime minister in turn said that there was a problem with the "manner of the raids" and "the people whom they were raiding". Since the case for the prosecution has been conceded by the defence, what is Rajiv Gandhi complaining about?

There is more substance to the criticism than just the question of raids. He must recognise the changed political mood in the country, and accept that he has succeeded in upsetting several sections of the population in quick succession: the rich and the middle class, Harijans and Muslims, politicians and civil servants, and so on down the line. Punjab—Rajiv's greatest triumph in 1985—is heading back to the brink. If the Assam accord in August was a triumph, it ended in electoral defeat for the Congress(I). The Muslims were unhappy with the Government; and in trying to appease the community Rajiv has quickly run foul of liberal opinion in the country, which was earlier aligned with him. Politically, the Opposition is rejuvenated, while dissidence in the Congress(I) appears to be spreading. One former chief minister has openly talked of starting a new party. All these are visible trends and developments, and not fiction created by a fickle media.

Some of the criticism today reflects Rajiv's refusal to be an old-style political manoeuverer, and some of it is a result of frustration because he refuses to accept a pork-barrel definition of democracy and a distribution of the spoils of office. It is also possible that the new political mood does not do justice to his record in office. He has brought a breath of fresh air into the country's jaded politics, set himself goals that would not even have occurred to most other politicians, and turned in a better record during his first year than any of his predecessors. Although there is a good deal of criticism of his economic policies, most of the reforms introduced were overdue and will benefit the economy.

But there is little escape from the fact that the Government has bungled and lost ground in recent weeks. If the press reflects this, the prime minister would be well advised to ponder over the reasons for his popularity rating having come down a few pegs, and to resist the temptation to dismiss the bad news as a creation of the newspapers.

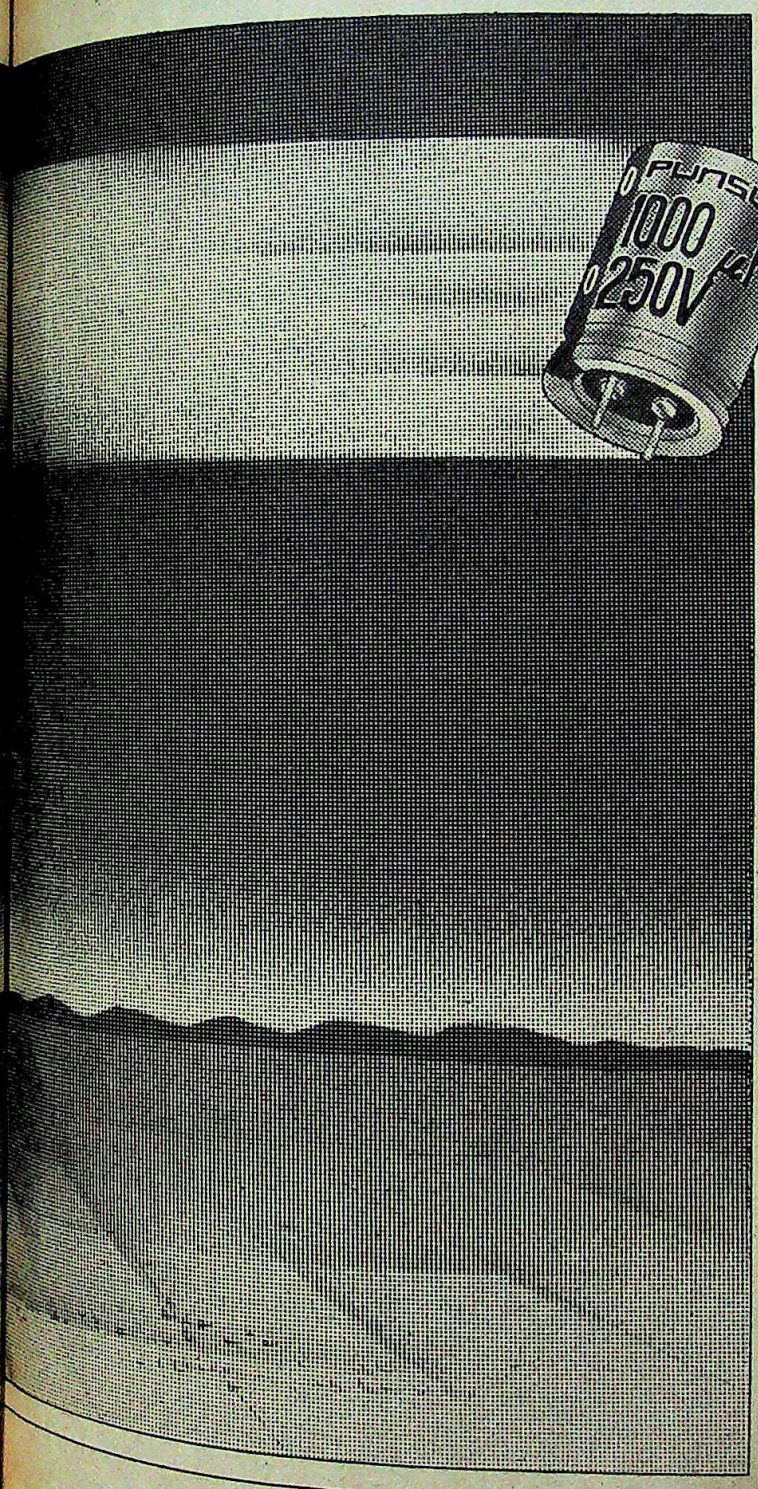
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The little capacitor just went into overdrive

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Overdrive. A word you wouldn't associate with a humble little component.

Until you discover that Punsumi has just put India's largest aluminium electrolytic capacitor plant into high gear.

Punsumi brings decades of collective experience to the job.

So, you get capacitors made with the care and precision usually reserved for Semiconductor devices. Capacitors in the entire possible range.

Think of it. 80 million of them every year.

Built for your most demanding electronic applications.

So call us. Or write today. The address is below.

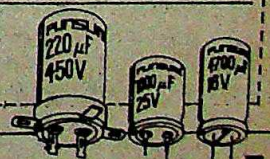
Name _____

Designation _____

Company _____

Address _____

_____

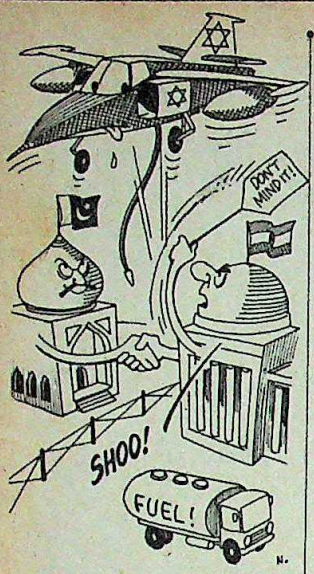


PUNSUMI
The Better Capacitor

D-16 Meera Marg, Bani Park, Jaipur-302 006
Tel : 69497.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Trump Card

● India made effective use of its 'Israeli card' while coming to an agreement recently with Pakistani President Zia-ul-Haq on not bombing each other's nuclear installations. For the real danger to Pakistan came not from India but from Israel, which has in the past bombed a nuclear installation in Iraq. Recently, Israel approached the Indian Government for secret refuelling facilities in Jamnagar as a stopover for Israeli attack planes, should that country decide to bomb the Kahuta nuclear installation. The Government did not hesitate in very firmly turning down the request, but also made sure that Pakistan knew about the Israeli request and India's own response to it.

While India and Israel do not have diplomatic ties, India occasionally uses the 'Israeli card' for its own ends through unofficial contacts. After the blast that destroyed Air-India's Kanishka in mid-1985, Israeli experts were contacted to help the airline revamp and tighten its security procedures with a view to preventing the recurrence of such incidents in future. And in 1982, when the Reagan administration was vigorously pushing its $3.2 billion arms and economic assistance package to Pakistan, America's Jewish lobby worked furiously on the Indian side in an attempt to prevent the aid bill from going through the US Congress, and came pretty close to scuttling the measure.

Cocooned Giani

● President Zail Singh would like to be a travelling man, but his tour plans seem perennially jinxed. Often in the past, the Government has not cleared his proposals to visit various parts of the country, or delayed clearance till it was too late in the day. But the President's planned visit to Chandigarh last fortnight was not expected to meet with any hitch although this was the first time that he would be visiting the town after Operation Bluestar. Indeed, Punjab Governor Shankar Dayal Sharma had even arranged a sumptuous banquet in Zail Singh's honour, with the list of invitees being the chief ministers of both Punjab and Haryana. The occasion would almost certainly have provided opportunity for Zail Singh to meet Punjab Chief Minister S.S.Barnala, who has not called on the President since he was sworn in six months ago.

But once again, there was the inevitable hitch. Intelligence officials warned that the President's visit to Chandigarh might entail unmanageable security risks, an official from the Chandigarh administration conveyed this to the President in Rashtrapati Bhavan, and for the umpteenth time, Zail Singh remained enclosed in his security cocoon.

Suited Envoy

● Guess who is the most harassed Italian in the capital today? No, it is not Ottavio Quattrocchi, Snamprogetti's New Delhi representative, who is waging a furious battle for the Rs 700-crore HBJ pipeline contract. Far more harassed than Quattrocchi is the new Italian ambassador to India who has had to operate out of a suite in the Taj Mahal Hotel ever since he came in a couple of months ago. The reason: around the time the ambassador's predecessor left India, the embassy handed back his formal residence—a palatial building in the heart of the city—to its owner even before new premises could be found.

So the new ambassador has the twin mortification of staying and working in the hotel while eyeing the magnificent house right next to the hotel that might have been his home. He has to entertain his guests in the hotel's restaurants while his staff make desperate—and so far futile—efforts to find suitable accommodation befitting an ambassador. But one thing is clear: when it comes to housing problems, the cruel capital recognises no diplomatic immunity.

Press Master

● The rumours doing the rounds that H.Y. Sharada Prasad, press adviser to the prime minister, was being put out to pasture and replaced by his current deputy, Mani Shankar Aiyar, now turn out to have been baseless. Prasad was shortly due to retire—after a long and distinguished innings—at the end of his present tenure. But according to sources in the Prime Minister's Secretariat, the battle-scarred veteran has been asked by Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi to continue on his present assignment for an indefinite period till a suitable replacement is found. Clearly, that means Aiyar is no longer in the running—as it was earlier believed—for perhaps the most prized slot in the Government's information apparatus.

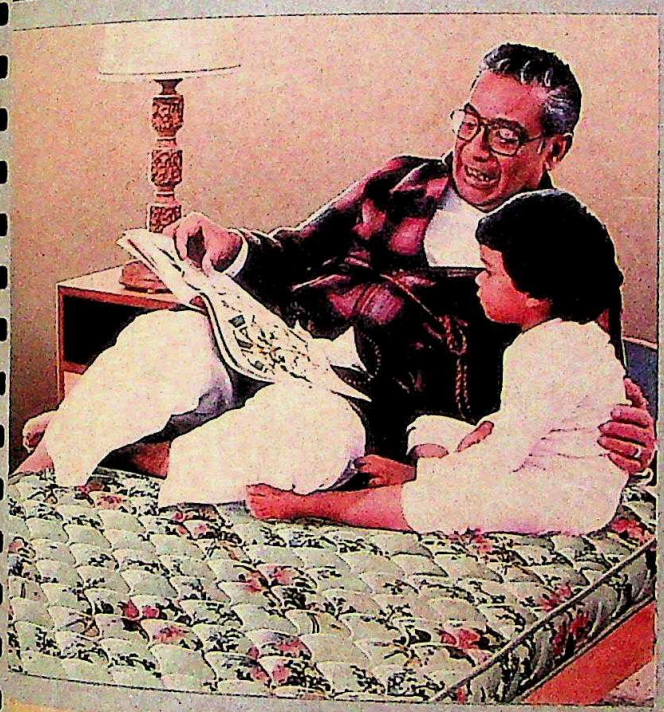
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chen



BEYOND COMPARE

Mattresses that are too soft can cause backaches. Those that are too hard, result in discomfort.

Young or old, only KURL-ON gives you complete relaxation. Comfort as you like it, support where you need it, elegance to match your lifestyle.

Kurl-on®

India's No. 1 Mattress.
For comfort. Support. Elegance.

Karnataka Consumer Products Ltd.,
Industry House, 45, Fair Field Road,
Bangalore-560 001.
Phone: 76746/72710.

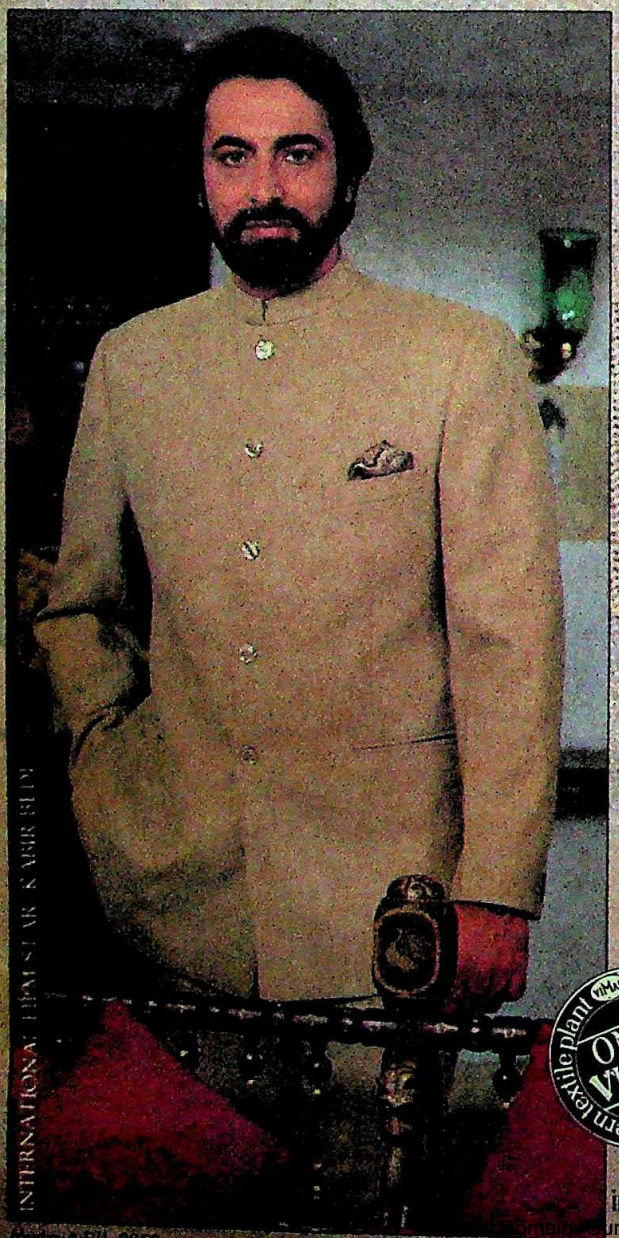
Company's Showrooms and Offices

- Bangalore: 220314 & 224676;
- Cochin: 366744; * Madras: 810710;
- Hyderabad: 234560;
- Bombay: 354385;
- New Delhi: 772019;
- Calcutta: 232089.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ONLY VIMAL



From India's most modern textile plant

ONLY VIMAL

Summer of Vimal

Easing into a glorious summer.
Lightly. With Summer-styled
Polyrich Suitings.
In shades that put summer in the shade. And textures that just breathe. Ah.

CC-0. Omkar Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

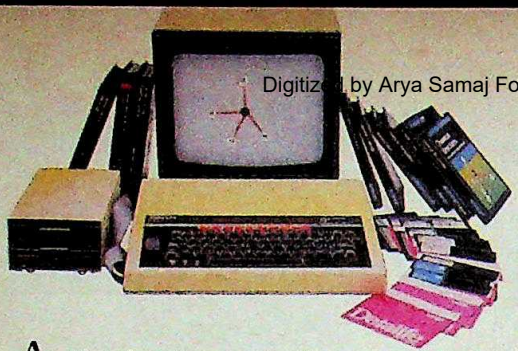
In Public Domain. Cc

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Now, class needn't be a struggle.

As a headmaster, or a teacher, you are acutely aware of how boring education has become, and how the student now tends to consider study an imposition.

The CLASS programme is going to change all that and bring the fun and excitement right back into education.

And the SCL Unicorn is the computer selected by the Government of India for the CLASS (Computer Literacy And Studies in Schools) programme.

Because it's made right here in India. No more dependence on foreign kits. The Unicorn is made by SCL, a Government of India concern.

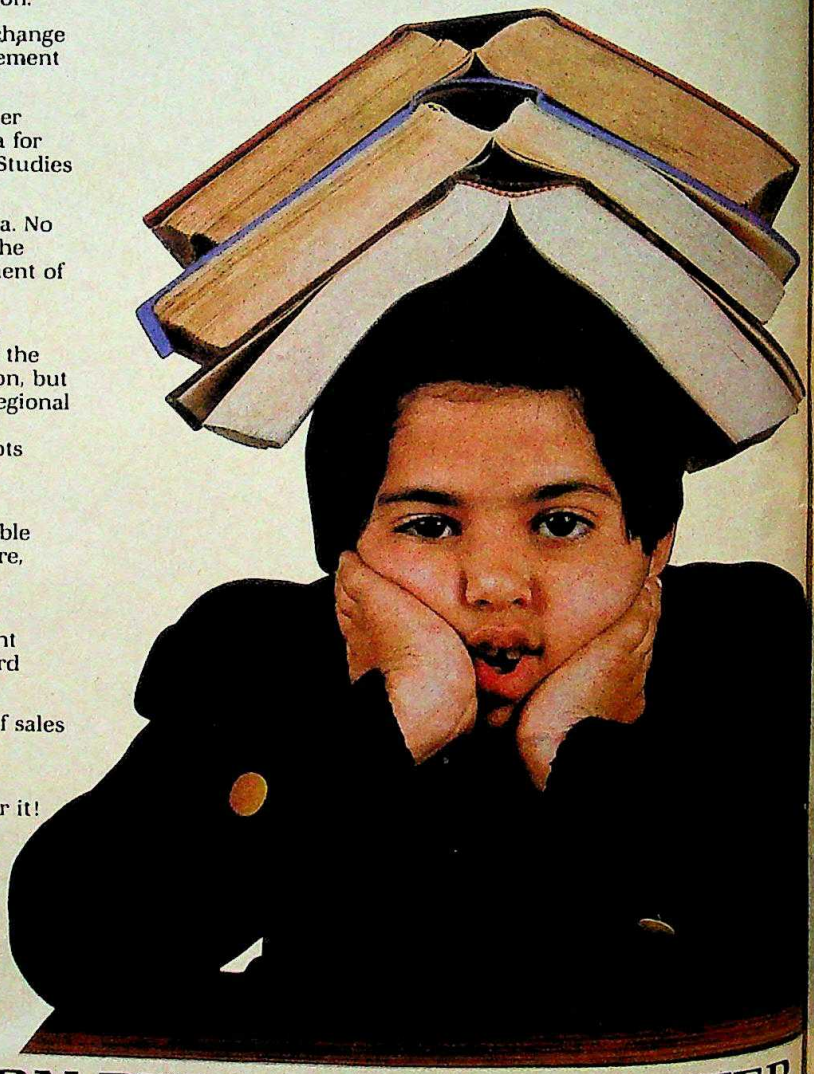
Software? There's plenty of it. Being developed indigenously not only by the NCERT and the Ministry of Education, but by many software houses as well. Regional language software in Hindi, Telugu, Marathi and Gujarati is ready and lots more is under way.

And the SCL Unicorn is perfectly Indianised. It's built to be 100% reliable under user conditions of temperature, humidity, dust and so on.

It has special school administration packages... for examinations, student enrolment, fee collection. Even a word processing facility.

Supported by an all-India network of sales and service.

That's right, now class needn't be a struggle. And you'll get full marks for it!



Semiconductor Complex Ltd.

(A Govt. of India Enterprise)
Registered Office: Phase VIII, S.A.S. Nagar-160059 (Punjab)
Tel: 87443,Gram : CHALSI, Telex: 0395-270 LSI IN

EDUCATIONAL

THE SCL UNICORN PERSONAL COMPUTER

No school is complete without it.

Computers based on the SCL Unicorn Personal Computer Modules are available from:

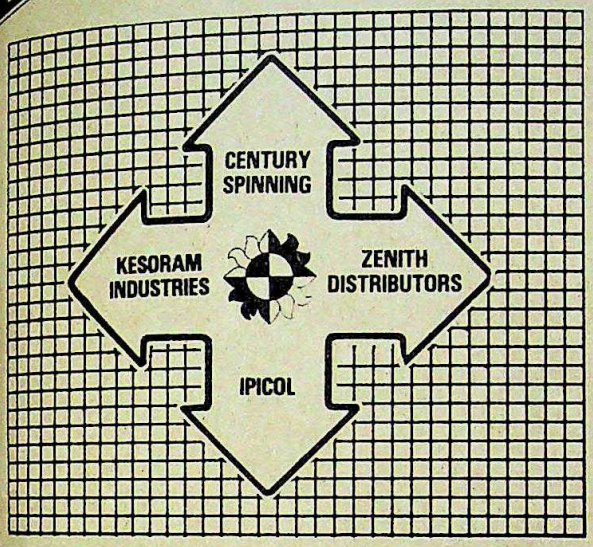
Computer Aided Learning Systems Pvt. Ltd. New Delhi, Tel: 6419534 Tlx: 031-4884 • Computer Kinetics, Srinagar, Tel: 74072 • Computer Point (I) Ltd. at all their outlets—Bangalore, Tel: 578718, 578452 Bombay, Tel: 4930543, 4936716. Delhi, Tel: 699421. Madras, Tel: 441192 • Crescent Computers, New Delhi, Tel: 634056, • CMS Computers Pvt. Ltd. Bombay, Tel: 242774, 222370 • 21st Century Electronics Pvt. Ltd. Noida (U.P.), Tel: 805-3185 • Datek Marketing Group, New Delhi, Tel: 666501 • Dedicated Digital Machines Pvt. Ltd. New Delhi, Tel: 6411905, 6413111 Tlx: 031-3974 • Digital Innovations Pvt. Ltd. Baroda, Tel: 66544, 67344 Tlx: 0175-389 Gram: DIGISYSTEM • Electronics Systems Punjab Ltd. Chandigarh, Tel: 87492 Tlx: 0395-391 Gram: SYSTEMS, MOHALI • Informatic Computer Systems, New Delhi, Tel: 662734, 656114 • Integrated Data Systems, Hyderabad, Tel: 225315 Gram: DATALINE • Kerala State Electronics Development Corporation Limited, Trivandrum, Tel: 60621 (10 Lines), Tlx. 0884-273, 0884-283 Gram: ELECTRONIC • Microelectronics Inc. Madras, Tel: 450217 • Namtech Consultants Pvt. Ltd. Bangalore, Tel: 561234, Tlx: 0845-8116 Gram: NAMTECH • Pascal Computers Pvt. Ltd. Calcutta, Tel: 434092 Gram: ARPINTCO • Premier Microsystems Pvt. Ltd. Calcutta. Tel: 228059, 228826 • Rapid Computer Services & Spares Pvt. Ltd. Bombay, Tel: 392067, 352099, 358537 • Safeguard Microsystems, Bangalore, Tel: 568324 Gram: SAFEGUARD Tlx: 0845-8156 • Sujatha Sales & Electronics Ltd. Bombay, Tel: 222999 Tlx. 011-3855 Gram: ELECTECH • Suvik Electronics, Ahmedabad, Tel: 2584, 2680, 2687, 2374 Gram: SUVIK GANDHINAGAR • Swaruna Information Products, Secunderabad, Andhra Pradesh • Technolab Innovex, Madras Tel: 422135, 423893 • Webel Computer Ltd. Calcutta, Tel: 442645, 431915, 431091 Tlx: 021-2242 Gram: BENTRONICS

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A Birla Venture

A rich heritage...



That's Mangalam Timber

Introducing for the first time in India MEDIUM DENSITY FIBREBOARD with sophisticated technology from Siempelkamp GmbH of West Germany

Mangalam Timber Products Limited has been promoted by Century Spinning & Manufacturing Ltd., Kesoram Industries and Cotton Mills Limited and Zenith Distributors and Agents Ltd, in association with The Industrial Promotion and Investment Corporation of Orissa Ltd, to manufacture for the first time in India Medium Density Fibreboard. Century, a pioneer in textiles has today grown into a multiunit, multi-product conglomerate manufacturing rayon, tyre cord, caustic soda, paper, cement and chemical plants. Kesoram, also belonging to the Birlas is engaged in the production of textiles, rayon, transparent paper, cement, refractories and spun pipes. And now Mangalam Timber is yet another pioneering venture under the dynamic stewardship of Shri B.K. Birla. Located in a backward area at Kusumi, Dist Koraput, Orissa, the project is being set up with a capital outlay of Rs.26 crores and will annually manufacture 30,000 metric tonnes of Medium Density Fibre Board using state-of-the-art technology of world renowned Siempelkamp GmbH of West Germany and Celotex of USA.

You'll soon have an opportunity to share the fruits of this pioneering high technology venture. Mangalam Timber will offer to the public 43,60,000 Equity Shares of Rs.10 each for cash at par.

A rich heritage, a premium product and a rare investment opportunity ..... that's MANGALAM TIMBER.

HIGHLIGHTS

- ☐ Promoted by Zenith Distributors, Century Spinning, Kesoram and IPICOL.
- ☐ A break-through in the wood panel industry — MDF manufactured first time in India.
- ☐ Sophisticated equipments from West Germany with latest technology from USA and West Germany.
- ☐ Fully automatic, computerised production line.
- ☐ Committed long term forest resources and plans for developing own plantations.
- ☐ 80CC and other Tax Benefits.
- ☐ Listing on Calcutta, Delhi and Bombay Stock Exchanges.

CHAIRMAN : SHRI B.K. BIRLA

MANGALAM TIMBER PRODUCTS LIMITED

A Birla Venture in association with IPICOL (A Govt. of Orissa Undertaking)

Registered Office : Kusumi Nawrangpur, Koraput Dist. (Orissa)

Administrative Office : Birla Building, 9/1 R.N. Mukherjee Road, Calcutta 700 001

Managers to the Issue

State Bank of India
Merchant Banking Division

Issue opens on 16th April, 1986

PRESSMAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
INTERNATIONAL EDITION

GIFT INDIA TO SOMEONE YOU CARE FOR...

GIFT FOR _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ CODE _____

COUNTRY _____

Please send one year's subscription of INDIA TODAY, International Edition and my gift card to the person named above. Enclosed is my cheque/DD/M.O. for Rs._____
payable to Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.

MY NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ CODE _____

COUNTRY _____

Send this advertisement and payment to:
Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.
Subscription Department
P.B. No. 69, Delhi-Mathura Road
Faridabad 121007, Haryana, India

Annual Airmail Subscription Rates

Rs 185
BANGLADESH
BHUTAN
NEPAL

Rs 345
AFGHANISTAN
BURMA
MALDIVES
PAKISTAN
SRI LANKA

Rs 385
BAHRAIN
CHINA
HONG KONG
INDONESIA
IRAN
IRAQ
KUWAIT
MALAYSIA
OMAN
PHILIPPINES
QATAR
SAUDI ARABIA
SINGAPORE
TAIWAN
THAILAND
U.A.E.
YEMEN

Rs 485
AUSTRALIA
EGYPT
ETHIOPIA
FRANCE
W. GERMANY
GHANA
GIBRALTAR
IRELAND
JAPAN
KENYA
SOUTH KOREA
LEBANON
LIBYA
MALAWI
MALTA
MAURITIUS
SEYCHELLES
SIERRA LEONE
SOUTH AFRICA
SUDAN
SWITZERLAND
SYRIA
TANZANIA
U.K.
ZAMBIA
ZIMBABWE

Rs 585
BAHAMAS
BARBADOS
BRAZIL
CANADA
FIJI
GUYANA
HAWAII
JAMAICA
NEW ZEALAND
PANAMA
U.S.A.

NH 943

● I don't think I am weak. I am very open when I am not very clear about a particular subject. But after I am convinced that this is what needs to be done, then I think I may be a little too rigid, sometimes.

■ RAJIV GANDHI in The Telegraph

● Actually, it (the budget) pulsates with the desire to placate the groups the Government has annoyed over the past year. The Government seems embarrassed at being identified with the private sector, consumption and the rich.

■ Editorial comment in The Economist

● I can play the referee but I cannot kick the football for them (big industrialists) and score the goal.

■ V.P. SINGH in Sunday

● Images and luck can only carry Rajiv Gandhi so far. Already, his earlier public relations exercises—foreign trips and press conferences—have lost their appeal.

■ SUBRAMANIAM SWAMY in Imprint

● It took us one and a half years to get governor's rule. But I hope it does not take us that long to get the elections.

■ DR FAROOQ ABDULLAH in The Week

● No Muslim woman would like to sign her death warrant by stamping her approval to this bill.

■ ARIF MOHAMMED KHAN in The Illustrated Weekly of India

● The twenty-first century is a summons to move forward progressively, not to retreat regressively, frightened by sixth century primitivism.

■ V.R. KRISHNA IYER, former Supreme Court judge, commenting on the Muslim Women's Bill in Time

● Had Marx been never there the world would never have cared for the poor. As a saint I revere him. But as a political prophet he was defeated by technology.

■ BABA AMTE in Society

● Though I am sure the Congress (I) would invite me with open arms if I wanted to join them, I haven't as yet because I don't have the herd mentality.

■ SHATRUGHAN SINHA in Stardust

● I may not be making films with a message, but I do make them with a conviction....If it is only a message you are seeking to portray, then why use a film ? You may as well print and distribute pamphlets. They will be more effective.

■ G. ARAVINDAM, film-maker, in Frontline

● I don't read the newspapers at all. The headlines give me an upset stomach every morning.

■ SAIRA BANU in Bombay

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Europe's signpost.

Lufthansa shows the way to Frankfurt and Frankfurt is showing the way to Europe. With excellent connections to 72 European destinations and to 17 destinations in North America.

Lufthansa
German Airlines

Book your flight through an appointed IATA agent.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

'Even my wife is pleased with my latest involvement!'

'Can you imagine a mature man like me falling head over heels in love like a raw teenager? That's just what happened when I saw Gwalior Suiting's Dornfab range. Love at first sight, that's what it was! One look... and I knew that Gwalior Suiting and I were going to be great blends.

Finally, I had to confess to my wife. She gave me a cynical look and marched off to examine the Dornfab range. And returned with a bagful of fabrics, raving over Dornfab's super weaves, soft colours and latest designs. I was so thrilled with her approval that I immediately endorsed the Dornfab range.'

M. A. K. PATAUDI

GWALIOR SUITING

IN A CLASS OF ITS OWN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

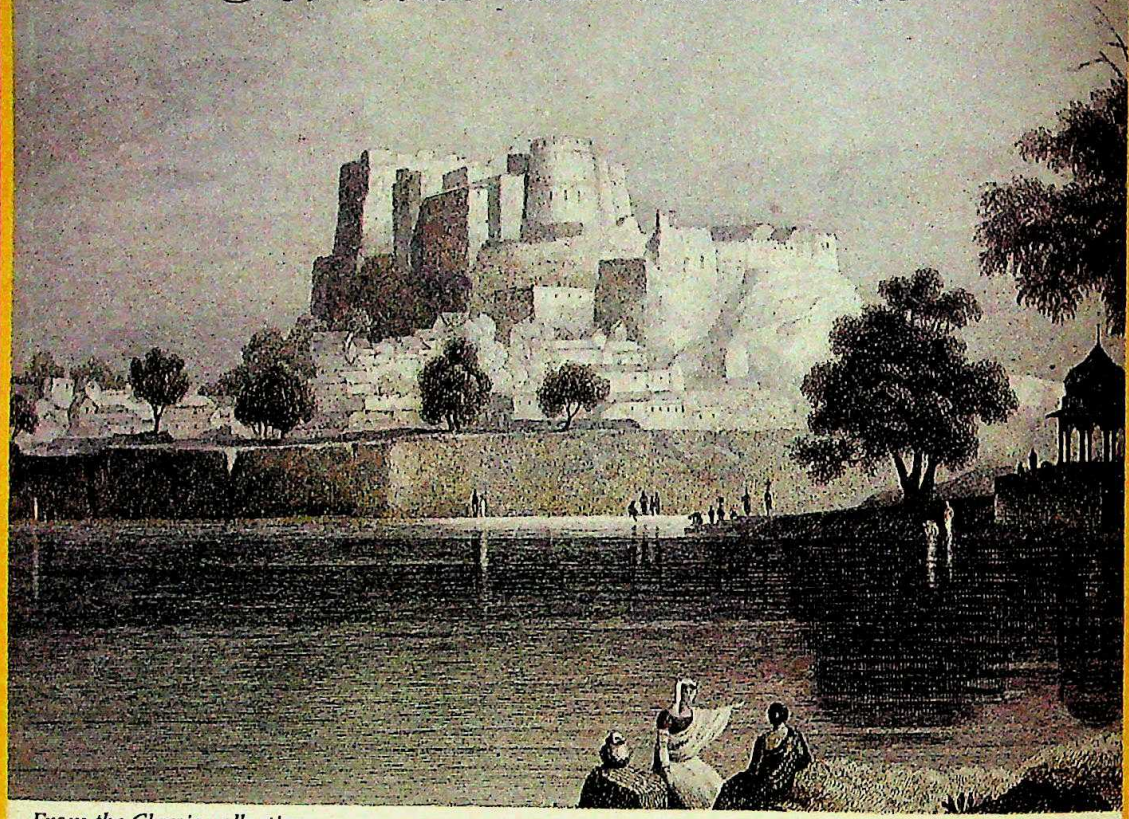
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MAPP-GR-86-100-ENG.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

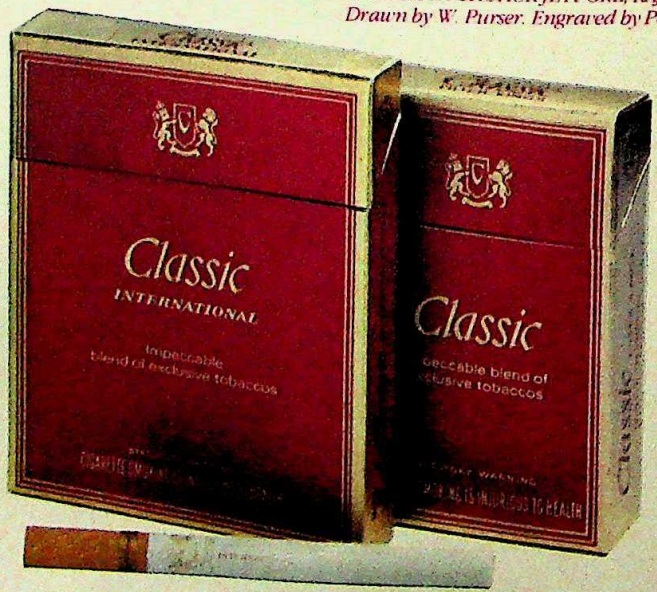
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For those who value taste



From the Classic collection at ITC Ltd., 37 Chowringhee, Calcutta

FORTRESS AT SHUHUR JEYPORE, RAJPOOTANA
Drawn by W. Purser. Engraved by Percy Heath,



Contemporary Classics from ITC

CALRION C-CL-1

STATUTORY WARNING: CIGARETTE SMOKING IS INJURIOUS TO HEALTH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TOILET EXPRESS

■ Passengers on the New Delhi-Howrah Rajdhani Express are receiving more than their usual share of attention these days. Along with dinner and breakfast they are given a form which they are requested to fill in. It is an opinion poll and the subject: Is the configuration of one Indian-style toilet—squatting—to three western-style toilets—sitting—in each compartment the perfect one or would the passengers like some changes in the ratio?

The person who asked for this unusual exercise is none other than Union Transport Minister Bansi Lal. He was travelling in the Rajdhani in February when it turned out that he—a minister is but a weak mortal with urgent needs—needed to go round the corner. He went to the corner and discovered a sizeable crowd hanging around near the doors to the public conveniences. He had to take his place in the queue like everybody else, and, to top it all, the one public convenience he used was not available. Short of asking the conductor to haul the occupant out so Bansi Lal could be accommodated, there was nothing to be done. It is not recorded how he survived the ordeal, but survive he did, and sufficiently disturbed to order the opinion poll.

KALI'S CALL

■ Rathnam is not a character out of Indian mythology—she is in fact a flesh and blood spouse from Jothampetti near Coimbatore in Tamil Nadu—but her recent action should bring her blessings from the gods.

Rathnam's husband Kalimuthu reached the acme of existence when the AIADMK chose him to be their candidate for the post of panchayat president in a certain village. An overjoyed Rathnam prayed and later did the round of astrologers and asked them if her Kali would succeed. They replied yes, but the signs were such that he would win only if he had two opponents.

Rathnam looked around and saw only the DMK candidate and fear gripped her heart. But God spoke to her at night and the next morning, she set off on a mysterious errand. When Kalimuthu saw the final list of candidates, his heart went thumpety-thump: His nearest and dearest was contesting the election independently. He raged and stormed but Rathnam told him about the prophecy and he clutched her to his heart. Oh yes, Kali won. Behind every successful man is a wife.

HOME AFFAIR

■ Not as dutiful is a certain lady in Jammu. She is a young woman, in her late 20s, married to a certain politician who was a minister in a certain government—recently deceased—led by a certain Gul Shah. What is even more certain is that the minister and his helpmate are not on talking terms.

On a certain morning, people passing by the house of the minister were astonished to see a gaggle of servants come rushing out of the building stuttering incoherently. The passers-by took it upon themselves to look inside and what they saw led them to suspect that marital harmony was not the in-thing here. For the young woman had got hold of her husband by the scruff of his neck—she is a strapping young woman by the way—with one hand and with the other was administering a correction.

It transpired that he had been entertaining, if that is the correct word, another young lady in the house when the lawfully-wedded wife came in unexpectedly and found them, well....The guest artiste managed to escape, the minister didn't and the locality is still talking about the manful way in which his wife told him what she thought of it and him.

PAPER FIDDLE

■ The world of journalism is described as cutthroat and with reason. Two newspapers, for instance, battling for circulation in a single city, might resort to unqueensbury tactics in order to come first past the post. Just how ungentlemanly these tactics might get was revealed in Baroda recently. For some time, the daily Sandesh had been blowing its own trumpet claiming that it sold many more copies than the rival Loksatta. The latter would, in the normal course of events, have pooh-poohed this suggestion but for a disturbing set of statistics which showed that this was indeed so. Why?

This is what one of its intrepid investigative reporters found out. He followed the Sandesh van one morning as it went on its rounds. And what he saw left him stunned. The van would pull up near a vendor and the person inside would jump out, handing over a parcel of Sandesh. But he didn't stop there—he also took the bunch of Loksatta and put them inside the van. And when the police finally caught up with the van it was stuffed to the ceiling with Loksatta. Well, that's one way of keeping in circulation.

—Compiled by JAGANNATH DUBASHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TO ACCURATELY DESCRIBE THE ACTIVITIES OF ZENITH STEEL PIPES & INDUSTRIES LIMITED, WE'D HAVE TO CALL OURSELVES ZENITH PIPES, ROLLS & SHEARS, PAPER, CHEMICALS, PRECISION TOOLS, TEXTILES, CEMENT, SPECIAL STEELS AND VISCOSE FIBRE LIMITED.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WE THOUGHT IT WOULD BE FAR SIMPLER TO CALL OURSELVES ZENITH LIMITED.

When we began in 1960, we called ourselves Zenith Steel Pipes Limited. Because that's what we manufactured.

As production, exports and ambitions grew, we got into the Precision Tools business, steel production, and set up a second galvanising plant to fulfil export requirements.

So we changed the name to Zenith Steel Pipes & Industries Limited.

In 1980, came the Rolling Mill at Khopoli, the Chemicals Division at Tarapur and a second Pipe Mill. Later, a paper plant at Banali, and a merger with Indian Tools Manufacturing Co Ltd.

And now there's even more in the pipeline:

An integrated steel plant in Madhya Pradesh, with an annual production of 150,000 tonnes.

A project to manufacture 50,000 tonnes of seamless tubes at Khopoli to help in import substitution, and meet the growing demands in the oil, gas and automobile industries.

And diversification of the Chemicals Division to cover Oil Field Chemicals, which are imported at present.

You're going to see a lot of Zenith Limited in the future.

And that's no pipe dream.

Zenith Limited

Regd. Office: Moti Mahal, 195, Churchgate Reclamation, Bombay 400 020.

Enterprise/211

CC-0. In Public Domain. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUNJAB Upsurge

SPRING is Punjab's season of hope, a brief interlude between Holi, marking the end of winter, and Baisakhi, heralding the new harvest. This year there is little cheer as the state convulses in the worst-ever violence since the traumatic days leading to Operation Bluestar.

Defying explanation, the toll of violence mounted last fortnight as the Akali Dal Government, long accused of being soft on the terrorists and of being unwilling to take them on, finally began to crack down. After vacillating for weeks, the Government finally arrested Damdami Taksal leader Mohkam Singh, and in a dramatic turnaround, countenanced harsh police action against militants.

The upsurge of violence by terrorists, emboldened by the Akali Government's hitherto soft and clumsy handling of the state, brought into play a new, ominous reaction from Hindu organisations such as the Shiv Sena, which began to find new militancy. Angered by this, the terrorists went on a killing spree, choosing their victims with meticulous care.

Consider the headlines of this period:

March 28: Thirteen persons including eight Rashtriya Swayamsewak Sangh (RSS) workers shot dead and several injured by five terrorists in police uniform and riding a motor-cycle and scooter at Ludhiana. This was the first terrorist attack on RSS workers in several years.

March 27: Former Communist Party of India legislator Arjan Singh Mastana and his bodyguard gunned down in his village Ghariala in Amritsar district, in the first such attack on leftists.

March 26: Nine people killed and many more injured as police open fire to thwart a menacing crowd advancing on Akali Dal leaders in Anandpur Sahib.

March 25: Four killed in separate incidents, and Hajipur town in Hoshiarpur district put under curfew.

March 24: Ten lives lost, among them two Shiv Sena activists slain in Jalandhar; two terrorists and two paramilitary jawans killed in an encounter near Amritsar.

March 23: Three men shot dead on the United Akali Dal and AISSF protestors crash through police barricades in Chandigarh

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ge of Violence outskirts of Batala.

March 21: Two killed in police firing on a violent United Akali Dal (UAD) procession setting out to storm the Assembly.

March 20: One rail passenger shot dead at Manawala station.

March 19: One police officer shot dead in Tarn Taran, two in Batala. Curfew imposed on Nakodar and Muktsar after violent Shiv Sena and All India Sikh Students Federation (AISSF) mobs clash and confront police.

March 18: One villager shot dead in Khadyal, an attempt on the life of a senior Amritsar police officer, and a gun shop in Batala looted; several thousand farmers besiege Batala town, preventing traffic and food from going in.

March 16: Violent clashes in Batala between AISSF and Shiv Sena activists, curfew after four killed in police firing.

The tally of dead in 13 days: 53. In the previous five months of Akali rule, the death toll had been 82, a figure that now seemed small only because of the suddenly escalating violence that had reached a level not seen even in Bhindranwale's days. And no fewer than seven towns in the state were under curfew, covering fully a tenth of the state's population. Towards the end of the fortnight a BJP-sponsored one-day bandh evoked a dismayingly large response in the big cities. As if all this weren't enough, there were the signs of a straight communal divide because of the rising militancy among both Sikhs and Hindus, and the coming Baisakhi festival promised more trouble because of the demand that Chandigarh be handed over to Punjab before the festival.

There were other signs of trouble. In Haryana, Opposition leader Devi Lal managed to collect an unprecedented crowd in Jind, where he demanded that Haryana should get its full due in terms of river water. The crowd repeatedly shouted "down with the Punjab accord", and Chief Minister Bhajan Lal cancelled his own rally at the same spot and rushed to New Delhi for consultations. If the solution to the Punjab problem lay in implementing the accord as quickly as possible, the Jind meeting served notice that Hary-

JOG JOY/The Tribune

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ana was getting militant too.

One of the worst incidents occurred on Holi. The birth anniversary of Bhagat Singh, March 23, is an occasion for pilgrimage by Hindus and Sikhs alike to his birthplace Khatkar Kalan on the Jalandhar-Chandigarh road.

If a few thousands congregate at Khatkar Kalan, the scene is multiplied many times over on Holi at Anandpur Sahib, which is, after Amritsar, the holiest of Sikh shrines situated 80 km north-west of Chandigarh. Last fortnight, the Hola Mohalla, as it is known, had attracted the usual tens of thousands of villagers and townsfolk from all over the state. The Akali Dal gathering was attended by Chief Minister Surjit Singh Barnala and several cabinet colleagues. The AISSF gathering nearby was organised by its convenor Harinder Singh Kahlon, a man sought by the police but never quite apprehended, and featured, among others, Bimal Khalsa, widow of the late prime minister Indira Gandhi's assassin, Beant Singh.

It was obviously to disrupt the Akali meeting that a militant crowd of some

INTERVIEW

"We are doing quite well"

FOR A man in what is undoubtedly the country's hottest chief minister's gaddi, Surjit Singh Barnala exudes a surprising air of calm. While outside Punjab the feeling is mounting that the state is teetering on the brink of new chaos, Barnala coolly trots out statistics to show that the state is ravaged by far less violence than, say, Bihar or Uttar Pradesh. Barnala shows little signs of wear and tear though he speaks with anguish about the violence in his state. He has of late begun to meet Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi rather than intermediaries, and finds him well-meaning and sincere but surrounded by others who give him conflicting advice and information. Last fortnight he took time off to talk to Managing Editor SUMAN DUBEY and Principal Correspondent GOBIND THUKRAL on two separate occasions, once over 90 minutes starting at midnight and a second time during a break in the Assembly session when the opposition parties had taken control of the chamber. Excerpts.

Q. There is a feeling that you are not acting firmly enough against the terrorists for fear of alienating the Sikhs...?

A. That is the feeling because they don't understand my problems properly. The problems that we are facing in the state are tremendous. This is not a normal situation and in the situation (that exists) I think we are doing quite well. For example, recently, in the last month and a half we have arrested 160 extremists, 42 of them in hot pursuit just after the crime. These are not publicised, unfortunately, by the press. The Waltoha incident, for example, was not correctly reported by the press which said: 'Six killed in Punjab', but of those, two were terrorists and it appeared that six people had been killed in Punjab! The credit that was due to the administration that they had bagged two notorious culprits, that was missed. This is not honest reporting, giving a big headline and putting together a lot of little, little items which make it appear that Punjab is on fire.

Q. But the quality of the crime is very different here, is it not?

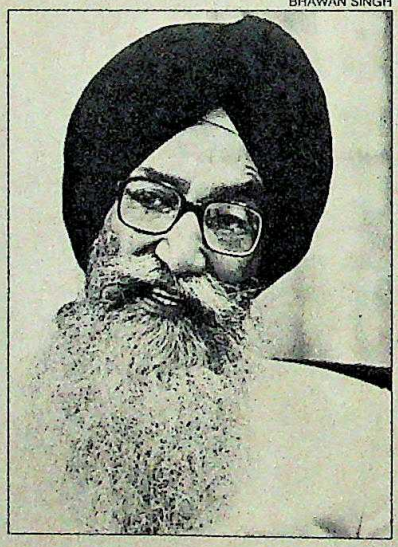
BHAWAN SINGH



Barnala: under pressure

A. Not entirely. What happens is that if there are two real cases of terrorist action and 10 more crimes, somebody loots a shop, snatches a scooter, they add them and then it becomes 12.

Q. You spoke of special problems?

A. I have not inherited a government in normal times. People have been agitated for the last three-four years, for the last two years particularly, after Operation Bluestar and the November carnage in Delhi, and these situations create difficulties. For example, the problem of the youth, who feel that they're not being looked after or being listened to: that is their grievance. The incidents in Batala, the new rise of the Shiv Sena, this has created problems.

Q. The reason for the Shiv Sena is that they feel they (the Hindus) are not being protected properly....

A. This is what is happening, one (community) fearing from the other. This kind of thing has not happened before.

Q. There seems to be no attempt to bring the two together?

A. This is what I was going to try and do today, to form a committee of legislators from all parties to go to the affected areas to talk to the people.

Q. Are you getting enough support from the Congress(I) and other parties?

A. They are not doing what they should do for example, in Batala. They should have formed a joint committee of all the parties and started something. They don't do it. I am now trying to involve them in a committee so that we can send them wherever there's any problem.

Q. What is your long-term strategy?

A. We had started sector schemes which have proved successful. We are intensifying these sector schemes in which a large number of paramilitary forces are employed. Four districts have been taken up initially, Amritsar, Gurdaspur, Ferozepur and Kapurthala, and we might later on add four more. We have provided 136 vehicles to these people to make them more mobile so that they can keep a round-the-clock vigil in the area. We have 186 companies of the Border Security Force (BSF) and the Central Reserve Police Force (CRPF) and we have requested the Centre for better weapons.

Q. Have these brought results?

A. Well, one of the results is these two boys who were killed after snatching money from someone. We have recovered a large number of weapons, including Sten guns, carbines and rifles, 450 to be precise. Though extremist crime has decreased from 256 to 142, the number of murders has gone up from 27 to 52 in the five months since the Akalis came to

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

2,000 AISSF workers, wielding swords and lathis, advanced on the Akali dais when Barnala was speaking. When attempts to stop the mob with tear gas and rubber bullets failed, the police opened fire. Nine people died and 17 were injured.

While the AISSF later claimed that their protest was peaceful, the police maintain that firing was ordered only after the crowd threatened to attack the Akali meeting. "We had no choice but to take this hard decision," said Ropar district police chief Anil Kaushik. "We don't know what might have happened had the crowd marched into the Akali meeting. We think their targets were the chief minister and his colleagues."

The Anandpur Sahib incident came close on the heels of another bout of violence in Chandigarh on March 21 in which UAD militants ran riot outside the Punjab Assembly after breaking through police barricades in one of the most heavily-guarded parts of the Union territory. The resulting police firing took two lives and injured several others. And, in the process, it seems to have rehabilitated power compared with the same period a year earlier.

Q. What exactly is the political strategy to isolate the terrorists?

A. More and more people are now beginning to recognise that these people are not acting in the interest of the state, in the interest of the Sikhs even. That is why we have been stating this in every congregation. Are these people, who do all this (violence), are they true Sikhs? Can they be treated as good Sikhs, people who can kill a Sikh, kill a Hindu, anybody who comes in their way?

Q. Do you think the terrorist is getting isolated?

A. I think they are getting weaker.

Q. But there is an upsurge in their activity?

A. That is why the terrorists have changed their methods. They are now giving advertisements, adopting slightly democratic methods.

Q. You've talked quite a lot about the Pakistan factor in the Punjab problem. What evidence do you have?

A. We have with us interrogation reports of eight known terrorists: Upkar Singh Sandhu, Avtar Singh from Amritsar, Narinder Singh, Sarabjit Singh, Faqir Singh, Devinder Singh, Balwinder Singh and Tejinderpal Singh that reveal the modus operandi of Pakistan's intelligence agencies in fuelling the Punjab fires. In jails and safe houses they are motivated through taped speeches and video films of Bhindranwale. These raw boys who fled to Pakistan fearing army operations are now being trained in subversive activities. There is the International Sikh Youth Federation, the Akal Federation and Babbar Khalsa functioning in Pakistan. The weapons show Pakistani and Chinese markings.

Q. What is your understanding of the Shiv Sena phenomenon?

A. The only wrong thing about them is that they create situations when they should not. For example, Batala was a peaceful town until they started doing some mischief there. They started collecting, pulling down shop shutters, and manhandling passers-by, shouting slogans.

Q. Are there any political parties pulling the wires from behind them?

A. They are all people from other political parties.

Q. Would you care to name them?

A. No, I would not.

Q. Do you think the situation is under your control?

A. I think it is.

> "I have not inherited a government in normal times. People have been agitated for the last three-four years, for the last two years particularly, after Operation Bluestar and the November carnage in Delhi, and these situations create difficulties."

Q. Coming to the accord, do you feel Delhi has let you down?

A. I feel they are slightly dragging their feet. On Chandigarh the problem should have been solved by now. Alright, you couldn't do it by 26th January, but they should immediately have taken some steps to do the needful. May be they will do something tomorrow.

Q. Do you find the prime minister sincere on this issue?

A. Whenever I've talked to him, I found him sincere. My feeling was he wanted to do it.

Q. But what stopped him?

A. This is what we have not been able to find out. This is our misfortune.

Q. Will it still help if Chandigarh is handed over to Punjab?

A. It will help a good deal. This is one of the things our opponents are saying. What did you get?

Q. What about the other issues, like the people still imprisoned from Operation Bluestar and the army deserters?

A. These are issues for the Centre. I have been telling them that most of the people (in Jodhpur jail) are innocent, even Santji (Longowal) used to say it. They were not waging war against the state or anything like that, they are innocent people who have never handled a gun, who don't know how to pull a trigger. They are not releasing them on bail. Normally even in murder cases bail is not denied after so long.

Q. And the army deserters...?

A. They should have been dealt with more leniently. They have been sentenced and sent to jail, many of them, they are suffering long terms of imprisonment.

Q. What would you like the Centre to do for the state?

A. I would like the Centre to hand over Chandigarh. Other clauses of the accord also have to be implemented, for instance, a second commission on other disputed areas between the two states.

Q. Are you prepared for any package deal with Haryana, everything, water and territory, in one go?

A. What can there be in the package? We can't go back on the accord.

Q. What steps will you take to stop the kar seva of the AISSF and the Damdami Taksal to fill up the Sutlej-Yamuna Link Canal?

A. We will see how they start doing it and devise our steps.

Q. But you are committed to the completion of the canal?

A. We are committed to the accord, and this is one of the provisions of the accord. Everything has to be implemented, our effort is that the accord is implemented.

Q. You seem to be still optimistic even though the situation on the ground is scary?

A. I have always been.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the ageing Baba Jogindar Singh, father of the late Jarnail Singh Bhindranwale, and leader of the discredited UAD.

The Baba's party, which failed miserably to organise a boycott of the September Assembly election, had receded further into obscurity after the AISSF and Damdami Taksal moved centre-stage by seizing control of the Akal Takht kar seva in January. Now the Chandigarh flare-up emboldened the wizened Baba sufficiently to declare that the five-member panthic committee set up by the AISSF and Taksal to oversee Sikh affairs had no locus standi other than the kar seva.

What put some life into the UAD was the utter mismanagement, first by the Punjab Police and then by the Chandigarh Administration, of Joginder Singh's march on the Union territory. The UAD announced the march a month ago and intelligence reports suggested that the Baba was making a last ditch effort to revitalise his nondescript party. Barnala sent clear instructions to make preventive arrests and foil their attempt to gherao the Assembly, but admitted later that "both Punjab Police and Chandigarh Administration faltered a bit".

So indeed did the Akali political leadership, which didn't seem to take the challenge seriously. The death of Bhindranwale's brother, Jagjit Singh Rode (see box), assured the presence of large numbers of mourners, many of whom were instantly drafted into the

SHIV SENA

Fighting Back

TIME was when Hindu interests in Punjab were synonymous with the Rashtriya Swayamsewak Sangh (RSS) and its associated political party, the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP). No longer. Today it is the Shiv Sena—no kin of Bal Thackarey's organisation of the same name in Maharashtra—which is militantly gearing itself to protect, as it claims, Hinduism and Hindu interests.

Ramakant Jalota, a goldsmith-turned-political organiser who heads one faction of the Shiv Sena (the rival faction is headed by Ludhiana-based businessman Jagdish Tangri), says: "We do not know our total membership, but it runs into lakhs. Every Hindu in Punjab is a member and all Hindus outside are sympathisers." Jalandhar-based income tax lawyer S.K. Sarwal, who is general secretary of the Jalota faction, is more modest in his claim, estimating the membership at around 80,000. But judging from the crowds it manages to collect and its other visible manifestations, these are probably exaggerations. Still, there's no denying that in the atmosphere of uncertainty and fear which grips the Hindus, any outfit claiming to act on their behalf would attract substantial sympathy. "The Hindus are getting organised because they feel the state is not protecting them," says a police officer in Chandigarh.

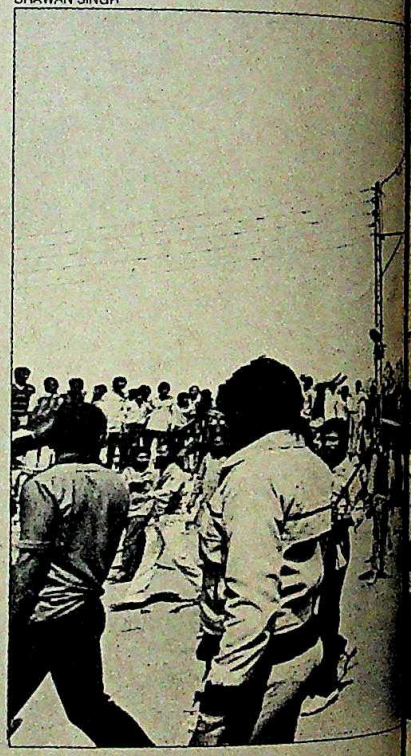
But what it lacks in solid membership, the Shiv Sena more than makes up in militancy and vicious invective. "We lack no funds to equip ourselves to teach them a lesson," thunders Jalota. Sarwal also makes no bones about his views: "We have been at the receiving end far too long. We cannot tolerate it any more. Communal clashes will surely take place and we shall definitely gain from them. We want to tell these fellows that we will brook no nonsense. We are preparing our youth and if need be we will strike." To this end, the Shiv Sena is collecting arms and money, and officials say that the organisation does not lack funds and weapons which, intelligence sources confirm, are being stockpiled.

Set up in 1981, the Shiv Sena draws its inspiration from Lord Shiva. And even as it heaps abuses on Sikhs, it apes many of their mannerisms and traditions quite unmindful of the fact that whereas the Sikh customs have some religious sanction, there is nothing in Hinduism which tells the Shiv Sena to do what it does. Where the Sikhs carry kirpans, the Shiv Senanis have taken to sporting miniature trishuls, encased in plastic sheaths, tied to their waistbands. Where the Sikhs carry swords, the members of the Shiv Sena carry swords and tall metal trishuls rather self-consciously. Public speakers tend to preface their diatribes with the cry 'Jai kara, bir Bajrangi' to which the audience replies with both hands raised, 'Har Har Mahadev', exactly as the Sikhs say 'Jo bole so nihal...Sat Sri Akal'.

More significantly, Shiv Sena patron, Pandit Kishor Chand, points out that the young Shiv Sena activist is initiated in a ritual in which he is sworn to the service of the religion—not unlike the manner in which a Sikh becomes an amritdhari. Chand, a retired police sub-inspector who lives in Amritsar, is seldom separated from his rifle and bandolier and like so many militant Hindus, believes that Sikhs are actually Hindus who have to be brought to heel.

"When we initiate a youth," says

BHAWAN SINGH



Shiv Sena volunteers taking food to Batala: garnering support

Chand, "we do it with a puja of Shankar Bhagwan. Amrit is taken from the idol, mixed with tulsi and honey and fed to the young man who is also anointed with a red tilak on his forehead. Finally he is given a trishul. We tell him that this is an inseparable part of you. And we make him take an oath that he will sacrifice himself for the nation's unity and for the Hindu religion."

Chand, who doesn't sound any different from Sikh leaders in his militancy, argues that they want no quarrel with them but if any violence is done to the Hindus they must retaliate. The police have failed to protect the Hindus, he feels, so they must do it themselves, and if march. The procession started out from near Moga in 34 trucks and was repeatedly stopped by the police who radioed Chandigarh for instructions.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The instructions, according to official sources, were confused and the police failed to act with sufficient firmness. At Ludhiana, the UAD even managed to get two of their imprisoned leaders released for the duration of the procession in return for promising to keep the peace. And all this even as two police companies were inducted from Punjab and 11 companies were airlifted from Jammu and Kashmir and Delhi on the morning the marchers reached Chandigarh.

What followed was confusion worse confounded. "Our understanding was that the procession would stop at the first barricade and a deputation led by Joginder Singh would hand over a memorandum to the Punjab chief minister," said Chandigarh police chief R.K.Ohri. But the moment the crowd reached the first barricade, less than a kilometre from the Assembly, it stormed through and the barricade collapsed like a house of cards. In a scene straight out of some historical film, hundreds of slogan-shouting, sword and lathi-wielding hordes charged out of the teargas and the defenders turned on their heels and fled.

The next barricade of double rows of barbed wire looked somewhat more invincible, with a stronger contingent of local police and paramilitary forces. It was they have to kill in self-defence, they commit no crime.

Such sentiments are no longer expressed in the privacy of people's homes. Two public meetings organised in Jalandhar last fortnight to drum up support for a threatened 1,000-strong march to liberate Batala town, which had been gheraoed by militant farmers, showed up the manner of functioning of the Shiv Sena. The meetings were held within the precincts of the city's renovated Devi Talab temple, on the lawns in front of the dharamshala, a part of which is occupied by the camping paramilitary forces.

As cash collection boxes do the rounds, speaker after speaker fulminates against the Government and the Sikhs, making no distinction between extremists and others. There is emotional talk of shedding blood and one swami dramatically bares his chest and declares that when bullets fly, the first chest to be hit will be his. Most of the invective is unprintable, some of it relatively mild. A Kapurthala lawyer declares that if Barnala wants peace, he and his father will have to come and bow before them. A schoolgirl exhorts her brothers in the Shiv Sena not to let their anger cool over what has happened in Batala. Jalota declares that their struggle is a matter of life and death.

The crowd isn't particularly disciplined and Sarwal has to keep asking the young men to sit down and observe the discipline of the Shiv Sena. When the Jalandhar district commissioner and Senior superintendent of police arrive, there is a sudden commotion and a delegation flanked by young men bare to the waist, garlands around their necks and trishuls in hand, marches up for a conference. At some distance from the temple, a conference is held to discuss the Shiv Sena's proposed march.

In spite of the hours of instigation at the public meetings, there is really no question of sending 1,000 volunteers—such a venture would require no fewer than 20 trucks and the Shiv Sena has only one. There is some talk of whether 11 or 21 volunteers should make the 90-minute drive. More important, the very people who talked only minutes earlier of facing police bullets fearlessly, now ask the officials for police escort to Batala and back.

The police at first say that the road to Batala is a national highway and anyone is free to come and go, but after a few minutes agree to escort one truck and a handful of volunteers to make a symbolic gesture of reaching supplies to Batala even though the siege was lifted that very morning. The expedition sets off along the national highway and returns, having handed over the foodstuffs to the Batala authorities, without actually getting to enter the curfew-bound town.

But the Shiv Sena is capable of doing much more, and its retaliatory mob actions in Batala and elsewhere have been largely responsible for the curfews that were in force in so many Punjab towns last fortnight. It is whispered in political circles that it also enjoys the patronage of frustrated politicians from diverse political parties, all seeking personal advantage in its activity. The BJP eyes the rise of the Shiv Sena with distaste. Says BJP leader Hit Abhilashi: "We have a difficult choice. We cannot champion only the Hindus as violence has hit both the communities. We have to keep the national interest in mind."

—SUMAN DUBEY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

here that Education Minister Sukhjinder Singh awaited the Baba's deputation. But when teargas, rubber bullets and lathis failed to halt the onslaught, the police—and Sukhjinder—ran for their lives. And the barricade would indeed have been run over by the mob had it not been for a magistrate who, after some hesitation, gave a Border Security Force (BSF) platoon commander the order to open fire.

Barnala explains away the Government's vacillation by saying that a "fairly important member of their party" had sent word to him that the procession would halt in Mohali on the outskirts of Chandigarh and send in a small delegation with a memorandum. "Perhaps the Baba himself didn't want all this to happen," said Barnala, "they were probably overpowered by the youth who were following them. They couldn't keep a check on the youth."

After the firing, it was the turn of the Central Reserve Police Force (CRPF) to run riot. Even as the crowd dispersed in disarray after two people lay dead and several injured, the CRPF chased them and beat them up mercilessly. Even the old were not spared forcing, ironically enough, the Punjab police to intervene.

But it isn't merely rising Sikh militancy which is threatening the fragile peace in Punjab. The battle has taken a sharply communal turn with Shiv Sena units consolidating themselves in scores of largely Hindu-dominated towns. "It has become communal now, the Hindus are retaliating," said a senior police officer in Amritsar. "But because they are not properly trained and guided, they are actually worsening the situation rather than helping it."

New tactics were unveiled at Batala—a growing industrial town with an investment of more than Rs 100 crore in foundries alone—when several thousand Sikh villagers, instigated by the AISSF, parked themselves on the eight roads leading into the city after rumours spread that Sikh youth had been killed and a gurudwara set alight in the city. The siege, during which the villagers refused to allow any food to enter the town, lasted almost a whole week, and kept the region tense and violence-bound: at least five people were killed by extremists on the outskirts of the town.

THE INCIDENT had its roots in an earlier event in February following the killing of a Shiv Sena activist in Jandiala near Amritsar on February 16. The Batala unit of the Shiv Sena gave a call for a bandh on February 19 in protest and forcibly began to shut shops. The police say that some Sikh boys from the surrounding countryside, in town to attend college, were roughed up and there was large-scale arson and clashes which were controlled only when the police opened fire, killing four young men.

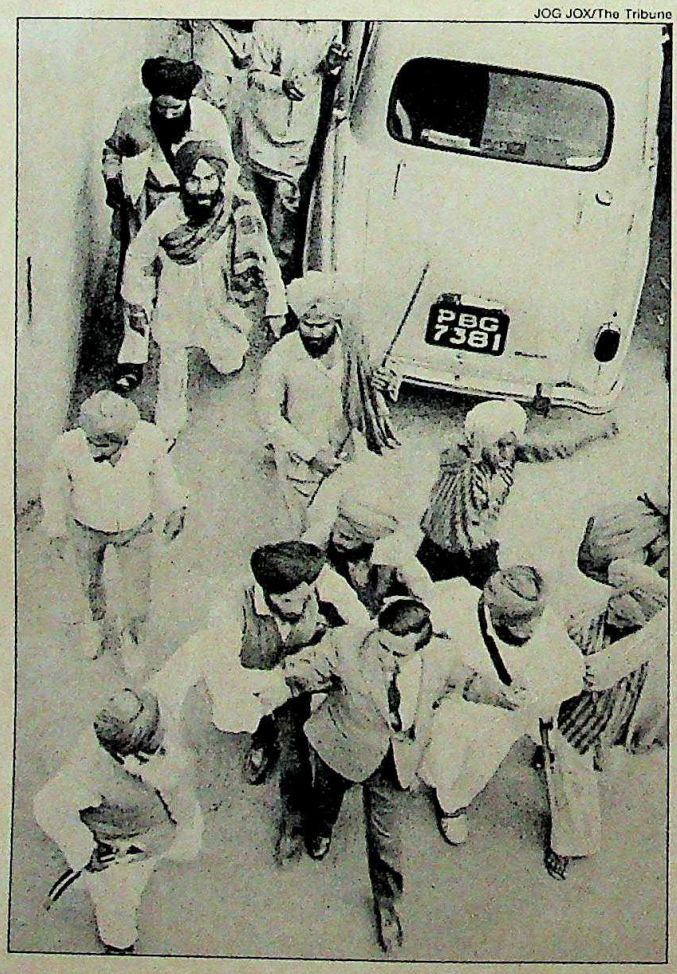
The town was under curfew for six days. Then, as is often the case, a trivial incident two weeks later punctured the uneasy peace that had come to prevail. On March 15, three inebriated young Sikh villagers got on a cycle-rickshaw to return home. Their rickshaw collided with another and the passengers of the two quarreled. The CRPF intervened and took away the three Sikh youths.

That, the authorities say, was provocation enough. Sikh youth began to gather in the gurudwara and Hindu boys in the town. There was some firing from the Shiv Sena crowd and two crude bombs went off, one hitting the gurudwara. The next day the AISSF sent word that they wanted to present a memorandum of protest, which the authorities duly accepted, but as the young men dispersed they looted a couple of shops, forcing the police to intervene yet again.

In the prevailing tension, some Shiv Sena activists allegedly attacked the city police station, set fire to two jeeps, damaged a mini-bus and a jeep, fired weapons and threw seven crude bombs one of which hit district SSP J.S. Birdi on the leg. The police again fired to disperse the crowd, killing one young man.

Police official being manhandled by AISSF men in Chandigarh

JOG JOX/The Tribune



On March 17, some AISSF activists allegedly raided the Lahore Gun House, ransacking it of 41 weapons (only about 10 were recovered in house to house searches) and some young men fired at a Sikh household, injuring five persons. Said Deputy Commissioner R.P.S. Pawar: "Both the sides are getting militant, that is why the trouble is not subsiding. No group wants to slow down."

Provocative though they were, these incidents had been brought under control with the clamping of curfew, but rumours of the killing of a granthi—when he had only been roughed up—led to entirely unexpected results. In an unprecedented move, villagers began to collect on the roads leading up to Batala and refused to allow milk and vegetables into the town. A tractor and office fit-

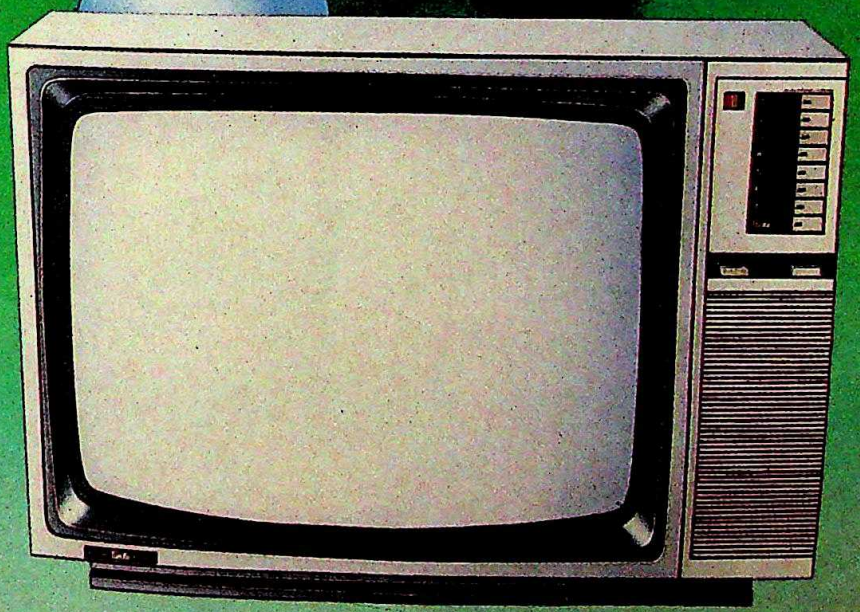
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Texla®

CP 201E

Colour Television



You do not have a better choice

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"It's a pity they can't share my Rasna!"

India's

Mudra:A:PI:2950

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The most envied colour TV within a stone's throw!

Now who'd want to hurl a stone at such a beautiful TV! Mentally, though, many might.

Some of your neighbours for instance. Who may have seen your new ONIDA. And envied its classy, futuristic looks, the most astounding true-to-life colour, and the sharpest picture they've ever seen on a TV screen! And have been deeply regretting the fact that they're stuck with colour TVs that are obviously a generation behind!

You may of course argue, your neighbours are the nicest lot. Hardly the type to stoop to violence no matter how much they envy your ONIDA TV. Well... thank heavens!

ONIDA With cordless remote

Neighbours' envy. Owners' pride.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

tings in some factories were also burnt in sporadic incidents. "We know we will suffer," declared villager Bhan Singh, when asked if the boycott wouldn't hurt the farmers themselves, "but when there's a fight people do suffer." In fact, no fewer than 45,000 workers come to Batala from the countryside to work in the foundries and its other industries—all of which lay inactive for the better part of March. Sukhwinder Singh Khalsa, of a nearby village, agitatedly explained that they would continue their siege for one week because, as he put it, the Shiv Sena had attacked the gurudwara and the CRPF had slain Sikh youth, and this kind of thing couldn't be allowed to happen.

In fact, the authorities escorted a group of Sikh villagers to the gurudwara to show that it was intact and even beamed pictures on Doordarshan. Several truckloads of supplies were officially escorted into the town and distributed during the relaxation of curfew. Deputy Inspector General of Police A.A.Siddiqui affirmed that the administration would take harsher action if the siege continued. In fact, after two days of discussions, the siege was lifted, partially at first and then wholly, but not before a new dimension—gherao or nakabandi—had made its appearance on the Punjab scene.

THE ANXIETY is that this new tactic will become part of the accepted strategy of Sikh militants. The more the Shiv Sena acts up, the harsher will be this kind of retaliation from the AISSF and vice versa. Though conflict is still confined to activists of the two sides, there is little doubt that violence could easily trip over to threaten the innocent. The fragility of the situation is demonstrated by the incident in Nakodar near Jalandhar in February when an accidental fire in a granthi's gurudwara room was rumoured to have been started by members of the Shiv Sena and gave birth to an agitation in which four AISSF activists were killed in police firing. Said Siddiqui: "The situation is so explosive that any incident occurs and people give it a communal colour, and it gets aggravated."

The Government complains that its efforts at bringing the state under control are not appreciated. Barnala cites figures which show a decline in all forms of terrorist crime in Punjab between October 1, 1985, and March 9, 1986—the first five months of the Akali regime—compared with the same period in 1984-85. The only exception to this trend: murders rose to 52 from 27.

J.S. RODE

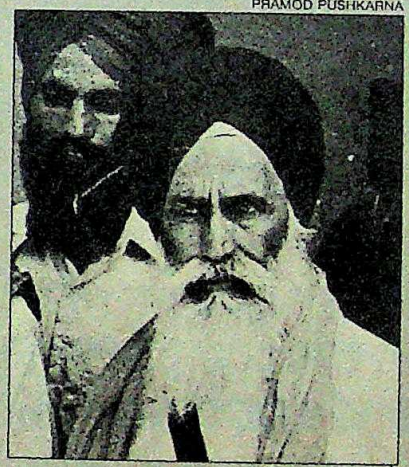
Post Mortem

THE DEATH of Jagjit Singh Rode, 56, general secretary of the United Akali Dal (UAD), in Faridkot last fortnight in suspicious circumstances has remained a mystery. Rode, the elder son of octogenarian UAD President Joginder Singh and brother of Jarnail Singh Bhindranwale, shot to limelight after Operation Bluestar. Joginder Singh declared: "It is the Government which has conspired to kill him." And the state Government, fearing that it would exacerbate the tension, instructed the police to ascertain the cause of death and announced a judicial inquiry into the incident. Said Chief Minister S.S. Barnala: "He was a known Akali leader and, apprehending mischief, I instructed the police to make every effort to find out the truth."

The only available facts were that Rode was supposed to be in Faridkot to attend a UAD meeting. And, at 7.30 a.m. Nishan Singh, the driver of the Ferozepore-Bhatinda train, reported that he saw one person striking the train and being crushed, 1 km before Bhatinda station. The police, who reached after some time, took two hours to identify the body and send it for post-mortem.

Joginder Singh recalled his own version. "At 4.30 a.m., when Jagjit was leaving for his farm, two men came to meet him on a motorcycle. He took them to his room, asking his daughter-in-law to make tea for three people. When she returned with the tea she did not find anyone in the room. But she thought they might have gone to the farm or to the house of his younger brother about half a kilometre away. Later, I was informed by the police around 11 a.m. that Jagjit had been run over by the train." Joginder Singh said he firmly believed that Rode had been taken to Kotkapura via Mudki and from there to Faridkot and that the accident had been stage-managed.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



Rode: mysterious death

The post-mortem report strongly suggests that there was no foul play. The team of five senior professors of the Faridkot Medical College under Dr J.S. Dalal, did not spell out the cause of the death as they wanted the viscera and histo-pathology reports before confirming the cause. But they came to some other conclusions:

- there were no marks of any external injury of any type on the body indicating a struggle;
- the stomach wash showed that there was no sign of poisoning;
- there were no marks on the body indicating that the body had been dragged; and,
- the body had been cut into two pieces from about two inches below the navel, the upper part was found lying between the tracks and the lower part on the left of the track.

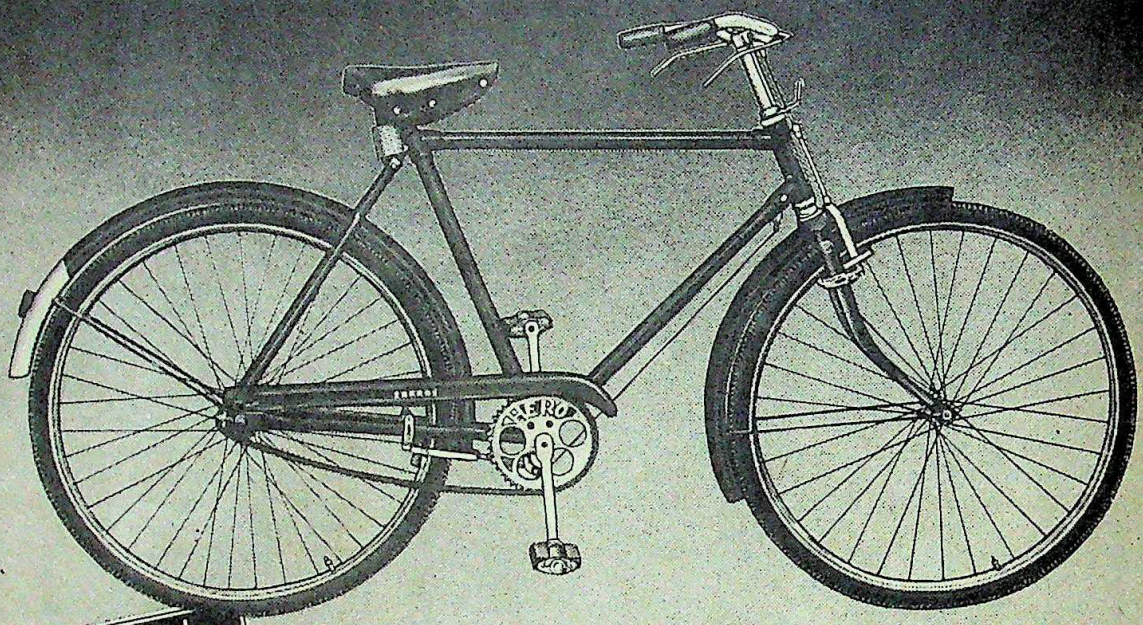
The police first thought it was a case of suicide and nearly announced it as so, but later termed it as an accident subject to the result of the post-mortem report. It is now apparent that Rode left his village early in the morning and was taken to the Moga-Baghapurana Road on a cycle by someone in his house. And from this point he boarded a bus or tempo to Faridkot. Rode possibly miscalculated the speed of the train and tried to cross the tracks. "His foot might have got entangled in the signal cables causing his fall on the track," a police official in Faridkot said. But the atmosphere in the state is so tense and tempers so frayed that even an accident can be painted in ominous colours.

—GOBIND THUKRAL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In India only Hero has the distinction of using all friction parts produced with ultra-modern cold forging technology



HERO JET Black
Yours for Rs. 485/-*
with Saddle and 1/4 Chain cover

Hero Royal Black Rs. 10/- extra
*Maximum recommended retail price.
Local taxes extra.

An embodiment of extra strength in the components for longer life and smoother running.

In India, Hero is the only bicycle with all friction parts shaped by the most advanced cold forging technology which goes a long way to make the components more durable and operationally smooth.

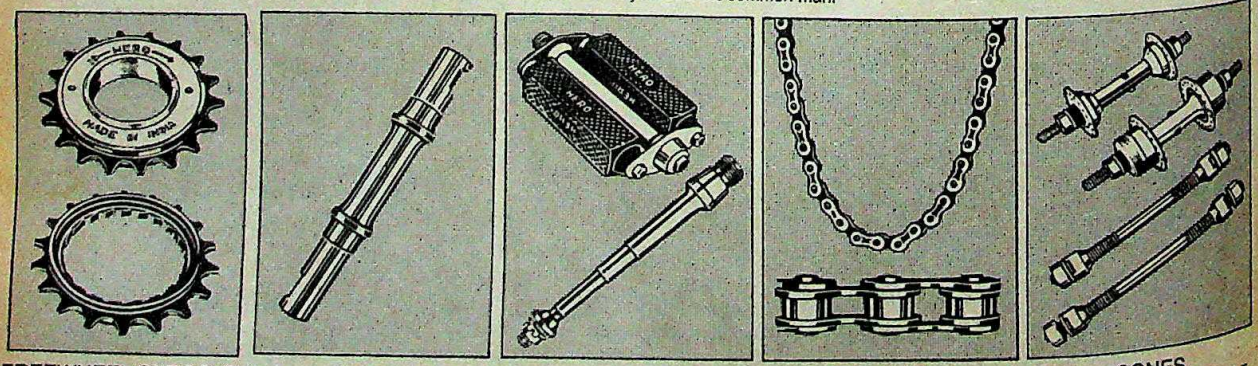
Deployment of most modern Glydo-electroplating equipment imparts the bike a glittering finish.

Likewise, latest Electrostatic Spray Painting plant ensures scratch resistance and glossy finish.

Whichever way you look at it, Hero has an edge over any other bicycle in the Indian market. No wonder, its style, strength, looks and range have captured the fancy of millions as the most economical mode of conveyance for the common man.

HERO

India's Largest Selling BICYCLE



FREEWHEEL SPROCKET | B.B. AXLE | PEDAL AXLE | CHAIN ROLLERS | CONES

The sprocket in freewheel; B.B. Axle; pedal axles in pedals; chain rollers in chain and cones in hub assembly are the most important parts and all these are cold forged.

HERO CYCLES PRIVATE LTD.,
LUDHIANA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

compared with a decline of all cases of violence (including murders) registered to 151 from 271.

An added problem is that it isn't possible to make out the difference between terrorist action and normal criminal activity. Newspaper reports, which tend to aggregate the statistics regardless of whether it is a terrorist crime, tend to paint the situation in worse colours than it is. To be sure, there is fear and apprehension, and the streets of most towns are deserted after dark. Shopkeepers, who are by and large Hindu, in particular tend to be anxious that their goods will be looted, their property damaged. But in the midst of all this, there are signs that Hindus and Sikhs continue to interact, to resist the divisions sought to be created, whether it is children or young men playing cricket in deserted streets, or adults transacting business, taking evening strolls together, simply sitting at tea-stalls chatting or thronging sports stadiums.

What has changed in Punjab is the growing militancy of the Sikh extremists and the stirrings of a reaction from militant Hindu youth. What has also changed is the nature of the Akali Government which, after giving the impression of vacillating, is beginning to act, to order the police into taking firm action in the face of provocation, not afraid to be firm if the occasion demands. The Centre's failure to implement the Punjab Accord, or meet the first of its many deadlines—the transfer of Chandigarh and the simultaneous handing over of Hindi-speaking areas to Haryana—weakened the hands of the Akali Government and strengthened the voice of those who argued that the accord was futile, and that the Centre would never yield.

THERE has, consequently, been an upsurge of sympathy for the anti-accord forces. Kahlon says that their movement is running away ahead of them and that they are not able to keep pace. Talking to INDIA TODAY at Khatkar Kalan, he declared: "The way it is going, the Barnala Government will fall of its own accord, there is no need for us to do anything." Barnala's other problem is the challenges he faces from within the Akali Dal. His efforts to win Prakash Singh Badal's support have not yet met with any success. Badal wants the number two position in the Cabinet, presently occupied by Finance Minister Balwant Singh; but Barnala, while offering him key portfolios, isn't quite prepared for that. The failure to implement the accord has sustained Badal since he was against trusting the Centre. Even so, Badal has been cultivating some Central leaders during his frequent visits to New Delhi. Says he: "The leaders in Delhi, as in the past, are not sincere. What is needed is a bold move to save Punjab and the country."

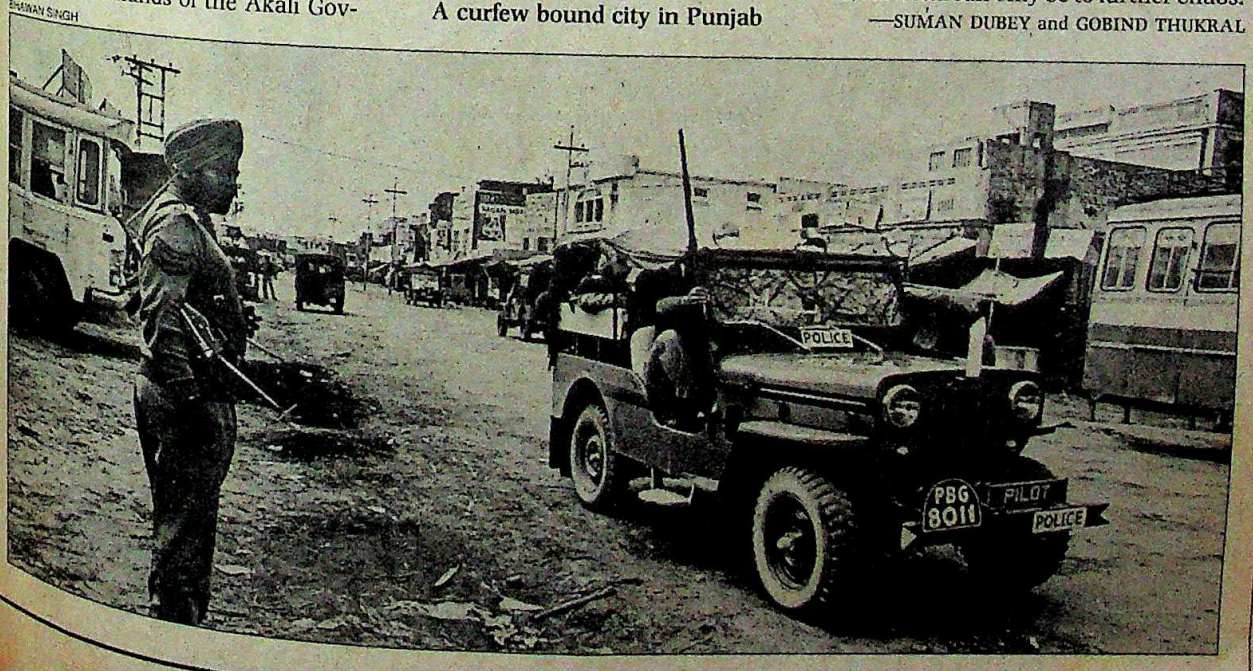
The real challenge, however, doesn't come from Badal as much as the ousted Shiromani Gurudwara Prabandhak Committee (SGPC) president Gurcharan Singh Tohra who now wears a saffron turban in place of the Akali blue. Tohra understands politics better than anyone else in the Akali camp and, apart from having a hold on the SGPC, commands the loyalty of some 18 MLA's. It is quite possible that he may be able to cause a major upset for the moderates in the coming SGPC elections, and if he is lying low at the moment it is only because Punjab is in a critical condition and he has yet to assess the Centre's stance.

In spite of the turmoil around him, Barnala gives the impression of being calm and believes he is in control. Of late, he has established a direct link with Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi and the two have been discussing Punjab without intermediaries carrying messages to and fro. And although he doesn't elaborate, he gives the impression of a man who expects some action sooner rather than later on the implementation of the accord.

Action, if it comes, won't be a moment too soon. For too long now there has been vacillation on the outstanding problems in Punjab and it helps no one to keep the Akali regime on a tight leash. If Barnala, whose government came to office with a convincing majority last September, continues to show that he means business, he deserves the unstinted backing of the Centre. For at the moment there is no alternative to him and there is no scope for the kind of political games that created so much turmoil in Jammu and Kashmir. With a determined and well-supported Barnala regime, Punjab has a fighting chance of emerging from its current bout of violence without lasting damage. Without it, the road can only be to further chaos.

—SUMAN DUBEY and GOBIND THUKRAL

BHAWAN SINGH



A curfew bound city in Punjab

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MAHARASHTRA

A Cautious Beginning

AS SOON as Shankarrao Bhaurao Chavan was sworn in as the chief minister of Maharashtra under a hastily-erected, flower-bedecked shamiana on the lawns of Bombay's Raj Bhavan, he made it clear that even if he had returned from New Delhi reluctantly he was determined to confront the expected challenge to his rule from the state's former political strongman, Vasantrao Patil. Nineteen ministers were sworn in along with Chavan in a two-tier ministry, but not one of them belonged to the four prosperous sugar belt districts of western Maharashtra, which has been the heartland of Maratha political domination.

Not even A.R. Antulay, who was chief minister in the early '80s, had sought to break the Maratha domination of the state's politics with such complete disregard for the political interests of the sugar lobby. So the composition of Chavan's Ministry immediately raised the question of what Vasantrao's 60-strong group of MLA's, who control a majority of the state's 82 cooperative sugar factories, would do in response. Inevitably, rumours began circulating that the leaders of the group were meeting to chalk out a strategy at the residence of former revenue and industry minister Sudhakarrao Naik, whom Patil had wanted as successor to Shivajirao Patil-Nilangekar. But another discarded minister from the group dismissed the reports by saying that "the only place where we are meeting is in the Assembly".

On the first day of a truncated, seven-day assembly session, Chavan made it clear to his MLA's that he would not recognise the existence of factions within the Congress Legislature Party (CLP). In any case, by keeping five vacancies in his cabinet, the new chief minister has shrewdly kept alive the hope among Patil's followers that some of them would be included in the ministry. Prospective dissidents thus remained cautious and tightlipped even in off-the-record conversations with journalists, content for the moment with echoing Patil's statement from Jaipur after Chavan's installation: "There is no question of any Congress(I) legislator in Maharashtra not extending his cooperation to the new chief minister."

Chavan being sworn in: disciplinarian

Nevertheless, the Rajasthan governor hinted in a newspaper interview of his concern about the threat to his long-

KONA PRABHAKAR RAO

Belated Exit

MAHARASHTRA Governor Kona Prabhakar Rao last fortnight became the second major victim of the marks scandal involving former chief minister Shivajirao Patil-Nilangekar's daughter Chandrakala. The Bombay Raj Bhavan confirmed reports that he had finally tendered his much clamoured for resignation. But like Nilangekar, the governor, who was also the Bombay University chancellor, kept denying till the end that he had played any role in the exam scandal. The resignation was officially stated to be on 'health grounds', as the 70-year-old Rao suffers from a heart ailment and emphysema.

The former governor first hit the headlines when he summoned the Bombay University registrar to Raj Bhavan, and in the presence of the state advocate-general, instructed him to change the university's advocate in the exam fraud case before the high court. Vice-Chancellor M.S. Gore resigned in protest against the chancellor's interference, and in the subsequent outcry, Rao charged the registrar with telling a lie. But his defence of his dubious role in protecting Nilangekar hardly carried any conviction and after S.B. Chavan was sworn in as the new chief minister, Rao became a virtual recluse in Raj Bhavan, with both opposition parties and students' unions demanding his resignation. Opposition leaders led by Sharad Pawar staged a walk-out in the state Assembly on the first day of the session after failing to force a discussion on the chancellor's role in the scandal, and organised a huge protest morcha in Bombay three days later. Rao had to also virtually abdicate his position as the chancellor of all the universities in the state by staying away from the convocations of the Pune and Marathwada agricultural universities on March 22 and 23 for fear of protests by students.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Prabhakar Rao: inglorious chapter

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NAMAS BHOJANI

ciplinarian

arashtra not to the new an governor

view of his o his long-distance stake in Maharashtra politics. While maintaining that he was "not bothered" about who was included in the ministry, he said that what was "more important" for him was Chavan's "attitude" towards his followers.

As the truncated assembly session drew to a close, it became clear that Patil's group was adopting a wait and watch policy towards the new Government. Any possibility of mobilising an immediate challenge to Chavan from within the Congress (I) CLP was undermined, interestingly enough, by the Congress(S) leader of the Opposition in the Assembly, Sharad Pawar. He and his 54 MLA's quickly expressed support for Chavan and ridiculed the idea that any of Patil's men would have the courage to leave the ruling party. Ultimately, the latest political crisis in Maharashtra may benefit Pawar the most, since his support becomes crucial for both the ruling and the dissident groups within the Congress(I) in the event of a showdown.

BUT MOST political observers agreed that Chavan faces no immediate threat from Patil's group. "S.B. Chavan's Government will definitely last at least one year," Loksatta editor Madhav Gadkari said. "Beyond that a lot will depend on how Chavan handles the party." But six years in New Delhi have brought about a change in Chavan—he is more careful in his approach and has realised the disadvantages of being rude to partymen. "It is true that Shankarrao is a more practical man now after his stint in Delhi," one of his senior ministers quietly acknowledged. Uncharacteristically Chavan, whose reputation as an excellent administrator is rivalled only by stories of his impatience with politicians, when questioned, on a felicitation trip to his home district Nanded during the weekend break of the Assembly session, about the journalists' tour of Mantralaya, quipped: " if I don't go then you will say that I behave like a headmaster."

However, Chavan has triggered off considerable resentment among Congress(I) MLA's by inducting two young ministers of state who are not members of either house. Minister of State for Finance, Srikant Jichkar, was defeated in the March 1985 assembly poll from a Nagpur constituency, while Minister of State for Revenue, Rohidas Patil of Dhule, could not even contest the elections. "If Delhi wants it we can accept a chief minister who is neither an MLA nor an MLC", an obviously disgruntled Congress legislator said, "but why should Shankarrao take two ministers who have also not been elected?" In fact, Chavan used his discretion to include many new faces in his ministry—of the 12 ministers of state, as many as eight have become ministers for the first time.

The new ministers could not be tested in the legislature as question hour was disallowed, and no major decisions could be taken by the new Government because of the Assembly session. However, Chavan's sanctioning of the prosecution of a government hospital doctor in Bombay charged with accepting a bribe of Rs 40,000 was seen by bureaucrats in Mantralaya as the first indication of the chief minister's promise of a clean administration for the state.

The more difficult decisions—like better management of the state's water resources, of which the sugarcane areas at present get an unduly large share—still await the new chief minister. But before that, Chavan must decide on whom to include from the sugar belt districts when he expands the Cabinet after the session. One of the names being mentioned frequently was that of Yeswantrao Mohite, who controls the state's second biggest cooperative sugar factory in Satara and is an implacable opponent of Vasantrao Patil. "If Mohite is taken into the Cabinet it will mean Shankarrao has declared war," said a close associate of Patil's. There is thus little doubt that though Chavan's return to the state as the fifth chief minister in six years has generated hopes of a clean and efficient administration, Patil's shadow over state politics still keeps alive doubts about the Government's long-term stability.

—M. RAHMAN

His continued presence in office also led to two unprecedented resolutions at the senate meetings of the Pune and Bombay universities. Both senates censured the chancellor for interfering in university affairs and eroding the autonomy and credibility of the institutions. It was also charged at the Pune University senate meeting that he had pressurised the vice-chancellor into getting his grandson admitted to a Master of Business Administration (MBA) course "through the back door".

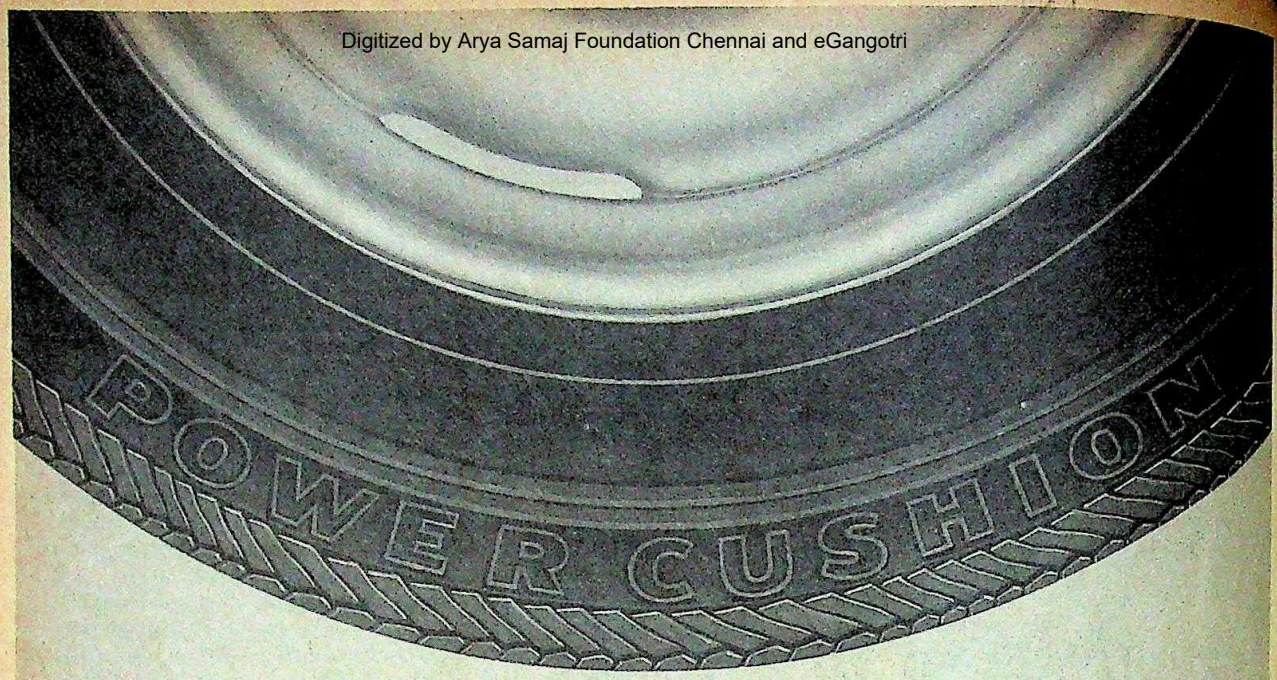
The brief tenure of Kona Prabhakar Rao as governor of Maharashtra (he took over on May 30 last year) is seen by politicians and bureaucrats as an inglorious chapter in the history of Bombay's Raj Bhavan, which has seen a succession of distinguished governors since the time of Vijaylakshmi Pandit and Sri Prakasa. "He was the worst governor the state has ever had," said a senior Congress(I) leader. "He and his large family—some say they number as many as 36—really brought down the high standards set in the past in Raj Bhavan."

Had he not resigned from office, Rao was faced with the prospect of many more skeletons being dragged out of his cupboard. On the day his resignation was announced, a Marathi newspaper reported that Chief Minister S.B. Chavan had sent a report to the Centre on the governor's functioning. Among other things, he was said to have interfered in the award of a contract for digging canals and bore wells in drought-stricken Maharashtra, promoting a contractor from his home state (Andhra Pradesh) against the bid by a Maharashtra company. Rumours were afloat in political circles of other deals in which government decisions were influenced by Rao, and it was being suggested that his role in the university scandal was a quid pro quo for all the benefits he had got for his family members from the Nilangekar government. If Rao protested his innocence as vehemently as Nilangekar, in the end he had as little choice as the former chief minister in retaining his credibility and staying on in office.

—M. RAHMAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



The strong grip of leadership Goodyear demonstrate leadership worldwide. In technology and research, innovation and quality, in popularity amongst users and performance on world race-tracks.

The largest earthmover tyre, the tyre that landed on the moon, the largest-selling car tyre in the world — each one is a Goodyear!

Right here in India Goodyear lead with Power Cushion. The tyre you have made an unquestioned leader. Well, that's Goodyear. The finest, the world over. As Power Cushion is in India.

And with all reason.

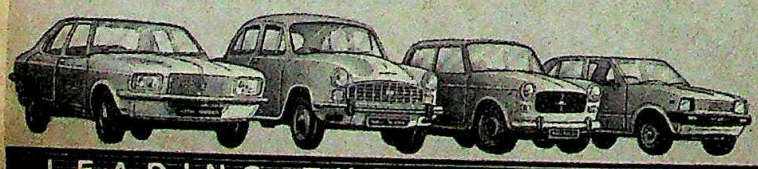
Deeper and Wider Tread : More rubber on the tread than any other car tyre. (Consumers testify to over 50,000 Kms. of non-skid safety).

Computer chips in for more mileage, more safety : Power Cushion's computer-perfected tread design ensures greater grip, more comfort, more safety as tread adjusts automatically to road profile.

Unique Arrow-Head Design : For a quicker start-stop, lower rolling resistance, more fuel saving.

'3-T' Nylon Casing : Resilient and abrasion-resistant casing that ensures more retreads.

That's Goodyear Power Cushion



GOODYEAR

LEADING THE WORLD IN TYRE TECHNOLOGY

Contract/GY-20/85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NAGALAND

Showdown

NAGALAND Chief Minister S.C. Jamir is used to trouble in various forms. But his latest problems are his most serious yet. Eight of his 22 ministerial colleagues resigned last fortnight as a sequel to police firing in Kohima on March 20 in which two teenaged students were killed.

Jamir dashed down to Delhi and after two rounds of meeting with Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi, told reporters that he had the party high command's "total support". A.K. Anthony, general secretary of the Congress(I) who looks after Nagaland affairs, also said that he was hopeful about sorting out matters. The formula for reconciliation that Delhi had in mind apparently involved persuading the ministers who had resigned to continue. But the dissidents, whose strength is close to half in the 40-member legislature party, are in a belligerent mood and there were indications last week that they would settle for nothing less than Jamir's resignation.

The ministers who resigned (top); and Jamir: uncertain future

Jamir's opponents certainly cannot be faulted for their timing—the firing on students seems to have generated considerable heat in the state (population: 800,000). Members of the Naga Students' Federation (NSF) had called a bandh on March 20 on two counts. In the first place, they were protesting against the expansion of the width of the disturbed areas from 5 km to 20 km from the international border. In the second, they opposed the induction of IPS officers in the state police. Ironically, the president of NSF, A. Aonak, is a ruling party member. According to the dissidents, the authorities severely mishandled the demonstrations and the police opened fire on the crowd without carefully considering their move.

If today the anger within the party has come out into the open, it is only to be expected in a government that was formed on the basis of defections after the November 1982 elections. Jamir himself crossed over to the Congress(I) only just before, but won the chief minister's chair when, following a tie with the opposition Naga National Democratic Party (NNDP)—each secured 24 seats in the 60-member house—he succeeded in engineering defections from the dozen independents to form the Government. At that time he had admitted: "Before the independents agreed to side with us they wanted to be assured that they would be made ministers." Indeed, today, in his ministry only half a dozen can claim to have been with the Congress(I) for any length of time.

It is part of the nature of Nagaland's unpredictable politics that T.A. Angami, president of the state unit until his death last month, had formerly been president of the NNDP and had joined the ruling party less than two years ago. Similarly, two of the three general secretaries of the Nagaland Congress(I) are newcomers to the party and so are both the joint secretaries.

And one of the persons most disgruntled was T. Ngullie, a veteran Congressman and finance minister until his recent resignation, who lost out in the race for chief ministership to Jamir in 1982. Ngullie told INDIA TODAY in a telephonic interview from Kohima: "Almost all the office-bearers are newcomers and most old-timers have been shunted out over the past year or so. The money of government programmes has not been reaching the people due to rampant corruption. If the present Government continues, the possibilities of our party winning the next elections are very remote."

Ngullie had given ample evidence of his resentment before finally resigning. In a letter to a friend, after meeting Rajiv, an anguished Ngullie wrote that he was "fed up of coming to Delhi". Angry at the inaccessibility of even the prime minister's aides, he wrote that "they will not even tell us whether we would be getting an appointment." So great was his resentment that he proposed to form a coalition government with the NNDP along with 17 Congress(I) MLA's who supported him. At that time he was persuaded to avoid taking this extreme step but under the current situation he may well finally decide to break with the party and carry out his plan.

The dissidents have levelled allegations of corruption against Jamir, his family members and supporters, and in particular against B. Panikar, his press secretary who has emerged as an extra-constitutional authority in the state. With seven legislators and the ministers who resigned arriving in Delhi by fortnight's end, the scene was precariously poised for the final showdown.

—SREEKANT KHANDEKAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KERALA

Arabian Affair

KERALA's so-called 'Kuwaiti scandal' has bored yet another hole in the leaky boat of the state's coalition government. Two Kuwaiti nationals, blacklisted by the Union Government for financing sectarian organisations, landed in Kerala without valid visas and toured Muslim-dominated districts in the company of two Muslim League MLA's. Carefully calculated leaks last fortnight soon brought the matter to public notice. But the state home minister's vehement denial of all knowledge of the black list and the suspension of four police officers—who had plainly admitted the Arabs under political pressure—only succeeded in making matters worse.

The Kuwaitis in question, Sheikh al-Sayeed Yusuf Syed Hashim al-Rifai and Anwar Yakub al-Rifai, were among five members of an Arab delegation which visited the Muslim majority district of Malappuram and other parts of north Kerala between January 31 and February 7. This, when their names had been listed in the prior reference category of the Union Government—which meant they held no visas—since they were found to have been involved in converting people to the Muslim faith and funding sectarian and communal organisations. They were met at Trivandrum International Airport, on their arrival from Dubai, by Muslim League MLA's P. K. Kakunjalikutty and A.Soopy and Food Minister U.A. Beeran's private secretary. They were put up at state guest-houses, travelled in vehicles provided by the Tourism Department and were lavishly entertained, also at state expense.

It was a major scandal since the Union Home Ministry had issued two circulars last year explicitly dubbing both "undesirable persons", not to be given entry visas without prior permission. Orders to this effect were issued to all police stations. But, strangely enough, the port registration officer (PRO) at Trivandrum Airport claimed to know nothing of the orders even though the records prove that his office received them. He granted them a resident permit valid for 72 hours, which was extended for another 72 hours. Obviously, influential politicians had a hand in it.

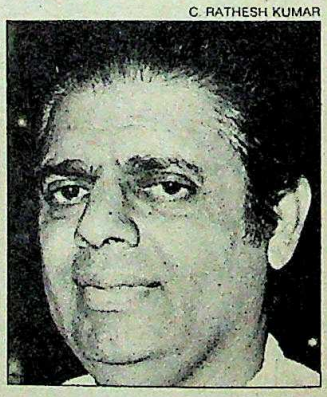
The motivating factor was the fact that Hashim al-Rifai is the chairman of the powerful World Muslim Minority Committee. According to a Muslim League MLA, he has been financing the religious, social and educational activities of various Muslim bodies in Kerala for some time, and therefore, the Malappuram District Sunni Association had invited him to visit the state.

The predictable fall-out was the loudly-voiced demand for the resignation of Industry Minister E.Ahamed, Home Minister Vayalar Ravi and Beeran. Opposition leader E.K.Nayanar vowed to "submit a memorandum to the prime minister" and also threatened a mass agitation on the issue after the current session of the Assembly. But the Government lost no time in producing scapegoats. Four police officers, including the PRO, were suspended and Chief Minister K. Karunakaran made the specious argument in the Assembly that the ministers could not be blamed since the warning circulars were only sent to officials! And Ravi made the even more incredible admission that "secret circulars issued by the Union Home Ministry are sent to the chief secretary who forwards it to the officials concerned. I came to know of the visit only through the newspapers".

KAMAL STUDIO

C. RATHESH KUMAR

C. RATHESH KUMAR



The controversial Kuwaitis in Kerala (top); Beeran (left); and Ahamed: scandal

Ahamed feigned ignorance about the doubtful status of the Kuwaitis. Said Ahamed: "We were not aware of any warning circulars. I will retire from public life if it is proved that my behaviour was anti-national." Said Beeran: "I would like to make it very clear that I did not know these people were in the prior reference category." And Kakunjalikutty self-righteously blamed the police for not having informed them: "We were never told about the ban on these two Kuwaitis. If they had told us about it we would have kept clear."

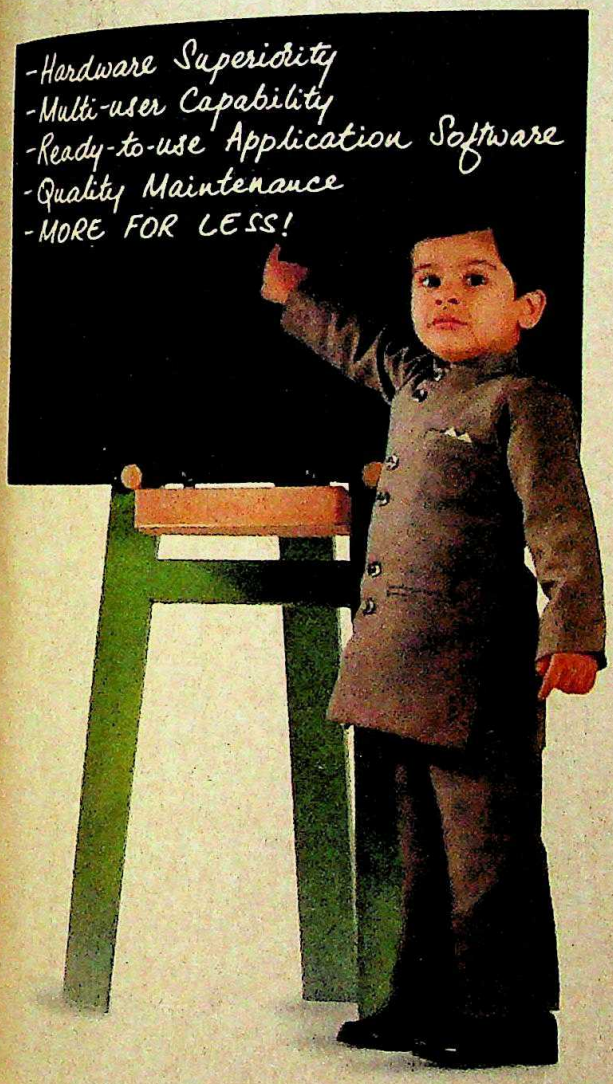
The chief minister has promised an inquiry to bring out the full facts of the case. But it is Ravi who is making political capital out of the affair. He has lobbied to remove DIG (Intelligence) A.V.Venkitachalam, said to be close to the chief minister, and has also promised a reshuffle of the police brass. And, in keeping with the time-honoured Kerala tradition, a petition for the dismissal of the ministry has been filed by an indignant T.V.Sasikumar of Cochin. But if the public reaction is any guide, Kerala's "Kuwait affair" is hardly likely to stir it's jaded political palate, accustomed as it is to scandal of one sort or another.

—SREEDHAR PILLAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MOST PCs ARE CREATED EQUAL.



THE WIPRO PC DARES TO DIFFER.

The biggest name in minicomputers now offers you a small business computer.

The WIPRO PC.

It comes with a unique package of benefits.

To begin with, it doesn't stop at being IBM PC compatible. So you can run the entire library of IBM PC software. From Lotus 1-2-3 to Wordstar... dBase III to Flight Simulator. As well as a large number of ready-to-use software packages designed specially for the Indian user. For aspects such as Financial Accounting, Sales Analysis, Order Processing and Inventory Control.

Then, apart from the single user MS-DOS Operating System that runs on the IBM PC, you get the multiuser DBOS†. As well as multi-terminal support. So, up to three people can use the same resources. To run different programs simultaneously.

You also get the multi-tasking Concurrent CP/M Operating System, which lets up to four programs run on the same terminal. Simultaneously.

What's more, it offers extra on-line storage up to 40 MB. An extra large 14" colour or monochrome display. 14 extra keys. Two extra terminals. Four extra IBM PC compatible slots. A whole lot of features that give it the edge!

And the fact that it's from WIPRO means you'll get nothing less than the very best as far as service support goes. Whether it's hardware maintenance or software implementation. Support that makes WIPRO the most trusted name in the computer business.

And even when it comes to price, this package is unbeatable. For Rs 48,000, you get a completely operational, ready-to-use WIPRO PC. Including 256 K Bytes of memory.

So come get your hands on the WIPRO PC. The only limit to how much it can do is your imagination.

The WIPRO PC/XT, which includes a 10 MB Winchester disk drive, 256 K Bytes of memory and a printer, is priced at Rs 70,000.

† Supported only on the WIPRO PC/XT.

To see, hear or know more about the WIPRO PC, call or write to:

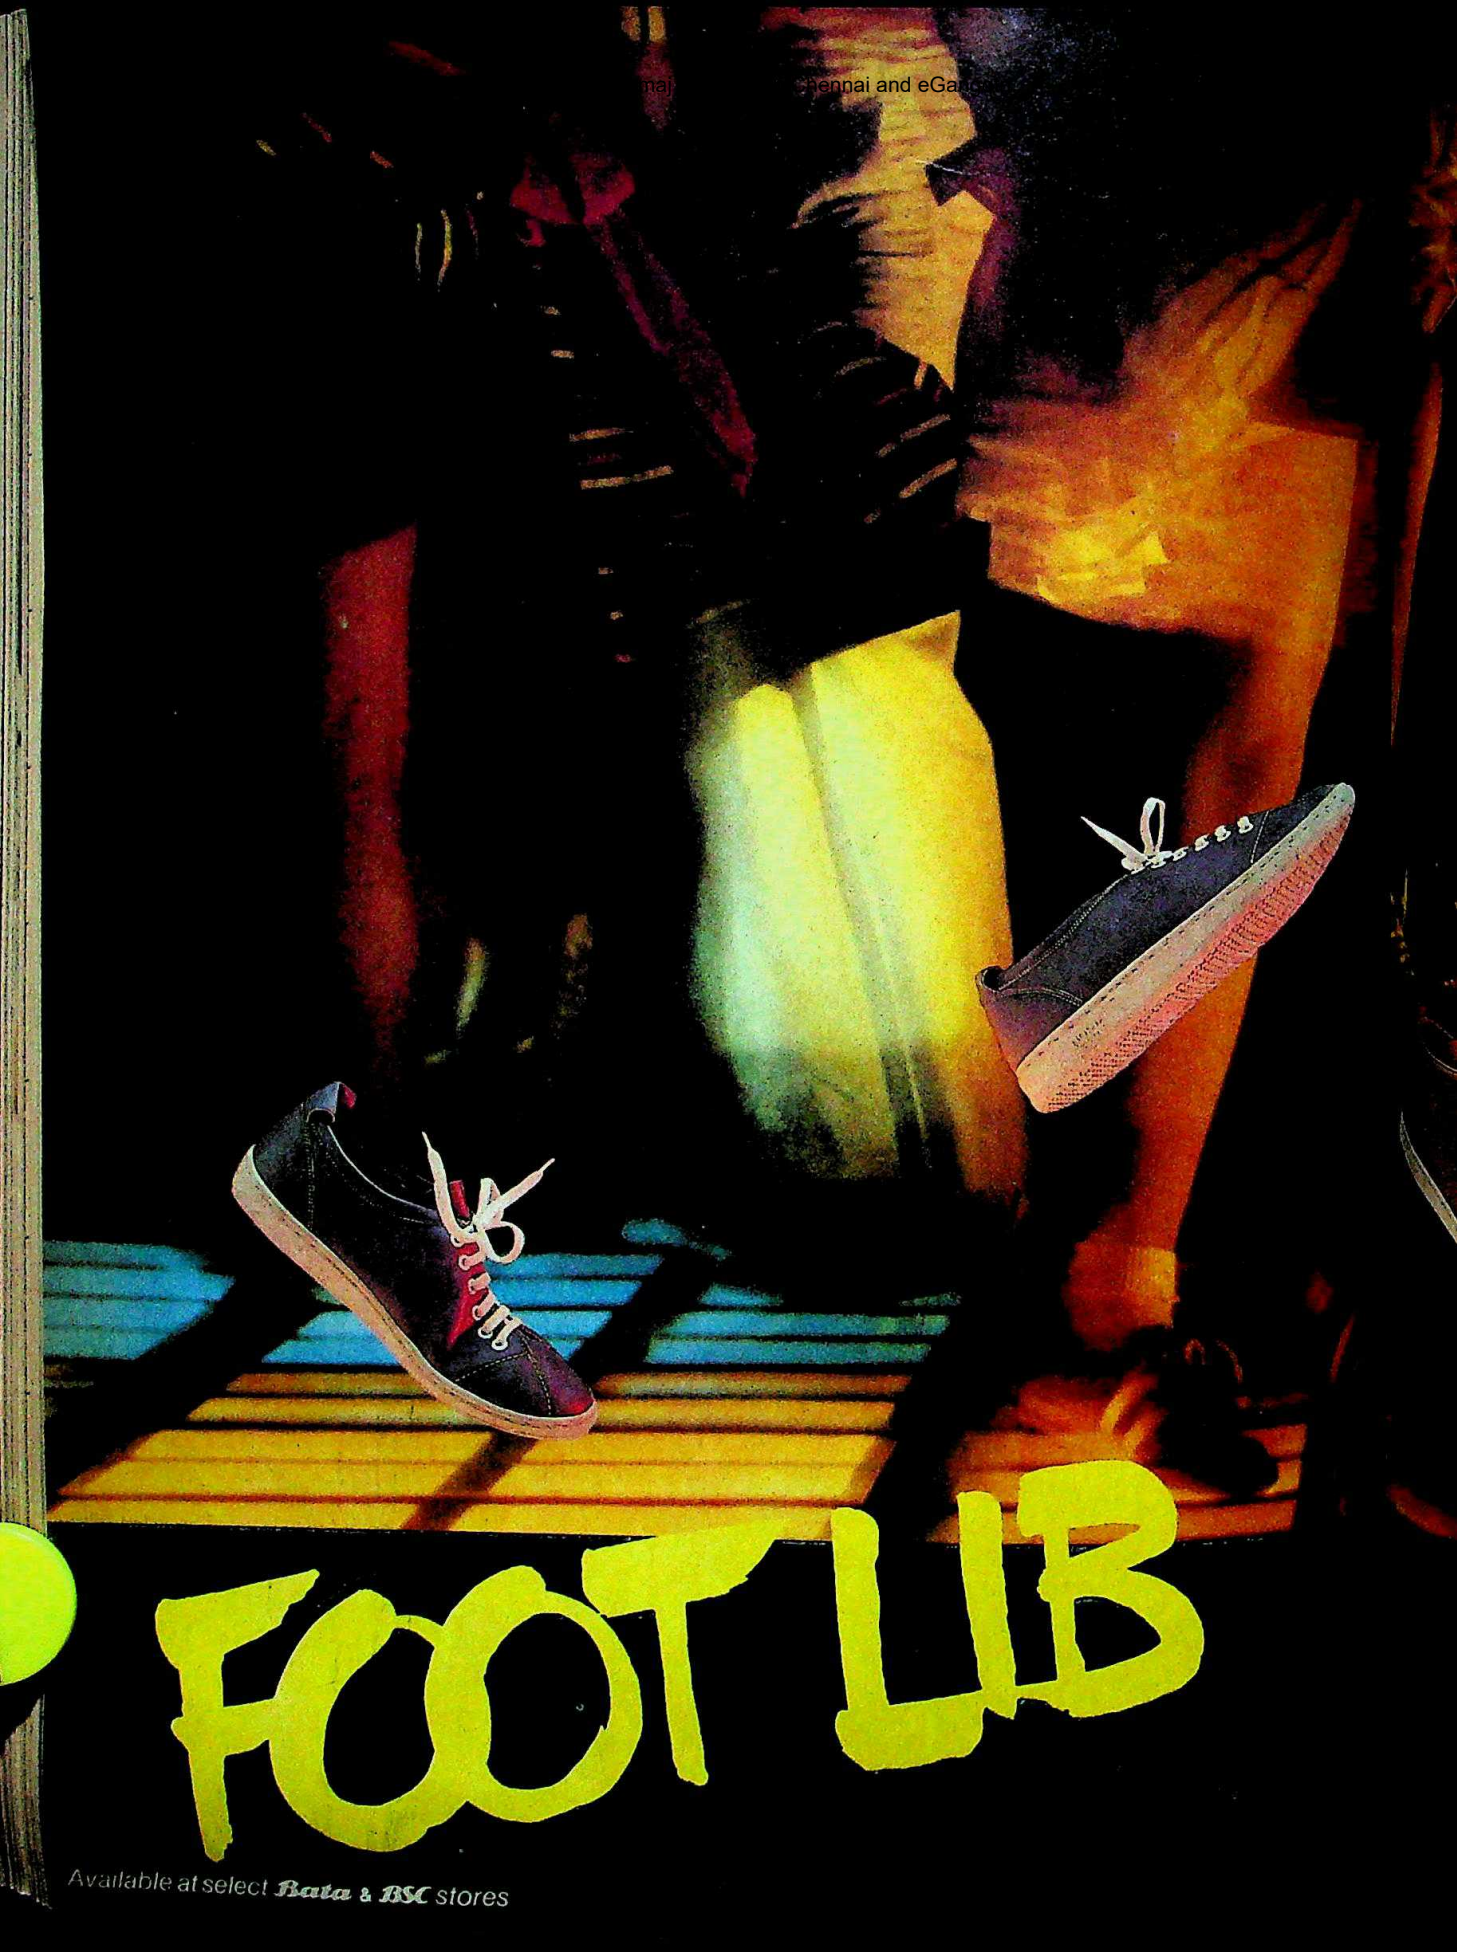
WIPRO Information Technology Ltd.
S B Towers
88 Mahatma Gandhi Road
Bangalore 560 001
Phone: 569622 Telex: 845-8356

WIPRO PC

IBM® PC, IBM are registered trademarks of International Business Machines Corporation.
MS-DOS is a registered trademark of Microsoft Corporation.
CP/M is a registered trademark of Digital Research Inc.

A great deal more. For a good deal less.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar



FOOT LIB
Available at select Bata & BSC stores

Arya S eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

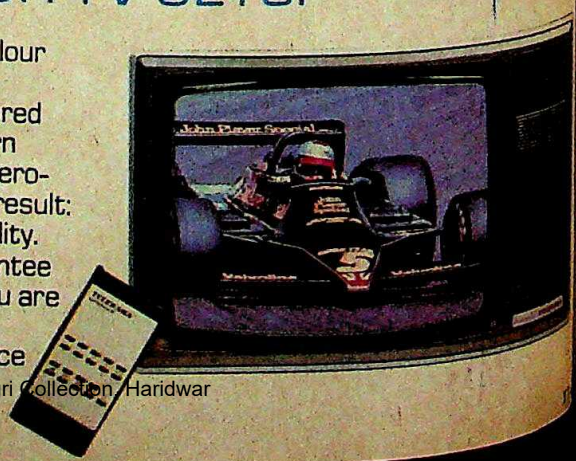
A NEW RANGE OF WORLD CLASS COLOUR TV SETS.

And that too at wonderful value for money. Choose from a range of hi-tech models including a set with wireless remote control.

Fully tropicalised with computer designed circuit, Telerama colour TVs incorporate the breakthrough-Hi-Gain colour technology. With built-in stabiliser and packed with all the features of advanced world class colour TV sets.

Each set is manufactured through the most modern technology by adopting zero-defect programme. The result: longer life, greater reliability.

With one year's guarantee including picture tube, you are assured of Telerama's prompt after-sales service and original spare parts for years to come.



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRANAB MUKHERJEE

Under Attack

FORMER finance minister Pranab Mukherjee is a battle-scarred veteran, accustomed to the slings and arrows of the political arena. But of late, Mukherjee and his family have been plagued with a bizarre series of incidents that has caught the pipe-smoking politician considerably off balance. Round-the-clock police security now surrounds his modest south Delhi residence, following the latest incident, an explosion on March 20 which partly damaged an outhouse. The CBI has instituted an inquiry to determine whether the blast was connected to the series of incidents which have had the Mukherjee family as its target since January.

"Strange things have been happening to us during the last few months," Shuvra Mukherjee, the former minister's wife confessed. "But until this explosion, I did not think there was a pattern to any of it. I thought they were all unrelated incidents but now I'm beginning to get frightened." She said that she and her family—rather than Pranab Mukherjee directly—had been the targets of most of the harassment. "Someone is trying to get to Mr Mukherjee by frightening his family. I don't know who these enemies are or what they want."

Said Mukherjee: "I am a political man and sometimes these things happen in politics. I am not scared for myself but my family is naturally worried. I do not know who is really responsible. All I can say is that the matter is now with the police and it is for the police to find out who is doing what."

The former minister was not at home when the blast occurred at around 9.45 p.m. "We were sitting in the living-room, my children, and some friends, and chatting when we heard this loud noise," said his wife. "We thought it had come from outside the house. We went out in the front and realised that it was in our own backyard, in the servant's bathroom. There was a lot of smoke coming out. And the roof had been blown out. We had no police guard until this happened."

Shuvra says that she now sees a possible connection between this incident and others that had happened previously. On January 21, she says, she had gone to visit an old friend in Ramakrishnapuram and parked her Maruti outside the house. When she came out of the house she saw a fire burning underneath her car. After she raised an alarm, and the fire was doused, it turned out that the blaze had been caused by a cloth which had been soaked in kerosene and set afire underneath the car's petrol tank.

"I thought this must have been an accident or the work of some crazy people," she said. "But what was really strange was that within 20 minutes of this, about 20 close friends of mine in Delhi and Calcutta, including my brother and sister, received anonymous telephone calls saying my car had been blasted. How do they know my friends' names and telephone numbers?"

One friend who received such a call is P. Dutta who lives in the Rajendra Nagar area of New Delhi. She said: "I received this call from a man who would not say who he was. All he would say was that Mrs Mukherjee's car has been blasted."

On March 3, Shuvra gave her Maruti to the Sadiq Nagar petrol pump for servicing and was to send her driver to pick it up at 3 p.m. But when the driver turned up to take the car, it was gone. Shuvra learnt that two men posing as her employees had gone to the station two hours earlier and driven off with the car. The car was found by the police in Mehrauli, the inside was doused with kerosene and portions of the seat-covers had been burnt.

Shuvra revealed that she has also been receiving anonymous letters. "Most of these letters sound the same. They say things like, 'your husband knows too much. He has been talking too much. He is visiting West Bengal too much and should stay only in Delhi. We are going to make you a widow.' We have been harassed before but never like this."

Whether the incidents are related or they are the result of the current infighting in the Congress(I) leadership in West Bengal, one thing is certain: the Government has surely taken them seriously. Soon after the incident, Mukherjee got a phone call from President Zail Singh. M.L. Fotedar also rang on behalf of the prime minister. Home Minister P.V. Narasimha Rao called on the Mukherjees and assured them that the inquiry would receive his personal attention. But till the culprits are caught, Mukherjee will be left guessing as to the identity of his enemies—and just how serious they are.

—INDERJIT BADHWAR

HARI OM GULATI

Pranab (inset) his wife and daughter; and (below) the spot where the blast took place: bizarre events

HARI OM GULATI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Since Its Launch, Finesse 4515 Has Outsold Every Other Copier.

In fact, 50% of our sales
are to satisfied customers
coming back for second helpings.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Since its launch in April 1984, Finesse 4515 has become the single largest selling plain paper copier. And with good reason.

State-of-the-art features: the technology factor.

Finesse 4515 offers everything a discerning buyer looks for in a copier. Modern features that reflect the world's most advanced electronics technology:

Reduction and enlargement. 100% edge-to-edge, corner to corner, non-void copying. Microcomputer-controlled, colour LCD panel for simple operation. Straight-line paper path with automatic paper alignment. Clamshell design for easy maintenance.

Getting perfect copies means leaving as little as possible to human judgement. So in Finesse 4515, exposure and toner density are controlled automatically. To ensure that originals are copied with perfect exposure, and for copies of consistently high quality.

Designing for longer life: the reliability factor.

Finesse 4515 has been designed and engineered for long-term reliability. Microchip circuits that live to a ripe old age. And very few damage-prone switches or controls — most of the adjustments are automatic, leaving little room for human error.

Critical components for Finesse 4515 are already being made right here in India. At HRL's modern manufacturing facilities. To Toshiba's ruthless tolerance specifications and exacting quality standards.

And one thing is certain: Your Finesse 4515 will never be out of action for want of spares and consumables.

90% average uptime: the service factor.

HRL's service centres are geared to answer your SOS in 24 hours. Across a network spanning 93 cities and towns.

The case history of every copier is maintained on a computer. If uptime falls below 90%, the computer sounds a Red Alert.

But HRL firmly believes in the old adage: prevention is better than cure. So whether you ask for it or not, your machine gets a head-to-toe checkup regularly.

So it's no surprise that Finesse 4515 has a track record of 90% average uptime.

A major reason why people who become our customers stay our customers.

The case for Finesse 4515 is clear.

It will be even more clear when you actually start using it.

In fact, 50% of Finesse 4515 sales are to satisfied customers placing repeat orders.

But right now, no one can blame you for being nervous.

No one can blame you for making the world's oldest consumer statement: "I'm looking for something reliable."

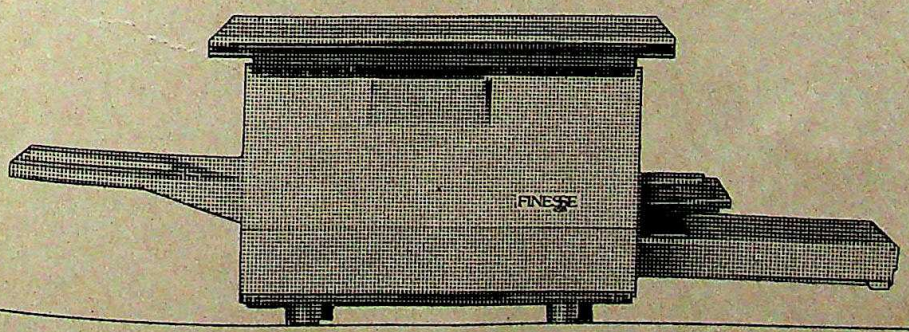
Look no further.

FINESSE 4515

PLAIN PAPER COPIER

In technical association with Toshiba Corporation, Japan.

India's largest selling copier.



HRL HINDUSTAN REPROGRAPHICS LIMITED

For further information, contact: Hindustan Reprographics Limited. Head Office: 5th Floor, Kundan House, 16, Nehru Place, New Delhi 110 019. Tel: 6432908, 6417094.

Branch Offices: Bombay: 74, Regent Chambers, Nariman Point, Bombay 400 021. Tel: 232764, 240888. Bangalore: 10/2, Queen's Road, Bangalore 560 052. Tel: 72494. New Delhi: 801, Deepali, 92, Nehru Place, New Delhi 110 019. Tel: 6418792, 6439209. Secunderabad: P 1-1-58/11, Sarojini Devi Road, Srinath Complex, Secunderabad 500 001. Tel: 75264. Madras: 8, Haddows Road, Jai Laxmi Estate, Madras 600 006. Tel: 476846, 474633. Calcutta: 11/1A Sarojini Naidu Sarani, Calcutta 700 017. Tel: 296720.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

HRL.3.86

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TAMIL NADU

The Fading Star

THE WHITE fur cap, the dark glasses and the shawl have for long been the most charismatic personal effects in Tamil Nadu. But suddenly, they have become fading symbols of another age. In the two years since Chief Minister M.G. Ramachandran's debilitating illness began, his health has at last begun to take its toll—in the political sense. That the former matinee idol's once-indestructible image has taken a serious battering was evident in the AIADMK's humiliating defeat, along with its electoral ally, the Congress (I), to its arch rival, the DMK, in last month's panchayat elections.

It provided proof, if any were needed, that for the first time, MGR's nine-year stranglehold over the state was starting to rapidly unravel. But that has not been the only tell-tale sign of his eroding popularity. The fact that he has been unable to speak either in public or in the Assembly over the last 16 months has raised serious questions about his ability to govern the state. Former state chief minister C.N.Annadurai's once stated that MGR only had to show his face in public and votes would automatically pour in. But that was well before the kidney transplant MGR underwent in a New York hospital that has literally left him speechless.

His performance in the state Assembly has presented a sorry spectacle. Says A.Rahman Khan, DMK MLA: "The chief minister was present in the Assembly only on a very few occasions during the last 16 months. And whenever he had anything important to convey, he appeared to stutter and mutter a few inaudible words to V.Nedunchezian (the leader of the house) who used to sit next to him. MGR would even gesticulate wildly at times to get his message across. And Nedunchezian would then tell the house what the chief minister wanted to say." There have also been occasions when he has failed to make himself understood. An assembly reporter recalled MGR struggling to convey something to the finance minister during an important discussion. After 15 agonising minutes, he gave up.

But speech is not the only impairment. Medical sources reveal that the chief minister had been complaining of chest pain, and his haemoglobin level had fallen alarmingly thanks to the drug, Cyclosporin, he has been taking to prevent rejection of his transplanted kidney. In fact, on the night of February 20, MGR had to be admitted to a private hospital in the city after his haemoglobin count fell to six when the normal count should have been between 12 and 14. A blood transfusion of packed cells was immediately administered and cardiologists advised a coronary angiogram to check if there were any blocks in the supply of blood to the myocardial muscles of the heart.

MGR's failing health has had its inevitable effect on the administration. On an average, around 50 files come to the chief minister's office every day for his perusal and signature but most of them never get attended to. There are 8,000-odd files still pending in the chief minister's office despite the relegation of the information and general administration portfolios to Veerappan. Admitted a state minister close to Veerappan: "The chief minister is not able to strain at all because of his health and therefore the state administration is practically paralysed."

As important a file as that relating to the agreement between the Tamil Nadu Electricity Board and the Neyveli Lignite Corporation, on power tariffs and computation of arrears, had been pending his approval for the last couple of months. Informed sources said the file was be retrieved and the chief minister's approval secured only after high-level intervention. There was another case of a minister who announced a public welfare scheme even before he got the chief minister's approval—the fact is the relevant file had been put up to MGR over a month earlier. Since there was no action, the minister took the risk of announcing the scheme and, fortunately, got his nod.

The worst sufferers of this delay have been departmental heads. None of them

Illustrations by AJIT NINAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

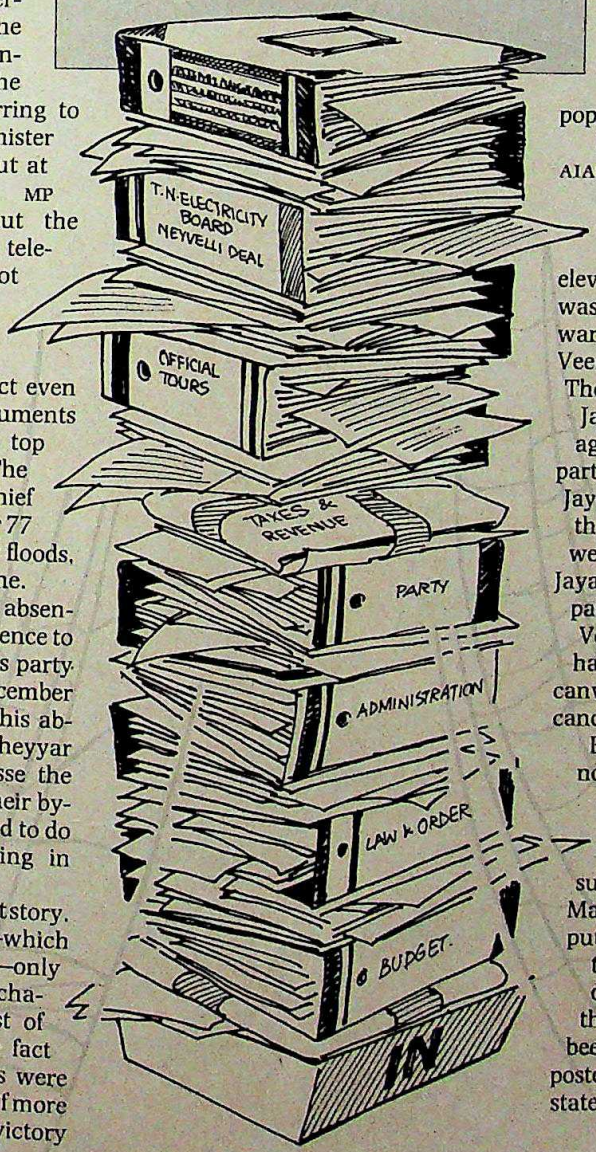
are permitted to leave the headquarters without MGR's permission. But the problem is that files pertaining to official tour programmes come back too late or never at all. And officers cannot dare take his permission for granted. There are stories doing the rounds of an officer who took that liberty and flew to Delhi to attend a crucial meeting. MGR saw the file on the morning the officer caught his flight and promptly wired him to return forthwith and also to pay the air fare both ways from his pocket!

PERHAPS the most embarrassing incident for the state Government was when the Union Minister of State for Agriculture, Yogendra Makwana, told Parliament last fortnight that he could not get in touch with the chief minister at 9 p.m.—when floods were devastating the state—since MGR's personal assistant had told him that the chief minister was asleep and "cannot be disturbed". Much later he clarified that he had been referring to Andhra Pradesh Chief Minister N.T.Rama Rao and not MGR, but at that moment, AIADMK MP P.Kolandaivelu sought to rebut the charge by claiming that both telephones at MGR's residence were not working in November last and were reconnected only in early January. But investigations reveal that both phones were intact even during the floods, only the instruments had been disconnected. Said a top official of Madras Telephones: "The lines were okay upto the chief minister's residence." In short, for 77 days when the state reeled under floods, MGR 'functioned' without a phone.

MGR's magic presence—or absence—has, till now, made little difference to his popularity at the hustings. His party had overwhelmingly won the December 1984 state assembly elections in his absentia. Last december, voters in Cheyyar in North Arcot stamped en masse the party's symbol of two leaves on their by-election ballot papers. All MGR had to do was show up at a local wedding in Cheyyar and the votes poured in.

But last month, it was a different story. The stunning win of the DMK—which swept 64 of 97 municipal seats—only served to confirm MGR's fading charisma. That it was a crucial test of popularity was evident from the fact that the municipal body elections were held for the first time in 16 years. Of more serious portent was that the DMK victory came about inspite of the overall success of the AIADMK's populist programmes like the noon meal scheme, pre-election promises of a massive project to house the weaker sections and much-ballyhooed announcements of re-introduction of prohibition next year—a sop for women of the weaker sections where alcoholism is a widespread problem. Adding salt to the party's wounds were the inroads made by the DMK into the backward southern districts of the state, now in the grip of severe drought.

MGR's failing health has had it's inevitable effect on the administration. At a conservative estimate, there are 8,000-odd files still pending in the chief minister's office.



The pa s ally in the state, the Congress(I), has not been slow in realising the import of this disturbing trend—it has already started to disengage itself from MGR by backing independents in two constituencies in last month's polls to the state legislative council although there were AIADMK candidates aplenty in the fray.

But excuses were not in short supply. Theorised state Agriculture Minister K. Kalimuthu: "These local body elections were not considered by the people to be a fight between MGR and Karunanidhi." And Food Minister S.Thirnavukarasu explained: "In this election, MGR did not even issue a statement appealing to the voters to vote for his party. Neither did our party's star campaigner, Jayalalitha, hit the hustings. Our revolutionary leader's popularity hasn't gone down a whit."

But the facts speak for themselves. AIADMK ministers were put in charge of the election campaign in specific districts and the haggling with the Congress(I) over tickets till the eleventh hour indicated that the party was serious enough. The vicious tug-of-war between the Jayalalitha and Veerappan factions has taken its own toll. The venom that the Veerappan and Jayalalitha factions are now spouting against each other also shows that the party has been stung by the defeat. The Jayalalitha camp attributes it entirely to the fact that 80 per cent of the tickets were cornered by Veerappan and Jayalalitha's absence from the poll campaign also added to the poor showing. Veerappan's followers, on the other hand, blame the defeat on the open canvassing Jayalalitha did for rebel candidates.

But these political manoevurings offer no answers to what is a painful political dilemma confronting Tamil Nadu. Can sympathy for an ailing chief minister be any longer a substitute for lack of performance? As Madras auto-rickshaw driver Murugan put it: "When the head itself is not thinking, what can all the followers do?" He did not elaborate further but the message was as clear as if it had been written in bold letters on the giant posters and cutouts that dominate the state's sprawling capital.

—S.H. VENKATRAMANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For tomorrow's world are you stuck with yesterday's technology?

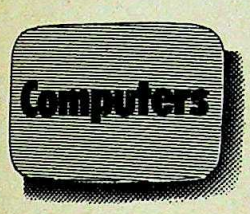
INTERNATIONAL DATA MANAGEMENT LTD.
BOMBAY: Express Towers, Nariman Point – 400 021. Tel: 2026020.Telex: 011-4702 IDMB IN.
CALCUTTA: 28, Camac Street – 700 016. Tel: 444841.Telex: 021-7153 IDMC IN.
MADRAS: 3, Moores Road – 600 006. Tel: 476612. Telex: 041- 6641 IDMM IN.

NEW DELHI: Nehru House, 4 Bahadurshah Zafar Marg – 110 002. Tel: 3312461.Telex: 031-61347 IDM
AHMEDABAD: H.K. House, Off Ashram Road – 380 009. Tel: 405886.
BANGALORE: 25/4, Lavelle Road – 560 001. Tel: 55757. Telex: 0845-8450.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

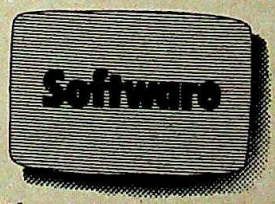
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Keep pace with the future with IDM. The Complete Computer Company.



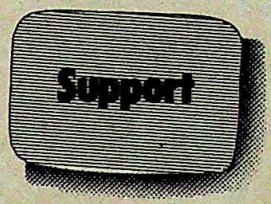
The world changes every time the cost of computing is brought down. By the end of the decade, the world would have changed again. Chips smaller than a thumbnail, with more than 4 million transistors packed into them, will enable complex computations to be done a lot more speedily and at a much reduced cost. Reliability will further improve, manifold. Business and Scientific applications that are a mere conjecture today will become a reality. Artificial intelligence will gain ground. Welcome to the new world.

And that world will be demanding. It will want superior performance. From us and from you.



One factor that's going to separate the winners from the losers will be the successful use of computers. And the ability to keep in touch with the fast changing technology.

A computer, however, is not just a piece of electronic hardware. It requires education and training of the people to help make best use of it. It requires instructions that tell it what to do: The Software. Good Software can vastly improve the usefulness of a computer, just as poor Software can shackle it.



To make sure that the computer is up and working, it is essential to have trained people, test-equipment and spare parts available as and when needed. A regular supply of good quality Printer Ribbons, Floppy Diskettes, etc. is also required for the smooth running of your computer.

It is also possible to use a computer without buying one. In a Computer Centre facility, one can get access to large, powerful computers, and professional help to make use of these. For the first-time computer-user, this means the ability to step into computerisation without the need for investments in equipment, space and staff. Using computers successfully is an art. It's a blend of so many different elements.

IDM knows this art. It is the only Computer Company in the country that offers you the complete range of products and services. When you let IDM, with its national support network, work for you, you have at your service the Complete Computer Company.

IDM

Computers. And much more.

FSA/IDM/3/86.A

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CPI

Hour of Reckoning

QUITE BELATEDLY, the Communist Party of India (CPI) seems to have realised that it has been steering the wrong course. After more than 60 years of rhetorical thundering and political posturing, the party has suddenly realised that its programmes and policies are outmoded and irrelevant. But the realisation seems to have come a bit too late in the day—at the party's 13th congress in Patna last fortnight.

Between deliberating on the state of the world and affairs of the party and blaming the CPI(M) for all the ills that plague the two, the party did a sharp about-turn to announce on the last day of the congress that it intended revamping its programmes and policies. To match the new mood, it decided to abandon the past and woo its CPI(M) rival in order to launch a joint action programme.

Though maturity seemed to have come to CPI with age, it also showed signs of increasing weakness and debilitation. In this moment of reckoning, the party was forced to do some serious soul-searching, mostly concerning its decreasing strength and the relevance and efficacy of its programmes. The answers were alarming. Between the party's last congress at Varanasi in 1982 and this one, it had succeeded in enrolling only a pathetic 11,282 members. The review report read out at the congress also revealed a disturbing drop-out rate: 20 per cent.

It did, however, try to pinpoint the reasons by saying that "the dropping out is not due to political reasons but the inability of the leadership at the local and district levels". But here too the report gave it the lie: the party's local committees, 1,926 in 1983, had dwindled to 1,842 in 1984 and to 1,805 in 1985. The number of the party's branches too had slumped from 25,125 in 1983 to 22,495 in 1984, increasing marginally to 23,607 in 1985. The report revealed that "a large number of party members are today either inactive or become active only at the time of elections or campaigns...a basic weakness is that a large part of the party is disoriented from mass work and militant mass and political struggles. It has become more oriented to bourgeois parliamentary institutions of all types."

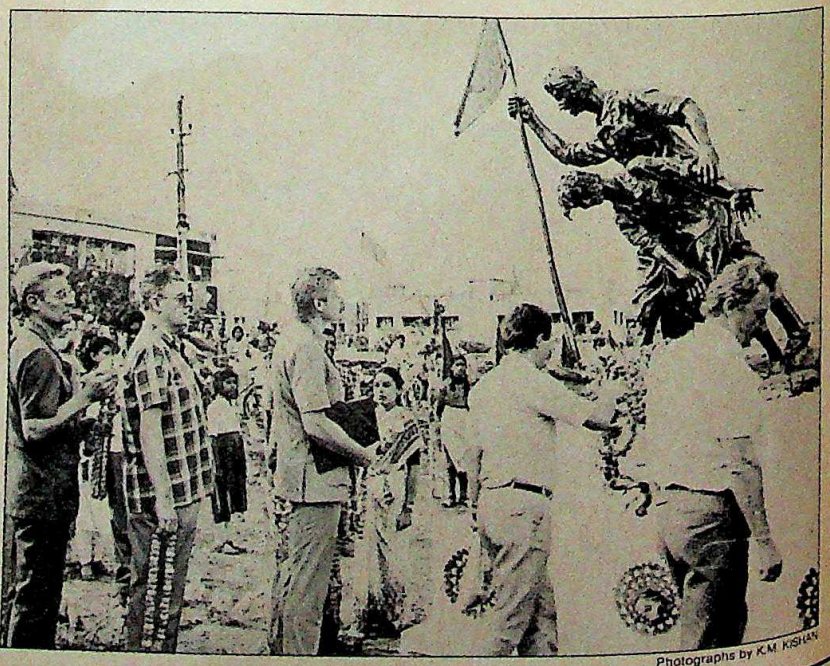
In fact, mass programmes were the overriding concern throughout the meet—a measure of the party's own reckoning of the masses' decreasing support. The leaders admitted that the party would be a dead organisation "unless it is moulded into a militant fighting party of the toiling masses".

Its final resolution declared: "As the problems of the rural poor and the Adivasis are aggravating, some extremist groups with Maoist leanings have stepped up their activities among these people. The party should take up the problems of these extremely poor people in a militant way so that these problems are solved and also fight the extremist forces."

But the CPI was still far from having resolved its inner conflicts. In fact, the entire congress was marked by indecision and uncertainty. That the party did not know its mind was borne out by the final resolution, which was amended and corrected to incorporate last-minute changes of mind. For instance, after blaming the CPI(M) of every ill in the country and the party, it suddenly decided that the Marxists were not so bad after all. The resolution apologetically said: "It would be better not to harp on the past but to concentrate on joint actions based on common understanding of the present situation and move forward."

Not only this, it vowed to "firmly defend and strengthen" the Left Front governments, while making "friendly criticism wherever necessary". These conciliatory gestures came as a logical corollary to the gradual softening of the party's attitude to the CPI(M).

The party's changing stances left a number of its members disillusioned and alienated. Many delegates at the congress wanted to censure the party leadership for its "unprincipled" participation in the three Opposition conclaves before 1984.



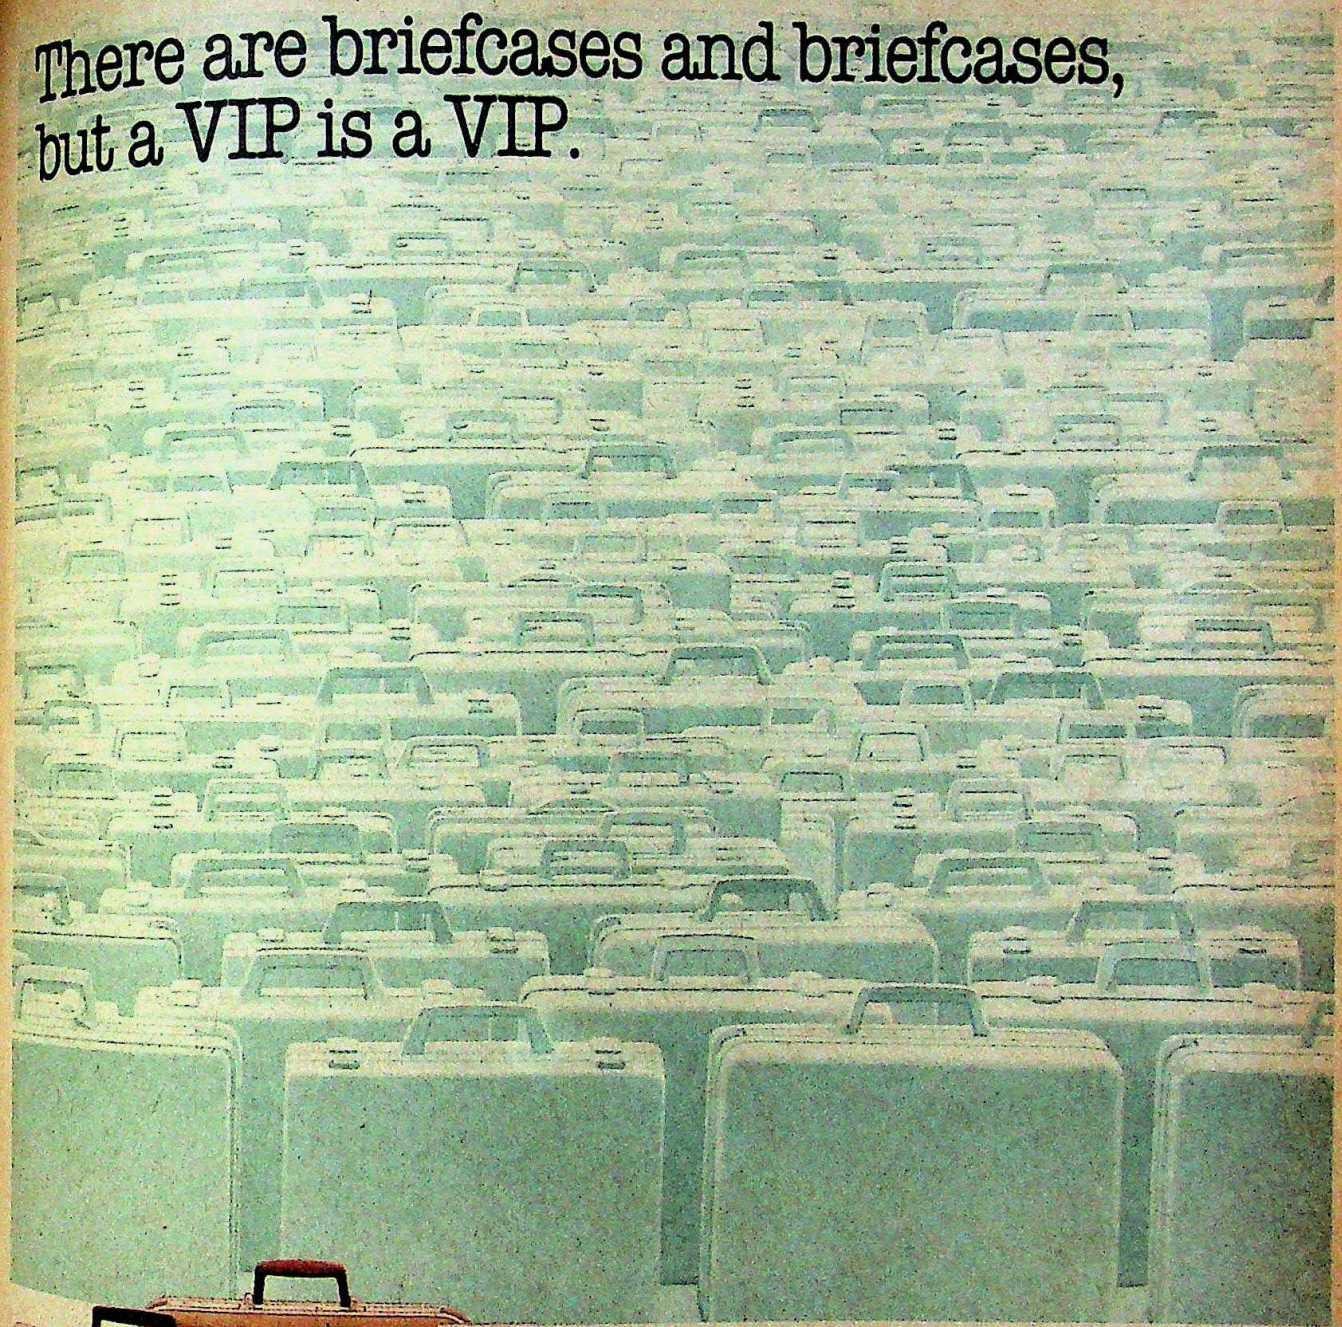
Party president at the congress (below right) Soviet delegates: soul searching

Photographs by K.M. KISHAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

There are briefcases and briefcases, but a VIP is a VIP.



In a world where you can get lost in the scenery, a VIP makes all the difference.

Because a VIP is in a class apart. The pioneer briefcase. Always first with the innovations: like the combination lock or the briefcase that won't open upside down and many others.

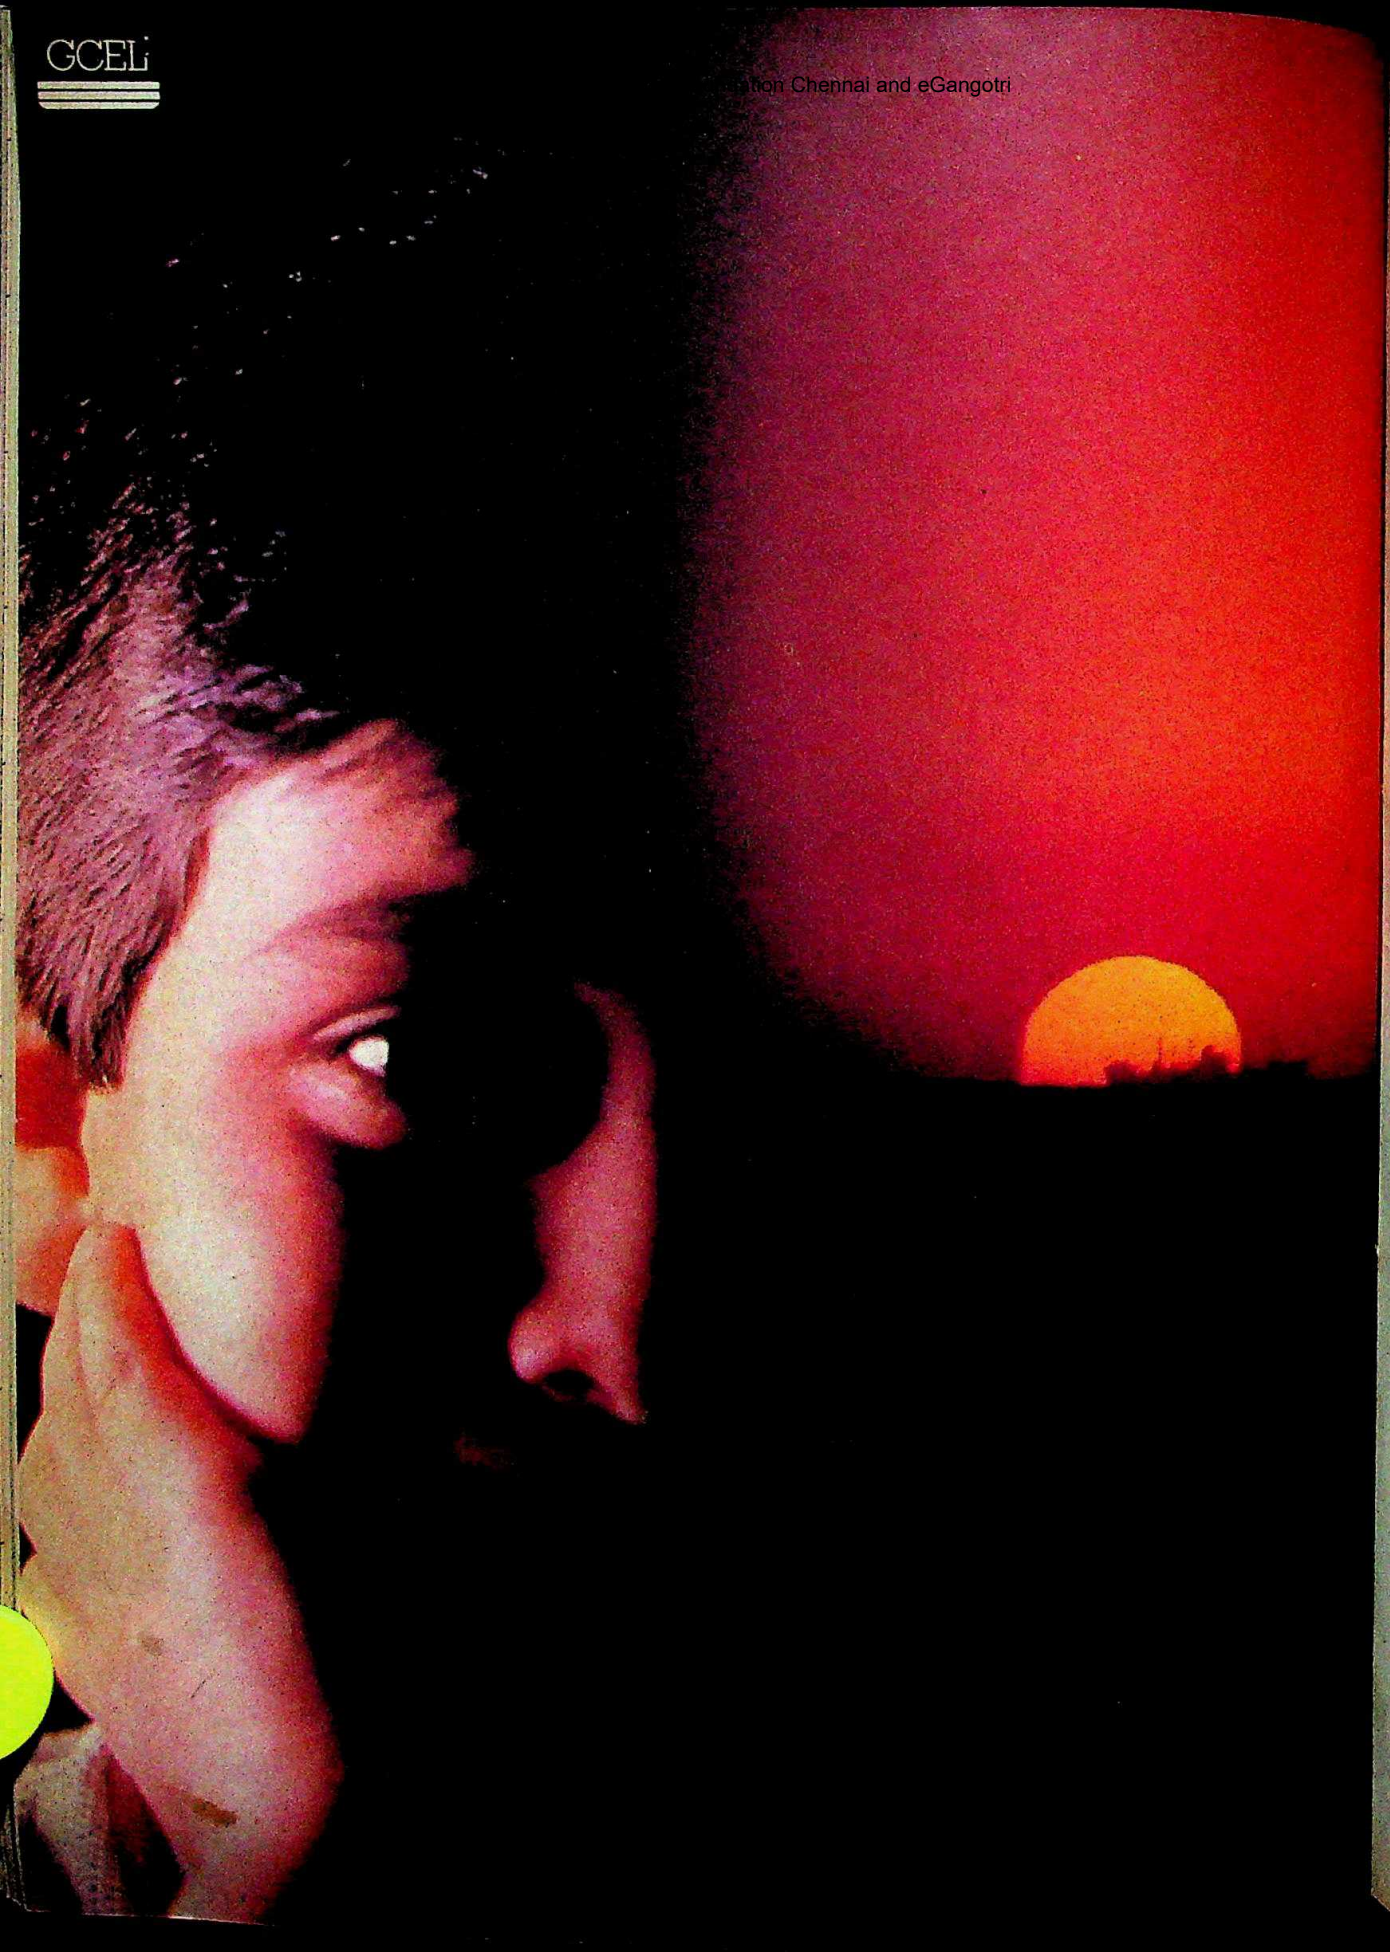
Don't just get yourself a briefcase. Get the VIP treatment.

VIP Briefcases
a VIP makes all the difference

BPL-2418

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

GCEL
...tion Chennai and eGangotri



Sometimes, the whole of India watches the same sunset.

Or, the Prime Minister talking to newsmen in Washington. Or, Kapil Dev sprinting to bowl at Wankhede Stadium. Or, Tabassum asking a cheeky question.

In the living rooms of India, the world has become more accessible. And events don't have to wait till the morning newspaper.

At GCEL, we find it a little gratifying. Because our Low Power Transmitters have made it possible for people in different parts of India to feel one with the rest of India. And the world.

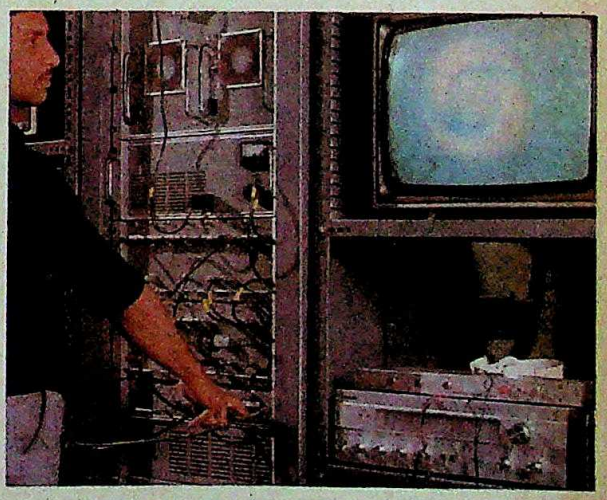
GCEL's Low Power Transmitters

And at GCEL, our know-how builds different kinds of LPTs. In three power ratings, for instance. Which means every community from a small village to a large metro can be served. Reliably. And with its state-of-the-art technology, the GCEL equipment demands minimum manpower. And today, there are 52 GCEL-built LPTs beaming round the country. Plus, the latest VLPTs that work unmanned. Each one built according to specific environ needs.

Because at GCEL, we mould and shape technology.

The Better Technology of GCEL

At Gujarat Communications and Electronics Ltd., our objectives are clear. And simple. Since 1975. That India's future is hi-tech. And every Indian should be part of it. Wherever he or she is in India. So at GCEL, we develop technology that's better and relevant. To help every Indian live a little better.



GCEL

Gujarat Communications & Electronics Ltd.
Regd. Office: Third Floor, Anurag Commercial Centre, Race Course Road, Baroda 390 005.

Live better. The better technology is here.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Mudra:A:GCEL:3002

Introducing Eveready Super with advanced Zinc Chloride technology Super charged for maximum power and life

Eveready presents a new generation of high technology Zinc Chloride batteries. New Eveready Super. Eveready Super's advanced technology is designed to give you unmatched performance in your power-hungry modern machines like two-in-one, cassette recorder, Walkman, electronic toy and photoflash. In your modern machines nothing outlasts Eveready Super.

New Eveready Super

Designed just for your modern machines.

EVEREADY

Rediffusion UC4

Similarly the political resolution was taken to pieces by the delegates who grilled the leadership on certain major points. The commission of 400 delegates entrusted with the task of studying the resolution, found their job all the more difficult with a total of 243 amendments being proposed of which 45 were eventually accepted. Later when it came in for adoption at the plenary session, not a single major amendment was forwarded.

The biggest hurdle in the way is obviously the growing dissension and differences within the party. C. Rajeshwara Rao, who has kept the party under his iron grip for 22 years, and was re-elected at the congress as general secretary for the sixth consecutive term, saw to it that all talk of younger leadership was squashed and dissident leaders sidelined. The party's 125-member national council was reconstituted with as many as 20 members being replaced, including S.G. Sardesai, who had earlier submitted an alternative party line. Well-known critics like Mohit Sen, H.K. Vyas and K.S. Shukla were unceremoniously dropped from the national executive.

But dissension was not the only worry of the leadership. More serious was the fear that the party may be isolated from the international communist scene altogether. As it turned out, the fear was not unfounded. At the 27th congress of the CPSU, both the CPI(M) and the Congress(I) had been invited together for the first time and Gorbachev had spent considerable time with Congress(I) Vice-President Arjun Singh.

While the CPSU established a party-to-party relationship with the Congress(I), recognising it as a social democratic party, Singh conveyed Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi's desire to work together with the two Indian communist parties. Soviet officials reportedly applied themselves to this job of influencing the collaboration. And it was this that shocked the CPI, because all along it had been joining hands with the rightists against Rajiv Gandhi's Government. The Kremlin message thus became clear: it wanted to be friends with New Delhi, even at the expense of the CPI.

It was perhaps because of these nagging fears that after the initial thunder, the congress lost its revolutionary tempo and ended almost in a whimper. On the face of it, the resolutions confirmed the party's commitment to chart a more effective course. But under the reassuring facade was the disturbing indication of the growing gap between its head and its limbs.

—FARZAND AHMED

Baba Amte (centre) in Delhi

BABA AMTE

New Crusade

HE LEANS on his stick for support, the silvery hair giving him a biblical aura. At 72, Murlidhar Devidas Amte—lawyer, messiah, and founder of Anandwan, a home for leprosy patients, has launched a new crusade—the Bharat Jodo Abhiyan or the Knit India March.

Disregarding his poor health, Baba Amte is on a march from Kanyakumari to Kashmir—traversing a distance of 5,042 km with 100 men and 16 women all under 35. His aim, very simply, is to re-infuse the spirit of national integration at a time of growing cynicism and communal strife. The marchers have already covered the southern states, Gujarat, Madhya Pradesh, Uttar Pradesh, and spent two days in Delhi en route to Punjab.

The idea of a unity march was originally conceived in 1973 by Yadunath Thate, a senior aide of Baba Amte. It was however, delayed due to Amte's indifferent health. But the November riots in Delhi and other parts of north India disturbed him so much that he resolved to undertake the march. "My conscience just could not allow me to sit quietly after this," said Baba. He emphasised the objective of the movement: "It aims at mobilising the buoyant and dynamic energies of the nation's youth in the service of eradicating social evils."

To those who accompany him on his march, it has become an inspiration to try and change the face of India. Concrete plans are already on the anvil. The Youth Emergency Service (YES) and the People United for Serving Humanity (PUSH) are two of the projects which aim at undertaking relief work at the grassroots level.

The enthusiasm which has gripped the marchers has been nothing short of infectious. "The response has been overwhelming," said Baba, recalling the vast and emotional crowds who welcomed them, forgetting all barriers of caste, religion or political affiliation. For those who saw in his venture a hint of political ambition he had a ready answer: "There is an epidemic of self-deception. I am building a culture, not a cult."

For the women cyclists, it was a new experience altogether. Said Dr Kalpana Parulekar: "It gives us a new sense of self-confidence that we are in no way lagging behind the men." And Vilas Pautankar, a teacher, sounded the plea of rural India when he said: "It is easier to establish rapport in villages than in cities."

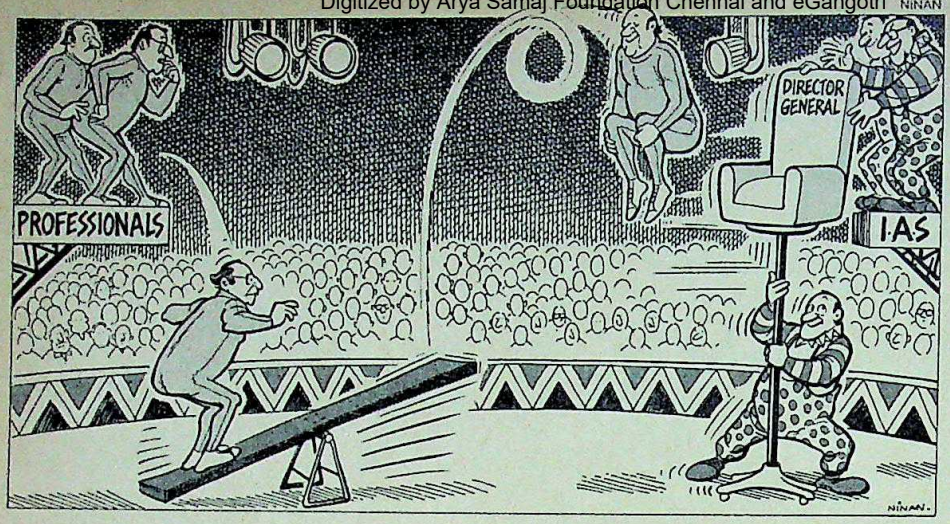
Of idealists there was no shortage. Pune student Babasaheb Suryavanshi has been crippled from birth, but he never thought twice about joining the march. For V.R. Nair and Nafisa, it was an inspired way to spend their honeymoon. Married just three weeks before Baba launched his Bharat Jodo Abhiyan, they decided to join it nevertheless.

However, there were some who were sceptical of the purpose of the march. Delhi's Khalsa College Principal M.S. Randhawa was vehement in his criticism: "If they want to promote national integration, why don't they go to Punjab where intensive care is needed?" But there was no doubting the fact that the march could not have been better timed. Baba Amte has built up an envious reputation as a sort of male counterpart of Mother Teresa. The march, for him, remains an ongoing task. As he says: "Like a miner, I am in search of a rich mineral deposit. Till I find it, the search will go on."

—SURAJEET DAS GUPTA
and NANDITA SARDANA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



BUREAUCRACY

Poaching Problems

RIVALRIES between departmental cadres and the Indian Administrative Service (IAS) are everyday fodder for the bureaucratic mill. But relations between the 'specialists' and 'generalists' have now sunk to a new low in several ministries, with IAS men increasingly muscling their way into posts normally held by departmental specialists.

Sidelined departmental officials and their associations are up in arms in at least two ministries (tourism and information & broadcasting), with officers from the IAS cadres grabbing the posts of director-general in both Doordarshan and All India Radio (AIR), and of additional director-general and several directors in the Department of Tourism. In all the cases, the claims of broadcasters and tourism professionals have been pushed aside.

The Tourism Officers' Association (TOA) has taken its case to court, while the seniormost professional in AIR has gone to the Central Administrative Tribunal and challenged the appointment of an IAS officer as AIR's director-general. The tussle in the Tourism Department, meanwhile, has already resulted in the resignation of a senior tourism official, Vibha Pandhi, after she was passed up for the post of additional director-general, which went to an IAS officer. And a few months ago, the TOA took legal action to prevent an IAS officer, Mrs B. Prasad, from being posted as the director of the tourism office in Geneva.

That's not all. K.N. Kudesia, who has spent 10 years as deputy director-general of tourism, is not even being considered for the director's job at the Indian Institute of Tourism and Travel Management (IITTM); only four IAS officers figure in the list prepared for final selection.

But the most glaring case of turf-grabbing by the IAS is in information & broadcasting, where the rules have been changed and changed yet again in a manner that has prevented the seniormost broadcaster from qualifying for the top spot of director-general, which has gone to an IAS officer.

Till four years ago, the director-generals of both AIR and Doordarshan were invariably professional broadcasters from the programme staff. In 1981, a new rule was introduced that a deputy director-general had to put in seven years in that rank before he could be made director-general. When the post of director-general fell vacant, the seniormost deputy director-general, A.R. Shinde, was automatically disqualified by the new rule, and an IAS joint secretary in the ministry, Suresh Mathur, was given additional charge of AIR. Then an intermediary post of additional director-general was created, and Shinde promoted to this.

But the rules were amended yet again to specify that an officer had to put in three years as additional director-general to qualify for the top spot. This disqualified Shinde a second time, and S.S. Verma, another IAS officer, came in as director-general. Verma moved out in February last year, and Mathur returned because, said the ministry, Shinde had not yet completed three years as additional director-general.

And once again contrary to the rules which specify that when an IAS officer occupies one director-general's slot, the other post in AIR should be filled through internal promotion, both jobs today are held by IAS men. Shinde has gone to the tribunal over this, and his case is due to come up for hearing shortly.

In the Department of Tourism, even deputy director-generals who have the required period of seven years in the grade for being promoted to the rank of additional director-general are being bypassed in favour of IAS officers. Thus, Vibha Pandhi resigned because she was not promoted despite having nine years in the grade, and Kudesia is not being considered for a higher grade despite having been deputy director-general for 10 years.

The proliferation of the IAS is quite spectacular; till 1982 there were only two IAS officers in tourism—the director-general and the director (administration). Now there are three times as many in this department. Information & Broadcasting Secretary Girish Mehra, however, rejected the charge of favouritism towards the IAS, and said: "I don't believe in labels. The best man should be selected for the job, whichever service he comes from." And senior officials of the Department of Personnel, which controls Central government cadres, say the provision for a qualifying period of service for promotions was in line with its guidelines circulated in May 1979. "The recruitment rules are not at fault, but cadre management by some ministries is not good," said a senior cadre manager in the Department of Personnel. He added that the promotion rules were in fact being re-framed for the new information & broadcasting service.

The Shinde case will soon prove whether this is really so. Khanna retires soon from Doordarshan and Shinde, now having completed the three years of qualifying service as additional director-general, will again be the main contender.

—RAMINDAR SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Light abounds in inspirations

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Featured here..our latest brass and bone china collection

And it takes a master artist to capture them for you, in crystal, silk, marble, wood, lacquerwork. It takes the refinement of the Kapoor Lamp Shade Company.

We pioneered the aesthetics of home & hotel lighting in this country. And to this day we remain India's largest exporters to the sophisticated western markets. For 35 years our exquisitely designed lampshades have illuminated the lives of patrons across three continents.

Whatever your budget, come to us. We'll breathe new life into your home.

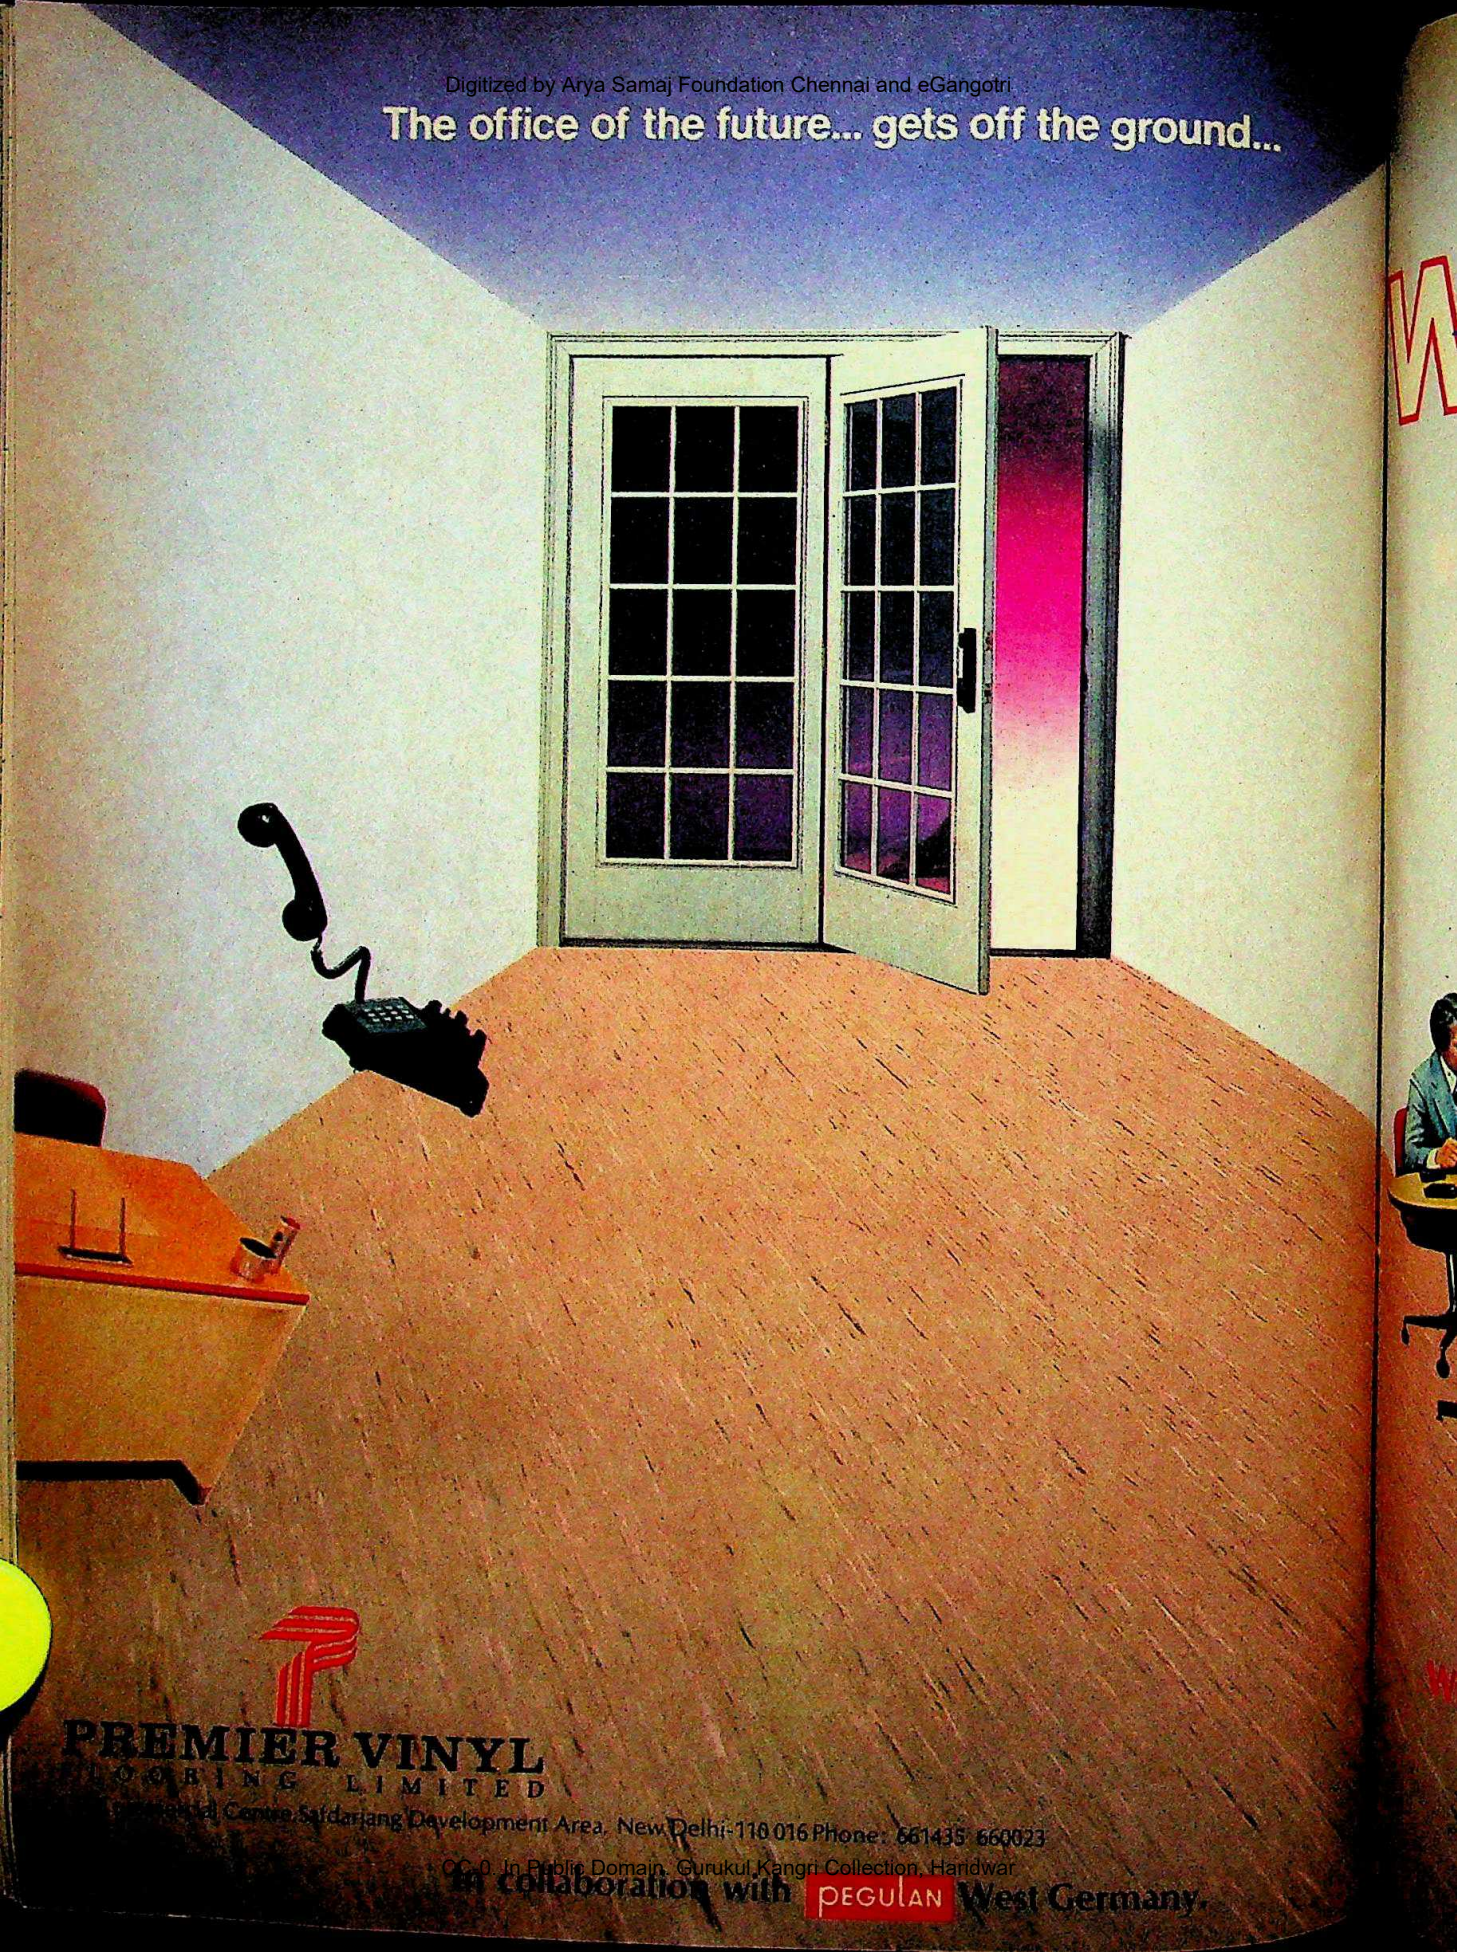
kapoor
LAMP SHADE CO.

Source of the most exclusive lamps, chandeliers and decorative accessories in India

Showrooms in New Delhi, Bombay, Madras, Bangalore, Hyderabad, Ahmedabad, Indore, Goa and Gangtok

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WONDERFLOOR

VINYL FLOORINGS

...for offices...banks...hospitals...stadiums... computer rooms...hotels...railways...schools...

The revolutionary new concept in flooring that brings about a magical transformation to any room.

Look down on splendour

Let your eyes rest on the beauty of Wonderfloor. Gaze at the subtle colour variations of simulated marble. Matchless in beauty... matching any decor.

Soft to tread on hard to dent

The magic of Wonderfloor... every floor needs it. Scratching and Scrubbing make no impression. Spills and Splashes leave no blemish. Smears and Stains vanish with a swish. Fire and Flame can't go far. Wonderfloor... it truly catches the eye. And its veneer of splendour fades not with time.

Roll out a cheerful welcome

Whenever Wonderfloor is rolled out, it says a cheerful welcome to all. Yes, Wonderfloor comes in tiles and 1.5 metre wide rolls of continuous lengths. Ready for laying out flat in a matter of hours, following the contours of even the oddest shaped rooms, rolling down stairs and fitting into corners. No unsightly strips and joints!

GEMINI. A tough flooring for normal traffic areas.
ROBUST. Extra tough flooring for heavy traffic areas.

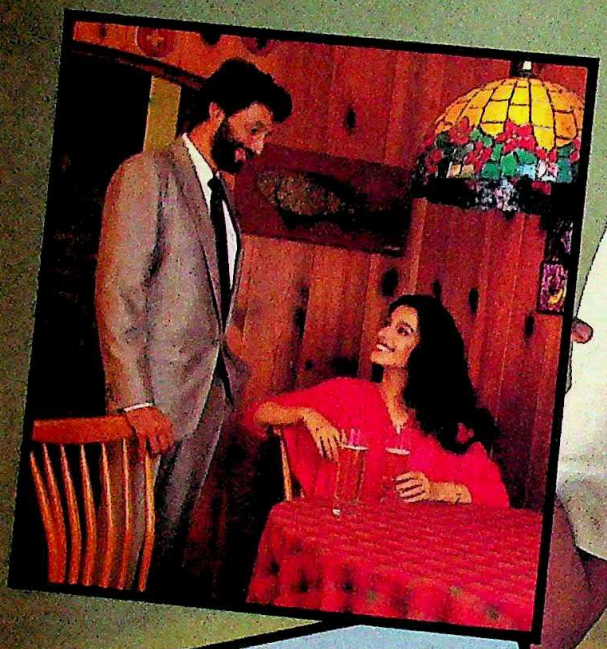
Available in 2 mm & 1.5 mm thicknesses.

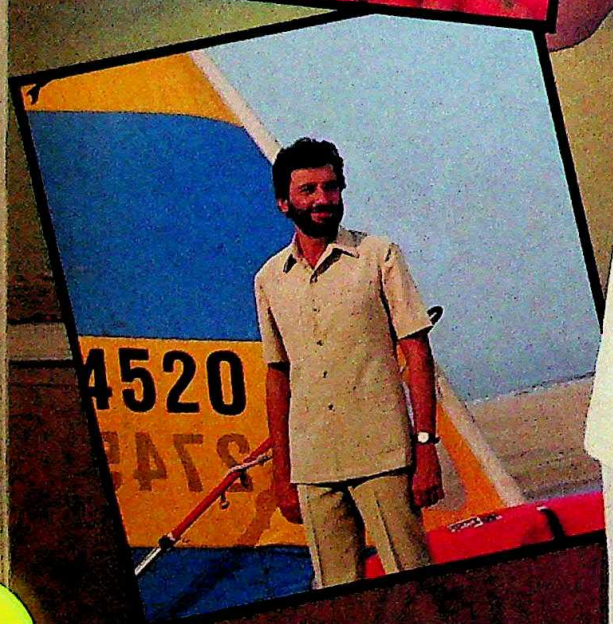
Wonderfloor... elegance at your feet

CC-0. Mumukshu Bhawan Varanasi Collection.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and

COOL, COMFORTABLE, ELEGANT... THE SUMMERWEAR FOR THE CONNOISSEUR





GOLD CREST. SNOW FLAKE. FLAMING GRACE. PALM BEACH. MONARCH. ELEGANCE

Unmistakably...

DIGJAM

...main. Gurukul K... ...tio...

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BIHAR

Rallying Cry

A WAVE upon wave of opposition-sponsored rallies hit Bihar last fortnight like the vanguard of an advancing army. And, judging by the reactions of the panic-stricken Congress (I) Chief Minister Bindeshwari Dubey, it appeared that the ruling party was really under siege.

Momentarily, the situation bore a strong resemblance to the mood in 1974 when opposition parties and students rallied under the banner unfurled by the late Jayaprakash Narayan and toured the rural areas to mobilise the masses in the first post-independence political revolution in the country. That last fortnight's rallies in Patna were impressive could not be doubted. Hardly had the familiar blood-red CPI hammer and sickle banners been removed after the party's congress on March 17, that they were replaced by a profusion of Janata Party flags and buntings to bid welcome to Chandra Shekhar, who trooped into the city's Gandhi Maidan after a 120-km long Kranti March from Sitabdiara (JP's birth-place) followed by fleets of luxury buses packed with supporters from eastern Uttar Pradesh and Bihar.

The rally saw a galaxy of party leaders, including Karnataka Chief Minister R.K.Hegde, railing against the Central Government for its neglect of the region and calling for a return to JP's ideals. Thundered party General Secretary George Fernandes: "We pledge today to launch an unceasing struggle to restore the ideals of the freedom movement reiterated at this maidan 12 years ago when the clarion call for total revolution was first given by JP."

Next to arrive was the Sampoorna Kranti March—comprising 15-odd political organisations launched a decade ago with JP's blessings—which also held a pledge-taking rally the next day in the adjacent Adalatganj maidan. Led by journalist Kuldip Nayar, the rally made it clear that nothing would change for the better unless Lok Shakti, the essence of the JP movement, was created. And the dust had hardly settled on the Gandhi Maidan when hordes of poor farmers and workers led by Lok Dal leader Karpoori Thakur streamed in, their set faces mirroring their determination to get their 88-point charter of demands accepted. Claimed state Lok Dal chief Ramjiwan Singh: "We don't want to compete with anybody but the rally is definitely a show of strength."

Shows of strength they certainly were. While Fernandes put the figure of those attending the Janata rally at about 50,000, state Lok Dal General Secretary P.K.Sinha claimed more because they drew purely the rural people. Practically every Janata leader attended the rally. But numbers apart, the Kranti March attracted a surprisingly good response throughout its course, with Chandra Shekhar holding impromptu public meetings in villages, reeling out statistics of poverty and neglect.

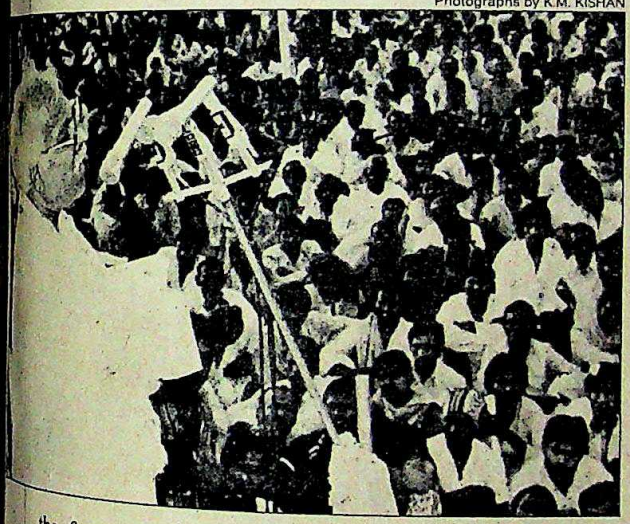
Clearly, Chandra Shekhar was out to recreate a political base for himself and the success was enough to force Dubey onto the defensive and promptly give his blessings to a Congress(I)-sponsored Bharat Bachao Manch. State Congress(I) Joint Secretary Indira Sinha, who toured universities and colleges for months on end, and also tried to mobilise people against the 'politics of padyatra' charged: "Frustrated opposition leaders are trying to plunge the country into chaos."

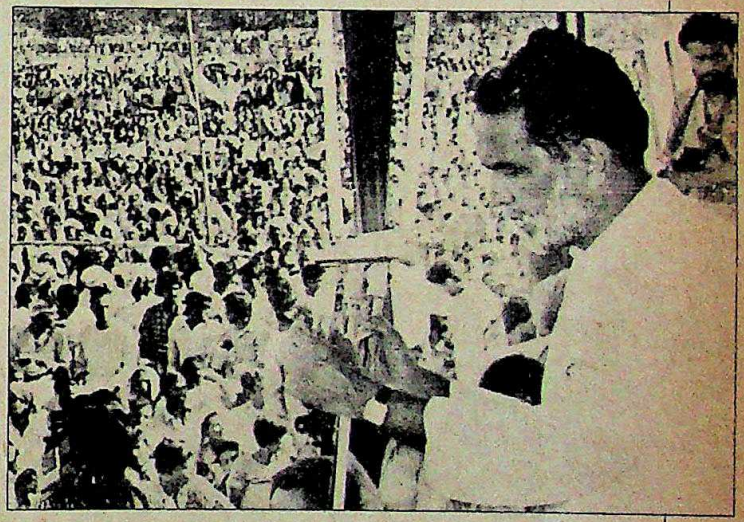
Having gauged the changing mood of the populace, the Opposition seems determined to seize the hour. Janata and Lok Dal leaders separately applied their minds to the task before them—the future course of the agitation. Janata Party leaders drew up an action plan beginning April 11 to June 25 when the 'Patna Declaration' took final shape and 'vikas sammelans' would be organised in each district in eastern Uttar Pradesh and Bihar. A 'save democracy' convention is also planned for June 25 to mark the declaration of the Emergency.

The Lok Dal plan was along similar lines. An estimated 1,000 party workers from Bihar are scheduled to converge on Delhi's Boat Club lawns on April 14, Dr Ambedkar's birthday, to join in a mass satyagraha. On May 7, the 'save democracy' front (including all opposition parties except the CPI) convened by Karpoori Thakur plans to organise a rail-rasta-roko to press for electoral reforms. On June 5, the day JP gave his call for 'total revolution', Lok Dal volunteers will offer dharnas at the block-level in some UP and Bihar districts and have similar demonstrations on June 25. The agitation is scheduled to enter its second phase on August 9, when the party plans an ambitious rail-air-road blockade.

But inevitable infighting cast a long shadow over whatever political mileage

Photographs by K.M. KISHAN





Lok Dal's Thakur (left) and Janata Party's Chandra Shekhar addressing Patna rallies: politics of padyatra

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

had been gained by the rallies. A section of the Janata leaders wanted Chandra Shekhar to step down as president. He also broadly hinted that he no longer wanted the presidentship and wanted to devote himself fully to "people's causes". Differences in the Lok Dal saw Thakur and Paswan at odds over the former's support for the Soshan Mukti Sena of Shivnandan Paswan instead of the latter's Dalit Sena. Similarly, Congress(I) attempts to organise counter rallies in the districts on March 15 flopped because the dissidents did not co-operate. Party chief Dumar Lal Baitha tried to put a brave face on the episode by saying that parties rejected by the people were trying to regain their confidence through rallies, but it fooled no one.

The panic in local Congress (I) ranks revealed that the 'politics of padyatra' was proving highly effective. Though there were veiled charges that Chandra Shekhar and Fernandes were using the occasion to try and re-establish their lost political bases in the area, it could not be denied that the moment had been well chosen. Disillusionment with the ruling party is evident in the area and the ineffectiveness of the state Governments has only made the area ripe for political exploitation. JP may not be alive but his memory certainly is. In the tumultuous period of 1974-75 in Bihar, he showed the rest of the country the way. History could well be repeating itself.

—FARZAND AHMED

ORISSA

Muzzling Media

ORISSA Chief Minister Janaki Ballav Patnaik started his professional career as a journalist. And now, his political career stands threatened because of a journalist. As Patnaik prepared to celebrate a record sixth year as chief minister last fortnight, the tiny state was buffeted by the uproar over the bomb attack on Dr Radhanath Rath, 84, a fearless journalist and freedom fighter, allegedly by Congress(I) hoodlums. Rath was one of the state's most respected personalities and editor of the influential Oriya daily, The Samaj, and doyen of the state's harassed press corps.

Rath, through the columns of his newspaper and in public speeches, had launched a sustained campaign against Janaki Ballav Patnaik's political career stands threatened because of a bomb attack on Dr Radhanath Rath a fearless journalist.

Patnaik and the rampant corruption in the state Government. Last fortnight, in what appeared to be a premeditated attack, Rath was ambushed some 30 km from the state capital, while on his way to a function at a private college in Puri district, by a gang of hoodlums armed with lathis. The driver of the jeep, Rath and two others managed to evade the ambushers but found the road ahead blocked. Before the driver could turn the vehicle around, crude bombs were thrown at them.

The immediate and sustained outcry

Injured Rath in hospital: ambushed forced the state Government on the defensive, particularly once it was discovered that most of the people arrested or wanted in connection with the bomb attack were members of the ruling Congress(I) party. An embarrassed Patnaik promised that all the culprits would be apprehended and punished "irrespective of their political affiliations". But few people in the state gave any credence to his promise, particularly since the attack on Rath fitted the pattern of a series of deliberate attacks on the media, especially The Samaj, in recent years.

In fact, barely a week before the Rath affair, the Press Council had announced that the state Government had given a written undertaking that it would ensure the freedom and independence of the press. Ironically enough, the Government had also assured The Samaj that no journalist working for them would be inconvenienced in the discharge of their duties. The Press Council had approached the state Government with a long list of attacks on the press in Orissa. These included:

► Chabi Rani, a journalist, who was raped and subsequently murdered by Congress(I) goons.

► Samaj correspondent Jatadharu Rana was arrested, handcuffed and forced to drink his own urine by the police. Subsequently, a Samaj vehicle carrying copies of the paper was bombed.

► In another case, students attacked and destroyed the offices of two publications, Khabarkagaj, a daily, and Tuesday, a weekly, in the presence of the police.

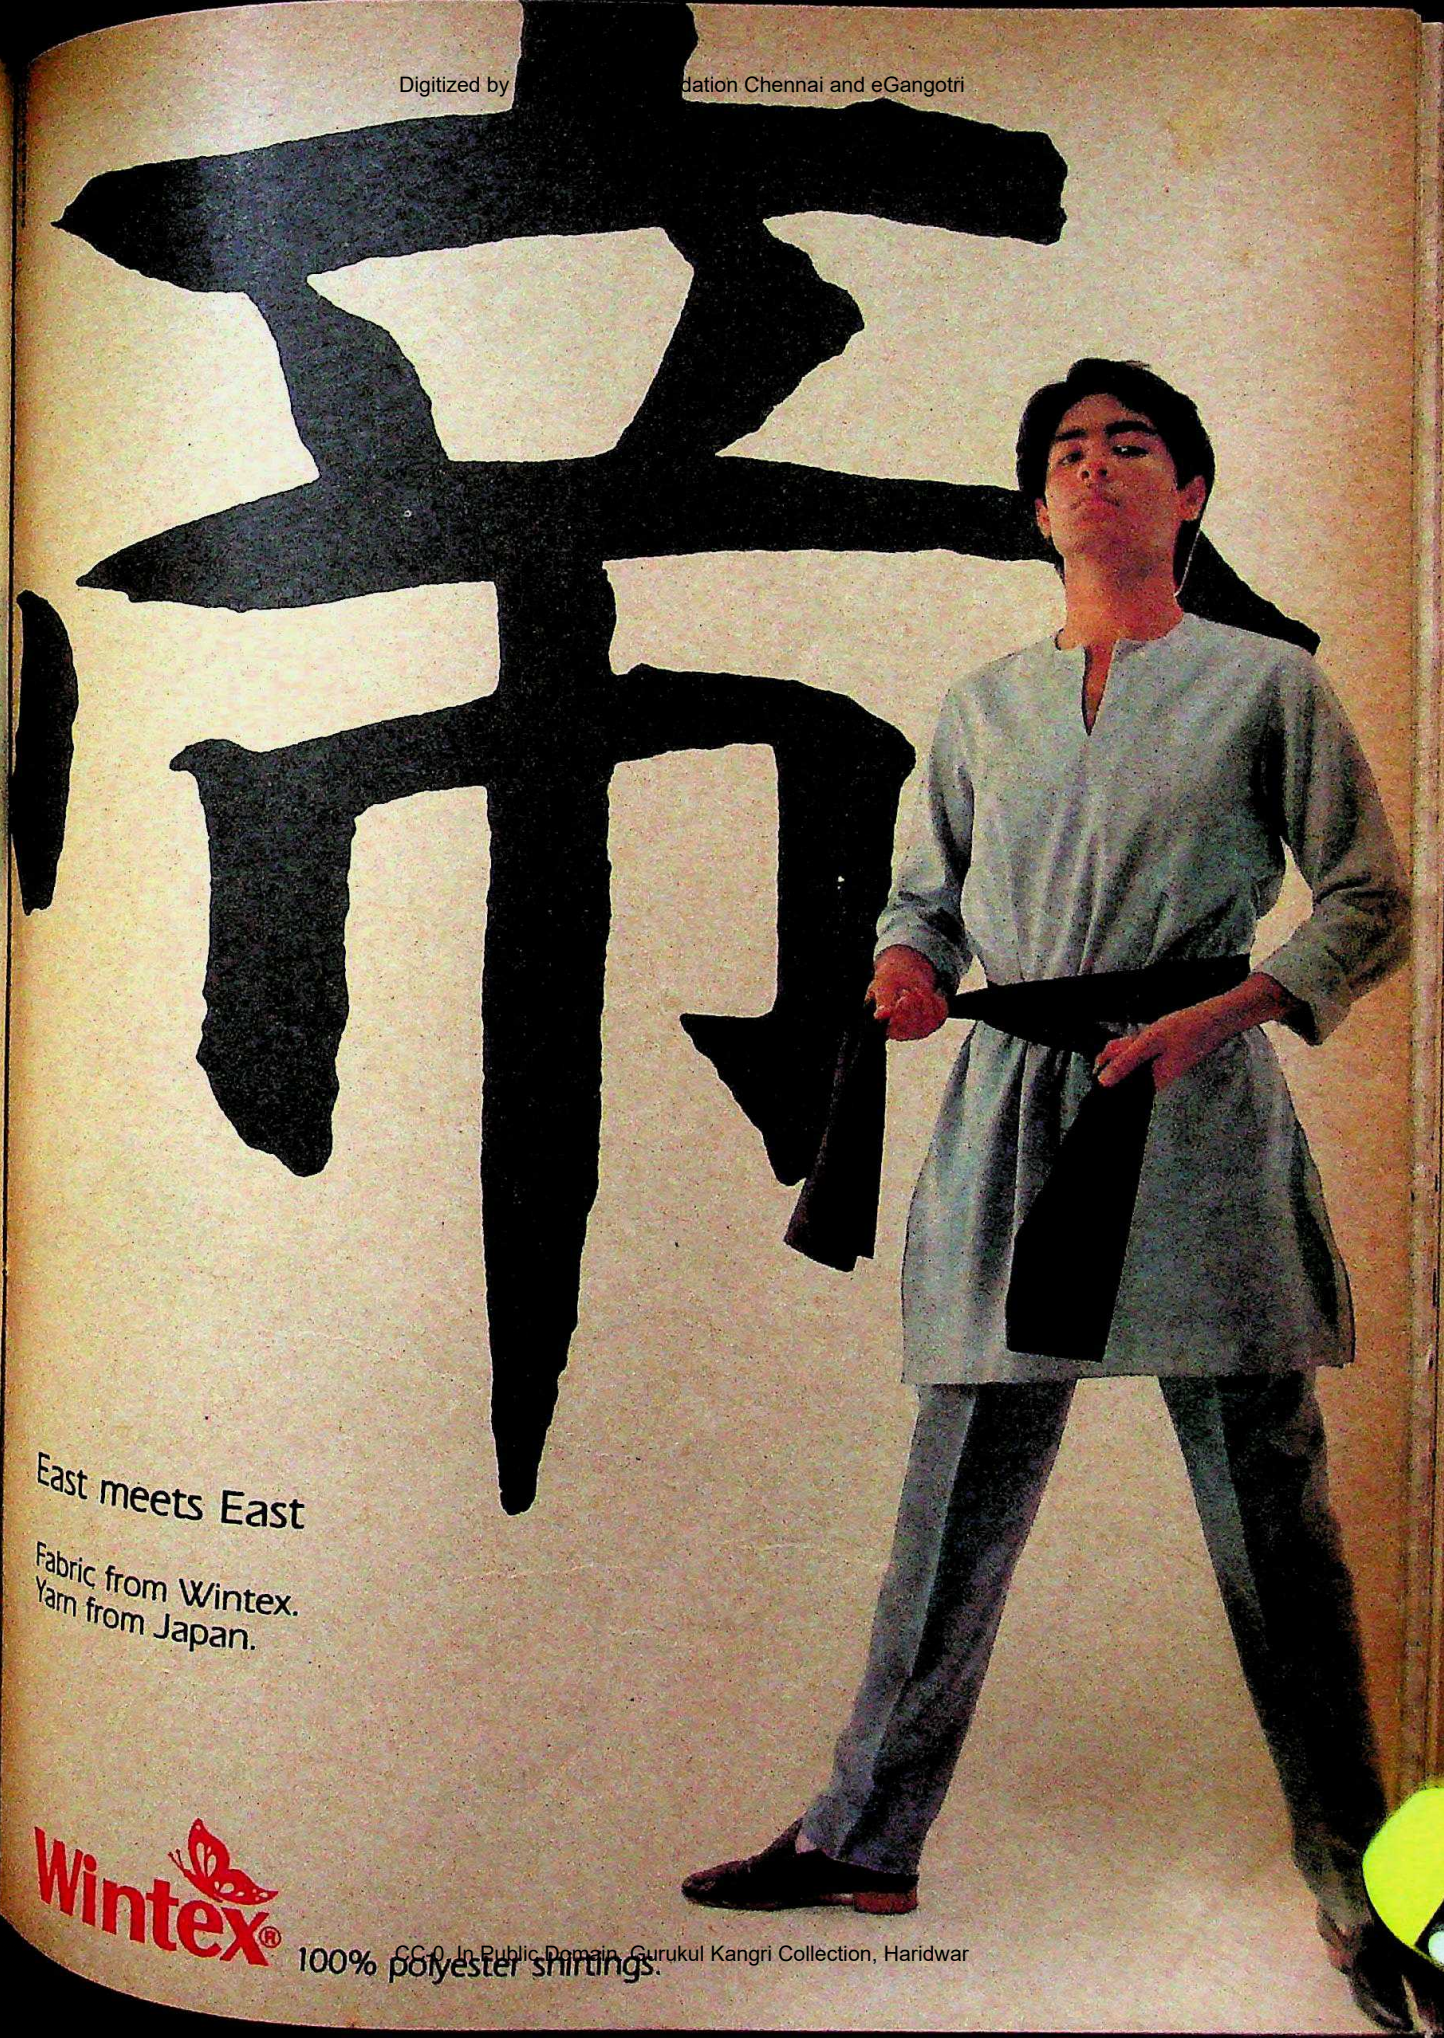
► Compounding these incidents was the attack on the offices of The Samaj in Bhubaneshwar followed by the assault of a senior journalist, Swaroop Jena, who later succumbed to his injuries.

That all these attacks were politically motivated and intended to muzzle the press by creating a climate of fear is beyond doubt. Patnaik is already under considerable pressure from the Centre, especially after his mishandling of the Kalahandi affair. Charges of corruption have been levelled against him and the small coterie around him. Last fortnight, three Congress(I) MP's in New Delhi, Nityanand Mishra, Banamali Babu and Anandi Das, called on Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi to complain that Orissa was being ruined by Patnaik's autocratic rule. Faced with the sudden onslaught from all sides, Patnaik's long rule might well be entering its final count-down.

—FARZAND AHMED in Bhubaneshwar

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by dation Chennai and eGangotri



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

*Just in 12 Months

Leaders in 4 blade Premium Ceiling Fans

24 Carats

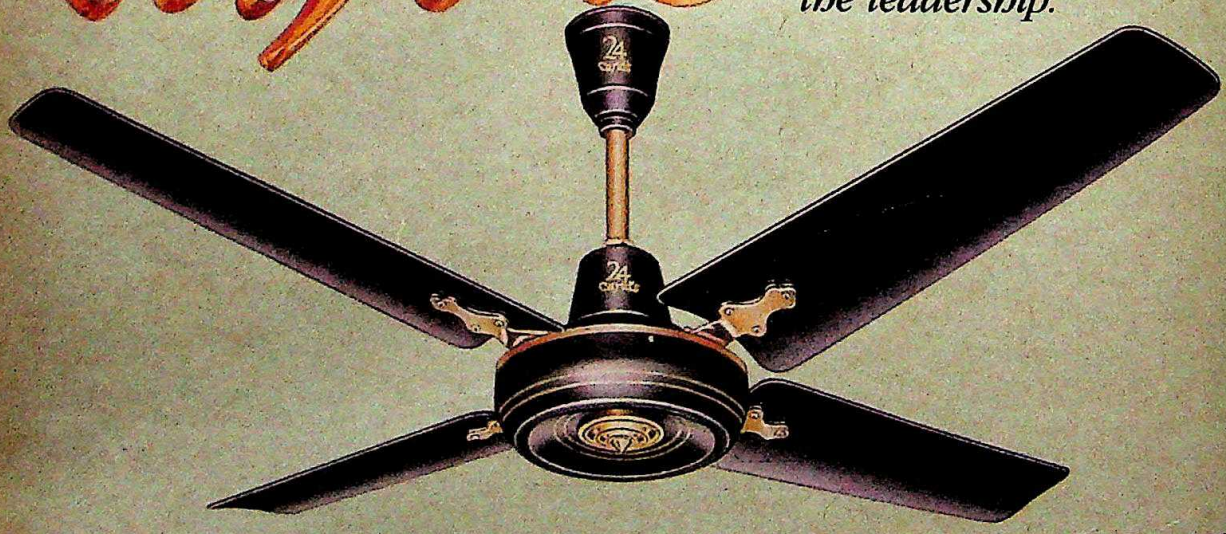
24 Carats ushered a new trend in stylish and hi-performance ceiling fans, catering to the needs of elite.

The trend setter has now become the largest selling and most desired fan in its class.

24 Carats guarantees 15% more air delivery, has Choke type regulator and has the widest choice in its class.

It does cost a little more... but then it offers a lot more!

And that's the key to the leadership.



Pavitra/DLH/101

Trend setters yesterday.
Leaders today.

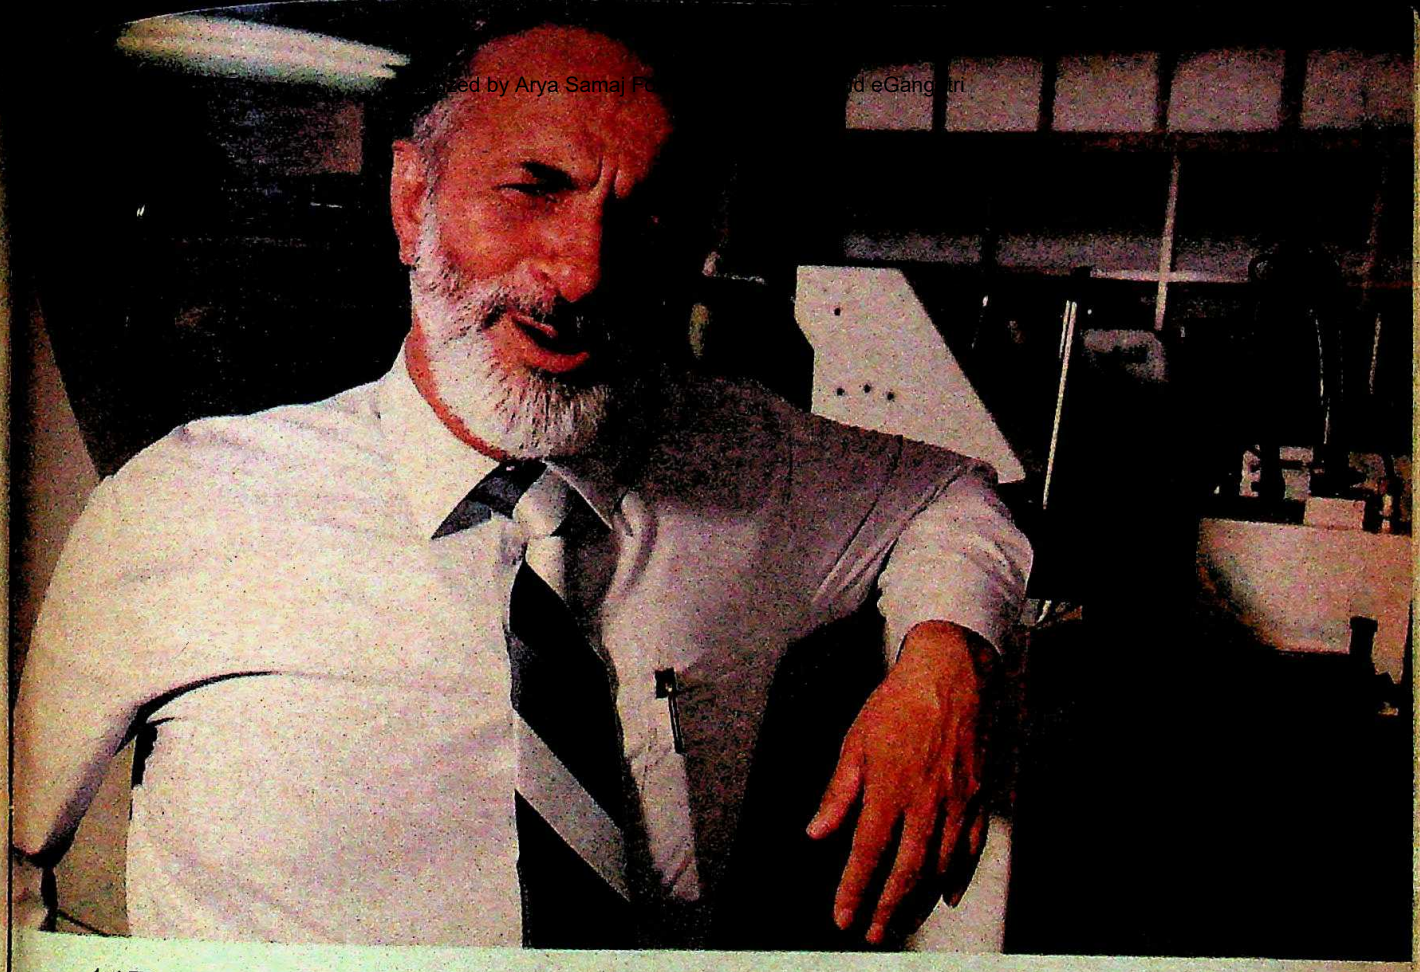
Created & Perfected by

POLAR
the SUPER fan

* Introduced in Sept. '84, has become the largest selling fan in its segment from Sept. '85 onwards.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Fo... and eGangotri



"New India Assurance? Of course."

"It's taken me 20 years... of working day and night... to get where I am today. Who knows what tomorrow will bring... I'm leaving nothing to chance. I'm covered by New India".

And New India have more, much more, in the way of covers for the business world. Such as covers for fire, floods, riots, strikes, large-scale embezzlement, petty thievery, multi perils and loss of income... Just some of the many innovative facets of the services offered by New India.

As leaders in General Insurance, New India provide the widest range of covers to meet any and every insurance need... whether urban or rural, business or personal — adding upto more than 74 different policies.

Over 700 offices located in India and abroad ensure that New India is always at your service... to answer all your insurance problems. Assuring you the security you need and improving the quality of life.

NEW INDIA ASSURANCE
A subsidiary of the General Insurance Corpn. of India.

So much security. For so little.

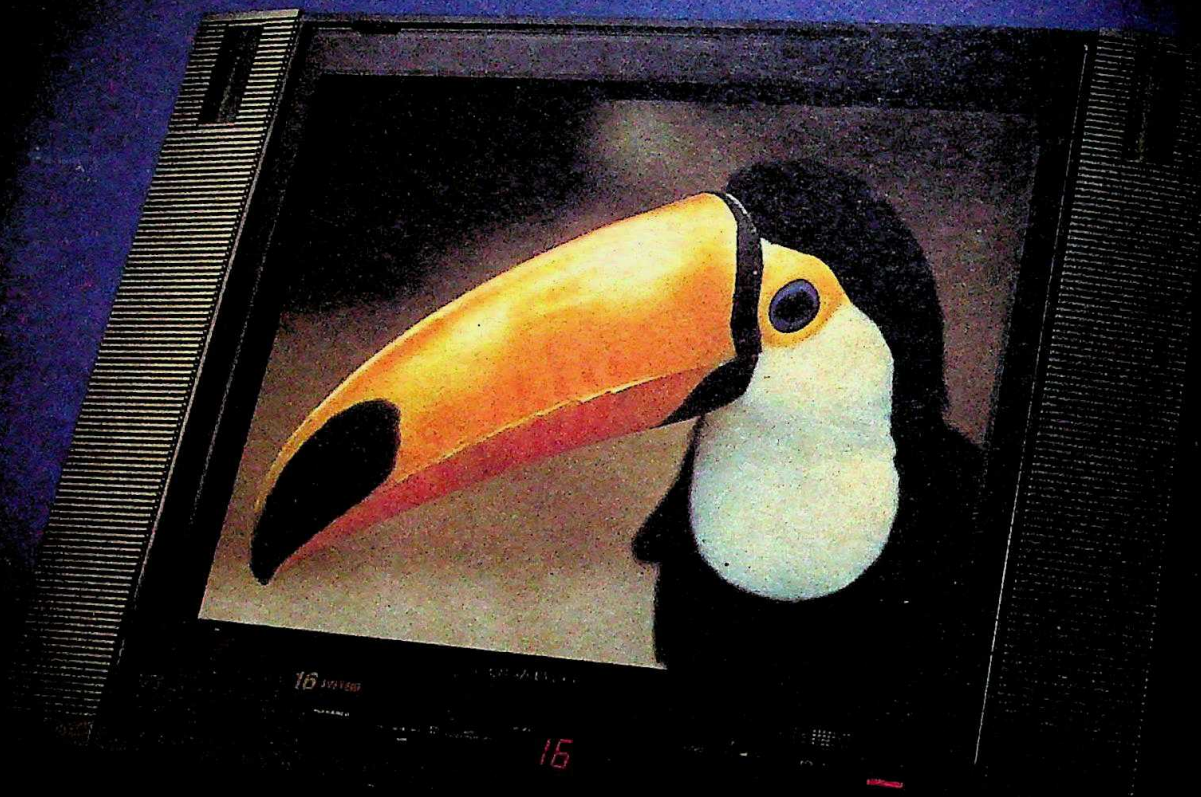
The New India range of assurance covers:
Cancer Insurance, Personal Accident, Hospitalisation and Domiciliary Hospitalisation Policy, Domestic Package Policy, All Risks Insurance, Burglary and House Breaking, Fire Insurance, Combined Fire and Theft, Passenger Flight, Public Liability, Carrier's Liability, Horse Insurance, Engineering Insurance, Professional Indemnity, Workmen's Compensation, Multi Perils, Fidelity Guarantee, Plate Glass, Business Interruption, Cash in Transit, Marine, New Well Insurance, Bullock Cart, Pump Set, Pedal Cycle and many more.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Contour Ads-NIA-833A/85

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A SCREEN TO GROW INTO.



CMX 2100STR

The Flat, Square picture Tube by Sanyo.

When he shows his colors, you won't miss a thing with the new 21" CMX 2100STR Stereo Hi-Fi TV by Sanyo. FST (Flat Square picture Tube) lets you see all the way to the corners. Electronic search tuning with 32-program IC memory ensures extra clarity and perfect lifelike color. A 27-function infrared remote control, 16-system versatility and 4 speakers for Hi-Fi stereo sound provide for your every video need. It's the centerpiece of your entire audio/visual system, now and into the future, by Sanyo.

CMX 6065RG
Enter a whole new world of television entertainment with this 26" 16-system color TV with Electronic Search Tuning and Automatic Voltage Selection (AVS) 230VAC.

CMX 2600STR
Get the big picture plus the big sound with this 26-inch 16-system color TV with stereo sound and 27-function infrared remote control.

SANYO
SANYO ELECTRIC TRADING CO. LTD

BPL-INDIA

Sanyo products can be serviced at these local authorised service centres:
- Bangalore: TEL 220266 Telex: 0845-511
- Calcutta: TEL 431916 Telex: 021-2390
- Bombay: TEL 4940384 Telex: 011-73789
- Cochin: TEL 39422
- New Delhi: TEL 6411037 Telex: 031-2692
- Madras: TEL 74810 Telex: 041-6507
- Palghat: TEL 3241 Telex: 0852-213

Sanyo products are available wherever you go:
- Bahrain: A.A. Zayani & Sons., P.O. Box 932, State of Bahrain TEL 255921
- Kuwait: Supplying Store W.L.L., P.O. Box 1154, Safat, Kuwait TEL 425367
- Qatar: Qatar Electronics Co., W.L.L., P.O. Box 8883, Doha TEL 431511
- Republic of Maldives: Srimal Enterprises, Male, Republic of Maldives TEL Male 3087 or 3461
- Sultanate of Oman: General Electric & Trading Co., P.O. Box 7006, Muttrah TEL 704457
- Saudi Arabia: Basic Electronics Co., W.L.L., P.O. Box 1402 Alkhobar TEL 8641180/Abdullah Bin Sulaiman Basahel & Sons Co., P.O. Box 60, Jeddah TEL 6369581
- Sri Lanka: St. Anthony's Consolidated Ltd., 516, Sri Sangaraja Mawatha, Colombo 10 TEL 24261
- U.A.E.: Al-Futtaim Electronics, Marketing Division, P.O. Box 5559, Dubai TEL 231566

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

JAMMU & KASHMIR

Cleaning Up

AFTER a brief spell of political turbulence leading to the crash of G.M. Shah's government in Jammu and Kashmir, a new phase of stability and consolidation began last fortnight. Governor Jagmohan got down quickly to the business of refurbishing what had become a corrupt and inefficient administrative apparatus.

In less than a week of taking charge, he transferred every third IAS officer in the state and brought in senior officials from New Delhi and other states. He undertook extensive tours of the valley and made surprise visits to hospitals, police stations and revenue offices. And he released the previous government's political detenus, while rounding up anti-national and communal elements. Said Jagmohan: "Our immediate task is to provide a responsive and efficient government."

The hyper-active governor also launched a development offensive. He sent a detailed development plan to New Delhi which included cleaning up the Dal Lake with the help of international agencies, constructing houses for poor people encroaching on public land, and pushing through with hydel power projects to boost electricity supply. The Centre assured him an extra Rs 100 crore in the next few months, and Jagmohan himself promised to raise extra resources in the state.

Going by the estimates of the Finance Ministry, the previous government had been softpedalling the recovery of arrears of over Rs 50 crore by the departments of sales tax, excise, forest and electricity, and by other municipal and civic bodies in the state. In fact, the recovery operations were either postponed or cancelled under political pressure from ministers. Claimed Jagmohan: "It is wrong to say that the state survives on doles from outside alone. There are enough resources for generating money, but one has to tap them and put the money into productive ventures."

Then, in a major administrative step, Jagmohan promised to promulgate an ordinance aimed at delegating decision-making powers to middle-rung civil servants. Earlier, none of them were authorised to take final decisions, these needing the approval of the concerned minister. The proposed ordinance will enable officials to take decisions of a quasi-judicial nature, including the issue of transport and arms licences, and to settle revenue disputes without referring them to ministers, who would only have the power to hear appeals.

But Jagmohan's most concerted thrust, predictable in the context of his past record, was on urban development.

SUMAN DUBEY

In less than a week of taking charge, the hyper-active Jagmohan has sent a development plan to New Delhi which includes cleaning up the Dal Lake, constructing houses for the poor and hydel power projects.

He drew up ambitious plans for the resettlement of slum dwellers and dairy owners in Jammu, for the redevelopment of Gulmarg and Pahalgam as two of the most attractive tourist resorts in the country, the construction of glass houses with attractive cafetarias throughout the valley, and the creation of additional tourist facilities of international standards. With the summer setting in, he was determined to attract a record number of tourists to a state that has seen its tourism industry suffer severely from disturbed political conditions over the last three years.

But Jagmohan's ability to ensure peace was closely linked with the cooperation he would get from the major political and religious groups in the state. Assured of solid Congress(I) support, he succeeded in wooing both National Conference leader Farooq Abdullah and Awami Action Committee leader Mirwaiz Farooq. Both of them were major political headaches for Shah's Goverment, and it was at their call that various protests had been organised in the state, forcing the administration to enforce curfew every fourth day in one part of the state or the other. In fact, Jagmohan earned kudos from Farooq Abdullah for his handling of the situation after Shah's dismissal. Said Farooq: "The state is in the hands of a capable person and we are sure that he will be able to establish an efficient government in the state."

With Jagmohan busy asserting himself as an administrator, speculation began on the future political alignments in the state. Since neither the governor nor the Centre has made any commitment on the duration of governor's rule, a section of the Congress(I) was certain that the party would ultimately form the next government with the help of those who have defected from G.M.Shah's faction of the National Front. What gave credence to this speculation was the delay in dissolving the Assembly, which must be the first step towards calling for the fresh elections that have been demanded by Farooq Abdullah and other major opposition parties. The Congress(I), interestingly enough, has not taken any stand on this issue. The party clearly hopes that after Jagmohan is able to establish his credibility with the Kashmiri people as the nominee of the Markazi Sarkar (Centre), the Congress(I) will be able to claim the chief ministership for the first time in a decade.

But this may not be easy. For Farooq said that if it took him 18 months to get rid of the Shah government, it should not take another 18 months to get fresh elections ordered. He also warned that if the Congress(I) formed a government with the help of those who wanted to shift loyalties for a consideration, it would be a major set-back for Rajiv's claims to practising clean politics. But the Congress(I)'s past performance in the state has never been consistent with its avowed principles on this score.

—PRABHU CHAWLA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AN INVITATION TO HARD-HEADED PROFESSIONALS...

COME, TAKE UP THE CHALLENGE SOFTWARE PUBLISHING HAS TO OFFER.

In the Computer Age, you don't need to be told that Software Publishing is big business. You know it. You also know that a job in this fast-growing field will be more than a job. It will be a challenge. Are you ready to take it up?

Our Company, Indian Organic Chemicals Limited, a leader in the manufacture of Polyester Staple Fibre,is now diversifying into this new, high-growth field. Our entry into the software industry is primarily aimed at three distinct market segments where the growth potential is high and market opportunities lie virtually untapped.

In the first instance, we will adapt, develop and create standard off-the-shelf application packages for various vertical segments using advanced languages and program generators like Lotus 123, Dbase III etc., for desktop systems using CP/M, MSDOS and UNIX operating systems. We will be publishing these packages every month, complete with documentation and tutorial disks, attractively packaged for off- the-shelf sale.

We will also adapt, develop and create educational packages for home computers in co-operation with NCERT for the CLASS programme.

Another sphere there is great demand in is the developing of customised applications software for corporate bodies, government departments and other large institutions for use in their micro and mini systems.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

These being our objectives, we have finalized marketing tieups for our software with Computer Point in India and its principals abroad — Lotus 123, Micropro, etc.

Right now, we are looking for people for the positions mentioned below. People who will be instrumental in getting to achieve our targets of a Rs.20 crore turnover in software sales by 1990. That's just four years away. That's ambitious. And that's where the challenge lies. Read on and see if you'd like to take it up!

MARKETING MANAGER

30-35 yrs.
Rs.90,000 per annum
Industrial Marketing
MBA

You will be invested with the overall responsibility of the division's activities including marketing, business development, export promotion, advertising and sales promotion and public relations. You will interact with a team of high-calibre computer professionals and operate in a growing competitive environment.

You must be an MBA from a reputed management institution such as IIM or Bajaj, and you should have at least 8/10 years' experience in marketing of industrial goods.

PRODUCT MANAGER

27-32 yrs.
Rs.60,000 per annum
Publishing/Consumer Marketing
MBA

You will be responsible for coordinating the activities of the software publishing group. These will include diverse responsibilities of package designs, product launch, author liaison and development, sales promotion and other related functions.

We need an MBA or a graduate with at least 3/4 years' experience of brand management/product management in consumer goods/publishing industry.

Both these positions will require incumbents to be based in Bangalore. They will also involve travel — both in India and abroad.

Please apply with full details of age, qualifications, experience and salary drawn, superscribing the envelope with the post applied for. Applications, which will be treated in strict confidence, should be sent to:

Divisional Manager (Software),
Indian Organic Chemicals Limited,
Darul Saroor, 43, Dickenson Road,
Bangalore 560 042.

If you wish to see us and discuss the job opportunities we offer, you can call on D. Bharath, Bangalore, Tel: 572684 or P. Ahuja, Bombay, Tel: 4938134.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BRILLIANT HAS BECOME PART OF STUDENT CULTURE AROUND THE COUNTRY.

As tutorials we deem it our task to build up the morale of the diffident and sober down the mood of the complacent.

Our Distance Education Schemes which have grown to prodigious scales today, touch the lives of a vast number of students aiming at self-advancement through self-improvement. We are proud to assist in the emergence of a distinguished class of young men & women who seek to shine in public life by sheer dint of merit – not having any use for 'other means'.

Our long-stretch classes at Madras & short-spell seminars & Contact Programmes at various other centres expose the students to the rich experience & proven expertise of our professors, whose highest contribution is to inspire supreme self-confidence & effort on the part of our eager youth.

It is heartening to expect that some day soon our current students will be occupying key positions in the world of Administration & Management and Engineering and Technology, fetching glory to themselves & to the nation.

BRILLIANT TUTORIALS

12, Masilamani Mudali St., T.Nagar, Madras-17.

Ph : 442099, 443308

Efficient/BT/396/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Youth Power

G. DEEPAK PAWAR

Somasekhariah: brain's trust

ADIGENEBELE is a sleepy little village in Kolar district in Karnataka. The village is so remote that not many district officials deigned to visit. Fed up of waiting for the officials, the village's youth decided in 1979 to take over the reins of the village's administration themselves. They took over the machinery of law and order and imposed fines on anyone who dared venture on the wrong side of the law. The result: the village today is Karnataka's Utopia. Everything is just perfect: no thefts, no land grabs, no adulteration, no nothing. Though there is no prohibition in the state, nobody drinks in the village. "No one is allowed to enter the village after drinking," says N. Somasekhariah, 40, and the brain behind the local self government. There was only one crime last year: a villager tried to fish on the sly in the local pond. He was caught and fined. And everyone has been living happily ever after.

Surplus Students

THE SANSKRIT University of Varanasi is a unique seat of learning. So its final examination has to be the only one of its kind. Take this year's, for instance. Only 121 students were on the rolls. But as many as 2,100 filled out the examination forms. And when the exam was held, the authorities were stunned to see 2,900 actually appear for it. When the Uttar Pradesh Government ordered an inquiry into the whole affair, it was predictably found that most of these extra examinees did not even belong to Varanasi, let alone the university. They had gained entrance on bogus admission cards, procured for "fees" ranging up to Rs 5,000 each. It is learnt that some "outsiders", backed by various politicians, have been running various rackets from the varsity's hostels with apparent impunity. The police do not want to touch them because that would mean "interfering in students affairs".

Without Win

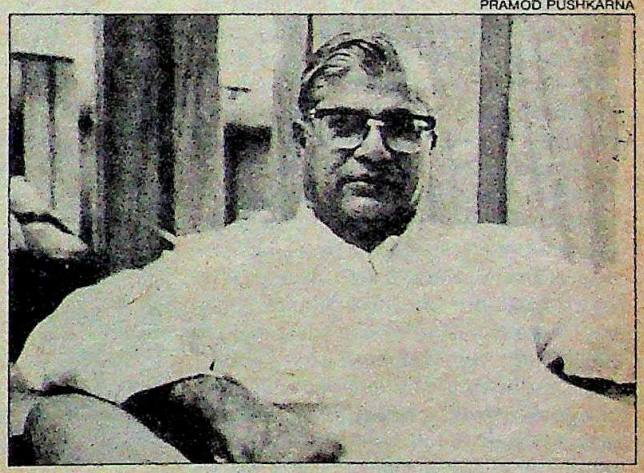
IN THE battle of beauty versus brains, it's not always beauty that wins, though it may seem so at first. The planeload of aspirants to the Congress(I) Rajya Sabha seat in Kerala who descended on the capital to lobby for the ticket were apalled to discover that Chief Minister K. Karunakaran had set his heart on M.T. Padma, a buxom lawyer from Calicut and secretary of the state women's wing of the Congress(I). Rather rudely nicknamed the Silk Smitha of Kerala politics, there was enough to link her to former irrigation minister M.P. Gangadharan. So, it wasn't Padma but T.K.C. Vaduthala, a Harijan leader, who got the nomination. And Padma was heard saying: "I will do whatever the high command wants. But I feel the Congressmen need not have carried their witchhunt so far as to tarnish my image."

Padma: silk image

Cold Shoulder

BY NOW former Gujarat chief minister Madhavsinh Solanki's nasty little note, written to Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi but leaked to the press, has passed into posterity as probably the sneakiest piece of rebellion that ever plagued the Congress(I). And though the prime minister magnanimously declared that he had sorted out matters and all was well between him and Solanki, things seem to be quite the opposite. While on a tour of Gujarat last fortnight, Rajiv made no secret of his contempt for Solanki, ignoring him and dismissing his views on the budget with a terse: "Anybody with a little intelligence will know what the policies are." The cold shoulder has already diminished the number of Solanki supporters in the Assembly from 75 to 25. Not that it has deterred him. He has stepped up his activities and it was largely thanks to him that the party lost out to the BJP in the state's recent cooperative federation elections. Reservations, are not Chief Minister Amarsinh Chaudhary's only problem now.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



Solanki: down but not out

Swan Song

HE WAS a Harijan and he dared to keep up with the Joneses. So they all got together and decided to put him in his place. And it turned out to be his final resting place—the funeral pyre. The Harijan upasarpanch of Naugaon village near Bina in Madhya Pradesh wanted to give his daughter the very best at her wedding. So he did everything in great style—band-baaja, special lighting, the works. But as the groom and bride did their rounds around the fire and tied the knot, some drunken persons entered the pandal, smashed the tubelights and began beating up the guests. Why? Because the upasarpanch had dared to be an equal. Not much later, the body of the upasarpanch was found in a nearby field. While two persons were arrested by the police for this, two others were said to be absconding.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UTTAR PRADESH

Operation Disarm

THE Uttar Pradesh Government has suddenly woken up to the alarming discovery that the state currently boasts of the biggest stockpile of privately—owned arms in the country, far more than the armoury of the state police force. More serious is the fact that many of the weapons in private hands are sophisticated carbines, banned elsewhere in the country. Assistant Editor PRABHU CHAWLA visited the state to detail the dangers posed by the alarming trend and the state Government's efforts to neutralise the problem. His report.

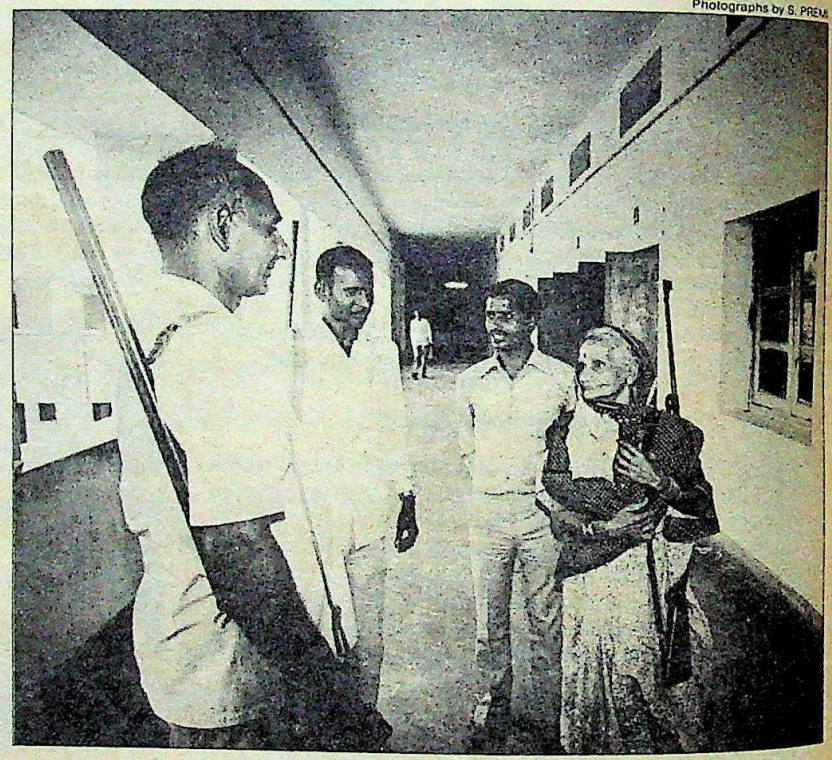
Photographs by S. PREM

UTTAR Pradesh has long led the field of states in a number of areas; the highest population, human and livestock, and foodgrains and oil-seeds production. Lately, however, it has unobtrusively earned yet another but far more dubious distinction—arms. Uttar Pradesh has the largest private arsenal of arms of any state in the country. Last fortnight, incredulous officials at the office of the state's home secretary finished compiling their latest tally, revealing that there were six lakh people holding arms licences, or one for every 200 population. More incredible was the fact that a large number of the licensed weapons were carbines, a weapon banned for private ownership in the rest of the country.

The issuing of arms licences in the state has been eclectic, to say the least. Licence-holders include 60-year-old Saraswati Devi of Karagapur village, 20 km away from the Lucknow-Sitapur highway, who could barely climb the stairs of the licence renewal authority without help. She owns a .315 bore rifle which she bought last year for Rs 14,000 against the licence issued in her name. Ram Avtar is totally blind and has been for the last 10 years, but his licence was renewed last fortnight. More prominent holders include Mayapati Tripathi, firebrand son of Congress(I) Working President Kamlapati Tripathi, who was issued a licence for a .30 carbine along with many other politicians in the state. R.C.Takru, the state's former home secretary, is just one of scores of senior bureaucrats who have also been granted licences for carbines.

There is, quite literally, enough ammunition in that for a major explosion. It is estimated that private licence holders had stocks of over two crore cartridges and other ammunition. As against this, the state police had in stock less than one third of that amount and one sixth of the number of privately owned firearms.

Only now has the state Government



60-year-old Saraswati and blind Ram Avtar: licence to kill

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"We can't just sit back and allow the state to become a warehouse for piling arms just because few moneyed and caste leaders want them for social prestige and influence."

BIR BAHADUR SINGH
chief minister, Uttar Pradesh

"We can handle the illegal trade in arms but what worries us most is the possibility of this large amount of ammunition falling into the hands of the criminals."

MATA PARSHAD
state home secretary

woken up to the fact that the arms collection in the state poses a serious law and order threat. Says Chief Minister Bir Bahadur Singh: "These arms are a great threat to the security of the state. We can't just sit back and allow the state to become a warehouse for piling arms just because few moneyed and caste leaders want them for social prestige and influence." Added Tilak Kak, Lucknow's senior superintendent of police: "There is a need to reduce the number of arms with the public before it becomes a headache for us."

The headache assumes more serious overtones considering the curious fact that Uttar Pradesh is perhaps the only state in the country where the police-population ratio has actually declined over the last five years. As against 945 policemen per 100,000 population in 1976, there are only 782 now compared to 1,100 in Maharashtra and 1,500 in Delhi. More important, 10 per cent of the state's 1.5 lakh villages have a mostly symbolic police presence. One police station in the state covers 10 lakh people. Even in terms of mobility and communication the Uttar Pradesh police (UPP) is most ill-equipped. It has only 3,675 vehicles and only 2,449 telephones to monitor a state in which every seventh Indian lives. The entire state police, including the Provincial Armed Constabulary (PAC) posesses only 50,000 firearms. Said Inspector General of Police (Personnel) Vasudev Punjani: "If one goes by the amount of arms to which our forces are entitled then we are definitely underarmed. But we are more concerned about the large amount of arms in private hands."

That concern is now being sought to be translated into action. Under orders from the chief minister, the disarming of Uttar Pradesh has been launched in right earnest. The state Home Department inned a series of orders last fortnight aimed at controlling the arms proliferation in the state. Home Secretary Mata Parshad sent off directives to all district magistrates to stop issuing new firearms licences and to carry out a vigorous scrutiny of all the licences issued in the state. Earlier, the district administration used to renew licences without receiving any clearance from the local police. Under the new guidelines, not only has police clearance been made absolutely essential, but licencees have been ordered to get their licences renewed every year instead of every three years as was the case earlier.

The launching of Operation Disarm has not come too soon. In a secret report, the Home Department admitted that over 80 per cent of social and communal tensions were due to ownership of arms by the warring factions. Says a Home Ministry communique to district magistrates: "It has been noticed that the use of firearms in the commission of offences and breach of public peace are on the increase...at the same time there has been sharp increase in the number of firearms licences issued to the public."

Bir Bahadur Singh's Government has launched its campaign on a war footing. Over the last six weeks it ordered:

- ▶ A special drive for physical verification of all types of firearms, including carbines.
- ▶ Searches to be conducted on all firearms dealers to check their stock situation.
- ▶ All dealers to procure and sell arms and ammunition only with the approval of the district authorities.
- ▶ The amount of cartridges to be held in stock by a licencee to be reduced from 100 to 10 only.
- ▶ Fixing the number of firearms licences to three per person as against no limit earlier.

These instructions were issued following the fact that a secret study done by the Home Department showed that a large quantity of ammunition issued to licencees was finding its way to the criminal world. Only last month police arrested an arms dealer in Mainpuri district who was peddling ammunition without any valid permit from the district authorities. Over a dozen similar cases were detected last year from other parts of the state. Says state Home Secretary Mata Parshad: "We can handle the illegal trade in arms but what worries us most is the possibility of this large amount of ammunition falling into the hands of the criminals." According to the Home Department, even if 10 per cent

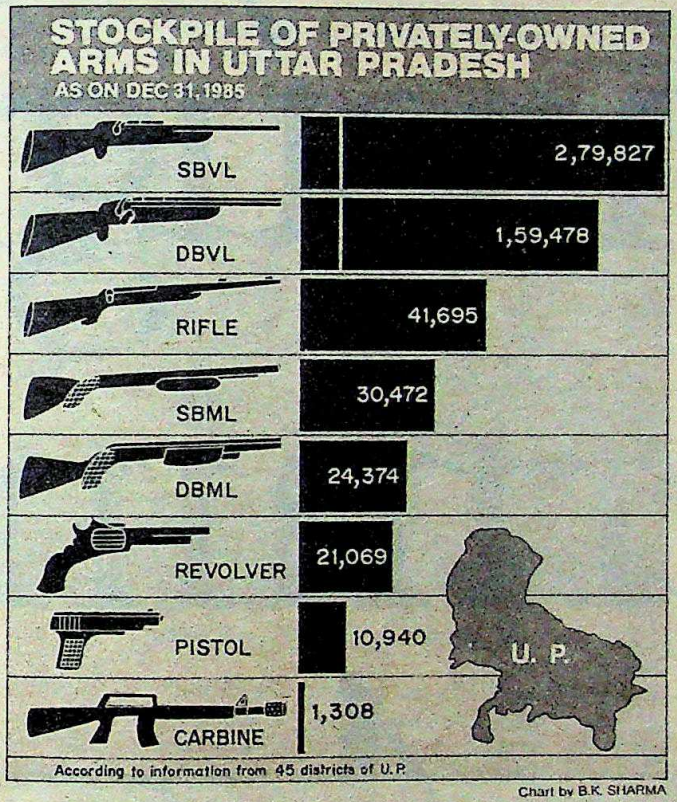


Chart by B.K. SHARMA

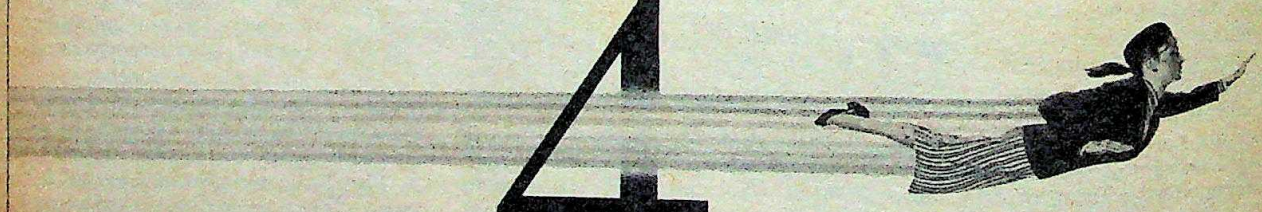
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Fly through Terminal 4.



Fly British Airways to London Heathrow after April 12 and you'll find yourself in the world's most sophisticated airport terminal.

Terminal 4's one-level layout means you get through the formalities as quickly as possible, with easy access to car parks, taxis and underground trains.

If you're flying on to Paris, Amsterdam or any intercontinental destination with British Airways, you simply stay in Terminal 4. Your flight will leave from there. Our domestic and other European flights depart from Terminal 1, just a few minutes away by our fast, frequent bus service.

Why stop flying just because you've left the plane?

BRITISH AIRWAYS

The world's favourite airline.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

of the two crore cartridges issued legally to licence-holders are sold to criminals every year, it can create a major law and order problem for the state.

BUT THERE are other problems. During scrutiny of the list of licence-holders, the Home Department discovered that over 30 per cent of revolvers and carbine licences were held by policemen in their capacity as private citizens, or by their relations. Another 40 per cent were cornered by politicians and their relatives. During the Janata regime, when the state Government allowed carbine licences, the first hundred licensees were either politicians or policemen. Later, the Government succumbed to pressure brought upon it by other community leaders for liberalisation of the licensing policy.

Between 1980-85, a number of controversial leaders involved either in caste or political rivalries were able to secure licences on the plea that their life was in danger. Supporters of Balram Singh Yadav, a Congress (I) MP and a former state minister, and Mulayam Singh Yadav, leader of the Opposition in the Assembly, were granted arms licences galore on the grounds that they were being threatened by each other. Similarly, in Gorakhpur, Hari Shanker Tiwari and Ravindra Pratap Shahi, who are now members of the state Assembly, were able to get any number of arms licences because they were involved in a bloody feud. By the end of last year, over 100 sitting and former MP's, over 1,500 ex-legislators and over 10,000 policemen and other civil servants were issued arms licences.

The situation took a serious turn last year when arms holders became civil contractors overnight and started grabbing contracts from the Public Works Department (PWD) as well as the Irrigation Department at the point of a gun. Even some Central Government projects were cornered by armed contractors who would demand money for incomplete work. According to a state intelligence report, criminal gangs in eastern and central Uttar Pradesh were able to secure civil works worth over Rs 50 crore at gunpoint. Admitted a PWD official in Lucknow: "In far off villages and districts our system of calling tenders became a mockery because these armed people would just force the officials to allot them the contract irrespective of their quotations."

An official notification issued last month stated: "District magistrates and superintendents of police must ensure that contractors do not obtain contracts by use of force or show of arms at the time of filing tenders or giving bids. Furthermore, contractors should not be permitted to terrorise or overawe engineers and others for making payments which are not due to them."

Seized illegal firearms: excess armour

But the new crack-down also faces some major hurdles, not the least being the existence of illegal, locally manufactured arms in huge quantities. Last year alone, the police seized over 10,000 illegal firearms and over 20,000 cartridges from raids on criminal gangs. In addition, 281 units manufacturing firearms illegally were detected during the same period. The haul of over 30,000 pistols, 3,000 guns and over 1.30 lakh cartridges from unauthorised people during the last three years is more than the total stock held by the 80,000 strong UPP (excluding the PAC). In fact, the total amount of unauthorised arms unearthed in Uttar Pradesh during the last decade is 1.50 lakh which is equivalent to the country's total police armoury. Admits R.N. Dwivedi, Lucknow's district magistrate: "What bothers us is not licensed arms as much as the use of illegally manufactured arms."

Though state government officials disagree, many politicians feel that the upsurge of arms have contributed to social tensions. Says Mohan Singh, a Lok Dal leader and former chief whip of the party in the state legislature: "Since only rich and influential people can get both a licence and a firearm, they do not hesitate in using them to suppress the economically weaker sections in the villages." According to the latest figures released by the chief minister in the Assembly last fortnight the incidence of atrocities against Harijans and Scheduled Tribes rose from 11,346 in 1983 to 12,501 in 1985. The number of murders alone rose from 200 to 223 during the same period. And Minister of State for Internal Security Arun Nehru declared in Parliament last fortnight that the incidence of crime was the highest in Uttar Pradash.

The chief minister and his aides believe that there is definite correlation between the incidence of crime and the number of licensed weapons in a particular district. For example, in districts like Lucknow, Basti, Mainpuri, Agra, Gorakhpur, Meerut, Faizabad and Aligarh which had more than 15,000 fire arms, issued to licence-holders the incidence of crime was above the state average.

What effect the drive against firearms will have on the law and order situation is debatable. It has certainly begun to affect the 2,000 licensed arms dealers in the state. Since the issue of new licences has been banned, their combined turnover has plummeted to less than Rs 50 lakh as against Rs one crore last year. Complains Daljit Singh, a gun dealer and secretary of the Lucknow Arms Dealers Association: "It is unfair to draw a conclusion that ammunition for criminal use comes from licensed dealers. There are other sources from where criminals get their supplies. By putting a blanket ban on arms licences, the Government will not only ruin our business but will force the people to look for unauthorised channels of supply."

But such side effects will cut little ice with the state Government which appears genuinely determined to curb the growing arms population in the state by whatever means at its disposal. But considering the powerful lobbies that it will have to confront if it is to make any headway, the disarming of Uttar Pradesh might prove to be a loaded issue.

—PRABHU CHAWLA in Lucknow

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MOROCCO

The Sahara Mirage

MOROCCO'S King Hassan II celebrated the 25th anniversary of his ascension to the throne last fortnight with customary pomp and circumstance. In fact, much more of the latter. Morocco turned the celebrations into a massive public relations exercise in an attempt to convince the world that it's festering war with the Polisario guerillas was over and that the territorial claims of their Saharawi Arab Democratic Republic (SADR) were nothing more than a mirage in the desert sands.

Indirectly, it was also meant to prove that India had committed a diplomatic blunder by recognising the SADR (in September 1985) which led to the snapping of diplomatic relations between New Delhi and Rabat. The list of invitees to the celebrations in Marrakesh included over 100 foreign journalists. But the real reason for their inclusion was soon evident. Immediately after the two-day festivities were over, the entire press corps was bundled into a fleet of army aircraft and helicopters and flown off to the Sahara desert.

Free-lance journalist TAVLEEN SINGH was the only Indian journalist present and the Moroccon Government went out of its way to convince her that India had recognised a country that did not exist and was unlikely to do so in the foreseeable future. She was escorted down the length of the most recent wall the Government has built from Mahbes on the Algerian border to Bir Anzarane near Mauritania in the south as proof that the Polisario's claims on precisely that territory were patently false. Her exclusive report for INDIA TODAY:

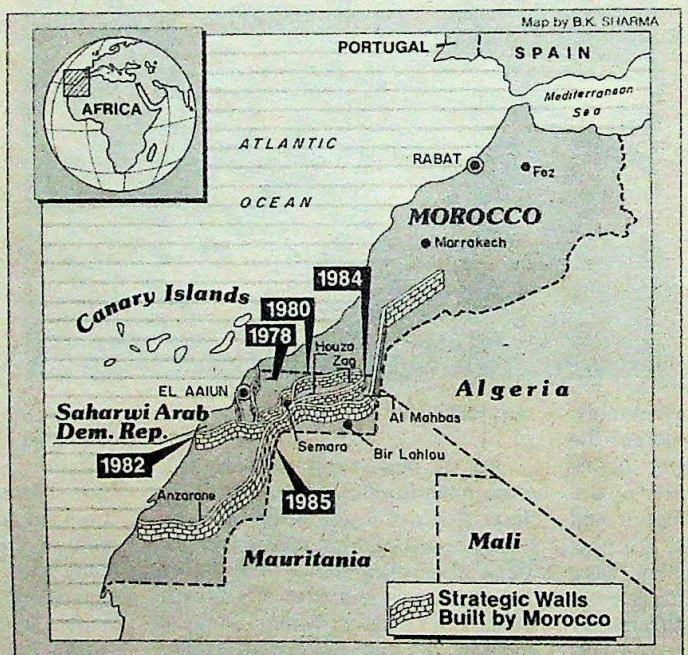
FROM the army helicopter, all that was visible of Houza, described as the former provisional capital of the SADR in western Sahara, is a tin shed built on a gravel embankment which had 'Houza' carved into it in large letters. The rest of Houza is situated a kilometre away and consists of a handful of small hutments, shells of ruined buildings and burnt-out tanks, relics of the last major battle with the Polisario rebels in November 1984. In one of the hutments sits Khalifa El Hnani Khatri, the village headman, swathed in the characteristic white robes of the nomadic tribes that roam the desert. "How could a country like India make the mistake of recognising a republic that does not exist?" he queries.

It is a good question to be asked in Houza, or, for that mattter, in South Block, New Delhi. Khatri's nomadic life-style has matched the fortunes of the war between Morocco and the Polisario. Born and raised in Houza, he left in 1975 when Polisario guerillas chased away the Moroccon army garrison that had taken over the desert outpost after the Spanish left. They returned in 1984 when the Moroccon Government erected yet another of their strategic walls (see map) fitted with electronic devices as a deterrent against invasions by guerillas and proof that the disputed territory had been reoccupied. With the building of the wall and the stationing of additional troops, other tribes had also returned to Houza to open shops and eke out a living from animal husbandry, the mainstay of the desert economy.

Polisario representatives in Delhi claim that the war is still being fought in full force and that they constantly manage to cross over the walls. Says Member of the Political Bureau of the Front, Malainine Sadik-Bachir: "We sometimes succeed in destroying over 100 km of the wall at a time and we breach it nearly everyday."

But nowhere along the entire length of the wall were there signs of any recent battles or major breaches and western diplomats and journalists in Rabat scoff scornfully at Polisario claims. Says Stephen Hughes, the Reuter's man in Rabat who has covered western Sahara for more than a decade: "The wall acts as a tripwire. The last major breach was near Zag in October 1984, when the Polasario came across with 20 tanks. But it was suicidal because once they were across, they were trapped and eight of the tanks were captured intact. They never tried that again."

To see the walls (the five built so far are together about 25,000 km long), from close up is to realise how tough they would be to breach. They average a height of about 25 feet and have manned defensive points equipped with machine- guns every 5 km. All along the wall are sensitive electronic sensors capable of picking up enemy movement even 60 km away. The base of the wall is strewn with buried landmines and sophisticated American



The Polisario is still a long way from achieving their goals and India might well have been guilty of a hasty and premature step in their recognition of the Saharawi Arab Democratic Republic.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

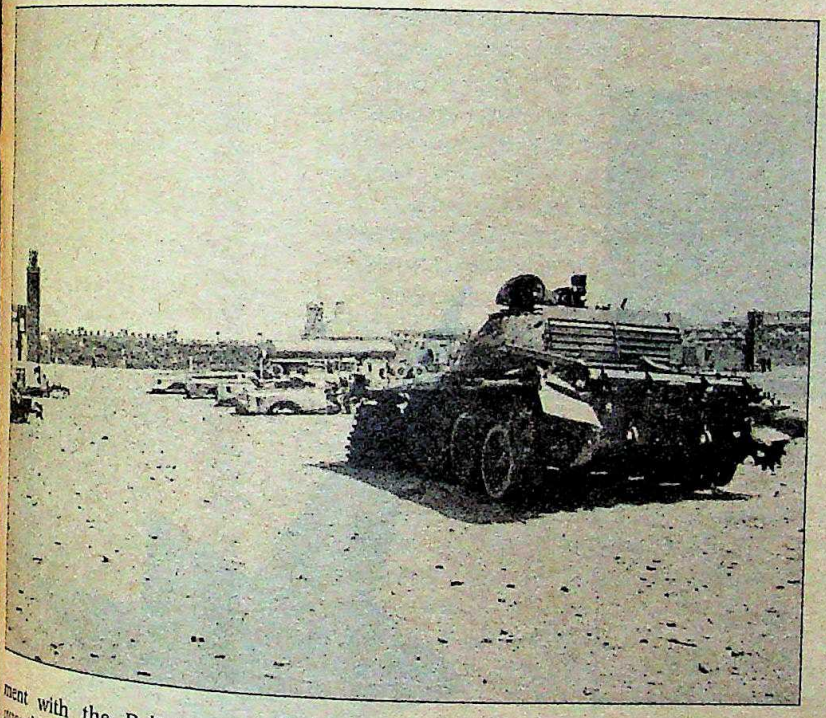
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

tanks act as a back-up. Nearly 100,000 Moroccon troops are posted along the walls or at military camps alongside.

The backdrop to the Saharan problem lies in the Spanish division, in 1975, of what was formerly Spanish Sahara, an area rich in phosphates, between Morocco and Mauritania. The Saharawi people, represented by the Polisario, felt that they had the right to determine their own destiny and the liberation war they had been fighting against Spain was now directed against Morocco and Mauritania.

Their claims were, however, ignored and hundreds of Sharawis fled across the border into Algeria to continue their battle for liberation. In 1979, Mauritania surrendered its claims under an agreement with the Polisario and subsequently, the Polisario guerillas succeeded in driving the Moroccon army out of the desert posts it had taken over from the Spanish. The Moroccons, however, with the help of the US, then launched their wall strategy and gradually reclaimed much of the territory which is now disputed in claims and counter-claims.

Polisario representatives claim that they have bases in the 60,000 sq km beyond the wall and that their new provisional capital is Bir Lahlou. In fact, a delegation of Indian members of Parliament were taken recently by them to one of their bases in western Sahara for the celebration of the SADR national day (February 27).



A section of the electronic wall

IN SOUTH Block, officials of the Ministry of External Affairs justify the recognition on the grounds that in the matter of regional disputes, they tend to be guided by the main regional organisation in the area, in this case, the Organisation of African Unity (OAU). The OAU recognised the SADR in 1982 and so far 63 other countries, mostly members of the Non-Aligned Movement from Africa and Latin America, have followed suit. Other factors mentioned by South Block in defence of their stand are that relations with Morocco have never been all that good (The Indian foreign minister was thrown out of the Islamic Conference in Rabat in 1972) and Morocco has always been considered a camp-follower of America. They also point to India's record of backing genuine liberation movements like the PLO.

But the fact remains that the Polisario is still a long way from achieving their liberation goals and India might well have been guilty of a hasty and premature step in their recognition of the SADR. In fact, former foreign secretary K.Rasgotra had been sent to Rabat as a special emissary in August last year, just before India's recognition move, to assess the situation and prepare the ground for the action India intended to take. INDIA TODAY has learnt that Rasgotra's advice was that recognition of the SADR would be a mistake. He recommended that if India was determined to go ahead, it would be advisable to wait till Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi met King Hassan at the United Nations (UN) in October. Rasgotra tried to meet Rajiv but, curiously enough, was unable to get an appointment. Failing that, he sent in his report, which was obviously ignored.

The Indian Government has also been sceptical of Morocco's oft-repeated promises to hold a referendum in the Sahara under UN supervision. However, according to Morocco's Interior Minister Dris Bassri, they are now prepared to hold the referendum at any time. But they have two significant pre-conditions: one, that it is held on the basis of the 1975 census conducted by the Spanish which put the Saharawi population at 75,000 and secondly, that Morocco is not obliged to recognise the Polisario.

That would hardly be acceptable to the Polisario since they have refused to accept the 1975 census figures on the basis that a large majority of the Saharawi population has been living in refugee camps in Algeria. Logically, the only way out of the present stalemate is a UN-supervised referendum. Despite its military claims, Morocco is nowhere near achieving total military superiority over the Polisario, which has the full support of Algeria. Libya was also supporting the Polisario but pulled out in 1984 after Colonel Gadaffi signed an accord with King Hassan.

Rabat seems well aware of the fact that it cannot wipe out the Polisario in military terms, which is why it is pouring money into the Sahara for development projects in the hope that if the referendum is held, the Saharawis will opt to stay in Morocco. Spanking new hospitals, schools and hotels are springing up in cities like Layoune and Dakhla. Medical and educational care is free for the Saharawis and every family is being provided a free house. In fact, Moroccons pay what is called a 'solidarity tax' which goes into the development of the Sahara with the result that per capita investment for the Saharawis has been seven times what it is for the rest of the Moroccon population.

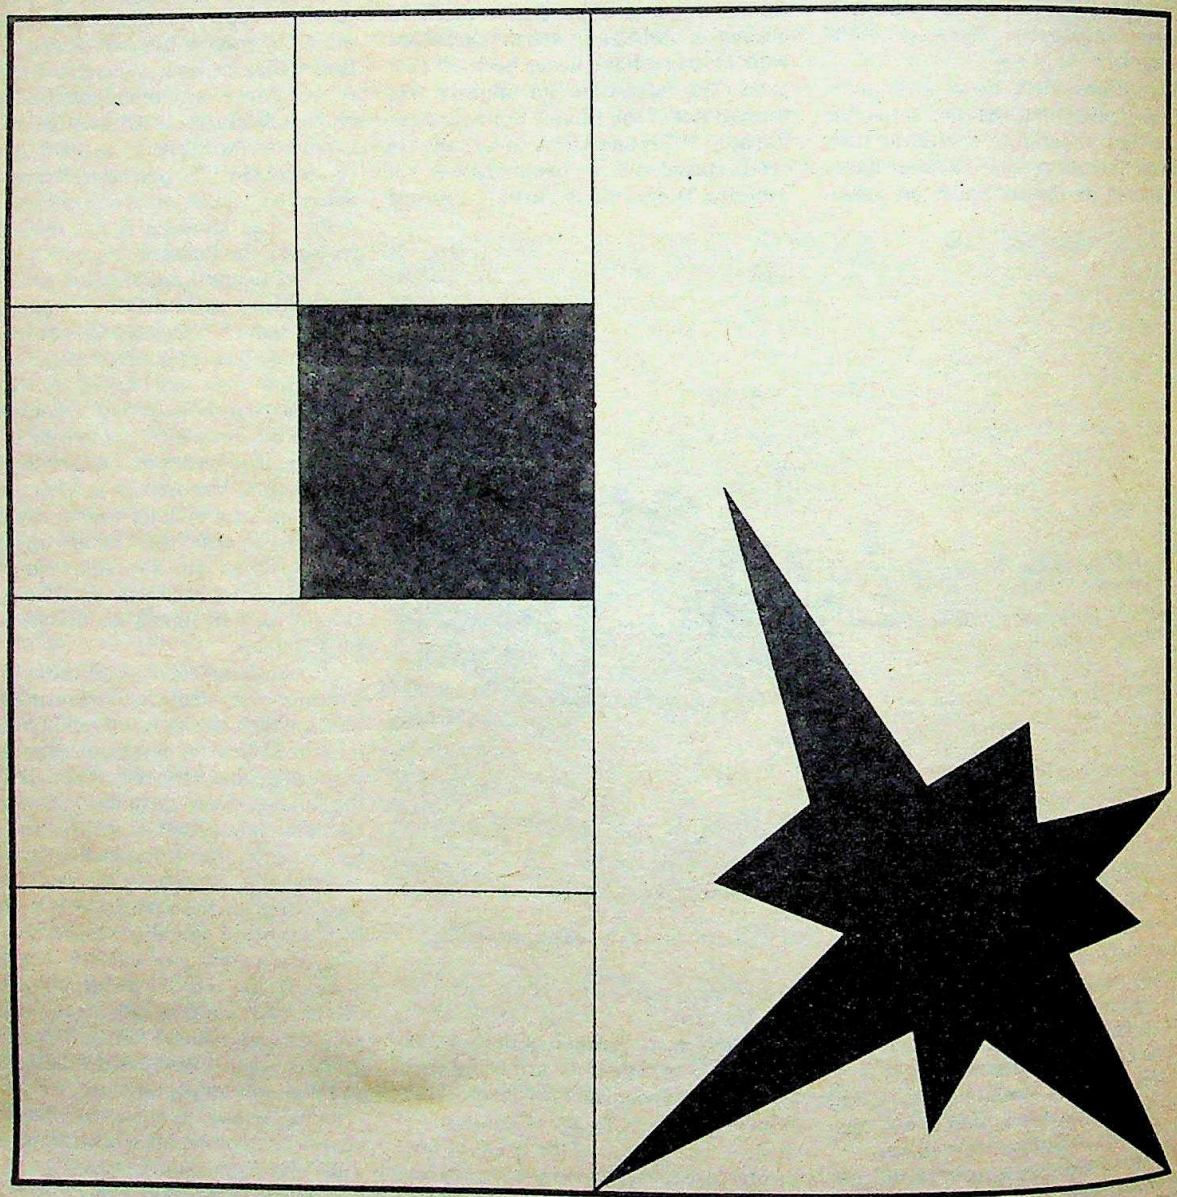
King Hassan is obviously banking heavily on a combination of his electronic walls and financial inducements to lure the Saharawi population back into the Moroccon fold. And, as the celebrations of last fortnight showed, also try and convince the world that the SADR does not exist in physical terms, despite recognition by countries like India. And so far, Morocco does appear to have the edge in the battle for the Sahara.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IPCL introduces PP-Block Copolymer.

A tough new plastic material that affirms an old Darwinian theory:



Survival of the fittest.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Polypropylene Block Copolymer.

Finally, there's a product with a better blend of properties than HDPE.

Block Copolymer has a unique rubber phase in its chemical structure which gives improved impact resistance, some reduction in modules, but the combination of rigidity/tensile/impact strength makes it the 'toughest' competitor when it comes to performance.

What's more, it retains all the properties of propylene homopolymers such as heat resistance, lowest density, integral hinge formation, better surface hardness, creep resistance and gloss.

Lower density and higher rigidity: A combination of these properties helps you control raw material costs in injection or blow moulding by reducing the wall thickness.

Improved chemical resistance, ESCR and low odour: For blow moulded containers to pack lube oils, edible oils and chemicals.

Rigidity/tensile/impact balance: For performance moulding of industrial components and parts. Modern automobiles and two wheelers in India will increasingly be taking advantage of Block Copolymer.

Surface hardness, and gloss: Housewares and appliances can wear lasting good looks.

Creep resistance: A must for stackable crates, bins and tote boxes.

IPCL'S commitment

IPCL is the largest producer of thermoplastics in the country. With a distribution network to match: 63 outlets across the length and breadth of India.

In addition to LDPE, PP (homopolymers) and PVC from its own production, IPCL now offers new thermo-plastics — LLDPE and PP Random Copolymers through imports. It's part of their commitment to the plastic industry.

So if you're a manufacturer, processor, end-user of plastics, or an entrepreneur setting out on a new venture, call IPCL.

Keeping pace with industry demands it.

IPCL

INDIAN PETROCHEMICALS CORPORATION LIMITED.

(A Govt. of India Undertaking)
P.O.Petrochemicals, Dist. Vadodara, Gujarat-391 346.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DEFENCE

The Spending Spree

MARTIN Ardbo is the quintessential Scandinavian businessman—dapper, business-like and extremely reticent. Last fortnight, rushing through dozens of closed-door meetings in room 1462 of New Delhi's Maurya Sheraton Hotel, he had good reason to be nervous.

Ardbo is the head of Bofors, one of the largest armament manufacturing companies in Sweden which is currently in the throes of a serious crisis. And in Delhi, he has the best chance of reviving his company's fortunes by swinging the largest arms sales deal Sweden has ever signed. The indications last fortnight were that India had finally taken a decision on the choice of the new 155mm field gun for the heavy artillery regiments and that Bofors had pipped at the post the British FH-70 and French GIAT guns in a contentious, five-year sales war.

The deal, according to reliable sources in South Block, involves the outright purchase of about 400 pieces costing around Rs 1,500 crore. This is to be followed by licensed production which should see a majority of the Indian field artillery units re-equipped with the new gun and will cost, inclusive of spares, an additional Rs 5,000 crore in the years to come. "This," said a Defence Ministry official, "is the biggest single deal after the Mirage-2000 that we have signed with a country outside the Soviet Union."

But in South Block, it has been 'big deal' time for many months. The Defence Ministry is currently on an arms buying spree—perhaps the biggest in the country's history. Reports of a decision on the artillery purchase followed closely the conclusion of a Rs 120-crore deal with the British Westland Corporation for the supply of 21 helicopters for the Oil and Natural Gas Commission (ONGC) and the signing of a memorandum of understanding for the sale of HMS Hermes, the Falklands' war flagship which the Royal Navy discarded almost two years ago. The price of the carrier is expected to be in the range of Rs 80 crore. But retrofit costs could double that.

The Hermes deal will also necessarily imply another fat order for Sea-Harrier jump-jets and Sea King helicopters, besides an assortment of missiles and electronic equipment making the whole package run into several hundred crores of rupees. Along with that has been the carefully leaked information that having already signed a contract with West Germany for the supply of two Type 209 submarines and the assembly of another two in India, the country's defence planners were now looking at the Type 245 submarines manufactured by Sweden's Kockum company.

Also on the anvil is the final decision on the Rs 200-crore deal for the Swiss Oerlikon anti-aircraft guns. The decision hinged on the opinion of experts who have been trying to find out if the system, one of the most modern and expensive in the world, was compatible with the Dutch Flycatcher early warning system which the army has already ordered.

Officials in the Defence Ministry acknowledge that the country is currently on the biggest defence buying spree of all times in European markets. "We have had major buying phases earlier, but in the past, invariably, a large slice of the cake went to the Soviet Union. Times have obviously changed now," said an official mentioning the fact that the decision on the Swedish guns was taken though the Russians have been pressing the case of their 152mm gun with only marginally lesser range and on much cheaper terms.

But defence officials say the decision to cold shoulder the Soviet offer was based not so much on political considerations as on the fact that the army insisted on the best available in the world markets. In spite of the high cost, they say, the Swedish gun gives India the best bargain and in the field of submarines, marine aviation and electronics, the Soviet offerings are just not comparable to the Europeans.

But in terms of sheer magnitude, all the other deals pale in comparison to the artillery purchase—the indecision on which nearly broke the record of seven years taken to finalise the Jaguar deal in the late '70s. For over five years now, rival manufacturers have fought a bitter battle for the contract which even saw the ambassadors of three contending countries write an unprecedented letter to the Indian Government pleading their respective cases. The American offer of the M-198 Towed Howitzer (of the kind that Pakistan has), was rejected in the initial stages as the Indian experts insisted on the gun's own power unit to shift it quickly in the battlefield after firing a round. In the trials that followed, the Austrian Voest Alpine Gun seemed to be winning hands down and the Indian gunners were seemingly happy with its sturdiness. But the Austrian offer was rejected on the relatively specious ground that the manufacturers imported the ammunition from elsewhere in Europe. The French gun is still in a state of development and in firing trials the British product just could not match the range of the Swedish gun.

But even till the last moment the British were trying hard with a new version of their gun with enhanced range, and once the deal is signed, questions will be asked as to whether this was the best bargain available to the country. The critics of the deal within the Government are at pains to point out that just like many other defence purchases in the recent past, the gun deal was also signed under the pressure of political hard-sell spearheaded by none else than the late Swedish premier Olaf Palme, who had taken up the Bofors case with Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi during his two visits to India. "Ever since he struck a rapport with the Indian Government, the defence planners here have been tilting towards Sweden", a well-known arms agent alleged, pointing also to the fact that it was during this period when India began to look at even the Swedish subs.

That was an approach which surprised even the Swedes. Sources in the Defence Ministry say that initially when they approached the Swedish dealers they were sceptical. They could hardly believe that India would think of diversifying the source of a system as complicated as a modern submarine just when the two West German subs manufactured for India were undergoing trials in the Baltic and hundreds of Indian sailors, officers and technical personnel being trained.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

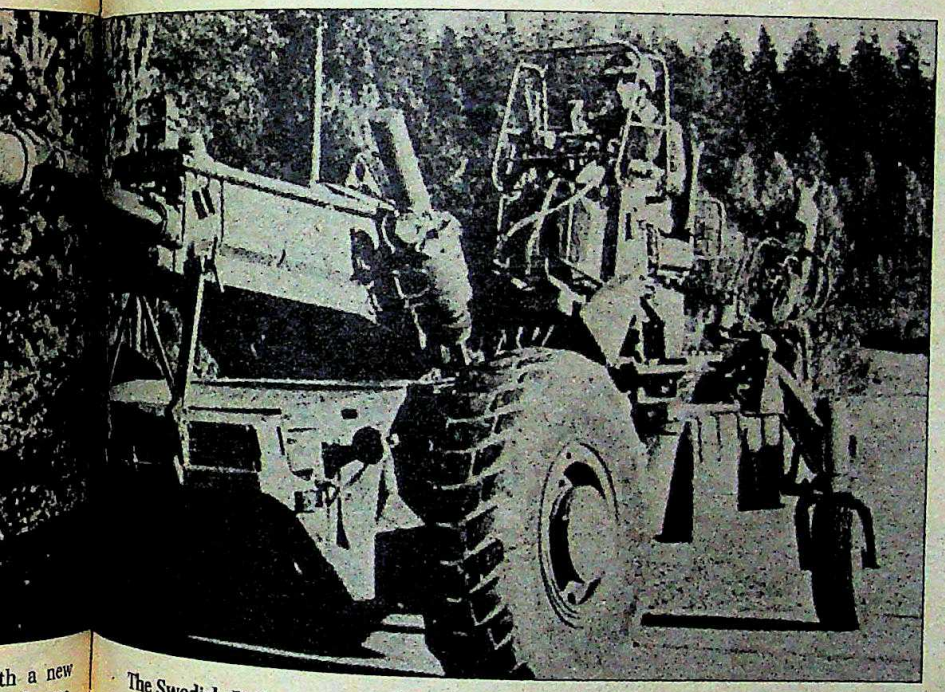
THIS had followed strong rumours in the arms business grapevine that India's negotiations with West Germany for two more subs were running into problems over the question of price escalation. Officials in South Block say the Swedes felt that India had made the approach to them merely to pressurise the Germans and refused to furnish a proposal unless the Government paid them for it. Consequently, India payed Sweden close to a crore of rupees to prepare a proposal for the sale of two submarines.

High level sources in the Defence Ministry, however, say that the approach is not a mere ploy. The Type 209 subs, it is said, were ordered despite certain doubts in naval headquarters. These doubts increased after the two Type 209s, operated by the Argentinian Navy, failed to show up anywhere near the scene of action during the Falklands War while the British fleet continued its depredations. While the Germans obviously blamed this on the disinclination of the Argentinian Government to commit its navy in the battle, many in Delhi thought that this confirmed their worst suspicion—that the sub was too noisy to go close to a modern, well-protected fleet.

But experts in Delhi also admit that any shift from one line of submarine production to another now will entail enormous costs and unless the bargain with the Germans fails completely, it will hardly be wise to switch subs in midstream. "Such a shift at this stage can only be a major political decision," a senior official said.



The Swedish Bofors 155mm field gun: sales war

That, however, has indeed been the case with practically every major defence purchase in the recent past. The most significant example is that of the Westland order on which so much hinged for the tottering manufacturing company.

So desperate were the British to clinch the deal that they produced five prototypes of the helicopter incorporating improvements sought by India, and on the negotiating table, India was more or less able to grab the price and terms she wanted and even succeeded in linking the deal to the demand for sterner treatment of the Sikh secessionists in the UK. And in London there were audible sighs of relief as the contract was signed. "I am delighted, " said Westland President Sir John Cuckney who could hardly have hoped to bag the order after Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi vehemently criticised the helicopter in Parliament last year. Now, even if the Westland order means buying a little less than the best available in the world markets, India expects to offset that in terms of political and diplomatic gain.

Similarly, the proposed purchase of the 23,000 ton aircraft carrier, the Hermes, has been greeted with a mixture of euphoria and surprise in Britain. The carrier has been lying idle in Portsmouth for the last two years and defence analysts have openly queried India's interest in a carrier already rejected by several countries.

On an entirely different and purely military level, the new buying spree raises familiar questions. Why, for example, has the Indian armament industry failed to grow out of the 105mm gun stage? Why, also, is a decision being made now to buy an old aircraft carrier while there has been talk of manufacturing one indigenously for many years now? The obvious explanation is that Hermes is expected to fill the gap of over a decade between the period when INS Vikrant becomes increasingly a liability and the new production begins. But similar explanations have been given before for ad hoc purchases. The Soviet T-72 tank is a case in point.

But when it comes to military purchases it is often not easy to find an acceptable rationale. While it is still one thing to purchase tanks, advanced fighter planes, submarines and missiles, the Government hardly has an explanation to the kind of illogical shopping-mania that tends to prevail in the Defence Ministry. There is hardly a reason, for example, why India should have bought Rs 10 crore worth of parachutes from South Korea and France when parachutes have been manufactured at Kanpur for many years. Similar lack of reason marks many other recent, smaller orders such as the ones for 1,000 passive night goggles and 3,000 pieces of illuminating ammunition for 81mm mortars. Both commodities are manufactured in India but the local goggles are not accepted by the army because of problems with a small component and the Indian ammunition needs a better fuse. "The Indian equipment could become as good as the imported one if only the small component and the fuse were imported at one hudredth of the total import now," says an official in the Department of Defence Production. But in the ministry, officials like him are in a minority and can do little more than stop only the odd order such as the ridiculous one for 1.4 million blankets from Australia last year at a time when most Indian woollen mills had excess capacity.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA with RAMESH CHANDRAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TEARING UP

THE EICHER Goodearth group of companies is reorganising itself. Three subsidiary companies—Eicher Tractors, Eicher Farm Machinery and Continental Auto Parwanoo Ancillaries—are to be merged into a new company which will be called Eicher Tractors. The three were privately held, but the new firm will go public. Also on the drawing-boards are a Rs 6-crore modernisation programme and a new range of tractors, most of them of the small horsepower variety.

While the mergers are meant to increase production efficiencies by bringing manufacturing facilities under one roof, the overall drive is in response to shifts in the tractor market. The tractor company's share of its traditional northern strongholds has marginally increased, but sales in the south and the east have fallen when compared with other tractor manufacturers who have picked up more orders in these regions. So Eicher's share of the national market has dipped by about 3 per cent over the past three or four years.

SUGAR COATING

CONTRARY to what Finance Ministry economists have been saying, the Government will shop overseas for sugar this year as well. More than five lakh tonnes are to be imported, involving a foreign exchange outgo of around Rs 125 crore. Official sources insist, however, that the import is meant as an insurance against domestic sugar prices flaring up, and that the sugar stock position is comfortable. Consumer demand is pegged at about 80 lakh tonnes a year, but much of the 19.5 lakh tonnes of sugar bought abroad last year landed in the country after last October, when the sugar year begins. Production this year is expected to cross 65 lakh tonnes, 3.6 lakh tonnes more than last year's level.

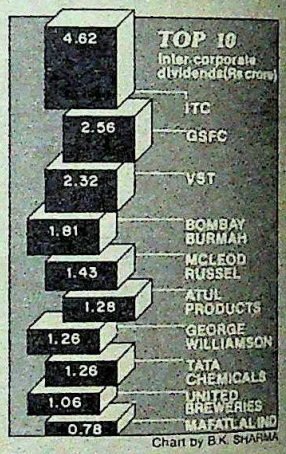
TREASURE HUNT

UNDETERRED by the flak that he has got because of the numerous raids mounted in recent weeks by tax officials, Finance Minister V.P. Singh has charted out new categories of people who will come under the taxman's scrutiny. First it was businessmen; then officials were added to the list. Soon the focus of the raids will shift to professionals, including doctors and lawyers, many of whom are believed to be amassing small fortunes as income while not paying the Government its dues. The Government's records show that even though there are large numbers of prosperous professionals, the taxes paid by them are very small in relation to the incomes that they are believed to be earning. There has been little action on this front so far because of the usual paucity of records, but Singh is confident that the raids will deliver results once they get into top gear.

SMALL SERVICE

SMALL-SCALE industrialists have fought and managed to win a successful battle against the Government's move to close down Small Industries Service Institutes in some of the southern states. The matter, however, does not end there. An official committee on the functioning of the service institutes is still looking into the case. These institutes aid small companies in a number of ways, but their functions are duplicated by the directorates of industries and district industry centres in the states. The committee is expected to submit its report in another month.

TAX BURDEN



THE BUDGET proposal to do away with the tax concession on inter-corporate dividends is likely to have significant impact only on the Unit Trust of India (UTI). A study by the research bureau of the Economic Times shows that 101 large and medium companies had invested Rs 463.37 crore in the shares of other companies and in UTI units. But 95 per cent of this was in UTI. The total dividend income earned from this was Rs 31.51 crore, but the rate of return was poor: no more than 6.8 per cent. And the total tax liability as a result of the withdrawal of the tax concession is estimated at Rs 9.45 crore. The companies that will bear most of this burden are ITC (which had a dividend income last year of Rs 4.62 crore), its sister company VST (Rs 2.32 crore), Gujarat State Fertiliser (Rs 2.56 crore), Bombay Burmah (Rs 1.81 crore), Mcleod Russel (Rs 1.43 crore), Atul Products (Rs 1.28 crore), George Williamson and Tata Chemicals (both Rs 1.26 crore), United Breweries (Rs 1.06 crore) and Mafatlal Industries (Rs 0.78 crore).

WRONG NUMBER

THE RESOURCES crunch in the seventh plan has had yet another fall-out. The Planning Commission has temporarily closed the door to companies seeking to invest in jelly-filled cable projects. The commission recommended that a public sector firm's expansion plan be turned down because several state government-owned firms have letters of intent to turn out some 75 lakh conductor km of these cables. While the commission argued that higher levels of cable production were justified by the demand for telephones, it also said that the money for this is not available: the Department of Telecommunication's seventh plan budget was drastically slashed from some Rs 12,000 crore to slightly over Rs 4,000 crore. However, the position may be reviewed after two years if more cash is found for telecommunications.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

The classy vest. See it as a basic executive perk.

While you tackle a hectic schedule every minute of your working day, make sure physical comfort is in body hugging proximity! New VIP Royal vests. Designed with the minutest attention to detail. And stitched to perfection to give you the kind of executive comfort you've never had before. VIP Royal. You've come to deserve this perk.

The executive class of comfort.

VIP Royal VEST

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

INTRODUCING MICO-SUPER

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA'S FIRST BI-METAL ELECTRODE SPARK PLUG WITH PROJECTED INSULATOR

A new generation spark plug for the new generation of Indian vehicles

Vehicle technology is undergoing a rapid revolution in India. Keeping pace is MICO. With a new spark plug that has two unique features, for greater reliability and performance.

A projected insulator tip for super starting

Deposits on the nose of a spark plug can lead to misfiring. The longer the nose, the less likely misfiring will occur. The Super's long insulator nose is highly heat-absorptive – and helps the spark plug reach burn-off temperature quickly. Which in turn means super starting, every time!

A bi-metallic centre electrode to protect against overheating

The Super's composite electrode is made of two metals – nickel and copper. This enables it to have much lower electrode temperatures. The centre electrode's high heat-conductivity protects against thermal overload. That's why the Super has a wider heat range than conventional spark plugs with solid chromium-nickel electrodes!

Better starting, better acceleration and longer life

The Super is a premium spark plug for today's vehicles. Designed by BOSCH engineers in West Germany, the Super is now brought to you in India by MICO – leaders in spark plug and fuel injection technology.

Before fitting a Super in your vehicle, make sure you're buying the right type!

- W8DC FOR MARUTI
- W5BC FOR RAJDOOT - YAMAHA 350 CC

Super spark plugs for other new Indian vehicles will follow.

① Composite centre electrode
High heat-conductivity (copper core) and wear resistance (chromium-nickel coating)

② Air gap
To compensate for different expansion characteristics of centre electrode and insulator under heat

③ Long insulator nose
Highly absorptive of heat, reaches burn-off temperature quickly

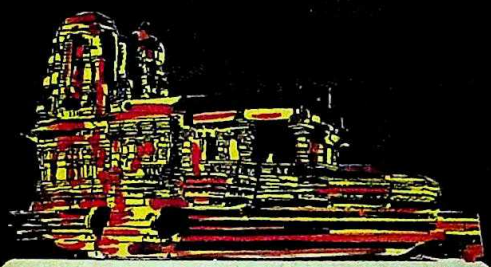
THE NEW MICO-SUPER. SPARKING OFF A REVOLUTION IN SPARK PLUG TECHNOLOGY.

MICO

LICENCE BOSCH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Recreating poetry in silks — a monumental rhapsody



PILLALAMARI

From time immemorial, inborn aspirations of the creator-artisan finds expression in beauty evocative of his confidence-of-touch and grace. The handiwork of nature's splendour resplendent in beauty meets the eye ... And oneness of the earth-soul flows through the magic cycles of time.

Weaving a world of sensation into visible vibrations of loveliness is the mastercraftsman who absorbs and sustains the flow of nature in this sensational Gadwal saree.

apco

fabrics

kiron/apco/85/s3

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MOHAN MURJANI

Dressing up for the Future

MOHAN Bhagwandas Murjani has made it happen before—creating the class of designer jeans by launching his Gloria Vanderbilt brand in 1978 at four times the price of a pair of Levi's, then making a sensation last year with the mass marketing of Coca Cola clothes, and in between, broadening his range of products to include a wider array of apparel, plus shoes and fragrances.

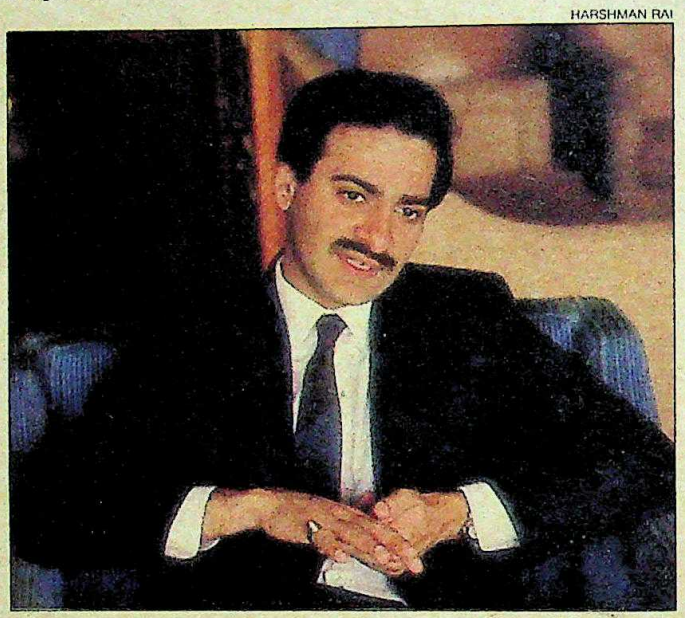
Now the 39-year-old Sindhi businessman of Hong Kong origin, London-based and New York oriented, plans to do it yet again, with jeans priced at a horrendous $75 (Rs 900). The objective—go straight to the top of the designer market again by appealing to the status-conscious buyer. After that, there is his all-new concept of electronic shopping that he calls 'Project 21st Century'.

And last fortnight, he was in India, scouting the market, weighing his options on business partners and project proposals, talking of touching home base because he felt he could relate to Rajiv Gandhi. Already the largest Indian-owned textile company abroad (turnover last year: $500 million—Rs 600 crore), with a place in the top 10 of America's clothing industry, Murjani is clearly getting ready to hit the headlines yet again, both at home and abroad.

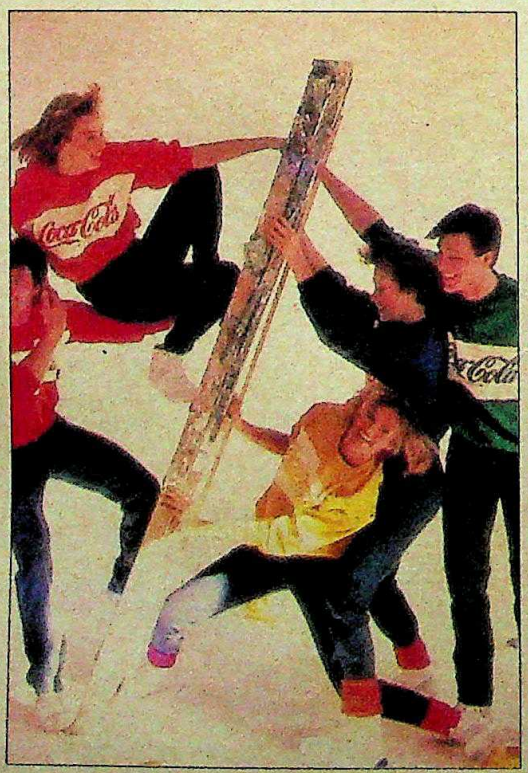
He has, of course, been doing just that ever since 1978 when he launched the Gloria Vanderbilt jeans. After that phenomenal success, he diversified his clothing range in 1980, then began licensing out the manufacture of items like shoes and fragrances (his launch of Gloria Vanderbilt fragrances was the most successful in America's history, outselling Charlie in its first year with sales of $55 million—Rs 66 crore), and moved on to be the winner in the race for the Coca Cola clothes contract.

Two months ago, his business flair was evident yet again when he did a neat marketing trick to launch an unknown designer called Tommy Hilfiger. Advertisements informed fashion-conscious New York that the initials of the four leading designers in the country were C...K..., R...L..., P...E..., and T...H... The first three were easy to guess (Calvin Klein, Ralph Lauren and Perry Ellis), but since no one had heard of Tommy Hilfiger, the ads created curiosity. Murjani then went in for the kill by saying that Hilfiger was going to be the next big name in the fashion business.

HARSHMAN RAI



The $2 million campaign, including 6-page spreads in leading magazines, worked, and an unknown designer whose name no one could pronounce till then became an overnight celebrity. Market research showed that 82 per cent of the target audience wanted to buy Hilfiger clothes, that 90 per cent believed he was better than the other men's designers. "It was an attempt to corrupt the minds of the consumers," Murjani says disarmingly, "to make them believe that what they had in their wardrobes was yesterday's fashion. And through our ad campaign we straightaway put Hilfiger in the same league as Calvin Klein and all the others. It's almost embarrassing how successful this campaign was. We manufactured the guy. People now believe this is the new guy."



The press took up the refrain. GQ called Hilfiger "the big talent taking shape". USA Today headlined an article: "Is he the next Calvin Klein?" Murjani says Hilfiger's clothes are now in Sachs, Bloomingdales and Nieman Marcus. Designed for the yuppies ("We dress Wall Street lawyers on weekends," says the new Calvin Klein), his clothes are described as 'classics with a twist' and 'liberated basics' (basics being trade jargon for clothes like khaki trousers and white shirts). One example of such 'liberated basics'—extra-large pockets

Murjani (above) and the Coca Cola campaign: high flyers

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

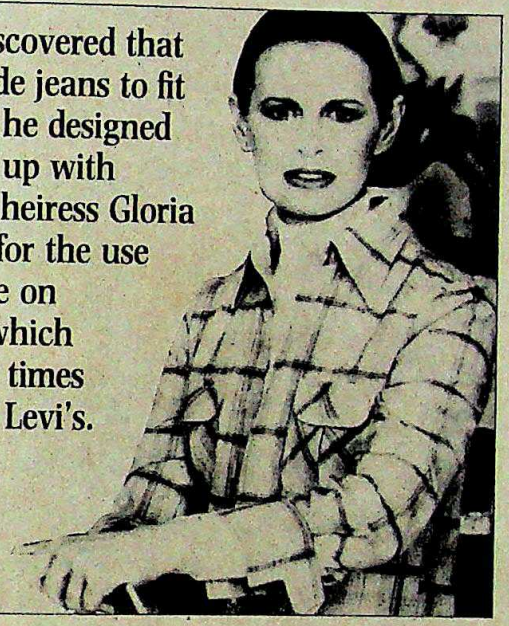
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

on a plain, white, cotton 'Oxford' shirt.

The Hilfiger campaign came close on the heels of what could be Murjani's biggest line of business: Coca Cola clothes. There always have been Coca Cola clothes, but nothing more than promotional give-aways like T-shirts and caps. The proposal in 1984 to broaden this range and make it a major line of business came not from any marketing genius but from Coca Cola's legal department, which said new products would have to be launched to protect the brand name and make it mean something "more than a brown drink". Suggestions: Coke shoes, Coke watches, Coke clothes.

The Atlanta-based company picked Murjani from among the various contenders for the licence to peddle new Coca Cola products, including clothes. There was scepticism in the trade, and the inevitable wisecracks (one suggestion was a diet sweatshirt). But Murjani saw the challenge as twofold: first, to transfer the positive image of Coke (quality, reliability, value) to apparel, and second, to determine how far this could be taken. His conclusion: "We achieved the biggest brand transfer in trade-mark history."

Murjani discovered that no one made jeans to fit women; so he designed and signed up with millionaire heiress Gloria Vanderbilt for the use of her name on the jeans, which sold at four times the price of Levi's.



Gloria Vanderbilt: 'royal' partnership

SO MURJANI was into the volume business, peddling clothes in bright colours with large graphics (like the Coke logo, or pop art cartoons), in traditional colours with small graphics, then in pastels, sometimes without even the Coca Cola logo being visible. The media-blitz advertising cost $12 million (Rs 15 crore), and sales in the first year, ending in August, are expected to top $100 million (Rs 120 crore).

Suddenly, Murjani was once again awash in headlines. Stories on the new venture were run by Businessweek, Wall Street Journal, Time, Newsweek, People, USA Today, New York Times and others. He said last fortnight in Bombay that his Gloria Vanderbilt range of products still sold more than the Coca Cola range (despite the jeans taking a beating in the textile market crash of 1983), but that this would soon change.

His next big game plan is Lois jeans. The brand is well known in Europe and elsewhere as a mass market product like Levi's and Wrangler, but is relatively unknown in the US. Murjani had been looking for a base in Europe, and tied up with Lois manufacturer TYCESA (which he says is the largest textile company in Europe) for reciprocal selling arrangements: TYCESA would sell Gloria Vanderbilt jeans in Europe, and Murjani would hawk Lois Jeans in the US.

But rather than market a basic product, Murjani decided to go upmarket once again: If Gloria Vanderbilt could sell for $32 back in 1978, why couldn't Lois sell for $75 in 1986? So he designed to make Lois top rung quality. The trick, as always with Murjani, is in the marketing gameplan. For you can sell the best jeans for up to $40 or a little more (the most expensive jeans on the market today are priced at $48), but it is image and status which will take the price to $75. Hence the novel concept of French Cowboy jeans: because, as the ad says, "while the American cowboy owns his boots, his horse and his gun, the French cowboy owns the ranch". More advertiser corruption: the shift to French cowboy jeans is like moving from beer to champagne. And more hype: "French women have been getting into our jeans for years."

How successful this outrageous campaign will be remains to be seen. Lois Jeans are only being test marketed now, and Murjani says a formal launch will be in 1987. But he explains that the status jeans dropped out of the market three years ago, when the textile crash forced all prices down, and the slot is vacant again. He intends filling it, in the same way that he did back in 1978 with Gloria Vanderbilt.

At that time, looking for a way to move from his manufacturing operation in Hong Kong to a marketing base in the United States, he had surveyed the market and come up with what he calls a simple discovery—that in 150 years of making jeans, no one had designed a pair of jeans to fit women. So women who wanted to wear jeans had to either live with ill-fitting clothes or take them in at the waist. Simplifying matters today, Murjani says: "All I had to do was get jeans to fit a woman."

But he didn't want to compete with Levi's and Wrangler, and wanted also to be the "Rolls Royce in jeans". For this, he needed a brand name, "and the one name that stood out was that of Gloria Vanderbilt". It spelt royalty in America, Gloria herself was personally famous because in her childhood there had been a celebrated case for her custody, fought by her mother and aunt, and she herself was a painter and therefore associated with the art world. They signed a deal, the jeans were priced at $32 (Levi's were then selling for $8), and were an instant success. What had for Murjani been a $50 million business till then grew to 10 times that size in two years.

But a shake-out in the textile business in 1983 forced down the prices of all designer jeans (Gloria Vanderbilt Jeans now sell for under $30), and Murjani had to adapt. He did the sensible thing—broadened his range of products because focussing on just jeans meant being vulnerable. Since all these could not possibly be made by Murjani himself, this diversification inevitably took him into the licensing business. Murjani International now focussed on sourcing supplies and marketing them by creating brand names, providing the design support, creating the image for the product. As Murjani says, the licensing business is worth $40 billion (Rs 48,000 crore) in the US, and more than 30 per cent of this is in apparel—plenty of opportunity there.

The business has other advantages: launching new products does not call for great investments of capital diversification, expansion can be quick, and a downturn in sales does not mean retrenching staff from your own factories.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

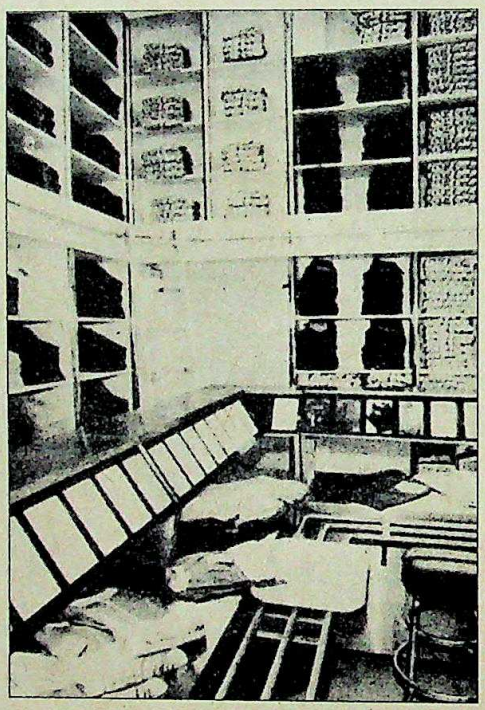
Also, it helps Murjani be "market driven rather than manufacturing driven".

It hasn't been roses all the way, of course, and Murjani has made his share of mistakes. Back in the early 1970s, fresh out of a Boston college with a business degree and still in his 20s, he diversified the business that his father had founded in Hong Kong in 1946, and went into bicycle manufacturing and spinning. But business underwent a downturn, and both units had to be sold, with substantial losses. More recently, Murjani tried launching coloured jeans because black jeans had done extraordinarily well. But the market remained unenthusiastic, and the project had to be given up.

Inevitably, some of the high hopes of growth that Murjani had in the first flush of the Vanderbilt success have not materialised. In 1980, for instance, he had told INDIA TODAY that he hoped to hit a group turnover of $1 billion (Rs 1,200 crore) in 1981 after doing $500 million in 1980. But last fortnight he said in Bombay that his current turnover was $500 million. Clearly, despite the diversifications and the launching of new products and brand names, the total size of the business has not grown.

BUT MURJANI has had his profitable flashes of foresight too. When negotiating with Gloria Vanderbilt for a jeans tie-up, he wanted a clause in the contract for buying her brand name outright. The great-granddaughter of the railroad king was initially outraged at the question of 'buying a Vanderbilt' but at her lawyer's suggestion, put in a price tag that both she and her lawyer were certain Murjani would never be able to afford. The jeans did so well that he could afford the price just two years later (as he says, annual royalty payments to her were half the buyout price). He bought the brand name outright and then licensed the manufacture of the jeans to an American company, so that now someone else did the work and he got the royalties. None of this helped Murjani's relationship with the glamorous Vanderbilt, but he shrugs off the subject with a cryptic: "That's business."

Murjani, of course, is more than the sum total of his businesses. Though personally low-key, he has marketing flair and business style, and he sees himself essentially as "a creative force in the organisation". And the one idea that he hopes to push clear through to the 21st century is electronic marketing. The concept was born in a small way, when he opened a store on New York's Columbus Avenue, called Fizzazz, to market Coca Cola clothes—using interacting video screens to attract customers into the store and getting them to push buttons that would activate the video screens to show them what the shelves had for them one floor below. Murjani then went a step further and thought up the idea of a video catalogue mail order service—video cassettes handed out either free or for up to $9 each at video libraries. Potential customers could take these home and take a look at what they could order by calling a toll free number and giving their credit card numbers—delivery in 24 hours. As usual, there was the clever advertising line: 'Pop this cassette open for a sparkling, carbonated fashion video: free'.



Murjani's video store: innovative

Now Murjani has taken electronic shopping to its logical conclusion: He is thinking of setting up a chain of electronic kiosks much like the streetside electronic machines introduced by banks a few years ago, where you can press a button, see what is on offer and then place your order for mail order delivery. Murjani sees enormous potential for this: "Imagine a world without boundaries," he says. "And I can install such a kiosk anywhere, even on Chowpatty beach, so that you can mail order clothes you want from New York. It's not such a difficult thing. The technology, transport service and other requirements for this are all there."

In the middle of all this excitement, Murjani has finally set his sights on India. He met Rajiv Gandhi in the US last November: "Rajiv was highly respectful of what I had achieved in the US as an Indian, and said I should come to India. Because of that, I am here today (in Bombay)." During his two weeks in the country, Murjani found that "we are very well known in India, that we command respect". He thinks that any public share issue that he makes in India would be a 'hot stock', but he is wary of jumping in straightaway: "We have to be careful because we must live up to our promise and give a good solid return."

So he hasn't yet decided how exactly he should enter the Indian market, with what and in partnership with whom. He is thinking in terms of being a bridge between American and Indian companies because "US companies are normally slightly uncomfortable about India because the cultures are different. And they hear lots of things, both good and bad. We say we are in the US, and we are also Indian, so both sides can relate to us and we can be an ideal business partner from both sides."

Some of these assumptions and assessments of India under Rajiv Gandhi may be naive, but Murjani is confident, and says he will go into the areas where the Government wants the country to be in, and not just apparel: "We can be in almost any field, and there is nothing specific yet. But we will start with something new and high quality." He mentions telecommunications, food processing and electronics as possibilities, and feels that "in India you've got to be almost foolish to be not successful."

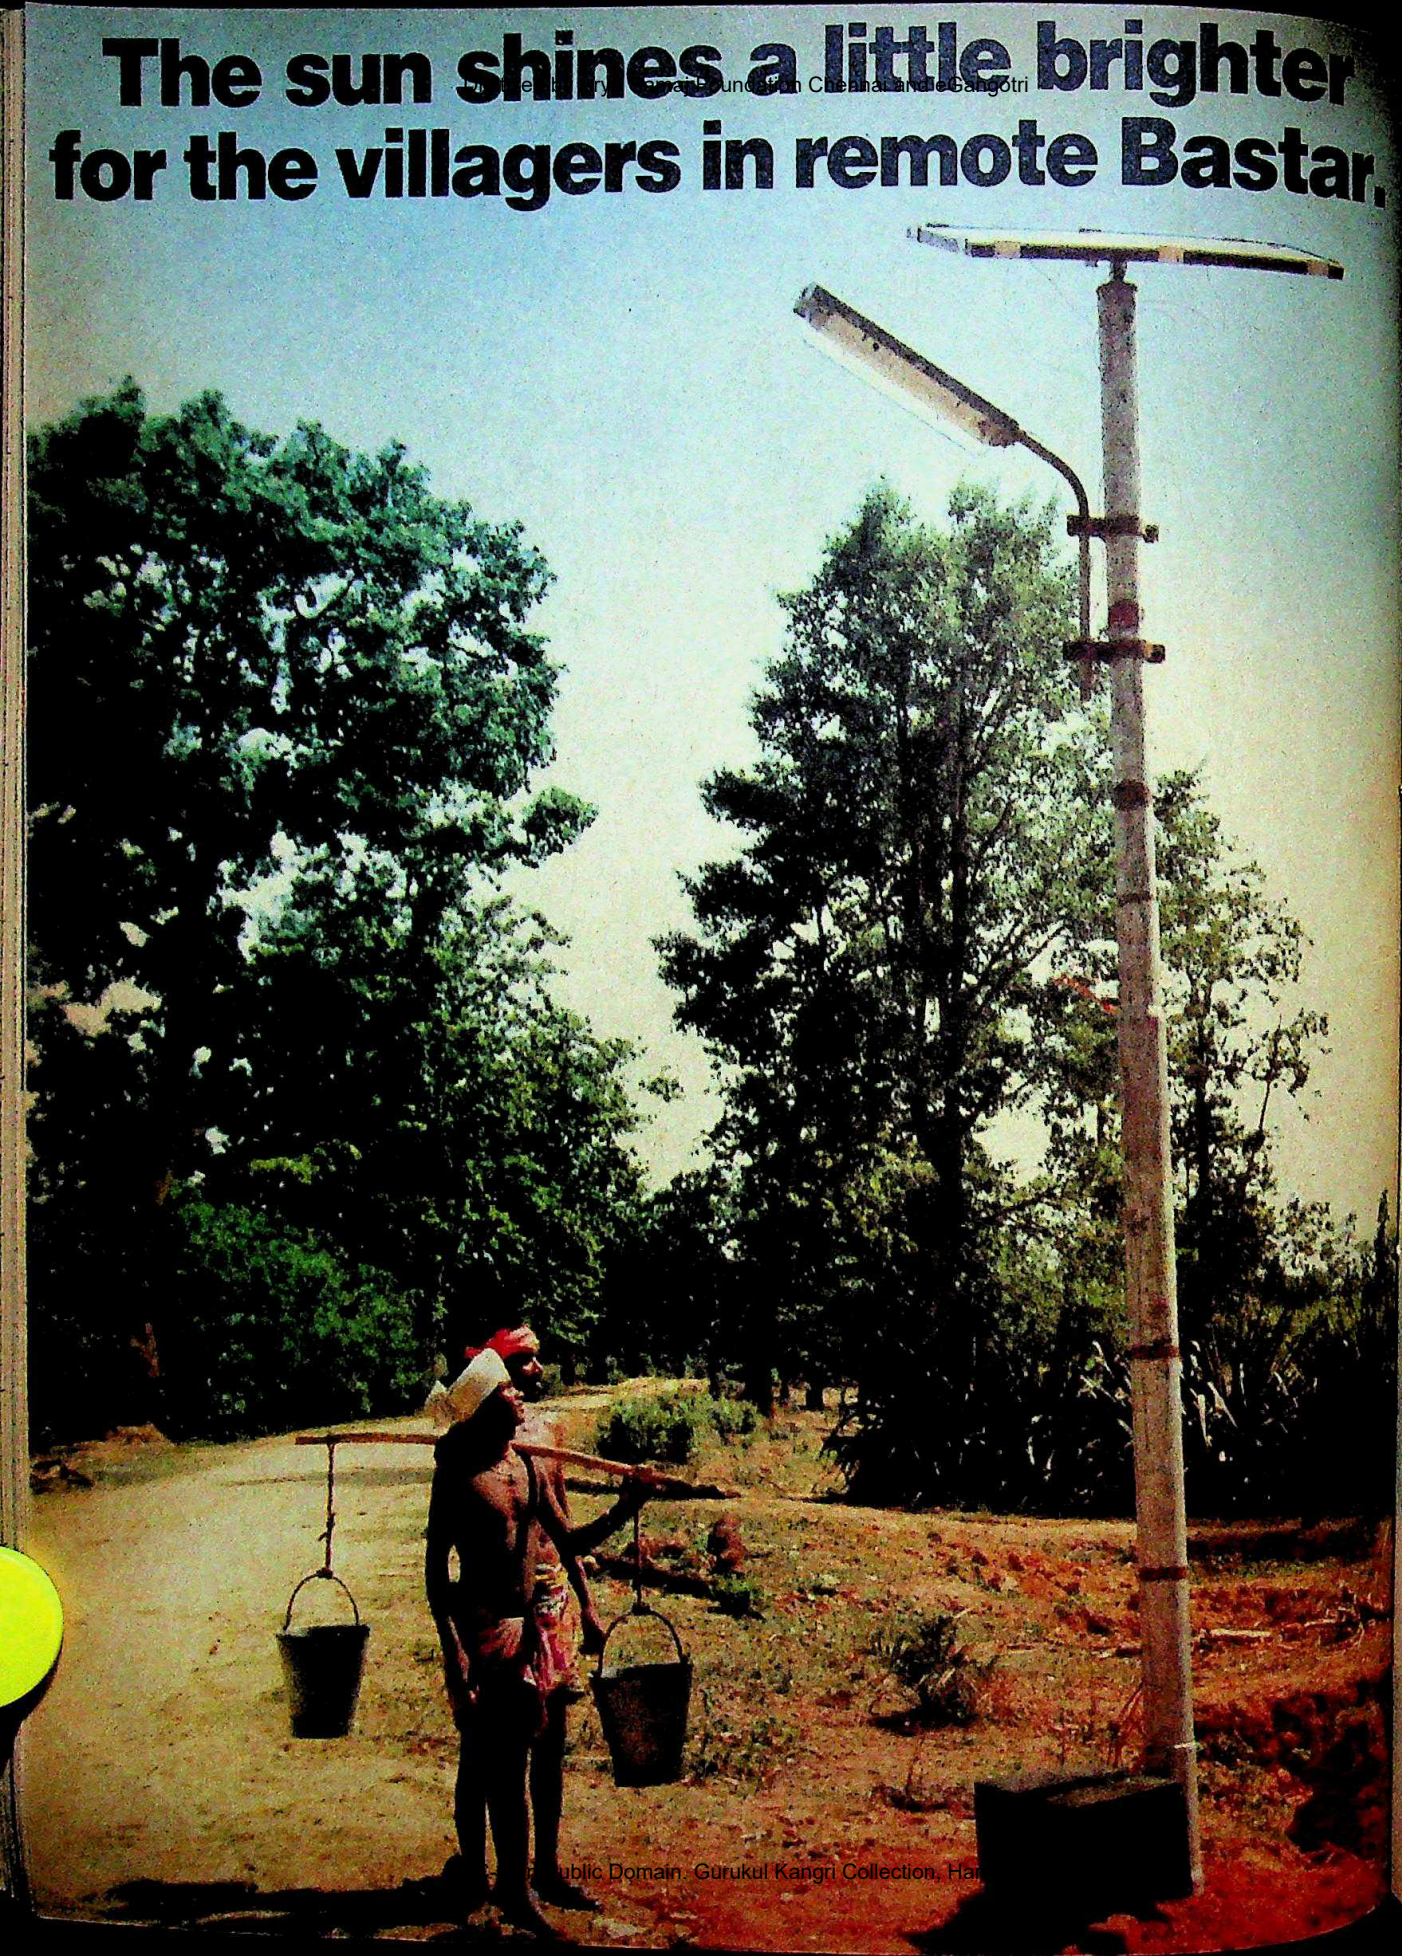
Murjani, who retains his Indian passport, had once earlier located some Indian suppliers for his products sold abroad, but problems with power supply, strikes and delivery schedules forced him to give up. And while stressing the importance his family has always placed on integrity and morality, he said: "We were not very comfortable with the bureaucracy and the methods of doing business in India." Now he thinks things

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

The sun shines a little brighter for the villagers in remote Bastar.



Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Hari

Centr life of

The remo
District
A pow
The ne was about from the vi way to brin without cri
Simple Photovoltai designed ar
by CEL wer Orcha. To b happiness t
Hundreds o
Examples
Today,
many far-flu
have benefit
SPV power
CEL.
Electric energy for li pumping, co
and TV sets,
tations, wea

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Central Electronics Limited. Brightening up the life of the commonest of the common man.

The remote, little village of Orcha in the Bastar District of Madhya Pradesh had a problem.

A power problem.

The nearest electricity transmission point was about 90 km away and was separated from the village by a forest. And there was no way to bring electrical power to Orcha without criminal deforestation.

Simple to operate and maintain, Solar Photovoltaic (SPV) Systems designed and manufactured by CEL were provided to Orcha. To bring a little happiness to the villagers.

Hundreds of Shining Examples

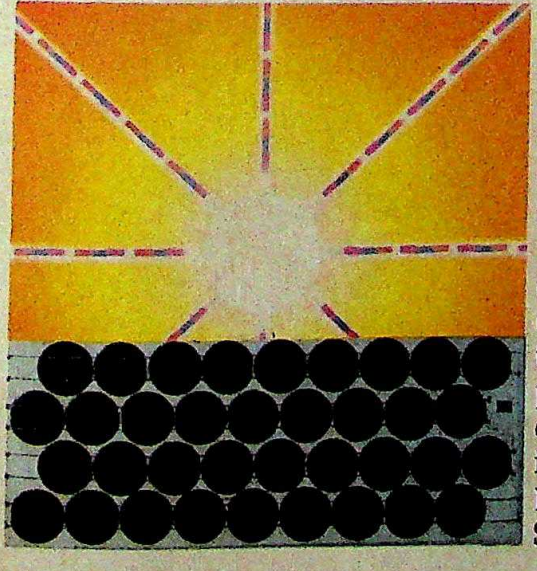
Today, like Orcha, many far-flung villages have benefited from the SPV power provided by CEL.

Electricity from solar energy for lighting, water pumping, community radio and TV sets, telecommunications, weather monitoring and for many other purposes.

Power from the Sun

Efficient and direct conversion of solar energy into electricity is slowly but surely becoming a reality, especially in remote and far-flung areas, where electricity may never reach otherwise.

The international state-of-the-art technology that was pioneered in this country by Central Electronics Limited.



Indeed, an independent U.S. study in June 1985 recognised CEL's role not merely as the leader in all Third-World countries, but also as one of the top 10 firms in the world.

A Corporation that is dedicated to tapping energy from the sun and taking electrical power to places where it was once considered next to impossible to do so.

In collaboration with the SUN – the inexhaustible source.

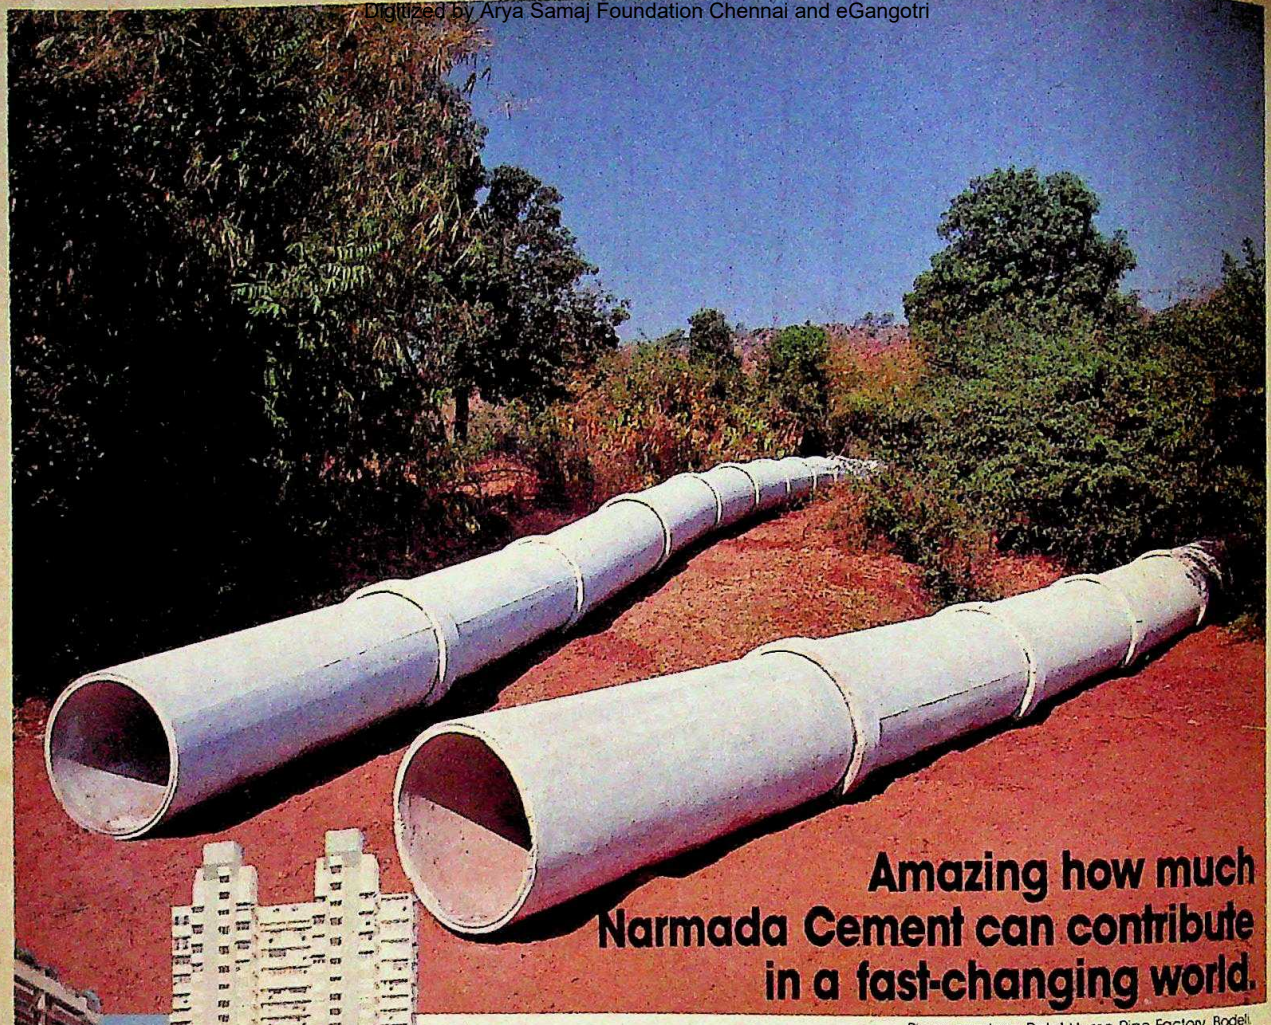
CEL Central Electronics Limited

A Govt. of India (DSIR) Enterprise

Shaping the future with the sun

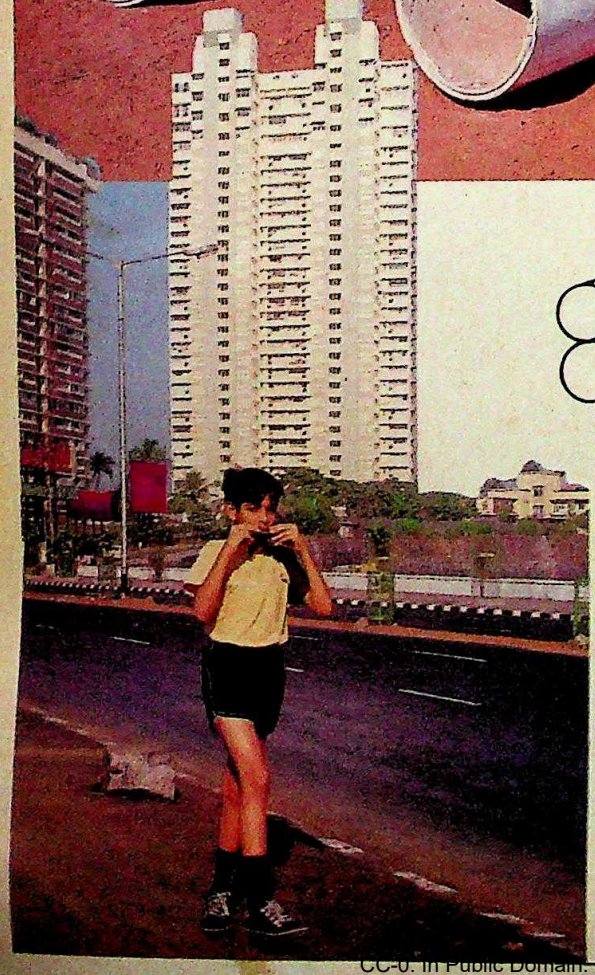
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

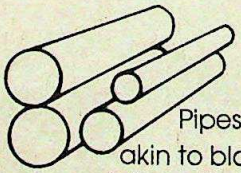
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Amazing how much Narmada Cement can contribute in a fast-changing world.

Pipes, courtesy: Patel Hume Pipe Factory, Bodeli





Pipes are akin to blood vessels in a city. They'd better be fighting fit. Just as choking or bursting of blood vessels can ruin a human body, a crack or break in a major pipeline can create havoc in a city.

That's why Narmada Cement. Its higher compressive strength imparts sturdiness to pipes. Just so that they perform the way they should — all their lives. It also means no breakage and wastage during production. Quite apart from this Narmada fact —its quick-setting time actually ensures greater production from the same mould.

narmada cement

The years will tell.

4th Floor, Bakhtawar, Nariman Point, Bombay-400 021.

SANKALP/NC/64/85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

are changing because of Rajiv Gandhi's drive towards liberalisation, against corruption, in favour of modernisation. Says Murjani: "I can relate to him. He is the same age, he has surrounded himself with young, bright people."

He shrugs off any suggestion that he is coming to India either because Hong Kong's future is uncertain or because his businesses elsewhere are not doing very well just now. "I'm not pulling out of Hong Kong: China wants us, so that doesn't bother me at all. We're going to continue as a strong, influential force in Hong Kong." And he dismisses unconfirmed talk that his businesses worldwide are not doing very well: "Look at my stores, at my factories. They don't smell trouble. If this is what being down is, I'd like to see what's up."

He knows what being up is, of course. Today, his Gloria Vanderbilt fragrances sell $150 million (Rs 180 crore) annually in terms of retail prices (half that at the wholesale level), his shoes "outsell every designer brand" (another $150 million retail), his jeans remain among the top three designer brands, and Coca Cola clothes are still climbing the sales charts. The Gloria Vanderbilt brand name, in fact, has now been assessed as being worth $121 million (Rs 150 crore).

Interestingly enough, each new venture has entailed a new marketing concept—selling a celebrity name in the case of Vanderbilt, creating a celebrity out of a nobody in the case of Hilfiger, transferring a brand from a drink to clothes, as in Coca Cola, being first with the concept of electronic marketing, and so on. Murjani also talks of the "electric environment" in his company ("my people don't want to leave the office at night"), his belief in a lean organisation (he has no more than 250 employees in the US), a flexible organisational style ("we have a structure and don't have a structure"), and his willingness to "try anything if it makes sense".

He has critics, of course. Fellow businessmen dismiss innovations like the Fizzazz store as gimmicks that don't amount to much. But Mohan Murjani is convinced that this is going to be the shape of retail marketing in the 21st century, and he intends getting there ahead of the pack. And if his plans work out right, the man who has been called the Spielberg of the fashion industry could soon be setting up shop back home, in a country where another man talks constantly of reaching for the 21st century.

—T.N. NINAN

BUSINESSPEAK

Of Raids and Raiders

Rama Prasad Goenka, the new president of the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FICCI), has become the business community's primary spokesman at a time when most industrialists are concerned about the Government's tax raids on their community. The raids figured prominently in the deliberations at FICCI's annual session which was held last fortnight.

Goenka, who heads companies like Ceat Tyres, Philips Carbon Black and Asian Cables, is no stranger to raids: he himself has been raided by the Government in the past. Last fortnight, he spoke to Senior Editor T.N. NINAN on the latest round of raids and how the business community views them.

THERE are three issues involved in the business of raids. First, no one is questioning the authority of the Government to investigate cases of tax evasion. That right the Government has, and no one can dispute this. So if you ask me whether the raids qualitatively change the relationship between industry and Government, my answer is no. In any case, I don't think it is important for the Government whether the business community supports it or not: the community has only a few votes, and they don't count.

But one can criticise the methodology of the raids, and this is the second issue. Every active person works on the basis of his goodwill and his standing in the community. His relationship with others and the level of his interaction with them count considerably. This is the case whether you're a businessman, lawyer, doctor or politician. All these people work on goodwill. So till such time as a case is not established, the goodwill and reputation of a businessman should not be jeopardised.

The third point is that the finance minister himself has said that the proposal in his budget speech to conduct individual house-to-house surveys by the tax authorities may not be a good thing. And Mr V.P. Singh has assured some of us that he is going to take a second look at this subject.

Today, there is a feeling of insecurity among businessmen, because what it amounts to is that anyone can get raided. I can say this, that everyone is scared. But I think the raids will continue. This is the impression I get after reading and listening to the finance minister's speeches. During the period of the Janata government, I was harassed a lot. In the 30 months of Janata rule, my offices and homes were raided no fewer than 43 times. So I feel that no one can 'improve' on that harassment. But I don't see any political motivation in the raids now; to this extent the raids are different from those in the Janata period.

If the raids are for gaining political mileage, such drastic action would be wrong. But I think the Government's objectives today are two fold. First, it wants to get more tax revenue. Second, it is trying to tell people: Well, boys, we've relaxed the laws, but these laws are to be followed. The Government, I think, has achieved both its objectives. So from the Government's point of view the raids may not be counter-productive.

I don't know whether the people who have been raided were the right targets for being raided. My information is one-sided. Some of the people who have been raided have told me that the Government's action was unnecessary. But the Government has not told me what information it has on these people. So how do I say anything? As for the question of whether the raids have prompted people to make voluntary disclosures, once again I don't know. If people have declared hidden income or wealth, they're not sharing that information.

But the Government has responded to criticism. There is much much less publicity, and I mean much much less publicity, being given to raids now. The instant publicity that was earlier being given to raids is no longer there. So the Government has already changed its approach.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FICCI

House Divided

RESIGNATIONS and disputes over elections are once again the order of the day in the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FICCI). At the federation's annual jamboree last fortnight, several leading members withdrew their candidature from the elections to the committee, and a few days later, the Indian Merchants Chamber decided to pull out of FICCI altogether. More resignations were expected to follow from such business houses as the Singhanias, the Jains and others. Already, large groups like the Tatas and Reliance are not members; if the expected resignations materialise, FICCI will be left with less than half of the top 20 industrial houses in its ranks.

The squalid dispute over bogus memberships has simmered, died down, and boiled over again in repetitive cycles for the last five years. Matters came to a head last year when several leading lights resigned in protest. But a compromise formula was worked out for weeding out 1,300 bogus members out of the 1,600 membership and the resignations were withdrawn. Peace was finally expected to reign after the formation of a consensus committee that would sort out contentious issues concerning the election of office-bearers, with another 'seniors' committee' to arbitrate if the consensus committee was deadlocked.

But the issue has come to the fore again because only 950 resignations have been effected so far, and because of a deadlock over the post of vice-president of the Indian national committee of the International Chamber of Commerce (ICC). The post is significant this year because the vice-president will be the president of the next convention to be held in New Delhi a few months hence. Both contenders, H.S. Singhania and S.K. Birla, were business stalwarts; the consensus committee failed to agree on which one to pick, and the issue was not referred to the seniors' committee as should have been done under the compromise worked out last year. This resulted in two members of the seniors' committee, S.P. Jain and Bharat Ram, submitting their resignations.

With the compromise arrangement in a shambles, many businessmen were bitter. Viren Shah of Mukand Iron and Steel said: "This is the last time I will be attending a FICCI session; enough is enough." Singhania was more circumspect: "What pained me was the attitude of some of the members. They don't seem to realise that an institution with a large number of bogus members cannot command credibility with the Government."

Others argued, however, that the question of bogus membership had been resolved at a late night session just before FICCI's annual jamboree, with 956 resignations already having taken place and another 134 committed to resigning by June, taking the total to 1,100 out of a target of 1,200. Said a prominent FICCI member: "The people who have walked out had agreed to this revised time-table. So I don't see how the membership issue was a matter of concern." But the rival group argued that even today half the 650 members left in FICCI were bogus.

The group led by the Jains and Singhanias also pointed out that the question of electing the vice-president of the ICC should have been referred to the seniors' committee. FICCI's in-coming president R.P. Goenka had promised to do this. But the reference was never made, presumably because of opposition from the powerful Modi-Birla combine. Said a disgruntled member: "The lesson we learnt from this was that they would use the compromise arrangement only when it suited them. How can this be acceptable to us?"

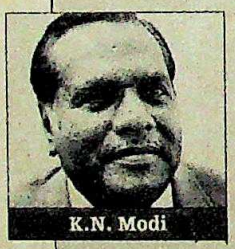
Goenka, who emerged some months ago as the chief mediator in the dispute, has got a lot of the flak for the latest fracas. Some 40 resignations of bogus members had been given to him by the Jains and Singhanias on the condition that they would be formally submitted to FICCI only if matching resignations were handed in by the Birlas and Modis. But apparently because of a slip by his personal staff, the resignations were telexed to FICCI, which took up the issue at its next committee meeting, where the then president D.N. Patodia pushed them through despite protests from some of the members present.

Goenka himself relates a different version of these events, arguing that resignations from the rival group had come in earlier. He had also not yet given up hope of another rapprochement and a final end to the issue. "I am going to let passions cool for a couple of weeks," he said, "and will pick up the threads again after that. If all the resignations of bogus members come in by May or June, I hope the problem will be solved."

But the Jains, Singhanias, Bajajs, Chowgules and others who walked out last year and came back only on the strength of the compromise that had been hammered out, are aware that they will make laughing stocks of themselves if they keep storming out and coming back. So if they resign once again from FICCI, it will be for the last time. While this will leave the breakaway group with the difficult choice of either starting a rival federation or joining one of the other chambers of commerce already in existence, FICCI itself is bound to lose some of its representative character as the primary voice of Indian business. If that happens, the biggest names in Indian business will have no one to blame but themselves.

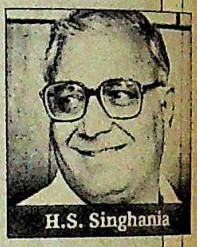
—T.N. NINAN

S.K. Birla



K.N. Modi

The squalid dispute over bogus memberships in FICCI has boiled over repeatedly over the last five years. The latest fracas could lead to a spate of resignations which would dilute the organisation's representative character as the primary voice of Indian business.

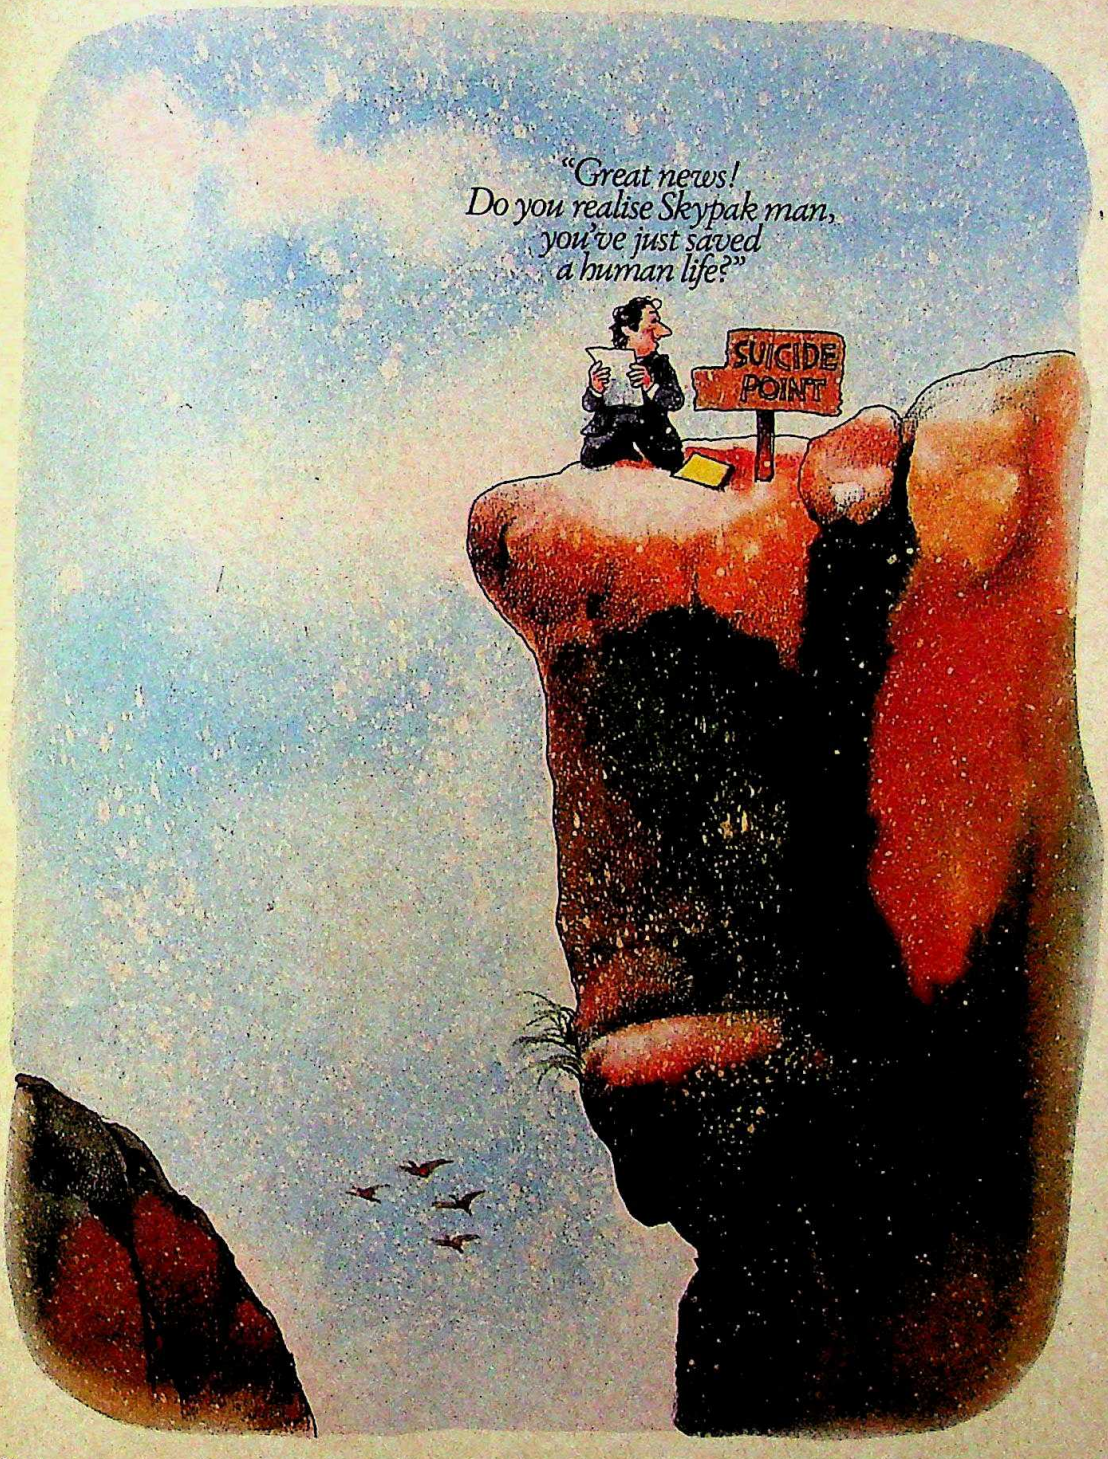


H.S. Singhania

Viren Shah

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



We'll deliver. Wherever on earth. SKYPAK The worldwide couriers.

Avenues SC 223 86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The only thing the Standard 2000 comes without is your driving licence.

All the power you need

The powerful, fuel-efficient Standard HCC 206 petrol engine is specially developed for Indian conditions, with a matched power train. It develops 82 BHP at 4250 RPM.

Luxury - inside out

The roomy interior seats five adults in comfort. The front seats are reclinable while the steering wheel is collapsible and is fully adjustable for reach and rake.

The window glasses are electrically operated.

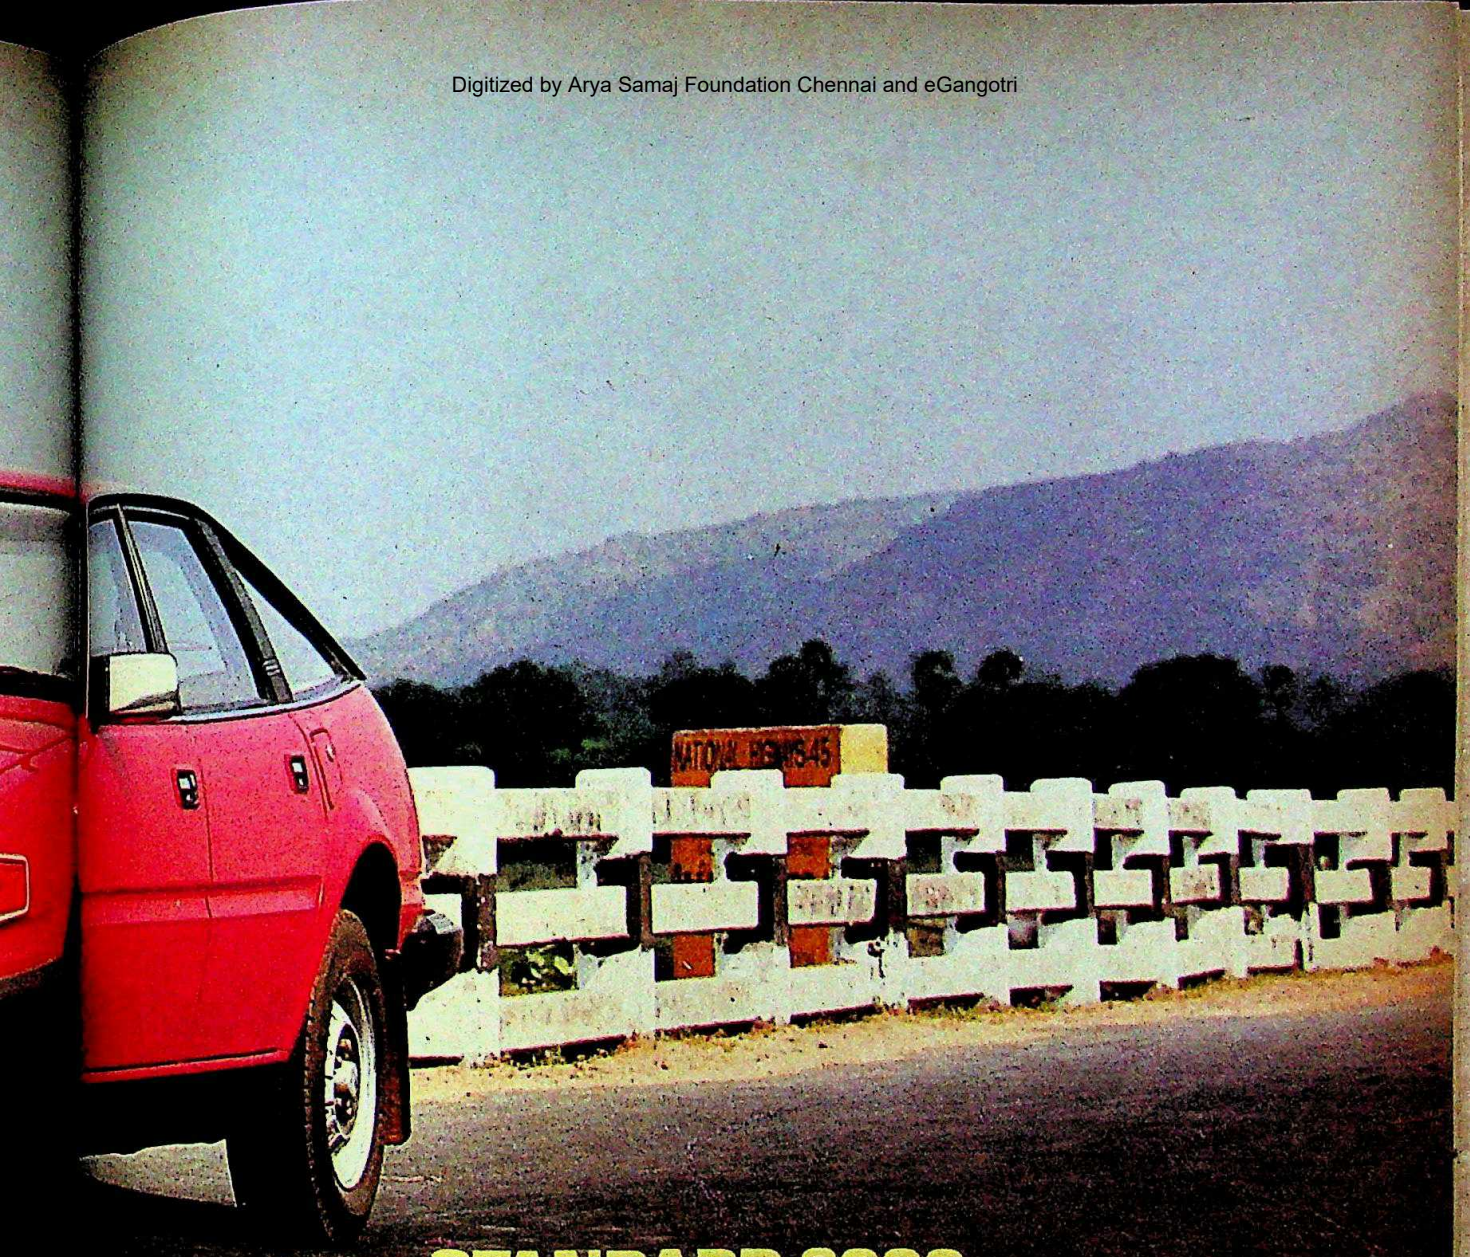
There's also a stereo cassette player with four speakers and balance control.

Doors to safety

Another unique feature is the central door locking system which locks all doors simultaneously. It also has child-proof rear door locks.

Standard 2000. There comes a tim[illegible] your li[illegible]

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



STANDARD 2000

the only Indian car with advanced features that spell class.

Taking the heat off

The Standard 2000 comes to you with a totally engineered airconditioning system and the airconditioning unit can be fitted at specific dealer points.

The Standard 2000.

The only Indian car whose counterpart, the Rover 2000, is currently being manufactured in the UK.

Standard 2000.
Now on the roads!

STAMPRO

Standard Motor Products of India Ltd.
Madras 600 063.

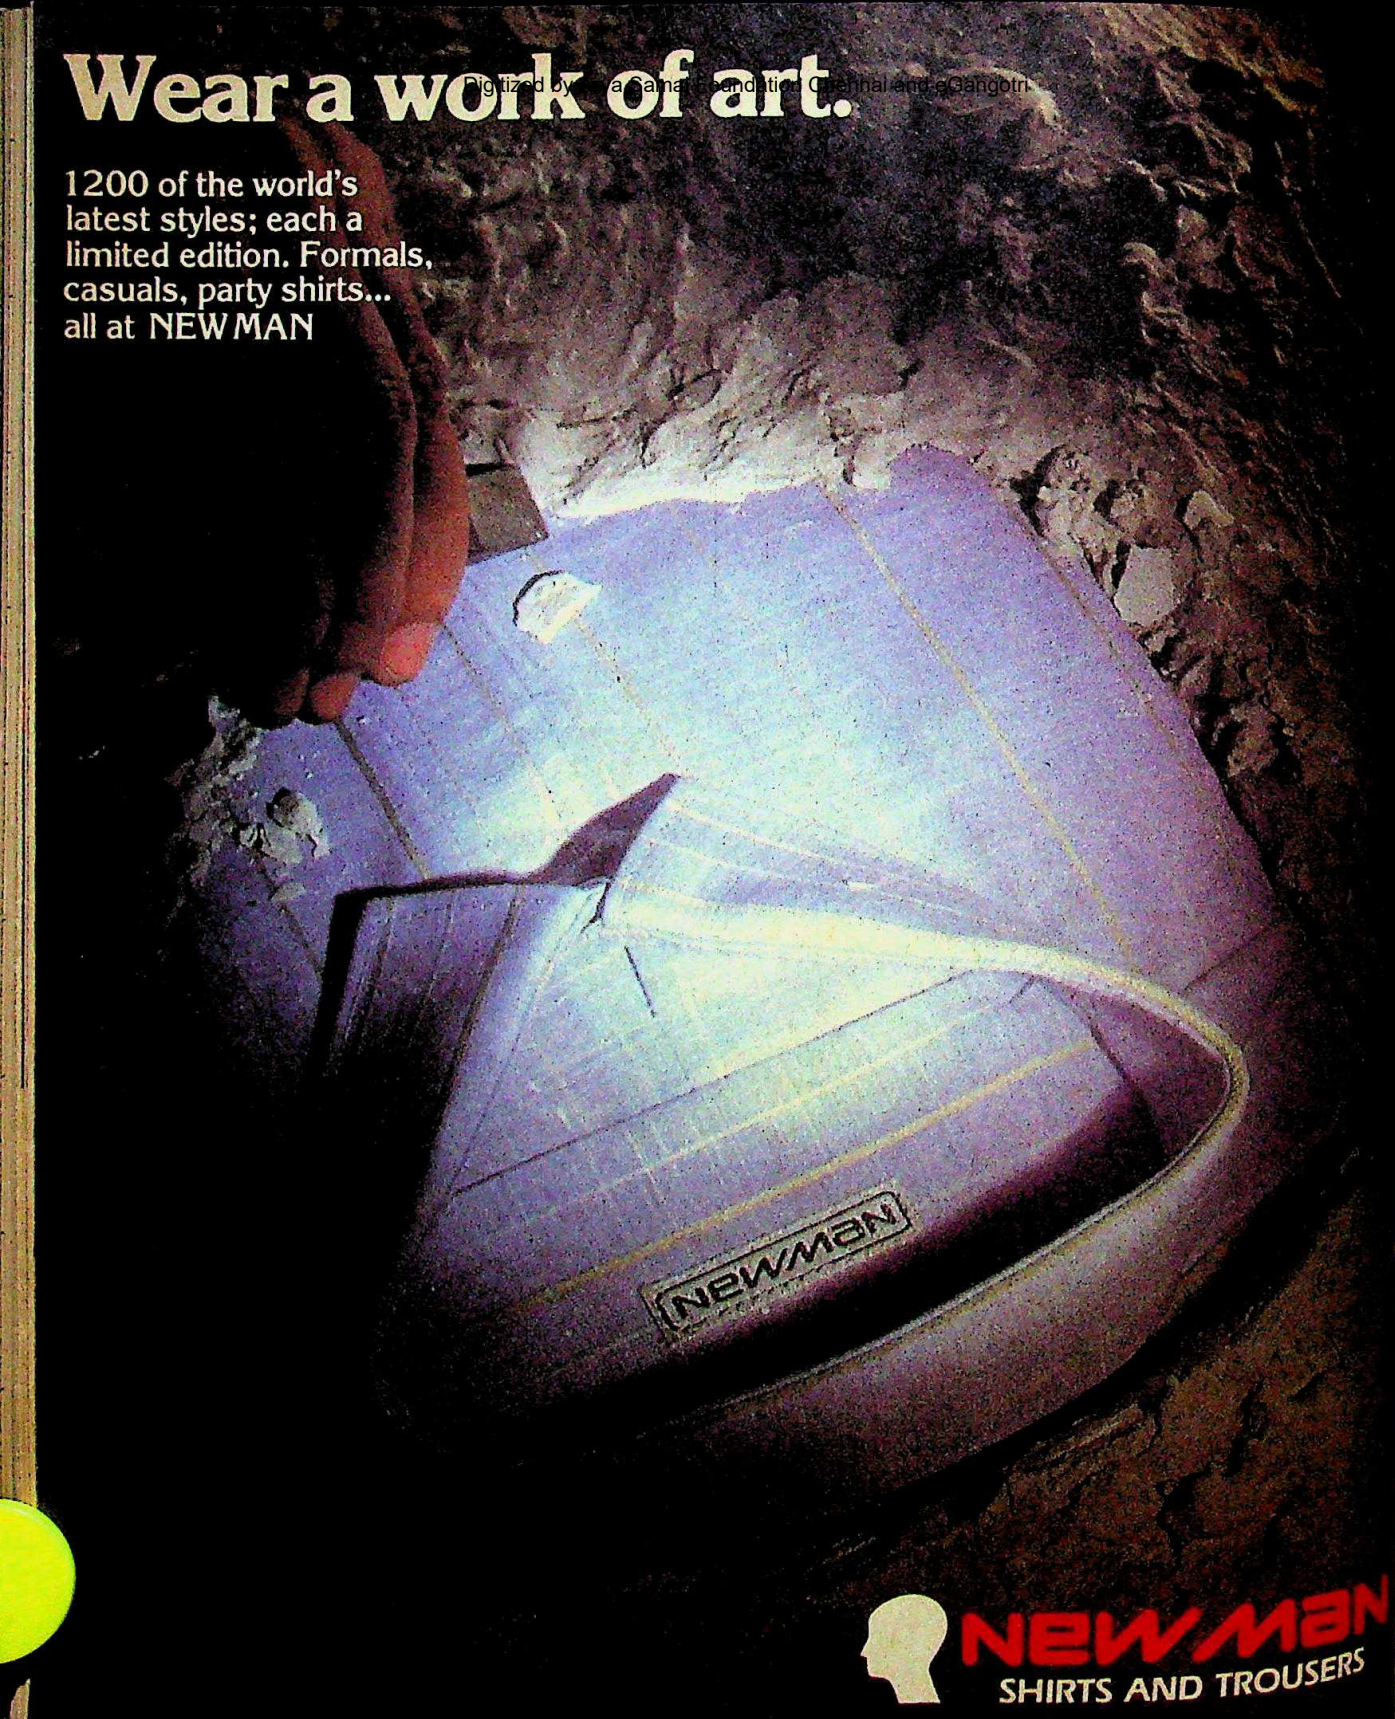
a tin your life when nothing less will do.

Sista's-SM-481.85 A

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Wear a work of art.

1200 of the world's latest styles; each a limited edition. Formals, casuals, party shirts... all at NEWMAN

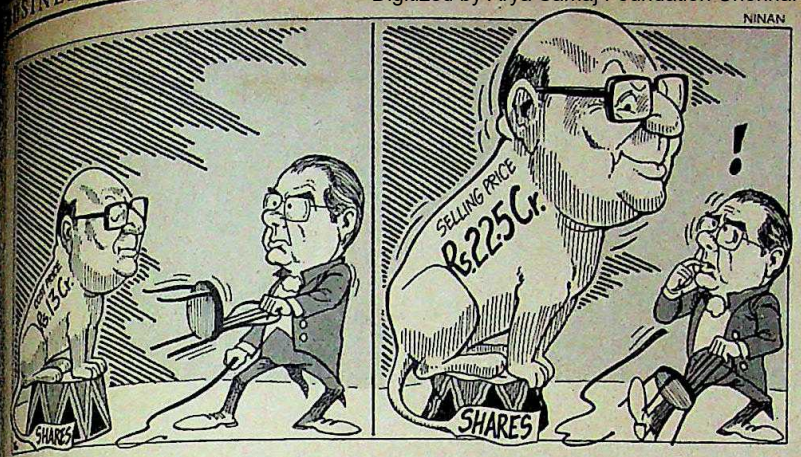


NEWMAN
SHIRTS AND TROUSERS

1200 originals in the next 12 months

Available only in New Delhi at Newman's exclusive showrooms
278 Palika Bazar, Connaught Place • Mahajan House, South Extension Part II • 2404 Hardhyan Singh Road, Karol Bagh

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



SWRAJ PAUL

The Raider's Revenge

THREE years ago, when he launched his headline-hitting stock-market raid on Escorts and DCM with share purchases worth Rs 13 crore, the London-based Swraj Paul had said he was merely doing his duty because the "Government had requested Indians living abroad to put money into India". That duty led him straight into battle. And last fortnight, near the end of an epic fight for the right to register his share purchases, Paul was finally heading for victory.

In December, the Supreme Court handed down a verdict in his favour on a case filed by Escorts Chairman H.P.Nanda, but asked the Reserve Bank of India (RBI) to check once again that the investments had been made in accordance with legal requirements. Last fortnight, at the end of the three-month deadline set by the court, the RBI cleared the investments and exonerated Paul's bank, Punjab National Bank, of charges of having violated the provisions of the Foreign Exchange Regulations Act while routing Paul's money. This virtually paved the way for Paul to get the shares registered in his name.

Interviewed on the telephone in London, Paul gave every indication of enjoying his moment of triumph: "I think it's marvellous," he said. "I'm really enjoying myself. Everything has gone my way." But he added that his earlier decision to pull out of India (announced when Nanda was given a fresh five-year term in Escorts, immediately after the Supreme Court judgement last December), remained unchanged.

Meanwhile, the mood in the Escorts camp was suitably sombre. Nanda said that he had no information on the RBI decision, and that he did not know what exactly the RBI had cleared. He added: "No one has approached us for the registration of the shares." However, there was little doubt that the voluminous paper-work required for this could be done fairly simply. And with the Government-owned financial institutions, which own 52 per cent of Escorts shares, sitting in a majority on the Escorts board of directors, there seems little doubt that when the shares are lodged afresh for registration, the board will not put any road-blocks in the way.

However, with Paul declaring that he was not interested in maintaining his presence in India or in joining the Escorts board ("Why should I want to be on a lousy board?"), the present managements of neither Escorts nor DCM are in any danger of being unseated. So the real result of the RBI verdict is that it puts Paul in the driver's seat in terms of demanding his price for selling his shares. This, he said, was Rs 22.5 crore.

Paul's initial investment had been Rs 13 crore, and his current selling price takes into account the interest charges on this money for the last three years, the foreign exchange loss incurred because the rupee has lost ground vis-a-vis the pound during the intervening period, plus compensation for the tax that the Government might levy on his capital gains. However, negotiations for selling the shares have remained grounded in recent weeks because neither Escorts nor DCM is prepared to pay the price that Paul is demanding. An Escorts spokesman argued that the RBI would not allow a share deal that compensated Paul for the loss caused by foreign exchange fluctuations as this would set an undesirable precedent. He also said that if a higher price for Paul merely compensated him for the interest burden that he has borne for three years, there might not be any question of paying any tax on capital gains.

Asked what he would do if the Escorts and DCM managements did not offer him a suitable price, Paul said he was confident that, "Once my shares are registered, there will be plenty of buyers." And he derisorily dismissed the offers he had so far received from Escorts: "I have been hearing of a lot of proposals for a long time. But I don't listen to silly offers. Someone should come to me with some money, and Mr Nanda said three years ago that he didn't have the money to buy my shares."

Paul has also worked out a strategy in case his shares do not get the price that he wants: "In that case, the first thing I will do is ask the auditors to check the company books properly, in case they have been cooking the books. If Mr Nanda is not honest, I will question him and make him honest."

The only mild flutter in this moment of triumph was a question mark over whether Caparo Properties, one of Paul's companies that had bought Escorts shares had been sold to British interests last year, so that it ceased to be a non-resident Indian company. But Paul explained that Caparo Properties (a private limited company) had changed its name to Atlantic Associates, and another of his companies, called E.Austin, had been renamed Caparo Properties and gone public: "I was planning to make E.Austin a public limited company, and I wanted the Caparo name there when I was going public. So I switched the names around. The company that has invested in Escorts is still mine. The new Caparo Properties that has merged with a British company has nothing to do with Escorts."

That odd corporate twist at the end of a three-year battle was symbolic of the various questions that had been raised about Paul's investments from the start. But with both the Supreme Court and the RBI eventually giving Paul a clean chit, he could finally say, without any fear of contradiction last fortnight: "I knew I had done nothing wrong. The last three years show the ability of mischief-makers to waste my time, and I have no time to waste. I have my companies here to run, and am happy doing so."

—T.N. NINAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TELEPHONE NIGAM

Hopeful Signs

TELEPHONE subscribers across the country got tired long ago of promises from the Government of an improved telephone service. And tens of thousands who booked their telephones several years ago have got similarly accustomed to the prospect of waiting indefinitely for long-promised connections. Now, at least in the cities of Bombay and Delhi, things might change for the better. Or so the Government hopes.

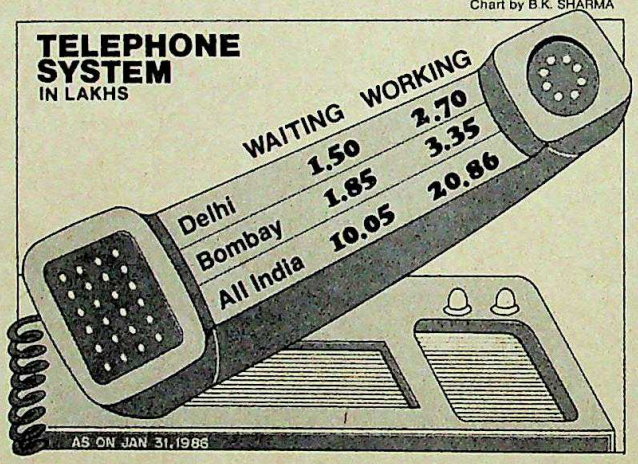
The scenario may be different this time because the telephone systems in the two cities—accounting for one-fifth of all telephone connections in the country—have been converted into a new, autonomous, public sector corporation named Mahanagar Telephone Nigam (MTN). The new corporation will be flush with cash, free from the need to get government clearance for minor decisions, able to discipline a troublesome and inefficient workforce if it so chooses by initiating a new work culture, and as a result of all this (so the Government hopes) able to quickly expand the system, improve customer service and innovate with new, more sophisticated telephone systems and services.

Money is the one thing that should not be a problem. The telephone systems in the two cities generate an annual revenue of Rs 700 crore, of which a handsome Rs 200 crore are profit. So far this enormous amount of cash has got lost in government coffers, used to subsidise the losing postal service or invested in telephone systems elsewhere. Not any more. These riches apart, MTN has also been allowed the freedom to issue bonds and borrow money from the public: no less than Rs 2,000 crore may be raised in this fashion over the next five years. This compares with the Rs 1,200 crore invested in the two metros' systems so far, and the Rs 4,010 crore that the Planning Commission has allowed for telecommunications as a whole during the Seventh Five Year Plan.

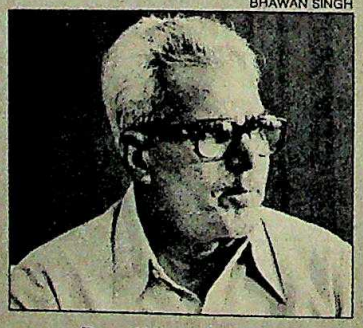
Though the idea of floating a public corporation was first mooted in 1982, it got bogged down in bureaucratic machinations, with a powerful section of the ministry, led by the telecommunications engineers, opposing the move on the plea that the corporation would block their promotional avenues within the department and that outsiders would grab plum posts. But both Union Minister of State for Communications, Ram Niwas Mirdha, and the Prime Minister's Secretariat stuck to their stand, and the Cabinet eventually cleared the proposal last December.

However, the implementation of this decision was once again blocked in the ministry. But the financial squeeze applied by both the Planning Commission and the Finance Ministry finally left the telecommunications people with no choice: creating the corporation was the only means by which additional resources could be raised through the issuing of bonds. All opposition vanished, and the draft legislation for the new corporation was quickly readied.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA



BHAWAN SINGH



Ram Niwas Mirdha

The minister has argued that if the new corporation is successful the Government might create corporations for other cities.

If the success of the new experiment hinges on the men who will be asked to run the new corporation, the Government quickly signalled that it meant business by picking for the key post of managing director, M.P.Shukla, who has made a name for himself as the go-getting boss of the public sector Telecommunications Consultants India Ltd (TCIL). Shukla is a relatively junior officer in the business, with the existing general managers of both the Bombay and Delhi telephone organisations being senior to him in the Government. Inevitably, then, both had to make way for junior, hand-picked general managers in the new set-up: B.M.Khanna and M.C.Venkatram. Said Shukla: "It is a question of choosing the best of the available lot for providing better service to the customers."

Shukla has his priorities worked out elsewhere too. Focusing quickly on the prime need to improve the quality of service offered to harassed subscribers, he issued a series of instructions aimed at this objective, and pointed out that the only way to generate more revenue from the subscribers was by improving the level of service. And among the innovations he has in mind are such wonder-gadgets as sophisticated car telephone networks, paging systems, and the use of fibre optics for transmitting inter-exchange calls.

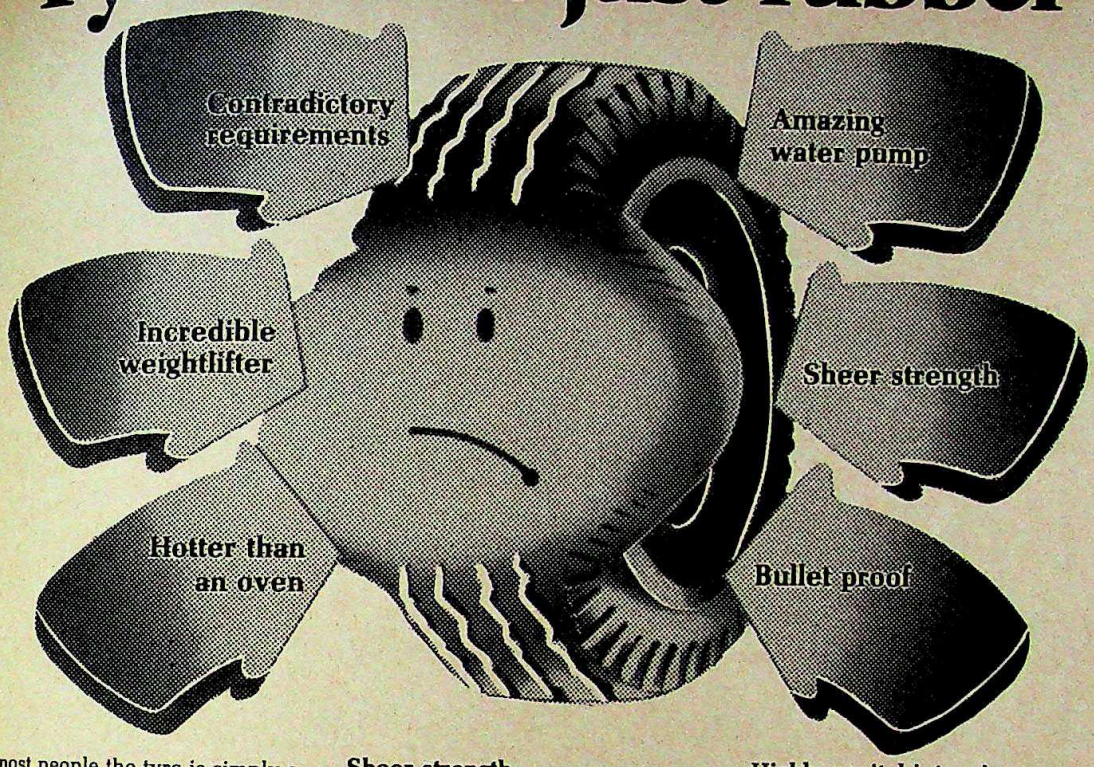
The only danger in this entire game plan is that the profitable corporation might generate all the revenue and expand the telephone systems in both Bombay and Delhi while the rest of the country's telephone network, starved of funds, languishes without hope of better tomorrows. But Mirdha argued that if the new corporation was successful, the Government might create similar corporations for other cities as well. He also said that the Government would now be free to concentrate on the communication needs of the backward areas.

It now remains to be seen whether this hope is justified, and if the new set-up will succeed in providing better telecommunications to the privileged subscribers in the country's political and commercial capitals.

—PRABHU CHAWLA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Tyre is not just rubber



To most people the tyre is simply a round black thing made of rubber. They do not know what a marvellous masterpiece of man's invention the modern tyre is. Take a moment to consider what amazing things tyre must do:

Contradictory requirements

It must be tough to be durable.
Yet soft to be comfortable.
It must grip the road for safety.
But roll freely for high mileage.

Incredible weightlifter

A truck tyre in its life time (including retreads) travels a distance of over 100,000 kilometres or $2^1/_2$ times the circumference of planet earth. During this life cycle each part of its side wall flexes over 30 million times carrying loads of upto 5 tonnes.

Hotter than an oven

Flexing generates heat causing fatigue. A 100 km run on a hot summer day raises the temperature inside a tyre to over 150°C — more than needed to cook the toughest meat.

Amazing water pump

On a rainy day with a mere 1 cm of water on the road, each tyre is required to pump over 2000 litres of water per minute at 60 kms per hour. The higher the speed the greater the quantities of water to be expelled to keep the vehicle on the road.

Sheer strength

On just any day, a child suddenly darts across the road and you jam the brake. It's the tyre that takes the stress to arrest the speeding vehicle. If you suddenly swerve or take a sharp turn to avoid collission, it's the tyre again that takes the tremendous cornering stress. And all this the tyre does with an area of contact no bigger than your foot-print.

Bullet proof?

A sharp pebble on the road hits the tyre of a speeding vehicle like a bullet shot from the barrel of a gun. Imagine then the impact as you hit the pot hole.

A multi-disciplined technology

Tyre is not just rubber. Incompatible materials go into making of a tyre. Steel, nylon, rayon, natural and synthetic rubber, carbon black, and a thousand and more formulations of chemical compounds are used. Tyre technology is multi-disciplined involving physics, chemistry, metallurgy, textile, computer and polymer technology. Designing a tread pattern, formulating a compound, or other aspects of tyre engineering and development demands the use of sophisticated computers.

Highly capital intensive

To put up a modern tyre plant of a million tyre capacity investment required is over Rs. 100 crores. Enormous investment in continuing research and development is also needed. No wonder globally there are far less number of tyre manufacturers than there are automotive vehicle manufacturers.

Research & Development

Through their links with world leaders the Indian tyre companies have access to the latest development in tyre technology. Tremendous amount of in-house research and development is done by companies in India to adapt the technology and make tyres specially suited for India's needs.

The Indian tyre industry is ready with the most advanced radial tyres for the new breed of automobiles being developed. It is geared to meet the challenges ahead.

For more details about the tyre industry contact:-

Automotive Tyre Manufacturers' Association
108, Uday Park, New Delhi-110 049.

SPACE PLAN

Indian Tyre — the better tyre

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

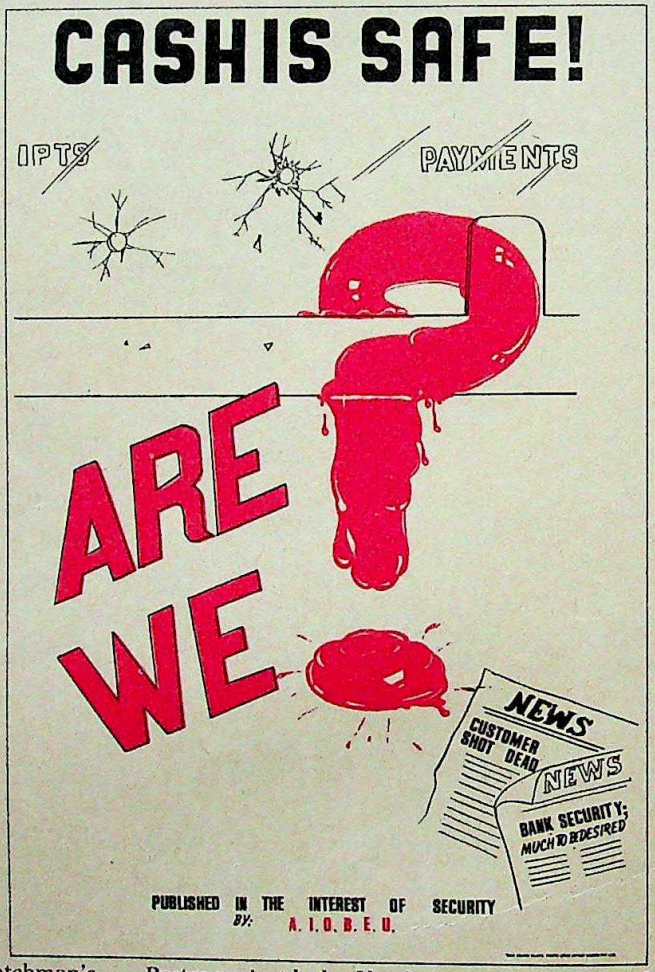
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BANKS

Vulnerable Targets

THE EMPLOYEES of a suburban Bombay branch of the Indian Overseas Bank (IOB) were used to the sight of film stars like Rekha and Shatrughan Sinha occasionally walking into the bank's ground floor premises in a secluded side-street in Bandra, home for a large number of celebrities from the Hindi film industry. But little did they expect one hot and humid day in March that the bank would become the location for a terrifying real life drama that left a customer dead and two bank employees seriously injured.

Around noon on March 4, three men strolled into IOB's largest suburban branch just half an hour before the bank was to down shutters. Peak banking hours were over, and employees were leisurely attending to half a dozen late customers. Two men headed for the cash counter, while the third entered the manager's cabin. As the first man reached the cashier's counter, he dropped a bundle of Rs 50 notes, attempting to distract the bank watchman's attention and snatch his rifle. As the watchman, Sitaram Gujjar, and one of the intruders grappled for possession of the rifle, 40-year-old Raj Panjwani, a Swissair employee waiting to encash his cheque, sprang to the watchman's aid. The second man whipped out a .32 bore revolver, shot Panjwani through the neck, and pumped another bullet into the watchman's abdomen. In a spontaneous reaction a clerk and a stenotypist sitting across the counter began throwing ledger books and chairs at the two gunmen. Just then the third man rushed out of the manager's cabin with a gun in his hand shouting, "Hands up everybody, hands up." He shot the young stenotypist, Srikant Desai, twice. The cashier switched on the alarm, and with the injured watchman in pursuit the three men ran out with the bank's rifle, jumped into a waiting white Premier Padmini, and disappeared. Two days later the police found the stolen car abandoned barely a kilometre away from the bank. Gujjar's antiquated double-barrelled, 12-bore rifle was inside, but the gun and the car had been completely cleaned of fingerprints. Obviously, as police later said, the attempted bank robbery was the work of "a ruthless and very skilled gang".



Poster against lack of bank security

The armed raid on the IOB branch in Bandra was the second in a spate of bank robberies within barely five weeks.

► On February 13 at 12.50 p.m., 10 minutes before closing time four men walked into the first floor office of the Punjab and Sind Bank in a residential block on B.G. Kher Marg on Malabar Hill, just round the corner from the chief minister's bungalow. Three of the intruders carried hand-guns, but the bank neither had an armed guard nor an alarm system. Fifteen employees, two customers and the building's gurkha watchman were herded into the bank's strong-room, while the robbers decamped with Rs 1.65 lakh from the cashier's cabin.

► On February 24, four armed men walked into the SBI's Juhu branch, again in off peak hours. They locked the employees into a room, cleared the cashier's cabin of Rs 1.44 lakh, and disappeared. The branch did not have an armed guard.

► On March 20 around 10.30 a.m. four gunmen raided the Bank of Maharashtra branch at Shivaji Park a quiet residential area, across the road from the mayor's bungalow. There were just six customers at that hour in the bank and the watchman was on leave. The gunmen casually took Rs 2.67 lakh from the cashier's counter, wrapped the cash in a curtain, latched the main door from outside and walked away. The employees forgot to switch on the alarm.

The four sensational robberies in the nation's banking capital suddenly brought into sharp focus the abysmally inadequate and outdated security arrangements in Indian banks. "The situation is explosive," said M.R. Pai, president of the Bombay branch of the All-India Bank Depositors' Association. "Banks have become sitting ducks both for amateur robbers and organised gangs. Bank managements find it easier to collect from insurance companies after a robbery than to devise proper security measures for the country's 55,000 bank branches."

E.K. Thakur, vice-president of the All India Confederation of Bank Officers' Organisations (AICOBOO) complained that a "fear psychosis" had gripped bank employees with the increase of armed bank robberies. He said that while robberies had gone up from 40 in 1981 and 77 in 1982 to 350 in 1985, managements had done nothing to implement the guidelines provided by the N. Balasubramaniam Sub-committee on bank security.

In its 1983 report, the sub-committee had recommended, among other things, the installation of closed circuit TV and a hot line to the local police station in all large metropolitan branches and in those branches where the RBI's 3,900 currency chests were maintained (some of these chests contain as much as Rs 50 crore), the provision of sophisticated hand-guns to bank guards, the use of "decoy money" at cash counters to help trace the robbers after a heist, consultations with the local police before locating a new branch, and proper training of employees on how to react during a robbery. It also pointed out that "though most banks had issued internal instructions on security precautions to be followed by their branches, these instructions were not only dissimilar but also incomplete." It was also noticed that in most of the banks, the instructions were not being implemented effectively. The seriousness of the problem had not been emphasised or felt adequately.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"I am sure the sub-committee's guidelines have been conveyed to all bank branches," said Central Bank's M.N. Coiporia, chairman of the Indian Banks' Association (IBA). "Things need to be tightened up at our end though and the IBA is meeting the police commissioner soon to find out what the police can suggest about security. There is no room for complacency."

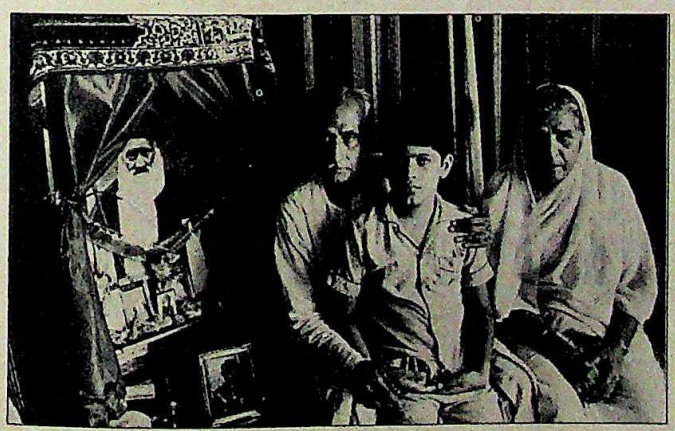
However, the police have little doubt that the major problem is the sense of complacency. "There seems to be a surprising lack of security consciousness in banks," said Bombay's Police Commissioner D.S. Soman. "My main complaint is that nobody seems to even know the procedures to be followed when there is a robbery. And the police are never consulted before the location and layout of a new branch is decided."

Soman said the police would welcome the installation of hot lines, but emphatically ruled out licensing of hand-guns for bank watchmen. "Handling a revolver is not as easy as it appears in Hindi movies," he explained. "You have to be in continuous practice and I shudder to think what will happen if these irresponsible people are given revolvers and pistols."

It is time the banks went in for all the gadgets available," said R.H. Mendonca, additional commissioner (crime), "but just now it's probably true that two-thirds of Bombay's 1,500 bank branches do not even have armed guards. And at least 200 branches are located in vulnerable, isolated neighbourhoods in the suburbs." S. Srinivasan, regional secretary of the All-India Overseas Bank Employees' Association, which organised a morcha to the police commissioner's office after the Bandra shoot-out, pointed out that for the 48 IOB branches in the city there were just nine armed guards. "The rest do not even have lathis," he said. "Bank managements are more keen on computerisation than on security."

D.S. SOMAN
police commissioner, Bombay

"There seems to be a surprising lack of security consciousness in banks. Nobody seems to know the procedures to be followed when there is a robbery."



Mourning relatives of Parjwani: victim of negligence

While bank managements complain of inordinate delays before the police issue licences even for standard 12-bore rifles, some police offers wonder how far banks are prepared to go to ensure the safety of their cash, employees and customers. "Apparently the bank's financial wizards feel that any large expenditure on security would be uneconomical," said one harassed policeman. "Even if the insurance companies do not cover all the looted cash, it would still be cheaper for banks to go on with the present system." The sub-committee reported that in 1982 more than Rs 1.5 crore was looted from Indian banks. ICOBOO's Thakur estimates that banks would have to spend Rs 200 crore in order to implement the sub-committee's recommendations. "But banks have that kind of money," he argues. "What about the Rs 100 crore wasted in stationery purchases, cancellation of air tickets, unnecessary transfers and things like that?"

While the IBA displays an astonishing lack of urgency in response to the spate of armed robberies in Bombay, bank employees, wonder with considerable apprehension whether the gang will strike at their branch next. "I find it difficult to keep my eyes down even while counting the cash now," said a Bandra bank cashier. "Who knows the next guy on the other side of the glass may be the one with the gun."

In the absence of definite clues, wild speculation has begun about the identity of the gang. What seems certain is that three of the robberies were committed by one gang, it's members are between 25 and 30 years old, the leader appears educated and speaks in a Punjabi or Jat Hindi accent, at least one of the guns the gang carries is factory made and the heists are professionally organised. Given a chance, the gang also has the tendency to loudly proclaim that it is not against any individuals but only interested in "settling scores" with the Government. This and the arrest of a 25-year-old Sikh on suspicion after the Bank of Maharashtra robbery has led to reports in newspapers that the gang may be a desperate bunch of extremists from Punjab. But the police remain sceptical. "All we can say is that the gang has a professional touch," said a police officer. "The political message could be an attempt at deception. In any case with the kind of security banks have, it's open house here for any gang of robbers."

—M. RAHMAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ANALGESICS

Ridake Row

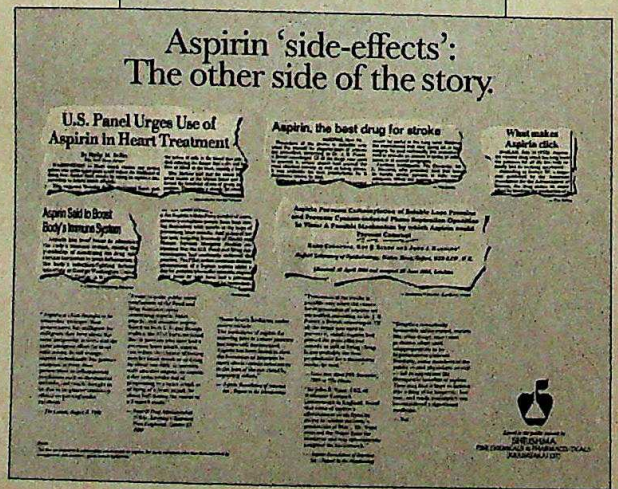
ANALGESICS are used as commonly as headaches occur, and the analgesic market in India—covering brand names like Aspro, Anacin, Saridon, and Disprin—is worth a cool Rs 50 crore and more. Last fortnight, Burroughs Wellcome Pvt Ltd (turnover Rs 44.60 crore) made an aggressive attempt at grabbing a slice of this cake and in the process kicked up a storm of protest that led to more headaches than it cured.

The cause of the commotion was Ridake, a new analgesic tablet manufactured by a Pune company and marketed by Wellcome, and touted through a massive advertising campaign in selected states in the south and the west of the country. The difference between Ridake and the other analgesics sold across the counter is that it is paracetamol-based while the others are aspirin-based. If potential customers didn't know the difference, the advertisements yelled it at them in a way which could only be described as strident and aimed at driving the point home forcefully. "The safest way to clear headaches," screamed one, "without aspirin side-effects." The advertisement went on to quote from a 1981 article in Lancet that aspirin "causes erosive gastritis with occult and over gastro-intestinal bleeding, gastric ulcer and has also been implicated as a cause of perforation of peptic ulcers."

That was the start of the controversy, and cudgels were taken up on behalf of aspirin manufacturers by a relative newcomer to the industry, Shrishma Fine Chemicals and Pharmaceuticals (K) Ltd, which is setting up a 2,000-tonne aspirin plant in Karnataka at a cost of Rs 10.47 crore. Last fortnight, Shrishma took out its own half-page advertisements, giving "the other side of the story" and quoting extensively from The International Herald Tribune and Newsweek, and more to the point from a publication of the Aspirin Foundation of America, pointing out that Sir John Vane, FRS, of Wellcome Research Laboratories in the United Kingdom had won a Nobel Prize for his work on aspirin.

The controversy really boiled over when Dr S.R. Dasgupta of Calcutta, a retired professor of pharmocology at the Postgraduate College of Medicine, wrote to Wellcome accusing it of taking the Lancet quotation out of context. Dasgupta added that paracetamol was described in the same article as linked with toxic hepatitis—in other words, that it could seriously and perhaps irreparably damage the liver. Professor Dasgupta also made a pointed reference to the Sir John Vane connection and added that Thomas D. Kennedy of Burroughs Wellcome in the United States was a director of the Aspirin Foundation. "Against this background do you consider it ethical to run down aspirin in order to promote Ridake in India?" Dasgupta asked.

The Ridake row has left a bad taste, not because the product is inferior in itself, but because it was promoted at the expense of another equally useful product.



The Wellcome people were understandably excited over the letter, especially as it turned out not to have come from Professor Dasgupta at all. His son later wrote to Wellcome, saying that his father had been ill for the last six months, that he had never written the letter, "nor does he know anything about the drug Ridake". Who, then, knew about the drug Ridake? It turned out that the postmark on the envelope was not Calcutta but Bangalore. "Our advertisement has not even been released in West Bengal," said Dr C. Gupta, Wellcome's director of medical services. "So Prof. Dasgupta could not have seen it."

The hullabaloo only blurred the facts: both aspirin and paracetamol are effective drugs in their own way—both dull pain and bring down body temperatures. But aspirin is anti-inflammatory—relieving contusions and bruises where paracetamol can't. Aspirin is not recommended for patients with stomach disorders because it precipitates bleeding. Paracetamol, on the other hand is not recommended for people with liver trouble. Said a spokesman of Geoffrey Manners, makers of Anacin, second only to Roche's Saridon in over-the-counter (orc) sales of analgesics: "These people are unnecessarily quoting out of context and confusing the facts in order to sell their product."

Gupta of Wellcome argued that they had not misrepresented facts and added that Ridake is meant only for headaches, and is advertised as such. "There is no doubt that aspirin is a fine drug and its use against strokes, arthritis and heart conditions is well-known." He explained that Ridake is in fact only the orc version of Calpol, Wellcome's analgesic that is sold only on the basis of doctors' prescriptions.

But that has done little to pacify competitors, most of whom suspect that the excessively hard-sell campaign may have been brought out to cover the fact that Ridake, at 30 paise a tablet, is more than twice as expensive as aspirin-based orc's like Aspro, which sells for slightly under 13 paise a tablet. "An analgesic is seen not as a specific drug but as a general pain and discomfort reliever," said Homi Bhabha, marketing manager of Nicholas Laboratories, makers of Aspro. "Even though Wellcome says that Ridake is only for headaches people might take it for contusions or even arthritis, which aspirin is effective against but paracetamol is not." Bhabha gave an example of the pitfalls of confusing paracetamol and aspirin as interchangeable drugs: rheumatic joints require about 6 grammes of aspirin for relief, which means about 20 tablets. "You take 20 tablets of paracetamol at one time you'll drop dead".

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Ridake row has left a bad taste in the industry's mouth, not because the product is inferior in itself—doctors regularly prescribe paracetamol-based drugs for fevers as these are less heavy on the stomach—but because it was promoted at the expense of another equally useful product. Perhaps Wellcome was goaded into its anti-aspirin drive by the sad example of an earlier paracetamol predecessor, Plusprin of Lamedica Laboratories, which was launched a few years ago and flopped miserably. Or perhaps they had the brighter example of Johnson and Johnson's analgesic Tylenol in the US, which used precisely the same run-aspirin-down strategy to become top dog in the US market. But as the subsequent quarrel has proved, it was ill-advised and will most likely take more than a pill to cure.

—JAGANNATH DUBASHI

TCIL

Smart Moves

Shukla (left) and Aggarwal

QUESTION: Why is a public sector consultancy company toying with the manufacture of telecommunication cables, computers and related equipment? Possible answer: hedging against the oil price crunch.

The company in question is the high-flying Telecommunication Consultants India Ltd (TCIL), one of the country's premier consultancy outfits. The Rs 24-crore-turnover public sector firm's profit graphs have almost consistently climbed, and it has paid a 25 per cent dividend annually for the past three or four years. Last fortnight, however, it looked as if the happy days were drawing to a close. For the first time TCIL was heading for a drop in profits (see chart).

That would have rung alarm bells in most boardrooms, but TCIL has been readying for precisely this turn of fortune's wheel. It has got into a host of activities ranging from establishing a model telephone exchange in the capital to computerising both public and private sector factories. And it has a package of ambitious schemes up its sleeve: paging systems, a mobile telephone service and a "yellow page" section in telephone directories to list professional and commercial services.

The company is clearly shooting high, but its plans are no pie in the sky. The firm has tied up with the Tamil Nadu Industrial Development Corporation (TIDCO) to turn out jelly-filled telecommunication cables which it can use in turnkey jobs overseas, and it has floated a joint venture with the Delhi State Industrial Development Corporation to manufacture computers and related equipment.

The company is also talking to Bell South International of the US for the proposed paging and mobile phone systems. A ready customer for these gadgets is likely to be found in the newly-formed telephone corporation for Delhi and Bombay: TCIL's Chairman M.P. Shukla took over as the new corporation's chairman last fortnight. Said Shukla, who will continue as TCIL's chairman: "The mobile phones and paging systems schemes will take shape in Bombay in 18 months."

Says acting Managing Director Y.L. Agarwal: "We realise that our conventional markets abroad are drying up." The final justification for the domestic thrust—the firm has the cash to splurge, and technical expertise which can be used to advantage.

There are those who argue that if the company has not looked back till now, it is largely because its overseas wage bills, though high by Indian standards, are lower than those of foreign competitors. (TCIL has on its rolls around 1,200 staffers, but draws on the department of communications for additional staff for foreign projects.) A senior executive in the telecommunications business also said: "The company has faced no competition from Indian private firms abroad since none had telecom know-how."

Whatever the case, the public sector's showpiece is sitting fairly pretty, profit drop or not. With accumulated reserves of Rs 22 crore and comfortably full order books (new business in hand is worth Rs 60 crore), it has more than an adequate cushion to absorb shocks. And if the new projects go on stream quickly enough, happy times may be round the corner once again.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI

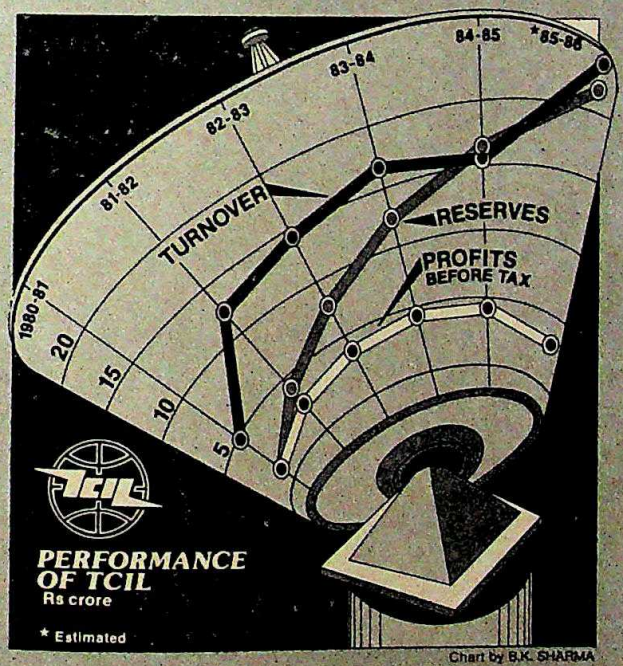

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

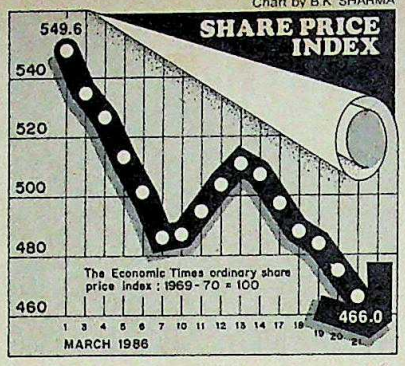
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

Sharp Setbacks



RARELY has the stock-market registered such sharp setbacks as it did last fortnight. The market's response to the budget was almost uniformly negative, and almost every share lost ground rapidly. There was some steadying of the mood after Finance Minister V.P. Singh clarified that he would take a fresh look at some of the taxation proposals that have come in for strong criticism at the hands of industry and business, but this did little to repair the damage. The result was that between March 1 and March 21, the stock-market index dropped precipitously from 549.6 to 466: a drop of more than 15 per cent, which is virtually unprecedented for such a short period.

Almost every major trading counter saw a sharp downswing. Associated Cement fell by Rs 105 to Rs 240, Bajaj Auto by Rs 300 to Rs 2,200, Baroda Rayon fell by Rs 60 to Rs 330, Bayer lost Rs 100 to close at Rs 500, Century Spinning fell by Rs 235 to Rs 1,230, and Indrol crashed from Rs 210 to Rs 140.

Some of the high-fliers on the market were equally affected by the general mood. J.K. Synthetics at Rs 93 had lost Rs 22, Kinetic Engineering at Rs 240 had lost Rs 42.50, Lohia Machines fell by Rs 6 to Rs 46, National Organic shed Rs 130 and close at Rs 575, and Tata Steel fell by Rs 240 to Rs 1,100. TELCO did no better, losing Rs 155 and closing at Rs 590.

It was a minor achievement that, despite the market's collapse, all payments were made on the settlement day, and the kind of payments crisis associated with market turbulence was avoided. But the key question was whether the market had levelled out of its dive and would begin to recover some of the lost ground. Certainly, the finance minister's comments in Parliament and to FICCI indicated that his tax proposals would be modified to help trading sentiment. But with the precise amendments on key issues like withdrawal of tax concession on inter-corporate dividends and the refund of investment allowance being effective retro-actively from as far back as 1974 not known, the future remained rather uncertain.

Some companies showed a distinct lack of confidence in the immediate future. For while National Organic, Hind Dorr-Oliver and Associated Bearings fulfilled market expectations with their bonus issue announcements, others like Wimco, Flakt India and Zuari Agro Chemicals seem to have had second thoughts on their bonus proposals. And India Photographic felt compelled by a squeeze on profits to cut its dividend rate.

The overriding message, therefore, was crystal clear: if the 1985 budget had sparked off a sustained and unprecedented boom on the share market, its 1986 sequel had brought about a quite opposite response.

ACTIVE STOCKS

	1986 HIGH	LOW	CLOSE 21.3.86	Change in Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	45.00	26.00	30.75	6.75 –
Associated Cement	389.00	236.00	240.00	105.00 –
Atlas Copco	92.50	72.00	73.00	8.00 –
Associated Bearings	990.00	740.00	740.00	150.00 –
Avery India	146.00	103.00	114.00	10.00 –
Bajaj Auto	2775.00	1950.00	2200.00	300.00 –
Baroda Rayon	490.00	315.00	330.00	60.00 –
Bata India	82.50	65.50	68.00	2.00 –
Bayer	680.00	445.00	500.00	100.00 –
Bharat Forge	86.00	48.00	58.00	3.00 –
Birla Jute	97.00	42.90	43.25	4.25 –
Blow Plast	160.00	98.00	98.00	18.00 –
Blue Star	110.00	75.00	75.00	17.50 –
Bombay Dyeing	120.00	77.00	79.00	11.50 –
Brooke Bond	95.50	74.00	84.00	2.00 –
Ceat Tyres	520.00	240.00	400.00	nill
Century Spinning	1690.00	1220.00	1230.00	235.00 –
Chloride India	122.00	91.00	95.00	3.00 –
Citurgia	65.00	43.00	46.00	1.00 –
Colgate	262.50	200.00	205.00	15.00 –
Cyanamid	100.00	70.00	80.00	7.50 –
DCM	58.50	36.00	39.00	2.00 +
Dunlop	74.50	49.75	64.50	nil
Elecon Engg.	117.50	82.50	86.00	9.00 –
Escorts	94.00	69.00	76.00	5.00 +
Food Specialities	285.00	215.00	215.00	27.50 –
Garware Nylon	61.50	36.00	37.00	3.50 –
Glaxo	87.00	62.00	65.50	8.50 –
G.E. Shipping	36.00	22.50	24.00	1.00 –
Gujarat St Fertilisers	1700.00	925.00	1235.00	150.00 –
Gwalior Rayon	88.00	58.00	61.00	13.50 –
Hindustan Lever	163.00	124.00	128.00	11.00 –
Hindustan Motors	128.50	99.00	102.00	14.50 –
Hind.Dorr	505.00	380.00	390.00	35.00 –
Indian Explosives	84.50	64.50	66.00	6.00 –
Indian Hotels	157.00	115.00	120.00	15.00 –
Indian Organic	90.00	63.00	65.00	10.00 –
Indian Rayon	151.00	100.00	103.00	13.00 –
Indrol	390.00	200.00	210.00	140.00 –
Ingersoll-Rand	480.00	360.00	392.50	22.50 –
ITC	76.50	53.00	63.50	4.50 –
J.K. Synthetics	132.00	90.00	93.00	22.00 –
Kinetic Engineering	325.00	220.00	240.00	42.50 –
Kirloskar Cummins	715.00	547.50	547.50	32.50 –
Lakme	195.00	120.00	127.50	7.50 –
Larsen & Toubro	204.00	157.00	162.00	13.00 –
Lipton	69.00	46.50	59.00	nil
Lohia Machines	70.00	44.00	46.00	6.00 –
Mahindra & Mahindra	86.00	52.00	54.00	12.00 –
Motor Industries	910.00	605.00	610.00	70.00 –
National Organic	777.50	530.00	575.00	130.00 –
Nirlon	77.00	49.00	55.00	nil
Orkay Silk Mills	167.00	120.00	129.00	14.00 –
Peico Electronics	104.50	58.25	58.25	3.75 –
Premier Auto	745.00	555.00	575.00	80.00 –
Ranbaxy	160.00	105.00	105.00	30.00 –
Raymond	97.00	72.00	75.00	7.00 –
Reliance Industries	367.00	226.00	302.00	29.00 –
Sandoz	88.00	62.00	75.00	8.00 –
Shriram Fibres	88.00	62.50	62.50	9.50 –
SPIC	184.00	129.50	132.00	22.00 –
Tata Steel	1440.00	1090.00	1100.00	240.00 –
Telco	910.00	575.00	590.00	155.00 –
Vulcan Laval	162.50	85.00	107.50	2.50 +
Wimco	98.00	54.00	56.00	3.00 –
Zuari Agro	124.00	87.00	87.00	19.00 –

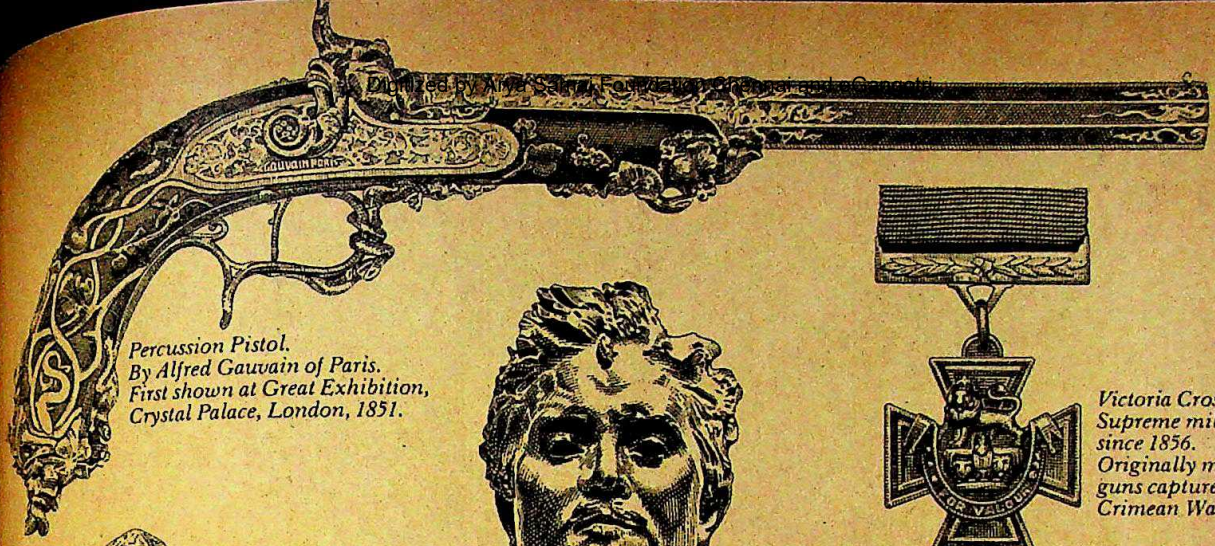
WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	8.7492	8.6683
Austria	Schilling	100	78.0093	77.2611
Bahrain	Dinar	1	33.0813	33.0000
Bangladesh	Taka	100	42.0013	41.9739
Canada	Dollar	1	8.8209	8.7412
Denmark	Kroner	1	1.4828	1.4718
Egypt	Pound	1	14.9130	14.9018
France	Franc	1	1.8030	1.7935
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	1.5694	1.5575
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	1.1132	1.0978
Iran	Rial	100	15.3257	15.1351
Italy	Lira	100	0.8010	0.7930
Japan	Yen	100	6.9924	6.9237
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.7630	0.7591
Kuwait	Dinar	1	42.9100	42.7330
Malaysia	Dollar	1	4.8392	4.7944
Mauritius	Rupee	1	0.9030	0.8921
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.5930	0.5881
Netherlands	Guilder	1	4.8418	4.8033
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7810	0.7673
Singapore	Dollar	1	5.6716	5.6218
Spain	Peseta	1	0.0732	0.0701
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4330	0.4118
Sweden	Kroner	1	1.7123	1.6984
Switzerland	Franc	1	6.5183	6.4617
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.7560	0.7430
Thailand	Baht	100	47.7331	46.5330
UK	Pound	1	18.3166	18.1950
USA	Dollar	1	12.2700	12.1578
UAE	Dirham	1	3.3850	3.3560
USSR	Rouble	1	17.5730	17.4019
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	5.5340	5.3868

These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo Limited, New Delhi and quoted between the banks on 21.3.86.

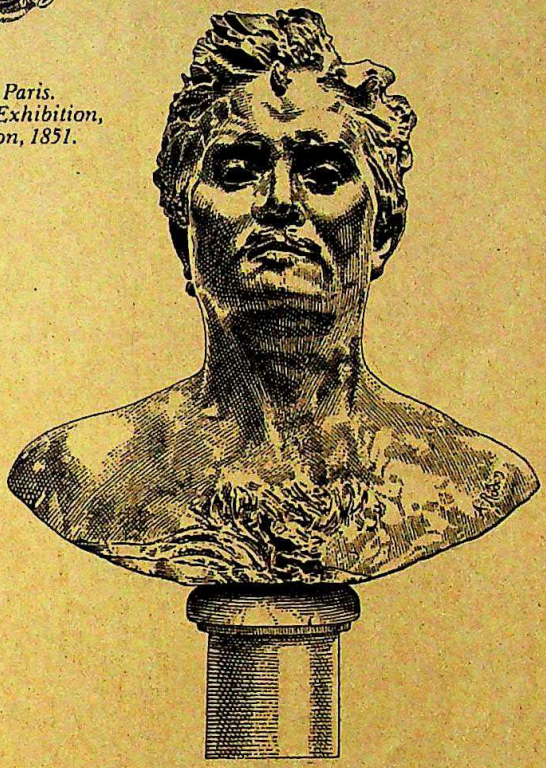
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



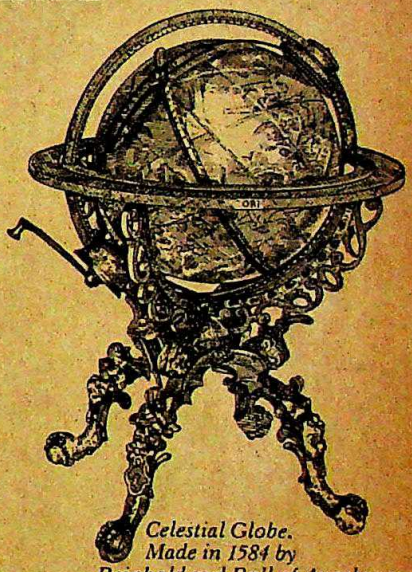
Percussion Pistol.
By Alfred Gauvain of Paris.
First shown at Great Exhibition, Crystal Palace, London, 1851.

Victoria Cross.
Supreme military honour since 1856.
Originally made from guns captured in Crimean War.



Head of Balzac.
Study in bronze by Auguste Rodin, 1840-1917.

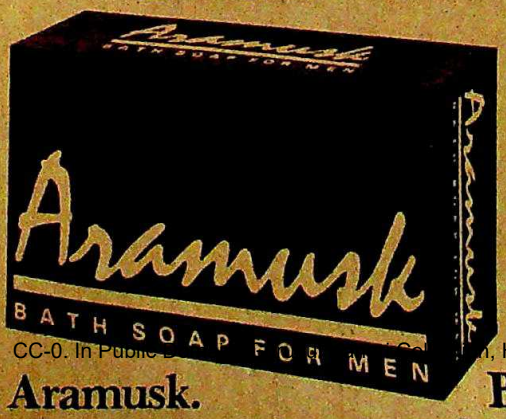
Waterford Decanter.
Classic full lead crystal brought to life by the breath of a master glassmaker.



Celestial Globe.
Made in 1584 by Reinhold and Roll of Augsburg.
Almost certainly sold in 1854 to Emperor Rudolph II, Prague.

Another certain something that's extravagantly male.

Danish Freehand.
Completely hand sculpted and finished to bring out the exquisite grain.

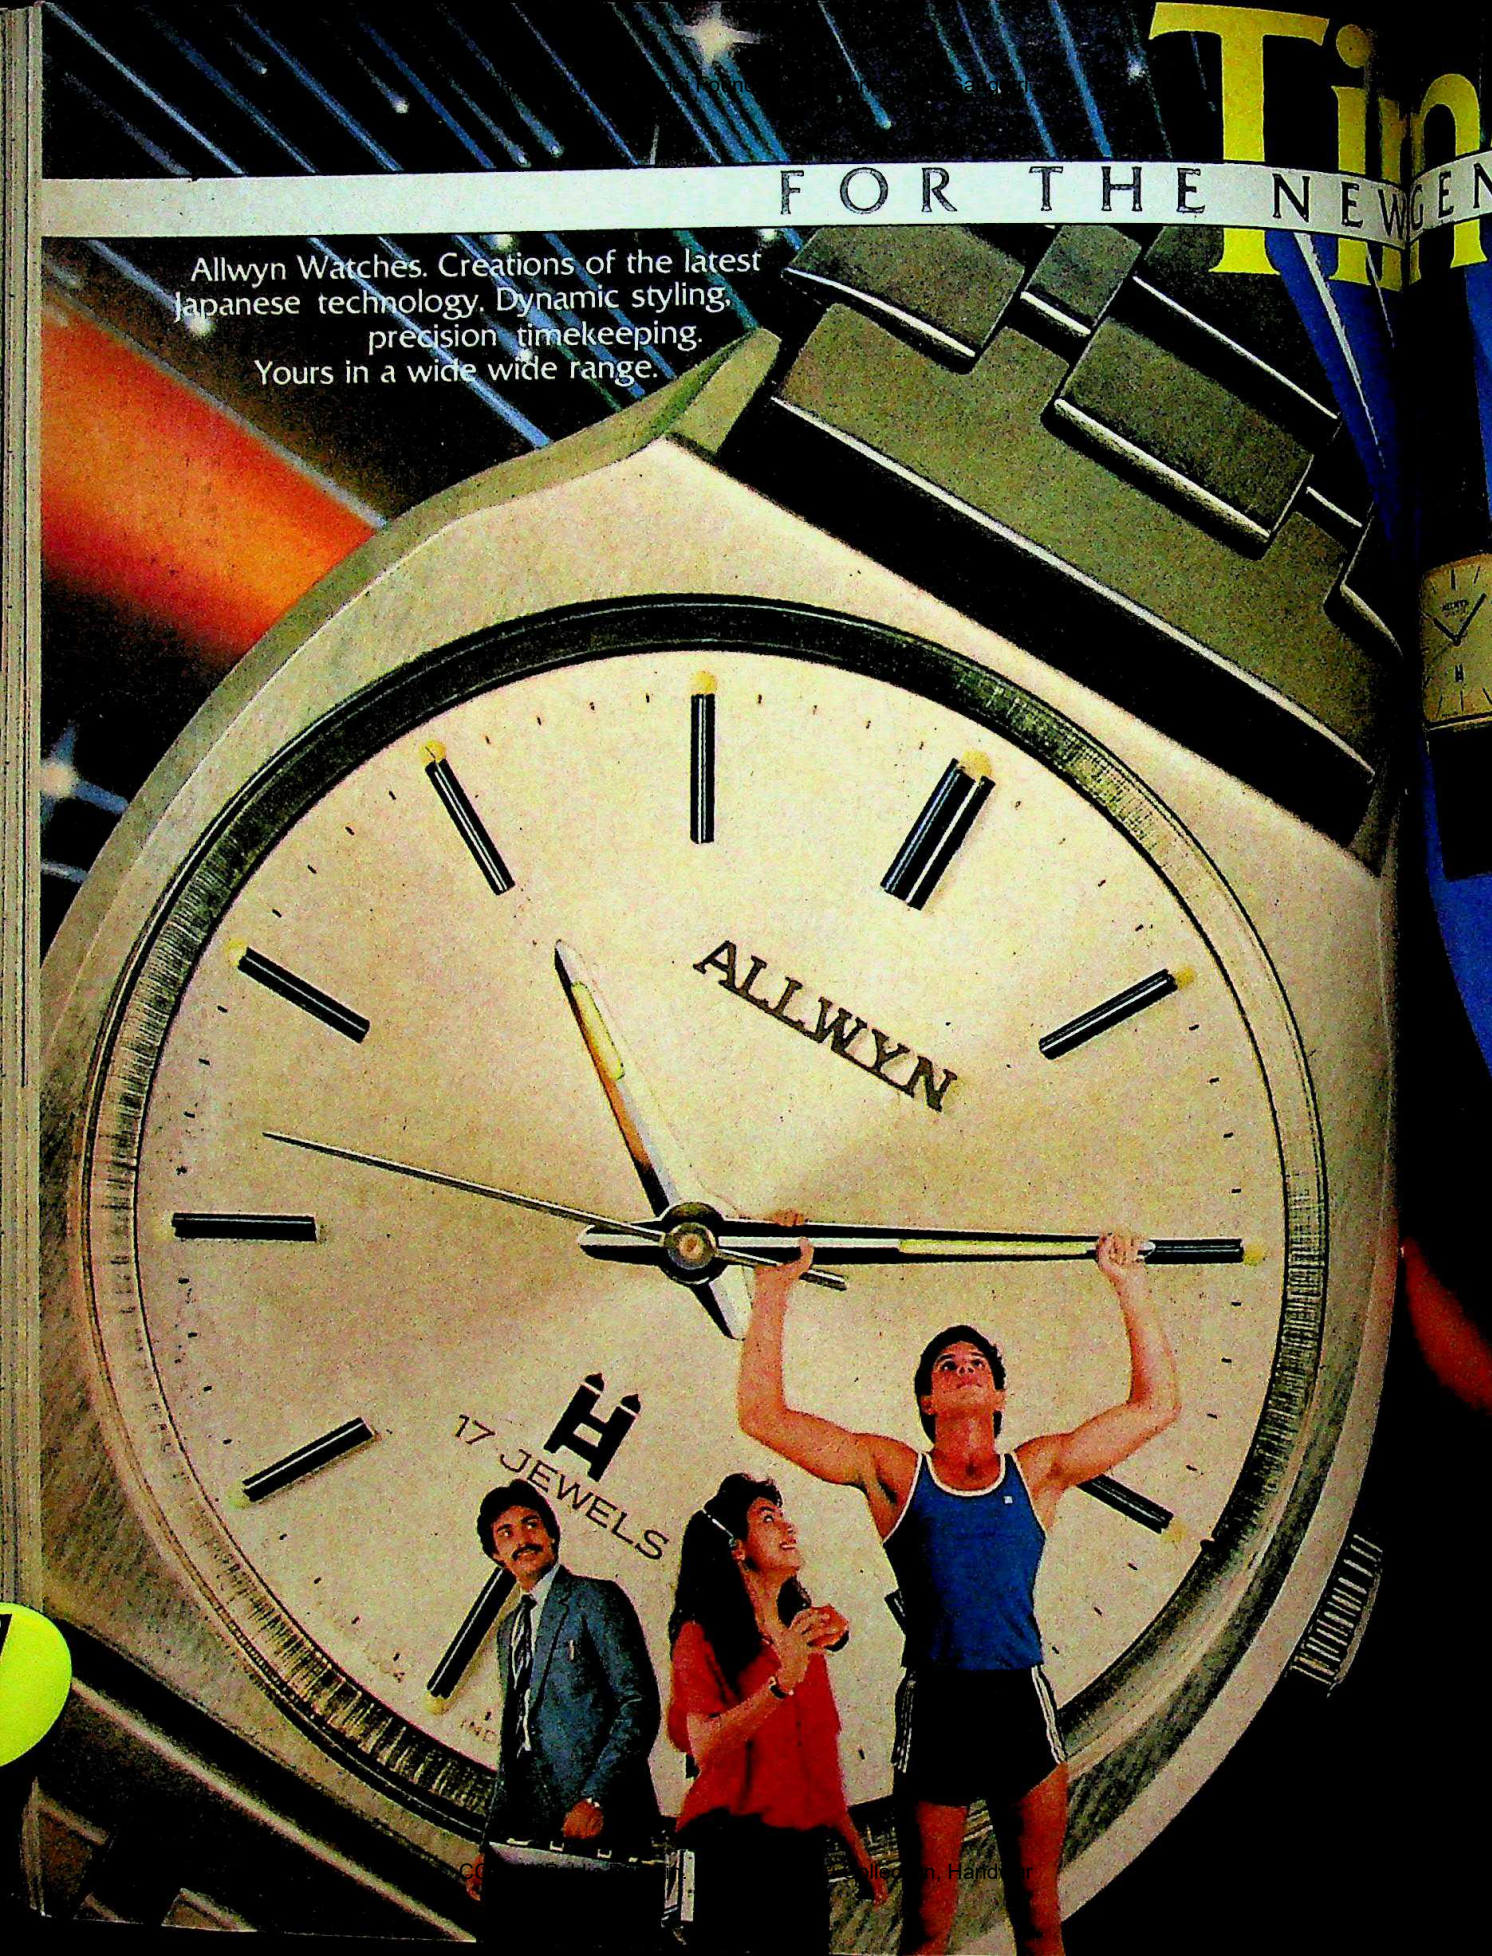


Aramusk. A bathing experience that pleasures the senses.
Capturing the timeless aroma of musk, said to be rarer and costlier than gold.
From Shaw Wallace.

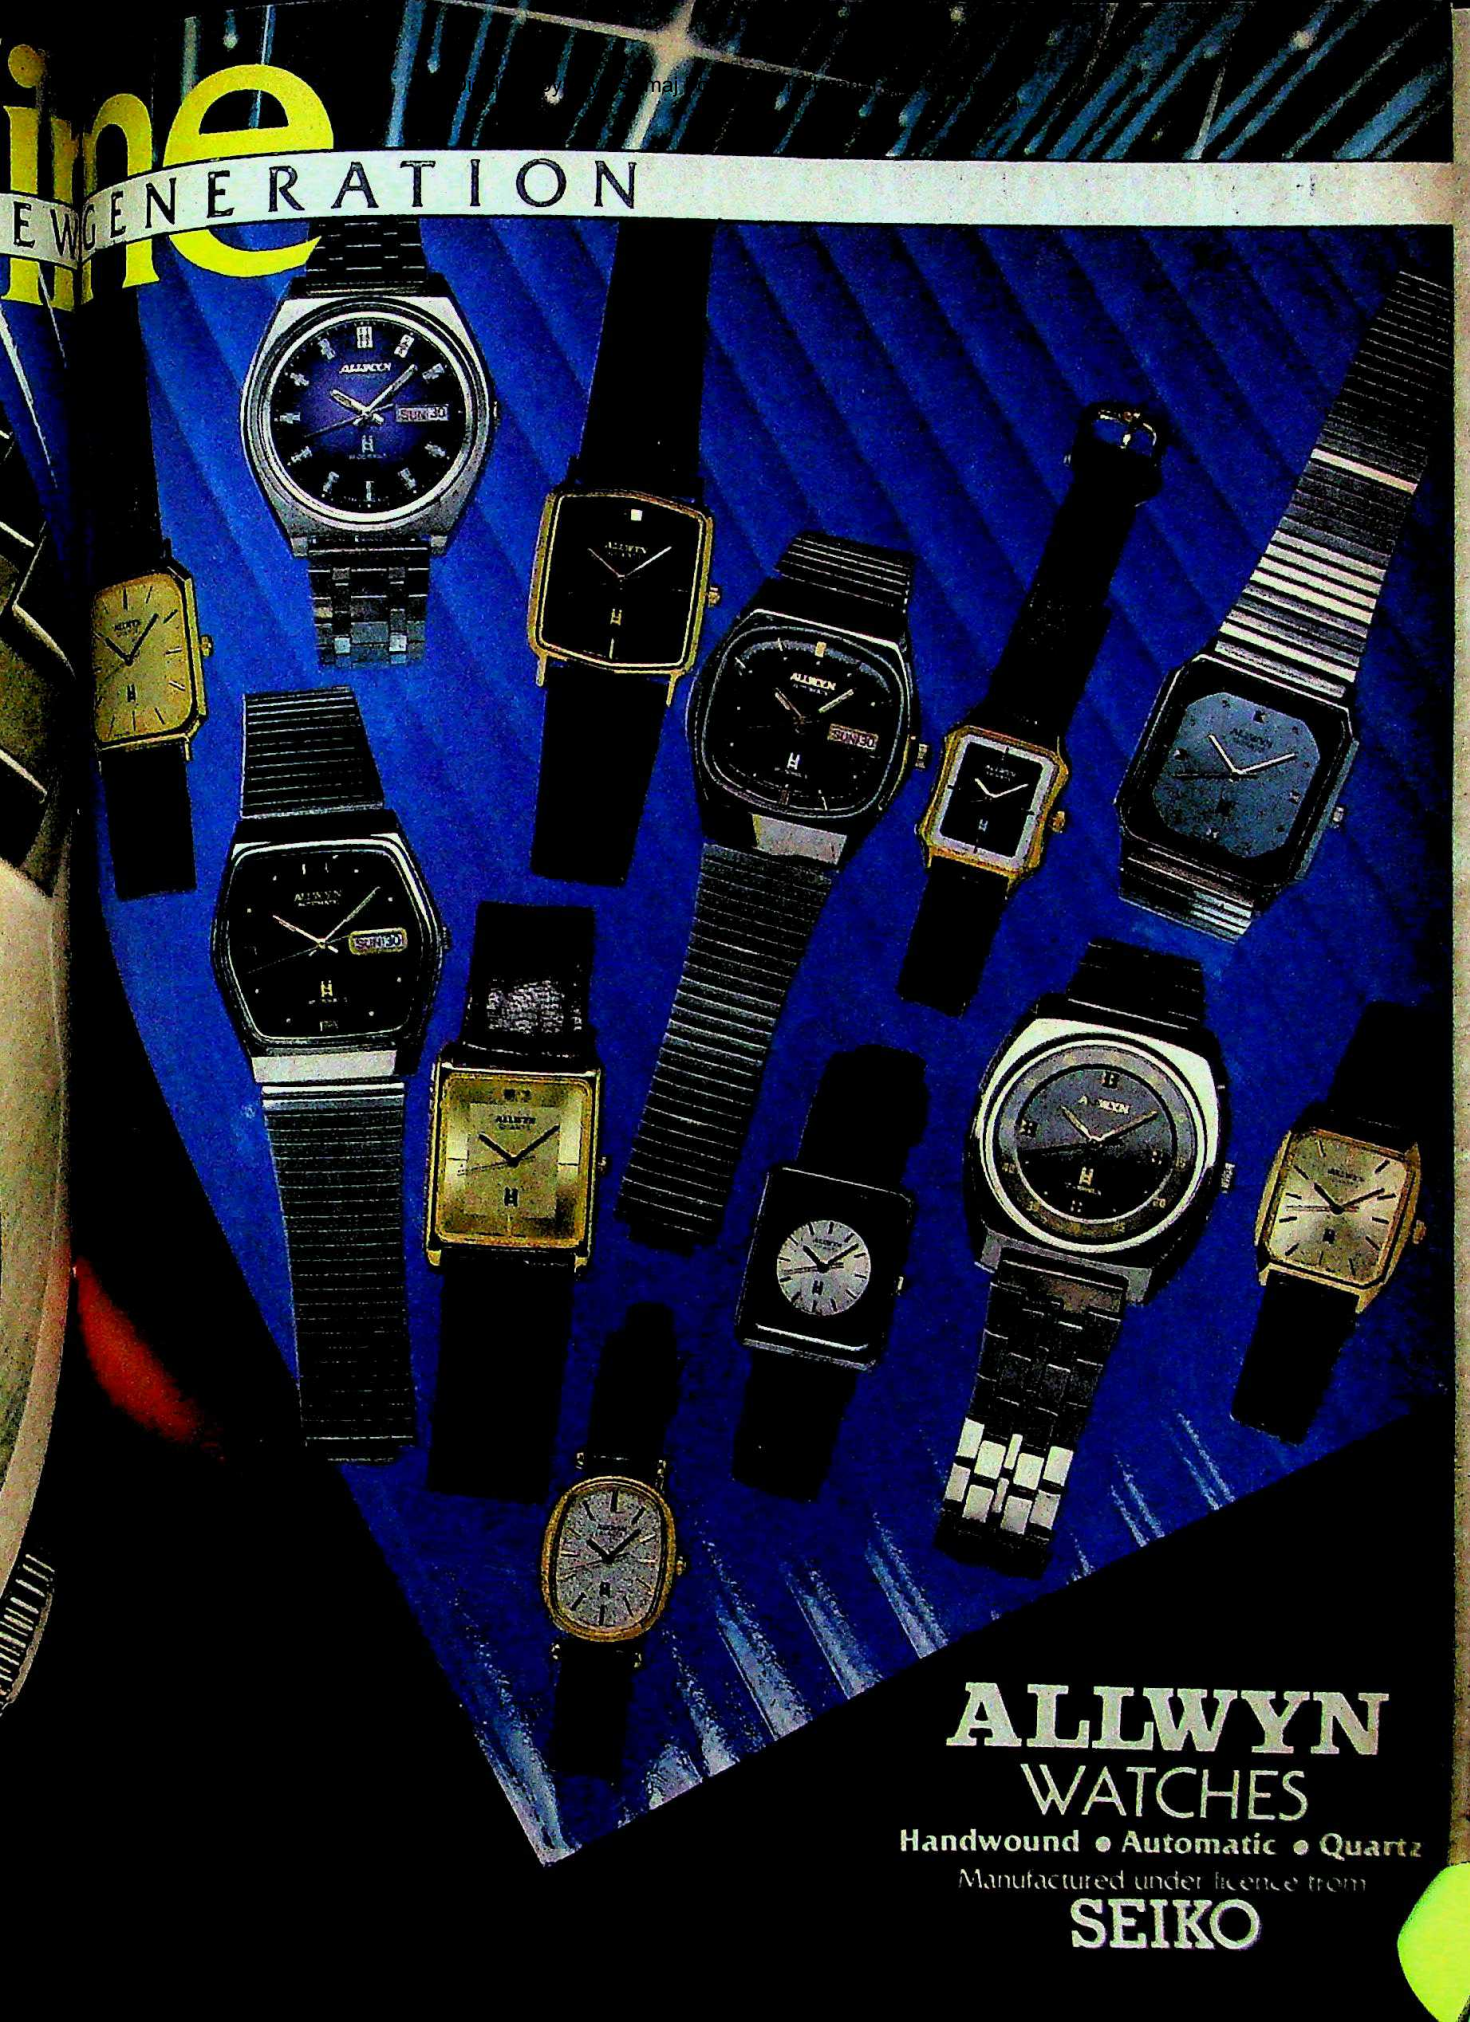
Now available at select stores in Delhi only

Introducing Aramusk. Bath Soap For Men.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection, Haridwar



FOR THE NEW GEN
Allwyn Watches. Creations of the latest Japanese technology. Dynamic styling, precision timekeeping. Yours in a wide wide range.
ALLWYN
17 JEWELS



E WGENERATION
ALLWYN
WATCHES
Handwound • Automatic • Quartz
Manufactured under licence from SEIKO

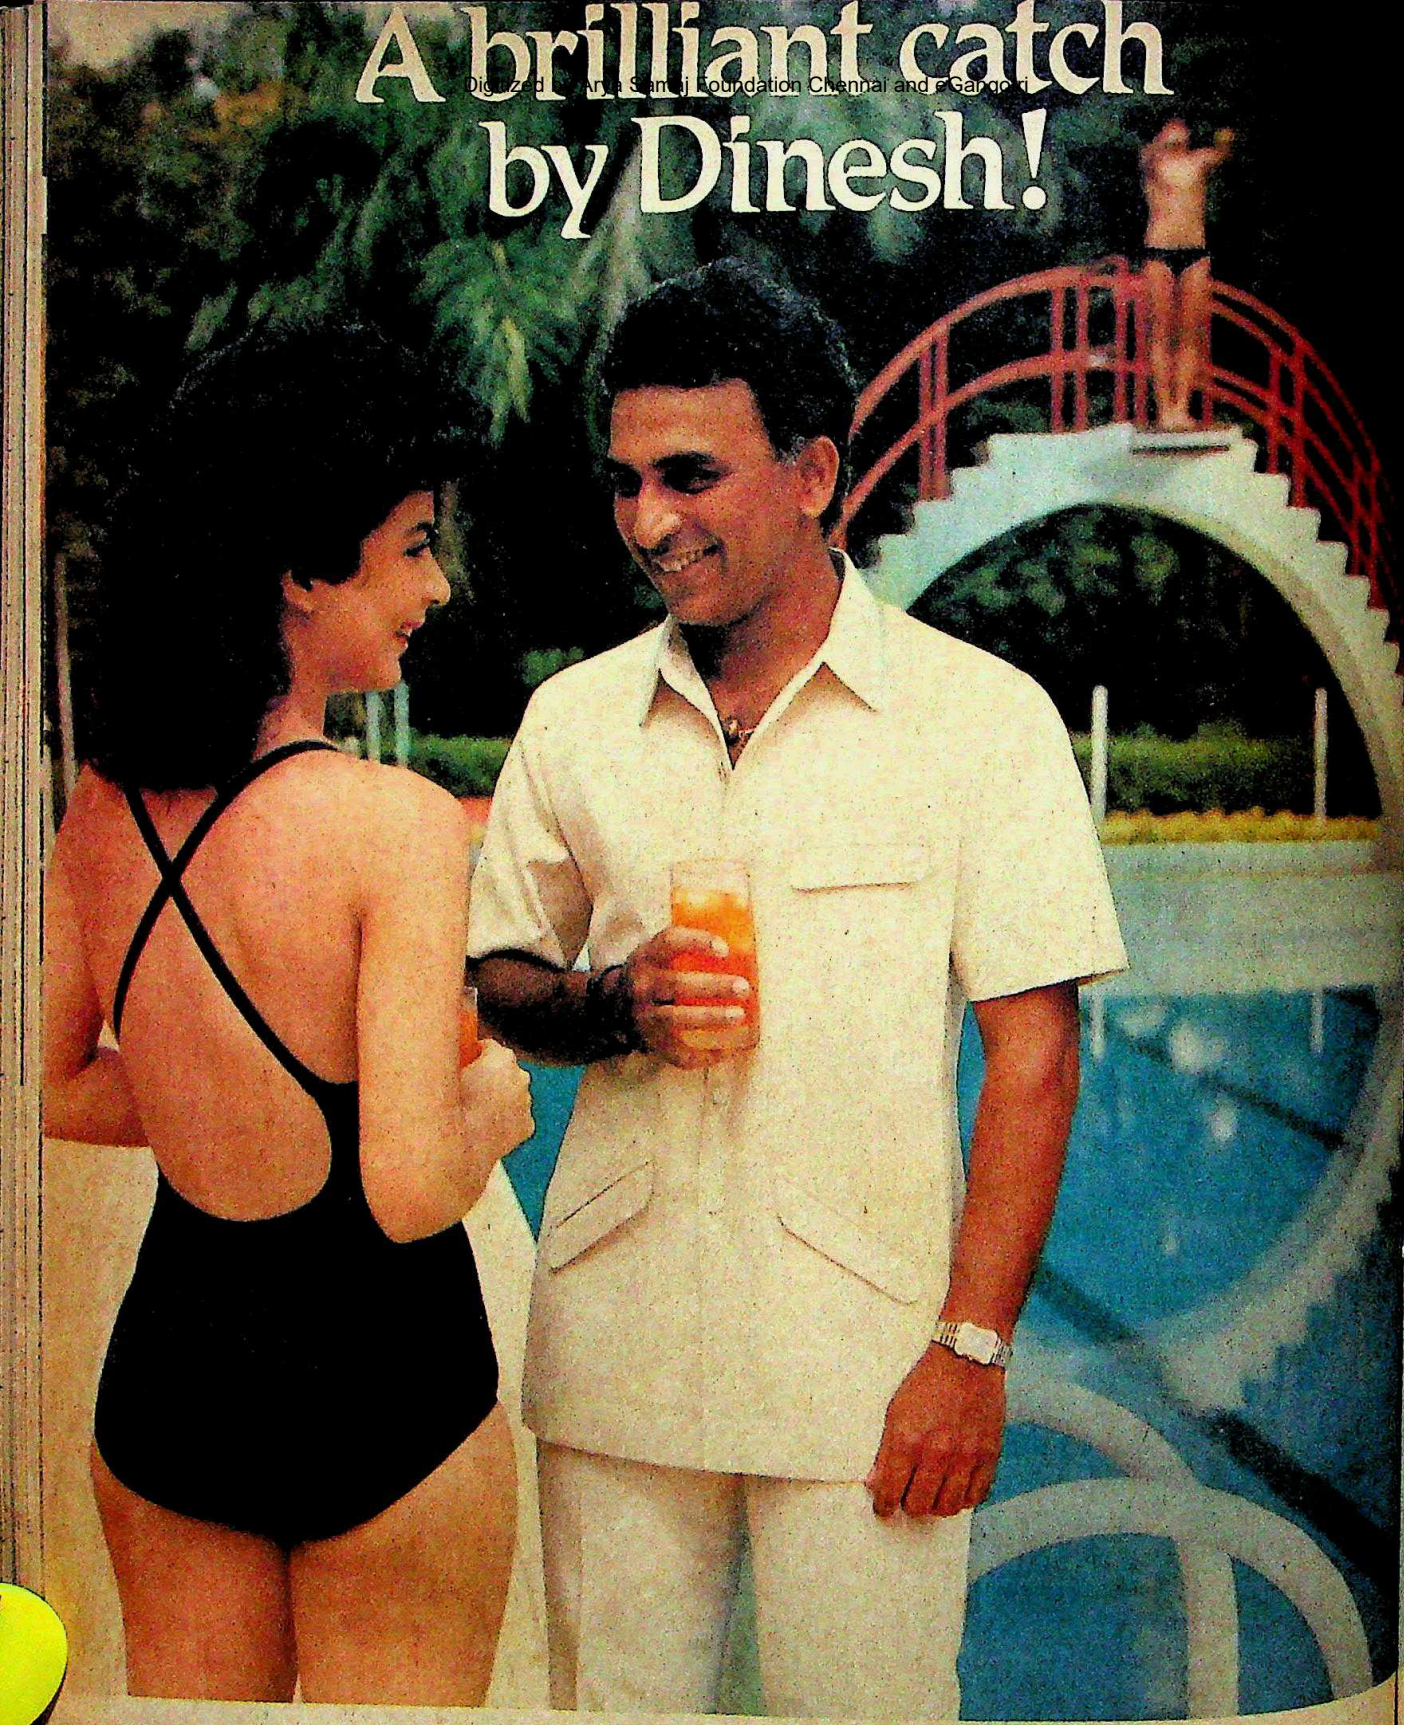
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Crisp, lightweight Dinesh Safaris have caught even Sunil Gavaskar's eye. Because Dinesh Safaris are perfect complements for people with a cool composure and class.

Dinesh Safaris. In a repertoire of shades that are just right for Sunny days!

dinesh Safaris

Give you a distinct identity.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

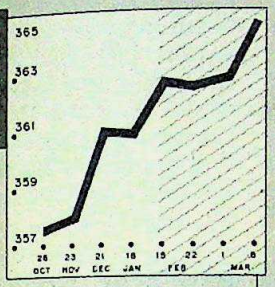
BOTH wholesale and consumer prices are rising steadily. As usual, money supply remains steady after adjustments in bank credit. Though the foreign trade situation is bleak, exports have shown a marginally better increase because of a jump in exports. The stock market went through minor hiccoughs in the post-Budgetary slump, and gold continues to be on the wane.

All data are seasonally adjusted. Current trend is computed on the basis of the last six months data to which a regression is fitted.

Wholesale Price Index

1970-71 = 100

Current Trend
7.0% p.a.

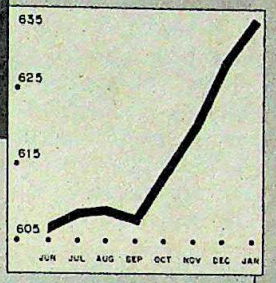


Between 22 February and 8 March, the index jumped by 0.6%. From an impressive zero rate of growth not so long ago, WPI is now near 7%.

Consumer Price Index

1960 = 100

Current Trend
10.8% p.a.

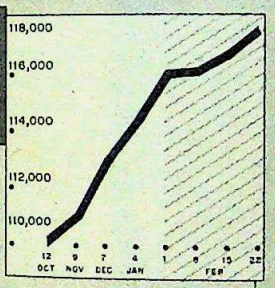


Between November 1985 and January 1986 the index rose by 2.3%, which was 26% higher than the long run trend.

Money Supply

Rs Crore

Current Trend
17.6% p.a.

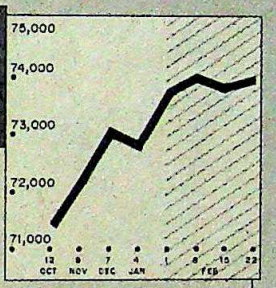


Money supply eased marginally in the month of February, but continued to expand at its steady rate of slightly over 17 per cent.

Commerical Bank Credit

Rs Crore

Current Trend
9.0% p.a.

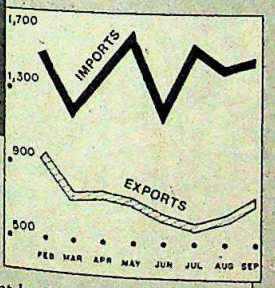


Bank credit is growing relatively slowly and the Government may be applying the squeeze here to keep over-all money supply under control.

Foreign Trade

Rs Crore

Current Trend
-21.3% p.a.
EXPORTS
4.1% p.a.
IMPORTS

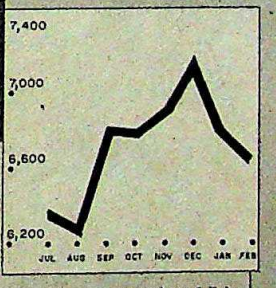


An export sprint by 23.5% between July and September could not reverse the fall. The trade gap in September alone was Rs 799 crore.

Foreign Exchange Reserves

Rs Crore

Current Trend
–5.2% p.a.

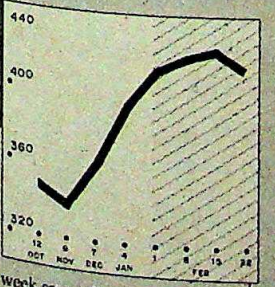


Foreign exchange reserves continued to fall by 7.4% between December and February. Inevitably, the Government has cut down on imports.

Share Price Index

1970-71 = 100

Current Trend
45.2% p.a.

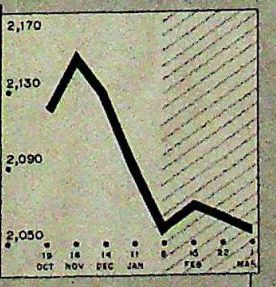


The pre-Budget week saw a 2.5% drop in share values—the usual "bourse-blues". And shares took a nosedive after the Budget.

Closing Gold Price

Rs per 10 gms.

Current Trend
–9.0% p.a.



In line with the past three months, gold has continued to drop though February went through mild peaks and troughs.

WHOLESALE PRICES

Growth of Items February, 1986

	% Growth
Onions	26.58
Nitrogenous Fertilizer	11.25
Betel-Nuts	10.49
Phosphatic Fertilizer	10.18
Khandsari	9.22
Raw Tobacco	8.77
Masoor	7.18
Petrol	5.35
Wheat	5.23
Kerosene	4.97
Eggs	4.82
Coconut Oil	4.39
Rape & Mustard Seed	3.95
Electricity	3.88
Fish	3.35
Copra	3.31
Mustard Oil	2.87
Linseed Oil	2.85
Vanaspati	2.71
Coal	2.59
Sugar	2.42
Arhar	2.14
Trucks	2.11
Crude, Petroleum & Natural Gas	2.10
Cotton Cloth	2.08
Gram	1.92
Bajra	1.66
Copper & Alloys	1.38
Maida	1.26
Diesel Oil	1.18
Barley	1.09
Gingelly Seed	1.07
Ball-Bearings	1.05
Tapioca	1.02
Mustard Oilcake	0.97
Transformers	0.96
Aluminium	0.95
Cables & Wires	0.94
Meat	0.94
Machine Tools	0.92
Tubes	0.90
Butter	0.85
Pesticides & Insecticides	0.83
Jute Textile Machinery	0.81
Rubber	0.80

Of the 139 series considered, 89 of them with a total weight of 59.971 had a positive growth and 49 of them with a total weight of 26.593 had a negative growth.

SELECTED INDICATORS

	1986	1985
Coal
Thousand Tonnes, February	15951	14287
Saleable Steel
Thousand Tonnes, February	691	650
Cement
Thousand Tonnes, February	2685	2426
Crude Petroleum
Thousand Tonnes, February	2562	2453
Call Money Rate
Per cent, February	10.0	10.0

Compiled by THE POLICY GROUP/ICIM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

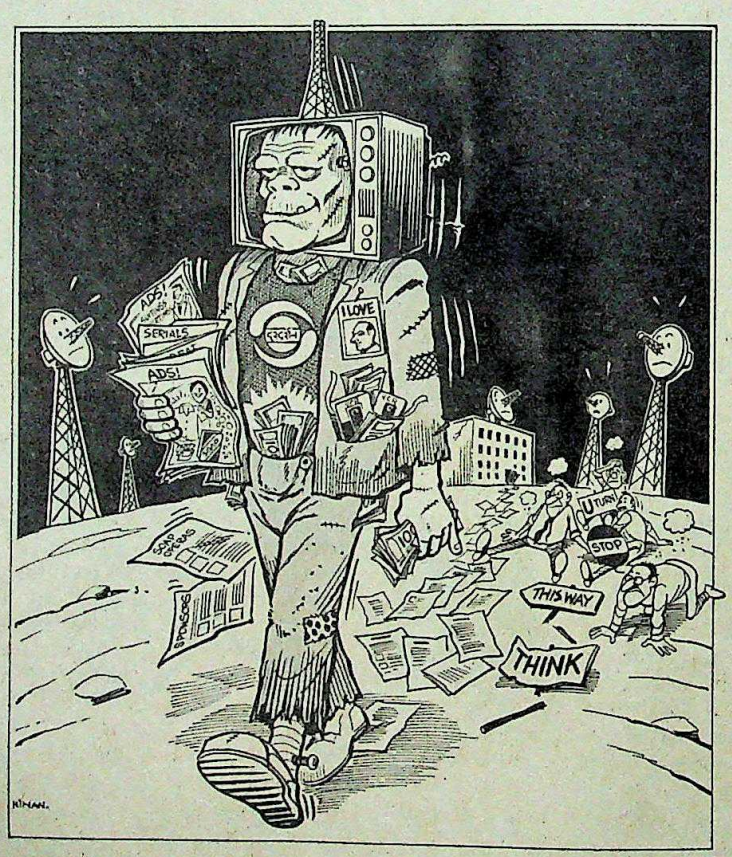
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DOORDARSHAN

The Money Machine

THE WINDS of change wafting through Doordarshan appear to be hurried along by a flurry of bank notes—in more ways than one. Increased commercialisation and revenue have transformed the dowdy damsel that was the pre-sponsored programme era into an alluring siren beckoning a new and affluent breed of clients. Overnight, Doordarshan has become a money machine: an expected Rs 60 crore revenue in 1986; and much more in 1987 when the sponsorship rates are revised in November. The problem is that the money also seems to be turning up in peculiar places.

If the Central Bureau of Investigation's (CBI) March 19 raid on the Ramakrishnapuram house of S.C. Garg, former controller of programmes (commercial) and executive producer of Hum Log, is any indication, something is rotten in the state of Doordarshan. The CBI sleuths allegedly uncovered "illegal" transactions to the tune of Rs 2.5 lakh. His friends insist he has been made a scapegoat and will take others down with him if it comes to the crunch. Following the raid, the name of Doordarshan's headquarters, Mandi House, has acquired a mockingly ironic ring.



There has always been hushed talk about corruption in the corridors of Mandi House. Those in the know claim that the going rate for getting a television serial approved for telecasting used to be Rs 5,000 to Rs 20,000 per episode, and the more affluent or desperate producers could end up paying as much as Rs 2.60 lakh under the proverbial table for a 13-part serial. "There is rampant corruption," insists a senior executive of a blue chip advertising agency. "A pilot rejected by Doordarshan was brought back to us by the producer who said he could get the approval on his own, but that the price per episode would be up by Rs 12,000." Other agencies narrate similar experiences.

However, the extent and scope of the corruption had been difficult to establish. Former information and broadcasting (I&B) secretary S.S. Gill says he received many complaints about money changing hands in Doordarshan. "Even the (I&B) minister was suspicious and I discussed the matter with the director-general. I used to tell these complaining people that I was prepared to lay a trap. I said I would sign bank notes and let somebody come forward and try to bribe an official. But nobody did." Obviously, word of the planned ploy had got around.

Many frustrated producers and private television companies charge that there is ample proof of corruption in the arbitrary manner in which serials are selected, and that this corruption has created a new breed of agents derisively referred to as 'Boeing touts'—air-time seekers who jet in from Bombay, head for Mandi House and return by the evening flight, often brandishing freshly-signed letters of approval. Says a senior official: "We used to get a call from the ministry telling us to issue letters of approval by 4 p.m. so that the producer could catch the evening flight to Bombay."

Given this kind of role played by the ministry, it would be facile to blame Doordarshan alone for the sorry state of TV. There has been ministerial interference almost on a daily basis and a senior official complaind: "We had to stand by and silently watch the emasculation of Doordarshan..." At one stage, meetings were held every Wednesday where ministry officials told Doordarshan what to do. As if that weren't enough, there were at least a couple of instances when officials in the Prime Minister's Secretariat passed on orders on what should be cleared. Clearly, Doordarshan often had little control over what it was doing or showing.

Certainly, there seems little consistency or established standards under which serials are selected. Some programmes are suddenly taken off the air while bad pennies keep turning up. Shobha Doctor's Titliyan was thrown out by Gill but aired as soon as he retired. Ajube, the Moliere adaptation by P. Kumar Vasudev made it despite objections, while India Alive, rejected initially by Doordarshan surfaced nevertheless, as did Vyjantimala's embarrassing four-part ballet on national integration, Ekta. "She made life miserable for everybody. She kept going to the minister until one day the secretary finally called Mudra and asked them to make it," said a senior official.

The charge of arbitrariness in allotting TV-time will continue as long as demand for it exceeds supply. According to George John, head of the Delhi branch of the advertising agency Ulka, the demand is 200 times greater than the availability. Nikhil Nehru, vice-president of Hindustan Thompson Associates (HTA), pegs it even higher: "If we were to get most of the air time for sponsored programmes, we would still want more." The task of selection thus becomes for-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

"Even the I&B minister was suspicious and I discussed the corruption with the director-general. I was prepared to lay a trap. I would sign bank notes and let somebody come forward and try to bribe an official".

S.S. Gill
former I&B secretary

...ailable. Says Director-General (DG) Harish Khanna: "The demand is so large. But this is not like the Civil Supplies Department where if somebody comes and asks for sugar you give them at least half a kilo."

And the deluge continues; proposals pour in at the rate of eight a day. At last count nearly 1,300 proposals for sponsored programmes had been received, of which only 169 were approved, and a few hundred "disposed of". Until lately, a producer would be informed about the fate of his proposal within three weeks of its submission. Today it takes at least three months. Some producers who handed in proposals in January have yet to even get a serial number informing them at what stage the proposal is.

How do the bosses at Doordarshan sift through this mountain of proposals? The committee of three entrusted with the job, with DG Khanna, additional DG Shiv Sharma, and Controller of Programmes (Commercial) M.P. Lele, is hierarchical in nature and the DG has the final say—provided the mandarins of the I&B Ministry or other fountain-heads of power do not intervene. But some producers seem to be more equal than others and their names keep cropping up again and again. Says a senior Doordarshan official: "If you sift through the proposals coming up, many of them seem to be Mudra or Ms Doctor." The latter has two companies: Time and Space and Concept Communications. Mudra, owned by tycoon Dhirubhai Ambani, and Shobha Doctor are eager to grab programmes from producers, assuring them guaranteed air-time.

OF THE 42 sponsored programmes aired between April 1, 1985 and March 1, 1986, seven were produced or aired by the indefatigable Mudra: Spiderman, It's a Woman's World, Rajani, Hot Tracks, India 2001, Krishnavtar and Azadi ki Kahani. No fewer than six involve Doctor, the new czarina of Indian television: Hum Log, Titliyan, Jaane-Alam, Natkat Narad, Idhar-Udhar (awaiting revival) and Ajube. And when the seven episodes of Live Aid, the concert in London in aid of Ethiopia, were to be aired, several sponsors were mentioned. But in the end, it was a Mudra show. Solo.

Livid when asked how Mudra and she managed to corner most of the sponsored programmes, Doctor says: "Friends say that I have a fox-eye for good programmes. I run an agency and have to make sure that I get the best for my clients. The reason why my agency and Mudra do better than Lintas or HTA is because they have to take collective decisions which take time, whereas we can take quick decisions." And Sashi Kumar, general manager of Mudra's Video Tech, said: "We have a lot of air-time because we are on our toes. This is a competitive field and we have an edge over the competition because we were one of the pioneers."

Now, with Doordarshan taking an epic-related turn the movie moghuls from Bombay are moving in with guaranteed air-time, almost like five-year plans. The concept of B.R. Chopra's Mahabharata has been approved though the pilot is yet to come since he says it would not be worth his while to build sets worth Rs 20 lakh for a pilot which may end up in the rejection bin. Ramanand Sagar has moved in with Ramayana, and not to be left behind, G.P. Sippy is preparing a 104-part saga of Punjabi refugees called Buniyad.

In fact, few producers seem to be worried about quality. Getting air-time has become a matter of prestige. Says a senior advertising executive: "Ad men are not worried about programmes. It does not bother them if they are trash, as long as there is a letter of approval. Viewership is the name of the game."

Apart from new-rich producers, the sponsored-programmes bonanza has created a breed of small and aggressive ad agencies which are muscling the giants out. Since obtaining air-time has become the new efficiency indicator, a frown of disapproval from a Doordarshan boss can break an established agency. Advertisers want air-time and will go to whoever makes it available; thus the bigger agencies often have the clients but not the time, and the smaller ones the time, but few clients. Also, producers tend to go directly to the advertisers. The larger advertising agencies now are losing their billing; eventually they might lose their clients as well. HTA stands to lose business worth Rs 3 crore. The agency had booked Rs 8.5 crore worth of air-time but got only Rs 52 lakh worth, and this has to be shared by its five branches, each with 10 clients. Ulka might lose Rs 70 lakh to 80 lakh.

Except for the fortunate few, however, producers and advertising agencies are at the mercy of Doordarshan or the Information and Broadcasting Ministry's whims, no matter how good, or bad, their offerings. As things stand, the aptly-named Mandi House has created its own 'Khandaan'. The worry is whether commercialisation and the taint of corruption have created a money-making monster.

—MADHU JAIN

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

"The reason why my agency and Mudra do better than Lintas or HTA is because they have to take collective decisions which take time; whereas we can take quick decisions."

SHOBHA DOCTOR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CHARLES SOBHRAJ

The Escape Scandal

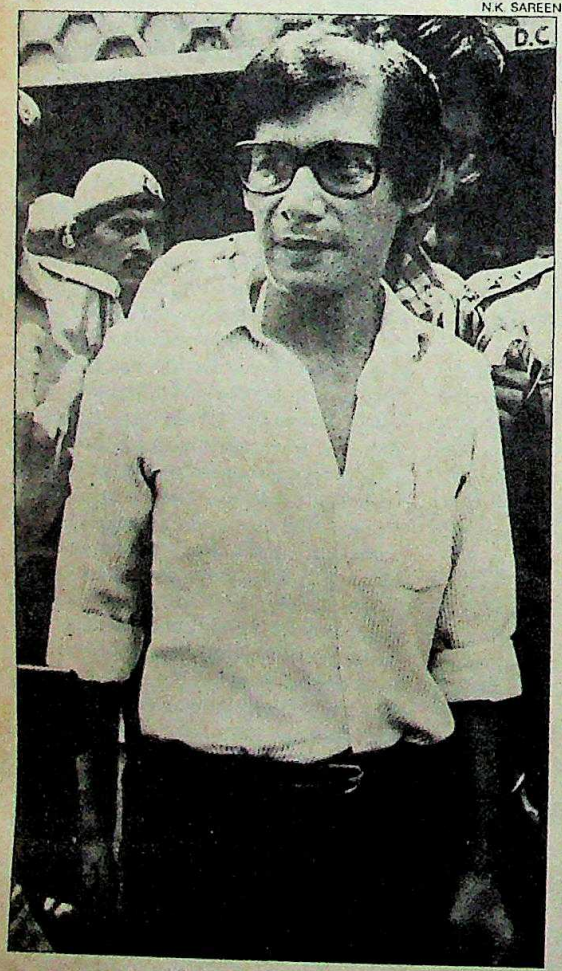
THREE weeks ago, an unusual event went almost unnoticed in the massive, 271-acre Tihar Central Jail complex on the outskirts of Delhi. In jail No. 3, some of the prisoners discovered a cat lying unconscious in a corner. It was still breathing. Some sympathetic warders tended it and on the third day the animal began to walk somewhat uncertainly. On the fourth day, it was perfectly normal though slightly weak from the strange ailment.

Last week, the cat's ordeal was a hotly discussed topic among the Tihar jail staff as there were no doubts left as to what exactly had happened to it. Charles Sobhraj, equal parts Svengali and Houdini and one of the most wanted criminals in the world today, was taking no chances this time. The master of the drug-rob-kill art had used the cat as a guinea pig to test the efficacy of the new sedative that his friends had just smuggled to him in jail. More vitally, he wanted to decide on the right dosage. The two earlier occasions when he had miscalculated the dose—once on his way to Teheran from Kabul when he drugged a Pakistani taxi-driver to death and the second time at Delhi's Vikram Hotel where the drug acted too quickly for him to make a getaway—had nearly written off his career. There was going to be no mistake this time.

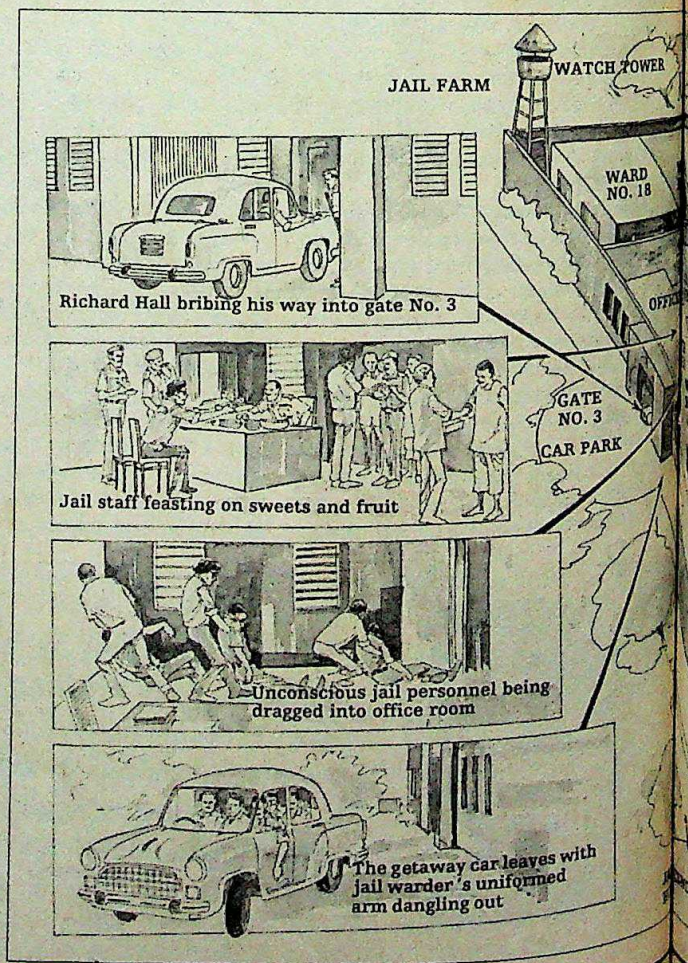
Last fortnight, as millions of people the world over woke up to screaming newspaper headlines announcing the escape of Charles Gurmukh Sobhraj, the reaction was not one of disbelief. The 42-year-old master criminal who had left law-enforcement agencies dazed and bewildered in a dozen countries, left at least 16 men and women (mainly innocent tourists) dead and scores drugged and robbed, and whose exploits had launched two internationally best-selling biographies, Serpentine and Life and Crimes of Charles Sobhraj, had disappeared from a top-security prison for the sixth time in his life.

"The inevitability of it had never been lost on any of us. I am only surprised it took so long coming," said Narendra Nath Tuli, the retired superintendent of the Delhi Police who, after years of painstaking search, had finally nabbed Sobhraj in Delhi's Vikram Hotel in 1976—an arrest that forced Sobhraj to spend almost a decade in jail, the longest jail-term of his eventful life. Widespread commotion followed his escape, with the Opposition in Parliament and the major national dailies calling the escape a national shame. Said the Hong Kong-based Asiaweek editorially: "Dr No, Goldfinger, Professor Moriarty, move over: Charles Sobhraj has you beat," and then added a dash of sarcasm: "Anyone can be slippery where there are greasy palms." And if history is

N.K. SAREEN



Sobhraj: slippery as an eel



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sobhraj's love letter to Reddy spy guide (see box), Tihar has never been short of greasy palms.

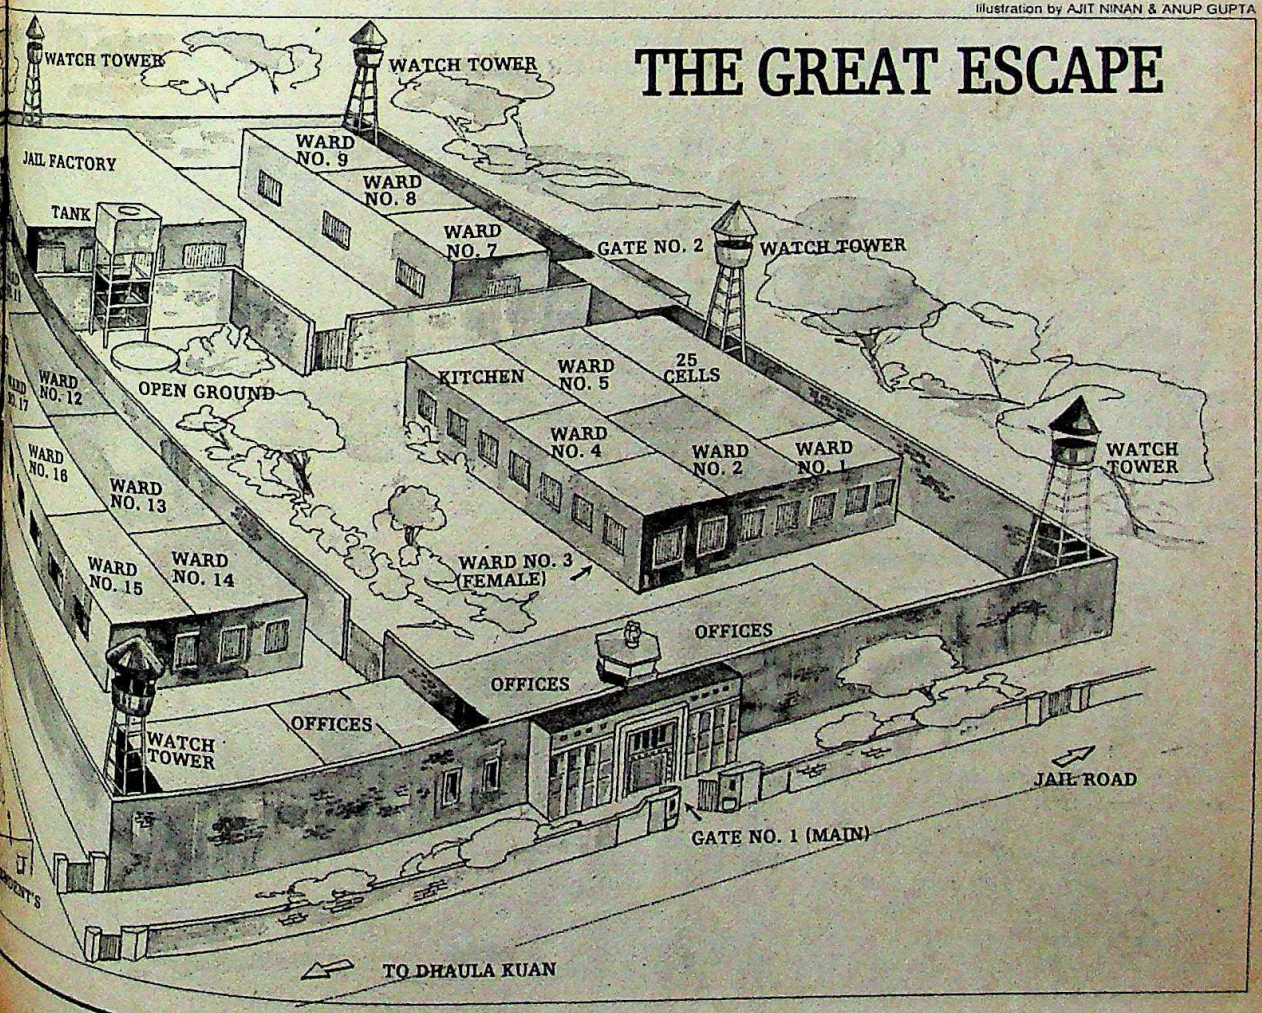
All along his chequered career in crime, Sobhraj had left behind him scores of surprised, drugged, and stupefied men and women. As did those on a lazy Sunday morning last fortnight. There were the two Tamil Nadu Special Police sentries sprawled on their bellies outside gate No. 3 of the prison, their .303 rifles lying impotently beside them, six jail officials lying inside the compound in a drugged stupor and, most telling of all, warder Anand Swarup collapsed half a kilometre away with scotch-tape stuck across his mouth. "The scene", a prison official recalled later, "was very comic and I could have died laughing had its consequences not been so tragic for all of us."

Contrary to what the jail officials initially leaked to the press, the first alarm was sounded not by a petty pick-pocket but by warder Anand Swarup, who came to nearly an hour after Sobhraj and his accomplices had dumped him on the road. The dazed warder made a dash for the house of V.D. Pushkarna, deputy superintendent of the jail, who went straight for the panic button.

By the end of the fortnight, after a series of grilling interrogation sessions, the police had finally begun to piece together the sequence of events that led to the flight of "Charles saab", as the don of Tihar was addressed even by prison officials. It was also becoming increasingly clear that his escape was not exactly the consequence of a conspiracy with the jail staff. It was, indeed, a tribute to the petty corruption, inefficiency and stupidity that has been associated with the jail's staff for many years now.

Corruption enabled Richard Hall, the British drug-runner, to drive into the jail on Sunday by passing across just one hundred rupee note to the sentry at the gate along with a basket of goodies—grapes, apples, chocolates, custard pudding, burfi and petha, all spiked with just the right amount of sedatives. Stupidity made the more senior jail officers inside

Illustration by AJIT NINAN & ANUP GUPTA



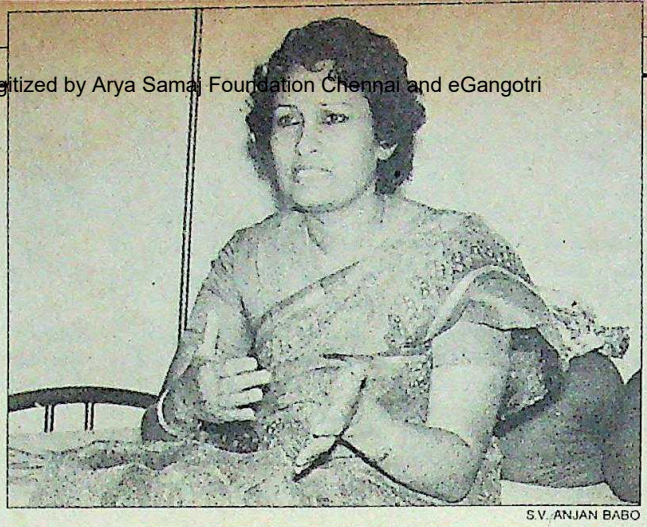
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

believe he was celebrating his birthday—when his birthday falls on April 6—and they swallowed the drugged bait, forgetting Sobhraj's past where he had invariably committed crimes by mixing sedatives in his victims' food or drink. And finally it was the incompetence of the armed guards on the nearby watch-tower that let him go unchallenged.

Sobhraj had left nothing to chance. He had bundled Anand Swarup, the drugged warder, into the car and as he drove away, let his uniformed arm hang loosely out of the window, making the sentries believe that nothing was wrong since prison officials were in the car as well.

For many months now, Sobhraj had been rehearsing and preparing for this, perhaps the most significant escape of his life after the brilliant getaway from a Spandau-like Greek island prison (see box). His desperation to flee now was not without reason. He had already lost his appeal in the Delhi High Court against the chief metropolitan magistrate's order extraditing him to Thailand, and Sobhraj realised that once in Bangkok he would end up facing a firing squad after a short trial. "He realised that the charges against him in Thailand were of premeditated murder and not just manslaughter. And Thailand has not inherited a cumbersome, liberal legal system like India's," said Richard Neville, co-author of Life and Crimes of Charles Sobhraj, disclosing that Sobhraj had written to him in April 1985, saying that if the extradition case seemed to be going against him, he would "use the Greek method", referring to his other desperate jail-break in Greece.



S.V. ANJAN BABO

Reddy: charmed by the master criminal

But for breaking out of Tihar, Sobhraj did not need to do something as innovative as setting a prison van on fire. Over a decade earlier, to free his first wife Chantal from Kabul jail, he had tried to get Marilyn, his daughter's British nurse, into the jail on a minor drug charge to help his escape plan. It did not work out then. But now Richard Hall happily ended up in Tihar for two months on a minor and presumably deliberate drug offence. By the time he got out on bail two months later, in January, the contours of the plan had been perfected. "This was in keeping with his past record," says Tuli, now working as a security officer in the Delhi-based Jay Engineering Works, adding that "Even when I was in service, we had had at least three cases of his foreign accomplices deliberately getting themselves arrested to join him in jail. Each time we had

TIHAR CENTRAL JAIL

Open House

ON THE south-west fringe of Delhi, near the sprawling Janakpuri colony, lies Tihar Central Jail. Tihar draws its prominence not from the invincibility of a Spandau or the hopelessness of the cellular prison in the Andamans. It is one of the most inefficient jails in the country, where money and muscle can get anything, from alcohol to heroin, guns, girls—even boys.

Nothing—neither the exposures by reporters nor the criticism by several inquiry committees—has been able to reform Tihar. "It is shocking, shameful and unbelievable," that is how Zail Singh had reacted while on a visit to the jail in 1981. He had barely walked in when a prisoner walked up to him to offer him a glass of liquor.

Charles Sobhraj could hardly have asked for an easier playground. He was the don, manipulating the system through bribe and bullying. In July 1981, Ved Prakash Garg, an idealistic young officer wrote a strong letter to his superiors complaining of this. A probationer then, he was promptly sacked for "leaking" his letter to the press. Jobless for five years, he was feeling vindicated last fortnight. Said Garg: "His dadagiri was the dadagiri of money, and he used to boast that he would buy anyone."

Jail officials admit that Sobhraj drew his enormous power from his unlimited reserves of money. But there is no clear answer as to where the money came from. Sobhraj claimed that his two biographies fetched him quite a packet. But the authors of Life and Crimes of Charles Sobhraj assert that they did not pay "even a penny" to Sobhraj and he, indeed, had a long litigation with the author of Serpentine. He was hoping to make some money through the third book on his life being written by Kumkum Chadha, a Delhi-based journalist who had signed a comprehensive contract with him on sharing the royalties. Jail officials, however, say that Sobhraj made money by winning the confidence of foreign tourists, scores of whom end up in Tihar.

Gate No. 3: open sesame

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Jail officials Bahadur and Pushkarna in custody: grapes of wrath

...ve them thrown out ...ckly."

That vigil was not being maintained any longer in spite of reports that Sobhraj had come to be known as the biggest dada in the prison, with close links with Raju Bhatnagar—the dreaded Madhya Pradesh dacoit—and his gang, which included Brij Mohan and Laxmi Narain, two of the men who escaped with Sobhraj. The first step was to secure the release of Bhatnagar, who was bailed out mysteriously one morning in December last year.

More than anything else, it is the most outrageously scandalous manner in which Bhatnagar escaped that underlines Sobhraj's mesmeric control over the Tihar jail staff. Bhatnagar, accused in dozens of cases of murder, robbery and kidnapping, had already spent about four years in the jail awaiting trial when his bail application came up before the chief metropolitan magistrate in Delhi. Turning down the bail application the magistrate clearly ordered: "Bail not accepted."

But contrary to the order, the very next day Bhatnagar had been set free on bail, which he promptly jumped. He now carries a reward of Rs 25,000 on his head. The police have no doubt that he was the man who worked behind the scenes and coordinated the master-plan with Hall and Sobhraj. His bonus: the release of his two chief accomplices.

How exactly Bhatnagar managed to get himself freed despite the judge's orders to the contrary is a mystery that the police and the Delhi Administration's Law Department are trying desperately to crack. And there are no convenient answers. Bhatnagar's release did not become a controversial matter though the Home Departments of Madhya Pradesh and Uttar Pradesh promptly wrote to Delhi protesting against it. But now, with his suspected involvement in Sobhraj's escape, the situation has changed.

According to highly placed sources, a magisterial investigation has ruled that the release was a result of the court staff "not reading the order correctly". But the police find this explanation too simplistic. "We have heard of criminals being released on false bail orders, but this is a rare case of one who was bailed out against court orders," said a Crime Branch officer. A fresh, high-level investigation has been ordered into the lapse and police indicate that they are likely to arrest some more prison officials who may have been responsible for his getting away.

If money was Sobhraj's ammunition, his strategy was his enormous charm. "He was extremely polite, almost to the extent of being disarmingly reverential to everyone around," recalls Gopal Singh, a Delhi college teacher and Akali activist who often met Sobhraj during his brief jail terms. Sobhraj was extremely close to Rajendra Sethia whom he promised a million rupees from a publisher for his autobiography. He often used his influence to fix Sethia's out-of turn interviews with newsmen. In fact, he had such a cushy time at Tihar that he was miserable when compelled to spend a few months at the relatively strict Naini jail in Allahabad. He was serving a sentence of hard labour but had been assigned the relatively easy task of gardening. And he did little more than keep a look-out over the fence.

Now under attack, the jail staff point out that they also have some peculiar problems running the jail. For one, any well-known prisoner lodged here promptly gets media mention and succeeds in planting stories sympathetic to himself. An example was Sobhraj himself while he was fighting his case for the removal of chains and shackles. Proximity to the seat of power also brings into play pressures on behalf of powerful prisoners. This is compounded by the problem of perpetual overcrowding. There were over 3,000 prisoners in the jail last fortnight, as against a total planned capacity of less than 1,300: Jail No. 1, which houses convicts, had 1,250; jail No. 2 which has lifers and others serving long sentences, 400; and jail No. 3 which has a mix of convicts and undertrials, about 750. Besides there were about 650 in the camp jail which houses demonstrators.

Prisons all over the country are similarly overcrowded. Yet none matches Tihar's infamous record. Officials, including Delhi's Lieutenant-Governor H.L. Kapur, blame the state of affairs on the in-breeding within the small prison official cadre which makes frequent transfers impossible. But that again is a problem they have to live with and for once now, jolted and shamed, officials seem determined to bring about lasting improvement. Said Kapur firmly: "There has obviously been a slip-up. But this is not going to be repeated."

—SHEKHAR GUPTA

RANJAN BASU

"His dadagiri was the dadagiri of money, and he used to boast that he would buy anyone."

VED PRAKASH GARG
former Tihar official

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

But while what made the criminals get away is scandalous in the extreme, what is currently on the minds of the Delhi Police is not the witch-hunt but the whereabouts of Sobhraj. "We want to find these people quickly. They are pathological murderers and could commit another crime any day," says Delhi Police Commissioner Ved Marwah. And 100 members of a special task force under the Crime Branch are carefully scouring all possible hide-outs in Delhi and other cities, microscopically examining each lead. And the trails they are following are familiar to those who know Sobhraj and his style.

In a way, his escape has only put the clock back—returning Sobhraj to his familiar world. "You look at his entire criminal history and not once has he escaped or committed a major crime without the help of a woman accomplice," said a senior crime branch official. Sure enough, his men had spent over 10 days in Delhi and Jhansi district of Uttar Pradesh looking for Sneha Sangar, a young law graduate who disappeared

THE ESCAPES

Nuts and Bolts

CHARLES Gurmukh Sobhraj learnt to break out of captivity young. Noi, his Vietnamese mother, knew only one way of restraining her resentful and violent eight-year-old: tying him with rope to his bed. But sooner or later he escaped, only to return to captivity again.

His career in crime is a reflection of his unusual childhood, only more dramatised and romanticised. His escape saga began when he slipped out of a French prison where he had been held for a car theft, to be re-arrested shortly afterwards.

True to form, however, he was arrested again in India as he shifted to Asia. And in November 1971, he played the first of his master moves, faking appendicitis. He was taken to the Willingdon Hospital and was operated upon. A week later, he used his French wife Chantal to keep the guards in the hospital busy in conversation and cleverly slipped his arm into his pyjama leg while the guards were locking the shackles round it. A moment later, he manoeuvred his arm free and walked out, casting aside the loose shackles. Hours later he was caught at Delhi Railway Station, still in his pyjamas. He was back in the jail again, this time with his wife. Given bail two months later they promptly jumped it and fled to Kabul.

After spending several days in the Intercontinental Hotel, Sobhraj decided it was time to leave: without paying the bill and stealing a car. They were caught on the Afghanistan-Iran border, brought to Kabul and jailed. And yet again Sobhraj acted his way into the hospital. Within hours of being admitted to the Wazir Akbar Khan Hospital, he had poured large doses of the drug largactyl into the guards' tea. He walked out while the guards dozed. The next to be drugged was none else than his mother-in-law in Paris. He invited her to his hotel suite, spiked her coffee with sedative and disappeared with his daughter who had, meanwhile, been sent to Paris from Kabul by the French Embassy.

He now began to plan a getaway for his wife and decided to drive to Kabul in a car that he commandeered in Rawalpindi after drugging its driver to death. His ingenuity, however, took him to Teheran where he expected help from the anti-Shah underground, whom he had been supplying guns and stolen passports. He was caught red-handed by the Iranian secret police, the SAVAK. But he was still too cunning to die. He revealed the identities of two key Iranian underground leaders and the SAVAK gratefully deported him to Turkey.

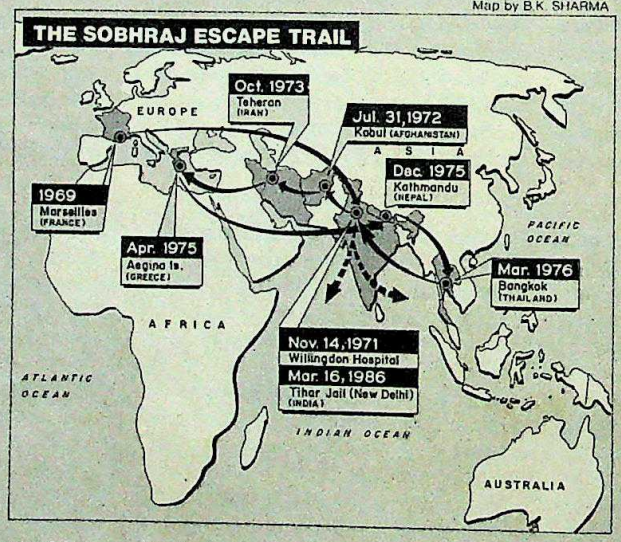
His next experience in prison was longer and perhaps the toughest of all. His brother Guy and he were put in a highly secure prison in Athens, and when his favourite ploy of vomiting blood failed to impress prison officials, he dug a tunnel but was caught while escaping. That did not stop him from repeating the tunnelling operation, leading to his capture once again and transfer to a fortress-like prison on Aegina Island which no one had ever broken. But Sobhraj promptly drafted Mary Allen Eather, an Australian nurse, who smuggled in a can of fruit juice—after carefully draining the juice out with a hypodermic syringe and filling it with petrol. She brought him an iron-cutting wire wrapped as bread and a Spanish pistol in butter.

A few days later, while being transported in a prison van, he succeeded in spilling the petrol from the can and set the van on fire. He escaped while the confused guards were still putting out the fire. The next time he had a close brush with the law was in Bangkok where, from a building called Kanit House, he ran an eerie empire of death and drug-running. While his house was being raided, he escaped claiming to be someone whom he had murdered in Hong Kong a few months earlier.

But the next time he got caught in New Delhi's Vikram Hotel, he took a decade getting out. In the background of his past, the only surprise is, why did he not break out earlier? The answer comes from his biographers: he always believed he could get out of Indian prisons through legal means. But the thought of the firing squad that would be waiting for him in Bangkok set him on the run again.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA

Map by B.K. SHARMA



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Ever thought of consulting a doctor about hair loss?

I did!"

It is reassuring to know that the scientific formula of Keo-Karpin Hair Vitalizer has been tested and approved by a panel of doctors.

It was found that Keo-Karpin Hair Vitalizer provides all the proteins, vitamins and coenzymes essential for a healthy scalp condition.

Read this research report:

"66.66% of the cases gave excellent and 33.33% gave good result with complete disappearance of dandruff and nearly cent per cent stoppage of hair loss... So, success rate with Keo-Karpin Hair Vitalizer may be stated to be cent per cent."

(Indian Medical Gazette 118 223, 1984)

KEO-KARPIN

HAIR VITALIZER

The proven scientific way to prevent hair loss.

This is not a toilet preparation

Dey's® Care you can trust

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Over 30 countries around the world will testify that Dulux

IEL

IEL Limited

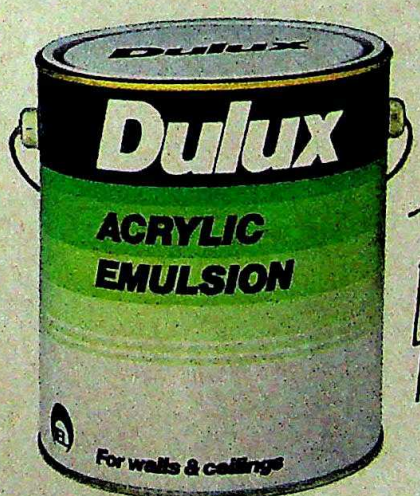
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

y thaulux Acrylic Emulsion gives you all these...

nd something more...that unique Dulux finish.

Only Dulux 'years ahead' world-wide paint technology can give you a complete wall finish—Dulux Acrylic Emulsion. More value for your money. More coverage per litre. An exciting range of colours. And, looks that can be easily washed to stay new. Talking of looks, that's a beautiful surprise for you. You'd never expect an acrylic emulsion to give you such a rich finish. But then, that's the magic of Dulux Acrylic Emulsion. Unmatchable.



The magic of Dulux. No one else has it!

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

CLARION C-IEL/AE-2

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Old Spice the mark of a man

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

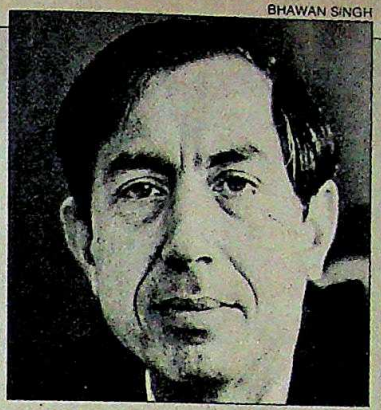
from the Delhi University's post-graduate women's hostel around the same time as Sobhraj did. Sneha had for a long time been helping Sobhraj in drafting his court petitions. Her hostel-mates also recall that she use to talk fondly of Sobhraj.

BUT LATE last fortnight, when the police finally caught up with her in her home town of Lalitpur near Jhansi, it soon became clear that the best she could offer was an insight into Sobhraj's mind. She apparently had no information as to his whereabouts or intentions, but confessed that Sobhraj had had a mesmeric effect on her. He had begun teaching her psychology, and in the process, had acquired almost complete control over her mind.

She, however, was not the only one. In their search for another such woman, the Delhi Police had to go all the way south, to Hyderabad. Under interrogation, one of the prison officials had stated that Charles was planning to marry Vaishali Reddy, a 46-year-old Hyderabad divorcee. In terms of her value to the investigation, she proved to be a red herring. But statements and documents recovered from her throw significant light on Sobhraj's personality, his pseudo-sentimental style of operation and even something about what was going on in his mind in the months before his escape. Making light of her two broken marriages and now the disappearance of the man she claimed to be in love with, Vaishali Reddy, mother of three grown-up children, spoke with remarkable candour to INDIA TODAY in Hyderabad.

Her acquaintance with Sobhraj began with an article on him in a pictorial magazine in May 1985, and she immediately developed interest in him. She first wrote to him in July last year. She says: "I felt he was a family pathological case who always craved for affection and family life. He seemed to have a father obsession and was rebellious and impulsive. It is then that I felt we could get married." Letters recovered from her residence by the police make intriguing reading. There are long discourses on esoteric subjects such as handwriting analysis, psychology, philosophy and law, all laced with mundane love messages. "That is how," she says, "our life and our relationship grew. And when he suggested that I meet his lawyer to work out our marriage details, I flew to Delhi and stayed there at his expense." There is little doubt that Sobhraj was generous with the expense, for when she visited Delhi on January 30 this year, he put her up in the expensive Maurya Sheraton hotel.

BHAWAN SINGH



"We want to find these people quickly. They are pathological murderers and could commit another crime any day."

VED MARWAH
Delhi Police Commissioner

On her return to Hyderabad, she says, she felt that Sobhraj was not likely to change his ways and wrote back to him turning down the marriage offer. "That depressed him and he said he had taken to sedatives. He was the kind of man who can never take no from a woman," says Vaishali, in a candid appreciation of Sobhraj's life-long weakness. "Charles' ambition," she says, "was to get married and settle down in the Bahamas to lead a quiet life, writing books."

But those who know Sobhraj and his style better say that all through his life, he hardly ever meant what he said. And that applied particularly to what he said to women. So, in their current search, the Delhi Police are looking at different angles. "According to information we have gathered from other people in the jail and Sobhraj's contacts, it appears that he had been reading a lot of teach-yourself-Spanish books," said a Crime Branch officer, suggesting that Sobhraj may have been planning to head for South America, where he is not a wanted man and the law is lax. But that, police officers think, will at best be a temporary abode for Sobhraj because he is the kind of person who cannot survive without crime and action. Even Richard Neville, his biographer, finds it hard to believe that Charles will suddenly disappear into oblivion after his escape now. "He told us that when he escapes he will change his face and lie low for 15 years," Neville told INDIA TODAY on the telephone from his New South Wales residence, adding: "But I do not believe that. That is not his style. He will lie for another 15 years but not lie low." Neville, like many Delhi Police men, suspects that Sobhraj could still be in India, in disguise and with a stolen passport.

Police officers on the Sobhraj trail are also following Sobhraj's drug mafia connection. They point out that he escaped with the help of a known drug courier. He also had a history of carrying out contract work and even cold-blooded killings for drug mafias. In fact, during his bloody depredations in Bangkok, he had often told his friends that he had been hired by a Hong Kong- based drug syndicate to "discourage" amateurs from getting into the drug business. "The whole thing has a serious connection with drug-running," says Delhi Police Commissioner Ved Marwah, who suspects that a man like him could be used by a drug mafia for carrying out contract jobs. Emphasised Marwah: "We worry because he is a cold-blooded killer who can murder people without any motive."

But, last fortnight, as the police floundered desperately in a sea of confusion and leads that turned out to be red herrings with monotonous regularity, there was still a belief among police veterans that Sobhraj will be caught again some day. His biographers, Neville and Julie Clarke, had once asked him why his career graph showed such a persistent history of capture and Sobhraj had replied with characteristic abandon: "That's because as soon as I get out I work again." Said a Delhi police officer familiar with his ways: "He is overconfident, adventurous and plain reckless. He can only live off crime and will surface soon enough."

The crucial question, however, is how soon is soon enough. With Sobhraj out on the streets, it won't be long before he strikes again. Tourists will get robbed, some drug-runners will find a new comrade and some, a new, fearsome enemy. And till he makes a mistake again and unwittingly walks into some police trap, there will be no stopping the spread of the macabre legends that mark the serpentine life of the man who is acknowledged as one of the most diabolical murderers of our times.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

VARANASI THE DUESO

THE RICKETY boat, built perhaps half a century ago and springing several leaks in its patchwork bottom, bobs lazily at anchor close to shore while the afternoon sun bronzes the naked back of the wizened old mallah who stares vacantly into the Ganga while stuffing a wad of crude Banarasi zarda inside his lower lip. From the boat Shamshaan Ghat, Varanasi's fabled cremation ground where Hindus of all castes burn their dead in the belief that the deceased will obtain instant mukti from rebirth, is but a few feet away. The ghat's giant stone steps, emerging hundreds of feet away from within a maze of temple spires and serpentine lanes, cascade down to a river bank black with charcoal, dung, and decomposing sewage flecked with golden marigolds. Nearby, a waterfall of a sewer empties the city's refuse into the river. The stench of putrid garbage mixes with waves of hot, acrid fumes from the burning flesh of corpses blackening atop blazing wooden funeral pyres laid out in rows a few feet apart. Occasionally, from within the city, tied into endless knots by the delicate weaves of narrow lanes, aromas of incense, of cooking, flow into the ghat of death.

Ram naam satya hai, Ram naam satya hai. The pall bearers chant their testament to universal truth as they carry a shrouded corpse of an old man tied to a crude bamboo stretcher down the steps of the ghat to the blackened river in which they will immerse it for a few moments. They have carried their dead for miles from within the city, or, if they live in surrounding villages, in a special bus called the Swarglok Express which

A body immersed in the Ganga at Shamshaan Ghat

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ESOF DEATH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

plies the area, picking up the dead and their relatives, stopping finally at a depot a few minutes away from the ghat. After immersion in the Ganga, the relatives leave the body on its stretcher on the bank of the river.

They have now entered the empire of the Dom Raja, Yamdoot on earth, the wealthy traditional owner of the ghat, king of the lowest sub-caste among the Harijans, keeper of the torch that lights the funeral pyres, supplier of the holy flame from an incandescent pit of fire which, according to legend, has burned, unextinguished, for thousands of years.

THEY must now leave the body on the bank and negotiate with the Dom Raja or his minions the price they must pay—in cash or in kind—for the funeral wood and, more importantly, for the sacred fire which can come only from the Dom's pit, that will ignite the pyre. In the Dom's domain, where the bodies of knaves, kings, Brahmins, and beggars crumble into dust, everything is sacred and nothing is sacred. Everything is excess and nothing is wasted. The lines that divide the living from the dead, the old from the young, human from beast, fantasy from reality wither away. The cycle of life, played out day after day, around the pyres of death in Shamshaan Ghat, is brutal in its simplicity.

The bodies of two women, freshly immersed, draped in red and bedecked with garlands of marigolds lie on stretchers on the bank of the ghat. The relatives are negotiating a price with the Dom Raja—26-year-old Ranjit Choudhury—who sits in a room above the ghat with his two little children, dressed like ragged little urchins. His recently widowed mother handles a bag of cash stuffed with hundred-rupee notes. The children stare at the burning bodies below through a large opening in the room. It is late afternoon. They have already been there since sunrise and will stay there until the evening. A huge, shaggy ram, a beast resembling a yak, winds its way slowly and with menacing authority down the steps. People make way for him. He approaches the bodies of the two women, frightening off with a threatening gesture of his horned head, a relative who tries to deflect him. He straddles both bodies. Then starting with the feet of each corpse he begins to chew, in large mouthfuls, the marigold flowers from the garlands. When he has cleaned both bodies of all

The hereditary Dom Raja, Ranjit Chowdhury: living among the dead

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

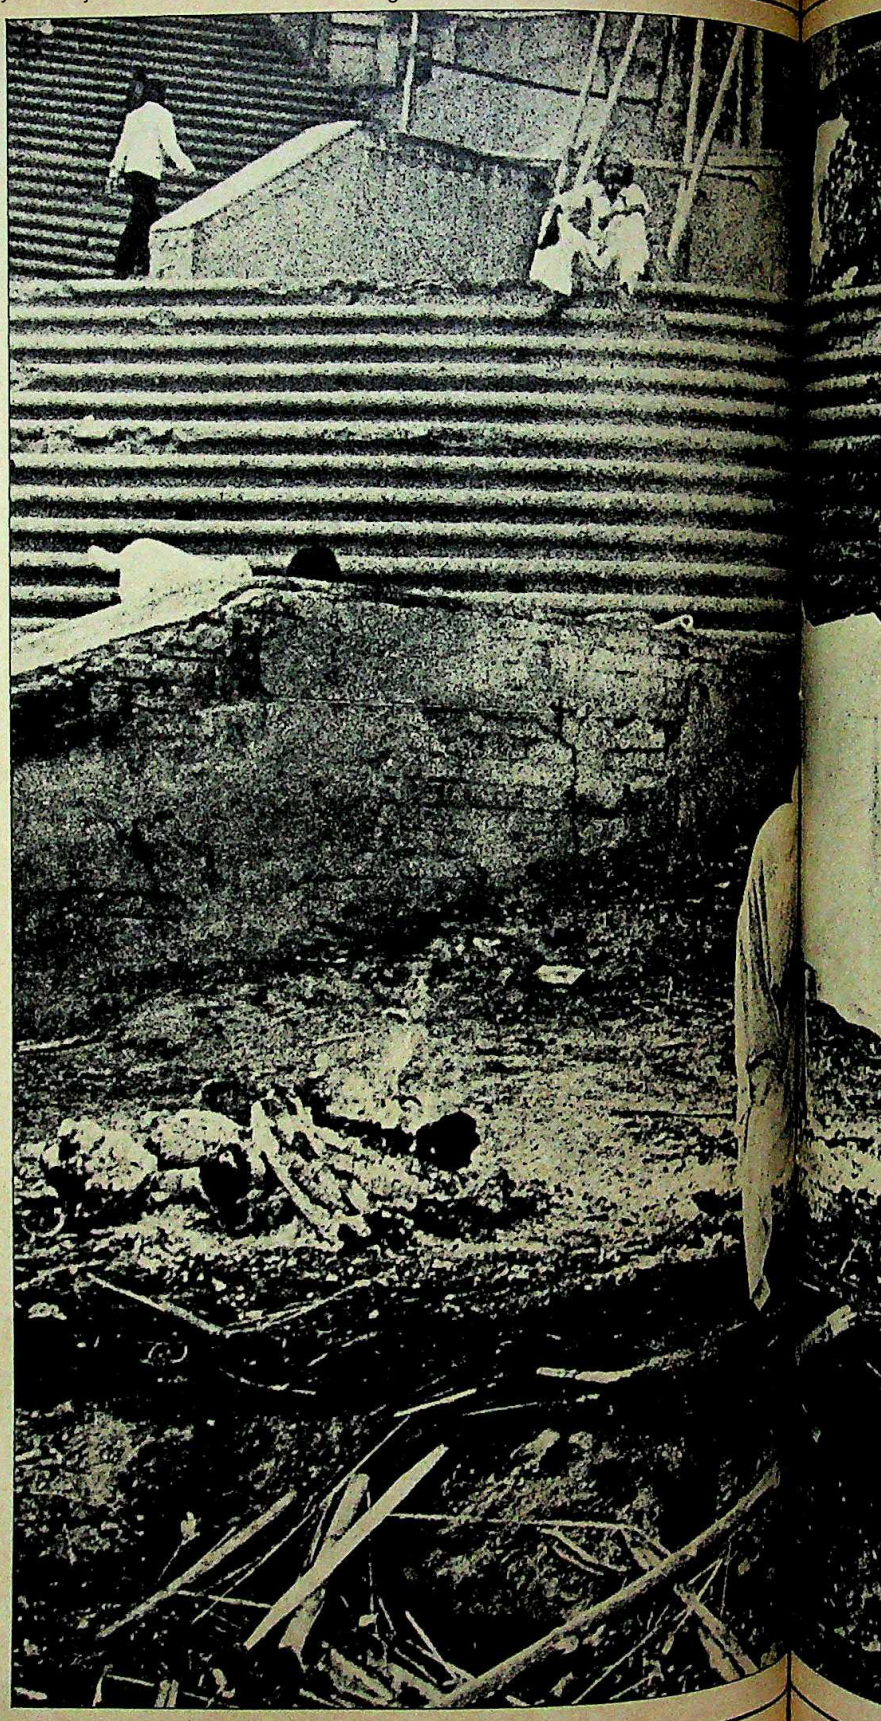
garlands he walks regally up the steps and disappears somewhere into the spires and temple bells of Varanasi.

Other families, who have paid their dues to the Dom, are now plastering the bodies of their deceased with glistening ghee. A servant of the Dom lights the pyre. On each burning pyre, relatives place dozens of propitious coconuts. As the heat from the blaze intensifies, the relatives and the pujaris move back. But little children, emerging as if from nowhere, and trained to withstand the heat, move in with little sticks and deftly remove the coconuts from the burning pyres. Gleefully, they break them open and begin eating them.

THE PYRES burn. And now they have another use. Ordinary residents of the city who have been bathing nearby or washing their shirts and dhotis approach the flames. Nonchalantly they stand around the pyres and dry their clothes with the heat from the flames which are still ferociously consuming the corpses. In an hour or so, the Dom's servants poke the remains of the bodies with huge poles. They dig into the burning wood for unburned portions of the body, lance them with their poles and hurl them into the shallow river banks where they cool with a steaming hiss.

Dozens of dogs, reared since they were pups on a diet of human flesh attack the discarded remains, some of which float out into the river to provide food for circling kites which skim the water. The unburned wood is thrown into the river and then collected by the Dom's servants in boats which ferry the funereal lumber to the Dom's house for his cooking needs. And as the embers from the pyre begin to lose their glow, little children with earthenware pots collect the coal for cooking, and ganja smokers gather to stuff burning embers into their chillums. The next day, the Dom's servants will sift the ashes for any gold or silver jewellery which the corpses had worn.

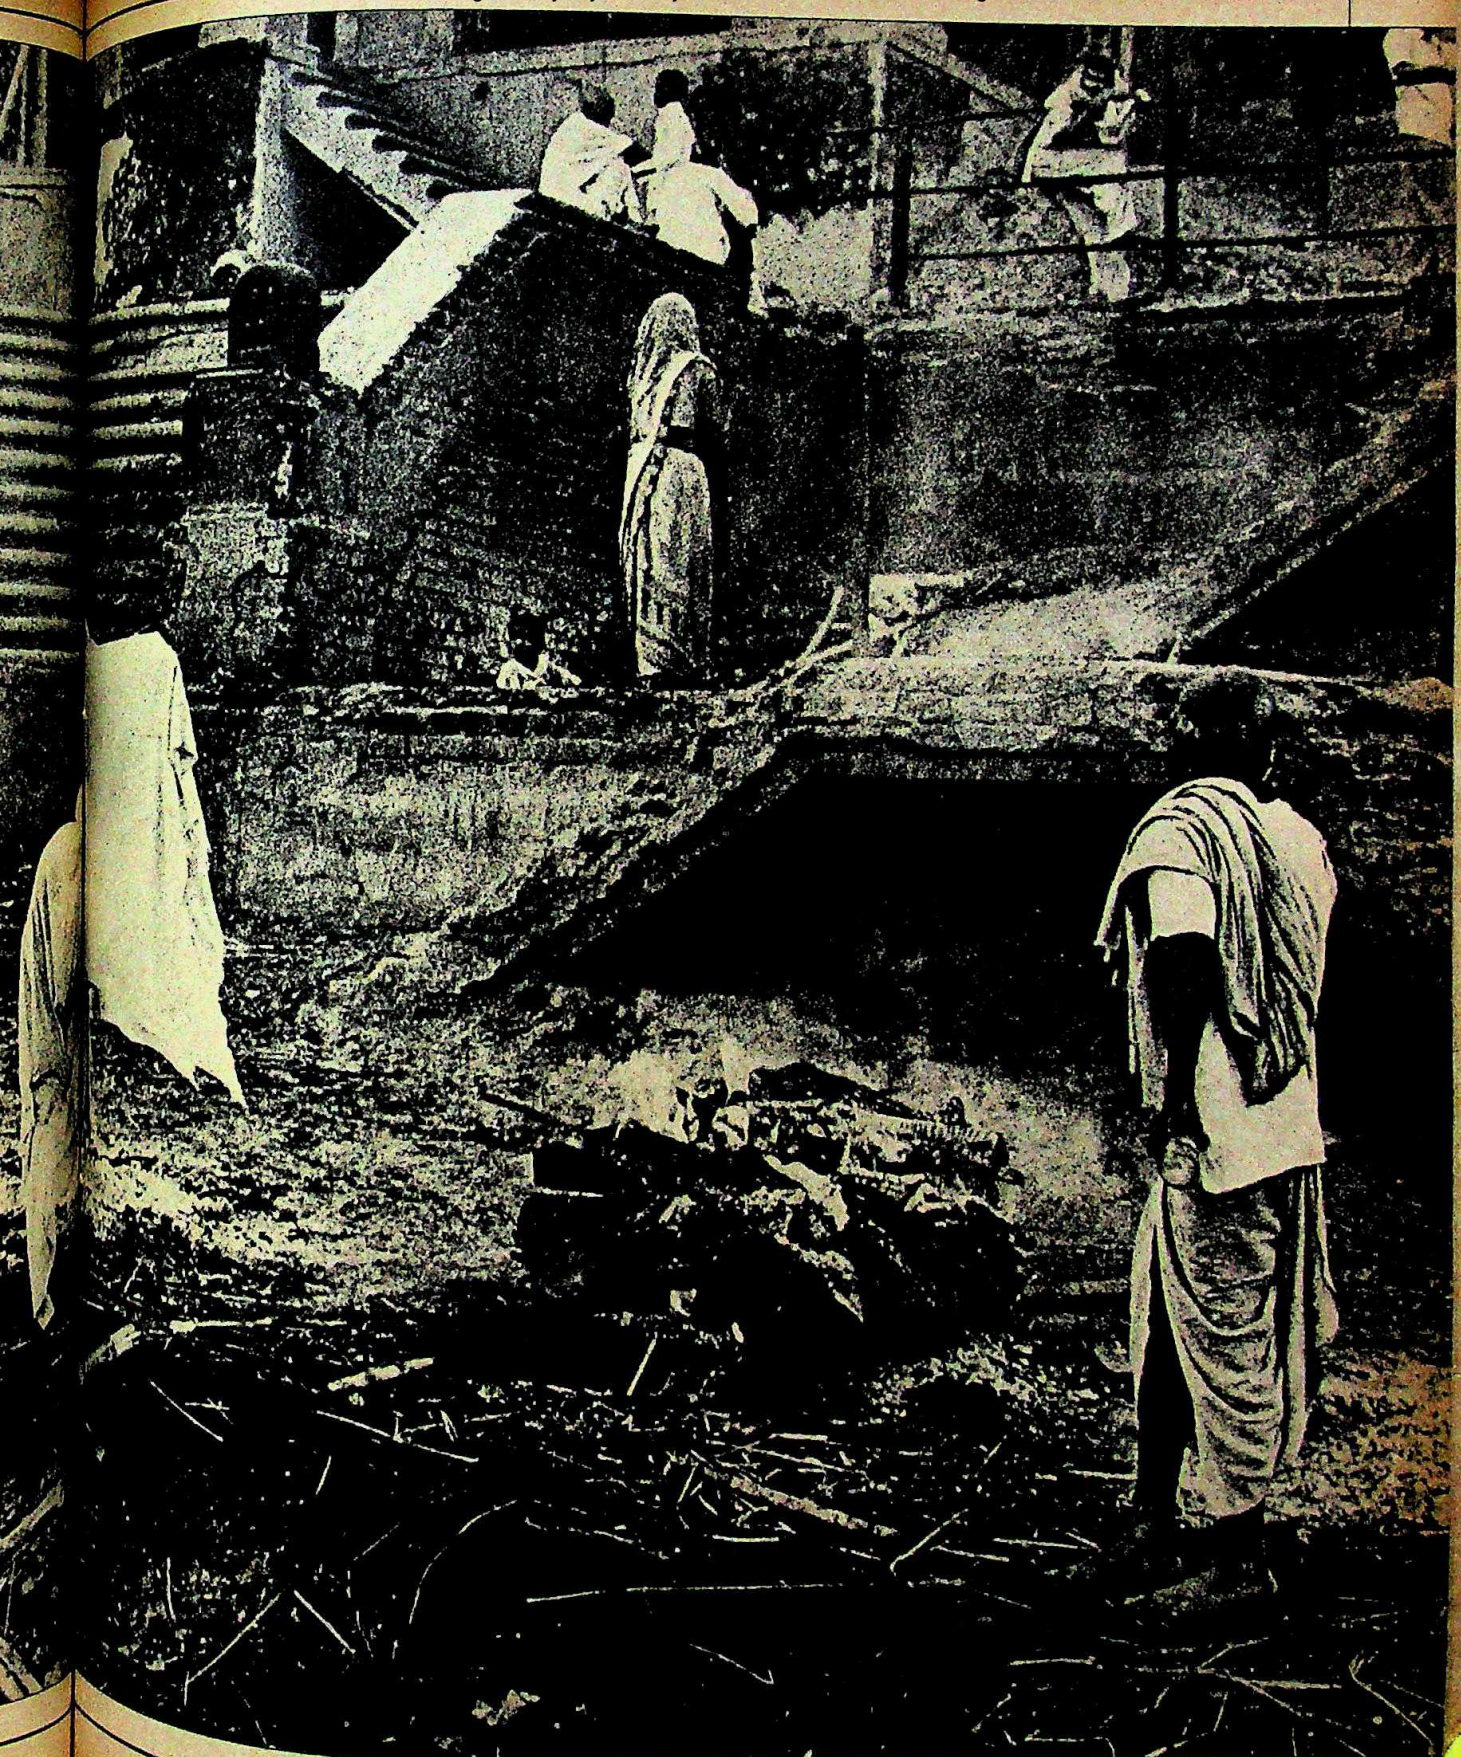
It is late at night. The sound of a violent quarrel can be heard inside the Dom's room above the ghat. Villagers from a distant village are screaming at his servant that they have been charged too much. The servant protests that the Dom does not exploit the poor. "According to our dharma," he says, "everybody must pay something. But we let people pay according to their own desires." Down below, at the cremation ground, two



About 200 bodies are burned in this area each day

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



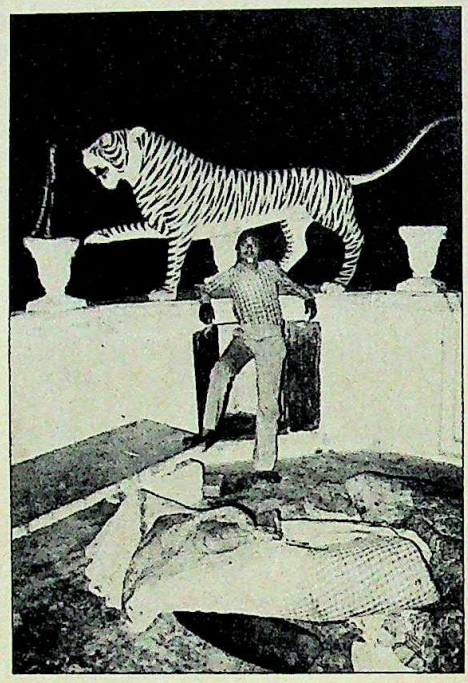
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

peasants from Sherwan village near Bhadoi have been waiting two hours for a flame for the pyre of a dead relative. They have already paid for 40 kg of wood for the funeral. "And now," says Bir Pratap, one of the relatives, "they are asking us to pay Rs 150 along with a quintal of wheat. We can't afford this."

A HALF hour later, the negotiation ends with the family agreeing to pay Rs 125 plus the demanded weight in wheat. A close friend of the Dom says that at least 200 corpses are burned at the ghat each day. "People surrender titles to their land. One man even gifted a jeep. The Dom can demand what he wants because his torch carries the power of mukti." It is widely known in Varanasi that a hundred years ago or so, a wealthy trader, Kasmiri Mal, on the demand of the Dom covered the funeral pyre with diamonds and other gems as the price of a single cremation.

Shamshaan Ghat is also known as Manakarinika Ghat. Legend has it that the Doms were once a family of high caste Brahmins but fell from grace. After Parvati died and different parts of her body were flung to different places in India, her earring fell at the present ghat. A member of this Brahmin family picked it up and kept it. When Shiva discovered this he cursed the family and decreed that they become the lowest of the untouchables—the Doms. The man who had found the earring pleaded for mercy on the ground that he was a bhakt and that he had sought to return the piece to Shiva. Unable to recant the curse, Shiva was nonetheless able to modify it by gifting them the ghat and giving them a sacred fire, cremation by which would provide mukti to all who were burned there. The Dom Rajas, including Ranjit, are said to be the direct descendants of this family.



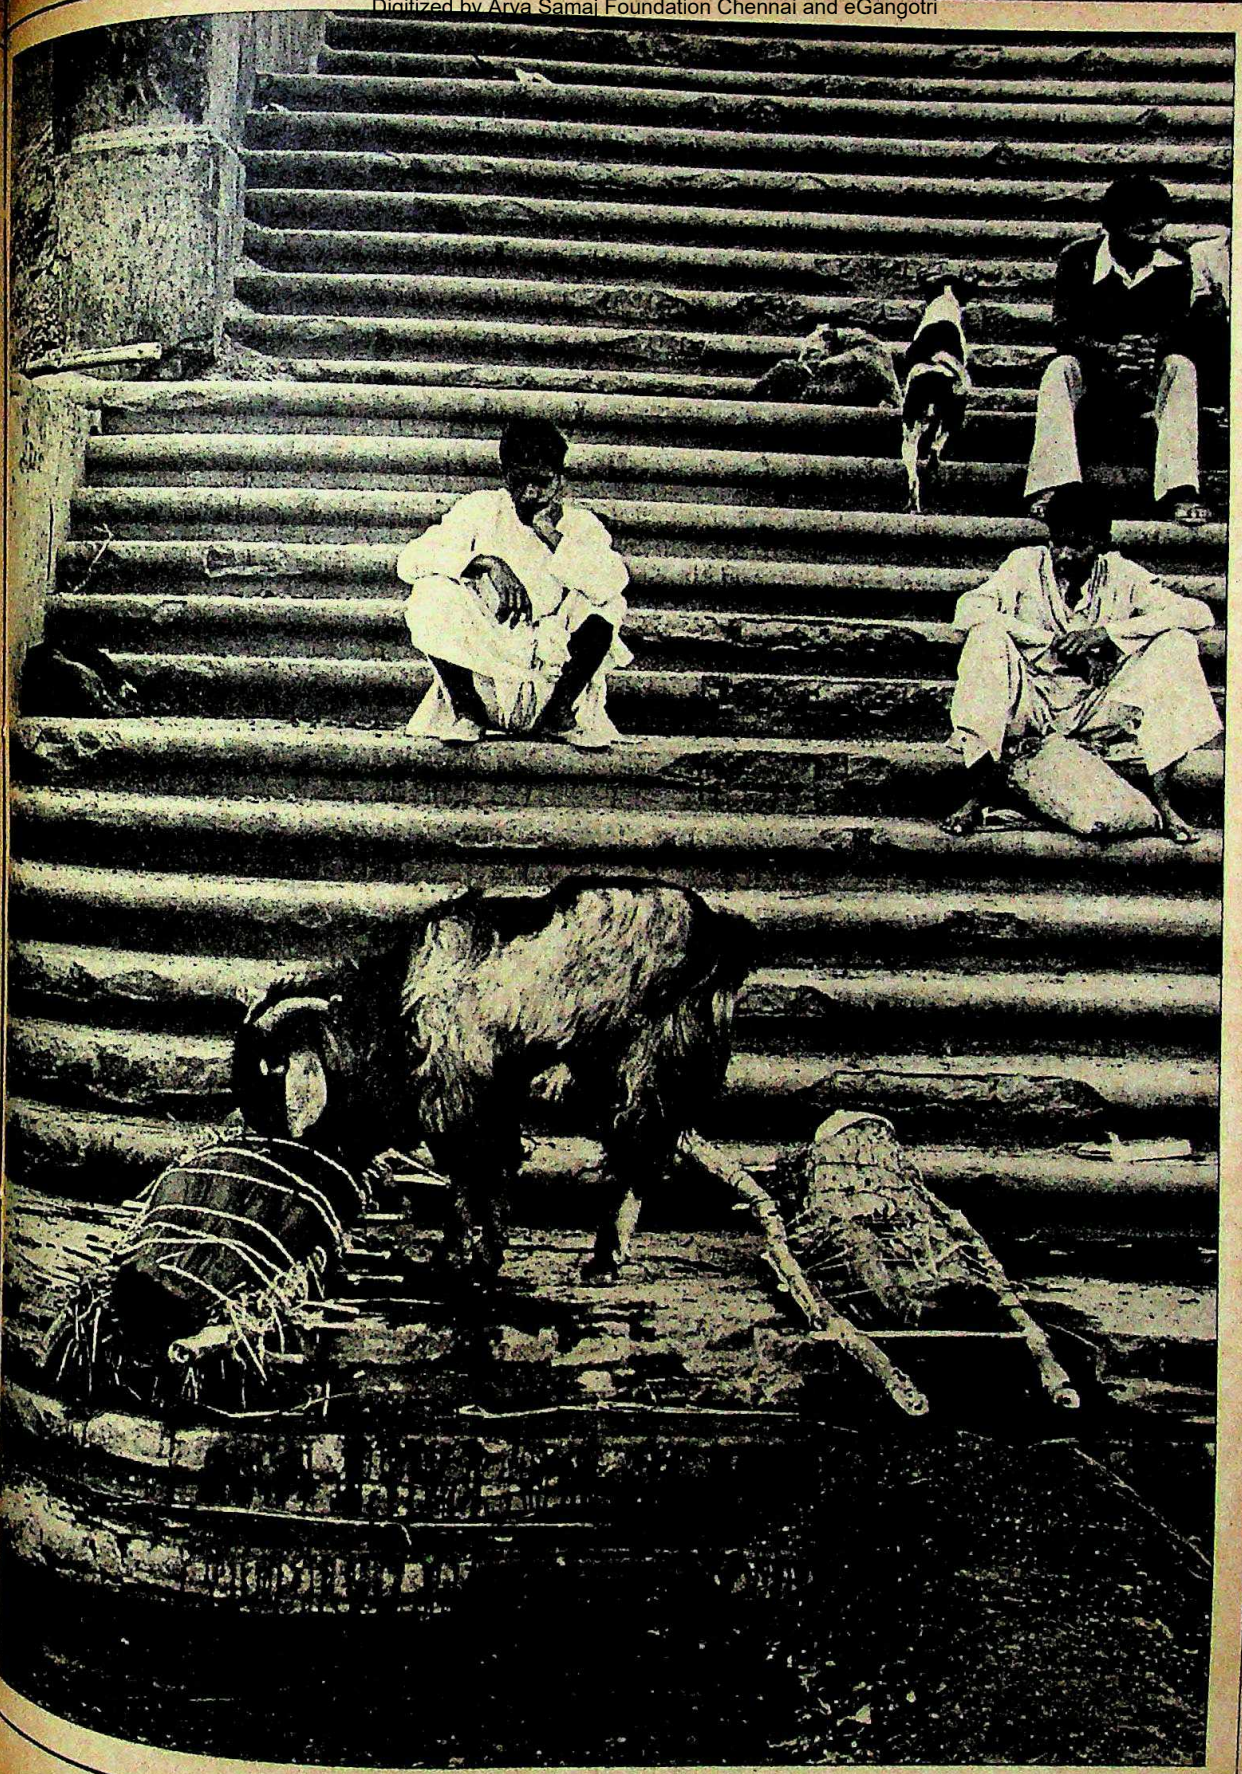
The fire from which the funeral pyres are lit is kept burning day and night. But the Dom Raja and his family—reputed to be possessed of fabulous wealth—are Varanasi's most untouchable of untouchables. A recent income tax raid on his house unearthed about Rs 10 lakh in assets. And he has been assessed for Rs 17 lakh. Yet the Dom cannot enter anybody's house. He cannot enter a temple. He can worship at the Vishwanath temple only from outside. And Ranjit's father, Kailash, used to walk through the gullies of Varanasi with a gold-tipped trishul, politely asking people to move away from him.

Dom Raja Ranjit lives in a palatial

Dom Raja's haveli (left); and ram eating flowers off shrouded corpses

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

haveli-like mansion on the banks of the Ganga on Manmandir Ghat. The three-storey dwelling has its own Rama-Sita temple with two large stone tigers atop a parapet snarling at the Ganga. He dresses in a lungi and vest and has a smattering of an education. It is night. Ranjit is reeking of cheap country liquor. His knee and chin are bandaged from an encounter with a bull in a gully the previous day.

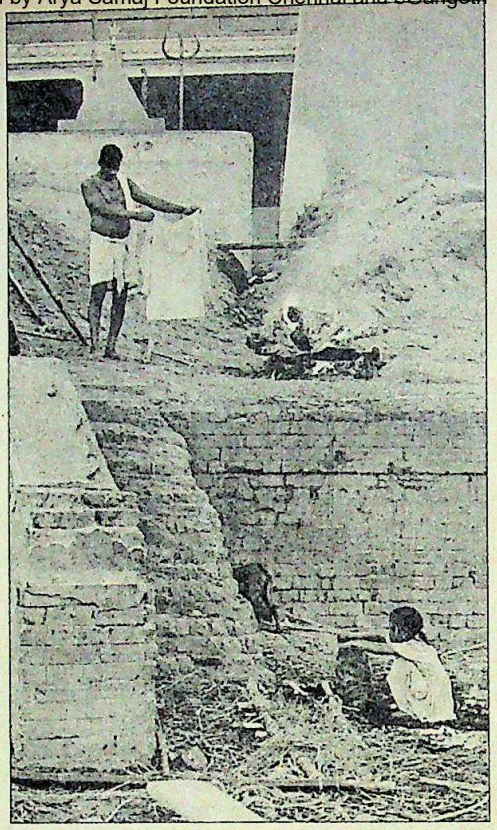
DO YOU know what I want?" he says. "I want mukti from here, from this job. I'm tired of this life. I have to take, take, take from people all the time. This is my dharma. I live on this najaiz business. I earn from the wages of sadness and death." He is emotional and defiant. "I will die. You will die. But people won't drink water from my hands. I have the same blood as you. I feel the same pain. You've seen those funeral pyres. Do you see any differences between the corpses? But I'm achhoot. People shoo me off. They call me a neech and a Dom."

He would liked to have studied, he says, to speak English "and to mix in society. I may have a lot of money but what use is it? I hate this work, but my family has to eat. I have to maintain 45 servants and a huge family. I have 18 suits. But I never get to wear them. I work day and night, I sleep three hours. I hardly get time to play with my children."

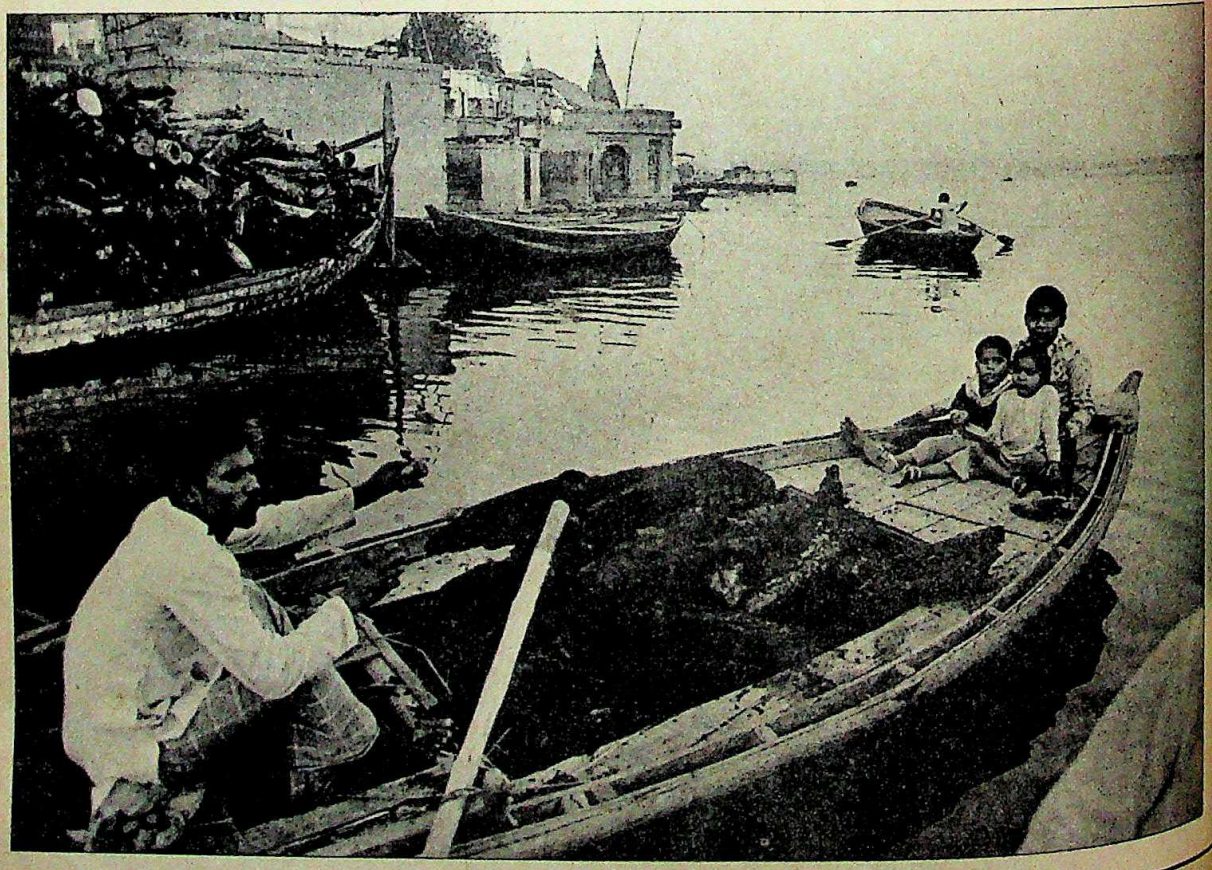
But, he says he cannot get away from this "murdon ki kamai (earning from the dead). It is my fate. It is my prison. What else can I do? If I open up a shop or a business who will come there? Who will buy from me?" He drinks, he says, because he must forget his life.

He gets used to the death. But sometimes, he says, "I cannot banish the smell of death, of rotting corpses I have to pick up off the streets, from my mind. I don't fear death but I keep thinking of these bodies, bodies all the time even when I sleep. And sometimes when I eat I think of the corpses, of the smell. I cannot even swallow."

—INDERJIT BADHWAR in Varanasi



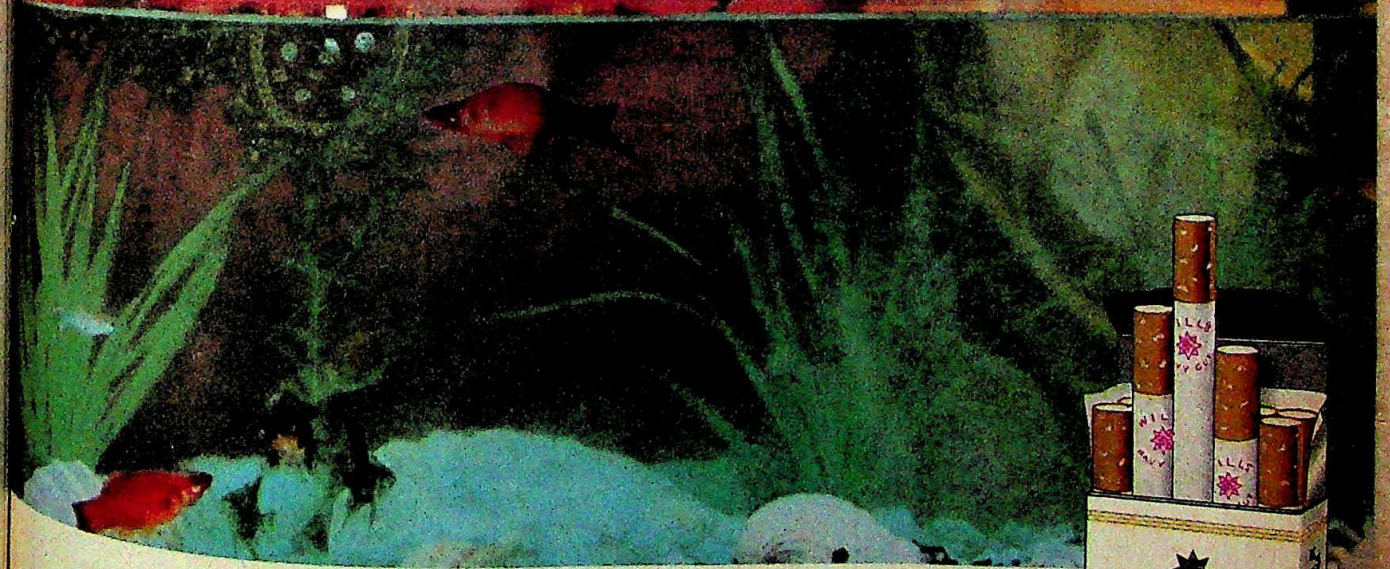
Pyres provide heat for drying clothes (right); Dom's children in the boat taking unburned wood



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Made for each other



Wills Filter set the filter trend in cigarettes long years ago. Today it's still the finest. In taste, in satisfaction. Hand-picked virginia tobaccos married to an efficient filter make it so. Millions of smokers have discovered it, then stayed with it.

WF-5471

STATUTORY WARNING
CIGARETTE SMOKING IS INJURIOUS TO HEALTH

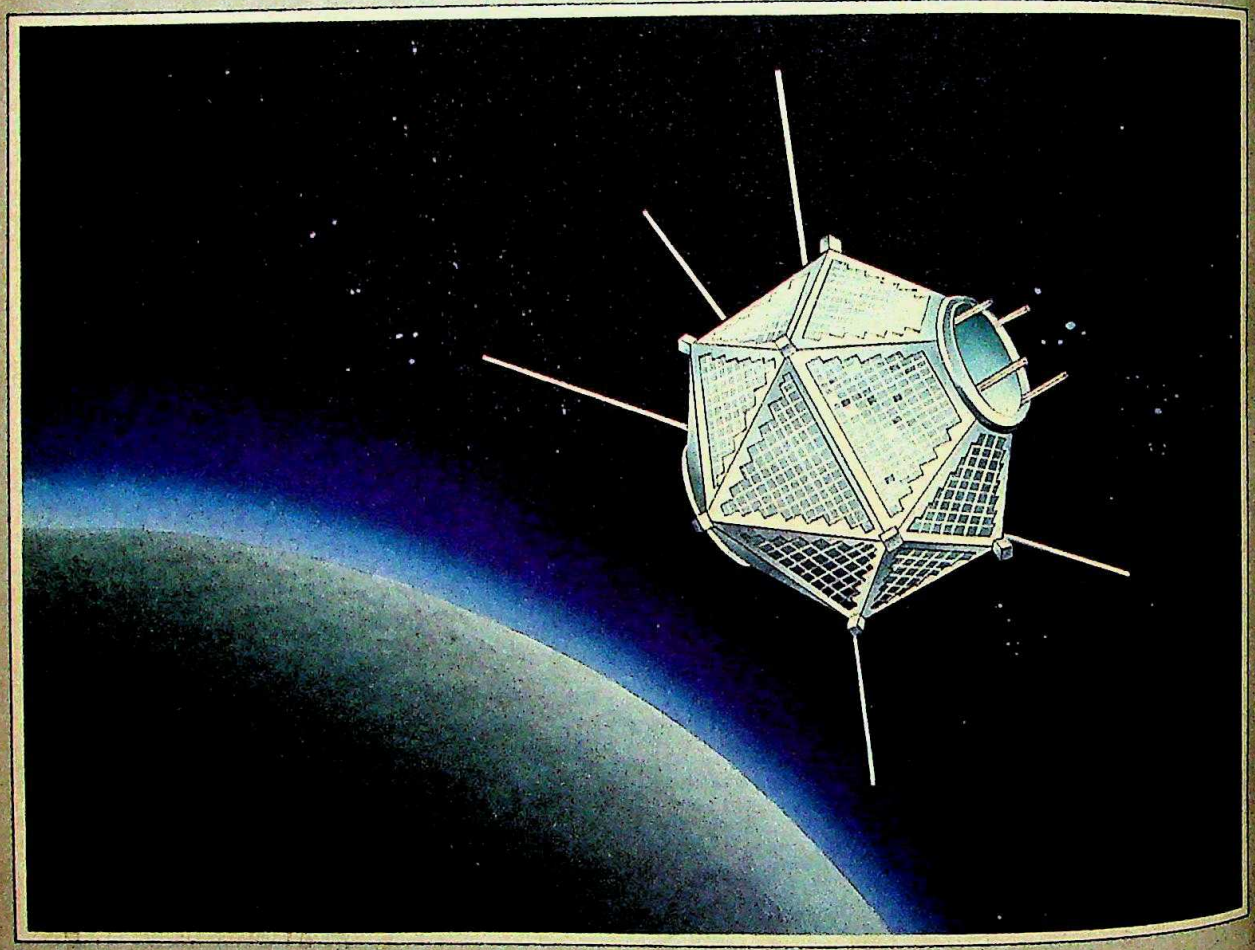
WILLS FILTER

Filter and tobacco perfectly matched

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When the Indian Space Programme wanted high-tech electronics they chose Keltron. That's right, Keltron! The people who make your television set.



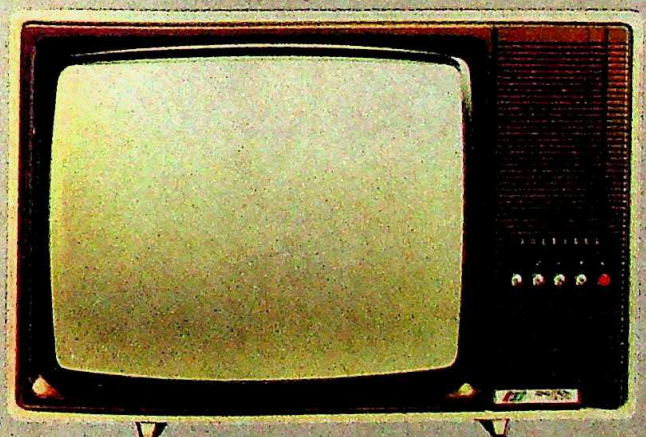
That's not high fashion. Not high flying claims. That's just hard facts.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Most people get taken in when buying a television set. Taken in by high-flying technical jargon. Or they get their heads turned by a good looking cabinet and dazzling full-colour life style. But a TV set has nothing to do with frills. Or with claims. It's only as good as its heart. And the heart of a television set is high technology.

Keltron makes no claims. It quotes its history. A history of high-tech electronics in national areas. Space Research, Atomic Energy, Doordarshan, the Asian Games, the Defence Services. That same high-tech goes into our television sets. Proof? The Electronic Components Association names Keltron the best television set made in India. And Keltron TV's failure rate is 0.05%... the lowest in the country.

So when you're out looking for a colour TV set, don't get taken in by jargon. And don't let good looks turn your head. Don't settle for a manufacturer's claims. Ask for the record.



KELTRON TV

Hard core, high-tech. No frills, no fuss.

Kerala State Electronics Development Corporation Limited, Consumer Electronics Division, Sasthamangalam, Trivandrum-695 010 Phone: 63106

BRANCHES: • Bombay Phone: 4927448 • Bhopal Phone: 66354 • Madras Phone: 452310 • Madurai Phone: 43746 • Calcutta Phone: 245654 • Gauhati Phone: 31541 • Delhi Phone: 562602 • Hyderabad Phone: 63786 • Vizag • Bangalore Phone: 564492 • Ahmedabad Phone: 463664 • Trivandrum Phone: 60241 • Cochin Phone: 354560 • After-sales-service facilities available in all major towns.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

FULCRUM-KEL-ISP-1-85

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Alex Kirby (right) directing Fred Treves (left) at Gurney House while Jackie looks on

JIM CORBETT

Reliving the Legend

JIM CORBETT is alive and well and stalking man-eaters in the hills of Kumaon. Well, almost. Forty years since the day Corbett and his elder sister, Maggie, quietly and suddenly disappeared from Kaladhungi and India as the last few pages of the closing chapter of the British Raj were being enacted, that legendary figure has been brought back to celluloid life. In the villages of Kumaon, where ancient men and women had almost forgotten the brave white hunter who shot man-eaters terrorising their villages, "Carpet sahib" as he is known in these hills, has come vividly back into their lives as the once-familiar safari-suited figure enters his bungalow in Kaladhungi (converted into a scrappy, nondescript museum) or stalks man-eaters on the trails he made famous in his best-selling books.

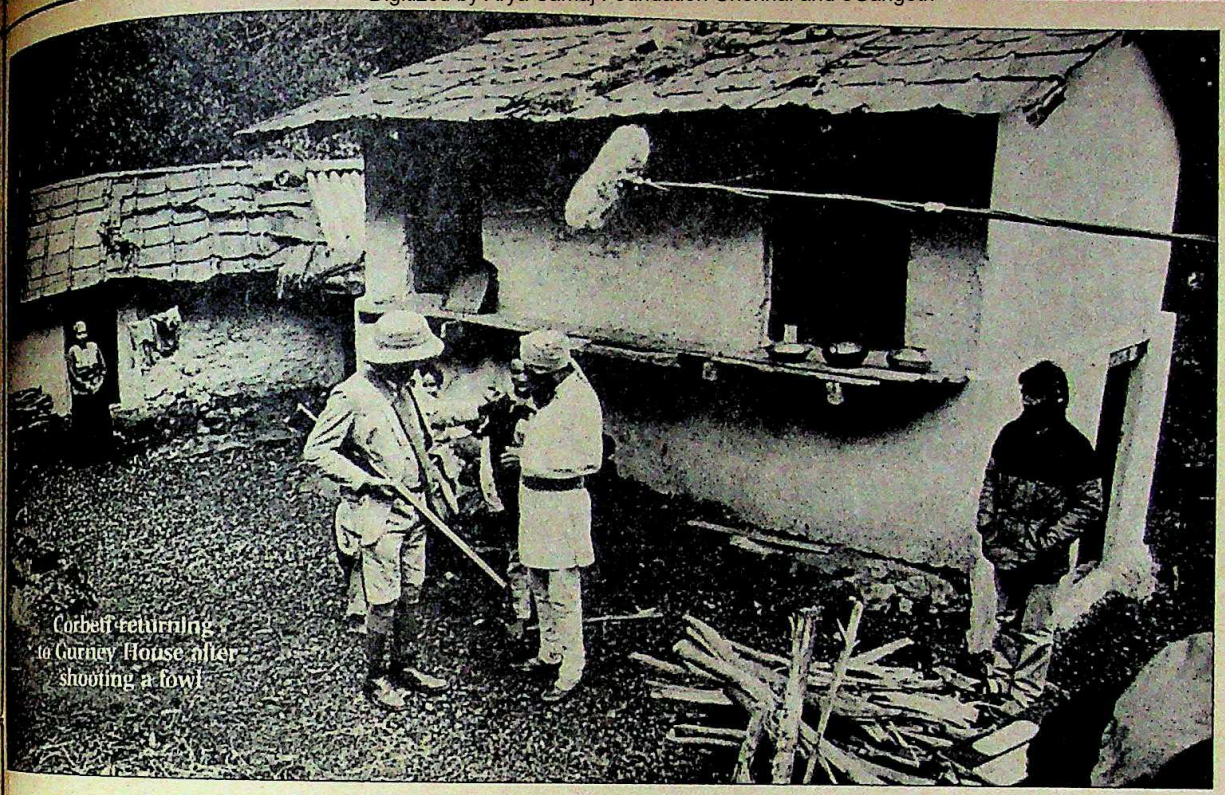
Corbett's return to the hills he loved is thanks to the BBC natural history film unit which is currently filming its 75-minute dramatised documentary, Corbett of Kumaon, being directed by Emmy award-winner Alex Kirby. And, for those who still remember the man, the legend has almost literally come alive. "When I first saw the actor who plays Corbett, I thought that Corbett had been reincarnated...you cannot imagine my emotions," says B.S. Negi, a Life Insurance Corporation employee in Naini Tal who, as a boy, knew Corbett well. Negi's father, J.S. Negi, worked for Corbett when the latter was an estate agent in Naini Tal and the family actually lived with Jim Corbett and his sister Maggie in their summer home, Gurney House on Ayarpata Hill in Naini Tal.

Corbett (Treves) in his bungalow

Negi has been made almost an unofficial adviser on the sets of the film especially to Fred Treves (the gentle Colonel Layton in Jewel in the Crown) who plays the brave soldier-hunter with the heart of gold. Negi's recollections of Jim Corbett doling out diwali sweets, kites and affection to him and other children have worked themselves into the script of Martin Booth and John Elliot. "Freddie" even worked out Corbett's mannerisms with the rather reticent Negi, to the extent that it is even being said that the actor has begun to walk and talk like Corbett when the cameras stop rolling. When film

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Corbett returning to Gurney House after shooting a fowl

...taking place in Kaladhungi, Corbett's ...ther home, villagers from as far as 100 ...came to see "Carpet sahib", and sang ...songs in which the heroic and gener... deeds of Corbett had been woven— ...Corbett who killed the man-eaters of ...saprayag, Thak and the bachelor of ...garh so that terrified villagers could ...merge out of their homes; the Corbett ...distributed red and white medicine ...which made colds disappear and fevers ...away, the Corbett who distributed ...and money to the Kumaon villagers.

THE BBC, in its first feature film in India, was stalking swiftly through Corbettland last fortnight, filming ...the actual bungalows and houses in ...which the Corbetts and some of their friends lived during the six year (1929-36) ...when of Jim Corbett's life which the film covers. Says director Kirby: "This is a ...feature, not a cradle-to-grave biography... ...more interested in the change in Corbett ...from a hunter to a conservationist to a ...protector of the Indian people. The film is ...on one level a celebration of one man's ...awareness of conservation. Corbett was a ...pioneer in this, one of the first to become ...aware of the desecration of wild life."

So now there is a celluloid Corbett, ...slightly thinning on top, knees slightly bent, a ...saddened hunter asked by the governor to organise a "European shoot" when man and tiger do not meet each other eye to eye. The change of heart has already taken place in Jim Corbett; and, in the film, he is mostly portrayed not as a hunter but as the hunted. Much like an old, ailing tiger forced to kill for his food, this rather reluctant shikari is forced to stalk his last tigress—the man-eating marauder at Thak to protect the villagers. At the end of which he tells his friend, Kunwar Singh (Zul Vellani): "You see? It is not a shaitan. Only an animal."

Maggie in the Burney Hall sitting room

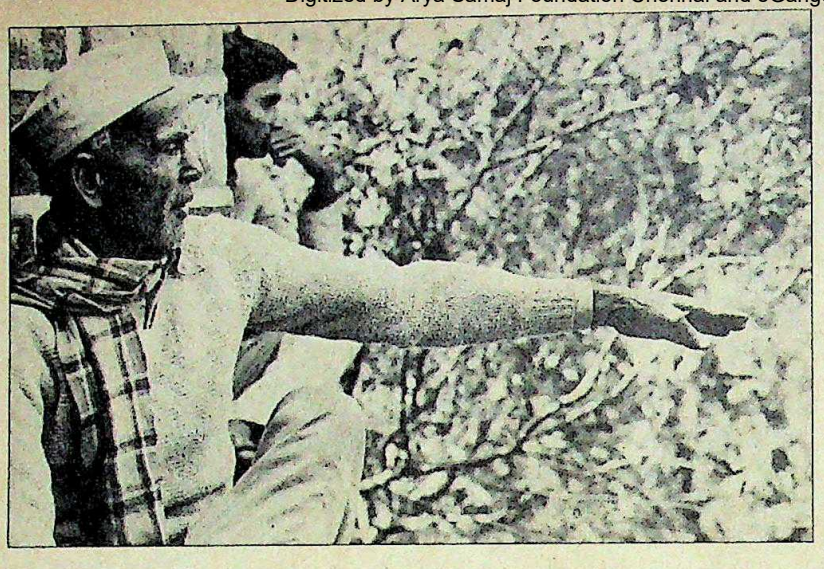
Much of the script (Martin Booth has spent 10 years researching for a biography he is writing) skims the surface of Corbett's life. The film is clearly heavy with its message for conservation; but there are occasional penetrating insights into Corbett the man. The scenes at Gurney House show him and his sister living in a kind of no-man's land. Rejected by the upper class British because they are "domiciled Indians", the Corbetts draw closer to one other. Caught in that area of loneliness between upper class British civil servants—in which world Maggie, with her "dowdy", unsmart clothes, stands out like a sore thumb—and the world of the villagers whom they love (but into which they cannot be absorbed) the brother and sister live insulated lives.

Ironically, for the two protagonists, Jim and Maggie Corbett (Ann Cropper, who played the bitchy Aunty in Jewel in the Crown), Corbett offers an opportunity to play the reverse of the pucca sahib and memsahib of the British Raj they portrayed in Jewel. Says Cropper, who resembles the real Maggie: "I prayed for the opportunity

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Khyoraj Singh (left) and Negi: reliving the past to show the other side; after playing that awful snooty sort of lady in Jewel it was a joy to play the opposite."

THE INTENSE and somewhat cloistered relationship between Jim and Maggie Corbett is a significant part of this film, almost as crucial as is the relationship between Corbett, the jungle and his tigers. Corbett never married and both his mother Mary Jane and his sister were extremely possessive about him. Kirby describes the brother-sister relationship as a "classic example of British Victorian relationships in large families in which the head of the family dies."

Legends sprout easily in these hills. Martin Booth in his search of the real Jim Corbett seems to have unearthed more than one Corbett. There are as many stories and differing perceptions of Jim Corbett the man as there are people who tell them. One thing the BBC has done is spark off the memory and imagination of the people of Naini Tal about him. Most of the speculation is about Jim Corbett and women. As Treves puts it: "Yes, you go along from people to people and the stories change. Some true, some false. I have even heard that Corbett was homosexual. What rubbish!"

There are also tales, tall or true, about a Norwegian woman, still alive, whom Corbett loved. There is the mysterious Helen to whom he is supposed to have proposed and then taken back his proposal when his mother objected. There are even letters of proposals from women all over the world after he became a best-selling author, letters which, says Negi, Maggie burned—with the exception of one—after his death.

The BBC have not only dug up old myths and facts about this pioneer of the hills, but have left behind a few new ones as well. Legend has been mixed irrevocably with fact in Corbett territory—the past merged with the present. For Khyoraj Singh, 68, present sarpanch of Ghatgarh, a village 24 kilometres from Naini Tal on the way to Kaladhungi, and a boy of 15 when he used to help "Carpet Sahib" carry the slain tigers or watch him skin them, the film sequences of Treves killing the man-eaters or curing his dying friend, Kunwar Singh, or of terrorised villagers, are now more vivid than his own recollections of the man.

In his tea-shop in Ghatgarh, after the crew had left, Khyoraj Singh appeared rather bored with his own memories of Corbett and was more willing to retell the Corbett of Martin Booth and John Elliot's script. In his breast pocket, he still kept the maps and instructions of producer Rani Dube (of Gandhi fame) to make two little temples for the film before which "Carpet Sahib" himself used to join his hands in prayer, or leave flowers.

The mysterious Helen: myths

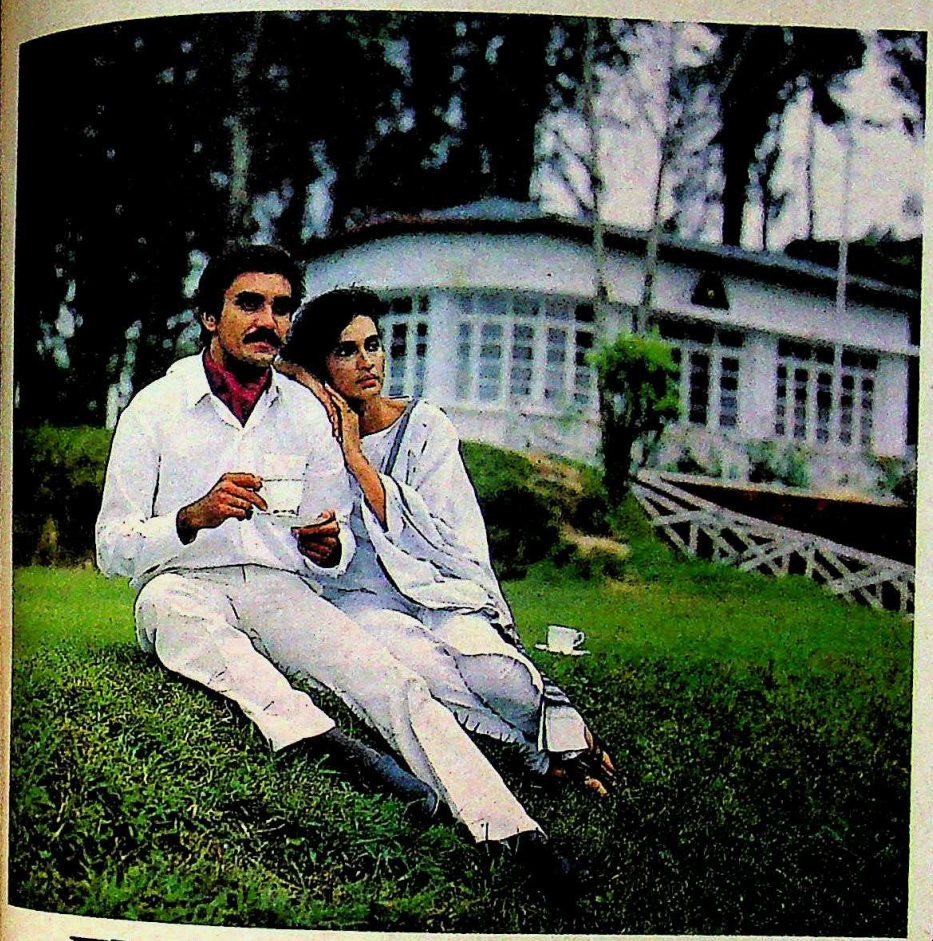
Distance in these hills is measured subjectively: Ghatgarh is variously four, eight, 24 km, depending on how long it takes the person you ask to cover the distance from Naini Tal. Jim Corbett is "measured" in equally subjective terms. From a white demi-god in the village (a kind of St George slaying the dragons) dispensing medicine, largesse, money and land to the poor, planting miraculous banana trees, Corbett is transformed in Naini Tal into an eccentric hunter and shrewd businessman (railway contractor, estate agent) and best-seller author whose books might "just have been ghosted", whose English might just have been a little off, whose "brahmachari" characteristics (Khyoraj Singh described both brother and sister as brahmacharis) dissolve into somewhat of a man-about-town. Truth lies in the eye of the beholder here.

Corbett of Kumaon, which incorporates original movie footage of Corbett on an elephant drive, will be shown on British television this winter and on Doordarshan, in a slightly longer Hindi version at the same time. It will also be televised in the US in spring next year on the TV channel run by the magazine National Geographic. Corbett of Kumaon is probably as apt a title as there could be. As Kirby says: "Corbett was Kumaon. He was not British, nor India but Kumaon—this is the secret of him."

—MADHU JAIN in Kumaon

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



From the mist-wrapped slopes of the Darjeeling hills comes a tea so distinct, so impeccable in flavour...

Nurtured in the finest tea estates. Carefully and discerningly hand-picked. And sealed into a unique gold foil pack to retain that garden-fresh flavour.

FLAVOUR SO DARJEELING, IT DESERVES A GOLD LABEL.

Brooke Bond
GOLD LABEL

The very essence of Darjeeling

BBI-1834

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

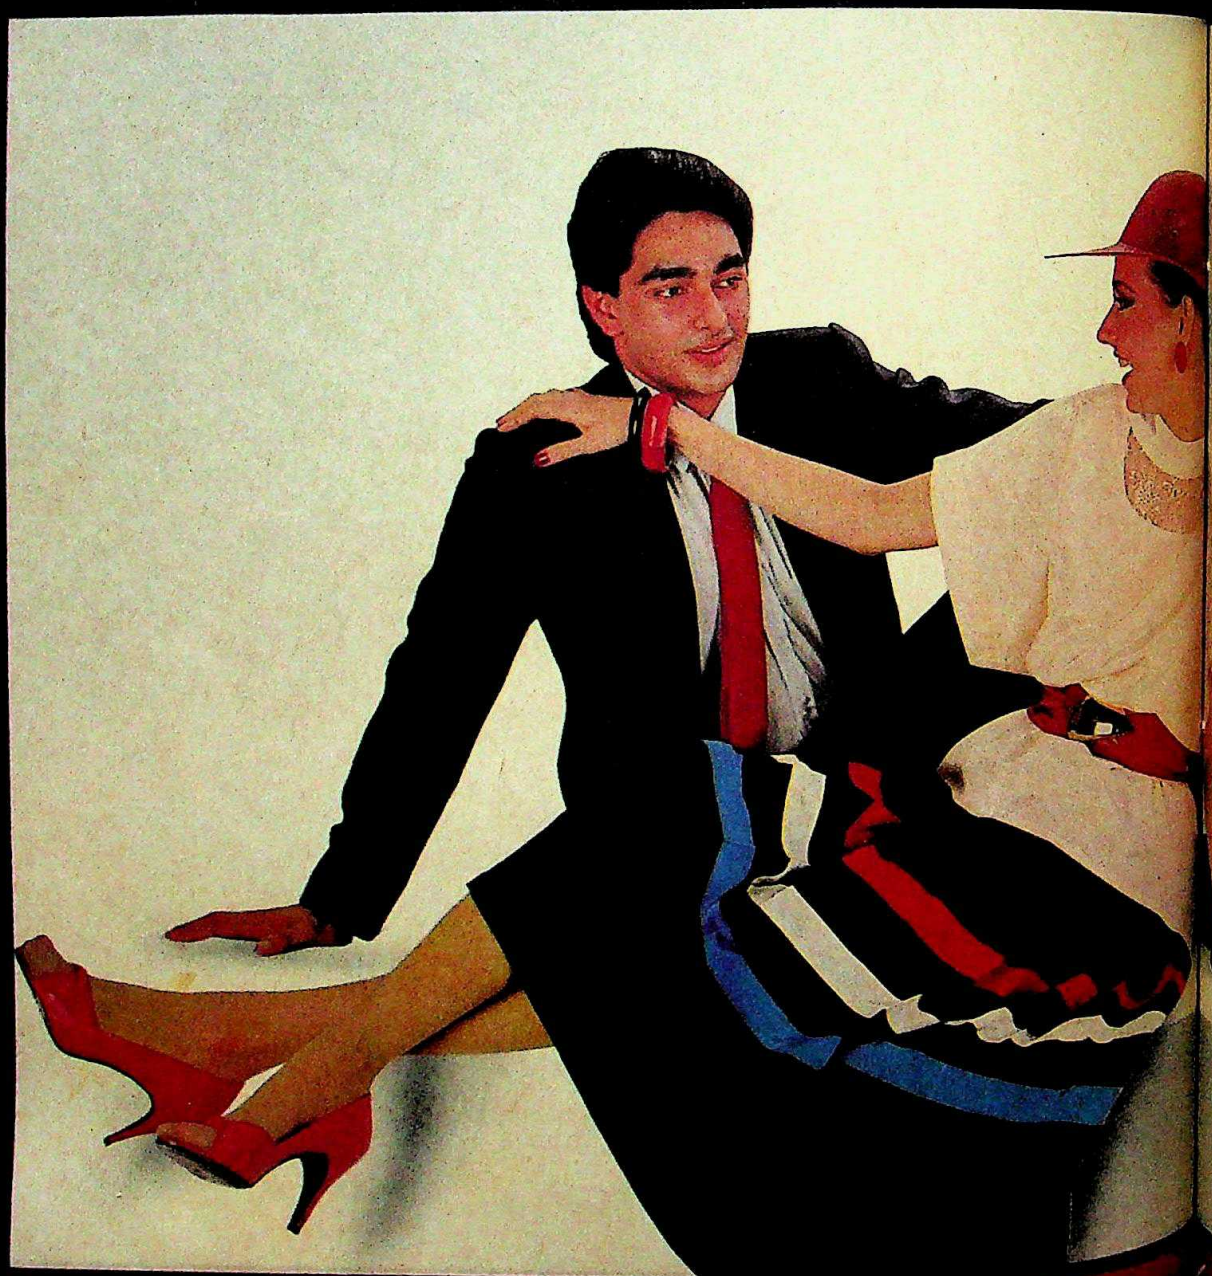
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sportif. Run your eye over the bodyline. And you'll admire the sleekness of French design.

Get astride and settle down and you'll see what comfort really means – right up to your fingertips.

Thumb the self-starter button and feel the Sportif come alive. Powered by a 50 cc engine that purrs with grace. And an autogear system that lets you glide effortlessly. On smart, stylish mag wheels.

Sportif. On performance alone it would make heads turn. But trust the French to do it in style.

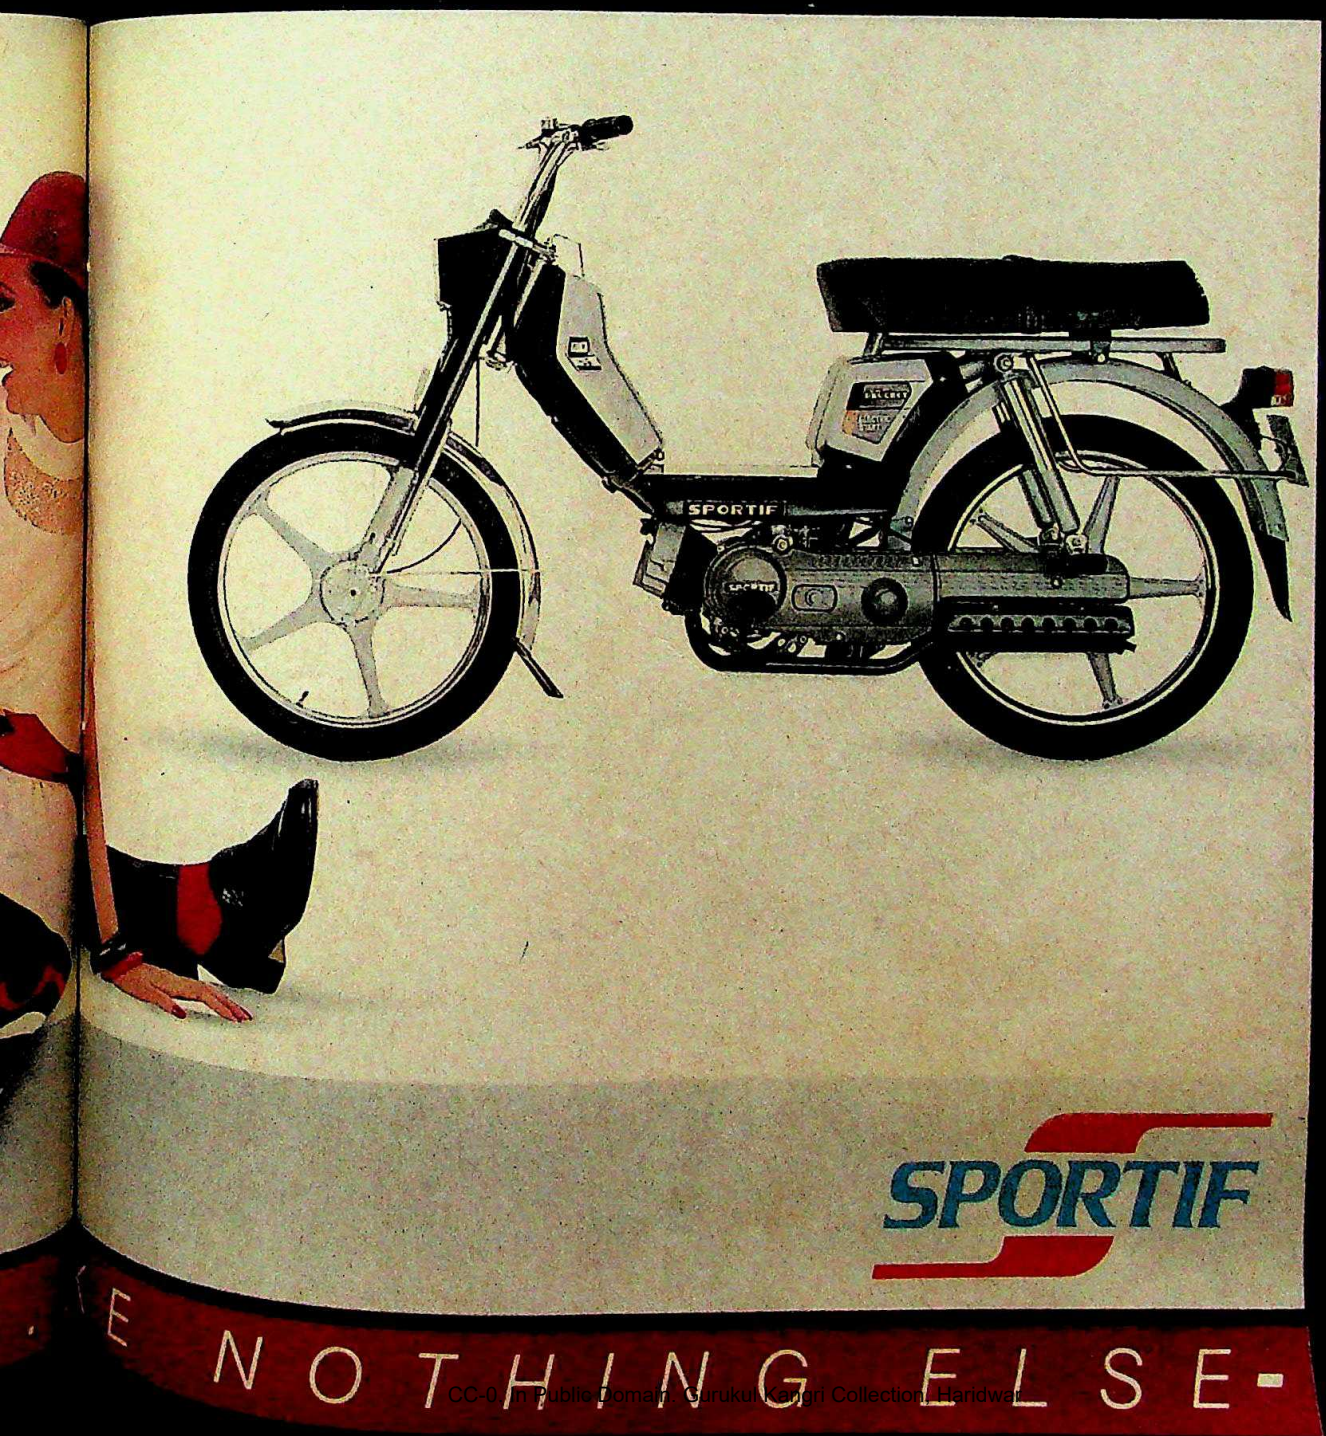


-CLASS TELLS...

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

SHREE CHAMUNDI MOPEDS LIMITED Hirehalli Tumkur 572 168

Trust the French to do it in style



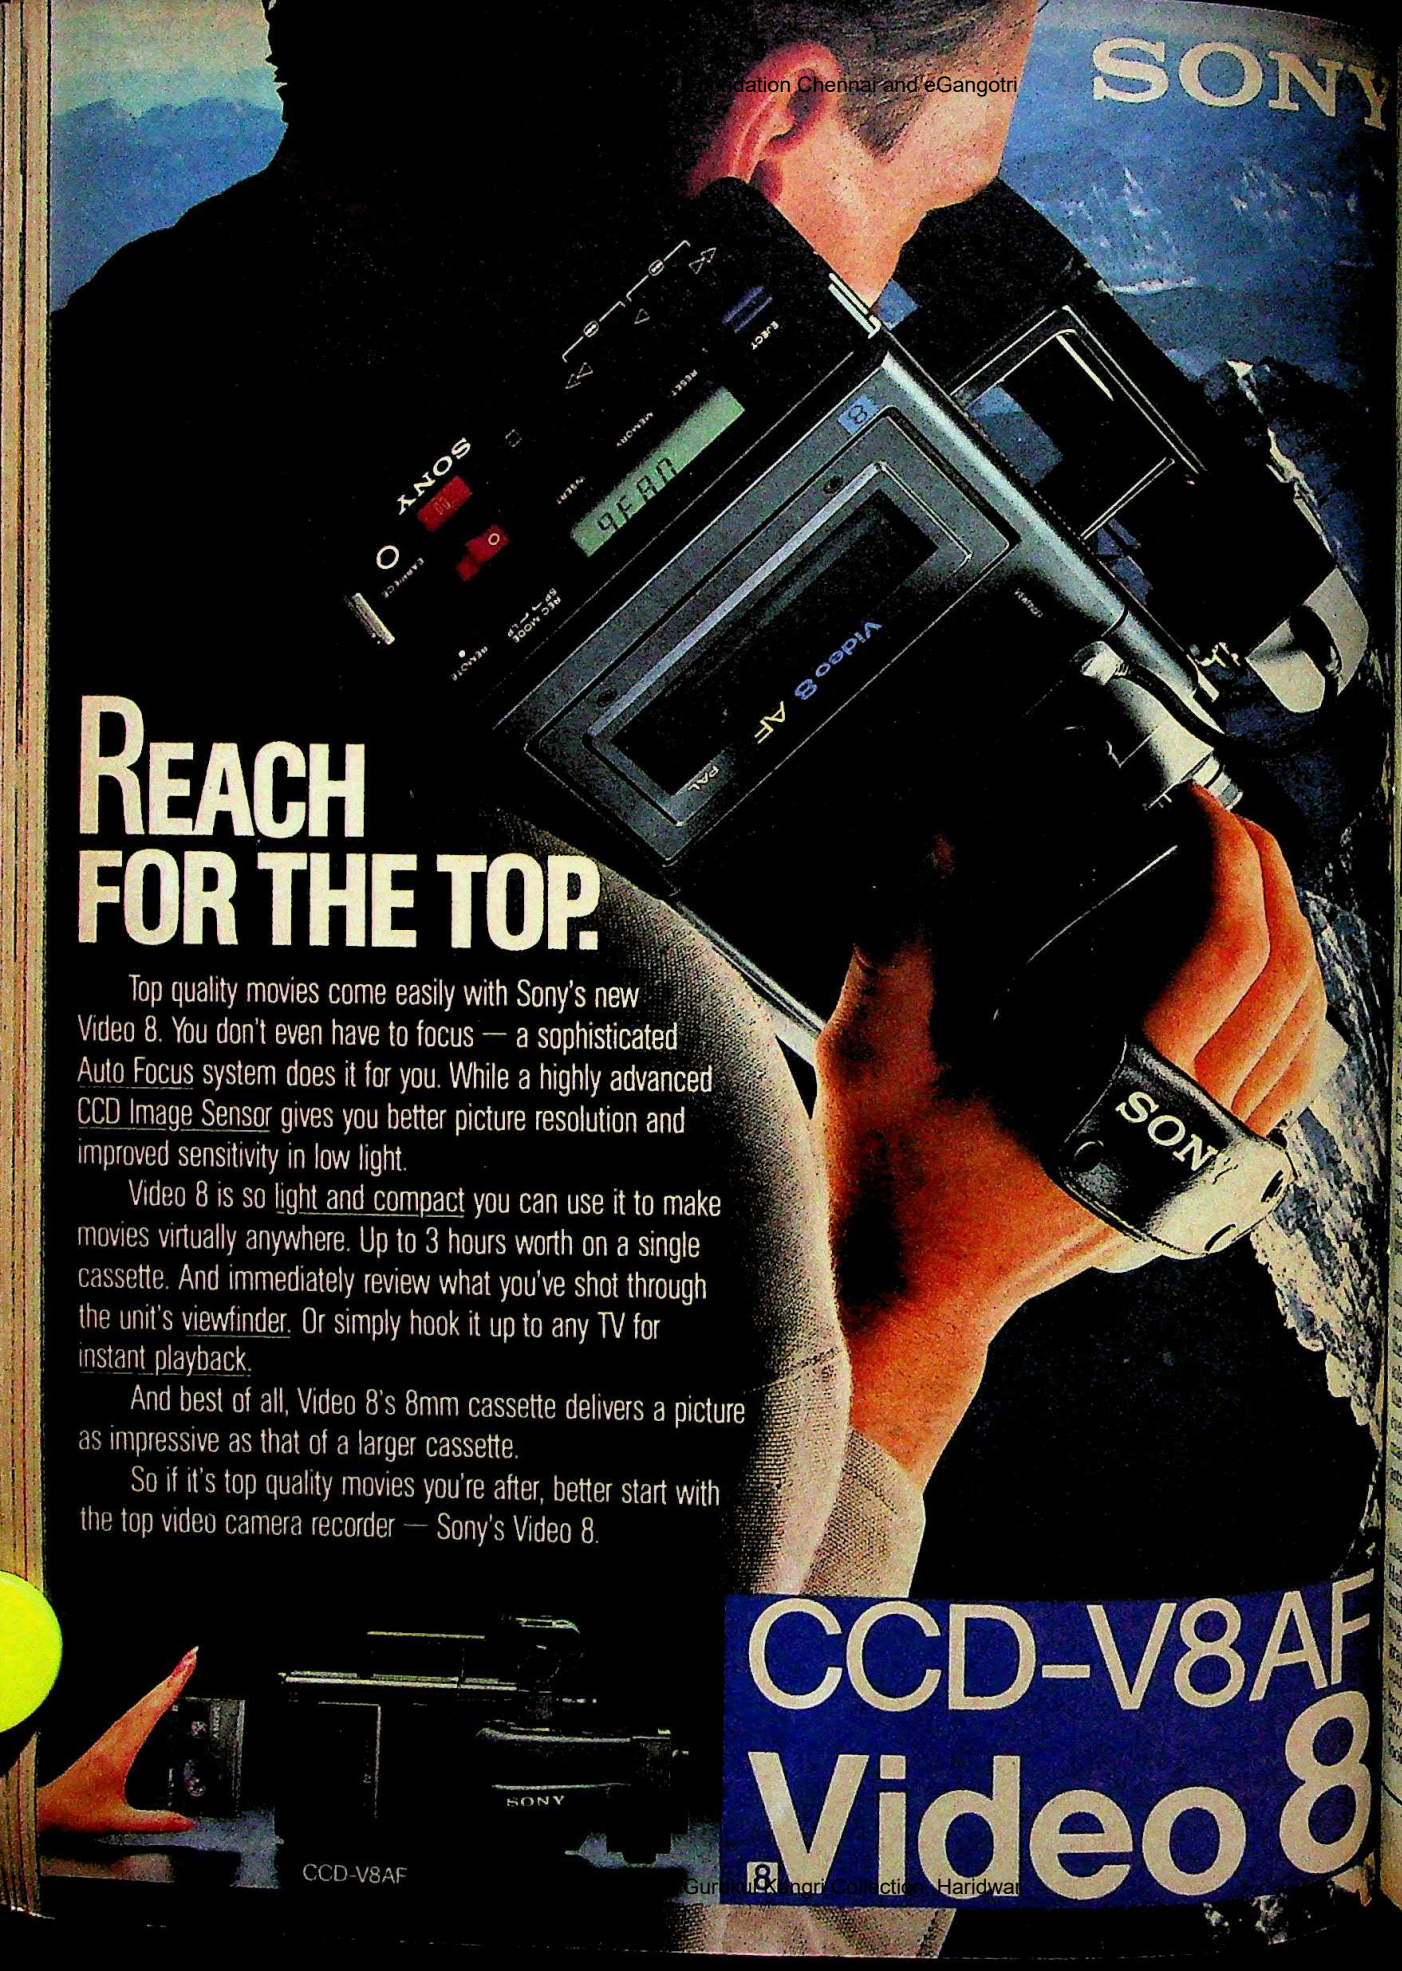
SPORTIF

E NOTHING ELSE-

In collaboration with PEUGEOT of France

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

...dation Chennai and eGangotri



REACH FOR THE TOP.

Top quality movies come easily with Sony's new Video 8. You don't even have to focus — a sophisticated Auto Focus system does it for you. While a highly advanced CCD Image Sensor gives you better picture resolution and improved sensitivity in low light.

Video 8 is so light and compact you can use it to make movies virtually anywhere. Up to 3 hours worth on a single cassette. And immediately review what you've shot through the unit's viewfinder. Or simply hook it up to any TV for instant playback.

And best of all, Video 8's 8mm cassette delivers a picture as impressive as that of a larger cassette.

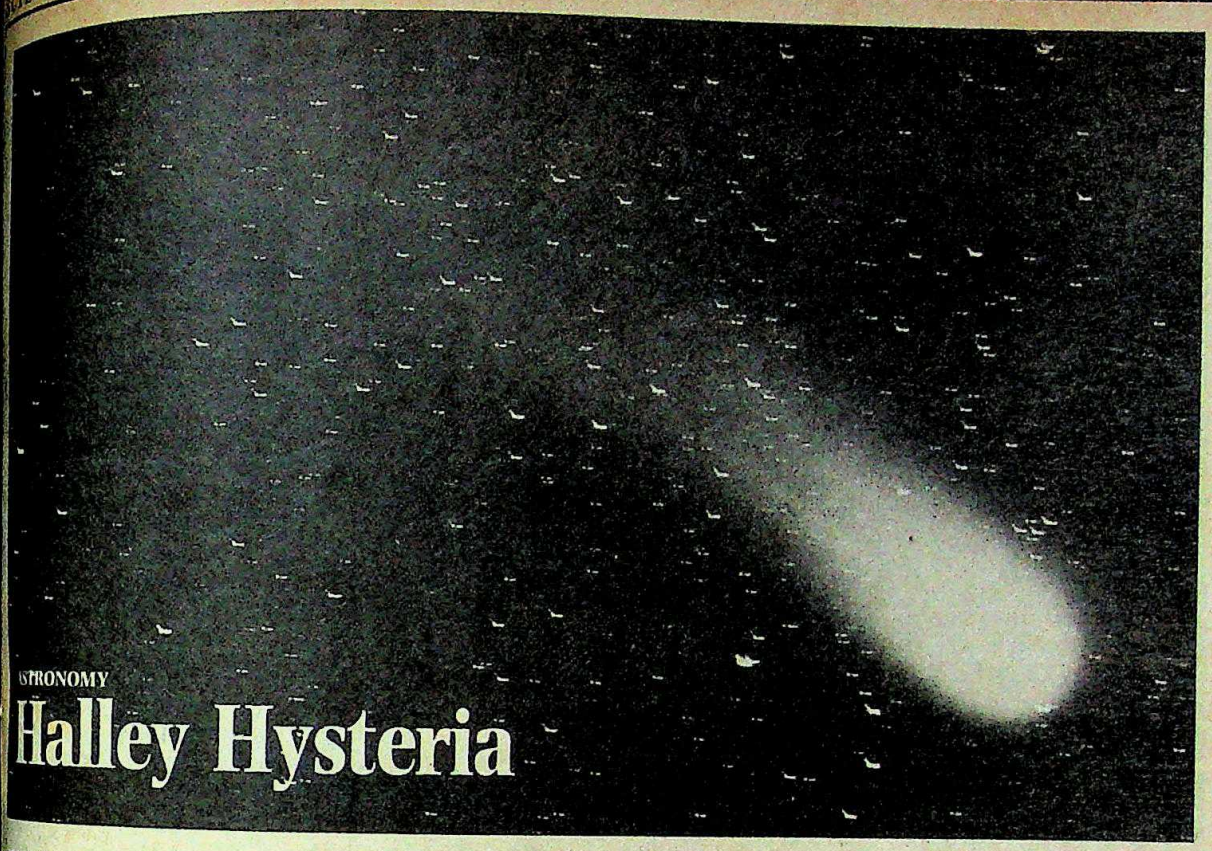
So if it's top quality movies you're after, better start with the top video camera recorder — Sony's Video 8.

CCD-V8AF

CCD-V8AF
Video 8

CC-0. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



ASTRONOMY

Halley Hysteria

IT HAS acted as some sort of cosmic clock that tolls once in 76 years. But at no time has this object of awe been the cause of such excited attention as in recent weeks when it allowed the world a pre-dawn glimpse of its fuzzy bright tail streaking across the sky. This fortnight, the once-in-a-lifespan show called Comet Halley swings in closest to the earth on April 11 during its 28th recorded visit in the course of its egg-shaped long celestial journey in interplanetary space.

For astro-scientists it marks the culmination of years of wait and nine months of watch in their effort to solve the riddles about comets, if not the early solar system. For the casual and curious, the Halley watch is the most exciting event since the launch of the first India-made satellite named after the ancient astronomer Aryabhatta heralded the country's entry into the space age.

The Indian Space Research Organisation (ISRO) brought out bulletins for Halley watchers giving details of how and where to look for the comet and suggesting ways to take good photographs. Even politicians joined in the country-wide pre-dawn watch. In Bombay, Congress(S) chief Sharad Pawar drove to the Nehru Planetarium to take a look through one of the three telescopes rigged up for the event. On hearing about Pawar's plans, a bleary-eyed Farooq Abdullah sprang a surprise by joining him. In Hyderabad, with two telescopes in his backyard at the Birla Planetarium, Andhra Pradesh Labour Minister P. Indra Reddy made sure he was not left out of the proceedings.

Halley's Comet as seen last fortnight

Predictably the commercial aspect was not ignored. Apart from brisk sales of film rolls, binoculars and telescopes reported from all over the country, in Bangalore, the state-owned Priyadarshini Handlooms announced a "comet sale" by giving a further 5 per cent cut, raising the rebate for all buys from 30 to 35 per cent between March 1 and March 11. It's educational prize scheme offered the book Comet by Carl Sagan and Ann Druyan to each of 20 prize-winning families. And the fortunate winners are to take a luxury coach drive from Bangalore down to the Kavalur Observatory in Tamil Nadu to see the comet during the best viewing time between April 5 and 15.

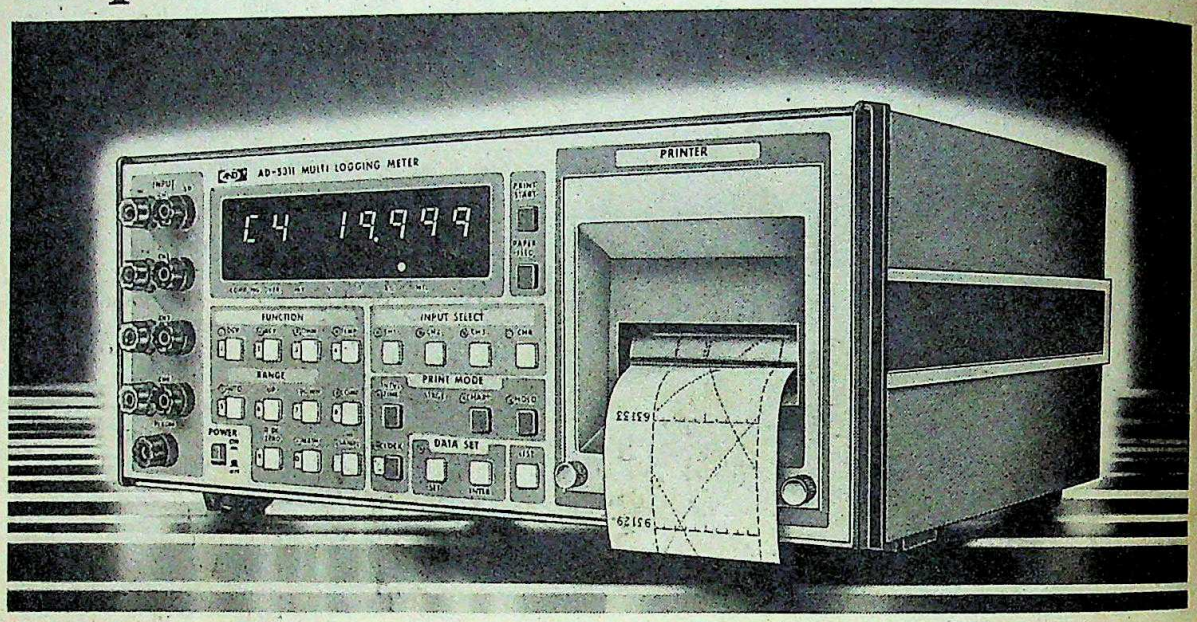
To astro-scientists, comets are like an archeological excavation in the sky, preserving not only the material from which the solar system was born but, more important perhaps, the story of how it was born. Comets are believed to be leftovers from the materials from which the sun and planets were formed about 4.6 billion years ago. Halley's periodic visit offers astronomers an unprecedented opportunity. Of the 1,000-odd known comets, Halley offers the best choice for study. It is a short-period comet, one that returns every 75 or 76 years, and is the brightest of all the known comets that appear on a regular basis. Halley's route and schedule are predictable and unlike burnt-out comets, it still displays the pyrotechnics that reveal its anatomy. Using space probes and telescopes undreamt of at the time of the comet's earlier visits, researchers will be able to test theories of what comets are, where they come from and what role they have played in the history of the cosmos.

Ancient philosophers like Aristotle held that comets were atmospheric phenomena and not objects moving in space. Isaac Newton later proved that heavenly objects do move under the universal law of gravitation he propounded. Edmund Halley, an English astronomer and a friend of Newton's, applied these principles to the brilliant comet he saw in 1682. The 1682 comet, he believed, was the same comet that had appeared in 1607 and 1531 and he

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Another enterprise of
Empire Industries



Empire Instrumentation

We lead into the 21st century with sophisticated state-of-the-art electronic technology.

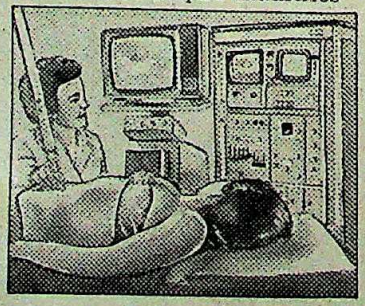
Empire Instrumentation represents leading international companies like Kyoritsu, Gilardoni, Aloka, Consultronics, A & D, Fukuda, Crony, Knaur, Softex and Pierburg. Areas covered include Industrial Research, Communications, Health Care, Defence, Space Research and Environmental Monitoring.

All in pursuit of high technology to make it work for you.

Of course Empire Industries Ltd. are doing a lot more than dealing with instruments and instrumentation systems. Their manufacturing and marketing operations cover additional areas of Medium and Heavy Crane manufacturing, Machine Tools, Finance, Glassware and Textiles.

The other enterprises of Empire Industries Ltd:

Garlick Engineering, Empire Machine Tools, Empire Finance Co. Ltd, Vitrum Glass and Empire Dyeing.



Empire Instrumentation

AN ENTERPRISE OF

EMPIRE INDUSTRIES LIMITED

Empire Industries Ltd
414, Senapati Bapat Marg,
Lower Parel,
Bombay-400 013.
Phone: 4920003, 4920304
Telex: 011-73888 (EMPR IN)

Where Excellence Leads

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

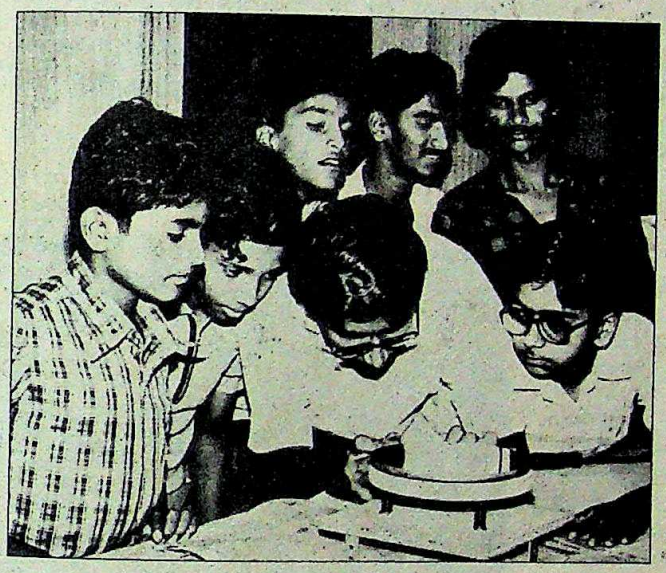
predicted that it would return again in 1758. It did and Halley passed into astronomical immortality. A comet, in a sense, is a gigantic optical illusion whose nucleus or solid core may be as small as three miles across. The nucleus is surrounded by the highly visible 'coma' or cloud of gas and dust that in Halley's case may stretch 100,000 miles.

The comet sent astro-scientists into an ecstatic tailspin last month when the most sophisticated of the five unmanned space probes, Giotto, beamed back breath-taking pictures and data of the comet's nucleus from its closest approach so far of less than 1000 km from the comet's centre. During the March 13 fly-by, Giotto's sponsors, the European Space Agency described the close-up view of the nucleus as "two peas in a pod".

Other pictures sent back by the Vega 1 and 2 probes inspired Russian scientists to comment that the comet looked like a potato". Since August last year, ground-based and balloon-borne telescopes, part of the International Halley Watch (IHW), not only took photographs but also gave scientists enough data to correct the course of space probes on their journey to the comet to study the exact track and composition of Halley's Comet.

IN THE vanguard of the Halley watch in India is the Indian Institute of Astrophysics (IIA), Bangalore. Explained Professor K.R. Sivaraman of IIA and chairman of the Halley watch in India: "Essentially all observations are to better our understanding about comets and to find out whether the close-up look may provide clues about the early solar system." For this, scientists at 10 locations including the major optical observatories at Kavalur in Tamil Nadu, Nainital in Uttar Pradesh and Japalli Kangapur in Andhra Pradesh, have been tracking the comet and taking photographs. But as Sivaraman emphasised: "The comet has already kindled general interest in astronomy and astrophysics."

The growing interest in space sciences and stellar objects put pressure on the planetaria to run special Halley's comet sky shows, install telescopes for comet watching and organise lectures on comets and other planetary phenomena. The Sardar Patel Planetarium, Baroda, led by its Director Dr A.G. Kulkarni, trained teachers to use small telescopes and tell schoolchildren more about the comet and the sky. In Hyderabad Dr B.G. Siddarth, director, Birla Planetarium, has planned a 25-session course spread over three months from April for space buffs and enrolled 60 students after interviewing 300 applicants. Said Siddarth: "The profile of those interested in space studies is amazing. There are travel agents and doctors besides teachers and students." And the planetarium which opened only seven months ago has recorded its 200,000th visitor.



Making telescopes in school: new interest

Clearly the new interest is more than the craze to chase the comet. The Bangalore Amateur Astronomers Association has published a 70-page book on building a telescope, written by its President P.N. Shankar. Said Shankar, a scientist at the National Aeronautical Laboratory: "With the book in hand amateurs can make a six or eight inch telescope for Rs 1,000 and in case of doubt, talk to the Visveswaraya Industrial and Technological Museum." The Department of Science and Technology also decided to cash in on the Halley mania by subsidised sale of telescopes by amateur groups. The ISRO prepared the design and the Central Scientific Instruments Organisation, Chandigarh, is mass producing this three-inch refractor telescope and selling it for Rs 3,000 along with a set of seven books on elementary and observational astronomy.

In an ambitious programme to increase the involvement of amateur astronomers and popularise space sciences, the ISRO has coordinated their Halley watch by circulating information through specially prepared bulletins. Clearly, Indian astro-scientists are elated that Halley-watching could spark off a major interest in space.

But there is still scope for scepticism. The Advisory Committee for Space Sciences has discovered the country's efforts in astronomy have not been competitive when compared with the world situation. It has travelled along traditional lines and for frontline research, like extra-galactic studies, the existing telescopes and the instrumentation has to be updated. Observed Dr V.R. Venugopal of the Ooty Radio Astronomy Centre, of the Tata Institute of Fundamental Research: "We have built all our optical and radio astronomy facilities indigenously, even though there may be a few weak spots. The real test is coming when we have to build the giant metre wavelength radio telescope (GMRT) costing over Rs 20 crore by the turn of the decade." The GMRT is to be located either near Pune or Indore and is to be used for understanding galaxies and galaxy clusters, besides studying pulsars.

Researchers feel the facilities will be better used only if a large crop of students interested in space sciences come out of the universities. Says Dr B.K. Sanwal of the Centre of Advanced Study in Astronomy (CASA), Osmania University: "Astronomy should be part of the study for the B.Sc degree. It is only with a wider popular base that better researchers can be found than from 40-odd students admitted to the M.Sc astronomy course in Hyderabad and Patiala." Observed Dr K.D. Abhyankar of CASA: "Our professional Astronomical Society of India also gives fellowships to four amateurs a year to pursue their studies at the observatories. But that is not enough. If physicists are prepared to treat astronomy on an equal footing with physics we will be able to produce a clutch of good astronomers." But for the moment at least, Halley hysteria offers the brightest ray of hope for the growth of space sciences.

—AMARNATH K. MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SONE CANAL

Course of Tragedy

ONE OF the most fertile and productive parts of Bihar is in danger of becoming a barren wasteland because of the inability of the Central and state governments to implement a crash programme to rebuild a life-giving irrigation network which has nourished the area for over a century.

Since the 1860s, Rohtas, Bhojpur, Aurangabad, Gaya and Patna in north-west Bihar have been served by the Sone river and its canals. As a result, this area emerged as an island of prosperity. But during the last decade, rice production in this region has plummeted by a staggering 40 per cent. The summer paddy crop which once covered a lush 48,000 hectares has shrunk to an area of 18,000 hectares. And the 559,000 hectares covered 10 years ago by multiple-cropping have now dwindled to half their original size.

Predicts Brijlal Singh of Panditpura village in Bhojpur: "This once affluent region will soon become as dry and barren as the southern hilly regions." Dinanath, a farmer belonging to Ramnagar Bangla and a government-appointed caretaker of a canal which flows through his area, says that the canal system has so deteriorated that "people are fed up and are now irrigating their once water-fed areas with tubewells".

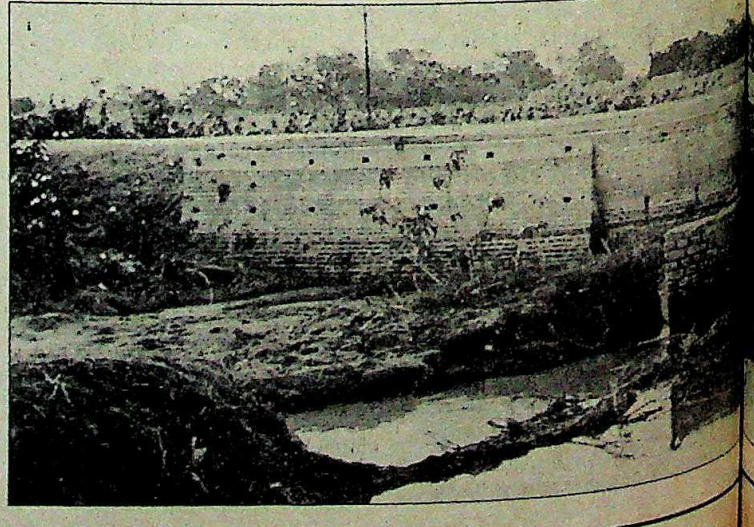
The main reason for this agricultural tragedy in the making is the slow but steady collapse of the once exemplary Sone irrigation network. Even though the state and Centre have drawn up and discussed modernisation plans for the system for several years nothing so far has been accomplished. The total cost of the resuscitation effort is estimated at about Rs 1,300 crore from a combination of funds provided by the World Bank, the Centre and the state. The state had been asked to provide at least Rs 2 crore to keep the canal project included in the list of national subjects. But the state has failed to come up with the finance.

As a result, the Centre's Department of Economic Affairs informed the state administration that the modernisation plan would have to be removed from the World Bank pipeline. Fearful that the entire plan would have to be scrapped for lack of funds Chief Minister Bindeshwari Dubey approached Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi who, Dubey claims, "has assured us that the Centre will get the work done through the World Bank." But so far the Department of Economic Affairs has given indication of any change in attitude.

The main reason for this agricultural tragedy is the steady collapse of the once Sone irrigation network, because of the inability of the Central and state governments to implement a crash programme.

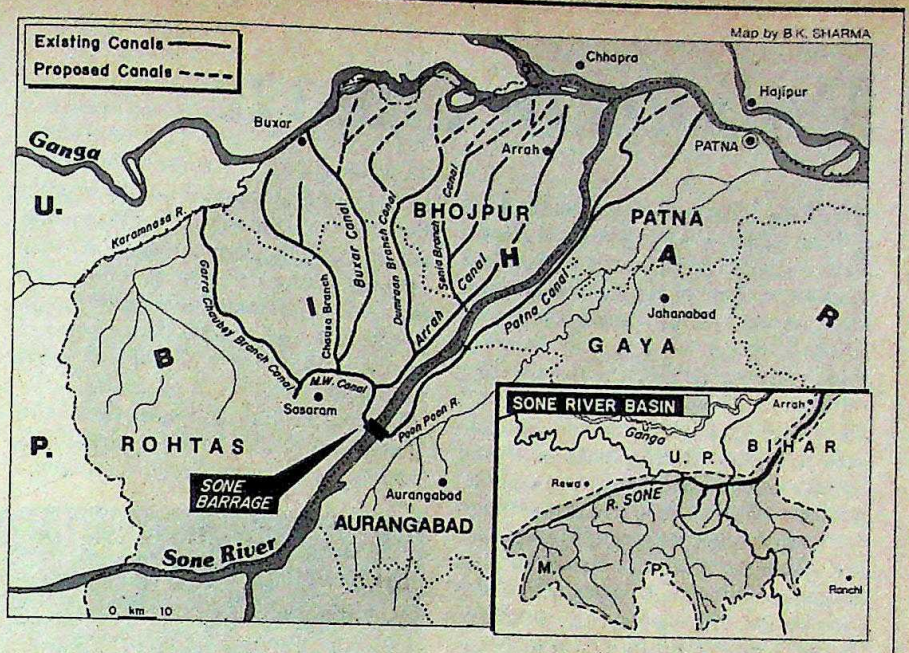
Experts point out that if modernisation plan is taken out of World Bank pipeline it will be effectively shelved for another decade and the system will then be beyond salvaging. Official reports as well as on-site research paint a dismal picture:

- The canals are badly damaged during paddy irrigation, the canal water flows above the water level. The machinery needed to regulate water flows is unworkable.
- There are only a few regulators in the system capable of diverting the flow into off-take channels or into the downstream reaches. And only 2% cent of the outlets leading water into the fields are permanent



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

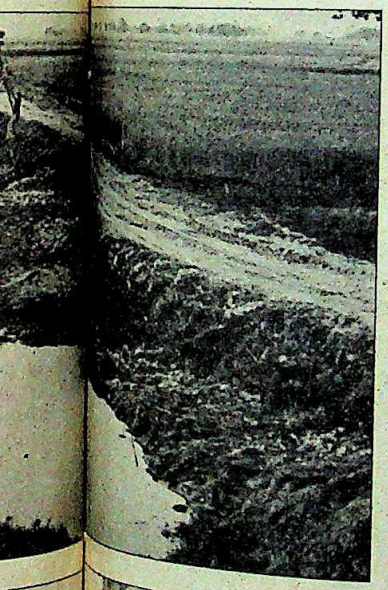


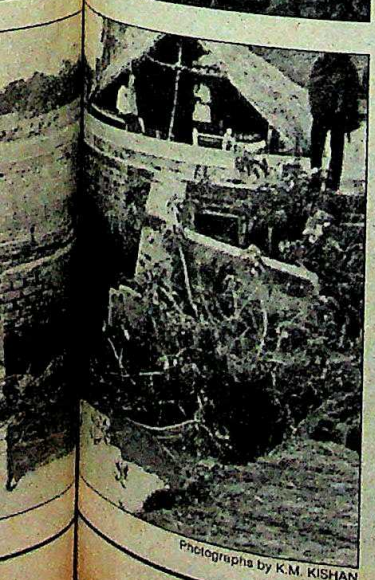
...ast quantities of water from the ...l are lost because of unrepaired or ...urable seepages. In many ways, the ...l system has become a threat to the ...ers because of problems of overflows, ...logging and sedimentation.

...Canal overseer Jagdish Prasad Gupta ...ated that in one block alone, more ... 4,000 acres of land has turned ...ne during the last few years because ...e failure of the canal system. In ...l areas farmers have tried to repair ...ing walls and embankments of the ...t but no sooner do they prop one up ...er side collapses.

...e original canal system was de...to irrigate only Rabi crops in a nine ...re area. But as farmers realised its ...n watering Kharif crops as well

...ss of the decaying canal system: plummeting harvests





Photographs by K.M. KISHAN

they began using its capabilities intensively. Impressed with the system's potential, the Government first began to plan an expansion and modernisation plan in 1960. A barrage, intended to double the system's capacity, was constructed at Inderpuri at a cost of Rs 14 crore in 1968. Though the irrigation capacity increased the area benefiting from the new barrage was only 12 lakh acres because the canals downstream were in miserable shape.

In view of this, the state Government began thinking of modernising the entire system in the sixth plan but could achieve little or nothing because state and Central bureaucrats could not agree on how much money was to be spent.

The final nail in the coffin was the Bihar Government which has never been able to produce its share of the money needed for the project. The World Bank had agreed to finance 60 per cent of the cost of the total project for the seventh plan but the Centre informed the Bihar Government that it would provide the state only 60 per cent of what it receives from the bank, and that too in graduated phases. This means that the state Government would get about Rs 468 crore and would have to mobilise an additional Rs 832 crore. This is clearly an impossible task since this sum involved exceeds the total outlay for irrigation projects in the state in any five-year plan.

In addition, experts point out that the Rs 1,300 crore estimated for modernisation was based on 1981 price levels. They estimate that costs have since escalated by at least 15 per cent. And by the time the project is completed the costs are expected to double.

Some experts have begun to wonder whether the whole modernisation scheme will not be a wasted effort in view of what one of them described as "past mistakes." He was referring to the flow of waters in the Sone river system being choked at various points in the upper reaches of the system as well as downstream. The Bihar Government has had to battle other state governments—particularly Uttar Pradesh and Madhya Pradesh—to work out domestic water treaties to ensure the flow of the Sone waters into Bihar's agricultural lands. Their flow had been threatened in the past by construction of the Rihand Dam in Uttar Pradesh and water storage schemes in Bansnagar, Madhya Pradesh, which threatened the Sone canal system in Bihar. But having fought its way out of these concrete thickets impeding the Sone system the Bihar Government has created some of its own. The state has begun constructing multipurpose dams at North Koe, Auranga, Amanat and Katku which, when complete, will also block the flow of water in the Sone system.

Unavoidably the collapse of the Sone canal system has become a political issue with opposition leaders threatening to launch a satyagraha designed to force the Central Government to take immediate action to save the irrigation network. But while engineers, theoreticians, planners, and economists argue about merits and demerits, and while politicians plan dharnas and bandhs, the Sone system which once created an island of prosperity, is rushing towards an ocean of disaster.

—FARZAND AHMED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DANCE

Motions of Change

INDIAN dance audiences have for long been subjected to the spectacle of love-lorn nayikas pining away into endless moonlit nights, of Radha stealing Krishna's flute or of Draupadi being stripped by the Kauravas. But not any longer, if some enthusiastic dancers and choreographers, who have been daring to experiment with form, style and content, succeed in their attempts to make Indian classical and contemporary dance more relevant and identifiable with the times.

That change in the air was in evidence last fortnight when the Anamika Kala Sangam of Calcutta, in collaboration with the Dance Department of Rabindra Bharati University and the West Bengal State Sangeet Natak Akademi, organised a three-day festival in Calcutta with the aim of chronicling the significant new trends in Indian dance.

Sponsored by the University Grants Commission, the festival included a seminar on the need for innovation in Indian classical dance and demonstrations of newly evolved and evolving styles by such progressive performers and choreographers as Mrinalini Sarabhai, Kumudini Lakhia, Chandralekha and Manjusri Chaki Sircar. Apart from reaffirming the need for experiment and innovation, the lively lecture-demonstrations proved that Indian dance has moved a long way ahead of the early fusion and evolution of Uday Shankar and Tagore and is poised at a new and exciting crossroad.

The ever-innovative Chandralekha, who has worked out a successful integration of Bharata Natyam, Yoga and the Kalaripayattu martial art of Kerala in her Angika, showed how the physical traditions in dance can be exploited to fit modern-day perspectives. Rejecting the divine origin of dance, she emphasised the need for constant interrelation between different fields like dance, graphics, architecture, painting and literature. "The body falls victim to two limiting notions—one which sees it as a subversive appendage of the spirit and the other which sees it as an object, commodified and linked to the market through glamour and escapist entertainment," she said.

Mrinalini Sarabhai, an alumnus of Santiniketan, however, insisted that the strength of dance lay in tradition. One could be contemporary even with traditional dance techniques. It was these techniques that enabled one to express the most contemporary of problems and issues through dance. As proof, her Darpana troupe demonstrated how themes on dowry, suicide and pollution could be effectively presented in dance forms as ancient as Bharata Natyam and Kathakali.

It was Kathak danseuse Kumudini Lakhia, however, who drove Mrinalini's point home more effectively. With simple group compositions of traditional Kath items like todas, tukdas and aamads. Kadamba troupe showed how it is possi to turn classical heritage to innova advantage. The symmetry, finesse a technical excellence of her creations w traditional but the content was v much contemporary and modern— much-flogged Radha-Krishna theme conspicuous by its absence. This marr of the traditional and the contempo was amply borne out by The Coat, innovative piece based on Sarvesh Dayal Saxena's famous Hindi poem.

Lakhia's dance version of The Coat, contemporary classical

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri showed what a gifted choreographer do with classical forms in modern without compromising on the basic mar of the dance.

HIS was in keeping with the new concern for conveying everyday problems through dance. At the Natika Festival in Delhi in Novemlast year, the Jawaharlal Nehru Maniance Academy had also shown this rend when it conveyed its concern such a pressing modern problem as tection of wildlife. Using the old Lamjao technique of Manipuri, the s made an impassioned plea for the ervation of the brow-antlered deer of Manipur's hills.

It is not only content that is changing. More and more young dancers are daring to experiment with forms too, and with positive results. Enthusiastic and imaginative performers like Bharat Sharma, Astad Deboo, Uttara Asha Coorlawala, Sheila Raj and Ileana Citaristi have been trying to evolve styles that would be more cosmopolitan and universal. Bharat Sharma—whose father Narendra Sharma, a known innovator, had a long association with Uday Shankar—gave proof of his search for a more contemporary dance expression at the seminar. His very original composition, Mukhowte (masks), performed by his Bhumika troupe—dealt with the cosmopolitan problem of identity and concluded that the masks grow on the wearers and become one with them. Leaning heavily on his Mayurbhanj Chhau background and training in modern dance under Alwyn Nicolai in the US, Sharma revealed the immense scope in Indian dance as he explored the close relationship between dance, mime and movement.

The lively lecture—demonstrations proved that Indian dance is poised at a new and exciting crossroad.

RAGHU RAI

This yearning for change has also affected the related effects like music and lighting. All through the festival, lights wizard Tapas Sen proved that the current emphasis on change can be effectively brought to bear upon stage-lighting as well, hitherto a largely neglected area in dance. His imaginative lighting and superb special effects amply complemented each new style and composition.

Ileana Citaristi, an Italian learning Mayurbhanj Chhau and Odissi dance forms in India, had the advantage of an outsider's perspective on the old and the new. "Krishna or Godot?" she asked meaningfully. Citaristi is convinced that if dancers work together, animated by the same honesty and commitment for this search, a universal form of dance could well emerge, taking in the old and the new, the East and the West, the discipline of the body and the freedom of the mind.

That may be wishful thinking but a beginning has already been made. There is a definite shift in attitudes that is bound to leave jaded old forms and traditionalists behind. Staunch traditionalists have dismissed the new trends as just so much gimmickry and nonsense. But that has not deterred the young dancers from questioning the flogged themes of Radha and Krishna, the repetition of the nayak-nayika syntax, the outmoded values and compositions not related to reality.

The change, though still in its nascent stages, is doubtless very definitive. And despite shocked protests from the die-hards, it seems that contemporary classical dance, if it can be called that, is here to stay. Blasphemous though it may sound, the Natyashastra is certainly not the last word on Indian dance any more.

—SUNIL KOTHARI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KARNATAKA

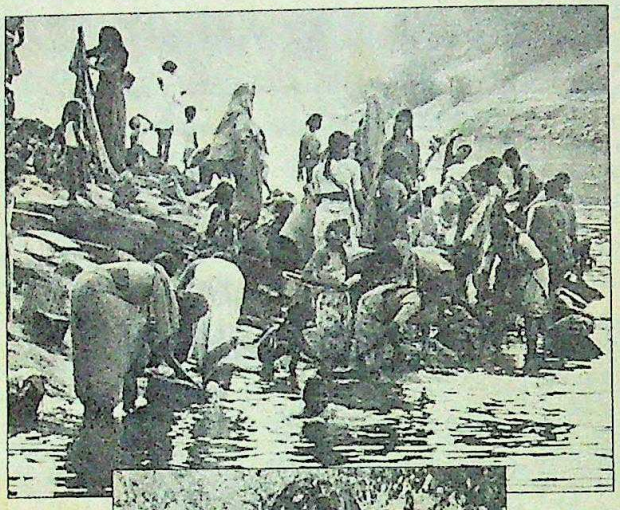
A Naked Defiance

THE KARNATAKA Government discovered to its discomfiture last fortnight that all the state's machinery cannot end a centuries-old custom that is now thought to be indecent and barbaric. The Government's attempts to stop the annual bettele seve—religious festival where devotees offer prayers in the nude to Goddess Renukamba—in tiny Chandragutti village in Shimoga district ended dramatically and in complete confusion. Reacting violently to the interference, the devotees stripped policemen, policewomen and social workers and forced them to parade naked. Immediately afterwards, attempting to assuage hurt feelings on all sides, the state Government ordered a magisterial inquiry into the violence.

From time immemorial on certain days in March some one lakh devotees from different parts of the state have converged on the granite-rich village of Chandragutti to take a holy dip in the River Varada and then trek 4 km in the nude to the hill-top temple of Goddess Renukamba to offer prayers. The origin of this three-day jathra of nude worship is a legend. It is believed that Sage Jamadagni discovered by telepathy that his wife Renukamba, while taking water from the Varada, was attracted by a man bathing in the river. Angry that his wife should even be thinking of another man, Jamadagni ordered his son Parasurama to behead her. Renukamba, while fleeing for her life pursued by her son, dropped all her clothes. Completely naked, she escaped into a nearby cave and merged herself with the God there.

Shielded from the outside world by the dense forests surrounding it, the little village continued its annual festival of nude worship without interference. But three years ago, the Dalit Sangharsh Samithi (DSS) moved in and called a halt to the practice saying that it was mainly Dalits who were offering nude worship. However, the public campaign remained low-key, confined to press statements made soon after the festival and forgotten thereafter.

Meanwhile, opponents of nude worship had turned their flak on the Government forcing it to take action. Two weeks before the jathra, suitable measures were worked out at a meeting of officials and DSS leaders. The meeting concluded that although nudity in public places is an offence, the law cannot be invoked in the case of religion and so the custom would have to be stopped by persuasion and education. Immediately afterwards, the departments of social welfare, information, police, and Kannada culture organisations pitched in with the DSS to conduct a 10-day noisy campaign against nude worship.



Women taking a holy dip (top) and semi-clad devotee: anti-climax

But as the jathra began last fortnight it became clear that the devotees had not been moved by the impassioned campigning of the preceding days. Shortly before sunrise on the first day, pilgrims began bathing in the Varada River under the eagle eyes of officials, journalists and the police. DSS volunteers sang songs imploring the pilgrims not to disrobe. Unmoved some believers walked away from the river in their clothes, stripped on the way and then ran in the nude to Goddess Renukamba's temple on the top of the 850-metre high hill.

However, much to the satisfaction of those campaigning against the custom the number of nude-worshippers on the first day were far less than the numbers that usually congregated at the festival. "We have almost succeeded . I'm sure this practice will gradually fade away in a few years," an excited Krishnappa declared. The optimism was short-lived, for all hell broke lose on the second day of the jathra when larger numbers had congregated.

The trouble began when DSS volunteers confronted by the men, women and children disrobing in front of them tried to physically prevent some of them. Infuriated, the pilgrims turned their wrath on the outsiders. Ten policemen, including two policewomen, were stripped and paraded naked on the banks of the river. Two women journalists were assaulted and their cameras taken away. Outnumbered the police saw that retreat was their best defence and took to their heels. The melee was brought under control only after police reinforcements were rushed in.

The battle on the second day seemed to have decided the issue of bettele seve this year. Festivities on the third day, the jathra went off uninterrupted. An overjoyed devotees participated in the haram by offering to the goddess their equal weights in tomatoes, coconuts or whatever their fields produced. The naked defiance clearly showed that converting believers is a prickly problem.

—SRINIVASA PRASAD in Chandragutti

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

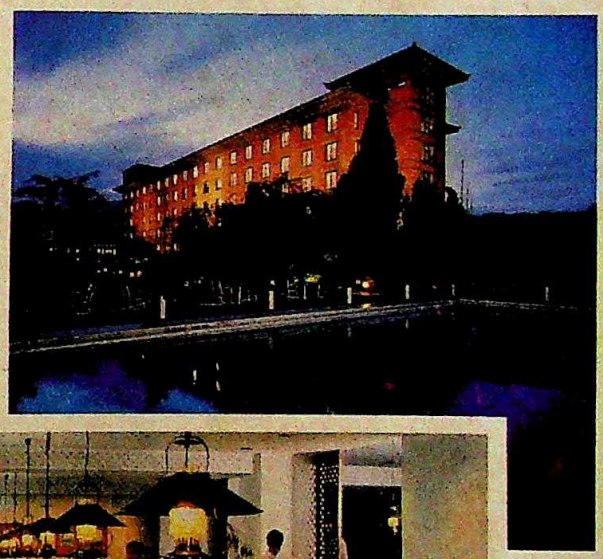
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

From Sita, Mercury and Casino Nepal:

The Soaltee Surprise

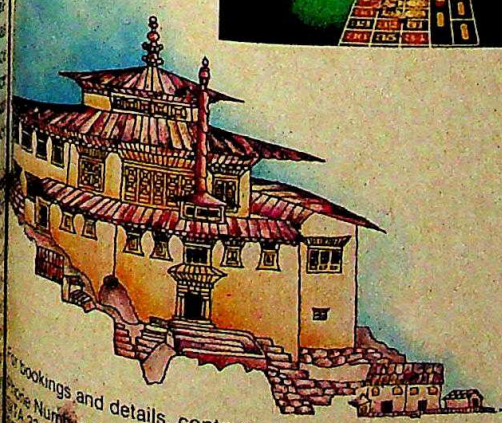
Escape to the new world of an ancient kingdom in Kathmandu.

Combine a perfect retreat with the most luxurious holiday at the Soaltee Oberoi: 4 days, 3 nights of unmatched pleasure. Your choice of Continental or Indian breakfast every day. Two deluxe half-day city sight-seeing tours. Free accommodation for 2 children up to 12 years in the same room without extra bed. Free airport-hotel-airport transfers.



Plus
Free-play casino-coupons worth Rs. 1,200

All, for Rs. 1,234 per person on a twin-sharing basis (Rs. 1,830 for single-occupancy) — inclusive of all taxes. (Prices indicated in Indian rupees.)



Hotel Soaltee Oberoi

EIH-104/2

For bookings and details, contact your nearest Sita, Mercury or Oberoi Instant Reservations Office or a bonafide travel agent.
Reservation Numbers: Bombay SITA 240666 MERCURY 2024343 OBEROI 2024343 Ahmedabad SITA 409105 OBEROI 464451 Delhi SITA 2311[illegible] 3312764 MERCURY 312008 OBEROI 699571 Srinagar SITA 78891, 77186 MERCURY 78786 OBEROI 71241 Kanpur SITA 6617[illegible] Jaipur SITA 68226 Agra SITA 66181 Varanasi SITA 42945, 43121 MERCURY 62021 Calcutta SITA 297185 MERCURY 443555/59 OBEROI 292323 Madras SITA 478861 MERCURY 8112220 OBEROI 478156 Bangalore SITA 578091 MERCURY 577681 OBEROI 53444 Hyderabad SITA 233628 MERCURY 34411 Cochin SITA 33012, 31101.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A manager is as good as the decisions he makes. But often, decision making is an unenviable task. Especially when the odds for success and failure are even. And logic...research...even space-age computers can't guarantee fool-proof analysis. So how are fool-proof decisions made?

Decision is essentially a choice between alternatives.

The choice can be made in three different ways: by tradition, by random selection or by analysis.

Tradition chooses one way and is blind to all other ways.

Random selection gives equal weightage to all possible ways.

Analysis considers the advantages and disadvantages of the various possibilities and logically selects the best.

Logical decisions

To analyse the advantages and disadvantages, information is necessary. Where all relevant information is readily available, the cost/benefit analysis is purely logical. In management, such information is available only in relatively minor decisions – which can be termed as "postage stamp" decisions. Once the postal rates and the weight of the article are known, a single correct decision is possible. It becomes a pure exercise of "logic".

Use of intuition

However, in the case of important decisions, full information is rarely available. The distance between the office and the airport is known and the speed at which a vehicle is capable of being driven at, is known. However, the time taken to reach the airport from the office also depends on the traffic conditions. This information has to be "estimated" on the basis of past experience and intuition.

The use of intuition, assumptions or "created information" plays a greater and greater role as the importance of the decision increases. In operational decisions like sales forecasting, production scheduling, inventory control, etc. the collected information plays a large role. However, a certain amount of "created information" is also used.

In strategic decisions, the collected information can be used to narrow down the number of choices. However, in making the final decision, "created information" plays the vital role. Examples of such decisions are: choice of location, technology, product-mix and capacity. Take, for example, the selection of an aeroplane for Indian Airlines. Collected data regarding the efficacy of various aeroplanes under Indian conditions narrows down the choice to three or four aeroplanes. Thereafter the decision depends essentially on the expected price of fuel and the expected traffic density – in the future. Since the aeroplanes will be supplied three to five years thereafter, the decision has to use "created information" about fuel prices and traffic density 5 to 15 years from the date of the decision.

To create such an information, experience is not always adequate. Experience refers to the past but the future is not always a projection of the past. So intuition has to be used.

And this is what makes decision an art!

This also means that managers who have been successful in taking largely logical decisions at junior and middle management levels may fail at the senior and top management levels unless they master the art of decision-making, through effective use of intuition.

Success of a decision

The success of a decision often depends on the commitment

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Art of Decision Making

by Sharu S. Rangnekar Management Educator, Bombay.

which the decision is implemented. Many a brilliant ision has failed because its implementation lacked husiasm.

his brings us to another aspect in the art of decision-ing: how to make the decision acceptable to those who sponsible for implementing it.

arisma is one way of making the decisions acceptable. ader with charisma can make his followers suspend their dgment in favour of his judgement. However, such matic ability is rare and cannot be depended upon erally.

ther way to make the decision acceptable is to get the rticipants involved in decision-making. There are ically three stages of such an involvement. The first is to ain them about the decision and seek information. e second is to seek their suggestions or advice. The third is for them to evolve the decision. Involvement becomes ningly greater as we move from the first to the d stage.

blems in participative decision-making practice, however, it is not always possible to resort to fully icipative decision-making. Certain basic pre-requisites ve to be met. Firstly, there has to be a certain degree of ency in the goals of the person responsible for decision-ing and of the persons responsible for implementing the sions. Then alone the participation will guide the decision rds the commonly accepted goals. Where the implementers have an agenda of their own – different from that of the decision-maker – the decision might become a compromise that might not give the best possible results. If a manager wants to change procedures that are giving illicit benefits to his subordinates (e.g. through corruption), participative decision-making is unlikely to bring about an effective decision.

Similarly, there are situations where the subordinates are not ready to accept the responsibility involved in the decision-making. In such cases, the participation procedure becomes a waste of time. However, it is possible to develop the subordinates stage by stage so that they trust the boss and have confidence in themselves to embark on participative decision-making.

Involving the persons progressively in decision-making is also an art – and a vital one for the success of the decision.

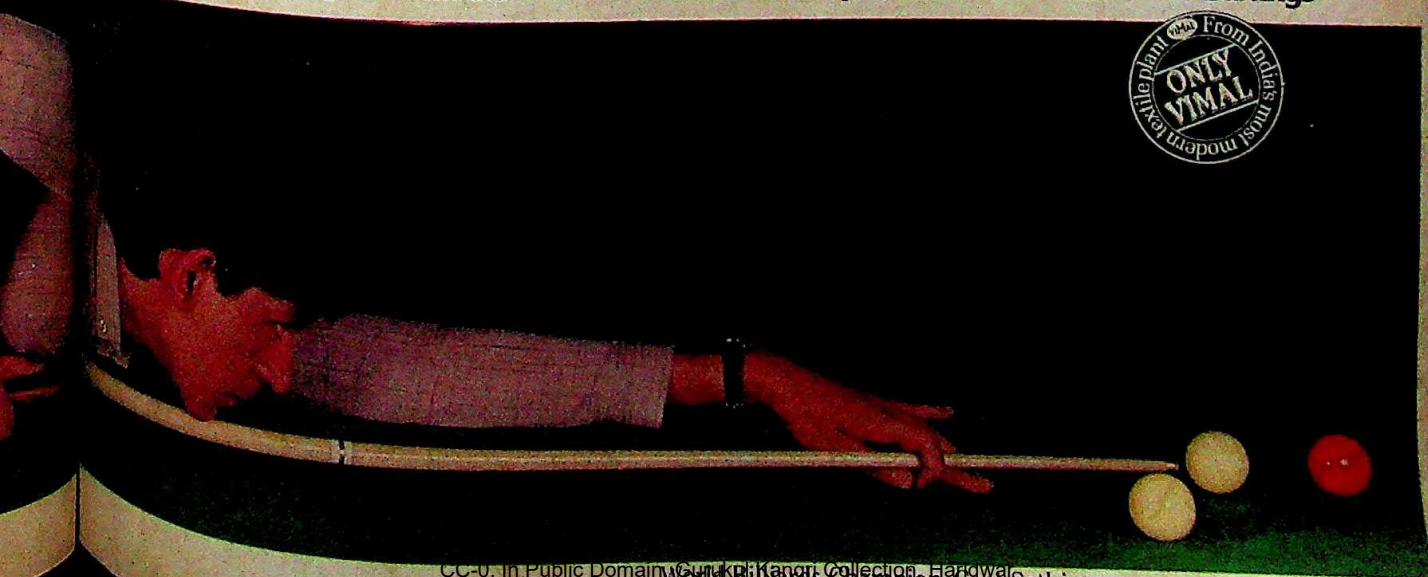
The vital art

Thus, in spite of collection of any amount of information and analysing it with the most sophisticated computers, making important decisions and implementing them successfully is a vital art in the practice of management.

This message comes to you, from Vimal.
The trusted corporate fabric.
And this summer, Vimal brings you another competent range of Polyrich Suitings. Fine textured. In summer-compatible shades.

VIMAL®
A RELIANCE PRODUCT
Polyrich Suitings

From India's most modern textile plant
ONLY VIMAL

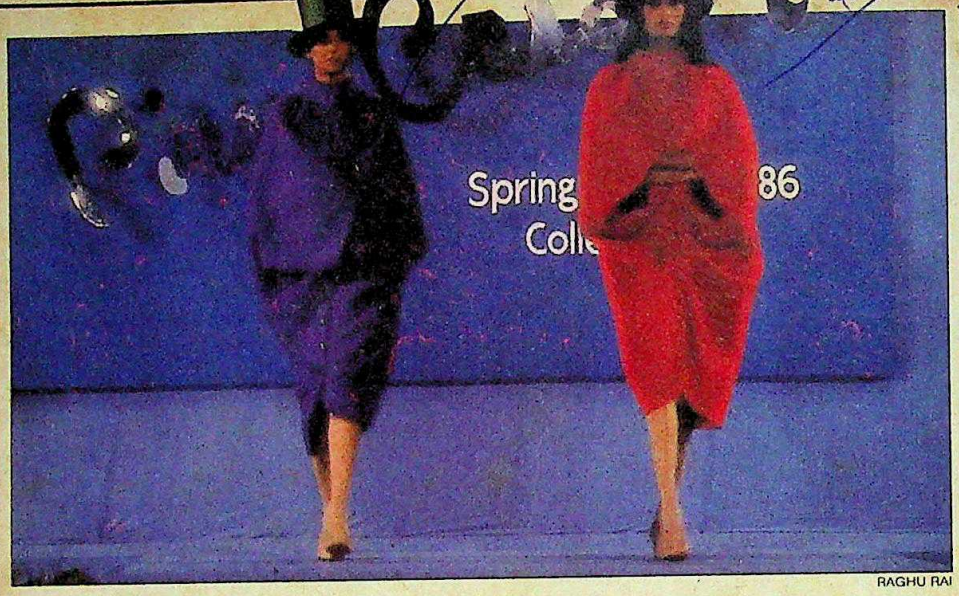


World Billiards Champion, Geet Sethi

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Mudra:A:RIL:3025

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



RAGHU RAI

◆ Guess who came to dinner last fortnight? Pierre Cardin. That's right. After having successfully wooed the Japanese, the Chinese, the Africans, the king of high-fashion arrived in India with his models and exclusive spring-summer fashions for 1986. At two glittering shows in Bombay and New Delhi, the master's leggy, six-foot models—16 from India and five from France—snaked and slithered in 300 outlandish creations that left the local glitterati bewildered. The silks and cottons were mostly Indian, and the designs had been adapted to suit the native style—tops to go with salwars and churidars and evening dresses with colossal bows. But of course, these were not the only designs the Monsieur had on India. He was scouting around for licensees who would manufacture clothes, and everything Cardin for selling in India, export to France and maybe to Russia too. Now that's called clever designing.

Cardin: devious designs

◆ Bombay's 100-piece orchestras are at last going to get a breather. Illaya Raaja, the renowned music director of Tamil films, has just bought himself a neat little machine. Instead of drumming on the mridangam or strumming on the veena, Raaja types out notations on the keyboard of a computer, which records these tunes and 'mixes' them precisely with the vocals. Raaja claims that he has already mastered the computer keys and the fruit of his chipping labours will soon be on sound-track: for K. Balachander's next film, Punnagai Mannan. But in the end it's the same old man versus machine syndrome with the musicians cursing the machine.

◆ One could have sworn it was Miss Violet Stoneham from 36 Chowringhee Lane. As she sat there, cross-legged and knitting, one almost expected her to call out to Sir Toby, her fat black cat. But of course, it wasn't Miss Stoneham. It was Madam Martha. Or, to make things sound more familiar, it was Waheeda Rehman complete with frock, chi-chi accent and horn-rimmed glasses. The role, Waheeda's TV debut, is of a rich, aging spinster in Sauda, based on Maupassant's famous short story, The Little Cask. The story is actually part of Shyam Benegal's Kathasagar, a TV anthology of classical short stories slated to go on the air by April. Waheeda accepted it because it is the main role and because the director is Benegal. Said the actress: "I have known Shyam for many years and this is the first time that he's directing me." Great talents, of course, are bound to produce classics.

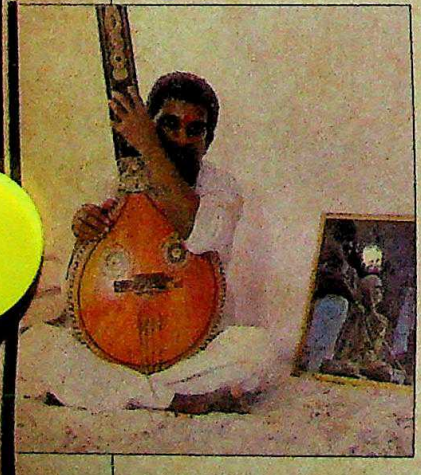
◆ As a 29-year-old veteran, who has covered the big events in Assam, Punjab and elsewhere, and penned a book (Assam: A Valley Divided), INDIA TODAY's Shekhar Gupta was a natural choice for the first Inlaks journalism award for his 'quest for professional excellence'. The award, which includes Rs 1 lakh for work abroad, was presented last fortnight by President Zail Singh. The Giani said he was glad the award included money or else "it would be like

LONGMAN

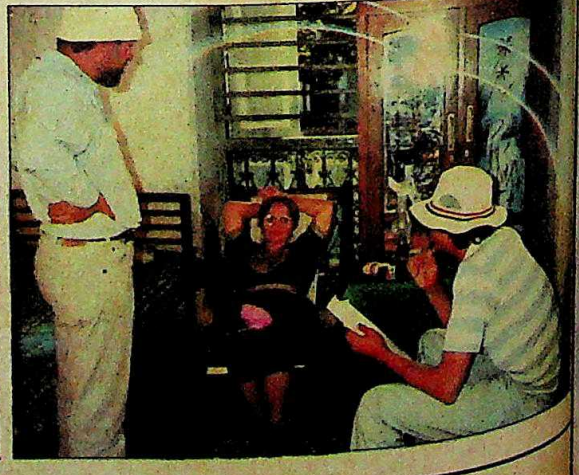
Gupta: receiving the award

a fragrant flower which does not bear fruit," and cautioned Gupta that "though the money is in foreign exchange you should not stay foreign." Says Gupta: "It is one of those pleasant things that come your way as you struggle from deadline to deadline."

—Compiled by MOHAMMED ASLAM



Raaja: computer chords



Rehman: prime time

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

12983

12982

12981

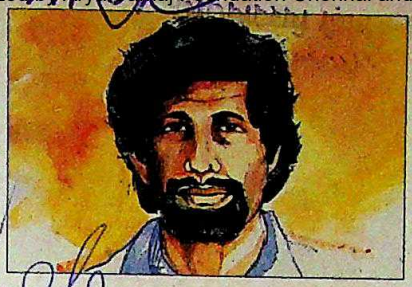
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Growing Malaise

Unobtrusively, alcoholism in India has suddenly acquired alarming overtones. Recent surveys have produced statistical findings that illustrate the dangerous inroads alcoholism has already made in Indian society and with what devastating effect.

COVER STORY 72



Nemesis in Goa

The massive manhunt launched for escaped criminal celebrity Charles Sobhraj ended in a Goa restaurant where Sobhraj was nabbed by a Bombay police posse. His interrogation, however, promises to reveal much of interest.

CURRENT EVENTS 29

Ribeiro's Challenge

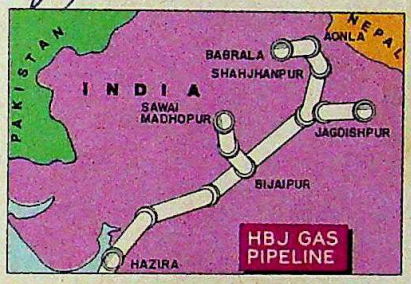
The Punjab police have become discredited and demoralised with Sikhs viewing the force as a symbol of state tyranny while non-Sikhs accuse it of inactivity. And an exclusive interview with police chief J.F. Ribeiro, who has to set matters right.

SPECIAL REPORT 68

A Lonely Journey

Sitarist Ravi Shankar features in the first of a new series of periodic photo essays in the magazine that will focus on the living legends of Indian music and art and allow them to describe their innermost beliefs and motivations.

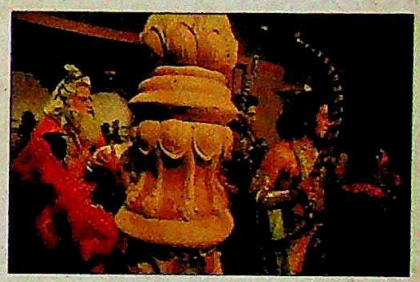
PHOTO ESSAY 86



The French Collection

The Government's decision to award the prestigious HBJ pipeline contract to the French-Japanese consortium led by Spie Capag ended months of cliffhanging suspense. But the delay in the decision could prove expensive.

BUSINESS 108



Electronic Epics

The filming of Indian epics as serials for Doordarshan has ushered the use of high-tech gadgetry into studios for the creation of special effects. The new technology is bringing about an electronic revolution on the small screen.

CINEMA 150

CONTENTS

COMMENT 9
CAPITALOOK 12
VOICES 18
INDIANOTES 23
CURRENT EVENTS
Charles Sobhraj: Nemesis in Goa 29
Uttar Pradesh: Welcome to Amethi 34
Andhra Pradesh: Governor Row 36
Congress(I): Conciliatory Moves 41
Punjab: Restoring the Balance 47
Mishra Commission: Serious Setbacks 53
Maharashtra: Eviction Problems 55
Raids: Exposing Bureaucracy 56
Tamil Nadu: Merry Go Round 59
Karnataka: Water War 60
Gujarat: Communal Cauldron 65
Madhya Pradesh: Legal Strictures 66
SPECIAL REPORT
Punjab Police: Ribeiro's Challenge 68
COVER STORY
Alcoholism: The Growing Malaise 72
STATENOTES 85
PHOTO ESSAY
Ravi Shankar: A Lonely Journey 86
GLOBE TROTTING
Indian Restaurants: Currying Favour 96
Bhopal Tragedy: In the Balance 100
TRADEWINDS 105
BUSINESS
Steel Authority of India: Dramatic Turnaround 106
HBJ Pipeline: The French Collection 108
South of Delhi: Sprawling Enclaves 110
Information Shops: Keyed Up 118
The Economy Monitor 123
The Markets: Sunny Days 124
LIVING
The Defence Services: The Day of the Soldier 129
SPECIAL FEATURE
Bastar: Manna from the Earth 130
EDUCATION
Kerala: Private Problems 136
SCIENCE
Space Programme: Sudden Snags 141
DEVELOPMENT
Indira Sarovar: Expensive Dithering 148
CINEMA
Technology: Electronic Epics 150
WILDLIFE
Tiger Sanctuaries: Conflict in the Wild 158
EYE-CATCHERS 164

Cover Photograph by RAGHU RAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Water Colours

When you have time to yourself in a Parryware bathroom, your energy perks up in a flash.

A quick shower and you feel as good as new despite the late hours you kept last night.

The tortuous twists that used to stand between you and a 24" waist suddenly seem like child's play.

And before you know it, you've forgotten the relaxed video-watching day you had planned and you're ready to host a party for 50.

Parryware bathrooms let you show your spirit.

They have a modernity to make you feel young.

A heritage to be proud of.

A finish that says you've got style.

Colours to complement your sophistication.

And a beauty that inspires you to get the very best out of your life.

Parryware
VITREOUS

Manufactured and marketed by EID Parry (India) Limited - Ceramics Division, Dare House, P B No 12, N.S.C. Bose Road, Madras 600 001

by Parryware
the pleasure of a beautiful bathroom

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

*Just in 12 Months

Leaders in 4 blade Premium Ceiling Fans

24 Carats

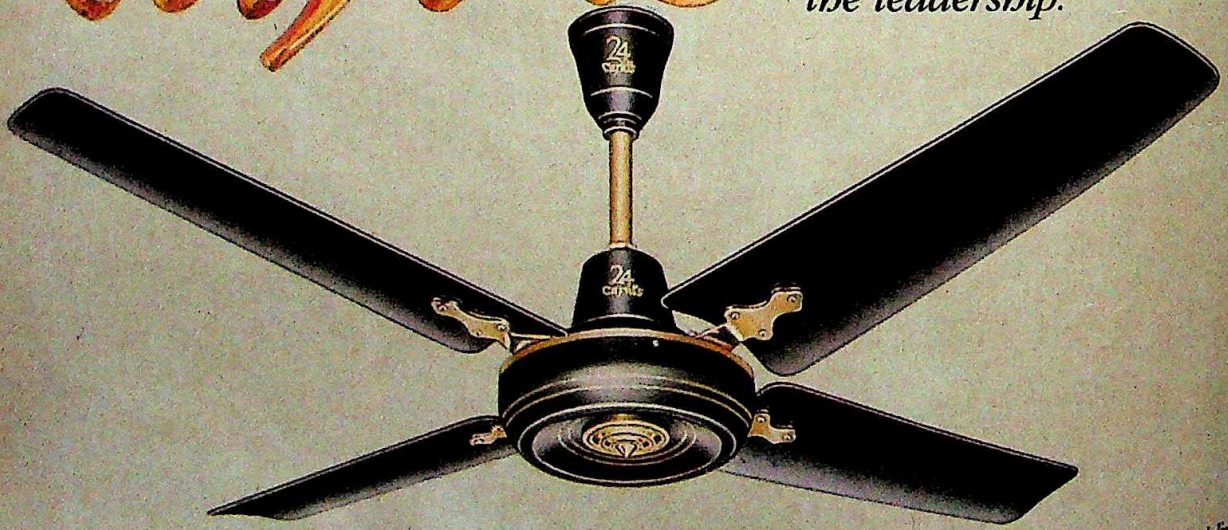
24 Carats ushered a new trend in stylish and hi-performance ceiling fans, catering to the needs of elite.

The trend setter has now become the largest selling and most desired fan in its class.

24 Carats guarantees 15% more air delivery, has Choke type regulator and has the widest choice in its class.

It does cost a little more... but then it offers a lot more!

And that's the key to the leadership.



Pavitra/DLH/101

Trend setters yesterday.
Leaders today.

Created & Perfected by POLAR
the SUPER fan

* Introduced in Sept. '84, has become the largest selling fan in its segment from Sept. '85 onwards.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

VOLUME XI NUMBER 8
FOR THE FORTNIGHT APRIL 16-30, 1986

EDITOR
AROON PURIE

MANAGING EDITOR — SUMAN DUBEY
SENIOR EDITOR — T.N. NINAN
PICTURE EDITOR — RAGHU RAI
FEATURES EDITOR — INDERJIT BADHWAR
ASSOCIATE EDITOR — DILIP BOBB
ASSISTANT EDITORS — PRABHU CHAWLA, AJAY KUMAR

CORRESPONDENTS

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT — RAMINDAR SINGH
NEW DELHI — SHEKHAR GUPTA, PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI, RAJ CHENGAPPA, MADHU JAIN
AHMEDABAD — RAMESH MENON
BANGALORE — SRINIVASA PRASAD
BOMBAY — M. RAHMAN, JAGANNATH DUBASHI
CALCUTTA — INDRANIL BANERJIE
CHANDIGARH — GOBIND THUKRAL
HYDERABAD — AMARNATH K. MENON
JAIPUR — SREEKANT KHANDEKAR
MADRAS — S.H. VENKATRAMANI
PATNA — FARZAND AHMED
TRIVANDRUM — SREEDHAR PILLAI

NEW YORK — MADHU TREHAN
LONDON — RAMESH CHANDRAN

NEWS COORDINATOR — RADHIKA ROY

CHIEF OF PRODUCTION — SHIRLEY JOSHUA, ANURADHA KAPOOR

COPY DESK — ANUPAMA GOPAL, SIMRAN BHARGAVA, ANN NINAN

CHIEF PHOTOGRAPHER — BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHER — PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CARTOONIST — AJIT NINAN MATHEW

CARTOGRAPHER — B.K. SHARMA

LAYOUT ARTISTS — LOKESH BHARGAVA, ANUP GUPTA, PEALI DUTTA GUPTA

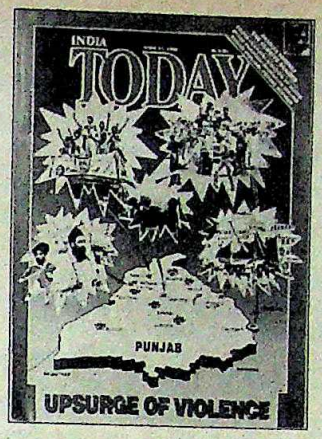
MARKETING DIRECTOR — MOHINI BHULLAR

ADVERTISING MANAGERS

BOMBAY — GEORGE SEBASTIAN
DELHI — NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA — MEERA PAUL
MADRAS — R. ANAND
BANGALORE — SRINIVASA RAGHAVAN

GENERAL MANAGER — CHANDER RAI

EDITORIAL OFFICE: LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD, F-40 CONNAUGHT PLACE NEW DELHI 110001. PHONE: 3315801-4, TELEX: 031-4245 INTO IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, NEW DELHI • SUBSCRIPTIONS: INDIA TODAY SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT, POST BOX 69, FARIDABAD HARYANA • TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA TODAY CIRCULATION MANAGER, F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE, MIDDLE CIRCLE NEW DELHI. PHONE: 3313076-8, TELEX: 31-4724 INTO IN • ADVERTISING OFFICES: 28 A&B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER II, 224-NARIMAN POINT, BOMBAY-400021. PHONES: 2026152, 2029326, 224-5615; TELEX: 011-5373 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BOMBAY • 8, CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001. PHONE: 312070, 312097, 312097. TELEX: 31-66518 THOM IN. CABLES: LIVMEDIA, NEW DELHI • PAGUN CHAMBERS, 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF ROAD, MADRAS-600105. PHONE: 477188,477770. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, MADRAS • 74/1ST. MARKS ROAD, BANGALORE-560001. PHONE: 568448, 579037, 579089. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BANGALORE • 12C/EVEREST 46C CHOWRINGEE ROAD, CALCUTTA-700016. PHONE: 445198, 447726. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, CALCUTTA •
COPYRIGHT 1986 LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. REPRODUCTION IN ANY MANNER PROHIBITED.
PUBLISHED BY CHANDER RAI FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD, NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT THOMSON PRESS INDIA LTD, FARIDABAD HARYANA • INDIA TODAY DOES NOT TAKE RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL •



CURBING VIOLENCE

Violence has raised its ugly head once again in Punjab ("Upsurge of Violence", April 15). Every act of brutality boomerangs into smaller gruesome incidents. Terrorism must be curbed firmly and with caution. History should not be allowed to be repeated in Punjab.
Bangalore — K. CHIDANAND KUMAR

■ The Punjab chief minister's statement that "they (Congress-I) are not doing what they should do..." is unfortunately true. The people showed that they were in favour of democracy and against violence by rejecting the United Akali Dal's proposal to boycott the assembly elections. All the opposition parties including the Congress(I) should cooperate with the Akali Dal as the battle in Punjab is between the terrorists and the people.
Gwalior — KAMLESH PRASAD

■ The situation is even more serious than it was pre-Operation Bluestar. The authorities must restore normalcy or innocent Punjabis will continue to be the victims of terrorist bullets.
Hoshiarpur — SANJAY CHOPRA

■ A lot has been said and very little done regarding the implementation of the Punjab accord. Regarding the transfer of Chandigarh, I fail to understand why the chief ministers of Punjab and Haryana can't amicably resolve the issue when Chandigarh is going to continue to remain a part of India.
Allahabad — BHARAT SINGH

■ The Government formed after the elections is for the Akali Dal, of the Akali Dal and by the Akali Dal. The Punjab accord has only served to divide the people, shattering the harmony in the state further. The interests of the peasants and workers seem to be of no concern to anyone.
Berhampur, Orissa — ABIR PADHY

■ Pakistan's reported involvement in extending material and moral support to the terrorists is their way of taking revenge on us for having created Bangladesh, a country born out of India's active support to the Mukti Bahini freedom fighters.
Calcutta — PRAHLAD GHOSH

■ The escalating violence has succeeded not only in tearing apart the secular fabric and igniting communal passion in the state but it has also unmasked the inefficiency of the system in maintaining law and order.
Saharanpur — NARENDRA M. PANT

■ It is unfortunate that festivals have become synonymous with violence. Holi and Baisakhi are traditionally festivals of joy in Punjab, but now there is no joy, only terror and trepidition.
Jamshedpur — B.N. BOSE

■ The cover story horrifies. The tragedy that has built up in Punjab should be controlled. The state Government and the Centre must take firm and immediate action.
Madras — K.V. RAJAGOPALAN

■ Ramakant Jalota of the Shiv Sena ("Fighting Back", April 15) is mistaken if he thinks "every Hindu" in Punjab is a member and "all Hindus" outside are sympathisers. The Jagdish Tangris and Jalotas speak the same language of bigotry and hatred as the Kahlons and Joginder Singhs. It is a sad comment on the state of affairs that they still enjoy a substantial support and are being allowed to fracture the homogeneous Punjabi society.
New Delhi — VIKRAM RAJ ANAND

■ Shiv Sena's present activities in Punjab will not do the nation any good. Influential Hindu leaders in the country should call upon members of their community to be more responsible and not fuel the communal fire. The terrorists should not be allowed to gain popular support on account of the Hindu communalists.
Pune — CHANDRASHEKHAR KULKARNI

PLAYING FAIR

The comment ("Critical Facts", April 15) expresses completely the predicament the prime minister is in. His petulance has sprung from the feeling that his euphoria has been rudely pricked by the fourth estate. He should actually think himself lucky that the press, taking into account his inexperience, spared him the sharp and continuous flak that his grandfather and mother had received.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Bombay K.N. NINAN

ARMS AND THE MAN

The report on the arms build-up ("Operation Disarm", April 15) portrays an alarming escalation because of the Government's indifference. This indifference combined with political patronage to armed goons and the fact of weapons whose sale is banned being cornered by people with influence has led to the present state. The so-called arms verification held recently was a wishy-washy exercise. A verification should be carried out, not by ADM's who can be pressurised, but by a panel of senior retired government officers who would have nothing to lose.

Lucknow LT. COL. S.K. MUSHRAN

WANING POPULARITY

MGR's inability to communicate with the people and the fact that the present Government has not delivered the goods ("The Fading Star", April 15) is the reason for the waning popularity of both the chief minister and his party. Contributing to this general loss of public faith in the AIADMK is the mud-slinging and petty squabbles that some key party members have been indulging in.

Madras FRANKLYN STANLEY

■ With the chief minister's charisma waning, one finds a metamorphosis—intellectual and emotional—in the ranks of his so far docile followers. People who have been trained to blind obedience, habituated to the art of hero worship, are now thinking. But MGR remains blissfully unaware of what is happening around him.

Madras U.S. SAHASRANAMAN

UNPRINCIPLED STAND

"Hour of Reckoning" (April 15) clearly exposes the dilemma facing the CPI. Russia, in its efforts to befriend India, has always supported the policies of the Government. Strange that a country with such a glorious socialist tradition should in its efforts to be friendly, compromise itself by being agreeable even to the party of the Government in power.

Agra S.C. MATHUR

INEVITABLE ESCAPE

Charles Sobhraj's great escape from Tihar jail was inevitable. What is surprising is that it took the master criminal almost a decade to escape from the custody of the inefficient, indifferent and mercenary jail staff.

Meerut ANURADHA TULKA

■ It's a matter of shame for the whole country that Sobhraj, an international criminal and jail breaker, should have run away from what is claimed to be India's most high-security prison, and that too with the collusion of jail officials. Everyone knew that Sobhraj was the king of Tihar with the jail staff eagerly dancing attendance on him.

Chandrapur PRAKASH PRABHAVAT

DIRTY GIMMICKS

"Ridake Row" (April 15) indicates to what extent some pharmaceutical companies would go to promote their products. Quoting vaguely from reputable journals like Lancet they plug their own product. Strangely, these quotes are always favourable whatever the product may be. Obviously an advertisment gimmick.

Ahmedabad KETAN YAGNIK

MAN-MADE BARRIERS

India could learn a lesson from Morocco ("The Sahara Mirage", April 15) and construct a similar wall to prevent the terrorists and their friends sneaking in and out of the country at will. We would need only about 25,000 km of wall, the same length as the wall in Morocco. Though that figure seems rather exagerated as the length of the entire country is just 3,000 km.

Muzaffarnagar BRAHMA PRAKASH SHARMA

THE MONEY GAME

Hats off to you for the expose on Doordarshan ("The Money Machine", April 15). Now we know why we are being dished out such rotten stuff as Ajube and Krishnavataar at prime time. It's rightly said that money is the root of all evil, for under-the-table dealings have swiftly followed the commercialisation of this media.

Panchkula, Haryana PANKAJ CHANDGOTHIA

HANDS OFF RELIGION

Muslims have suddenly become of interest (March 31). Where was your concern for the widows of the Moradabad riots? Liberalism must be kept from religion.

Aligarh JASRAT JAMAL

PURE AND HOLY

The Ganga at Haridwar ("Holy Dip", March 31) is cleaner than it was even six months ago. The city of the Kumbh Mela is also from the point of view of sanitation above complaint. Your sweeping generalisations to the contrary could scare away pilgrims. Please let them come and take a dip in peace.

Dehradun G. PATTANAIK

AN APOLOGY

"CFD Taking Liberties" (October 15, 1985) contains several inaccuracies concerning me, and mentions that I "was not booked by the police because, as an official discreetly remarked, 'he has been helpful to the investigation'." Unfortunately your reporter did not care to verify his information.

I am not a scientist working with the National Physical Laboratory. I have no contact with the police in any manner and there is no truth in the innuendo of my being "helpful to the investigation". From the middle of September to the third week of October last year, I was away from Delhi on tour, and there was no question of my being in contact with the police and helping them with the investigation. I am the general secretary of the India Radical Humanist Association and I joined the fact-finding team of the CFD in this capacity.

Your report leaves an unsavoury hint as if I was collaborating with the police in the investigation into the so-called seditious activities of the CFD team. Assuming that a police officer made the statement, journalistic ethics required that you do not publish anything that might defame a person or might create doubts about his integrity without first ascertaining the truth.

I have never met any police officer in connection with the CFD report or any other matter. Your reference to me is entirely untrue.

New Delhi SUNIL BHATTACHARYA

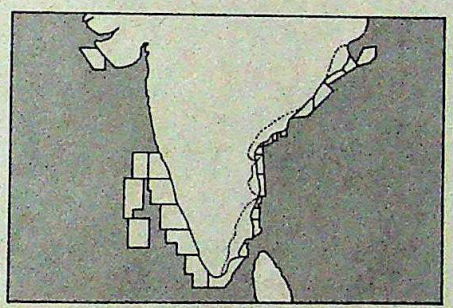
The error and damage caused to Mr Bhattacharya's reputation is regretted. —Editor

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

सत्यमेव जयते

The Government of India announces Third Round of bidding for the offshore exploration of oil and natural gas.



The Government of India invites bids from experienced international companies to explore for oil and natural gas in one or more of the 27 offshore blocks indicated in the map.

AVAILABILITY OF DATA

An information docket on each basin has been prepared. It will contain information on regional and local geology and the current status of exploratory activities in the blocks in each basin. Each docket is available at a cost of US $ 1,000/-.

Data packages containing seismic sections, gravity and magnetic anomaly maps, wireline logs, and structure contour maps etc., have been prepared for majority of the blocks and are available at a cost of US $ 10,000 each. For the rest, the entire available data is included in the information docket.

Companies may purchase either the information dockets or the data packages or both. There is no limit on the number of basins or blocks for which data may be purchased.

CONTRACT TERMS

The contract will be in the form of production sharing with

- The possibility of a seismic option
- No signature or production bonus
- No Royalty payment
- No minimum expenditure commitment
- No limit on the allocation of annual production of recovery of cost
- Profit oil share based on post tax rates of return or multiples of investment recovered
- No ring fencing of blocks for corporate tax purposes
- Suitable provisions for production and pricing of gas
- Corporate income tax at 50%
- Purchase of production for domestic consumption to be at international market price

Companies may bid for one or more blocks, singly or in association with other companies. Assignments would be permissible.

PRESENTATION

A presentation of the contract and existing petroleum legislations, applicable fiscal laws, basin review and other relevant information will be made in Delhi, London and Houston on May 7, 14 and 20 respectively.

Representatives of exploration companies are invited to attend. Companies interested in purchasing the data packages and in obtaining further information may write to:

Shri. D.N. Avasthi
General Manager
Oil & Natural Gas Commission
6th Floor, Kailash Building
26-Kasturba Gandhi Marg
New Delhi – 110 001.
INDIA
Telephone No. 3310477
Telex No. 3165,184 IN 3166, 262 IN

Bids should be submitted not later than November 30, 1986 addressed to:

The Joint Secretary (Exploration)
Ministry of Petroleum & Natural Gas
2nd Floor, Shastri Bhavan
Dr. Rajendra Prasad Marg
New Delhi – 110 001. INDIA

CLARION D 124

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

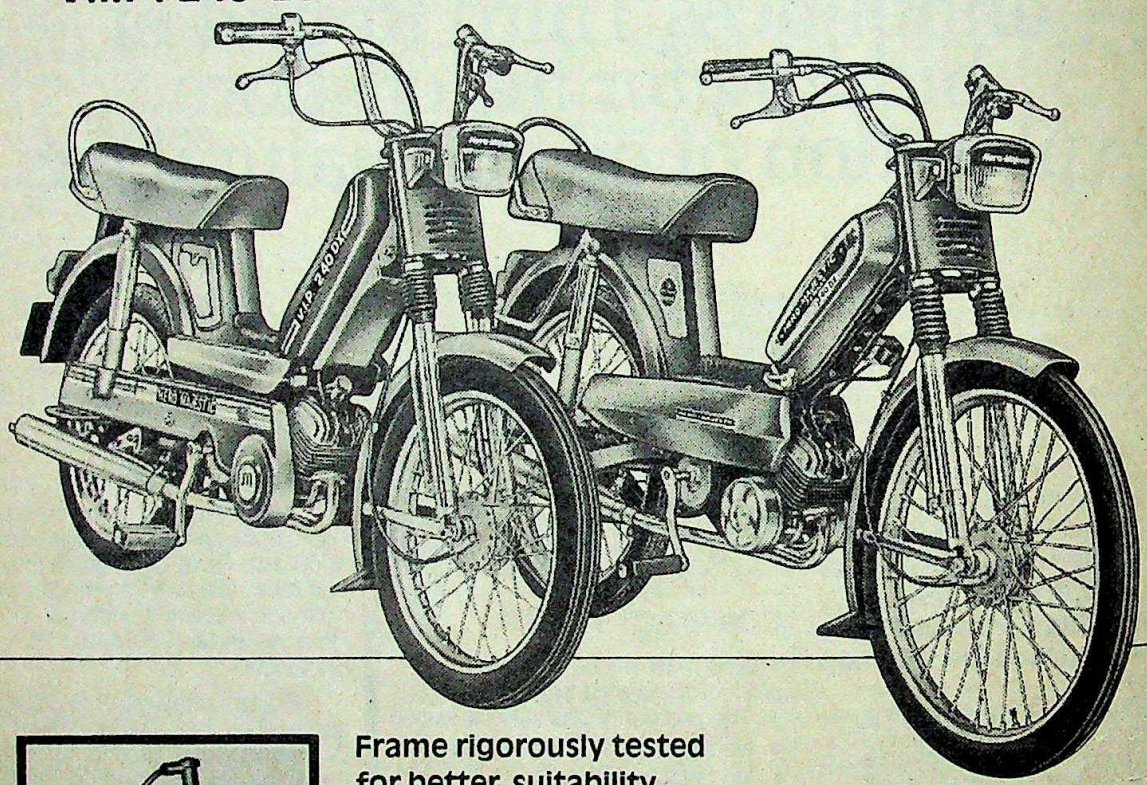
NOW PRESENTING...

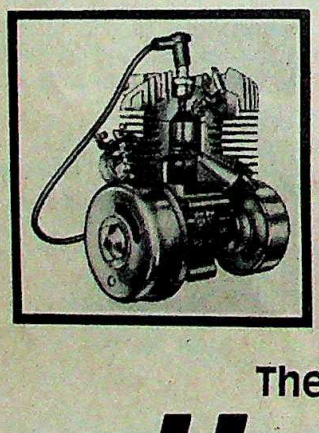
THE 240 DX SERIES WITH EXTRA POWER IN HERO MAJESTIC MOPEDS

A Tremendous Breakthrough in Moped Technology !

V.I.P. 240 DX

POPULAR 240 DX





Frame rigorously tested for better suitability on Indian roads.

SPECIAL FEATURES :

* PICK-UP (ACCELERATION 0-25 Mts)	: Under 6 seconds
* MAXIMUM SPEED	: 55 Kms. per Hour
* FUEL CONSUMPTION	: 70 Kms. per Ltr.
* BRAKE PERFORMANCE	: Improved by Leverage and Brake Lining.
* PAY LOAD	: 120 Kgs.

In wake of the immense popularity of Hero-Majestic "Popular" and "V.I.P.", we now proudly present the Hero-Majestic POPULAR 240 DX and V.I.P. 240 DX.

The extra Power Packed 2.4 BHP computer aided designed engines of these new models have been developed with technical know-how obtained from one of the World's leading manufacturers of two-wheelers for better pick-up, faster acceleration.

And the efficient fuel consumption will not pick holes in your pocket. Come, ride the New Year Specials and storm the roads. Get there in time for work, in tune for fun. The safe, stylish, sophisticated riding experience.

The Moped with 2.4 B.H.P. Engine

Hero-Majestic

Great in Style. Strong in Performance. Low in Price.

MAJESTIC AUTO LIMITED, C-48, Focal Point, Ludhiana-141 010

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

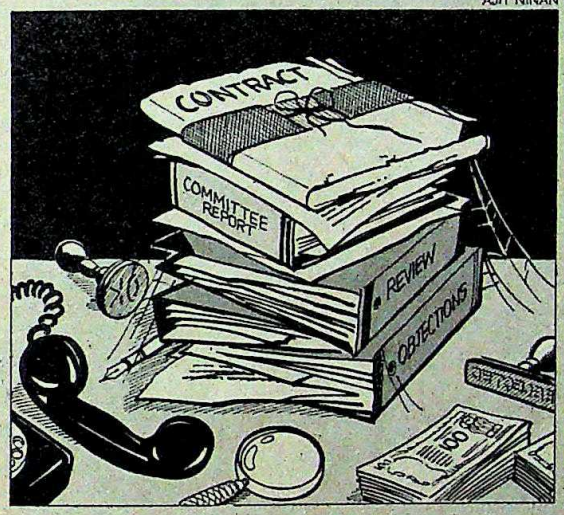
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Controversial Contracts

THE FURORE before the awarding of the Hazira-Bijaypur-Jagishpur (HBJ) pipeline was only in part due to the fact that Snamprogetti, the company which launched—unsuccessfully—an unprecedented public and private campaign to win the contract, was Italian and has been doing unusually well in India. It was due far, far more to the widespread feeling in the bureaucracy and outside that a foreign company had been able to kick up dust and apparently influence the Government to change is established procedures for the awarding of contracts.

If anything, the HBJ contract, which was won by the French Spie Capag-led consortium last fortnight, shows up the absurdly inept way in which government contracts are negotiated and awarded, and the crippling delays that result. As a report elsewhere in this issue shows, the HBJ contract changed shape and went through several hands before landing in the lap of the party that was first recommended for it anyway. Caution is admirable, but it can be carried to counter-productive lengths if the original procedures aren't properly thought out or if decision-making is complicated by extraneous factors. This isn't a question of projects slipping behind for administrative or technical reasons; it's a problem of conception, of having a clear idea of what is wanted, finding the best people to assess the offers, and making a speedy, clean, unambiguous decision.

AJIT NINAN



Unfortunately, the HBJ contract is merely the latest example of how not to do business. The last time Snamprogetti was controversial was in 1980, when the Government overruled a decision taken by the Janata government in 1979 to award a prestigious fertiliser plant contract to an American company, and gave it instead to a Danish firm owned partly by Snamprogetti—after the American firm had been asked to revalidate its bid an incredible 14 times in less than two years. That reversal was a unique one, but the delays associated with it, setting back the erection of large fertiliser projects, are a far more common problem.

Take for example the 155 mm field gun, the contract for which was finally awarded to the Swedish Bofors company last month. The first moves to acquire such a weapon were taken in the late '70s and what with field trials, offers, pressures, pulls and counter-pulls, a process that ought to have taken no more than one year dragged on for seven. The Harrier acquisition programme, which has come in two instalments, has similarly seen delays and cost escalations. The acquisition of Westland helicopters announced earlier in the year, similarly, has been a tortuous process.

If defence contracts are an area of perennial controversy, the situation is no better in purely industrial projects. Roughly four years ago, a major contract for manufacturing electronic telephone exchange equipment was given to a French firm without others being allowed to bid; then the same firm was given a repeat order after the Government declared that other bidders were not qualified under the tender—this after the Government had negotiated with them on their tender documents, asked them to revalidate their bids for a further period of time, and sought more information on the basis of their bids. In yet another celebrated case, the Government short-circuited the decision-making process on a massive contract for a three-million tonne steel plant in Orissa, only to find the British company that got the contract asking for 40 per cent more money during detailed negotiations. The deal was cancelled, and the project has still to see the light of day after four years. This list can go on, with the instance of another British company being asked to set up a super-thermal power station in India without the usual tenders being floated. This is now the only super-thermal power project that is in the doldrums—because the British firm did not have the experience and ability required to see the project through.

Prime Miniser Rajiv Gandhi has claimed that the delay in awarding the HBJ contract has helped the country get lower quotations and save money. That may well be true, but it does no credit to the country if the Government's decision-making process takes longer than the actual project implementation. The HBJ tender was floated two years before a decision was taken, and less than a year remains for the first phase of the pipeline to be ready. There is also perpetual going back and forth on the merits and demerits of turnkey contracts (where Indian involvement is minimal) and piecemeal deals (where Indian companies learn on the job by being responsible for the project). If one argument is found acceptable in one case, a second case finds the second argument being used, and the ordinary citizen should be forgiven for assuming that which argument wins out in which case depends on the strength of the lobbying.

There are few countries that sign up as many major contracts as India does, but there can be none other which has an even remotely comparable record of dilly-dallying and flip-flopping on contracts. And there comes a time when bidders tailor themselves to the system, providing for the delays and last-minute bargaining while submitting their original bids. This does no one any good, and the Government should review its past record on major contracts and determine a new procedure that is sensible, business-like and worthy of a government that claims to work faster and cleaner.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KEC turns an eternal truth on its head.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Strange as it may sound, our success at KEC and the total confidence of our customers derive in some measure from our response to crises, troubles and failures.

If a critical motor stops, very likely a great many operations in a factory or a mine may come to a grinding halt. KEC's first concern is not to apportion blame but to put our motors or drives back in shape and to keep our customer's set-up running.

Take the case of Bokaro Steel's Mudgun drive for instance.

In 1977, Heavy Engineering Corporation obtained our 50 kW flame-proof motors for the Bokaro Steel Plant through our agents. It was a routine order. We manufactured, tested and then delivered the motors. We had done our duty. End of the matter, yes? Hardly. It was just the beginning of a long and fruitful relationship with Bokaro.

Some time later, a KEC technical team happened to be at Bokaro, not giving a sales pitch but brain storming with Bokaro engineers on "the selection of motors for specific applications."

That started a chain reaction. When the KEC branch manager visited Bokaro the engineers there discussed the suitability of the motors they had ordered for mudgun operations. Now that the job and the operating environment had become clear, the KEC branch manager consulted the technical staff at the head office and told the unvarnished truth. The motors supplied were unsuitable. A different kind of motor which would take three to four months to design was required to meet the specific need. Would the Bokaro people still be interested? Yes, they were. They had complete faith in KEC's designing and manufacturing capability.

But events in the meantime had already overtaken matters. True to the KEC prognosis, the motors failed under actual operating conditions. Some of our best design engineers were immediately sent to Bokaro for an on-the-spot study. What they found was critical.

During the manufacture of steel, molten metal flows out through the base of the blast furnace. Once the metal is drained, the outlet is sealed with wet clay fired from a distance by a mudgun. On contact with the hot walls of the blast furnace, the wet clay hardens and forms a strong and secure lid. After tapping out the contents, the furnace is charged again. Imagine the consequences of a faultily functioning mudgun drive or a defective clay lid: liquid metal at a temperature of about 1400 C would flow out, pose a fire hazard and endanger innumerable lives.

The KEC team returned home fully seized of the problem and in close consultation with HEC, determined new specifications for a 50 kW, 415 Volts frame motor. A little later KEC got the final O.K. from HEC, with minor modifications in the mounting assembly.

Soon after, the new KEC motor was already operating. After slight adjustments in cabling, the motor has been functioning faultlessly. What the whole episode proved once again was that there's more to the specifications of a motor than just the rating.

Frankly, while a lot of people think we did something special for Bokaro, we did nothing of the sort. After all we take great pride in going beyond, way beyond the call of duty.

Kirloskar

Converting energy to serve the millions

KIRLOSKAR ELECTRIC CO. LTD

P.B. 5555, Malleswaram West, Bangalore 560 055.

Thanks to our sophisticated technological expertise, our capacity to take on new challenges and the fact that we never abandon our customers or products, KEC is today one of the leading manufacturers of AC, DC machines in South-East Asia, making over 85,000 motors and generators a year. KEC also produces electronic equipment and systems, AC and DC controls, geared motors, welding equipment and transformers. Our machines are in use in almost every conceivable industry. In India and in over 60 countries of the world including the U.K., U.S.A. and Canada.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Lobbying on

● The loss of the prestigious HBJ pipeline contract has not deterred high profile lobbyist Ottavio Quattrocchi from looking after the interests of other Italian companies based in India. A day after he lost the pipeline battle he was back in action, though in a relatively minor fashion. Accompanied by the regional manager of the Italian airline, Alitalia, Quattrocchi walked into the office of Minister of State for Civil Aviation Jagdish Tytler whom he knows personally. The Italian airline had earlier failed in convincing the International Airport Authority of India (IAAI) that it needed three counters at the new Indira Gandhi Airport in Delhi for its operations as against the two allotted to it. Tytler obliged him by instructing the IAAI to look into it favourably. But it was small relief for someone who'd lost a project worth over Rs 1,000 crore.

Calling it Quits

● Following in the footsteps of G. Parthasarathi, former Research & Analysis Wing (RAW) chief Ram Nath Kao has also sent in his resignation from the Policy Planning Committee. Though Parthasarathi was persuaded to take back his resignation, sources say that Kao's was accepted when it was clear that he was adamant about his decision. The reasons for Kao's quitting are the same as those given in Parthasarathi's resignation letter—lack of any worthwhile work for the Policy Planning Committee.

According to the sources, Kao handed in his resignation about the same time as Parthasarathi but was persuaded by the prime minister to hold out for a month. He agreed, but when things didn't improve, sent in his letter on March 20. The Government has now decided to accept his resignation.

To Sir With Love

● How does one address a retired armed forces officer reemployed in a senior civilian or diplomatic job? The officers themselves prefer to be addressed by their rank but the Government seems to think that having retired they become plain misters.

One such person is Delhi's Lt Governor, Air Vice Marshal H.L. Kapur. He has made it clear that he prefers to be addressed by his rank, but most official letters that come to the Raj Bhawan are for Mr Kapur. There are many former brass in Kapur's category who share his views. Former army chief K.V. Krishna Rao is a governor, and two former air chiefs are ambassadors: I.H. Latif in France and Dilbagh Singh in Brazil. The grand old man of the Indian Air Force, Air Chief Marshal Arjun Singh, took a firm stand on this when he was ambassador some years ago. When he was 'mistered' in official correspondence, he insisted he had spent a lifetime earning his rank and no mere babu could deprive him of it.

More recently, when Kapur was a member of the Rajya Sabha, prior to his elevation as lieutenant governor, he gently tried to make the same point but with no effect. Since only a court martial can strip armed forces officers of their rank, how can mere bureaucratic procedure do this, they ask. But the bureaucrats are adamant and the controversy is still being hotly debated.

Security Bungle

● Less than two years ago, someone bungled in allowing Beant Singh and Satwant Singh to position themselves in a manner that enabled them to assassinate a prime minister. Incredibly enough, a similar bungle was repeated recently when a couple of soldiers who had deserted their army stations in the aftermath of Operation Bluestar, and been rehabilitated in the Defence Security Corps following the Punjab accord, were posted as security guards at one of the gates in South Block, which houses the offices of the prime minister as well as the defence and external affairs ministries.

The two guards were at their stations for a few days when someone woke up, began asking questions and found out what had happened. The guards were quickly changed. But how were they allowed to be in South Block in the first place?

The answer to that can only be that the Government's left hand does not know what its right hand is doing. The defence authorities had been opposed to reinstating the deserters, but the prime minister committed himself to this as a part of the Punjab accord last July. Rather than full reinstatement, the defence authorities decided to rehabilitate some of the deserters in the defence security corps, which usually comprises retired jawans who are re-employed to do guard duties. The corps guards all manner of offices and defence installations, including—it now turns out—parts of South Block. And the government babu who assigned members of the corps to understaffed stations either did not have the slightest inkling that they were deserters, or did not give it a second thought.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Are you ready for the best in life?

There's only one thing that stands between a man and the best things in life. A decision. A sharp-edged decision in favour of excellence. Even in the choice of a blade.

Savage. A classic of Wilkinson technology. A blade like no other. The only one with the unique Gothic Arch edge. Specially triple coated with polytetrafluoroethylene and chromium and ceramic. For the smoothest, most pleasurable shaves. Day after day after day.

Get the Savage experience.
It's ready. When you are.

Wilkch India Ltd.

OBM 1199 R

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. [illegible] Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

One jaw opened... one jaw dropped.
And a smart li'l camera went click!
If you've been scared of photography, afraid you'd never be able to get your teeth into the subject, so to speak...
here's a camera to shoot your fears down.
One by one.
With Hot Shot there's nothing to frighten you away.
No focussing. No checking exposures.
No aperture setting. No problems.
Choose from the widest range of cameras. In the popular 110 format.
Or in the 35mm format with the exclusive Universal Focus System.
Get just what you want.
A camera with a flash. Or a tele lens.
Or automatic features.
With a Hot Shot you can see that it's easy to have fun.
That's why it's difficult to say whether the little red beetle was baring its teeth at the hunter.
Or doing what is irresistible with a camera like Hot Shot... just trying to say cheese!

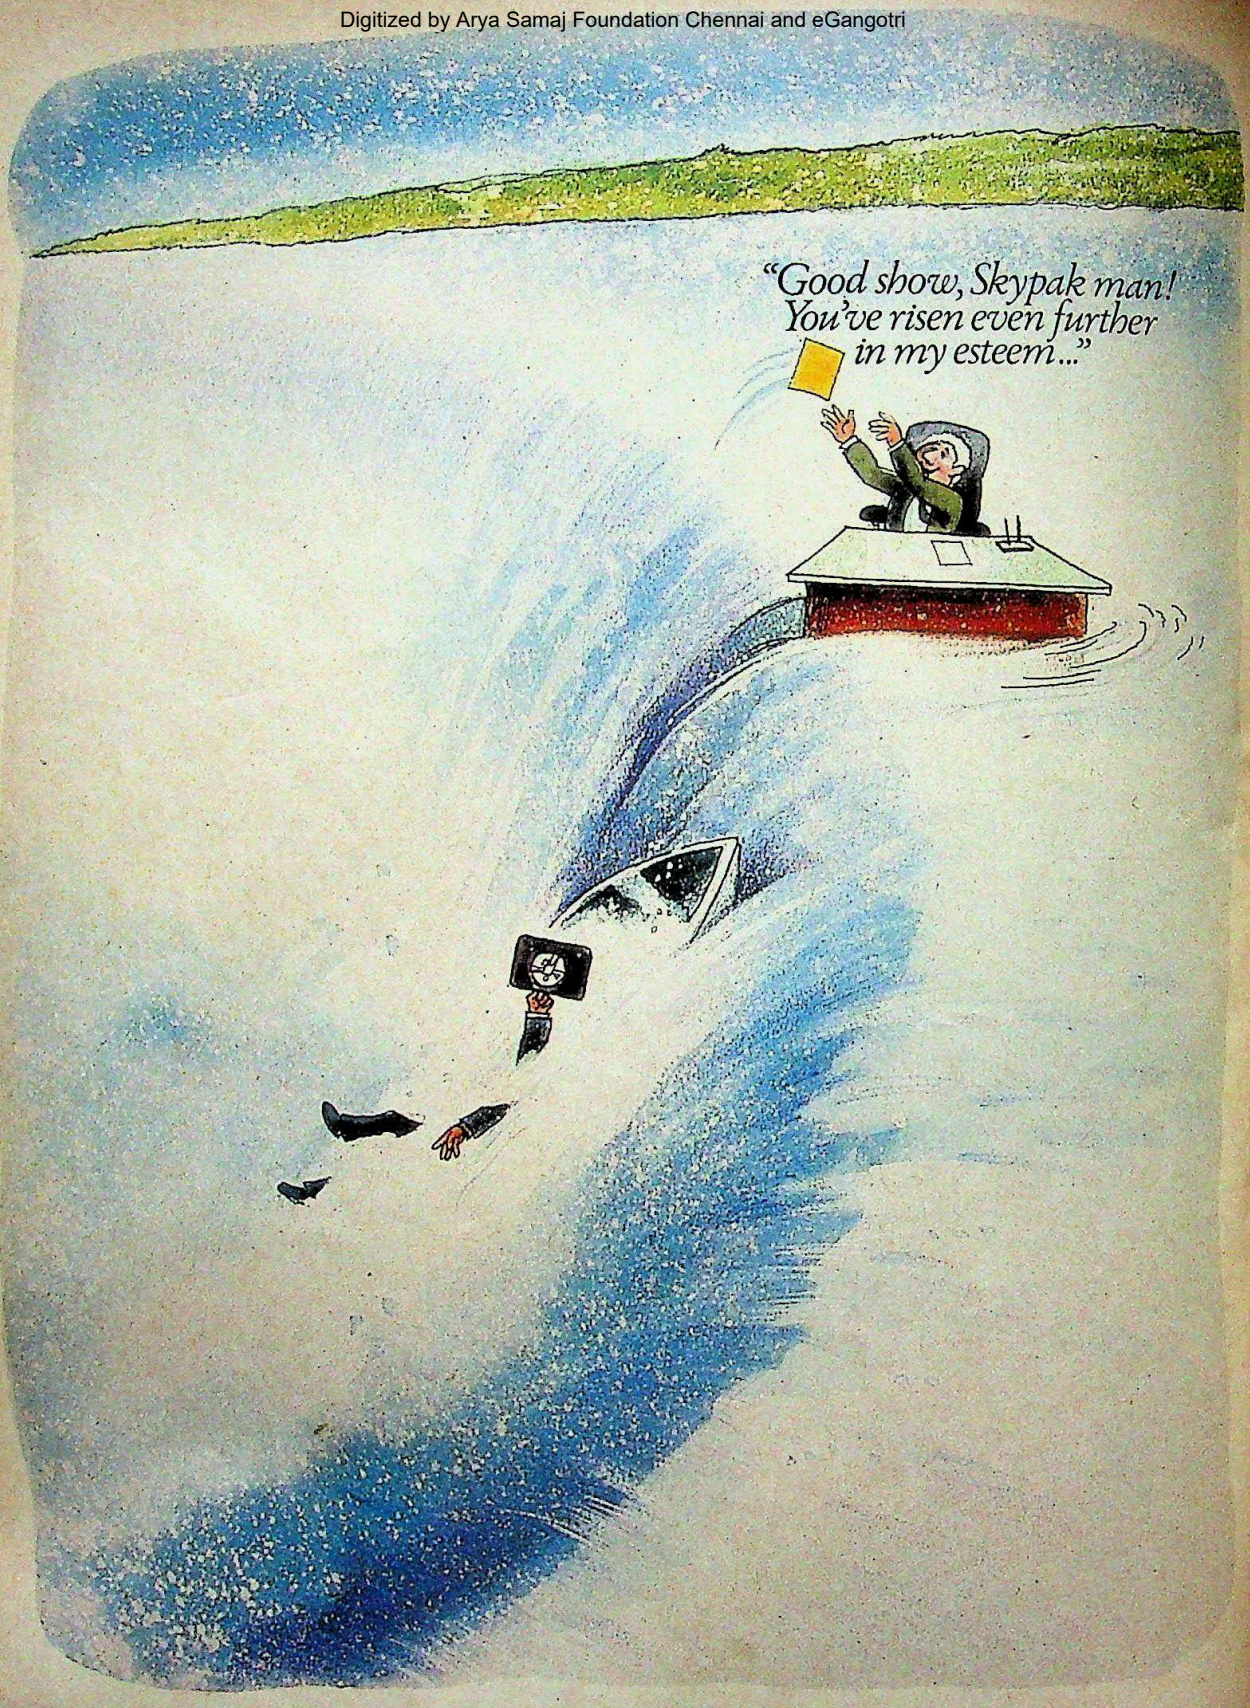
HOT SHOT
Just aim. And shoot!

PHOTOPHONE INDUSTRIES INDIA LIMITED
7, Saki Vihar Road, Bombay 400 072

CC-0. Omkar Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



We'll deliver. Wherever on earth. SKYPAK The worldwide couriers.

Avenues SC 23366

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Another enterprise of Empire Industries

Empire Dyeing

We process 3,00,000 metres of fabric everyday, adding quality and colour to the way you live.

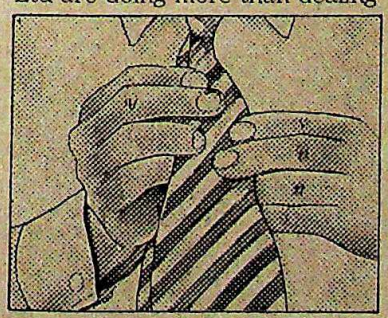
As the biggest and most modern textile processing house in India, Empire Dyeing's activities focus on dyeing and mercerising polyester and cotton fabrics—fabrics that have now become famous in India and throughout the world for their quality.

Keeping in tune with textile trends to bring you the latest in dressing.

Of course Empire Industries Ltd are doing more than dealing in textiles. Their manufacturing and marketing operations cover the additional areas of Medium and Heavy Crane manufacturing, Machine Tools, Instruments and Instrumentation Systems, Finance and Glassware.

The other enterprises of Empire Industries Limited:

Garlick Engineering, Empire Machine Tools, Empire Instrumentation, Empire Finance and Vitrum Glass.



EMPIRE DYEING

AN ENTERPRISE OF

EMPIRE INDUSTRIES LIMITED

Empire Industries Ltd
414, Senapati Bapat Marg,
Lower Parel, Bombay-400 013.
Phone: 4920003/492036
Cable: EMPIREDYE
Telex: 011-73888 (EMPR IN)

Where Excellence Leads

6371

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
INTERNATIONAL EDITION

GIFT INDIA TO SOMEONE YOU CARE FOR...

GIFT FOR
ADDRESS
CITY CODE
COUNTRY

Please send one year's subscription of INDIA TODAY, International Edition and my gift card to the person named above. Enclosed is my cheque/DD/M.O. for Rs payable to Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.

MY NAME
ADDRESS
CITY CODE
COUNTRY

Send this advertisement and payment to:
Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.
Subscription Department
P.B. No. 69, Delhi-Mathura Road
Faridabad 121007, Haryana, India

Annual Airmail Subscription Rates

Rs 185
BANGLADESH
BHUTAN
NEPAL

Rs 345
AFGHANISTAN
BURMA
MALDIVES
PAKISTAN
SRI LANKA

Rs 385
BAHRAIN
CHINA
HONG KONG
INDONESIA
IRAN
IRAQ
KUWAIT
MALAYSIA
OMAN
PHILIPPINES
QATAR
SAUDI ARABIA
SINGAPORE
TAIWAN
THAILAND
U.A.E.
YEMEN

Rs 485
AUSTRALIA
EGYPT
ETHIOPIA
FRANCE
W. GERMANY
GHANA
GIBRALTAR
IRELAND
JAPAN
KENYA
SOUTH KOREA
LEBANON
LIBYA
MALAWI
MALTA
MAURITIUS
SEYCHELLES
SIERRA LEONE
SOUTH AFRICA
SUDAN
SWITZERLAND
SYRIA
TANZANIA
U.K.
ZAMBIA
ZIMBABWE

Rs 585
BAHAMAS
BARBADOS
BRAZIL
CANADA
FIJI
GUYANA
HAWAII
JAMAICA
NEW ZEALAND
PANAMA
U.S.A.

NH 943

Patriot

● I get the feeling that he (Rajiv Gandhi) is very vulnerable to the pressures that act on him at a given time and that makes him swing and oscillate from one extreme to another. He pursues a certain policy and is attacked for being pro-rich, so if the image of being pro-rich has to be erased, he agrees to undertake raids.

■ L.K. ADVANI in The Sunday Telegraph

● A baba-log Government—that's how it is seen in the bazaar these days. It's the ayahs' expression for the molly-coddled kids of the upper classes. They are seen as playing games, playing government, and for the fun of it.

■ ROMESH THAPAR in Economic and Political Weekly

● If American help to Pakistan has not made Pakistan democratic, Russian aid to India will not make us communist either. ■ V.P. SINGH in Gentleman

● I am lifting martial law to give democracy a chance. But democracy must come back charting the course I have laid down for it.

■ GENERAL ZIA-UL-HAQ in Sunday

● Punjab is burning and all that the Centre is doing is setting up commissions on waters and boundary issues. The Punjab issue cannot be settled through commissions. ■ BABA AMTE quoted in The Tribune

● If I could, I would throw Mr (Jyoti) Basu so far into the Bay of Bengal that he would not be able to swim back to the shore again.

■ A.B.A. GHANI KHAN CHOUDHURY in The Telegraph

● I am the most loyalist partyman in the country. So the question (of starting a new party or leaving the Congress) doesn't arise.

■ GUNDU RAO in The Sunday Observer

● In your field of journalism, facts are sacred and opinions free. It is the same with diplomacy; only journalists are paid to write while a diplomat is paid to keep quiet.

■ A.P. VENKATESWARAN, foreign secretary designate in The Telegraph Magazine

● We don't look to the rest of India, which is intellectually inferior. Our literature is related to French literature, not Hindi, I don't even read Hindi. Calcutta is like Paris. ■ AVEEK SARKAR in Far Eastern Economic Review

● It was only after I was elected MP, I got back in touch with reality. Otherwise we stars do get lost in the world of make-believe.

■ SUNIL DUTT in Stardust

● Wet scenes are okay. I am fully clothed. You have to establish passion in some way. I can't do all my films in a burqa. ■ FARHA in Filmfare

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

SPARTEK FLOORS: Elegant, tough, easy to maintain

SPARTEK FLOOR TILES are now made in India, in collaboration with CeramicUS of USA...leaders in ultra-modern Ceramic technology. Technology that offers you unlimited decor options - in terms of colours, designs, textures, sizes and shapes - in a flooring material that has the most advanced physical anti-wear properties till date. Including the incredible advantage of being so easy to lay that it's ready for live-in use in a matter of 48 hours.

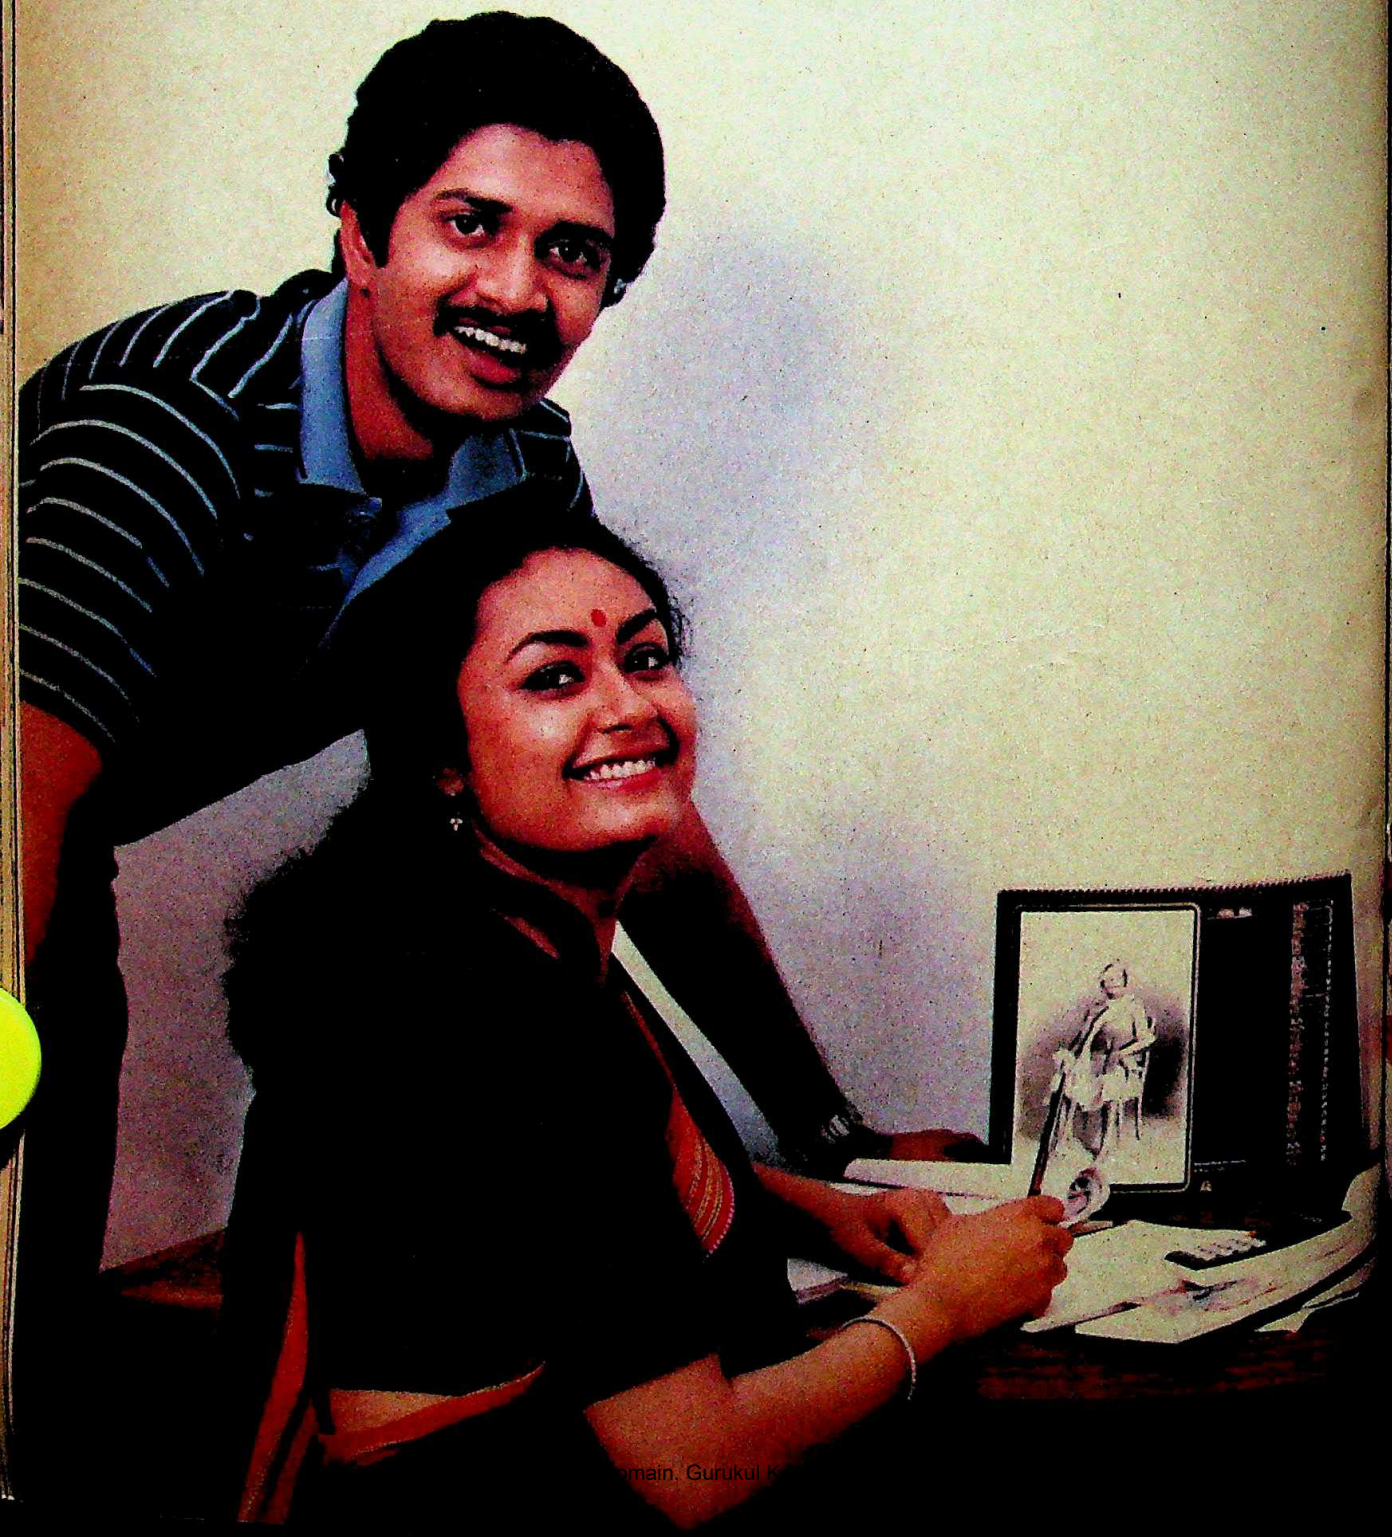
For more details write to:
SPARTEK CERAMICS INDIA LIMITED
52 CHAMIERS ROAD,
MADRAS 600 028.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

SPARTEK
Now made in India in collaboration with CeramicUS.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"We started from scratch and we've come a long way. Budgeting. Planning. Thinking ahead."



...main. Gurukul K...

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

But then, have you thought of insurance? National Insurance.

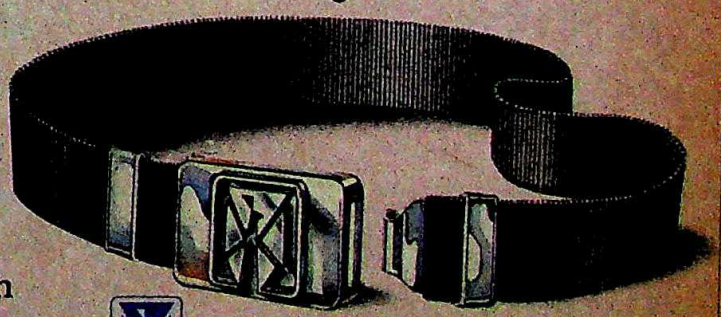
You did it the hard way. Keeping tight control over your purse and your impulses. Building up from scratch. Paying the instalments for your fridge and the TV. You planned everything to the last detail. And it paid. That's why we were wondering whether you've considered protecting your possessions. Against fire, burglary, riot, malicious damage and many other perils you read about everyday. Because National can give you a cover for just about everything.

National Insurance. With schemes just right for people like you. To protect you. Even in case of accidents or illness, National will take care of you, financially, within the limits of the policy.

You may call this overall protection— "Safety Belt". Your safety belt. For details on our following insurance schemes, you may contact our nearest office.

- Personal Accident Scheme
- Householders Insurance Policy
- All Risks Insurance
- Baggage Insurance
- Hospitalisation & Domiciliary Hospitalisation Insurance
- Public Liability
- TV Insurance
- Video Insurance
- Pedal Cycle Insurance
- Golfers' Insurance

Fasten your National Safety Belt



National Insurance Company Ltd

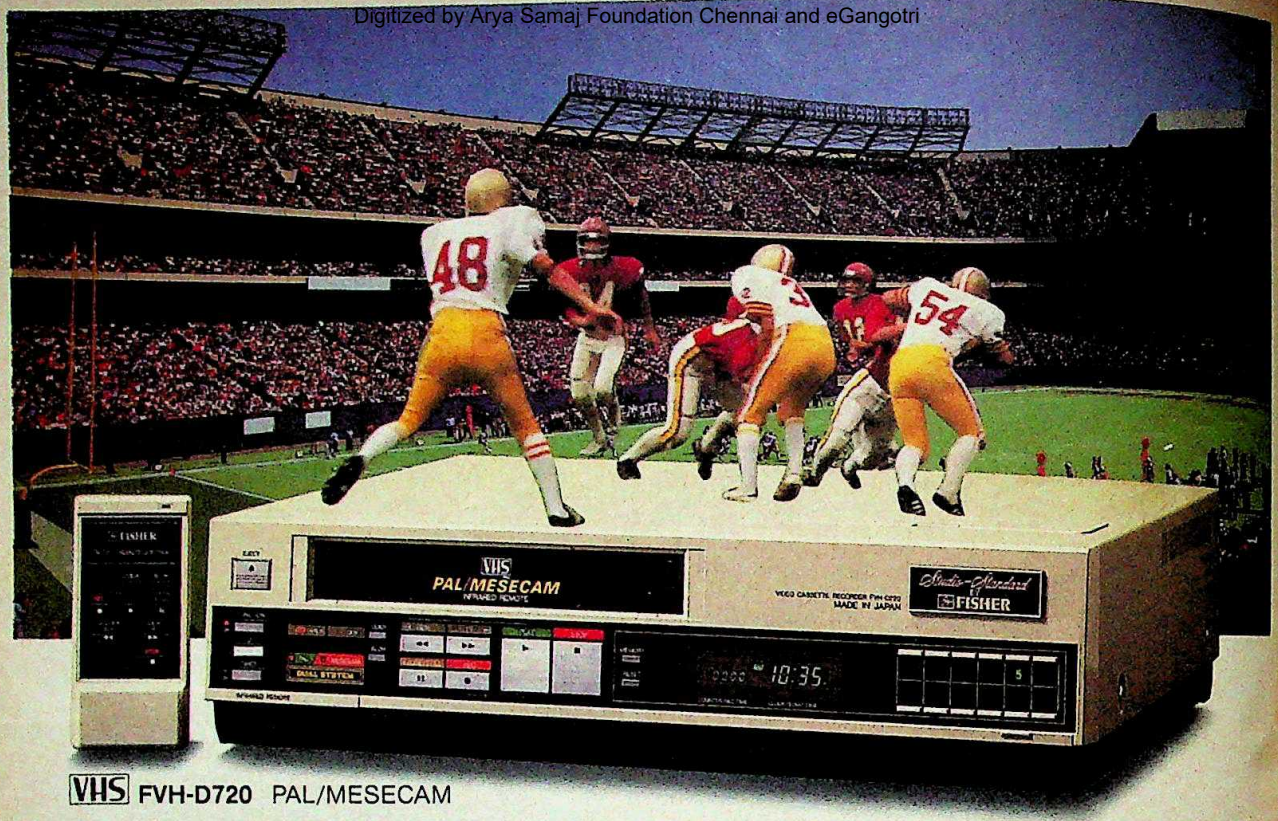
(A Subsidiary of General Insurance Corporation of India)

Keep your world safe

CC-0. Mumukshu Bhawan Varanasi Collection. Digitized by eGangotri

NIC-6204

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

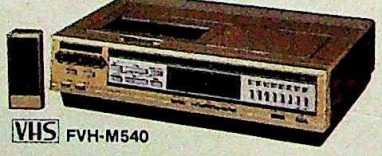


VHS FVH-D720 PAL/MESECAM

Fisher – It's a Great New World.

CFM 2610SR

VHS FVH-P722V



VHS FVH-M540

CFA 1915V

CFM 2610SR
See it bigger and hear it better with a 26-inch, 16-system TV with stereo sound and a 27-function infrared remote control.

CFA 1915V
A Flat Square picture Tube (FST) gives you more picture to see on this 19" colour TV with add-on type TELETEXT decoder.

FVH-P722V
Enjoy the finest in video entertainment with this PAL system VCR featuring a 14-day/9-event programmable timer and 5 special playback modes.

FVH-M540
A VCR that puts the world at your fingertips with 4-system recording and playback and 11-function infrared remote control.

1937—the year a new world of entertainment was born with Avery Fisher's invention of the world's first high-fidelity audio system. Fisher has been at the head of the pack ever since. How? With high-quality products especially suited for the new "Audio-Video Age." Products like the FVH-D720, a PAL/MESECAM VHS video cassette recorder with everything the most discriminating audio-and-videophile expects. Interference-free playback in regular as well as 6 special playback modes. An 11-function wireless remote control for relaxing entertainment control. Plus Fisher dependability. All in one sleek package. With Fisher, it really is a Great New World!

FISHER
The first name in high fidelity

BPL-INDIA

Fisher products can be serviced at these local authorised service centres:
- Bangalore: Phone 220266 Telex: 0845-511
- Calcutta: Phone: 431916 Telex: 021-2390
- Bombay: Phone: 4940384 Telex: 011-73789
- Cochin: Phone: 39422
- New Delhi: Phone: 6411037 Telex: 031-2692
- Madras: Phone: 74810 Telex: 041-6507
- Palghat: Phone: 3241 Telex: 0852-213

Fisher products are available wherever you go:
Saudi Arabia: Al-Oumi Trading Centre, P.O. Box 2211, Al-Khobar TEL 8646801
Kuwait: Radio House Co., P.O. Box 1001, Safat Kuwait TEL 419123
U.A.E.: Paragon International Co., Dubai, P.O. Box 8771 TEL 231566, Abu Dhabi, P.O. Box 555 TEL 213577
Bahrain: Zayani Electronics, P.O. Box 1395, Manama TEL 259672
Qatar: Hamad & Mohamed Al-Futtaim, P.O. Box 1427, Doha TEL 416147
Sultanate of Oman: Oman Marketing & Services Co., P.O. Box 5734, Ruwi TEL 701160
Lebanon: Hiba Trading Co., P.O. Box 7859, Beirut TEL 353539
Egypt: Futainasr Trading Co., S.A.E., P.O. Box 59,5 Zaki St., Cairo TEL 748488
Yemen Arab Republic: Salem Mohamed Shammakh, P.O. Box 3372, Hodeidah TEL 76173
Sri Lanka: St. Anthony's Consolidated Ltd., 516, Sri Sangaraja Mawatha, P.O. Box 951, Colombo 10 TEL 24261
Singapore: Fisher Electronics (Singapore) Pte., Ltd., Inchcape House, Singapore 0511 TEL 4751894
Hong Kong: Fisher Electric (Hong Kong) Ltd., Wing On House, Central, Hong Kong TEL 5-266565
U.S.A.: Fisher Corporation, Chatsworth, Calif. TEL 213-873-4204
Canada: Fisher Canada, Toronto, Ontario TEL (0923) 31974
U.K.: Fisher Sales (U.K.), Watford Hertfordshire TEL 416-421-8344
West Germany: "Fisher Hi-Fi" Europa Vertriebs-GmbH, München TEL (089) 4145-0

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DOG'S DAY

■ A dog is a man's best friend. So it was not surprising that when the pet dog of Dr D.S. Malhotra of Bhopal died recently, Dr Malhotra was sufficiently moved to decree a solemn funeral. The more so when he suspected that his darling dog, the light of his life, had been poisoned by someone who turned green with envy whenever he saw the affectionate animal bathing Dr Malhotra with his tongue. Who was this murderous man? Dr Malhotra lost no time at all in pointing his finger at Tirath Das, a local councillor. A sizeable crowd backed him up and then Dr Malhotra had an idea.

A little later, the funeral procession wended its way to the burial site. In front, was the despondent master. Just behind him, was Tirath Das, staggering along to the boos and jeers of his fellow countrymen, bearing his own personal cross in the shape of a very dead dog on his shoulder. And he also had to dig the grave himself and put the animal inside. Only then did the crowd's anger subside somewhat. When reports last came in, Tirath Das had filed a complaint against the doctor, for abuse and harassment. The dog, good soul that he was, certainly wouldn't have liked to be the cause of such unbrotherly strife.

CAPTIVE GUEST

■ Velandi is a poor cobbler-shoeseller who somehow makes two ragged ends meet on a railway platform in Madras. Sometime ago, he met the woman of his dreams, proposed and was accepted. However, Velandi is not just any railway cobbler getting along in life. He has a magnificent obsession and he shares it with a thousand other people in the state: M.G. Ramachandran, chief minister of Tamil Nadu, lord and master of the silver screen. Velandi wanted MGR to be present at his wedding. To that effect, he laboriously penned a telegram inviting him and telling him that he (Velandi) would kill himself if he (MGR) did not turn up.

MGR got the telegram and because he is so concerned about the welfare of his electorate, asked somebody to find out if Velandi was serious about committing suicide. The somebody traipsed all the way to the platform and discovered that yes, he was. After that the chief minister had no choice but to dress up in his fanciest dark glasses and go. And so it was that on the great day, Velandi and his wife bowed deeply to Tamil Nadu's benevolent god for blessings.

SPECIAL EFFECTS

■ The Japanese are coming! The Japanese are coming! And if you think they're only bringing along bundles and bundles of CTV's and VCR's and others electronic abbreviations, you couldn't be more wrong. For this time, they'll be coming with pearls.

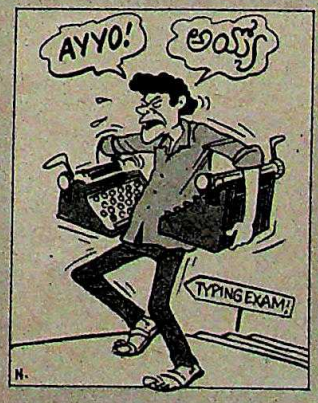
The Samovasran temple in Saurashtra, Gujarat, is an expensive piece of devotion, costing as it does Rs 1.5 crore. But the Jains are rich and a few crores here and there should not make any difference to them, or to the 108 Jain Tirth Darshan Bhavan Trust which collected the money to build the temple over a period of 14 years. The 108-ft tall building was finished last month and it cried for a sumptuous opening.

Eureka! They had it. Come the opening and an aircraft will shower 2 kg of Japanese pearls over the stone and marble construction even as the devotees queue up at its doors to prostrate themselves before the deity inside. The pearls will be both natural and cultured and will be mixed with small pieces of gold in what is probably the costliest confetti ever conceived of. The organisers were silent on the cost of the pearls, but like the makers of Maruti, seemed to be having difficulty in reducing the foreign content.

TRUE TO TYPE

■ Jobs are at a premium nowadays and jobseekers have to go through fire and flies to get one. But those everyday hassles paled into insignificance in the face of what typists in Vijaywada had to go through recently.

About 200 applicants for posts in the corporation were asked to appear for a test. As all of them had said they were proficient in both English and Telugu typing, both were included in the test. Now the catch: they had to bring two typewriters, one each for English and Telugu. Thus started the great typewriter rush in Vijaywada, and especially for Telugu typewriters, which were not to be had for love or money, especially money. The typing institutes said they would give their instruments only to their students. Then there was the problem of carrying the machines. Somehow, most of the candidates managed by sharing, all the while cursing the corporation for not supplying them. The corporation sheltered behind the plea that it would have been accused of supplying good machines to some and defective machines to others. That's what one calls being true to type.



—Compiled by JAGANNATH DUBASHI

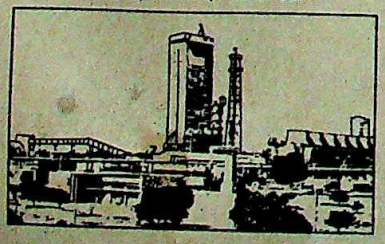
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Listen to the breeze whisper, 'Here comes the 21st Century!'

The Nangal Plant was established in 1961, when the sweet windsong of prosperity was in the far distance.

The winds of change are sweeping India to the threshold of a bright new century. And NFL's Nangal Plant has not merely kept pace with the times but is heading towards futuristic computerised production methods. Already, capacity utilisation is at 93.8%, a new record which the plant will better with newer, innovative techniques.

Today, NFL's Nangal Plant is a model of successful management producing in addition to Urea and CAN, chemicals such as Methanol, Ammonium Nitrate and Nitric Acid for industrial use, and Heavy Water for the nation's nuclear programme. Through Nitrogen production alone, NFL's Nangal Plant has benefited the nation by Rs. 711 crores.



But the Nangal Plant does not just stop at setting records in innovation and productivity. It's commitment to human resources development, energy conservation and pollution controls dates back to its inception.

And as a result of its dedicated efforts, it has won Innovation, Productivity, Shramvir Awards. And no less than 67 national and international awards for safety.

1961 – 1986
SILVER JUBILEE
NFL
NANGAL PLANT

NLF – the active ingredient of growth into the 21st Century holds the distinction of being the leading producer of nitrogenous fertilizer in the country and has three operating units located at Nangal, Panipat and Bhatinda.

NFL is setting up the first inland located gas based project at Vijaipur in Guna district of Madhya Pradesh. The plant has an annual installed capacity of 7,26,000 tonnes of Urea.

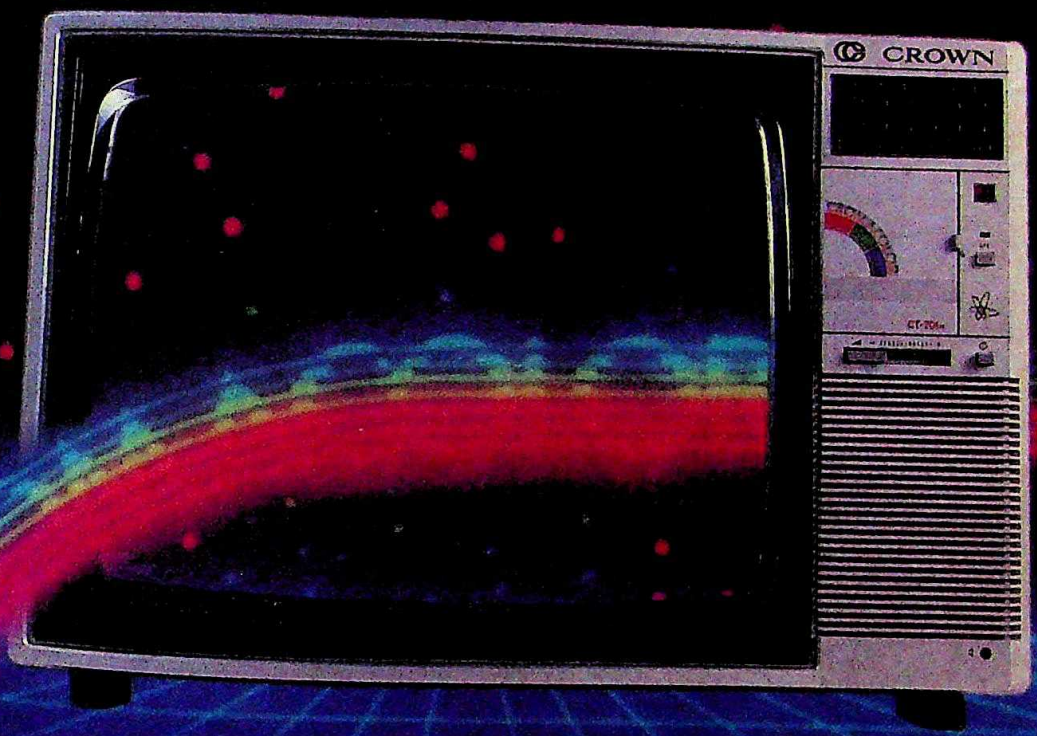
NFL's Nangal Plant has completed 25 years of service to the nation and its farming community and is breezing its way into an exciting new era.

नेशनल फर्टिलाइज़र्स लिमिटेड
NFL
NANGAL PLANT
Corporate Office
NATIONAL FERTILIZERS LIMITED
(A Govt. of India Undertaking)
20 Community Centre
East of Kailash, New Delhi

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

CROMANEC Technology. Our Jewel in the Crown.

Cromacolor means the perfect fusion of colours. And that's what makes Crown different.



In our video laboratories, we were looking for perfection. Naturally.

The perfect fusion of colours that would make our TV sets better than the others. Shades better with enviable brilliance and crystal clarity. That's what we were after.

Our efforts paid off. Crown's LSI circuit fused both chrominance and luminance signals to computerised perfection. A circuit that ensured vibrant colour picture clarity even in fringe transmission areas.

When we saw the results, we had no other alternative but give it the nomenclature of Cromanec Technology.

In this perfect fusion of colours, Crown Cromacolor was born.

The Crown Cromacolor. Test view any of our TELETEXT COMPATIBLE models (CT 701, CT 701 DX, CT 701 DXR with Remote) at any Crown TV dealer's.

Then you can switch off all other TVs from your mind.

CROWN-TV

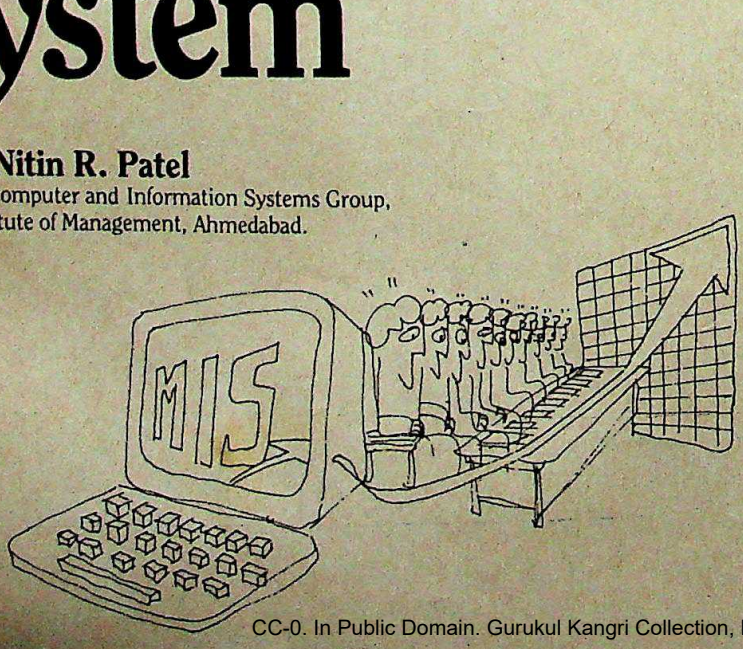
India's largest selling TV

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Corporate decisions don't flow from thin air. Plenty of facts decide each. And form the solid source. Which is fine as long as the right facts... the right data... are coming along so the decisions are right. But are they?

Management Information System

by Dr. Nitin R. Patel
Professor, Computer and Information Systems Group,
Indian Institute of Management, Ahmedabad.



Managing information

In one of his short stories the Nobel prize winning Argentine author Jorge Luis Borges describes an infinite library which houses every imaginable book. However, the library is so unorganised that one can never access desired information. Today's manager, inundated as he is in a blizzard of data from reports, newspapers, telex messages, telephone conversations and conferences, at times feels he is in such a library.

Today, managing information is becoming as important as managing men, machines, money and materials. Two fundamental reasons underline this occurrence.

1. Complexity. Within the organization and without

A manager's decision-making environment is becoming exceedingly complex. This is due to rapid technological innovations, changing government policy initiatives, fluctuating economic trends as well as organizational factors such as size, geographic dispersal and the need for specialization. All these factors underscore the need for better information.

After all, information is the cement that binds together the various structural components of an organization. One has only to imagine an organization in which one department, say production "does not speak to" another department, say marketing, to realize the fundamental importance of information in co-ordination of activities.

2. Information technology

A major revolution, based on micro-electronics, has been in progress during the last 20 years. This revolution has brought about a hundred to thousand-fold reduction in the cost of computers. Telecommunication costs have also been dropping sharply. These technologies are rapidly converging into one integrated technology. The ability of computers to compress time can now be combined with the ability of telecommunications to compress space to provide systems with totally unprecedented capabilities. Examples of such systems in India are the on-line reservation systems of both Air India and Indian Airlines and the bold project that Indian Railways is undertaking to keep track of wagon movement on the broad gauge network.

Management information systems

A major step towards coping with the problem of information is to develop a strong Management Information System (MIS).

An MIS provides a systematic, well defined process for routinely collecting, processing and presenting information both from within the organization and from the environment to enable managers to make better decisions.

Planning and control

The information provided by an MIS assists managers to make planning and control decisions. In order to function, every organization must perform certain operations

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For example, a car manufacturer must undertake certain manufacturing operations. In addition to performing these operations, plans must be made for them. Decisions have to be made on how many and what type of cars to assemble next month. Control must be exercised on the operations in the light of plans and targets developed in the planning process. Manufacturing operations should be in line with targets. If not, deviations must be corrected, or plans revised.

Data processing and MIS

Often there are elaborate data systems for assisting operations. For example, the car manufacturer will have to provide data to workers on the shop floor about work that needs to be done on a particular batch of material. This system has no managerial decision making significance. It is not part of an MIS. If the system provided information on productivity, machine utilization or rejection rates, it would be part of an MIS.

An MIS includes historical data on an organization's activities as well as current status data. Other ingredients are manual procedures that are used to collect and process information and computer hardware. Equally important are the computer programmes used to process information and models employed to structure data.

Using computers in MIS

The role that a computer can play in an MIS depends on the type of decision to be taken. Some decisions can be structured in such a manner that most of its important aspects can be reflected in a computer model. This is frequently the case with short-term, day-to-day operational level decisions. For such situations, once an appropriate model is constructed, the computer can make the right decision subject to managerial review for unusual situations. A typical example is inventory control.

Strategic decisions are often very difficult to structure. However, it is possible in some cases to structure part of the decision so that it can be handled by a computer. A typical example could be a major investment decision in which there are many uncertain factors. The opportunity to exploit a computer's strengths of speed, accuracy and large memory to support decisions, occurs often at the middle level where medium term decisions are made. Examples are various analyses of sales, rejection analysis in production, monthly production planning, annual budgeting and sales forecasting.

Executive computer

One of the most exciting features of micro-computers is that they enable managers to directly work on their own with computers. This has become possible because powerful and easy-to-use software packages are now available. The most important of these are electronic spread sheets. The essential idea in spread sheet software is that the procedure for calculations has to be spelt out once. Subsequently, the procedure can be applied automatically to answer "what if" type of questions. For example, if in an investment decision the tables for calculating the return on investment have been laid out once, subsequently the impact of reduced demand or inflation or loss of production, can be evaluated.

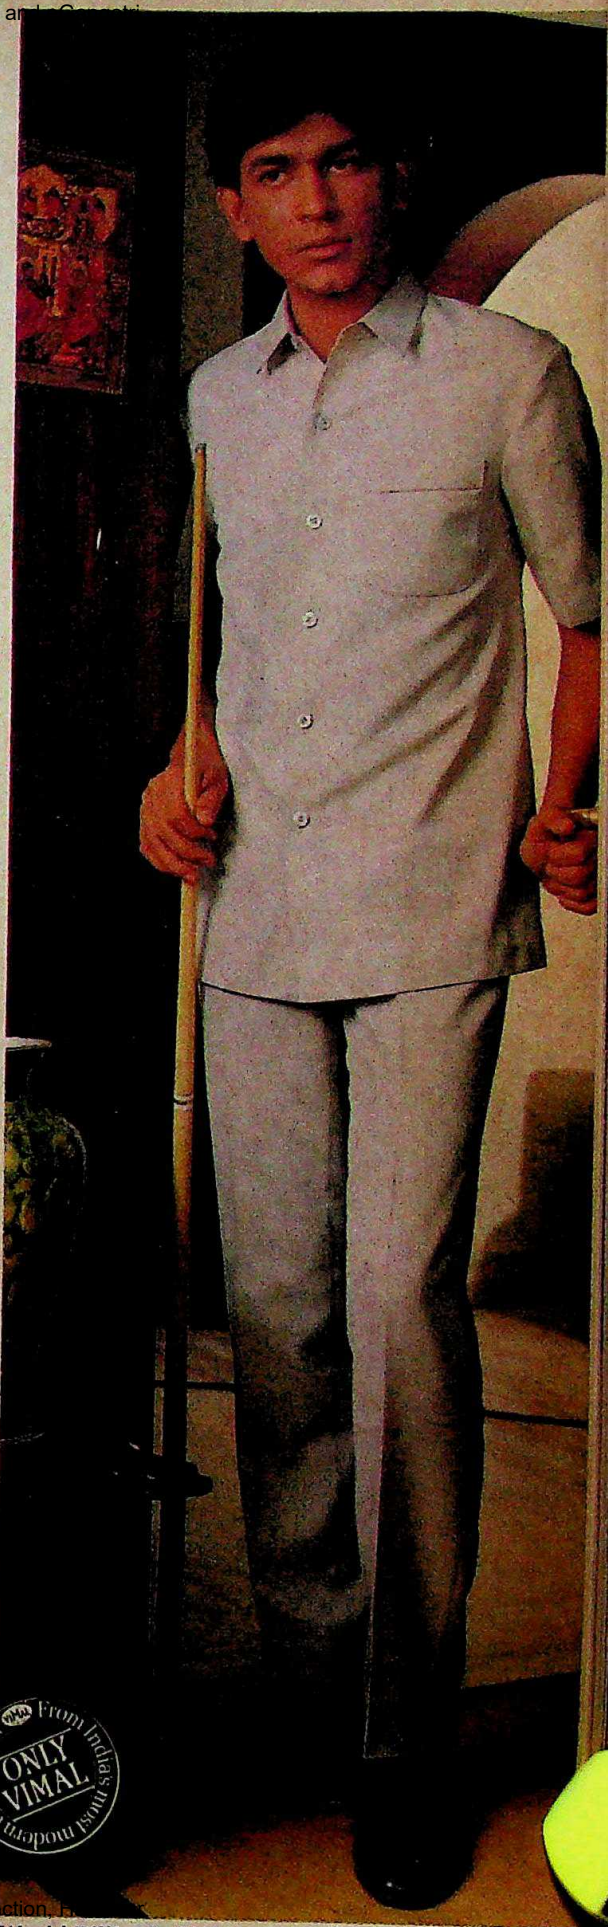
Do's and don'ts in setting up a computer based MIS

1. Do focus on the key result areas of your business.
2. Do not be guided in your choice of application areas by what others are doing.
3. The best use of a computer in your organization depends on your strategy and the attitudes of your people.
4. Do not leave the choice of applications to technical computer staff. They will most likely automate existing systems, rather than develop systems in areas where they are most needed.
5. Do involve line managers and users in deciding on applications, participating in system design, assessing benefits and in implementation.
6. Do give careful consideration to training needs of both staff and managers.
7. Do not rely on utilization to judge the effectiveness of your computer system. High utilization often results from inefficient systems.
8. Do give careful consideration to reliability and security issues.
9. Do draw up a broad long-term information systems plan before obtaining computer equipment.
10. Do keep abreast of development in computer and communications technology.

This message comes to you from Vimal. The trusted corporate fabric. And this summer, Vimal brings you another competent range of Polyrich Suitings. Fine textured. In summer-compatible shades.

VIMAL
A RELIANCE PRODUCT
Polyrich Suitings

From India's most modern textile plant
ONLY VIMAL



World Billiards Champion, Geet Sethi

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, H...

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

An essential feature of your modern kitchen!

PEARLPET®

Jars ● Bottles ● Containers

The only unbreakable and food-grade kitchen containers.

NIVERSAL ACCEPTANCE

*EARL*PET jars, bottles and ontainers are made from olyethylene Terephthalate, the ıfest food-grade polymer used the orld over for packaging and storing l kinds of liquids and foodstuff such s edible oil, soya sauce, honey, ıerbet, juice, pickles, biscuits, ereals, sugar, dryfruits, onfectionary, etc.

YGIENIC AND SAFE

*EARL*PET jars, bottles and ontainers are most attractive and ygienic for storing and preserving all our foodstuff. Made from certified od-grade polymer they are solutely non-toxic to ensure your mily's health and safety. Food stored *PEARL*PET is safe from rust, rrosion and contamination by pests nd rodents.

UARANTEED NBREAKABLE

nlike glass, *PEARL*PET never eaks. Unlike plastic, *PEARL*PET ever cracks or splinters.

*EARL*PET lasts a life time, because it really unbreakable.

O ODOUR PROBLEMS

o more problems of "Plastic" smell taste in your foodstuff. *PEARL*PET ntainers neither absorb nor impart y odour, whatever be the food ored in them.

LIGHT AS A FEATHER

Tough, sturdy and 15 times lighter than glass, *PEARL*PET containers are convenient and easy to handle.

TRANSPARENT AS CRYSTAL

*PEARL*PET containers are crystal clear, transparent and yet colourful. The clarity remains the same even after years of use. And what's more *PEARL*PET does not discolour or lose its sparkle even after storing pickles, spices. etc.

*PEARL*PET jars, bottles and containers come in a variety of sizes, colours and shapes.

Approved by CFTRI, Mysore and for contact with food.

PEARL

PEARL Polymers

704 Rohit House, Tolstoy Marg, New Delhi - 110001
Phones: 3317033, 3317250, 3317213, Telex: 031-65493 PAR-
Regional Office: 316 Mahim Ind. Industrial Premises Co-Op Ltd
370 Mughal Lane, Mahim, Bombay - 400016. Ph: 465620

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CHARLES SOBHRAJ

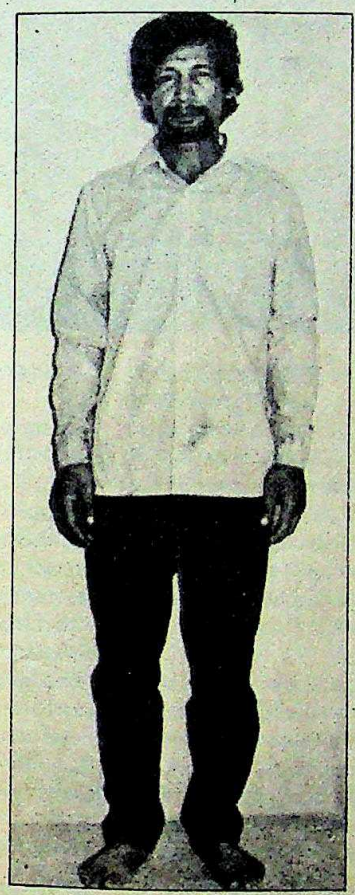
Nemesis in Goa

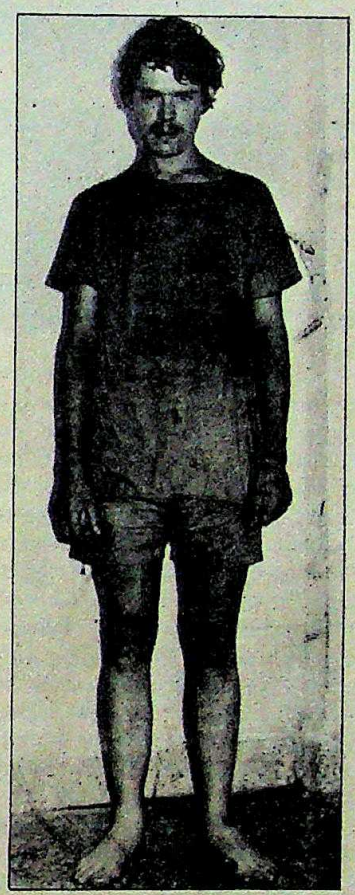
IT HAD all the ingredients of a pulp thriller. A cosy, dimly-lit bar overflowing with beer and bonhomie. Attractive waitresses in gaily-coloured skirts swaying through the crowds. A bride and bridegroom dancing to the beat of the banjo. The main protagonists in the drama sitting a few feet from each other. One, a criminal on the run blissfully unaware that his reprieve was coming to an end. The other, an ace sleuth with his men nearby sipping drinks and trying to blend into the local ambience.

There was, in the end, a disappointingly anticlimactic end to Charles Gurmukh Sobhraj's latest escapade. Known to be a man with expensive tastes and a liking for women and fine food, these were the very attributes which terminated Sobhraj's reprieve exactly 23 days after he, aided by accomplice David Hall, a small-time drug peddler, made his dramatically arrogant escape from Delhi's top-security Tihar jail. His flight from pursuing lawmen ended, somewhat inevitably at the one place where he would feel most at home, the hippy haven of Goa, and in one of the coastal resort's best known restaurants.

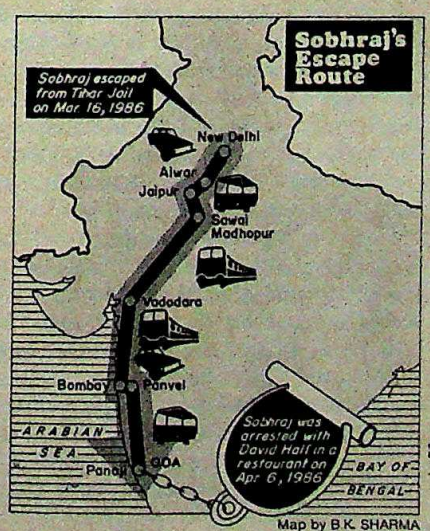
The O'Coqueiro bar and restaurant is housed in one of the classic porched houses in Goa and it boasts a fine cuisine. It also boasts a fine telephone exchange, better than the one at the Central Telephone Office in Goa, and the police backtracking Sobhraj's erratic trail had been tipped off that he would most certainly try to use the bar's phone to call abroad. They had visited the bar the previous day. This time they struck gold.

"I was sitting at a table where I could watch both the telephone booth and the gate," says Senior Inspector Madhukar Zende, the man who caught Sobhraj one-and-a-half decades ago and repeated the performance last fortnight. "A white Fiat drew up, and two men got out. One of them had a beard, ruffled hair, and was wearing a black cap, the kind you wear when you play cricket. The moment I saw him, my spine tingled. I was 90 per cent sure—he was heavier than when I laid hands on him last, he was without his spectacles, but I was sure—this was Sobhraj. And the fair foreigner with him could be none other than David Hall."





Sobhraj (left) and Hall: anti-climax



Map by B.K. SHARMA

Sobhraj and Hall did not come inside, but sat in the porch, waiting it seemed, for a call to come through. Not wanting to make any hasty moves, Zende waited too and, a few minutes later, slid over unobtrusively to a table near Sobhraj's. Meanwhile he had instructed three police colleagues to fan out around the building and two to stay in the room. The waiter was told to go outside and casually ask the driver whom the car belonged to.

It worked, but only partially; the car driver walked in and whispered something to Sobhraj. "I knew then that I would have to move quickly," says Zende, and swiftly pushing his chair aside he grabbed Sobhraj's arm in a judo grip and said "Get up, Charles". Zende almost never carries a gun and he was worried about the contents of the bag lying on the table. The struggling Sobhraj kept his cool and protested "I'm not any Sobhraj, you've made a mistake." Zende, excited, shouted back: "You're bloody Sobhraj. Don't you remember I arrested you years ago? Get up and come with me." He yelled to a fellow officer to grab the bag and Hall. "His nose was twitching like an animal's when it senses danger," said Zende. The cornered fugitive, after a brief struggle, slumped and went limp. Hall, bewildered but resigned to his fate, pulled out his wallet to pay the bill. It was 10.30 p.m.

Zende's first thought was to ensure that Sobhraj did not slip out of their fingers. He called for rope and the two were trussed-up like chickens. "I knew I had to get back to Maharashtra before the Goa police raised any complications." The entire party flung its captives into waiting cars and drove to Mapusa, Goa's main market town, escorted all the way by two local motorcyclists. There, Zende hastily called up Bombay police headquarters with news of his catch. "I told them that we had him. They asked me if I was sure. I said of course I am sure, 100 per cent. I was ordered to return immediately." On the way Sobhraj slept and once pleaded with Zende to remove the rope, but Zende, taking no chances, told him: "You have made us suffer, now it is your turn to suffer. If you want to urinate, do it in the car. You will be allowed out only in Bombay."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

But it was luck and the eagle instincts of a railway police head constable posted at Bombay's Victoria Terminus railway station that provided the first breakthrough on March 29, 13 days after Sobhraj had made his escape. Constable S.V. Kshirsagar sensed something fishy about a luggage-laden passenger entraining for Bhopal and detained him. A search of his baggage at the police station yielded a countrymade revolver, cartridges, a live hand grenade, a tape recorder and a camera. The passenger claimed to be Ashok Kumar Agarwal from Jaipur, but on questioning admitted he was actually Ajay Singh Tomar who had escaped from Tihar jail along with Sobhraj. He led the police to a hotel in nearby Panvel.

The police watch on the hotel was rewarded with the prize of Devkumar Brahmdutt Tyagi, who returned to the hotel and was nabbed on April 2. Tyagi was the driver of the getaway car which had carried Sobhraj and his accomplices out of Tihar. Tyagi yielded a bonanza of clues: a state-of-the-art camera with film which could be crucial evidence. The camera turned out to be a model not yet patented and, days later, the police were still trying to figure it out. The most important discovery was a calculator with a memory which contained addresses and telephone numbers.

From Tyagi's interrogation the police discovered that Sobhraj had been too clever by half. He and Hall had probably decided to dump Tyagi and Tomar. Tyagi had, therefore, been despatched to Delhi with a pair of ear-rings for Sneh Sengar, one of Sobhraj's Indian girl friends, and a message asking her to come to Goa. If she agreed Tyagi was to cable a cryptic message—"Father keeping well". Discovering that Sengar had already been picked up by the Delhi police, Tyagi eventually sent a telegram "Father not keeping well, coming in three four days". By the time the telegram arrived Sobhraj had already skipped Bombay. When Tyagi was arrested and realised he had been dumped, he put the police on the Goa trail.

IT WAS a challenge and a slap on our face that Sobhraj had stayed in Bombay and left without us finding out," said Police Commissioner Soman. So Zende, who had tracked and caught Sobhraj in the past, was asked to pick up the trail that was now beginning to get warmer. After escaping from Tihar in Delhi, Sobhraj, Hall, Tyagi and Tomar drove to Alwar in Rajasthan where they abandoned the getaway car and caught a train to Jaipur and then booked themselves onto another train to Bombay. But, cautious as ever, they detrained at Vadodara and instead reached Bombay by taxi. After a few days in Bombay, Sobhraj and Hall gave the slip to Tomar and Tyagi and left for Goa by bus.

For the duo, Goa offered the obvious gateway. As Goa IGP P.S. Bawa says: "Sobhraj must have felt confident that he could merge with the tourists here, he knew some of them and was familiar with the place." Police believe that Sobhraj was planning another of his classic cons to rob holiday package tourists of their passports and return tickets to make what would have been a relatively easy flight from the country.

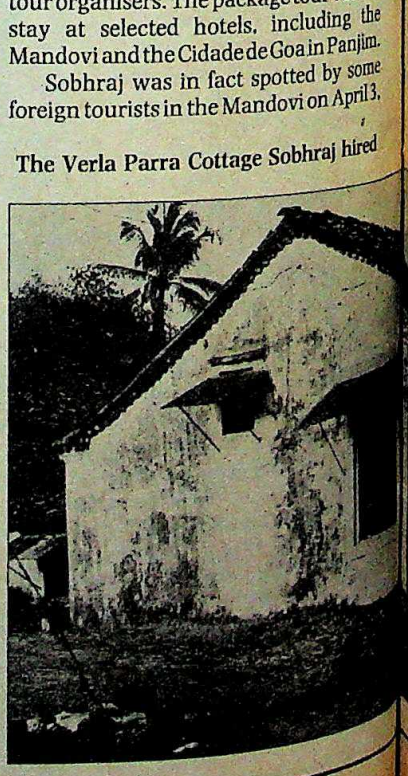
Photographs by M. RAHMAN

The O'Coqueiro restaurant in Goa

Every Monday night, at least 175 foreign tourists who come on a package tour to Goa board the Condor return flight to Munich and Frankfurt on tickets that can only be purchased abroad. There are just six immigration officers to clear the passengers, whose names are checked with the list of incoming passengers along with local representatives of the package tour organisers. The package tour visitors stay at selected hotels, including the Mandovi and the Cidade de Goa in Panjim.

Sobhraj was in fact spotted by some foreign tourists in the Mandovi on April 3.

The Verla Parra Cottage Sobhraj hired



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Owner Veigas: scene of the capture while they were having breakfast in the restaurant. He, however, slipped out of the hotel before word got to the police. Sobhraj had actually checked into the hotel at 2.50 p.m. the previous day, registering as a Mexican, Humberto Cayou. He had identified himself with an American Express card and booked himself for four weeks. The Goa police found the grey ambassador that Hall had hired for Rs 3,500 stalled in the sand near Charlston Hotel in Calangute beach on April 6, the day of the arrest and also of Sobhraj's 42nd birthday. The car contained a blue rucksack with trousers, shirts, a copy of Leon Uris' The Haj, and a piece of paper with a series of numbers written on it.

POLICE believe that the escapees could have arrived in Goa on March 19. Sobhraj and Hall were definitely in Goa on the morning of March 20. That day, at 10 a.m., a young Indian speaking broken English made inquiries about buying a Rajdoot Yamaha motorcycle at the Kakulo Agency in Panjim. He returned with David Hall at 12.45 p.m. and Hall paid Rs 22,000 for a blue Rajdoot. The Indian with Hall collected the temporary registration certificate (GDR 6231) from the Panjim RTO office the next morning in the name of D.K. Joshi, giving an address in Vadodara.

On March 21, Sobhraj and Hall had lunch at the Lobster restaurant in Mapusa and returned for dinner, this time with two Indians accompanying them. Says Abreu Lobo, the owner: "They came several times to the restaurant between March 21 and April 3. I noticed Sobhraj because unlike other foreigners who eat either beef or seafood, he was a voracious eater of garlic chicken. The first time, he ate four plates of chicken. He also has another strange habit of ordering half a glass of milk with six spoons of Nescafe coffee. He came to the restaurant thrice and he was always very polite. He said he was John, a journalist from Mexico and Hall was 'Mac', a photographer and commercial artist from the US with an office in Athens. He would change his appearance every time. Once he was clean-shaven with his hair swept back, once it looked like it had been permed, another time it was unruly and he had a beard. On March 2, he wanted to know where he could make international calls fast. He wanted to make a call to France. The night cashier, Braganza, told him about O' Coqueiro."

On the morning of the arrest, Sobhraj had driven in the Ambassador to the secluded village of Verla Parra, 4 km from Mapusa. They had fixed the date earlier with the night cashier of the Lobster restaurant, Lincoln Braganza. Recalls Braganza: "Sobhraj and David came to the restaurant at about 9.30 p.m. on March 29 looking dirty and tired and claimed they had been to Belgaum." Sobhraj said he was looking for a cottage to rent as his friend was expecting his wife and children to join them. He said he wanted a quiet place away from hippies and the hustle and bustle where David could set up a darkroom for his photography. Braganza showed David a cottage in his village, Verla Parra on April 2. "He came back with Sobhraj on April 6 and they liked it and David paid Rs 200, saying they would take it for at least 10 days," says Braganza. The motorcycle Hall had bought was parked inside the room and the duo left. Describing them, Braganza says: "David was so friendly and talkative, I find it difficult to believe he is a criminal. Sobhraj would not talk much. He used to sit at a table in the cottage deep in thought or reading a magazine."

Evidently, Sobhraj and Hall were taking no chances, since they had already rented another room in Calangute on April 1. The cottage in which the room was rented belonged to Mrs Loudina D'Souza and was situated close to the Charlston Hotel on Calangute beach. Sobhraj identified himself to Mrs D'Souza as 'John' and David Hall as 'Paul'. When police searched the room later, they found it bare of personal possessions.

Sobhraj and Hall also befriended a couple, Mohammed Rezalsavari, an Iranian and his young Finnish wife, Tula Marja Hanelle, living in a cottage in Calangute and stayed with them often in the days prior to their arrest. The couple lived a typical down-and-out life, selling fake 'foreign goods' supplied by Sindhi businessmen from Ulhasnagar near Bombay. On April 3, Sobhraj took the couple to Panjim in a taxi, did some shopping, and on the way back, stopped at O'Coqueiro. The same evening, after a dinner of lobsters, garlic chicken, prawns and wine

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INSPECTOR ZENDE

Prize Catch

INSPECTOR Madhukar Baburao Zende is a large man with a large voice. The day after he returned to Bombay with his trussed-up prize catch, he was booming out his thanks to a steady stream of visitors who came with bouquets to his ground-floor office in the Agripada police station. He is two years short of 50 but, apart from the streaks of grey in his hair, looks a vigorous 40. "All those snacks in restaurants in Goa waiting for Sobhraj to turn up have done my figure no good," he says ruefully, pulling out a bill from the O'Coqueiro restaurant which shows that he spent nearly Rs 100 on a gimlet and fish curry and rice.

Zende has been with the force for 27 years and in his time has put people like Haji Mastan and Karim Lala behind bars. The first time he arrested Mastan was when the don had assaulted a constable in 1964. "That was the only case in which he was convicted," remembers Zende. He remembers with equal pride his going to the rescue of a constable who was being assaulted with knives by five taxi-passengers: that exploit earned him Rs 2,000 in award money. "I usually don't carry a gun so I just shouted at the top of my voice and grabbed two knives in both my hands. They got scared and gave up."

Despite his tough-cop exterior, Zende is a kind-hearted man and ironically, it was this that led to his first arrest of Sobhraj in 1974. Ajay Mara was a small-time felon who, after a stint in jail, was advised by Zende to reform, advice which he disregarded. He met Sobhraj on the sands of Chowpatty beach one day and was asked, as a test, to put together a plan to rob the Air-India office. Pleased, Sobhraj took Ajay to Delhi: the young crook, however, lost his nerve, stole two pistols belonging to Sobhraj's gang and fled to Bombay, where he tried to sell the pistols on the sly. Unfortunately one of them went off, injuring a prospective customer in the chest, and Ajay thought it prudent to come clean with Zende. Says Zende tellingly: "Even when he knew that his protege had come back to Bombay, Sobhraj was stupid enough to return to carry out the Air-India crime." Tip followed tip and Sobhraj was held.

Zende almost caught Sobhraj again in 1974, soon after he and a woman accomplice called Lilian had robbed J. Rocher, a French tourist staying at the Taj Mahal Hotel in Bombay. The two were sitting in the Taj coffee shop when the manager entered, recognised them immediately, but gave the game away by rushing out to phone Zende. Sobhraj and Lilian rushed to the nearby Ritz Hotel and had piled their luggage in a car when the police arrived. Sobhraj escaped; Lilian was caught with such goodies as chocolate-covered bullets and a revolver in a powder tin. "I used to think Sobhraj was over-rated," says Zende. "He isn't a particularly intelligent person if he keeps getting caught again and again."

Zende: hero of the hour

Earlier, the ubiquitous policeman had earned laurels when the then Gujarat director-general of police Julio Ribeiro had asked him to come to the state to find out if the Bombay underworld was spreading its tentacles there: someone had thrown a bomb at Ribeiro. Zende worked alone and incognito in Gujarat for a month and was pleased to inform Ribeiro that the Bombay underworld had not moved into the state. He says he is "not in the habit of asking for gifts for doing my duty," but could hardly turn down the Rs 15,000 he recieved as a reward for the Sobhraj capture.

—JAGANNATH DUBASHI

brought by Hall to the cottage, they went to the Marina bar in Anjuna where they watched video movies till 2.30 a.m.

The events of the fateful day of April 6 are described by Vidhyadhar Chodankar, the driver of the taxi Sobhraj hired. "That night, Sobhraj hired my taxi at 9.30 p.m. from Calangute and said he had to go to O'Coqueiro to make a telephone call. He didn't speak much but always thanked me and praised my driving. After waiting outside O'Coqueiro for a while, I went inside to order two bottles of beer to settle a bet I had just lost. As I was coming out, Sobhraj, who was sitting with another hippy, called me to his table to say that I could go, his friend had another taxi. Just then, all hell broke loose."

The "hell" was Inspector Zende and his team moving in for the arrest. They had patiently been waiting for several hours, confident that Sobhraj would show up. The Bombay police, making enquiries at the post and telegraph office in Panjim about possible telegrams addressed to Sobhraj, had discovered that O' Coqueiro was where most foreign tourists went to make overseas telephone calls. Just a month earlier, a Panjim magazine had carried an article on the illegal arrangement between an unnamed restaurant and the telephone department for clearing overseas calls quickly. Everybody in Goa knew which restaurant the article was referring to. "You can get an overseas call through in two minutes from O'Coquiero," says a Goa policeman.

Recalls Gines Viegas, the affable owner of the restaurant: "Sobhraj arrived at about 9.45 p.m. on the night of April 6 and sat in the verandah with Hall. Sobhraj ordered a Haywards beer, poured half a glass and just then the Bombay police pounced on him." Though Viegas maintains that he thought the police team were tourists, a Goa police official said that the restauranteur had already been introduced to the police posse earlier. In any event, Zende and his team had left little to chance. As Sobhraj was speaking to Chodankar, Zende, using the driver as a shield, grabbed Sobhraj and other policemen sitting at tables flanking the one Sobhraj was using, grabbed the bag containing a pistol.

Intriguingly, Sobhraj subsequently claimed that he actually gave himself up. When the police produced him before a magistrate two days after his arrest, he said that he would not have been so stupid as to sit in a public bar and could easily have fled the country if he wanted to. But Delhi Police Commissioner Ved Marwah dismissed this claim: "Don't you believe it; in that case why was he carrying a gun?" Though Marwah has a point, it does serve Sobhraj's purpose to remain incarcerated in an Indian prison. The alternative will be extradition to Thailand where he faces execution. Having broken out of jail, Sobhraj now faces a fresh sentence in India of maybe seven years.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

M. RAHMAN

"Sobhraj would change his appearance every time he came here."
ABREU LOBO
Lobster restaurant owner

WHILE the Bombay police walked away with the honours in the case, the Delhi force it turns out was also hot on Sobhraj's heels. The Delhi police had worked their way to Goa independently of the Bombay force, two teams had visited Goa, circulated Sobhraj's pictures with the local police and in fact exchanged notes with Bombay Inspector Zende. Said Deputy Commissioner (crime) A.K.Kanth: "Our own investigation had led us to Goa, but it was the Bombay police that had the luck."

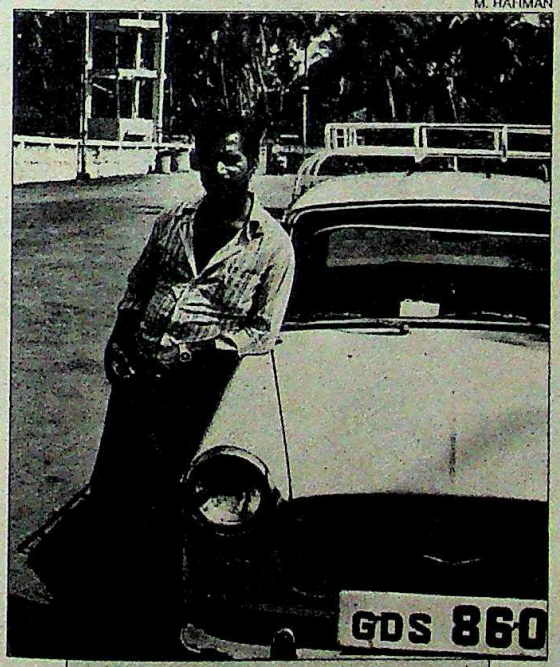
Meanwhile, the ones most concerned about the intensive Sobhraj interrogation on the fourth floor chamber of the Ashok Vihar police station in North Delhi (guarded by a platoon of armed policemen) were his contacts in Tihar jail, including jail officials, who could have cause for concern if Sobhraj decides to blow the whistle on those who aided and engineered his escape, especially since investigators suspect that there was a large amount of money involved.

Tyagi has admitted that Sobhraj and Hall were carrying $12,000 with them when they arrived in Bombay. Lobo, the owner of the Lobster restaurant in Goa, said that Hall was always carrying a large khaki duffle bag packed with foreign and Indian currency. "There were at least Rs 3 lakh in it," he said. By the time they were arrested they had only $ 2,000 on them, having presumably spent the rest.

Initially, there was considerable speculation that an international drug running mafia had masterminded and bankrolled the escape operation. But a senior narcotics official of the Central Government says that neither Sobhraj nor Hall had come to their notice as major drug runners. "They are the kind who buy their drugs at a drugstore," scoffed their Delhi representative of an international anti-narcotics agency.

Investigators, however, have added another intriguing element to the drama. The CBI investigating team handling the prosecution of bankrupt London financier Rajinder Sethia and the Delhi police team interrogating Sobhraj have started coordinating their activities to uncover possible links between the two. One link they investigated was Sethia's nephew Daljeet Singh Bhalla who recently transferred a large sum of money from London. Investigators suspect that the money was meant for Sobhraj and Bhalla was arrested and later released on bail. However, Bhalla told INDIA TODAY that the circumstances were quite different. His version is that he was being threatened by extortionists who demanded money and threatened to kill him if he did not pay. Bhalla says he spoke to his uncle who in turn spoke to Sobhraj. He says that Sobhraj promised to get infamous dacoit Raju Bhatnagar to frighten off the extortionists but demanded a sum of Rs 21,000 for the service. Bhalla claims that he paid the money to Sneh Sengar and that he can account for the rest of the money he had transferred. In fact, another crucial actor in the escape drama seems to have been Raju Bhatnagar, who apparently arranged for the getaway car through his man, the re-arrested Tyagi.

M. RAHMAN



"Sobhraj didn't speak much but thanked me and praised my driving."
VIDHYADHAR CHODANKAR
taxi driver

The police believe that though Hall, Sengar and some others helped him achieve his breakout, Sobhraj himself wrote the final script. After initial questioning, the police are sure that some officials of Tihar colluded with Sobhraj in the escape, but no names are being released until all avenues of inquiry have been explored.

Meanwhile, the relatively easy manner in which Sobhraj was captured has punctured the oversized legend that has grown around him. According to people who have known Sobhraj and spent some time with him, he is not the criminal mastermind that he has been made out to be. He is basically a mediocre person who has the uncanny ability to spot the weaknesses of a system and exploit it. But the Sobhraj saga has ended somewhat differently. This time it was the police who spotted Sobhraj's weakness and exploited it.

—M. RAHMAN in Goa, JAGANNATH DUBASHI in Bombay and RAMINDAR SINGH in Delhi

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UTTAR PRADESH

Welcome to Amethi

IT WAS planned and publicised as a visit by an ordinary member of Parliament to his constituency. But Rajiv Gandhi is no ordinary member of Parliament and Amethi can by no stretch of imagination be considered an ordinary constituency. So it was hardly surprising that the prime minister's plans for a low-key visit to Amethi last fortnight, his first in a year, was transformed into a noisy and unmanageable political jamboree.

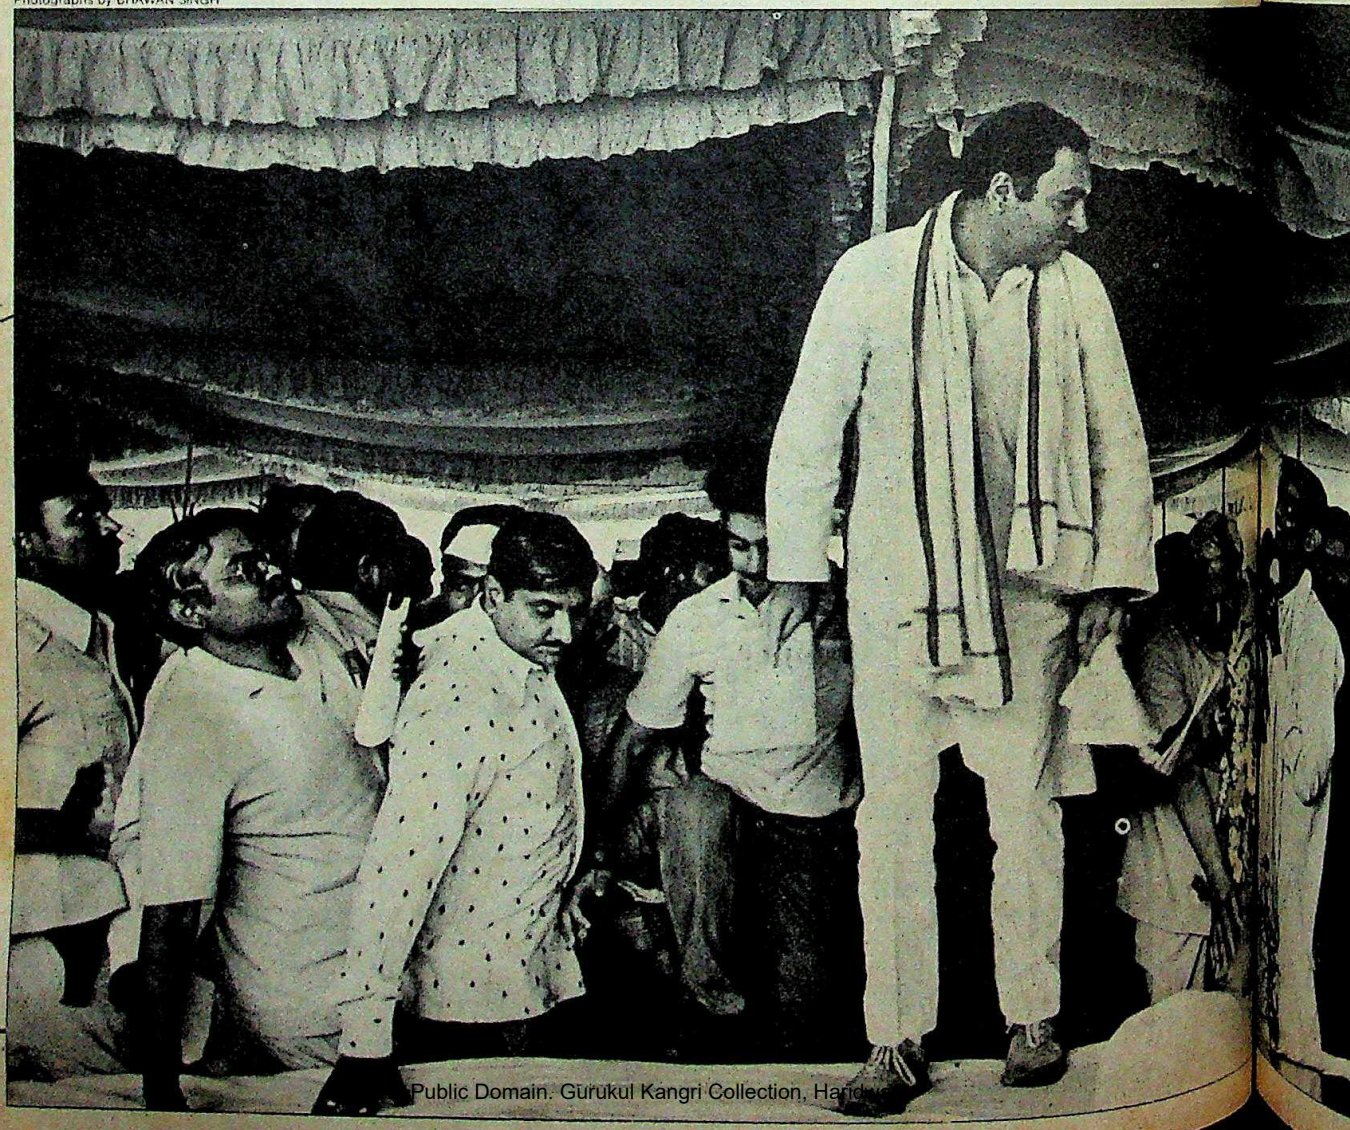
Despite prior instructions from the prime minister's office that no mediamen, officials and ministers would be allowed into the constituency during the visit, not only were there over a dozen ministers present along with their aides when the prime minister's aircraft landed, but almost the entire state government bureaucracy descended on Amethi to scramble for space in the newly-built guest-houses in the five assembly segments. To add to the carnival atmosphere, the entire constituency was decorated with welcome arches and every road crossing was barricaded for security reasons. And as further proof of its over-enthusiasm, the state Congress(I) committee had plastered the walls of prominent places with posters of both Rajiv and Sonia sporting gum boots.

State Chief Minister Bir Bahadur Singh camped in the constituency three days before the visit. And since it was Rajiv's first visit to Amethi after assuming office, bureaucrats and local politicians had obviously decided to make it a grand tamasha, ignoring the fact that the instructions and directives from the prime minister's office had expressly forbidden such extravagance.

Further violations were in evidence right from Rajiv's first public engagement to inaugurate a unit of the public sector Hindustan Aeronautics Limited. The function was held in the Amethi assembly segment which is the constituency of state Transport Minister Sanjay Singh, who, in keeping with his ministerial post, commandeered over 700 buses from the state road transport corporation to ferry 40,000-odd people to the ceremonies.

That was not all. Over 100 state government vehicles—brought from places as far as Lucknow, Faizabad, Sultanpur and Rae Bareli—were parked outside Tatarpur guest-house where Rajiv stayed during his visit, for the use of state and central government officials. As Rajiv began his Amethi tour in his custom-built, chocolate-coloured, bullet-

Photographs by BHAWAN SINGH



Rajiv Gandhi addressing constituents: grand tamasha

Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

proof jeep with Sonia beside him and the chief minister perched behind, he was trailed by at least five cabinet ministers and over 30 officials from the departments of public works, electricity, irrigation, education, industry and finance.

The reason for the presence soon became evident. They were required for taking on-the-spot decisions and follow-up action on complaints received by the prime minister and his team in the course of their tour. At a meeting of the Jagdishpur Congress workers, for instance, the chief minister announced decisions involving a recurring expense of over Rs 50 lakh to the state Government. And to top it all, every single demand raised by speakers in the presence of the prime minister were conceded with alacrity by the chief minister. Examples:

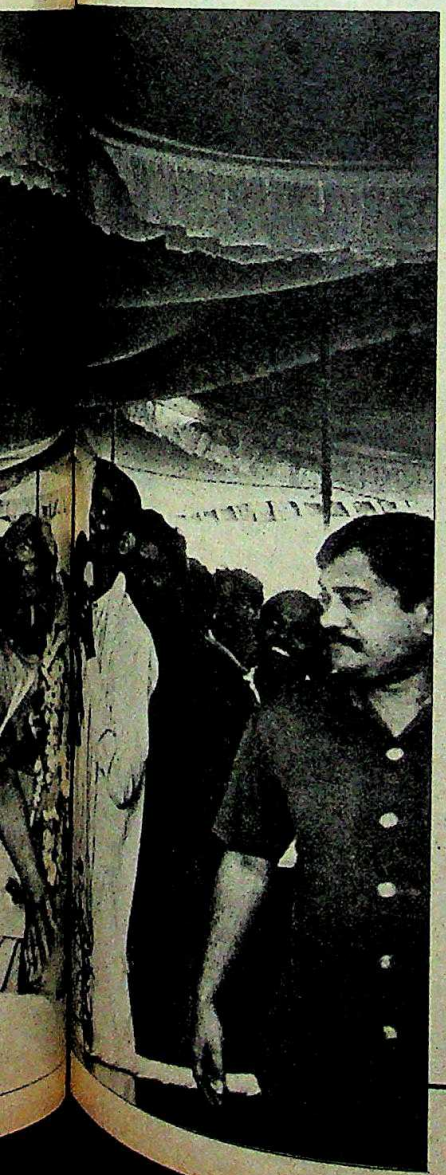
- Orders were issued to commence professional and technical courses in local colleges (most of which do not have enough space and facilities).
- Junior schools would be raised to the senior level.
- A degree college offering all courses will start functioning in the constituency from the coming academic session.
- A local dispensary in Musafirkhana would be raised to the level of a hospital.

Singh's concern for Rajiv's electorate bordered on the obsessive throughout the two-and-a-half-day trip. At one point, it became so embarrassing that the prime minister had to order the hordes of eager officials and Congressmen dogging his every footstep to immediately return to their respective places of work.

Despite such aberrations, Rajiv's tour of his constituency was understandably a resounding success. By covering all the five assembly segments, he effectively silenced party workers who had earlier complained about his inaccessibility. Said Rajkaran Singh, MP, and president of Sultanpur District Congress Committee: "We are grateful to the prime minister for spending so much time with us. He heard us with patience and took important decisions on the spot. Rajiv is the ideal representative of the people of Amethi."

But local sentiments can hardly be otherwise. During the last five years, Amethi has been transformed beyond recognition. Gone is the barren and parched landscape, unlit streets, potholed roads and filthy villages. In their place, as if by the wave of a magic wand, is a fairy-tale land which echoes with prosperity and promise. Each revenue village is now linked by a pucca road, has water pumps and electricity connections. As against

The prime minister's plans for a low-key visit to Amethi was transformed into a noisy and unmanageable political jamboree



Rajiv and Sonia Gandhi with an admirer

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

125 electrified villages in 1981, there are over 900 now. Of the 1,200 km of PWD roads, over 750 were constructed during the last five years alone. Since the area is primarily dependent on agriculture, various research institutions involved in laboratory-to-land experiments have spent several months in Amethi trying to improve crop yields so that farmers can earn more from their plots. In collaboration with the state Agriculture Department, they have carried out successful experiments leading to a rise in per hectare yield from 1,100 kg of wheat in 1979 to 1,348 kg in 1984 and that of rice from 420 kg to 1,116 kg. Almost the entire cultivable area in the constituency is irrigated through a water-filled canal system criss-crossing the entire constituency.

The local industrial landscape has not lagged behind. The Jagdishpur industrial estate, established by Sanjay Gandhi in 1976, has seen an investment of over Rs 200 crore and two massive projects—that of Bharat Heavy Electricals Limited and Indo-Gulf Fertiliser—are already in an advanced stage of completion. Says Satish Sharma, Rajiv's aide responsible for Amethi: "The prime minister has been closely assessing the needs of his constituency during the last few years. It was on the basis of this feedback that we drew up a development plan down to village level."

The credit for much of Amethi's success story, apart from the fact that it is a privileged constituency, goes largely to trusted aides handpicked by the prime minister. It was Arun Singh who drew up a detailed development plan for each assembly segment, which was finalised after extensive discussions with local Congress workers and the officials concerned. When Sharma took over from Singh in Febuary 1985, he had only to concentrate on the implementation of the plans. Says Sharma: "The prime minister wanted each area and problem to be properly identified and I was receiving almost 1,000 petitions from the people. Quite a large number of them were sorted out at the district level and the rest forwarded to the state Government or the Central Government agencies". He does, however, concede that "we were lucky in getting a response from the officials faster than the others. Rajiv wants to make Amethi a model for others to emulate." But that will not be easy. As the prime minister's office tried unsuccessfully to prove, Amethi is no ordinary constituency.

—PRABHU CHAWLA in Amethi

ANDHRA PRADESH

Governor Row

THERE seems to be no end to problems between Andhra Pradesh Chief Minister N.T. Rama Rao and the state governor. In his nearly three and a half years in power, he has had to deal with four governors, and he has had his differences with the three ex-Congress(I) leaders who have followed K.C. Abraham. Last fortnight, his relations with the present governor, Kumudben Joshi, also went into a predictable spin and it became publically known that NTR had tried to scuttle Joshi's scheduled two-day tour of coastal Srikakulam last month.

N.T. RAMA RAO
Chief Minister

KUMUDBEN JOSHI
Governor

NTR's relations with Governor Kumudben Joshi went into a predictable spin when it became known that he had tried to scuttle Joshi's tour of Srikakulam last month.

The souring of relations was triggered off by an innocuous incident at Kalwakurthy in Mahbubnagar district on February 27, where Joshi had gone to distribute loans sanctioned under various development programmes. Former Harijan Congress(I) parliamentarian L. Anantharamulu sent a request to her that he should also be allowed to speak as he was an important member of the National Institute of Rural Development and Mahbubnagar was his home district. Joshi acceded to the request. Telugu Desam activists reported the instance to NTR, charging Joshi with partiality, and the chief minister admonished Mahbubnagar district Collector S. Bhattacharya for lack of tact.

Matters took a turn for the worse when Joshi, in her capacity as chancellor of universities, began consultations with officials to chalk out a programme whereby placement officers in colleges would work with industrialists in finding jobs for graduating students. NTR took exception to this and dashed off a confidential letter to her on March 18, bluntly stating that "it is the chief minister alone" who can give information required by the governor since that "is a constitutional obligation cast on me". In fact, the correct constitutional position is that while it is obligatory for a chief minister to pass on any information sought by the governor, there is no bar on the governor taking the initiative to collect information.

Unlike her predecessors, Joshi has extensively toured 17 of the state's 23 districts and was scheduled to visit the coastal Srikakulam district on March 25 and 26. Less than a week before she was to set off, NTR ordered officials and partymen to abstain from attending all her functions. This was done, but District Collector H.S. Brahma was placed in an understandably embarrassing position. Says a senior bureaucrat: "We are caught between two stools and tend to go on leave during such visits."

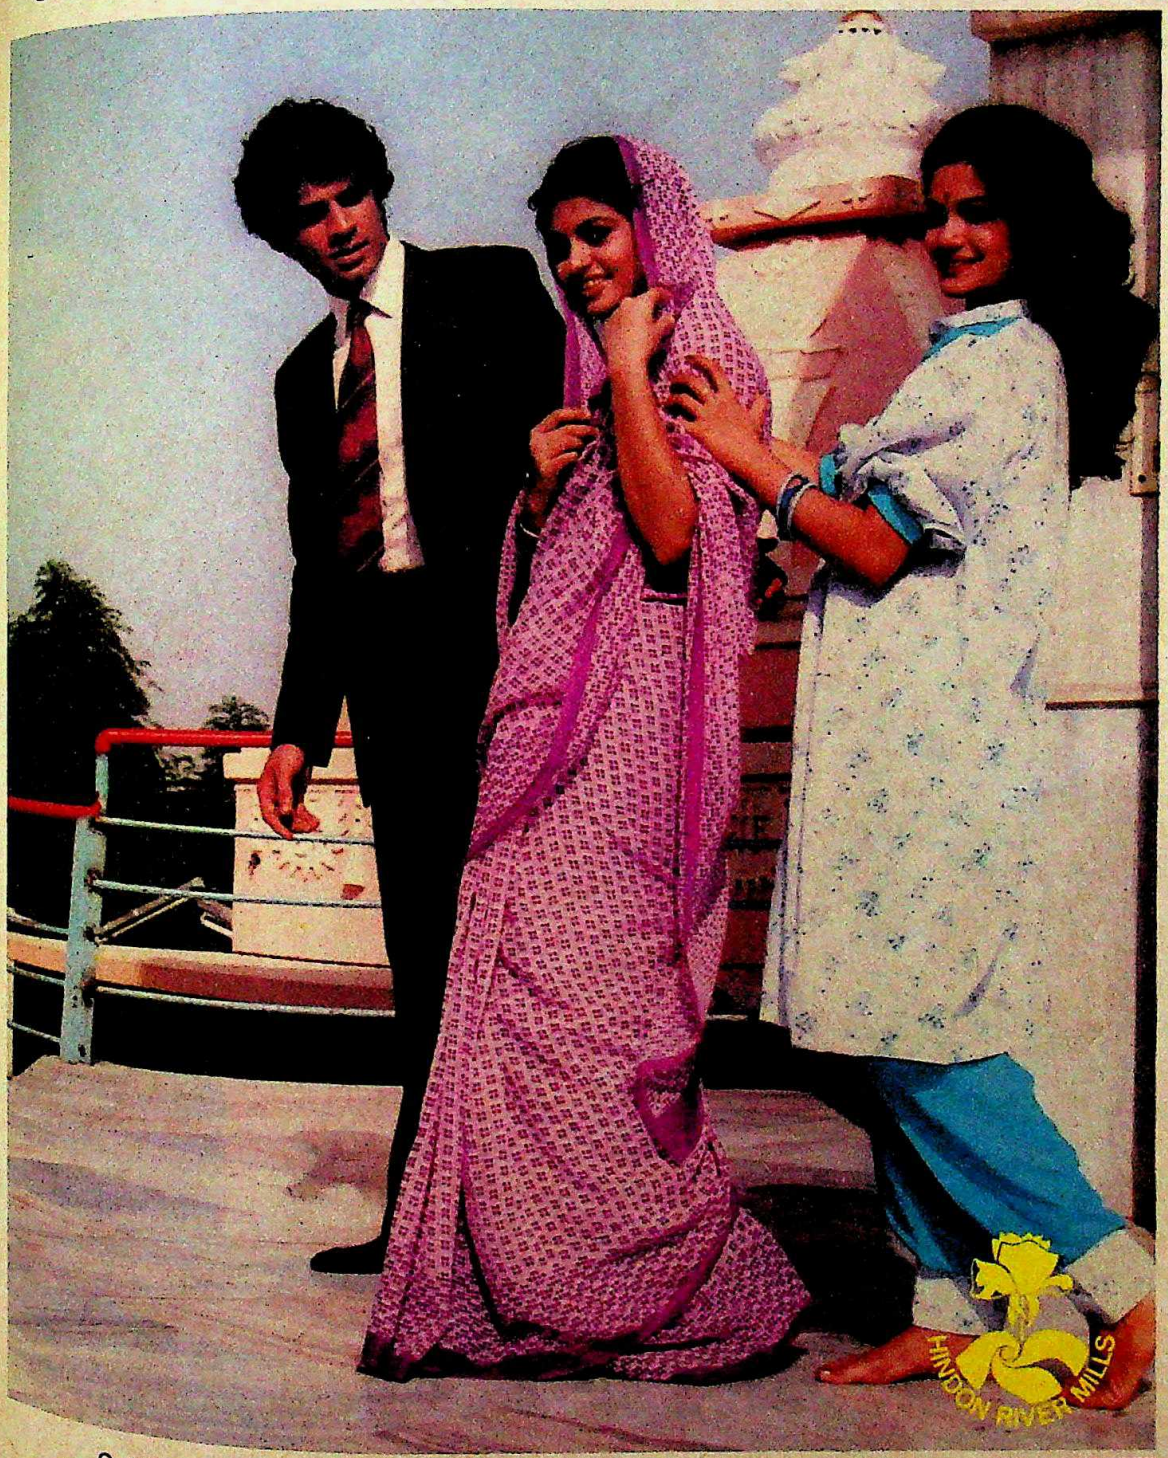
But for the present, both NTR and Joshi prefer to keep their differences under wraps. Yet, despite the courtesies, it is to be seen what the next round of telephonic instructions from NTR will bring when Joshi goes on a two-day tour of Anantapur district which includes the chief minister's Hindupur constituency later this month. When Joshi arrived in Hyderabad to take over charge, NTR had greeted her with a warm handshake instead of the normal, less effusive, namaste. Remarked a wag: "The keep-off sign will be evident when Rama Rao switches to the traditional namaste for the governor." —AMARNATH K. MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Traditionally Hindon
Contemporary in style

HINDON



Suitings, Shirtings, Dress Materials and Sarees in cotton, blends and 100% Polyester.

DCM TEXTILES

Available at over 550 DCM retail stores around the country and at all leading general textile stores near you.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

"After Spiderman, we'll have another Rasna!"

India's larg

Mudra:A:PI:2952

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

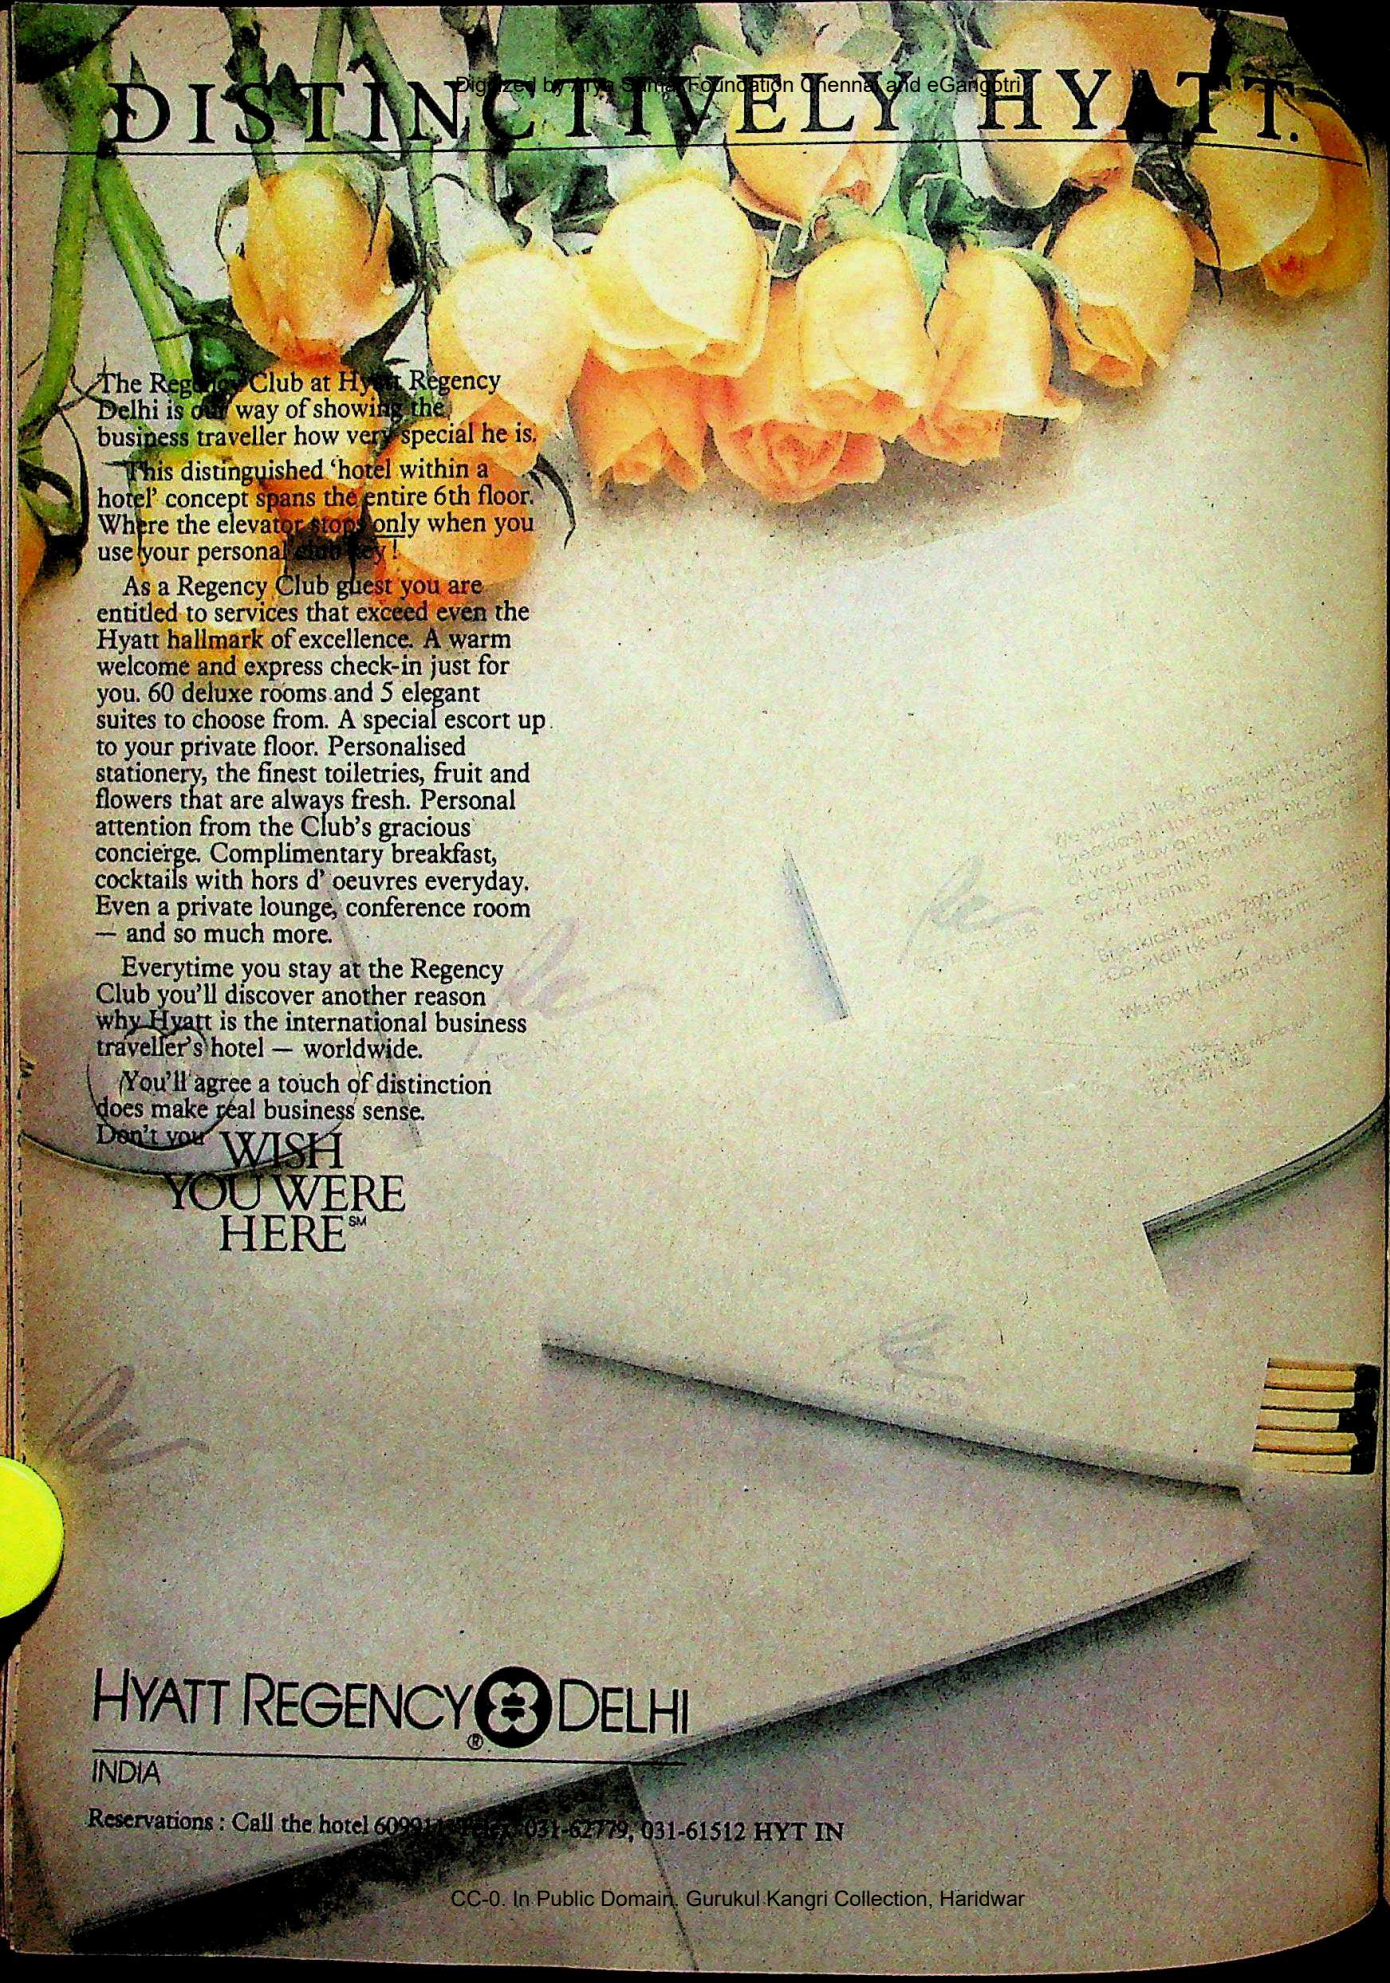
SO ORANGIE-ORANGIE!

India's largest selling Soft Drink Concentrate

Rasna

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



DISTINCTIVELY HYATT.

The Regency Club at Hyatt Regency Delhi is our way of showing the business traveller how very special he is.

This distinguished 'hotel within a hotel' concept spans the entire 6th floor. Where the elevator stops only when you use your personal club key!

As a Regency Club guest you are entitled to services that exceed even the Hyatt hallmark of excellence. A warm welcome and express check-in just for you. 60 deluxe rooms and 5 elegant suites to choose from. A special escort up to your private floor. Personalised stationery, the finest toiletries, fruit and flowers that are always fresh. Personal attention from the Club's gracious concierge. Complimentary breakfast, cocktails with hors d' oeuvres everyday. Even a private lounge, conference room — and so much more.

Everytime you stay at the Regency Club you'll discover another reason why Hyatt is the international business traveller's hotel — worldwide.

You'll agree a touch of distinction does make real business sense.

Don't you WISH YOU WERE HERE℠

HYATT REGENCY® DELHI

INDIA

Reservations : Call the hotel 609911, Telex: 031-62779, 031-61512 HYT IN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CONGRESS(I)

Conciliatory Moves

WITH most assemblies in session, the sprawling Bhavans of various state governments that dot New Delhi's exclusive Chanakyapuri area normally have a low occupancy during March-April. But last fortnight many of them were full up, with over 400 disgruntled Congressmen from all over the country parked in the capital. Though they came from West Bengal and Orissa in the east, Karnataka in the south, Bihar in the Hindi belt and Gujarat in the west, all of them had a common grouse: their state leadership was ineffective and did not deserve the support of the high command.

Their numbers and the intensity of their complaints took the Central leadership by surprise. For the first time after Mrs Gandhi's death, Delhi saw the familiar sight of dissidents flocking to party offices armed with memoranda against chief ministers and PCC(I) chiefs and demanding changes in the state leadership.

The growing dissidence, coming in the wake of the defiant postures by three former chief ministers, Jagannath Mishra, Madhavsinh Solanki and R.Gundu Rao, coincided with a change in the high command's strategy of dealing with disgruntled partymen. Earlier, dissidents, no matter how eminent, were not even given an audience, now it has been decided to meet them and 'sort out' their complaints. Said All-India Congress(I) Committee Vice-President Arjun Singh: "People in large numbers from various states came to us with complaints, either administrative in nature or related to personal problems. If someone concludes that there is a revolt in the party, that is just a figment of the imagination and we will not oblige the dissident by changing the leadership. But we are listening to them as well."

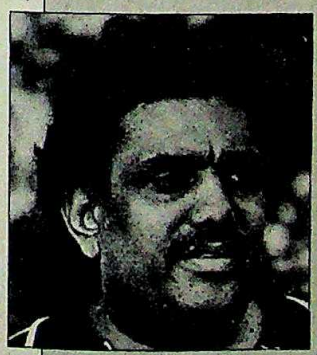
The attempt at rapprochement was kicked off by a summons to Solanki to explain the "leak" to the media of his critical memorandum to Rajiv. His hour-long meeting with Rajiv was followed by separate meetings with trusted aides Minister of State for Defence Arun Singh, and Arjun Singh. Gundu Rao was handled similarly, and both were told that they could not air their grievances in public. Said Singh: "Gundu Rao wants to work and we will find suitable work for him."

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

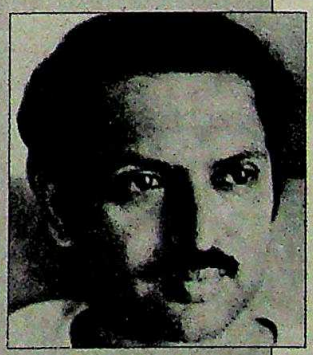
Arjun Singh: main mediator

Madhavsinh Solanki

Jagannath Mishra



Gundu Rao



Subrata Mukherjee

Growing dissidence led by had-been party stalwarts has forced the Congress(I) high command to begin listening to complaints.

Hardly had the troika succeeded in containing the rebellious mood of the had-been stalwarts, than dissidence in the ranks surfaced in Bihar, West Bengal and Orissa. While the West Bengal Congress (I) Legislature Party set a precedent of sorts by passing a resolution demanding the removal of Priya Ranjan Das Munshi from the presidentship of the PCC(I), hordes of dissidents from Bihar and Orissa led by various factional leaders rushed to Delhi. In their signed memoranda, they asserted that the party was paying a heavy political price by letting the present leaders stay in office. Specifically, they charged that:

- both chief ministers had lost control over the administration and depended on a coterie of bureaucrats for advice;
- officials were indulging in corrupt practices with immunity;
- development activities were behind schedule; and
- the chief ministers were not conceding the request of party MLA's for funds for development works in their individual constituencies;

The various factions in Bihar broke their caste affiliations to join hands against Chief Minister Bindeshwari Dubey, and said their number was above the three figure mark. But Dubey maintained that the number of dissident MLA's was between 40 and 50, which had "no meaning in a house of 240."

Orissa dissidents totalled only 14 MLA's and a handful of MP's, but undeterred by their small number and led by former PCC(I) chief Nityanand Mishra, were assertive enough to manage a meeting with Rajiv. One MP said that for the first time Rajiv appeared convinced that under the leadership of J.B. Patnaik, "Orissa has been ruined". Said dissident leaders Rasbehari Bahera and Umakant Mishra: "The prime minister and Central leaders must rescue Orissa from autocratic family rule. We, the legislators, don't want to become a party to the corruption and inaction of the Government of Patnaik."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

However, with a majority of the MLA's solidly behind him, Patnaik was sanguine about riding out the storm. In their meeting with Rajiv, both chief ministers also maintained that by washing dirty linen in public and leaking out corruption charges, the dissidents were besmirching the Congress(I)'s image.

Rajiv, on his part, moved on several fronts. On the one hand, he made it clear to the dissidents that their complaints were not serious enough to merit a change in the state leadership and they should patch up with their state leaders. On the other hand, he asked the chief ministers, in town for the National Integration Council meeting, to be more accommodating in their dealings with MLA's and other party workers. He directed his party general secretaries to undertake extensive tours of the states under their charge and prepare a report on the functioning of both the party and the Government.

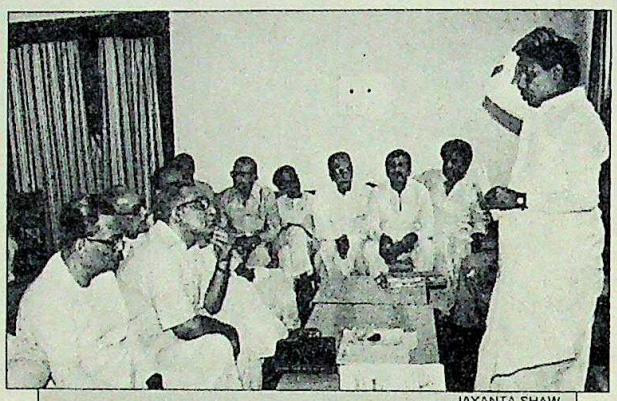
HE HAS also decided to hold fortnightly consultations with his office-bearers to sort out party squabbles. Said AICC(I) General Secretary G.K. Moopanar: "We heard their complaints seriously and found that these had more to do with routine administrative functioning. But we have taken a stand that all problems have to be sorted out at party forums. There is no need to air them in the press. All of us must learn to work together. No decision will either be reversed or taken under pressure."

The impact of this new policy was felt most strongly in West Bengal where the two heavyweights of state Congress(I) politics—Das Munshi, and party chief whip Subrata Mukherjee—announced a dramatic truce and swore that henceforth their only enemy would be the state's ruling Marxists. To prove that their new alliance meant business, Das Munshi also announced a programme to activate party workers through the state and to flag off their offensive against the Left Front by first gheraoing the Writers' Building—the state secretariat—next month. And Mukherjee reciprocated by declaring: "Now I am determined to stand by Priya and fight the communists unitedly."

This remarkable show of solidarity confounded not only the state's political pundits and the leftists, but state Congressmen as well. For the dramatic alliance came just when a split in the state unit of the party had seemed imminent. On April 3, Congress(I) legislators had openly revolted against Das Munshi's leadership. At a stormy three-hour session of the Congress(I) legislature party, as many as 51 of the state's 57 party MLA's had threatened to resign en bloc if the West Bengal PCC(I) was not immediately reconstituted and the recently-formed district committees dissolved.

Not only was Das Munshi condemned for running the state Congress(I) with the help of his former Congress(S) cronies but even the party high command was criticised for trying to foist leaders from above. Subrata Mukherjee, Sisir Bose, Zainal Abedin and Amar Bhattacharya were chosen to prepare a memorandum listing grievances for submission to Arjun Singh. Mukherjee flew to Delhi the same day to inform his party high command about the developments.

Das Munshi (below); Patnaik (bottom left); and Dubey: dissident targets



JAYANTA SHAW

Beleagured state leaders countered that by washing dirty linen and leaking corruption charges, dissidents were besmirching the party's image.

While in New Delhi, however, Mukherjee performed one of the most remarkable about-turns ever witnessed in the state Congress(I)'s shifting internal politics. Instead of a showdown, he meekly capitulated to Das Munshi and returned to Calcutta to flabbergast state Congressmen by declaring: "Priya has faced enough harassment and it is time that all of us forget our differences and cooperate with him."

Mukherjee's capitulation appears to result from a realisation that he was heading for political eclipse by playing the enfant terrible of the state Congress(I). Admitted Mukherjee: "I realised that neither the people nor party supporters will support me if I continued fighting inside the party. They will say I wrecked the party because of personal ambition." While what precisely transpired in Delhi between the two former arch-rivals remains a mystery, neutral Congressmen are most relieved. Said Gyan Singh Sohanpal: "It is the best thing that could have happened to the party, for our effectiveness as an opposition party in the state had become zero."

With one round of dissident activity over, Rajiv is faced with the problem of finding suitable political assignments for Congressmen who held important posts in the past and, despite their controversial image, continue to maintain their grip over a sizeable section of the party. Also, Rajiv's gamble of replacing venerable PCC(I) chiefs with young faces in Madhya Pradesh, Karnataka and Gujarat has not paid off so far. The organisational elections, scheduled for July, will be the real test for his new policy of the politics of consensus and his attempt to give the party a united image.

—PRABHU CHAWLA with FARZAND AHMED and INDRANIL BANERJIE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. Kurukshetra University Kurukshetra. Digitized by eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Hero Honda CD 100 It keeps the promise.

High performance
On the road all over India, the Hero Honda CD 100 is fulfilling the promise it made. A motorcycle that combines power with elegance, total comfort and safety, trouble-free performance and unbelievable economy.

4 Stroke engine
The Hero Honda CD 100's 4 stroke engine gives maximum fuel efficiency. No carbon on plugs and no decarbonising required. Virtually no engine oil consumption. No need to mix oil with petrol. And no smoke.

Phenomenal fuel efficiency
We promised you higher fuel efficiency. The Hero Honda CD 100 gives 80 km/litre (at 40 km/hr with a load of 130 kgs.), which is even less than 9 paise per km.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by [illegible]nnaj Foundation, Chennai and eGangotri

HONDA R&D

Technology from the world's No. 1

Honda's highly sophisticated R&D efforts have made it a household name in 150 countries and the world leader in two-wheeler technology. The new Honda CD 100 is a product of the latest in Honda technology.

Honda service standards

At Hero Honda authorised service centres in India, you get what Honda motorcycle drivers all over the world experience. Prompt, efficient and courteous service, from technicians specially trained by Hero Honda.

HERO HONDA

Committed to total customer satisfaction.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE SOFTPRO BUSINESS SYSTEMS SERIES. ACCOUNTING SOFTWARE THAT CAN BE CUSTOM-TAILORED. TO HELP YOU RUN YOUR BUSINESS. SMOOTHER. SMARTER. AND MUCH, MUCH BETTER.

The SoftPro Business Systems Series is a comprehensive set of PC software packages specially developed for the Indian market. By WIPRO. One of the most respected names in the field.

THE PERSONAL TOUCH

WIPRO has set up a unique network of VARs (Value Added Resellers). These VARs can help you implement the Business Systems Series just the way you want it. The VAR studies your system, analyses your requirements, customises the software and helps you implement the package. What this means is that when you go in for our computerised financial systems, you don't need to adapt to us.

We adapt to your needs.

THE COMPLETE SOLUTION

The SoftPro Business Systems Series consists of eight fully integrated programs to tackle almost every aspect of financial management and help you improve your productivity.

These are ● Financial Accounting (includes the P&L Account, Balance Sheet, Trial Balance, Day Book, Bank Book and so on) ● Inventory ● Customer Accounting ● Sales Analysis ● Order Entry/Invoicing ● Vendor Accounting ● Purchasing ● Purchase Analysis

THE MULTI - USER EDGE

The SoftPro Business Systems Series runs on the IBM PC/XT and its compatibles. It scores over other software in converting your PC into a multi-user system with the addition of standard terminals. So you have the most cost-effective solutions to your business needs.

Any way you look at it, SoftPro is unbeatable. On a number of counts. Such as support. Training. Enhancements. High quality documentation. And implementation.

All at a competitive price.

And when it comes to quality it's about the best you can get. That's important. Because, your PC is only as good as your software is.

Demo Diskette

See SoftPro in action. Write in for our special Demo Diskettes designed to operate on any IBM PC compatible.* They are available on both the Office Productivity Series and the Business Systems Series. For each diskette, send a Demand Draft for Rs 100, in favour of WIPRO SYSTEMS LIMITED, to Wipro Systems Limited, 3rd Floor HVS Building, 1 Edward Road, Bangalore 560 052. Phone: 569229.

*Such as the HCL Busybee, the DCM Tandy1000, the Chi^2 from Chowgule, the SNPC from Hinditron and the Wipro PC.

SoftPro
PREMIUM QUALITY SOFTWARE FROM WIPRO

WSL-1859C

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUNJAB

Restoring the Balance

THE INERTIA, finally, seemed to be coming to an end. Pushed by mounting terrorist killings and a growing feeling of government paralysis, both the Akali Government in Chandigarh and the Centre took some quick-fire steps to show that they both meant business. As the Punjab police stepped up their retaliatory actions against the terrorists notching up valuable successes, the Centre sent Siddhartha Shankar Ray as governor and Julio Ribeiro to take charge of the police and shore up their sagging morale. A new commission was announced which would put the derailed Punjab accord back on the rails, and once more it seemed that the initiative, which had passed into terrorist hands, would again be returning to the side of sanity and law and order.

Yet, even as these moves made themselves felt on the ground, the terrorists showed that they were far from being bested. In their most dramatic 'success', they burst upon unwary policemen guarding a clutch of notorious killers outside the court of the additional session judge, Jalandhar, showered a hail of bullets from their Stens and machine pistols, killing six policemen on the spot, maiming another four and set free three of their dreaded partners in crime.

The killing showed up the absurd amateurishness of the state's police. That morning, the scene outside the court of Additional Sessions Judge Prithipal Singh Grewal was tense. It was 11.30 a.m. Four undertrials, arraigned in Chander's killing, awaited their call outside the garden some 25 metres away. Their case was listed at number seven, and they asked to be taken to the toilets. Although there is a provision for urinals near the court room, the policemen took them to a public toilet adjacent to Post Office Road. As the four entered the toilet, five police officials encircled it. Suddenly shots rang out across the road. Two constables and a head constable lay dead. Another, who tried to run, fell injured. An assistant sub-inspector hid himself in a lawyer's office. The attacking terrorists jumped over the wall and freed three of their colleagues.

Meanwhile, Head Constable Dilbagh Singh who was on routine duty at the court heard the shots, rushed out, snatched a carbine from a constable and as the terrorists were escaping towards Netaji Park, fired at them. But before he and another constable who was loading his rifle could hit anyone, the terrorists providing cover to their escaping colleagues killed them too. The miscreants then calmly walked to a blue jeep, but the engine wouldn't start and four of them push-started it as others provided cover by firing in the air. The engine fired and the desperadoes disappeared into the city, passing at least six CRPF posts. A white Fiat drove away in tandem, providing cover.

Sukhdev Singh (top); and freed terrorist Bhola: police negligence

Ironically, it was only when one of the terrorists, Subegh Singh, surrendered—for reasons that still aren't clear—that the police knew what had hit them. Among those revealed to have participated in the assault was the short, cool and light-footed Jarnail Singh of Halwara village in Ludhiana, who masterminded Longowal's killing. Others involved were Gursewak Singh of Raikot and Ranjit Singh alias Rana of Amritsar. Gursewak had only recently escaped from the custody of the Rajasthan police. Subegh Singh is an old friend of Gurinder Singh alias Bhola, who escaped along with two other undertrials, Sukhdev Singh and Sarbjit Singh, the alleged killers of Romesh Chander, editor of the Hind Samachar group of newspapers.

State police chief Julio Ribeiro admitted later that the incident showed police negligence. The undertrials were not kept in the guards' room but allowed to sit on a bench outside. They were allowed to go to a public toilet, and contrary to instructions the courts were not properly screened or guarded. The incident sent tremors through the force. And in an effort to boost morale, Ribeiro declared: "We shall give them a befitting reply."

That, indeed, is what Ribeiro has been sent to Punjab to do, but it is no easy matter. His induction primarily aimed at revamping the Punjab police and, more important, giving it the leadership it needs to confront its enemies (see page 68). Indeed, the appointment is just one of the new moves unveiled in New Delhi after nearly two months of dithering to give substance to the Centre's claim that it was solidly behind Barnala.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The despatch of Siddhartha Shankar Ray provided effective back-stopping to the Akali Government, a man in reserve to step in if the popularly-elected Government wasn't able to cope. Ray's appointment was necessitated by Shankar Dayal Sharma's desire to leave Chandigarh for personal reasons. And he may also serve as a conduit between Barnala and Rajiv Gandhi.

However, most Akalis were surprised by the sudden and unannounced change of governor. Senior party leaders G.S. Tohra and Prakash Singh Badal absented themselves from the swearing-in ceremony while Barnala and colleagues Sukhjinder Singh and Basant Singh Khalsa kept a low profile. "I was informed about the new change. Sadly, there is no real tradition of consulting the chief minister before bringing in the governor," said Barnala. The Congress(I), on the other hand, was jubilant. "Ray's appointment is a welcome change. It shows the keenness of the Centre to save Punjab from terrorism and extremism and bring peace," said Congress(I) Legislature Party leader Gurbrinder Kaur Brar. Fearful of being labelled partisan, a worried Ray tried to put the record straight by saying: "Tell them I am no Congressman now. I am not here to look after the interest of the party but to do my every bit within the Constitution to help Punjab. I have no special favours for Congressmen."

THE APPOINTMENTS of both Ray and Ribeiro are aimed at bolstering the state Government and at the same time, the Government announced a new commission to determine which Hindi-speaking villages in Punjab would be transferred to Punjab, while work on the controversial Sutlej-Yamuna link canal might be handed over to a Central authority. Sources close to the Congress(I) high command emphasised that the Centre had no wish to take on the terrorists directly. The strategy seems to hinge on:

► Reforming the Punjab police and giving it effective professional leadership so that it is protected as far as possible from political and social pressure;

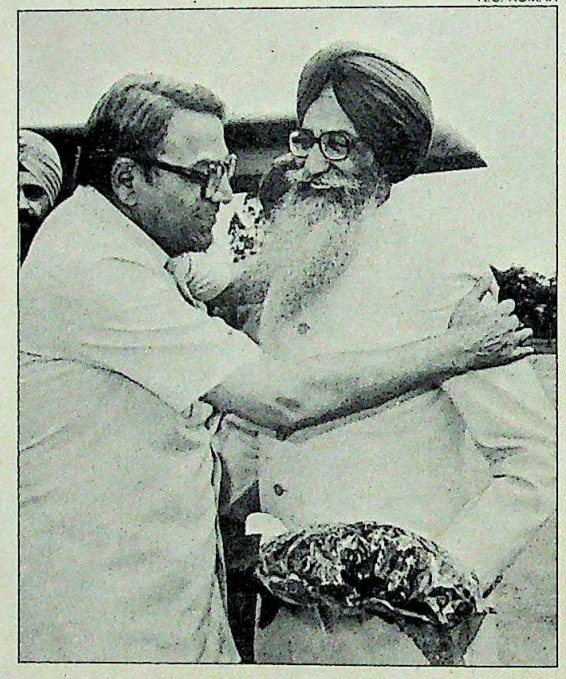
► Sending the required paramilitary forces to help keep the peace;

► Keeping up the pressure on terrorists so that the widespread feeling that they can act at will is checked;

► Scaling the border more effectively by shooting those who seek to cross illegally—in the six weeks till last month, more than 40 people had been killed on the border;

► Trying to mobilise public opinion on all sides, including in the Congress(I), to offer political support to the Barnala Government; and

N.C. KUMAR



Ray being received by Barnala: man in reserve

► Expediting the settlement of the outstanding issues from the Punjab accord.

Since the failure to keep to the original time-table of the Punjab accord, the initiative had passed out of the hands of the Akali Government, and it was the terrorists that were calling the shots. Still, though counter-pressure built up as more of them are being apprehended or killed in encounters, their murderous campaign hadn't slowed down.

Last fortnight saw another 15 people lose their lives and three more towns—Garhshankar, Hoshiarpur and Patiala—came under curfew. But the tide had begun to turn in at least one respect: the police met with significant success in nabbing at least seven known terrorists and were able to establish the identity of the people involved in four major shoot-outs where seven people were killed.

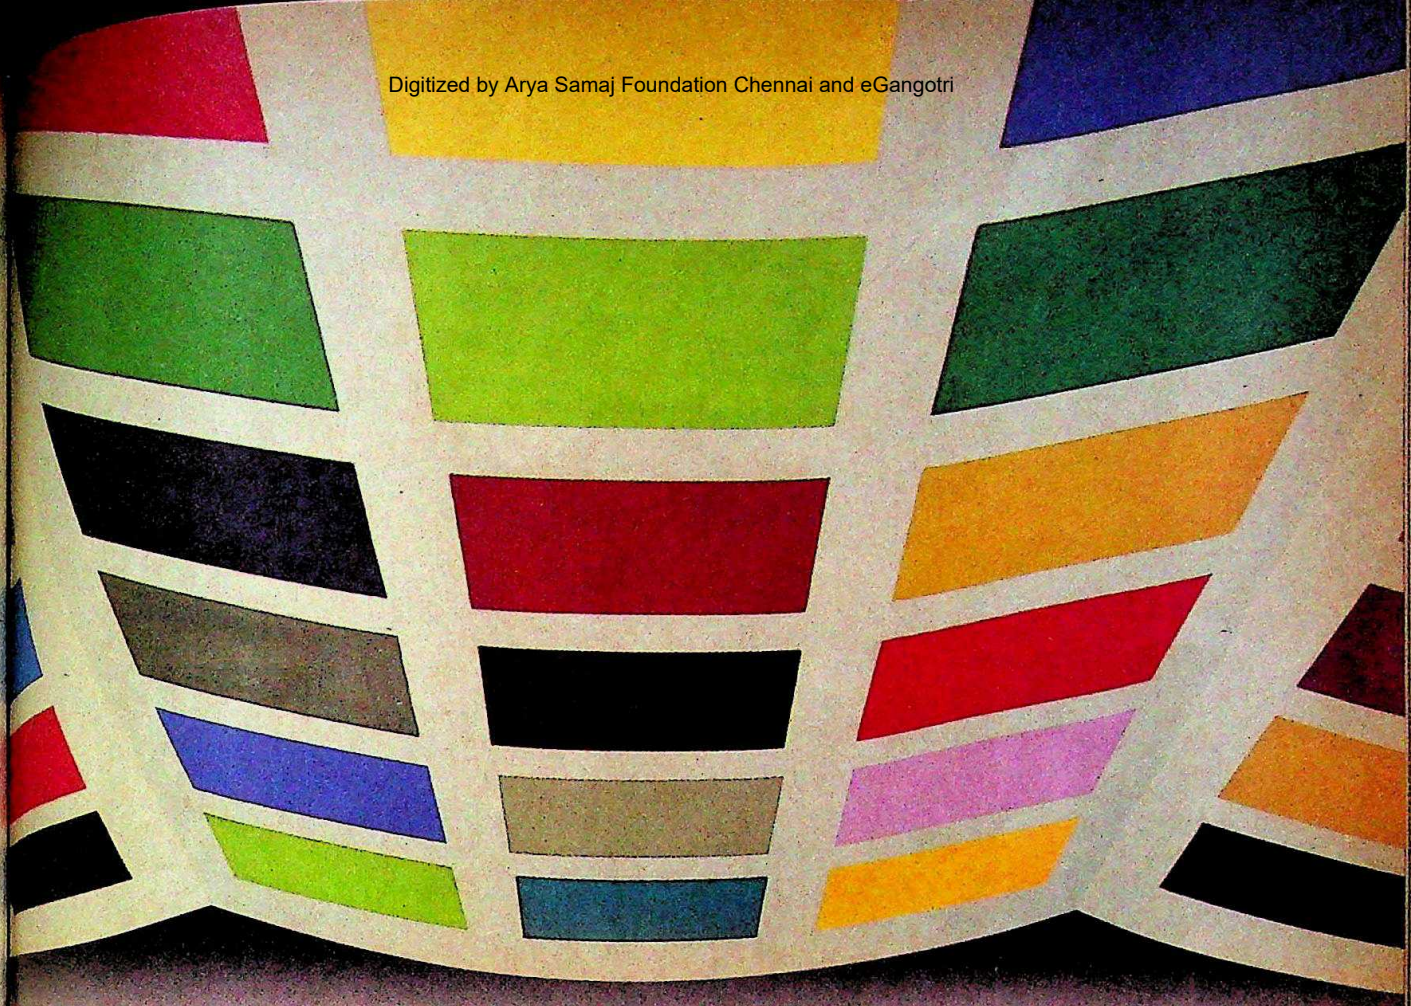
Forty kilometres from Jalandhar, the police had a rare vein of luck when they raided the farmhouse of Roshan Singh, general secretary of the Kapurthala unit of the United Akali Dal and arrested Gurmukh Singh, Rachhpal Singh and Gurmeet Singh. The police recovered the jeep (PJZ 4971) used in the Nakodar shoot-out, 232 cartridges of .303 rifles, 125 rounds of 9mm bullets, 25 rounds of ancient 410 bore muskets and 28 bullets of .38 calibre and .455 bore revolvers as well as two revolvers. Soon after the Nakodar incident, a BSF patrol under Inspector Surjit Singh chased the terrorists up to Lohian. Later, guided by the tyre marks of the terrorists' jeep, the police reached Raval village on the Jalandhar-Kapurthala border within half-an-hour, and the terrorists were caught unawares. The only regret the police had was that among the five who escaped from the farmhouse was one of the most wanted terrorists in the state, Manbir Singh. Ribeiro believes that this was the gang involved in the brutal killing of seven people at Kapurthala on March 6 and destroying the house of Inspector Jaskirat Singh at Kassochohal village near Kapurthala the very next day.

Again at Khanna, as the terrorists were escaping on foot towards Amloh in Patiala district, Ludhiana police chief Surjit Singh Bains heard about the shoot-out on his way from Patiala. Significantly, the message also gave the direction in which the terrorists had escaped. Bains led the chase and caught one terrorist. Two more were arrested later. Their interrogation revealed how well organised they were. Five terrorists under the command of Gurdev Singh boarded a bus from Tarn Taran at 5.30 a.m. and travelled 250 km to Majhri village near Khanna, where they were provided with pistols and divided into two groups. One went into the bustling market, where they killed three and injured four people, and the other group headed for Amloh. Ribeiro is confident after the surrender of Subegh Singh, one of the killers of the six policemen, that he will be able to catch the others. "The terrorists will have to pay with their lives for the crimes they are committing," he declared while announcing awards for the policemen who caught them. But it's going to be hard work before Punjab's books of blood are balanced.

—GOBIND THUKRAL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

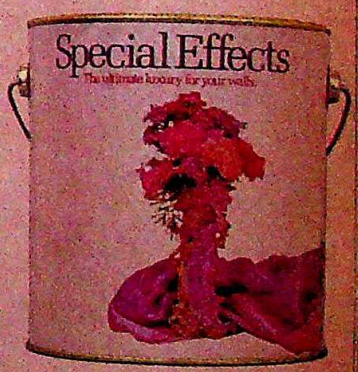


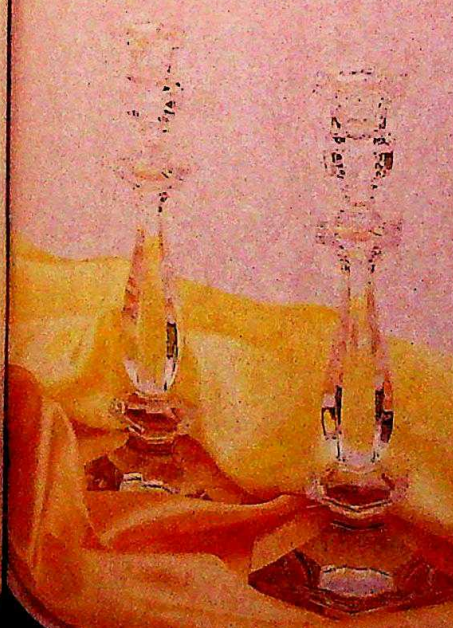
Make room for Special Effects.

Special Effects. The Premium Acrylic Emulsion Paint.
Transforms the walls of your home dramatically.
Making them stand out. So you discover
an extra dimension to your room.

You'll just love coming home to the excitement of Special Effects, day after day. Its soft splendour will touch your eyes. And you'll see the glimmer of its rich sheen in someone's eyes.

Your walls never had luxury in such a range of new shades. Shades that will make even the rainbow blush. And the magic of Special Effects is so easy to keep.





Special Effects
The ultimate luxury for your walls.

Jenson & Nicholson

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Rediffusion/JN/4629

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IS A REVOLUTION ON WHEELS ABOUT TO TAKE FLIGHT?

There's every sign that India's automotive industry is experiencing a take-off like never before. Bringing a whole new breed of two-wheelers, cars and commercial vehicles on to the road. Throwing up new challenges for engineering.

At TI Engineering we have a track record of meeting emerging needs with our application engineering skills.

We exercise this capability from the raw material stage. The largest input of steel in the business allows us to use total selectivity in the choice of raw material suited for a given application.

With our special processing knowhow we then add value to a steel strip. For example, cold rolling it into a soft magnetic steel strip vital for the communications industry. Welding it into a tube that matches a tolerance limit of ± 0.02 mm. Cold forming a metal section that reduces the steel requirement by as much as 30%.

Quality of manufacture comes under close scrutiny at 35 Quality Assurance Checkpoints. Shopfloor tests like the Cone Expansion Test and sophisticated Eddy Current Testing ensure that match the most exacting standards and ecifications.

For the automotive industry, we engineered to specifications of Honda, Suzuki, Toyota and can, among others. In most cases for the very first e in India, and in record time. We have similarly veloped extra deep drawing quality strips for such tical applications as shells for detonator fuses.
d formed sections for switchgear. Hexagonal es for textile machines. Only a few of the many mples.

TI Engineering, a division of Tube Investments of India Ltd., represents a synergy of strengths ... Metallurgical and process knowhow backed by the resources of TI of the U.K. Application engineering. Innovative design. Forward thinking. And a reputation for committed customer service.

That's why, whether it's strips, tubes or sections, you can rely on TI Engineering to provide the best value for your needs. Today ... and in the years to come.

TI ENGINEERING

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Guru

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MISHRA COMMISSION

Serious Setbacks

EVEN when the Justice Ranganath Mishra commission of inquiry was appointed a year ago, independent observers had predicted that it would turn out to be a lame duck investigation. A tough inquiry would have caused important heads to roll. And Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi had made no secret of his own reluctance to order an official probe into the large-scale killing of Sikhs during the riots following Mrs Gandhi's assassination in October 1984. He had once referred to the riots as a "dead issue," and had argued against "opening up old wounds."

The commission was finally appointed because of public pressure and the exigencies of the Punjab accord. But those who predicted that it would not get very far seemed to find their prophecy coming true last fortnight when an influential body of eminent lawyers and jurists—the Citizens Justice Committee (CJC)—which had been invited to assist the Commission in its fact-finding—withdrew from the Commission's hearings after bitterly criticising its procedures in a 44-page petition addressed to Justice Mishra.

The CJC alleged that the Commission was failing to protect witnesses who were testifying on behalf of the victims, that the witnesses were subjected to continuing threats and intimidation and that the commission was conducting its affairs in such secrecy that no independent evaluation was possible. Said V.M. Tarkunde, retired judge of the Bombay High Court: "We did not feel there was any point in our participating any more. This has been a one-sided investigation. We were never given a chance to participate in it as we had been promised."

Commission personnel refused to comment on the CJC decision. R.L. Gupta, secretary to the commission, offered "no comment" while Justice Mishra could not even be approached for a response.

The CJC's withdrawal from the commission's proceeding removes the only body that was actively representing victims and survivors of the November 1984 violence. The CJC had got more than 600 affidavits from victims alleging participation by the police and politicians in the carnage. Among the 18 members of the committee (which grew out of an earlier team that conducted a citizens' inquiry into the riots) are former Chief Justice S.M.Sikri, Lt. Gen. J.S. Aurora, and journalist Khushwant Singh.

Relations between the Commission and the committee had never been cordial. From the start, CJC members claimed that the independent investigation agency (headed by a junior superintendent of police from Orissa) appointed by the commission was not powerful enough to undertake investigations involving senior government officials and politicians. In addition, while the CJC produced hundreds of witnesses who have been subjected to rigorous cross-examination within the commission, "not one officer from the government or the Delhi administration has been invited to step into the witness box," the CJC petition said. And even though a total of some 2,900 affidavits have supposedly been filed until now, "no copy of any of the affidavits filed by people other than CJC witnesses has been provided to the CJC for scrutiny."

"This has been a one-sided investigation. We were never really given a chance to participate in it as we had been promised."

JUSTICE TARKUNDE

"The terms of reference of the commission were biased against the victims, the victims were forced to come to the investigation with the burden of proof on them."

LT. GEN. AURORA

A CJC member, advocate Soli Sorabjee, said that key interviews had been conducted behind closed doors and "we were not given an opportunity to cross-examine anybody." The CJC's list of complaints against the commission is long and weighty. Vital government documents, including police reports on the riots, summoned from the government at the CJC's behest were kept secret from the CJC despite repeated requests for disclosure. Another request that nine senior government officials responsible for maintaining law and order during the riots be summoned was turned down on the grounds that their statements had already been recorded by the commission. In fact, only five of the nine had been examined by the commission. Their identities were not disclosed and their statements were not made available. In addition, "the same police officers against whom allegations of intimidation and harassment had been made by the witnesses were entrusted the task of investigating the allegations." Their reports, along with replies from the Delhi administration, were made available to the Commission but not disclosed to the CJC.

The citizens' committee is aware that its decision to withdraw from the commission's proceedings is likely to be misunderstood in the surcharged atmosphere in Punjab. Members said the decision had not been taken in haste, and that it had been contemplated for several months. Said Gen. J.S.Aurora: "From the beginning, the terms of reference of the Commission were biased against the victims. The investigation did not go to the victims, the victims were forced to come to the investigation with the burden of proof on them."

Following the CJC's withdrawal, the work of the commission is almost certain to be speeded up. But when the commission does give its final report, it may find that it has few takers.

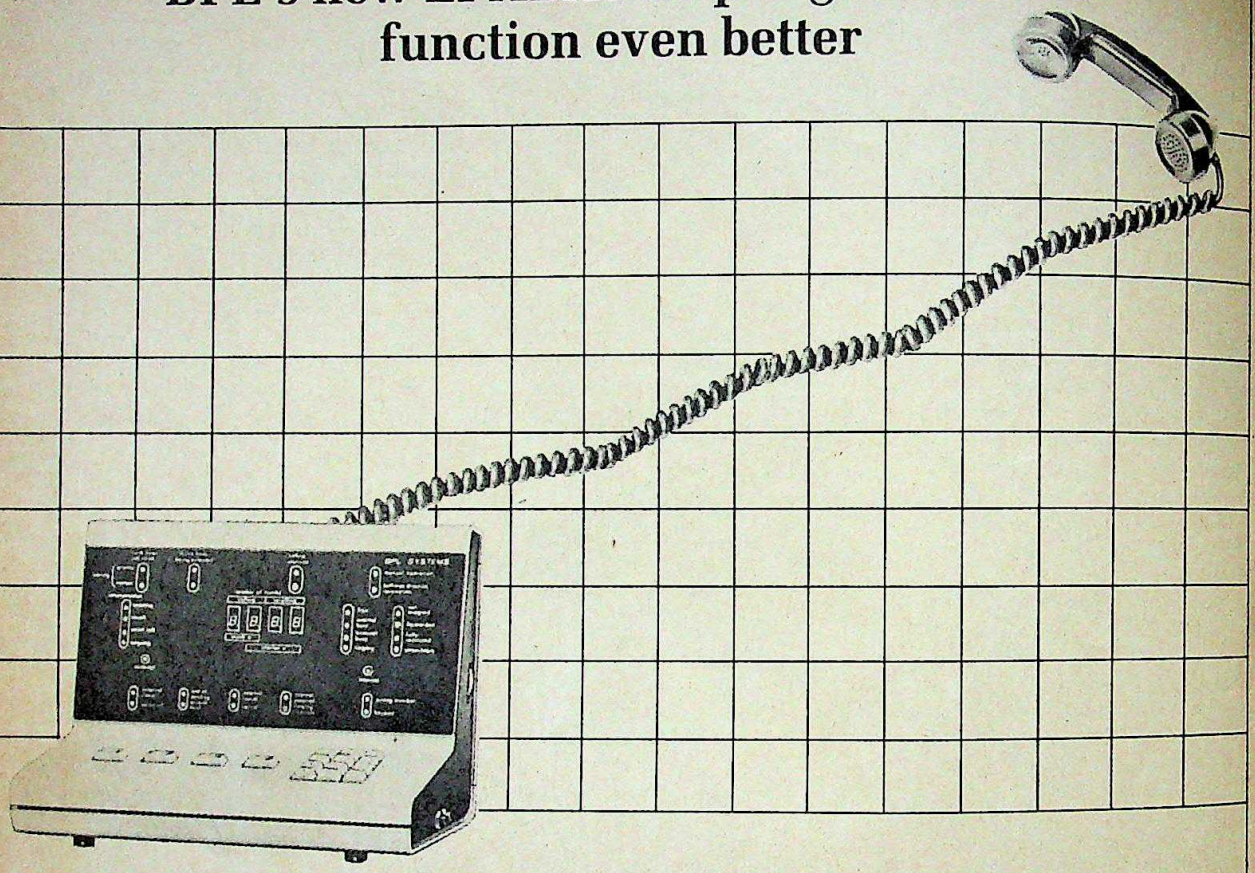
—INDERJIT BADHWAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Experience proves it

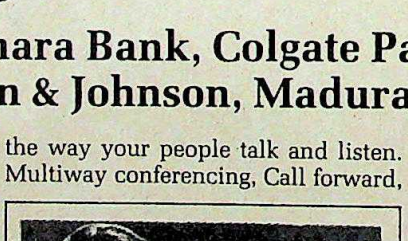
BPL's new EPABXs help organisations function even better



Ask Canara Bank, Colgate Palmolive, Johnson & Johnson, Madura Coats...

BPL is the first company to give the country a microprocessor based electronic PABX. An exchange to match international standards. Enhance office productivity. Control telephone expenses. Today, BPL's EPABXs are functioning satisfactorily in a number of Banks, Government offices, Corporate and Multinational organisations. All over the country. And the unique functions of the EPABX continue to keep it way ahead of the rest.

Take a look at some of the features of the EPABX. It can truly revolutionise the way your people talk and listen. Multiway conferencing, Call forward,



Follow me, Auto call back, Priority and many more. It's just the system you've been looking for. A system that you can depend on. Get one to work for you – Now!

BPL's EPABX manufacturing infrastructure is supported by seven integrated factories, three R&D units, facilities for in-house manufacture of critical components, comprehensive tool rooms and PCB plants.

The Electronic PABX from BPL – The Single Largest Integrated Source of Office Automation Products in India.

BPL-INDIA

In pursuit of perfection

Computers ● Communication ● Components
Instrumentation (Industrial, Medical & Measurement) ● Office Automation ● Consumer Electronics

Central Marketing Organisation: BPL-Centre, 32, Church Street, Bangalore – 560 001. Tel: 572321/2/6. Telex: 0845-511.
Branch Offices at: Bangalore, Bombay, Calcutta, Hyderabad, Madras, New Delhi, Palghat.

1193

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MAHARASHTRA

Eviction Problems

Aaj ki raat bahut garam hawa chalti hai,
Aaj ki raat na footpath pe neend ayegi,
Tum utho, tum utho, tum bhi utho,
Tum utho, tum utho, tum bhi utho.
Koi khidki isi deewar mein khul jayegi.
from Kaifi Azmi's Makaan

A FEW decades after Kaifi Azmi wrote that inspiring poem on the plight of homeless construction workers, scores of slum dwellers woke up one morning last fortnight in Bombay to find by their side none other than the poet's daughter, the actress Shabana Azmi. "We were stunned when we saw Shabana Azmi," said Phooljahan Begum, 35, a resident of the Sanjay Gandhi Nagar, who after being evicted was now occupying the footpath along General Jagannath Bhosale Marg in posh south Bombay. "It is always a surprise anyway when rich people come to our aid. But she was very nice, she told us we shouldn't worry, that they will ensure the Government gives us alternative accommodation."

In a surprise day-long operation on March 12, about 300 huts nestling on reclaimed land were demolished by municipal workers and policemen led by Bombay's additional collector (encroachments) and Madhukar Patil, controller of slums. Nearly 1,500 residents of Sanjay Gandhi Nagar salvaged whatever they could and many pitched makeshift shelters on the footpaths, some along the compound wall of the 17-storey Sarang Building occupied by Cabinet ministers and judges. The authorities quickly fenced in the land.

It was here that at 9 a.m. on April 1, Shabana Azmi and documentary film makers Anand Patwardhan and Uma Sehgal led over a hundred slum dwellers to symbolically reclaim the land. They were soon arrested and taken to the metropolitan magistrate's court at Azad Maidan, where they were joined by actor Om Puri, film maker Govind Nihalani, scientist Homi Sethna, writers Vijay Tendulkar, Asghar Ali Engineer and Dinkar Sakrikar. The somewhat overawed police served them pau-bhaji and tea before releasing them around 2 p.m.

Commenting on her involvement, Shabana Azmi said later: "It was the first time that I participated in a public protest. Basically, I went because I was very moved by Anand's film Hamara Shahar. In the beginning I felt I was becoming a heroine for doing nothing. But then the response of the people was wonderful. I was really amazed by the verve and fervour shown by them, especially the women. This creates in me a tremendous sense of responsibility."

It also created a fresh obstacle in the path of the municipal authorities to clear families who came after 1980 have also been evicted. "Unfortunately an impression has been created that we plan to clear all the slum colonies in Bombay," says Jamshed Kanga, municipal commissioner, "we neither have the resources nor the desire to do this. Our priority now is to clear hutments from pavements or public land required for the development of civic services."

But in the absence of both a master plan and sufficient resources, the Government has been able to earmark only six plots of water-logged land for the BMC to develop. The corporation has already spent Rs 40 lakh on just one plot at Dindoshi in Malad, where recently-

PRADEEP CHANDRA/Free Press

Azmi with slum dwellers: surprise aid the city of unauthorised slums and pavement dwellers. Out of a population of 90 lakh, an estimated 46 lakh live in makeshift homes. Last July, the Supreme Court permitted the authorities to renew from November 1, the slum clearance operation which the court had stayed for two years. "The Government's policy is clear," said V. Subramaniam, the state housing minister. "Where the land is required for a public purpose the hutments will be removed. But we've taken a humanitarian view and have decided to provide alternative accommodation to not only those who came before 1976, as the Supreme Court ruled, but also to those who came up to 1980."

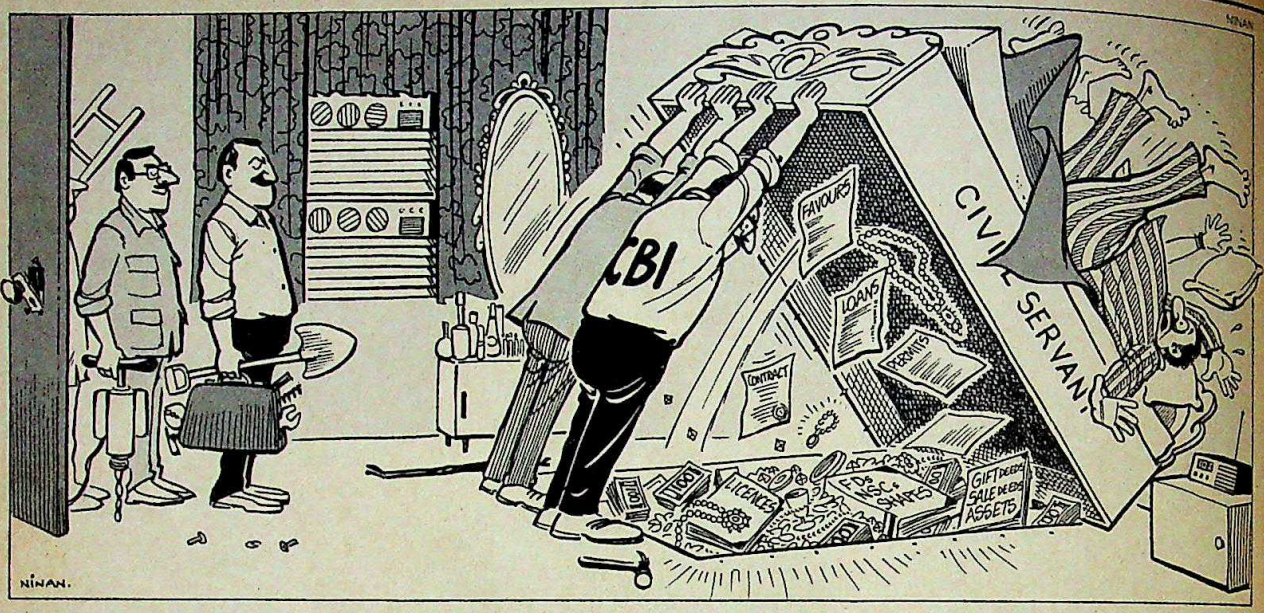
In the first phase of the operation lasting till June, 15,000 families are to be evicted. Nearly 2,000 have already been rehoused on newly-developed sites-and-services in the suburbs and 18,000 evicted slum dwellers have been dumped. The Government proposes to utilise Rs 55 crore of the Rs 100-crore loan promised by the prime minister, for slum development including Rs 15 crore for redeveloping Dharavi. "We cannot do very much unless we get tremendous assistance from the Central and state governments," a senior municipal official, confessed.

However, officials have been forced to respond to Shabana's protest. The additional collector sent notices to the slum dwellers to provide proof of occupation and Chief Minister S.B. Chavan also agreed to look into it. But the authorities are in a quandary—if they provide alternative accommodation without proof of occupation before 1980, they set a precedent for lakhs of other slum dwellers in Bombay. If they don't, they will reaffirm the fact that there is no permanent place for the poor in India's richest city.

—M.RAHMAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



RAIDS

Exposing Bureaucracy

THE MASSIVE raids caught everyone by surprise, including the steel-framed Indian civil service and publicity-shy bankers. Sleuths of the Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI) swooped on senior officials in the Government and public sector undertakings, and then briefed journalists extensively about the juicy details of what the raids had unearthed. The CBI raided the homes of 30 officials in 19 cities, including an IAS official on deputation with the Food Corporation of India (FCI), a programme director with Doordarshan and over a dozen managers of nationalised banks and other public sector organisations. Last fortnight, as the raids continued, the unaccounted assets recovered totalled over Rs 2.5 crore and the frauds exposed involved more than Rs 50 crore. Said a CBI official: "We have never had such success earlier while raiding officials.This proves that the bureaucracy has also contributed to the generation of black money."

In fact, the CBI has set a record during the last three months by launching cases against 83 government officials, including three belonging to the IAS. Last year in raids on 78 officials, the CBI exposed fraud worth Rs 12 crore and recovered assets worth Rs 1.41 crore (see chart). Said a senior official who was coordinating the raids: "We thought we had a pretty good idea about the amount that would be recovered, but the catches surpassed our wildest estimates."

Some of the prime catches of recent months testify to the extent of corruption that frequently goes undiscovered:

► During a raid on the house of a junior official in the Directorate-General of Technical Development (DGTD), the CBI found documents showing assets worth over Rs 12 lakh which were not accounted for. His monthly salary was barely Rs 2,200. The official, it turned out, was related to a former minister in Mrs Gandhi's cabinet.

► An IAS officer posted as regional manager with the FCI owned a few apple orchards, plots of industrial land, three cars including an imported one, an electronics factory and three bank lockers. The estimated value of the assets: over Rs 50 lakh. His monthly take-home salary was no more than Rs 3,500.

► The search and interrogation of an IAS officer in Hyderabad on deputation with the Steel Ministry led to the disclosure that he had illegally married a second time, was maintaining his wives in separate houses, owned two houses in the prestigious Banjara Hills area, and had placed two cars at the disposal of his wives. Two kilogrammes of gold were recovered from his lockers. His monthly take-home salary was less than Rs 3,000.

► An inventory of the documents and valuables seized from the residence of an industrial adviser with the DGTD included Rs 52,000 in cash, two commercial flats worth over Rs 10 lakh, a plot in a new housing colony outside Delhi, National Saving Certificates worth Rs 1.60 lakh and a monthly cumulative deposit of Rs 10,000 with a nationalised bank. His net salary was barely Rs 2,800 per month.

The CBI struck similar pay-dirt with bank officials, exposing the rot that had set in. For example, P.K. Nedungady, a former general manager of the State Bank of Travancore, was instrumental in advancing a Rs 4-crore loan to a textile mill. When this irregularity was detected, he left the bank and joined the mill at a monthly salary of Rs 8,000.

In another case, the CBI discovered papers showing loans given by a bank general manager to bogus beneficiaries under the 20-point programme. The money, it turned out, was actually being used for buying immovable property that was then audaciously rented back to the bank. And from the house of a senior general manager of a nationalised bank in Karnataka, the CBI recovered documents showing bank loans worth Rs 80 lakh made to fictitious people. Using this money, the officer had been advancing loans to private individuals at 24 per cent interest for speculative purposes. Explained a deputy director of the CBI who raided most of the bank officials: "This is the first case I know of public money being used for private banking."

The drive against corrupt officials in the Government and public sector organisations was given a push by the prime minister himself. The Department of Personnel and Administrative Reforms (DPAR), which comes under the prime minister, issued detailed guidelines to all the ministries and more than 200 public sector corporations on the need to improve the image of these departments.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The DPAR identified organisations like the offices of chief controller of imports and exports, FCI, the DGTD, the Income-Tax and Excise Departments, the Steel Ministry, the Information & Broadcasting Ministry and all the nationalised banks for special attention because it was from these offices that the Government received more than 70 per cent of the complaints of corruption. In addition, the DPAR also chose local bodies like the Delhi Municipal Corporation and the Delhi Development Authority for special shock treatment. Said Minister of State for Personnel and Administrative Reforms P. Chidambaram: "A three-pronged strategy has been adopted to fight corruption. A time-bound action plan has been suggested for the identification of the corruption-prone areas and expeditious disposal of cases." According to the new approach there will be simultaneous raids on the entire chain of people involved in any particular case of corruption. A clear directive has also gone out to all the public corporations to either remove people with doubtful integrity from sensitive posts or require them compulsorily if they are above 50 years.

However, before the ministries or departments could take any action on DPAR's directives, the CBI (which comes under DPAR) struck with a vengeance. Last year, in October itself it raided over 20 senior income tax and customs officials, besides more than a dozen other public sector employees. It was during these raids that the CBI was surprised by the amount of unaccounted wealth and money possessed by the moderately paid government employees. Another round of searches was carried out in November and December, taking the total for the full year to 73, from only 40 in the first nine months of the year.

When the new year dawned, the raiders attention was focused on bank men. On one day in January, 48 officials of 19 nationalised banks were raided in 27 cities. As a joint secretary in the DPAR put it, the targets were vertically integrated. If the CBI marked the general manager, it also chose all those working directly under him who were believed to be accomplices in siphoning off public money.

What has been unearthed so far may be no more than the tip of the iceberg. For more than 2,000 cases are still pending with the CBI and the Central Vigilance Commission for further investigation.

"A three-pronged strategy has been adopted to fight corruption. An action plan has been suggested for quick disposal of corruption cases."

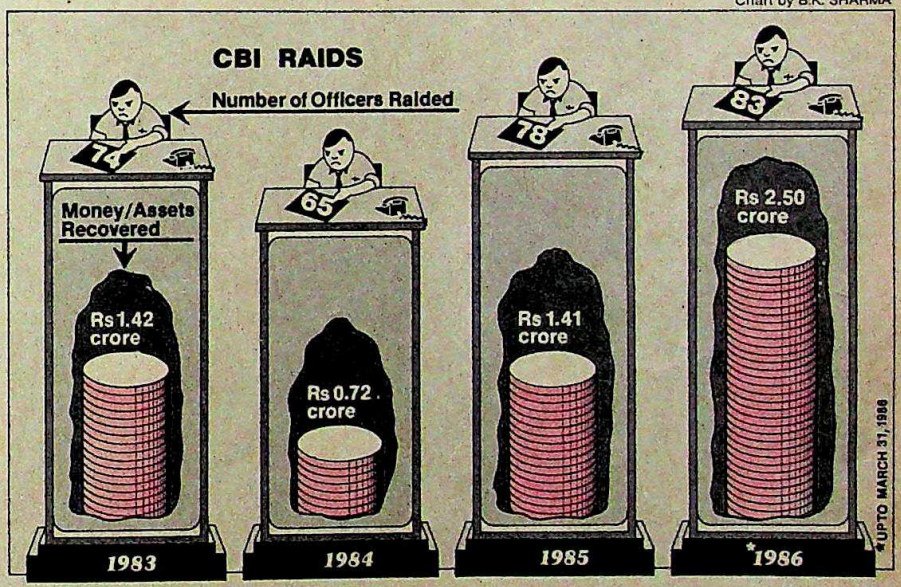
P. CHIDAMBARAM minister of state for personnel and administrative reforms

Chart by B.K. SHARMA



Since the entire process is time-consuming, various investigating agencies have made slow progress on the investigations. Explained a CBI official: "Our job is different from investigating a crime. Raiding an official means raiding the entire family and other close relations and involves scrutiny of whole sets of documents."

Some of the cases investigated testify to official ingenuity. In one case, an official claimed that he had received Rs 46 lakh as a gift from his father, who had died 10 years earlier. But the CBI was able to show that the documents were forged. It often took them more than 10 months to unravel such mysteries.

But the CBI is learning new tricks too. Its new strategy is to collect information from three different channels before it finally raids an official. The basic document on which it starts action is the audit report on the financial dealings of a concerned department. Since audit reports are well documented, the CBI now knows where to look for what. The audit reports are then tallied with the internal vigilance inquiries, and finally CBI's intelligence wings provide officials with the necessary back-up material. This well-coordinated move has worked for the CBI, which now takes barely two to three months for completing an investigation, whereas the earlier average used to be one year and more. To help improve things still further, the DPAR is devising a scheme similar to that in the Finance Ministry under which the officials and members of the public providing useful information will get a part of the booty recovered from those raided by the CBI or other agencies.

The CBI's reputation may have been bolstered by its recent successes, but its track record in securing prosecutions on the cases it has initiated is nothing to write home about. Last year, the CBI could complete its investigations on only 407 of the 1,626 complaints received against public servants. Worse, it could send only nine cases for trial to the courts, while no more than 16 cases were recommended for departmental action.

Even in the courts, its success in securing convictions has been no more than 70 per cent. Investigations have been tardy and slow in some cases. Of the 1,359 cases pending investigation this year, over 15 per cent have been gathering dust for over a year, and 25 per cent for six months. Clearly, this record will have to improve if the new round of raids against corrupt civil servants and public sector officials is to yield results.

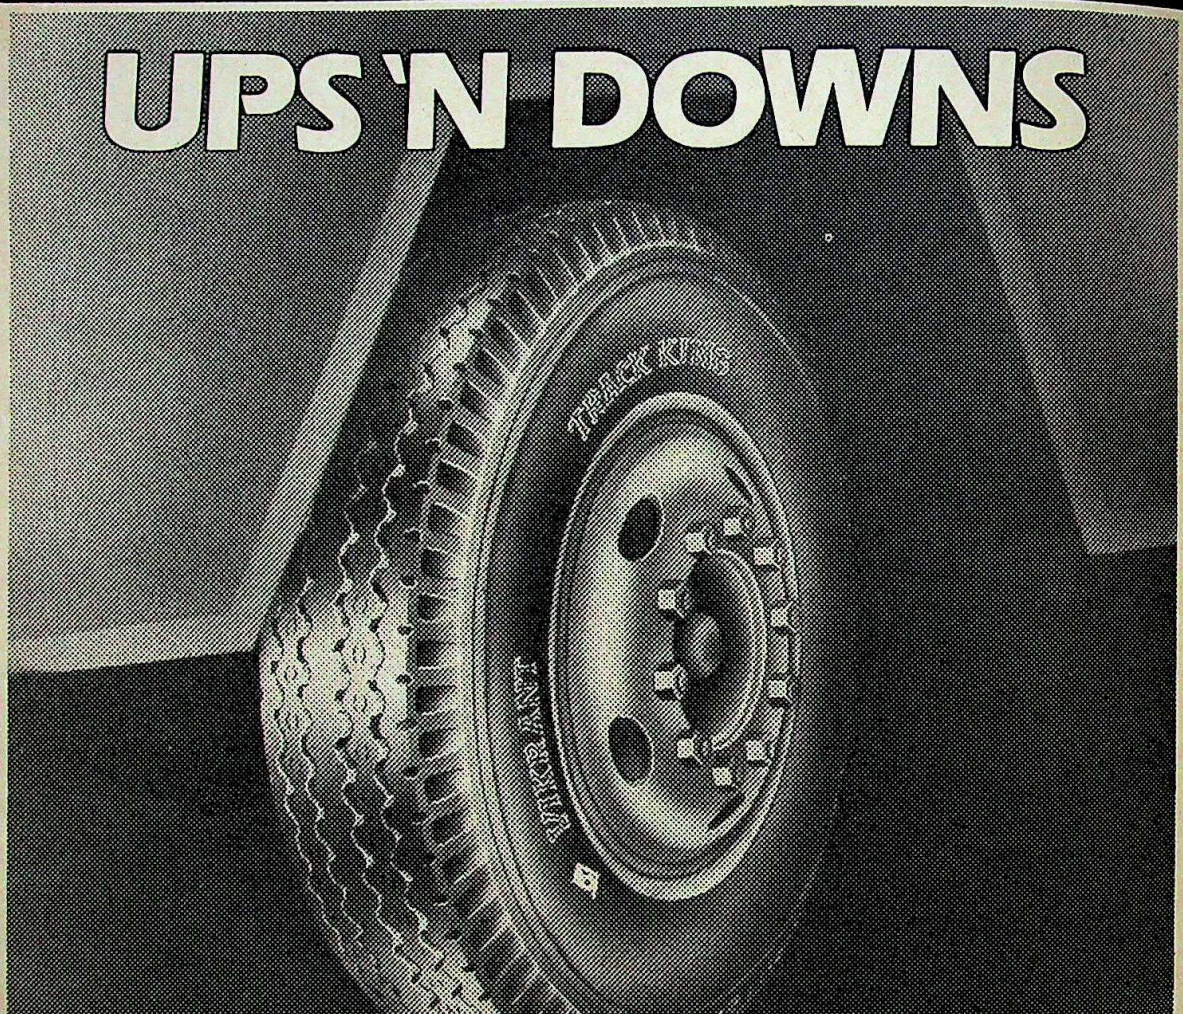
—PRABHU CHAWLA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

To ride the long, rough roads you need a tyre that can take life's

UPS 'N DOWNS



Every driver who has done long distance is certain of one thing — life is full of ups and downs. He must, by necessity, face the pot holes and abrupt bumps as he wends his way from home-town to destination. And he is aware too that the journey might turn into a nightmare without the right tyres. Like Vikrant Tyres.

VIKRANT + AVON

Joining hands with Avon ..... for better and tougher tyres !

Today, Vikrant has joined hands with Avon, the leading British tyre manufacturer, whose tyres are original fitment on such celebrated names as Rolls-Royce, British Leyland and more.

A superior plant ..... for superior tyres

Vikrant has one of the finest and the most modern tyre plants located in Mysore. This plant now has the capacity to produce a million tyres per annum. For Trucks and Buses, Cars, Jeeps, LCVs, Tractors, Trailers, Motor Cycles, Scooters, Autorickshaws and Animal Drawn Vehicles.

These high quality tyres have made their mark in sophisticated markets like the U.S.A., the U.K., the U.S.S.R. and Australia as well. Obviously, quality has a way of taking you far !

VIKRANT

THE RELIABLE TYRES

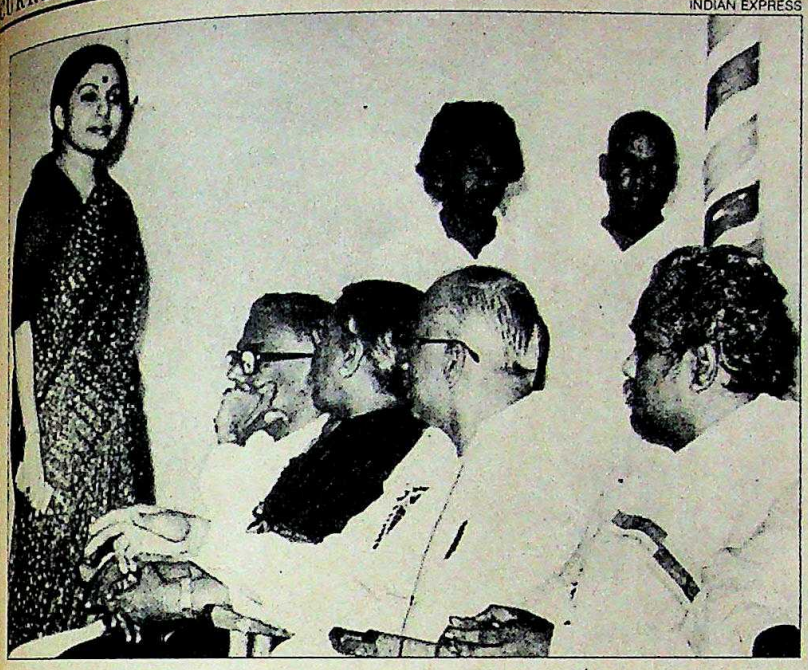
VIKRANT TYRES LIMITED
Administrative Office and Factory:
K. R. S. Road, Metagalli, Mysore 570 016

VIKRANT TYRES

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIAN EXPRESS



Jayalalitha: winds of change

TAMIL NADU

Merry Go Round

WITH an enfeebled M.G. Ramachandran presiding, and Information Minister R.M. Veerappan and Propaganda Secretary Jayalalitha Jayaram feuding openly for ascendancy in the party, All-India Anna Dravida Munnetra Kazhagham (AIADMK) politics continues to resemble the theatre of the absurd. Nobody still knows who will win the battle of succession but at the end of a stormy two-day meeting of the party's executive committee and general council in Madras last fortnight, there was no doubt that the latest round had gone to the chubby and charismatic Jayalalitha.

For the Veerappan loyalists, the meeting was an unexpected reversal. On the upswing of late (INDIA TODAY, February 15), they had hoped to deliver the coup de grace at the meeting. Their strategy had been worked out with great care. Invitations to Jayalalitha's followers were deliberately posted late. Party General Secretary S. Raghavandam, it was revealed, had sent two "secret" letters to Jayalalitha asking her why she was not attending to party work. The activity of rebels owing loyalty to her, it was argued, had brought about the party's rout in the recent local body elections. Jayalalitha, it was rumoured, was forming a new party—the "MGR Anna Dravida Munnetra Kazhagam". There could, then, be only one denouement: she must be stripped of her party post. A resolution to that effect was in readiness.

But when, three days before the party meeting, MGR unexpectedly postponed a cabinet meeting and held a three-hour-long tete-a-tete with Jayalalitha instead, the portents were clear. At the party meeting, attended by 522 members and 142 special invitees, Jayalalitha's role was not even discussed. Instead, the heat was turned on the party's 24 ministers (apart from MGR), among whom only two are her steadfast supporters.

Outside the venue of the meeting, the sprawling Sathya Studios owned by MGR in downtown Adyar, her fans shouted slogans and waved banners asking the party not to remove their "Madam". Inside, invitees were given a form with the list of the ministers and asked to comment on their performance and list their complaints and charges. The forms were dropped into a ballot-box-like container to which MGR alone had the key and which he took to his Ramavaram Garden residence on the outskirts of the city.

At the meeting itself, most speakers lambasted ministers loyal to Veerappan—like P.U. Shanmugham, K. Rajaram, C. Ponnaiyan and N. Nallusamy. Wilting under the onslaught, some of Veerappan's followers turned against each other. A hurt Nallusamy complained that P. Musiriputhan, president of the All-World MGR Film Fans' Association and another Veerappan follower, had launched a tirade against him through the columns of his daily, Manra Murasu.

The second day of the meeting showed that Jayalalitha's victory had been complete. Winding up the discussion on behalf of MGR, Finance Minister V.R. Nedunchezhiyan, announced that the chief minister would be dropping 10 or 11 ministers and diverting them to party work. After Nedunchezhiyan dropped this bombshell, the stage was handed over to Jayalalitha to make the concluding remarks. Like an elder statesman, she implored her partymen to forget past differences and work unitedly. Conceded even a staunch Veerappan associate: "Undoubtedly Jayalalitha carried the day at the general council."

And as if to drive the last nail into the coffin of the Veerappan camp, Jayalalitha turned out to be the unexpected star attraction at the historical public meeting held later that day, the first that MGR has addressed after the stroke he suffered in October 1984. "Though I wasn't invited by the organisers (the Madras district unit of the AIADMK) to speak here, I have come at MGR's behest and am speaking at his wish," she told the startled crowd in a brief but powerful speech. In a highly slurred seven-minute effort, MGR warned his ministers that unless they lived up to the expectations of the people, they would be punished. Said he: "I will not hesitate to throw out the corrupt, however big the posts they occupy."

Subsequent events only served to establish Jayalalitha's ascendancy. MGR cancelled yet another cabinet meeting at the last minute, scheduled for the day after the general council concluded, to have a long closed-door discussion with Jayalalitha. While MGR asked his Council of Ministers to clear all their pending files, Jayalalitha made yet another triumphant entry into the AIADMK party office to resume discharging her duties as propaganda secretary.

But it was soon clear that the Veerappan camp had not yet given up, though they were fighting a losing battle. In what was obviously their handi-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

work, a sensational poster appeared in the state secretariat recalling Jayalalitha's alleged anti-party activities when MGR was convalescing in New York. Local Administration Minister P.U. Shanmugham and Industries Minister K. Rajaram initiated a move to collect signatures from party MLA's on a memorandum to the chief minister, requesting that there should be no major changes in the present Cabinet, but signatures were hard to come by. Other ministers tried to put on a brave public front, though not with much conviction. Clearly, however, MGR is unable to contain factionalism in the party. Though 10 or 11 ministers were to be dropped, the only one who actually quit was K.A. Krishnaswamy, who does not belong to either faction. In a defiant gesture, Krishnaswamy sent his resignation directly to the governor, while MGR was in Delhi, when he was stripped of the labour portfolio. Yet, even as Jayalalitha savours her moment of triumph, if the two factions in the party keep battling in the manner they have been doing, there may not be much of a party to eventually inherit.

—S.H. VENKATRAMANI

KARNATAKA

Water War

EVEN as Karnataka politicians were shouting themselves hoarse that the Telugu Ganga project would rob their state of a share of its water from the Krishna, Andhra Pradesh has opened the floodgates for two more potentially explosive inter-state river disputes. Karnataka officials were taken aback last fortnight when the Telugu Desam Government accused them of trying to corner more water than due to it from the rivers Tungabhadra and Pennar.

The controversy over the Tungabhadra arose from Karnataka Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde's decision to do away with the Tungabhadra Project Board (TPB), set up by the Centre in 1953 to regulate the distribution of the river's waters between the two states. Hegde has been writing a series of letters to Andhra Pradesh and the Centre to scrap the board since it was costing the state an avoidable sum of Rs 46 lakh.

The TBP was set up because two branches of the canal from the Tungabhadra dam irrigate both Karnataka and Andhra Pradesh. The other branch of the canal serves only Karnataka areas. Karnataka has been arguing that since it maintains the left bank canal, it could also maintain the other branches thus making the board infructuous. But Andhra Pradesh has refused to accept the plea. An irate Irrigation Minister K.E. Krishnamurthy told the Assembly last fortnight: "If Karnataka is suddenly interested in doing away with the board it is because that state is overdrawing the water and doesn't want anyone to know about it." Krishnamurthy's outburst came close on the heels of an angry letter he had dashed off to Karnataka objecting to the construction of a dam across the Pennar river alleging that Karnataka was trying to steal more water than due to it by constructing the dam and diverting some water to a tank at Maralur.

But Karnataka officials hotly denied both the allegations. Spluttered one official: "This is ridiculous. They are going ahead with the Rs 637-crore Telugu Ganga project which will deprive Karnataka of thousands of MCF (million cubic feet) of Krishna waters, and they have the temerity to question a Rs 9-lakh construction which will divert just 16 MCF of water."

It was clear, however, that other factors were muddying the waters and that the dispute was becoming a battle between Kannadiga and Andhra chauvinism. Just two weeks after Karnataka Congress(I) leader M. Veerappa Moily suggested to the state chief minister that he move the Supreme Court and stop the Telugu Ganga project, an agitated Telugu Desam member in the Andhra Pradesh Assembly called on Chief Minister N.T.Rama Rao to move the same court to stop the Pennar diversion.

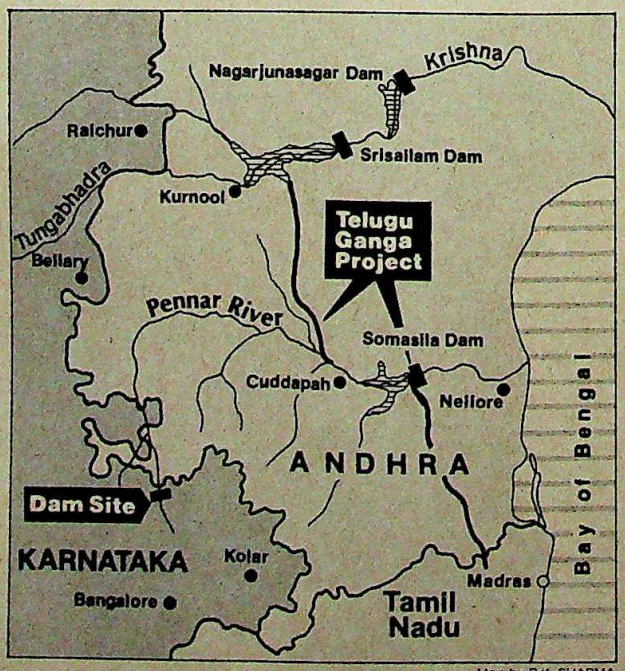
Andhra Pradesh contends that the construction of the dam is against an 1892 agreement which prohibits the two states from taking up any kind of construction on an inter-state river without the prior permission of the other. To this, the Karnataka Government's argument is that the tank existed even before 1892, and the water from Pennar has been diverted to it all along, so that the agreement does not apply to the dam.

The tank at Maralur in Kolar district has a capacity of about 40 MCF. But it normally gets only 24 MCF of water from its catchment areas and the remaining 16 MCF is diverted to it from the Pennar through a 7-km long feeder channel. So far, the Government has put up a crude man-made dam every year with sand bags and mud to divert water to the tank. But following repeated requests from farmers, whose 200 acres of land is irrigated by the tank, the Government decided in November 1984 to have a permanent structure for this diversion.

Getting wind of this plan, Andhra Pradesh wrote to Karnataka in February last year asking the state not to go ahead with the construction. But Karnataka chose to ignore the request. A few months later, Andhra Pradesh sent a telex message repeating the objection.

Karnataka officials were busy drafting a reply to the latest letter, assuring their neighbour that the dam would in no way draw more water from Pennar than the quantity normally diverted. "Krishnamurthy doesn't know what we are doing. We will explain everything to him," Karnataka Irrigation Minister H.D. Deve Gowda said, casually dismissing Andhra Pradesh's objection. In spite of these assurances, fears that Andhra Pradesh would now get less water from Pennar are sure to remain. And Karnataka's declarations are not going to be the last word on the issue.

—SRINIVASA PRASAD



Map by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

*"To be a success in business, be daring, be first, be different."

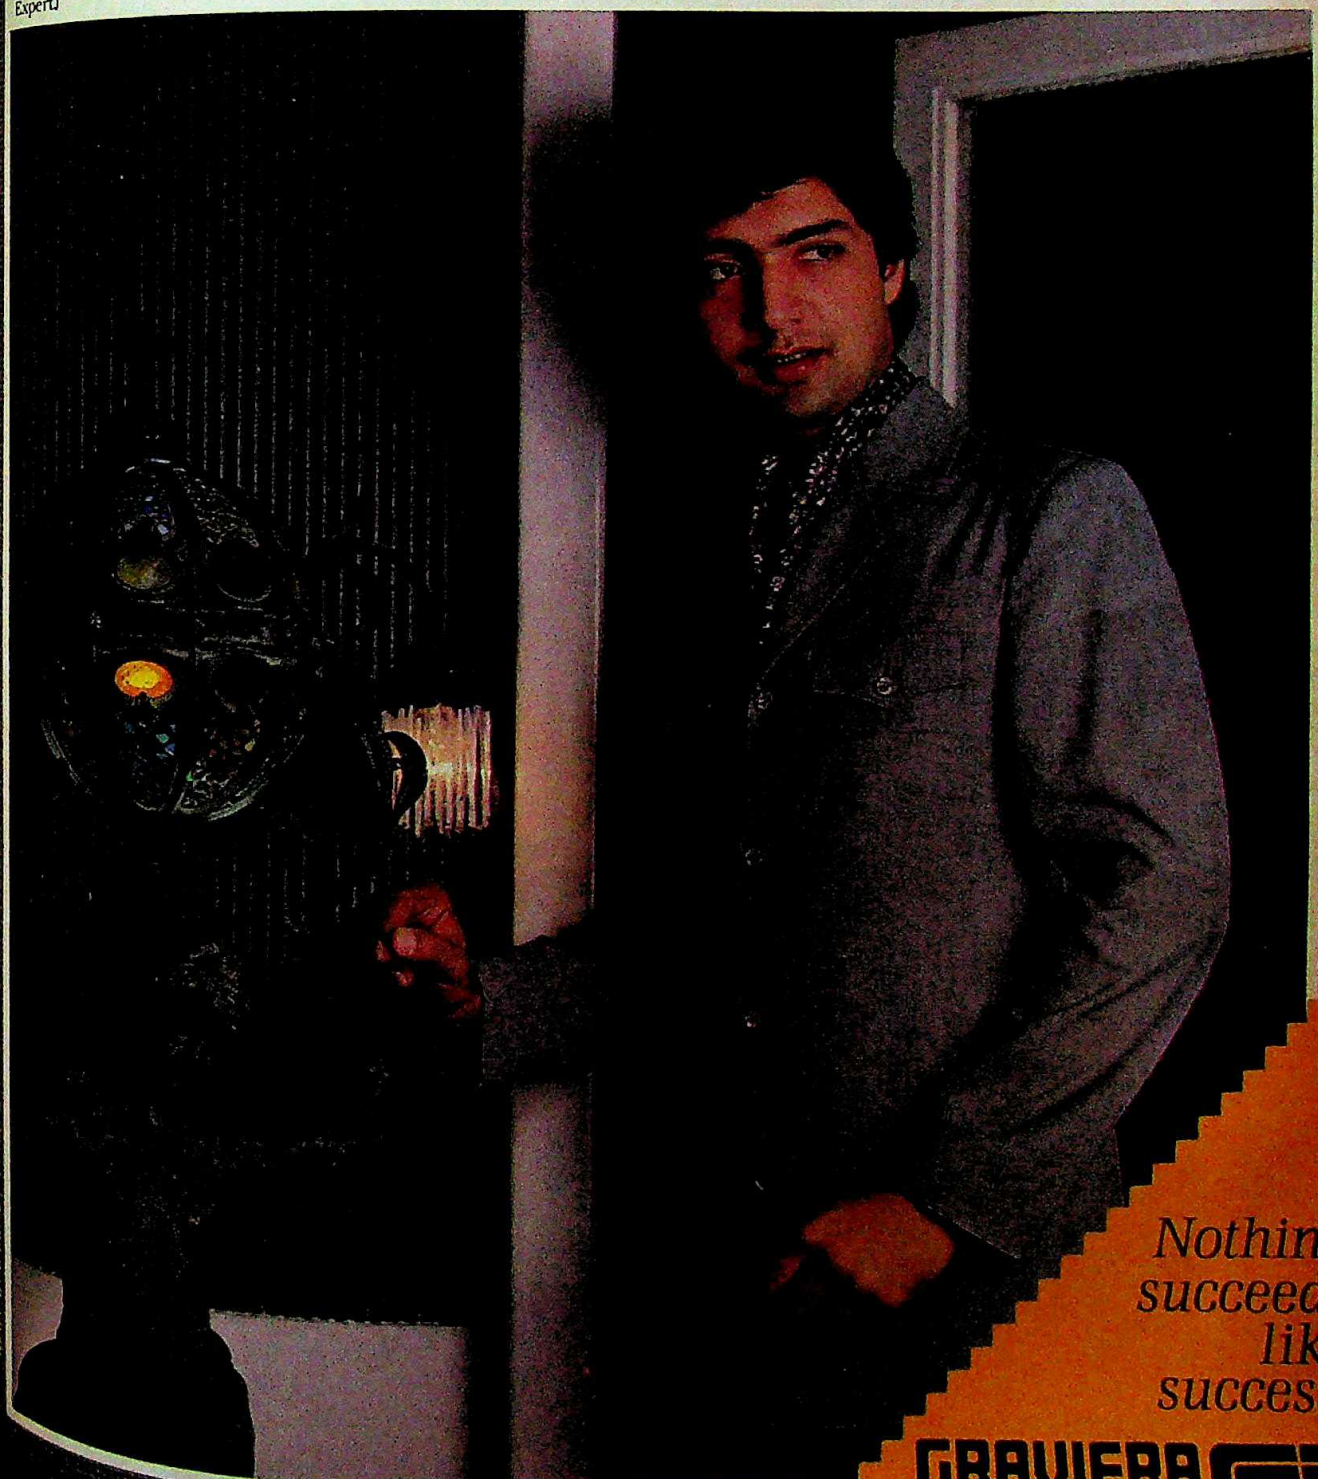
*(Marchant. Business Management Expert)

And be practical too. Because just being daring, original and different won't get you far, if it's rooted in the improbable.

The same applies to your wardrobe, whether for business or leisure. By all means, choose original designs. But make comfort and quality your priority. Choose a suiting that is famous for its performance. In one word, choose Graviera.

Graviera is quality fabric that fashions suits and shirts, safaris and trousers which are elegant and comfortable. It's wash 'n wear, easy-care fabric, with polyrich fast colour. There's a wide range of suiting and shirting to choose from. Deep sober colours and soft pastels, in a variety of superb weaves and soft textures. Lightweight summer businesswear or darker shades and warmer weaves for winter. You'll be able to get the exact suiting and shirting to match your requirements. All Graviera fabrics are that rare blend of graciousness and good sense.

Be as daring and different as you wish to. With Graviera, the fabric that really knows its business.



Nothing succeeds like success!

GRAVIERA SUITING GR®

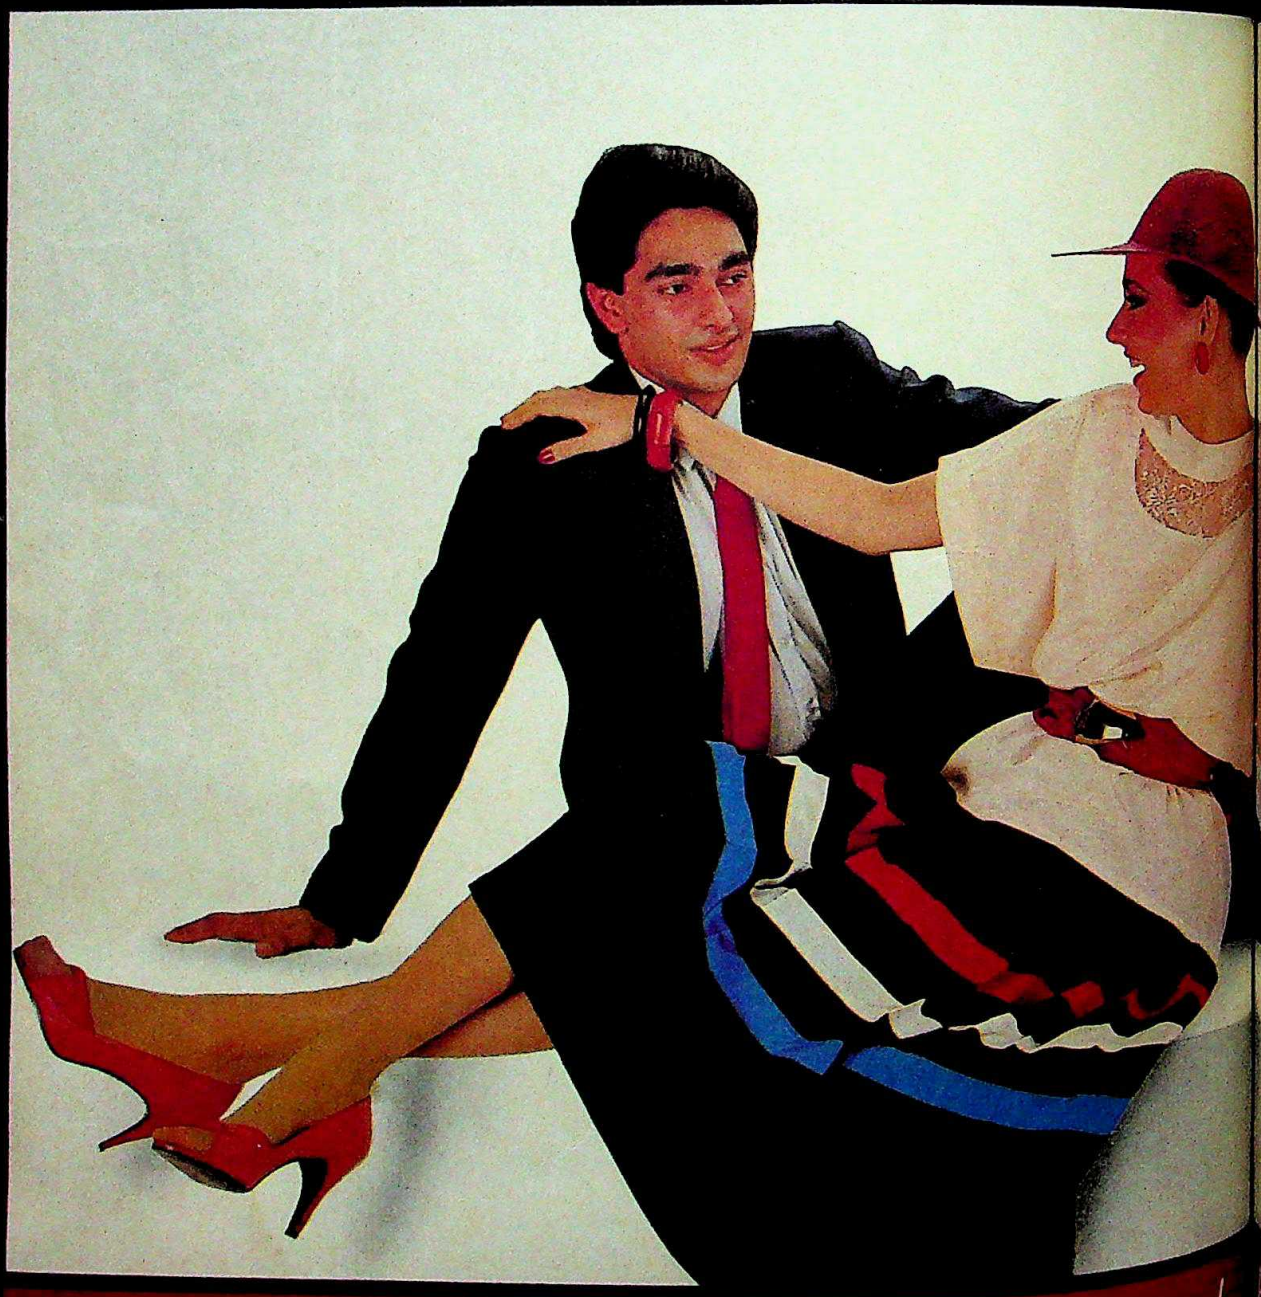
...on, Haridwar

Sportif. Run your eye over the bodyline. And you'll admire the sleekness of French design.

Get astride and settle down and you'll see what comfort really means – right up to your fingertips.

Thumb the self-starter button and feel the Sportif come alive. Powered by a 50 cc engine that purrs with grace. And an autogear system that lets you glide effortlessly. On smart, stylish mag wheels.

Sportif. On performance alone it would make heads turn. But trust the French to do it in style.

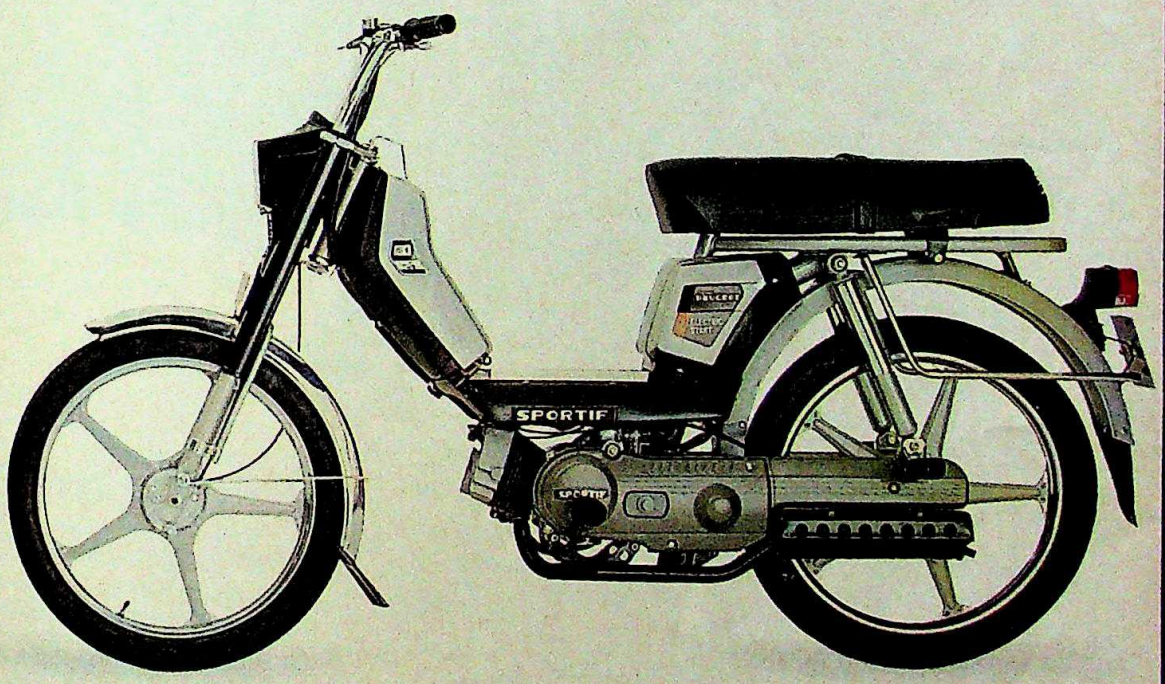


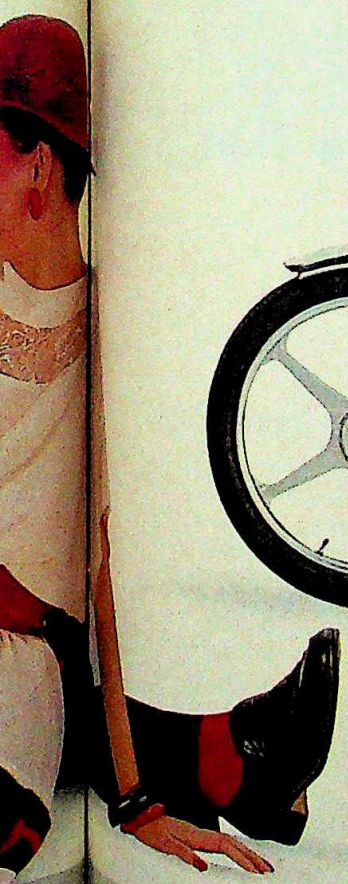
-CLASS TELLS...

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

SHREE CHAMUNDI MOPEDS LIMITED Hirehalli Tumkur 572 168

Trust the French to do it in style





SPORTIF

LIKE NOTHING ELSE-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

In collaboration with PEUGEOT of France

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Give her the gift of time

Remember when you had just married. She always seemed to be waiting for you to come home. Peeping out shyly. Surrounded by her new family.

Remember that first movie you took her to. The long walks ... Spending hours together. Getting to know each other. Those were the good times.

Then came parenthood. Astonishing the amount of work and time small infants demand.

Suddenly, she had no time left. Between the nappies and the midnight feeds she fit in the cooking for 3-meals-a-day. Shopped daily, to not waste a thing. Washed. Cleaned. Ironed. Stitched. Looked after your parents. Even you!

Now that you can afford it ... give her the one gift she hasn't had for years. Give her the gift of time. Bring home a Kelvinator. And bring back the good times.

Sold & serviced by :

Expo Machinery Limited

Pragati Tower, 26, Rajindra Place,
New Delhi-110 008.

BRANCHES :
New Delhi, Bombay, Calcutta, Madras, Ahmedabad, Alwar, Bangalore, Bhopal, Bhubaneshwar, Chandigarh, Cochin, Dhanbad, Ghaziabad, Hyderabad, Jaipur, Kanpur, Kundli (Haryana), Patna, Vijayawada, Visakhapatnam.

Bring home happiness
Bring home a

Kelvinator®
Refrigerator

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

VERAVAL

Communal Cauldron

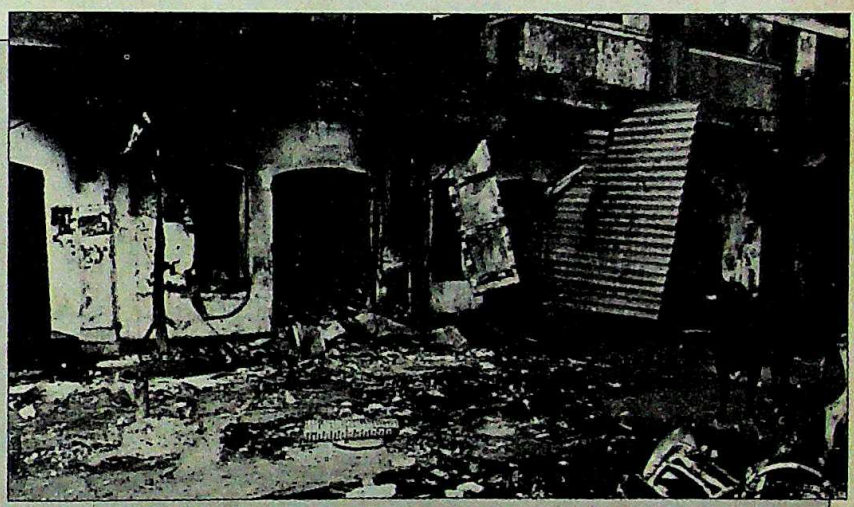
THE COMMUNAL frenzy which swept through the port town of Veraval in Gujarat late last month was surprisingly ignored by the media. The toll was terrible enough; in just one four-hour span on March 27, 13 people were killed, 41 seriously injured, 1,300 rendered homeless and property worth over Rs 5 crore destroyed. But save for brief news agency reports, the tragedy barely received any mention in the Gujarat press. Media representatives justify the distortion by quoting the unwritten code that the press will not play up communal incidents, but the truth is somewhat different. Unfortunately for the victims of the Veraval tragedy, they happened to be mostly Muslims.

Communal tensions have been on the rise in Gujarat—there were minor riots also in Ahmedabad, Borsad and Palanpur last fortnight—but Veraval is a case apart. The cutting edge of the conflict in this bustling fishing town (pop. approximately: 100,000) was almost entirely economic. Muslim businessmen take the cream of Veraval's Rs 30-crore business in fishing since they control the marketing. The fishermen, on the other hand, are Hindus of the 60,000-strong Kharwa community, who have repeatedly tried in the past to break the Muslims' monopoly but without success.

The resentment found expression the day after Holi when violence swept the business localities of Vakaria Bazar, Cutlery Bazar, Lathi Bazar and Machi Pith. Of the 78 shops in the wholesale fish market, 72 belonging to Muslims were burnt.

The Muslims had written to Junagadh Collector R. Suganthan in early March apprehending trouble. But he had brushed it aside saying: "How can such a thing happen? What are we here for?" Muslim leaders then met acting district Police Superintendent K. Cumarasami, only to be given a lecture on the wisdom and need of communal harmony. Lamented Ibrahim Sheikh, secretary, Muslim Majlis-e-Mushavirat: "If our pleas had not fallen on deaf ears, this carnage would not have taken place."

To the Muslims' misfortune, the police also had reason to be displeased with them. The Kharwa head of the Veraval municipality, who had fallen out with his own community, had struck a deal with the Muslims whereby he handed over a 1,000 sq-yard plot of land for a madrasa they wanted to build in return for their support. Unfortunately, this land had actually been earmarked for building police quarters. The police got a stay order from the collector.



In four hours 13 people were killed, 1,300 rendered homeless and property over 5 crore destroyed.

Thus, on March 27, when Hindu mobs attacked Muslim shops, the Muslims tried to ransack the police lines. In what led to a total breakdown of the law and order machinery, most policemen left whatever they were doing and rushed to the lines. Confessed a police officer: "To the constables, their homes and families were more important, so they came back in panic leaving the town to the rioters."

When Suganthan drove into Veraval on the evening of March 27, the town was in flames and Saurashtra Range DIG S. Banerjee had been forced to summon help from other districts. An irate Suganthan wanted to know why the Muslims had suffered the most even at the hands of the police. Alleged Sheikh: "The Kharwas were given a free hand, while the police fired at Muslims." Said Iqbal Osman Patanwala, a Veraval resident: "The police were hand in glove with the rioters."

Only 148 people had been arrested even though over 200 cases of arson alone had been registered. The 2,000 Muslims still huddled in the makeshift refugee camp and understandably vented their ire at government representatives who came calling. They even refused to listen to Food and Civil Supplies Minister, Babubhai Sopariwala's pleas to accept the Government's offer of rehabilitation relief till he promised action against the guilty. Admitted Sopariwala: "There is a great deal of anger among the Muslims as they have suffered heavily." And Chief Minister Amarsinh Chaudhary's visit did little to lessen the hurt.

The lack of media attention has increased the feeling of alienation among the Muslims. Said one: "If the Hindus had suffered, hordes of reporters would have gone there. This has really hurt us." But Sandesh Editor Chimanbhai Patel maintained: "The issue is delicate so we lied low. It is inadvisable to report on communal riots." But Patel's stand finds few takers. Veraval itself looks like a ghost town with Hindu traders refusing to return to work fearing a backlash. Says Hafiz Ghulam Mohammed, tea wholesaler: "Suddenly people in Veraval are suspicious of each other." With tensions still running high and suspicion and bitterness clouding public tempers, the once bustling port town will take a long time to limp back to normal.

—RAMESH MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MADHYA PRADESH

Legal Strictures

THE SHREWDEST of politicians tend to slip up when it comes to a decision about the flourishing and black money-generating liquor industry. The latest to realise this is Arjun Singh, vice-president of the Congress(I), who was indicted by a division bench of the high court.

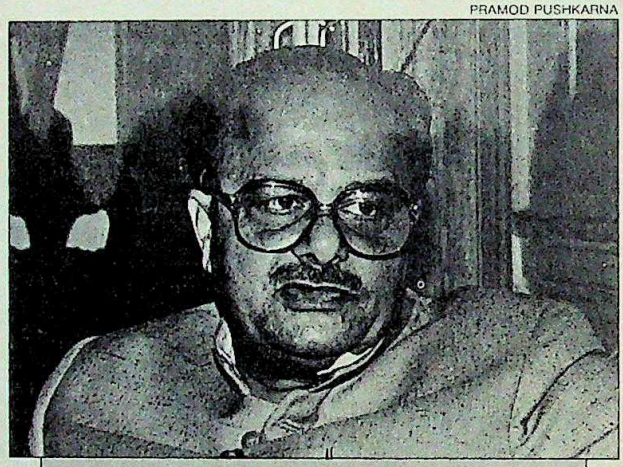
Not only did acting Chief Justice J.S.Verma and Justice B.M.Lal, strike down the state Government's revamped liquor policy, decided in 1984 when Singh was the chief minister, Justice Lal, in his separate observations, passed severe strictures against the Government. Said Lal: "According to the arguments the truth of corruption is peeping out from the record." Calling the new policy a "mischievous device", he said that those responsible for the corruption by virtue of their high office must be severely dealt with as they were the "devils" of society.

Lal's strictures were predictably seized upon by Singh's detractors. While the BJP called for his resignation, Chief Minister Motilal Vora and other silent opponents of Singh in Madhya Pradesh were privately jubilant about Singh's discomfiture. In public, however, the state Government stood by him, filing an application in the high court for deleting the strictures. Said Vora: "We are doing what we have to."

On December 30, 1984, the Government decided that the liquor policy would be changed from April 1, 1986. Instead of distillers working out of government land, they would be asked to set up new plants. Accordingly, in February 1985, the Government gave letters of intent to seven of the existing licensees to construct new distilleries. In return for their investment, the Government gave them a commitment that they would also be given a five-year licence to manufacture liquor from April 1, 1986.

The main petitioner, Sagar Aggarwal, a liquor supplier from Jabalpur, challenged the order on the ground that since he was not given the opportunity to bid for setting up the new distilleries, his fundamental right to enter into a contract with the Government had been violated. In his 32-page judgement, Justice Verma upheld the Government's decision to allow the chosen seven distillers to set up new distilleries, but struck down the policy to give the licence to manufacture and supply country liquor to the chosen seven only, as being violative of the fundamental rights.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



Justice B.M. Lal has severely castigated the revamped liquor policy of Arjun Singh's government but Singh's supporters argue that Lal has misread the facts on record.

Justice Lal's 19-page judgement started off by saying that he agreed with his senior judge's "ultimate conclusion", but, crucially, he accepted the other argument of the petitioners that the state would lose Rs 56 crore in the first five years. Accepting this because "the state has no reasonable and convincing reply to it", he then went on to lambast the policy as a "private treaty/agreement", arrived at in the face of "valiant opposition raised by the finance secretary in the interest of revenue." Lal also suspected the bona fides of the Government in changing the new policy from 30 years to five years while the case was being heard.

Singh's supporters argued that all the damaging arguments had, in fact, been satisfactorily countered in the court itself. The Rs 56 crore revenue loss mentioned by Sagar Aggarwal was calculated on the assumption that supplies could have been made at the low rate at which Aggarwal was already supplying liquor to the Government. But state Attorney-General A.M.Mathur pointed out in the court that Aggarwal's low rate was possible because he got spirit from the government-owned Ratlam distillery at a deflated price while other distillers have to buy it from the open market at much higher prices. Ratlam makes barely enough spirit to service two districts, and Mathur argued that to expect it to service the whole state was ridiculous.

Moreover, they argued, the basis of the price under the new policy was not merely more scientific but was merely duplicating the West Bengal practice. Finance Secretary Shivraman's objections had been satisfactorily countered by the separate Revenue Department and, they said, there had been no commitment to give the licence to the chosen seven for 30 years. They had only been given land on a standard 30-year lease; their licence was only for five years. They say that Lal's adverse comments arose from a misreading of the facts on record.

But Lal did not find these arguments either satisfactory or convincing, and his strictures have left a stain on Singh's record. Since Singh is not even a respondent—the state Government is—he does not have any legal remedy open to him. Singh declined comment on the case beyond asking: "Is this an indictment or a judicial assassination?"

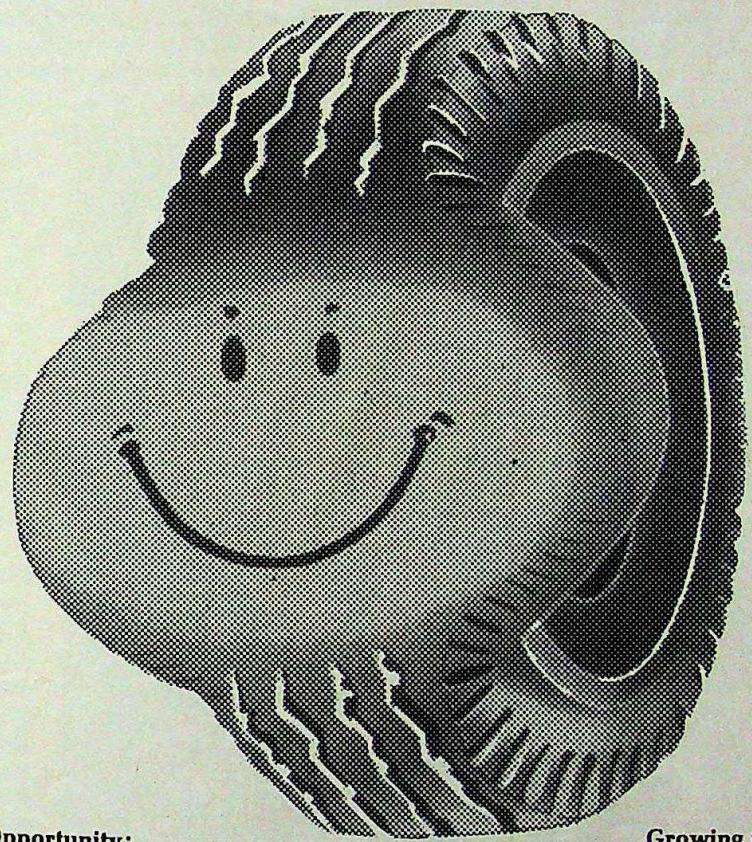
The battle is now expected to shift to the Supreme Court since the distillers are planning to go on appeal. This will give Aggarwal's lawyers the chance to prove what they could not convince the high court: that the new policy involved a quid pro quo between the distillers and Arjun Singh's government. But they will need hard evidence to damn Singh; and given the former chief minister's astuteness, this will be no easy task.

—AJAY KUMAR with RAJKUMAR KESWANI in Bhopal

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Growing Bigger to Serve you Better – Indian Tyre Industry



Employment Opportunity:
40,000 direct employees. Over 3 lacs indirect employees. And growing every day.

Contribution to national exchequer:
50% of turnover. 800 crores in 1984. 4th highest source of duties and taxes. Although Industry suffered loss of Rs. 60 crores on turnover of Rs. 1,600 crores.

Independent distribution system:
11 companies; 450 sales depots; over 5000 independent dealers. Tyres of your choice available anywhere in India.

Unique lifetime warranty:
Guaranteed quality. Replacement in case of manufacturing defects. Pro rata to initial tread wear. Regardless of date or place of purchase.

Growing in size and range:
Meeting India's total requirement. From bullock carts to supersonic aircraft; mini scooters to giant earthmovers. Fabric cross ply to steel belted radials. The widest range of tyres in the world.

Growing export earnings:
Nearly $5\frac{1}{2}$ times increase in 3 years. From 15.8 crores in 1983-84 to 48 crores in 1984-85 and Rs. 80 crores anticipated in 1985-86. Competing in the most sophisticated international markets. USA, Europe, USSR, Middle East.

Growing to meet future challenges:
Keeping pace with automobile revolution. More than enough capacity to meet leap in demand. Continuous technological upgradation to make better tyres. To meet toughest conditions; roughest usage.

For more details about the tyre industry contact:-

Automotive Tyre Manufacturers' Association

108, Uday Park, New Delhi-110 049

Indian Tyre – the better tyre

SPACE PLAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUNJAB POLICE

Ribeiro's Challenge

FOR SIX years now the 34,000-strong police force in Punjab has been caught in the eye of an unabated storm of terror. It is today the most harried police in the country.

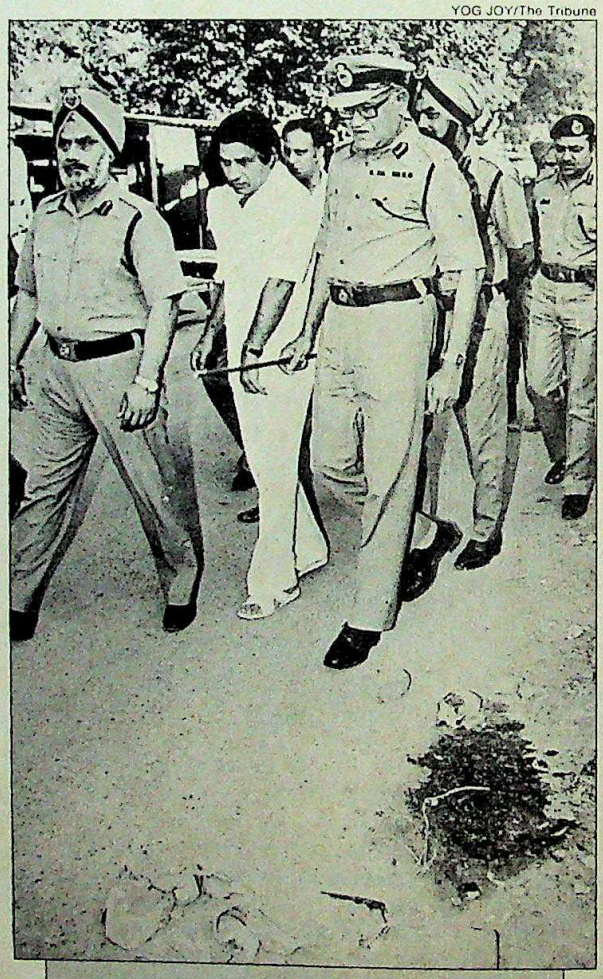
What has made the force, once respected all over and used successfully in Kashmir and elsewhere, so inadequate to the challenge of terrorism in the state? Last fortnight, as this inadequacy became strikingly evident with the terrorist strike at Jalandhar killing six armed policemen and freeing three undertrial extremists from the Jalandhar district courts, Principal Correspondents SHEKHAR GUPTA and GOBIND THUKRAL travelled through the state and talked to scores of civil and police officials to find out what has gone wrong with the Punjab police. Their report:

FOR ONCE, even the bare statistics tell the chilling tale truthfully: 69 policemen including a deputy inspector general killed, and over two dozen wounded, but not a single person convicted for any of these murderous attacks. Over 100 lethal firearms—including 16 in just one raid last month—snatched from the police by the terrorists. Three daring escapes by hard-core extremists from armed police custody, and suspension or dismissal of at least 100 serving policemen for active complicity with the terrorists. All this in five years of mayhem which also saw the unceremonious departure of as many as eight director-generals from the Punjab police headquarters.

The sorry story continues. Of the 69 slain policemen as many as 13 were gunmen assigned to protect well-known persons on the terrorist hit list; and all but two died without being able to fire a shot. Nine, including Amritsar DIG Avtar Singh Atwal, were specifically on the hit list and could not be protected despite round-the-clock security. The most telling example is that of Giani Bachan Singh, an Amritsar deputy superintendent, who was killed along with his wife, son, daughter and three police gunmen in three separate terrorist attacks for committing the "indiscretion" of interrogating the then AISSF president Bhai Amrik Singh. Also killed, in the same period, were three of his juniors assisting him in the interrogation.

Admits a senior official in Chandigarh: "So nerve chilling is the hit list fear among even the policemen today that it is difficult to find an officer to interrogate the odd terrorist we capture." The three police superintendents who challenged the terrorists in the Amritsar-Gurdaspur belt, D.K. Bhatti, A.P. Pandey and Bua Singh have found remote sanctuaries. Bhatti, who has already survived an attempt on his life, is a recluse in the PAP lines in Jalandhar receiving a dozen threatening calls a day. Bua Singh has been posted in the embassy in Moscow, and Pandey may soon be in Warsaw.

YOG JOY/The Tribune



"For too long now the policemen have been at the receiving end. This will change now. We have to avenge all this."

J.F. RIBEIRO

new Punjab police director-general outside Jalandhar courts after ambush on his policemen

More than anything else it is this fear of the hit list and a belief that they are defenceless before the terrorist that has rendered the police force so ineffective. The rot, officers say, set in with Atwal's murder at the door step of the Golden Temple in May 1983. That feeling finds support even from Amrita, the police officer's widow now appointed an under secretary in the state Government. Says she, barely able to fight back her tears: "So many years have gone past and they have not caught even one person for his murder. Why should anyone want to sacrifice his life and make his family suffer like this any more?" She adds reflectively: "If only they had gone into the Golden Temple that day this demoralisation would not have set in." Even Ribeiro laments: "For too long now the policemen have been at the receiving end. We have to avenge this."

The consequences of the rot are obvious. In each one of three incidents of attacks on the police during the last fortnight, the police patrols lost men and weapons without as much as firing one shot back at the marauding terrorists. "Often, it seems to me that my men's best defence against the attacker is the steel chain tying his weapon to his body. Even if he dies at least the chain discourages the attacker from taking the weapon away. Beyond that, we can do nothing," says an officer pointing out that the men were never trained to face terrorism.

The difference that specialised training can make was evident on March 30 as a large extremist gang

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

led by Harbhajan Singh Mand, with a price of Rs 50,000 on his head ambushed a six-man CRPF patrol near Amritsar, tired after a day's hike. The first CRPF man, a naik, was hit. He died immediately. But the one following him was able to jump into a ditch by the roadside and hit the extremist taking the naik's rifle. Similarly, while the third man in the patrol, a havildar, died grappling with three terrorists, the jawan behind him was able to kill one of the three. The last soldier, Sepoy Kali Ram, was one of the select band trained in unarmed combat. Attacked by three extremists, he was able to kill none else than Harbhajan Singh Mand while wounding one more. He also had the presence of mind to sprint back to a nearby police post while his surviving comrades engaged the extremists who fled leaving their dead.

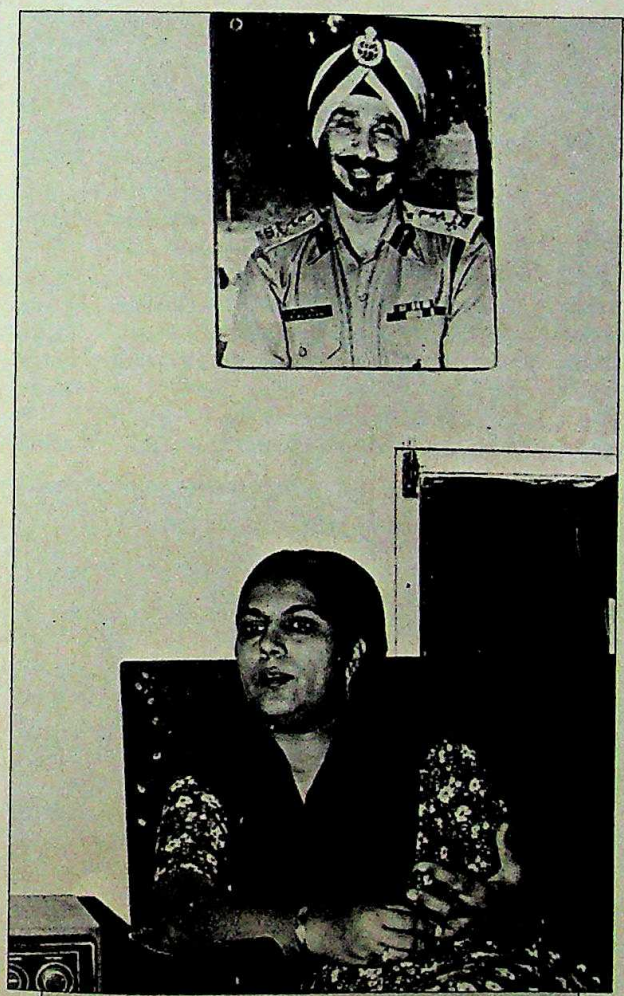
SO SURE had Mand's gang been that a pamphlet recovered from his pocket proudly read: "We have wiped out an entire section of the CRPF. This is the price of joining the Hindus to terrorise Sikhs." But the jawans had turned the tables because they had served in the North-east, had automatic weapons and did not panic. Unfortunately, the Punjab police, without the benefit of specialised training, and an essentially lathi-wielding force carrying bolt-action rifles of ceremonial utility finds terrorism a deathly challenge. "When a policeman dies it obviously affects the force's morale and people's faith in it," admits Ribeiro. This is one of the reasons why the Punjab police "who cannot even protect themselves", have lost popular confidence.

Hard-pressed by the widespread popular demand for Central forces, the state administration has watched helplessly as nearly 200 companies of paramilitary forces have been sucked into routine security duties. But this is at best a temporary arrangement as the Centre will find it impossible to maintain such force levels for very long. "Something has gone wrong with this force. Why is it afraid of casualties? This is war and yet no one wants to risk his life," rues N.S. Phoolka, a retired Punjab police superintendent.

The police force is today stupefied by extremely low morale, poor leadership, lack of direction and, on top of it all, poor equipment. The total lack of brilliance among the top leadership is reflected in the repeated shuffling of the pack, without the Government ever arriving at the right combination. Last fortnight, as Ribeiro set about revamping the police leadership, he was faced with a depressing situation, the kind R.V. Subrahmaniam, advisor to the governor while Punjab was under President's rule, had described in his lengthy report on the state's police force.

He came out with an extremely damning indictment of the intelligence system. Complaining of lack of determination and coordinated action, he had suggested a clear framework for the Intelligence Department with a DIG each for counter-espionage, crime and actionable intelligence under an effective inspector-general. "Subrahmaniam's logic," explains an officer, "was that in the new situation most of the crime in the state was nothing but extremism. He wanted the same department to compile data and information on crime, terrorists and Pakistani agents so that these could be collated effectively resulting, in the course of time, into an integrated intelligence machinery." Two years after the report was accepted this has not happened. This was partly due to the lack of competent officers and partly due to the initial complacence of the Barnala Government which, in its zeal to appease the hardliners, even rehabilitated a number of senior officers who had remained under a cloud in the Bhindranwale phase. The non-availability of trustworthy officers is underlined by the fact that the state has not been able to find an inspector-general who could head the Intelligence Department. This has now been placed under a DIG till the Centre is able to send in an officer from another state to take over the most sensitive police post in Punjab. Nor has it been able to find a durable choice for the newly-created post of DIG (Counter-Intelligence), meant to combat the Pakistani involvement in Punjab. Intelligence, thus, continues to be the weakest link in the security machinery, and the Punjab Government admitted as much last week in a letter to the Centre seeking "actionable" intelligence.

Also, as Ribeiro himself admits, a police force always reflects the state of the society. Not unexpectedly, therefore, even a section of the constabulary—over 80 per cent of Punjab police is staffed by Sikhs—has been affected by the fundamentalist wave. After Operation Bluestar, the CBI had concluded that at least a dozen out of the 50-odd closest associates of Bhindranwale were prodigal Punjab policemen. Two senior Indian Police Service officers, Simranjit Singh Mann and Ajaypal Singh Mann (former Amritsar police chief), were



"If only they had gone into the Golden Temple the day my husband was killed this demoralisation would not have set in."

AMRITA ATWAL
widow of Punjab police
DIG A.S. Atwal assassinated outside the Golden Temple

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

sacked on the same charge. Even today, intelligence agencies estimate that at least 30-40 police deserters are part of the extremist hard-core. Ribeiro has been asked by the Government to weed out these elements this time and a purge is on the cards.

Policemen also complain that they are expected to deliver the goods without the right equipment for the job. "Very often we are like the blind man wielding a broom and chasing a wild ass," says a district police superintendent, pointing out how unrealistic it was to expect the policemen armed with the cumbersome, antiquated .303 rifle to fight the highly-motivated, physically-fit terrorists carrying automatic weapons. "Three years ago," says another police officer, "we were asked to set up two-member commando squads riding motorcycles, with the pillion-rider carrying a .303 rifle. Now if that man had any sense he would never fire while the motorcycle was moving, for the recoil would throw the whole commando team off."

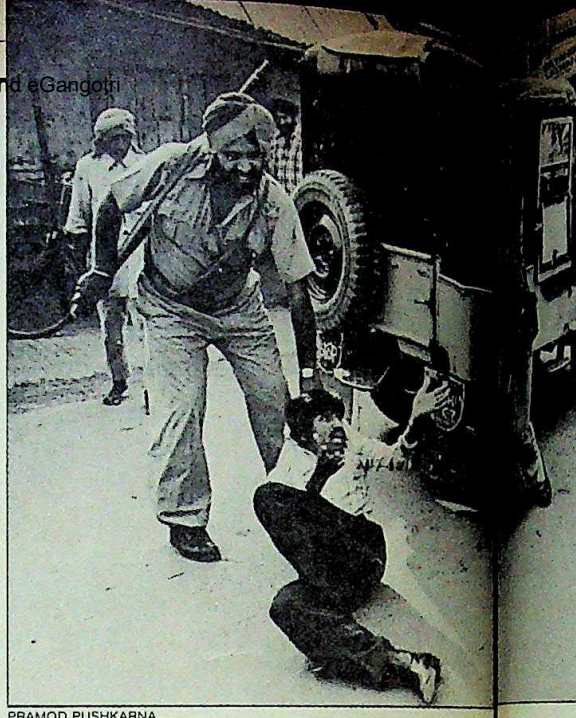
A large majority of the constabulary carries the same rifle and, according to a recent survey, over 20 per cent of even these were found to be incapable of firing a shot. A senior officer explained: "Punjab is unlike other insurgency situations. There are no pitched battles to be fought here and most of the combat is sudden and at a close range.

The weapon of choice thus, is the Sten gun and, with over 2,000 policemen sucked up in VIP security duties, we are so short of that weapon."

SENIOR intelligence officials in Delhi admit that the policeman in Colombo is much better equipped than his counterpart in Punjab. "It is incredible how we have condemned our men so hopelessly to die," a district police superintendent rues. Officers also point out that while the country is spending thousands of crores on modern weapons for the defence forces, the Government was unable to spare even something like Rs 50 crore—the price of two Mirage 2000 aircraft—to refurbish the armoury of the police force now expected to meet the most serious national security concern.

Just like the quality of intelligence, leadership and equipment, the issue of living conditions is closely connected with the police force's morale. There is no denying that policemen have similar complaints all over the country. But Punjab has the relatively recent history of a widespread police agitation in 1978. "Don't forget that all this happened during Prakash Singh Badal's Akali regime. How do you expect the same police force to cooperate with the Akalis now?" asks Ajit Singh, a Janata leader and a former member of the CPI(ML) state committee.

Policemen say none of their grievances have been removed and, living in



PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

J.F. RIBEIRO

"We mean business now"

A BLACK-JACKETED book, titled Target Terrorism: Providing Protective Services, lies by the side of the monograph Terrorism and Punjab Problem. Sitting starry-eyed on the sofa are three young probationers of the Indian Police Service. They have good reason to be starry-eyed for they await orders from Julio Francis Ribeiro, the most celebrated policeman in the country today, now assigned to control the law and order situation in Punjab.

Ribeiro has had a controversial career, but few even among his detractors have denied his professionalism and efficiency. He has made palpable impact wherever he has been posted in recent times. It will be tougher in Punjab. Ribeiro, who has accepted a drop in rank by accepting the transfer from his pivotal post of special secretary in the Home Ministry, is aware of this. "Criminals are one thing but I have never been in a situation earlier where my life was threatened. In Bombay when someone rang the bell in my house I went up to open the door myself. But this is different," he reflected in the course of a long interview with Principal Correspondent SHEKHAR GUPTA. Excerpts:

Q. What is your brief in Punjab?

A. At the macro level, it is to bring about peace. That obviously means we have to get hold of the terrorists. The whole question is related to this. Communalism, for example, has come up because of terrorist activity and I want to end it. So far the terrorists have just been sitting there creating trouble. Now we will begin to ferret them out. We have no choice but to meet violence with violence.

Q. Do you feel that as an outsider you will have problems in relating to the police force?

A. No, that will not happen. I am not an outsider in the sense of being an opportunist who has come and grabbed this post. I was given this job and I have accepted a drop in rank to come here. I was not a figure-head secretary in the Home Ministry. I was a secretary with the power which goes with that office. I have given all that up to come here, and since people realise that there will be no such problem.

Q. How motivated and well-trained are the extremists?

A. They are very very strongly motivated. As a matter of fact they are very confident that they will ultimately get Khalistan. People who have trained them—in the camps in Pakistan—have spent a great deal of time in their indoctrination. Our information is that of every three persons who go across the border just one is considered suitable to be sent back after indoctrination and training. The rest, who fail to come up to the same fanatical level of motivation, stay back in Pakistani jails. The challenge now is to similarly motivate our policemen.

Q. Who is giving the terrorists their orders?

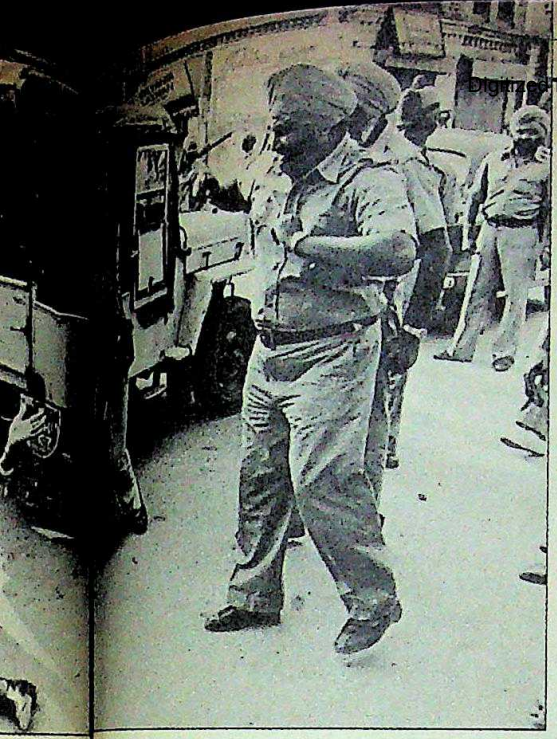
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



A lathi-wielding police force with ceremonial bolt-action rifles: unequal to the challenge the dungeons that the police stations and lines are in most of the cities, they can hardly feel motivated to lay down their lives. Only 10 per cent are provided with houses. Three major police stations in Amritsar city are housed in the buildings which were Maharaja Ranjit Singh's stables 150 years ago. "Surely the Maharaja must have kept these in a better condition than we do," says Gurbachan Jagat, once police superintendent of Amritsar and now chief of the state intelligence.

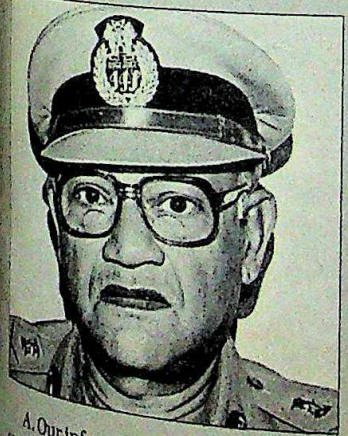
BUT LAST fortnight there was evidence of a new resolve on the part of the Government to reverse the tide. In a spirited speech at the National Integration Council meeting, Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi clearly stated: "Basically the (Punjab) problem is a police problem," and said elsewhere that "we are doing everything to better equip the police and the paramilitary forces in Punjab to meet the terrorist threat."

For the police this is a timely statement as it came just when the state submitted to Delhi a long list of demands. First of all Punjab has demanded that the force levels in the state be raised to the same magnitude as they were shortly after Operation Bluestar—when the army had over 50,000 troops on internal security duty. The Centre, scraping the barrel for more armed manpower, took the unprecedented step of sparing 10 companies of the Central Industrial Security Force to do guard duties at vital installations, sparing the BSF and CRPF for operations. The list includes over 2,000 self-loading rifles, an unspecified number of Sten guns, 600 bullet-proof jackets for men involved in special operations or guarding VVIP's and those on the hit list, over a hundred more wireless sets, 138 jeeps and a large number of motorcycles. In the past, such demands were turned down with arguments such as: "The way the Punjab police loses guns to terrorists, we can't trust them with sophisticated weapons."

That was four years ago, and shortly afterwards the Home Ministry had turned down the Haryana police's demand for 300-400 self-loading rifles for their own anti-terrorist squads. But now there are indications of change. Ribeiro means business, and he has not been forced on the state. In fact, he has been brought in on Barnala's own insistence and on the strength of the promise that he will be allowed to run the police the way he wants without interference. With the state Government itself conscious of the need to refurbish the police force, the Centre willing to help and a police chief who means to be tough, the Punjab police may at last have a chance of shaking off some of the disgrace of the past five years.



A. Our information is that the whole operation is being coordinated by the committee of five men based inside the Golden Temple. Two of these are proclaimed offenders. They make the plans and give out orders to execute them. Also, the fresh batches of extremists trained in Pakistan often make the Golden Temple their first hideout after infiltrating into the country and then fan out after getting their instructions.

Q. Do you see the possibility of your having to enter the Golden Temple to capture them?

A. This is a peculiar situation. Somehow the very idea of entering a shrine to take out criminals has become taboo, unacceptable to any religion. Also, in certain situations it can be counterproductive, as it was in the case of Operation Bluestar. At the same time, unless you act there will be no way of stopping the terrorists. We have to decide on that very carefully. Either we will have to ensure that the people inside the temple are left with no one outside to order about, or we will have to get the fellows who give the orders. We absolutely mean business now.

Q. Using the same Punjab police with its inefficiency, weakness and low morale?

A. Yes, absolutely. If the Punjab police cannot do it no one can. Neither the paramilitary forces nor the army. It is a local matter for the local police to sort out. It is only a question of raising the police morale and giving them a feeling of pride in doing this job. Let us face it. Any police force represents the society it belongs to, the society for which it has been created. I as a policeman was shamed by the Bhagalpur blindings. But people in Bhagalpur came out in the streets supporting the police. That only proves the point that a police force moulds itself according to the society.

Q. So what are you telling your men to do now?

A. To be courageous and to remember that the main thing about not being a coward is to face danger sensibly and not in a foolhardy manner. I do not want my policemen to go on dying. I tell them, die if you have to. It is an occupational hazard for us. But please ensure that if you lay down your life you should get four of them. After all, the police cannot always remain at the receiving end.

Q. But are they equipped to do that?

A. Well, there are some gaps there. We have asked for more weapons, radio sets and jeeps to beef up fire-power, equipment and transport. In any case, even now we have many more weapons than they have. As you know every defending force in such a situation has to be five times the size of the attackers.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ALCOHOLISM

THE GROWING MA

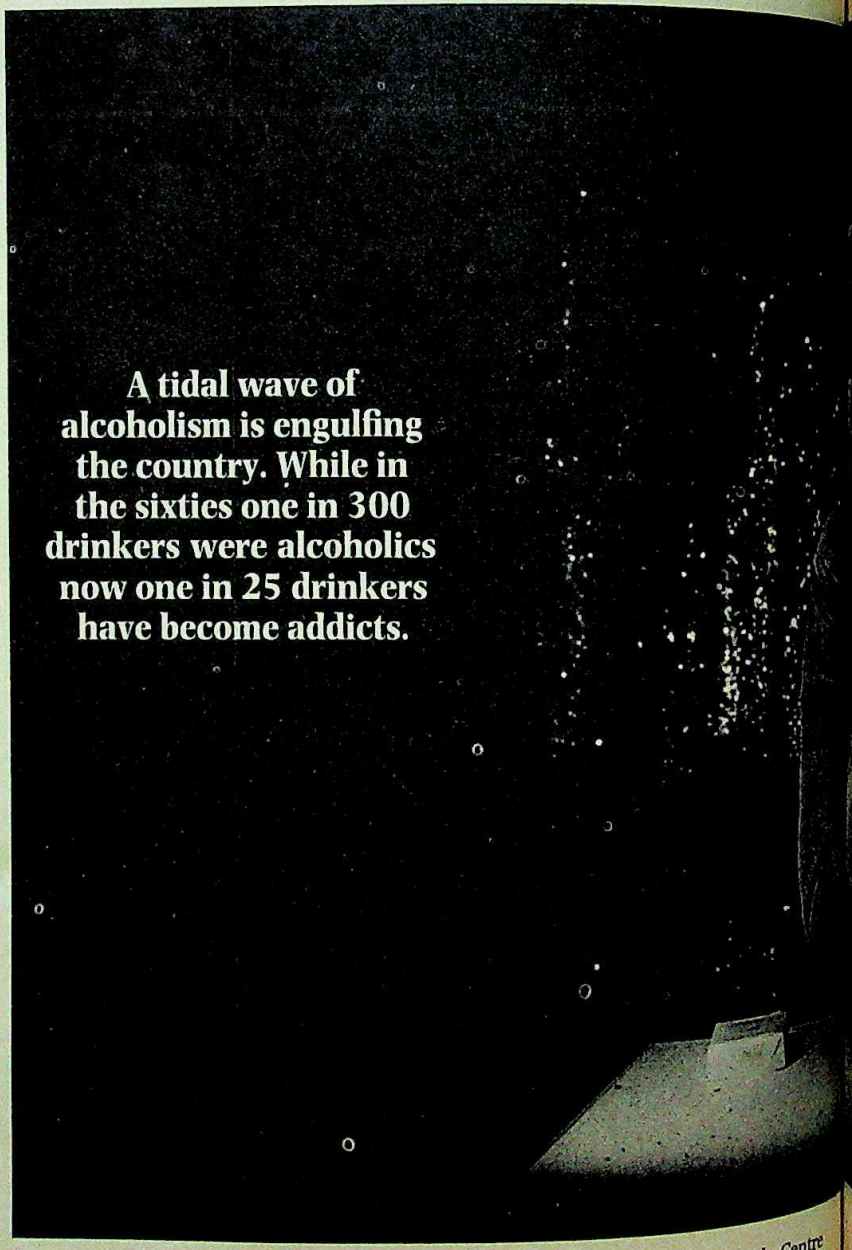
POUR yourself your favourite drink. Sit down, loosen your shoe laces and relax. Take a large swig. Feel the warmth flow into your system. Let the surge of confidence envelope you. Then answer these questions:

Do you prefer to drink alone?
Do you drink daily?
Does drinking spoil your sleep?
Do you drink to bolster your confidence?
Is drinking affecting your work?
Is your family affected by it?
Have you ever had a black-out?

If you have answered yes to any three of these questions then it's bad news. You are either an alcoholic or well on your way to becoming one. Worried? Then push your glass firmly away and listen. You are not the only one.

At exactly 7 p.m. every Saturday in the annexe building of a church on the busy Parliament Street in New Delhi, 20-odd people sit around a hexagonal table lit by candles. Among them are salesmen, businessmen, armed forces officers, government officials, factory workers and even a doctor. As the meeting progresses each one narrates how alcohol has destroyed his life. Choking with emotion, Mathew, a copy-writer in an advertising agency, says: "After a drunken bout I was like an animal. I messed my pants, vomited on the floor and crawled on the floor, unable to pick myself up." A tremendous feeling of empathy builds as the session ends, because each understands the others' sorrows, and many of those present weep openly. The meeting is typical of those held regularly across the country by 100 such Alcoholics Anonymous groups, a rapidly growing organisation of ex-drinkers trying to reform addicts.

A different kind of scene is being enacted in a white-tiled room at the National Institute of Mental Health and Neurosciences (NIMHANS), Bangalore. Krishnappa, a 38-year-old coffee planter, has his left arm strapped to a 40-volt transformer and is given a glass of whisky. As soon as he takes a sip he is given a mild shock that makes him grimace in pain. This aversion therapy is designed to make Krishnappa's psyche reject alcohol. Krishnappa started drinking when he was 16 and today he does little other than drink. His disgusted wife brought him for treatment last month.



A tidal wave of alcoholism is engulfing the country. While in the sixties one in 300 drinkers were alcoholics now one in 25 drinkers have become addicts.

In more homely surroundings inside a sprawling house in Madras, Swaminathan, a 55-year-old former bank manager, struggles with a picture puzzle given to him by psychologists at the T.T. Ranganathan Clinical Research Centre (TTRC) in Madras. The puzzle is designed to test how badly Swaminathan's brain has been damaged by alcohol. Swaminathan never drank when he was young, and was introduced to liquor after he was promoted as regional manager in the bank and forced to attend 'wet' parties. Soon he was hooked. At home he became irritable

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NG MALAISE

RAGHU RAI

and constantly abused his wife, throwing the food she served and breaking crockery. His drinking affected his son so badly that he dropped out of college.

Mathew, Krishnappa and Swaminathan are only the froth on a tidal wave of alcoholism engulfing the country. And there is a cask-full of statistics to prove the point. In the '60s only one in 300 drinkers was considered an alcoholic. Then the World Health Organisation (WHO) reported that by 1980 an estimated three million—or one in 25—of the 80 million Indians who consume alcohol had become severely addicted.

Last year the Indian Council of Medical Research (ICMR) surveyed the problem in four regions—Bangalore, Delhi, Dibrugarh and Ranchi. It found that 20 per cent of urban consumers had become totally dependent on it, while in villages the figure went as high as 30 to 40 per cent. Davinder Mohan, who coordinated the ICMR survey and heads the Department of Psychiatry at the All-India Institute of Medical Sciences (AIIMS) in New Delhi, says: "Alcohol is already taking a heavy toll in the country. It's soon going to be evident even to a blind person."

The toll, in fact, has already become starkly evident:

► In major hospitals alcoholics now form 20 to 30 per cent of the patients in psychiatric wards when five years ago they constituted only 0.2 per cent. In Bombay's KEM Hospital, which treated 309 patients in the past two years, sociologist Hema Shah says: "Initially we got people only from the slum areas. But soon bank officers, managers, factory workers and even government officers started coming for treatment. The middle class too seems to be affected in a big way."

► Last year's ICMR study indicated that half the industrial workers surveyed drink regularly, and companies report that alcoholism has become one of the major causes of absenteeism and falling productivity. At Ashok Leyland in Madras, for instance, managers estimate that atleast 500 of the company's 7,500 workers are problem drinkers. Says Executive Director J. Joseph: "We used to have 10 per cent absenteeism, but now we find it going up to 22 per cent and we think alcoholism has a great deal to do with it."

► Alcohol is a major cause of broken marriages. Relationships with wives were seriously disrupted in 64 per cent of the alcoholics. In Bombay, Bagashri Parikh, a marriage counsellor at the city court, says that one out of 10 divorces is because of alcoholic husbands and adds: "Most of the alcoholics beat their wives regularly."

► The country's road research institutes estimate that 25 per cent of road accidents are alcohol-related and that a third of the drivers on the highway are under the influence of alcohol. In Delhi, when the AIIMS did a study of accident victims suffering from head injuries, it found that 20 per cent had consumed alcohol.

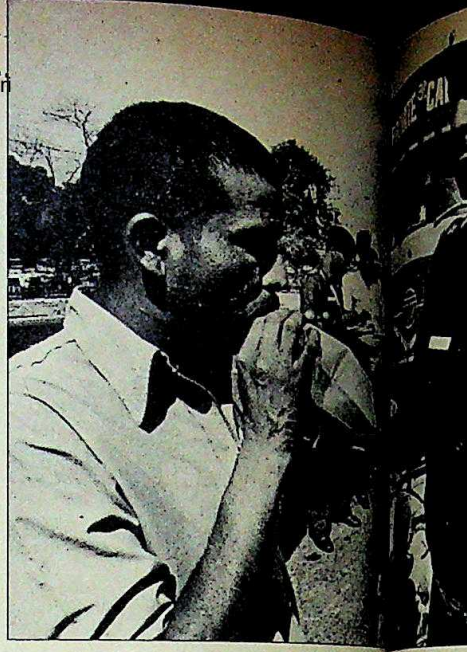
Surveying the damage Hira Singh,

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

director, National Institute of Social Defence (NISD), the Union Welfare Ministry's striking arm against drug abuse, says: "There is no doubt that alcohol is the most widely abused drug in the country." That's certainly true. Alcoholism has traditionally been associated with the tribal areas in the country, where people brew their own liquor. Then the problem spread to the hilly areas and the northeast, and to industrial townships and the coalfields. Now other areas too have got ensnared, hitting people from all walks of life: professionals, businessmen, industrial workers, government servants, armed forces officers and farmers. The statistics reveal that most of the patients (98 per cent) are predominantly male, and usually in the prime of their lives at 25 years and above. A majority are married and have children. In most cases they are the only bread-winners in the family. "It's hitting the most productive section of our society and is creating havoc," says psychiatrist J.V. Devar in Madras.

Researchers are hard put to explain the dramatic rise in alcoholism in a country that has prohibition enshrined as a Directive Principle of the Constitution. But prohibition as a policy has been steadily given up by one state after another, and liquor is now as easily available as tea leaves in most parts of the country. Alcohol consumption, inevitably, has gone up quite dramatically. In 1976, liquor manufacturers used up 169.4 million litres of pure alcohol, enough to manufacture 350 million bottles of rum.



Police test driver for drinking:

CASE STUDIES

Shattered Lives

BHASKER Maben, 49, a machine operator in a Bangalore factory, began drinking heavily 15 years ago after he was superseded at work and his youngest son, Dinakar, died the same year. Maben recalls: "At work I had no peace and at home I was unhappy. Booze was the only way I could forget my sorrows." Instead it brought him more.

Maben became a chronic alcoholic and began sleeping with a bottle under his pillow. He started absenting himself from work regularly. His increments and promotions were stopped.

With liquor burning up all his money, Maben was invariably broke. His favourite clarinet, guitar and camera found their way to the local pawn shop, as did his wife Evelyn's jewellery, including her mangalsutra. The worst came when he was evicted from his rented two-bedroom house. Arun, his son, remembers that incident with a shudder and says: "I can never forget how ashamed I was. All our furniture and clothes were lying on the footpath. I just ran to my friend's house and hid."

Someone suggested that he send Rs 50 to St Francis Xavier's tomb in Goa, but that did not help. Nor did money sent to Tirupati Temple, or consulting a Mantravadi, who made him wear a charm around his waist and charged him Rs 1,000 for his pains. He was admitted to NIMHANS as many as 18 times for treatment, and the doctors refused to admit him any more.

Frustration and desperation drove him to drink a bottle of varnish last year, which nearly killed him. After that he vowed to give up drinking and over a period of one year, Maben's transformation has been dramatic. He has started doing yoga, which helps him sleep well. He goes to work regularly.

BHAWAN SINGH

Maben: back from the brink

At home things have improved considerably, and Evelyn now goes shopping with him—something they had not done for years. Every Sunday all of them sing bhajans at a nearby spiritual centre. Daughter Chandrika says: "There is so much peace at home now."

■ Narayan, 44, a peon in a bank in Madurai is not so happy. An alcoholic for the past 10 years, Narayan was brought in a delirious state to the TTRC for treatment last month. His office had suspended him for coming drunk to work and warned him that unless he gave up drinking they would dismiss him.

While Narayan is still unable to speak coherently about his addiction, his wife Malini, who faced the brunt of his drunken bouts, has a sorry tale to narrate. She remembers that initially when Narayan drank she thought he was just trying to forget his worries. But soon he was coming home drunk every day, beating her regularly, and always in a foul mood. He threw away the food she made for him, he was nasty with the children and prevented them from studying at night. He did not give her money and pawned all her jewellery.

She was forced to take up work as domestic help to feed the children. And when her children worried her

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

But despite tough measures by the puritanical Janata government and the Congress(I)'s resolve to hold production at the 1981 level of 207.9 million litres, the consumption of pure alcohol climbed to 331 million litres last year—sufficient to produce 1,134 million bottles of rum!

Indians now have more than 200 brands of whisky, 50 brands of rum, 30 kinds of brandy, 10 brands of gin, 15 of wine, 50 beers and a couple of hundred varieties of country liquor to choose from. "People have become more brand conscious and are willing to pay more for better quality liquor these days," says Ravi Jain, general manager of McDowells, a subsidiary of United Breweries, which is among the big five in the liquor business. McDowells has registered a 10 per cent growth every year.

That Indians are drinking more than ever before is evident by their revolutionary change in attitudes towards drinking. The traditional taboo against liquor is rapidly vanishing. More and more homes serve liquor to guests, 'dry' parties are considered boring, and traditional festivals like Ganesh Chaturthi, Diwali and Holi are used as excuses to go on drinking bouts. Salesmen and businessmen prefer to do business over lunch lined with liquor. Among youngsters, to drink is to be manly. "We are becoming more of an alcoholised society," says psychiatrist Rajat Ray of NIMHANS. And in Lucknow, psychiatrist B.B. Sethi says: "A house not serving liquor is now an exception."

Drinking in bars, once the haunt of only the hardened alcoholic, has gained increasing acceptance. In the outskirts of for money to see films, she told them sharply: "Your father is taking my life out of me, now you don't start." The office suspended Narayan several times, but Malini used to go and fall at the bank manager's feet and beg for mercy. Meanwhile Narayan became so weak that according to Malini "he is now only eyes and stomach. I don't know how much longer he would live."

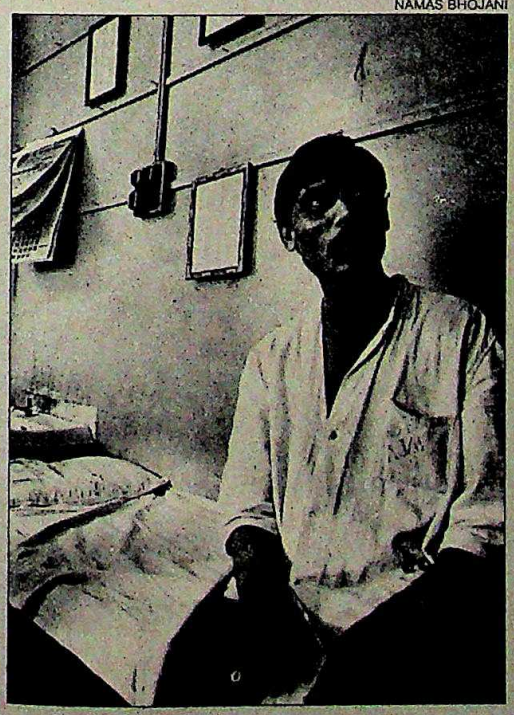
■ Anand, 33, unlike Narayan who has not yet lost his job, finds his life has been completely shattered and is only now beginning to pick up the pieces. Anand has been an alcoholic for the past 13 years. Last year his wife walked out on him, taking their two children with her. Immediately after that he lost his job as a sales executive in a Delhi travel agency.

Anand, the son of an air force officer, started drinking when in his second year at college in Nagpur. Since his father was in the armed forces, drinking was considered normal. Anand found himself increasingly attending parties where liquor was served and he says: "I used to be the first to start drinking and the last to leave. I had a tremendous capacity, and even if I had five large pegs I would never get drunk." After graduation, his job as a sales executive offered even more opportunities to drink and, as he puts it: "It was an ideal job for an alcoholic. I became a 24-hour drinker."

For a while he thought he could handle his liquor and he made sure that his work was not affected. When his wife, a doctor, told him to give up drinking, he said: "I thought she was a bloody nag and I used to get the feeling that the whole world was after my blood." Soon he became irregular at work and extremely irritable at home, hitting his wife once in anger. That's when she left him. He was forced to give up his job because, as he says: "I couldn't handle two careers at one time: my drinking and my job." Last year he touched rock bottom: "I had become like a caged tiger. I didn't know how to escape and all I did was hide myself in the bottle." He finally joined an Alcoholics Anonymous group in Delhi, and now he says: "My obsession is gone. But I'm not going to take up a job till I'm fully recovered."

NAMAS BHOJANI



David: groping for help

■ David, 32, a packer in a Bombay firm, has had equally traumatic experiences with alcohol. Living in a dirty slum in Ghatkopar, David, who looks older than his age, is slowly recovering from the damaging effects of alcohol. His speech is still slurred and he gropes for words. His hands tremble uncontrollably. Doctors attending on him say his brain has suffered some damage and it may be a year before he is able to recover.

David, who is married and has two children, remembers that he started drinking when he was around 15 years old: "At that time we drank because after a hard day's work we had nothing to do and we wanted to forget the strain of living." Initially he drank only on week-ends, but: "After some time all I did was to drink, drink and sleep."

He refused to go to work, and last year was absent for 140 days. His office sent him a charge-sheet, which he ignored. His entire pay packet of Rs 1,000 went towards liquor: "I used to be so desperate that I even sold my shoes and shirt." His wife left him twice to go and live with her father.

David was admitted last month to the KEM Hospital for severe withdrawal symptoms of alcohol like hallucinations and shakes. Says David: "Alcohol has ruined my life."

—RAJ CHENGAPPA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

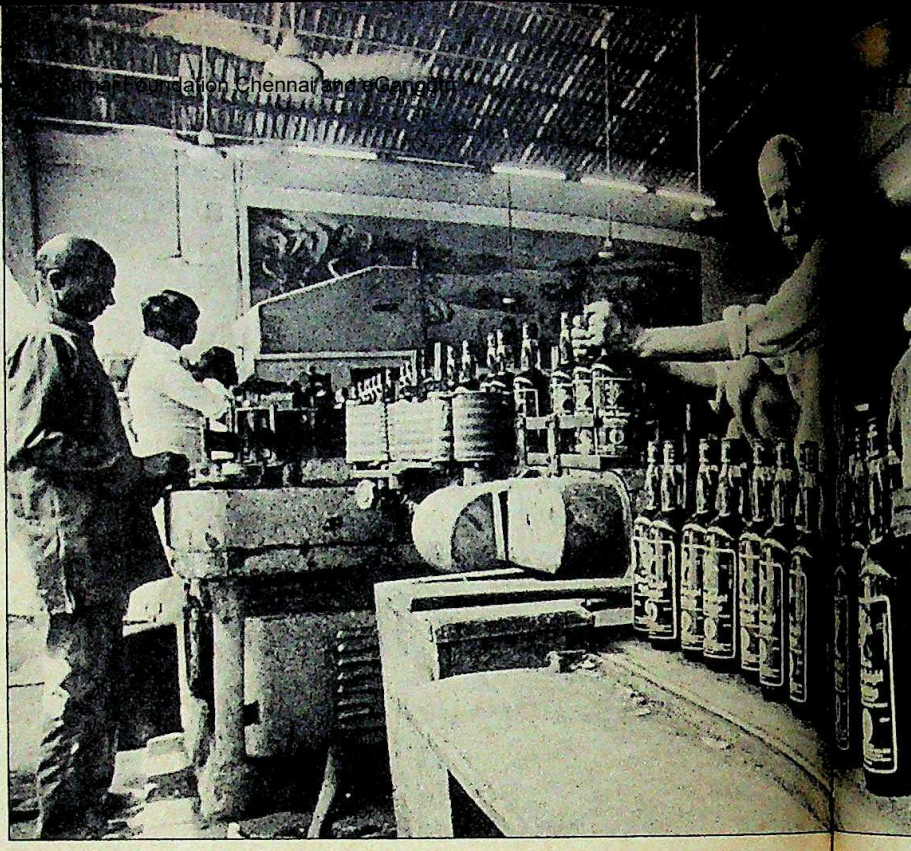
Digitized by [illegible] Foundation, Chennai and eGangotri

Patna, for instance, roadside bhattis, the poor man's bars, have become popular drinking places. One of them on the by-pass road to Patna is a huge, sprawling dimly-lit shack reeking with the stench of liquor, rotten fish and frying eggs. Around 250 people, among them teenagers, sit around in groups chatting and shouting. They come from all social groups—rickshaw-pullers, factory workers, professionals and even police constables in civilian dress. Babu Lalrai, 35, a tailor, chirps up: "Yes, I drink daily and go to the Ganga for a holy dip daily."

THE WAVE of alcoholism is by no means confined to the cities. While the sale of country liquor in most states has risen slowly, this masks the fact that people have increasingly moved to cheaper, illicit liquor because even country liquor costs as much as Rs 8 for a bottle. In Bangalore, arrack king H.R. Basavaraj estimates that "illicit liquor sales equal that of country liquor". The repetitive liquor tragedies testify to this. In Bangalore more than 300 people died of liquor poisoning in 1981. The next year in the island of Vypeen in Kerala, 72 people were killed. On an average more than 200 people are killed in the country from liquor poisoning every year.

What worries many psychiatrists is the widespread acceptance of beer and the current boom in beer sales. In Maharashtra, beer sales have jumped from 14 million bottles to 24 million bottles in the last five years. And in West Bengal, more beer is consumed than whisky, rum and brandy put together; last year's beer sales totalled 12 million bottles. But if people regard beer as some kind of milk product, the harsh truth is that one bottle of beer has about the same alcohol content as a peg of whisky, and psychiatrists say that beer drinking not only opens the floodgates for more potent liquor but is addictive and in the long run can do as much damage as whisky or rum.

The splurge in drinking is reflected in the high per capita consumption of liquor. While the annual per capita consumption of alcohol by adults in India hovers around one litre of pure alcohol (equivalent to two-and-a-half bottles of rum), a little lower than Australia's 1.5 and a lot less than the US's 4.1, this figure is misleading. Unlike Australia and the US, women in India hardly drink. So if only the male population's consumption is calculated, the figure jumps to around two litres of pure alcohol. And if only the drinking male population is taken into account, the figure is as high as 4.1, or 10 bottles of rum per head annually: high enough for the alarm bells to be ringing. Even this excludes the millions of litres of illicit liquor that goes down parched gullets. And in states like Punjab, the per capita consumption is 6.5 litres of pure alcohol, or 16 bottles of rum.



On the production line: 350 brands to choose from

All drinkers are not drunkards. So when does a normal drinker turn alcoholic? The popular concept of the drunk is one who falls into gutters or staggers around on streets mouthing obscenities. But that, say psychiatrists, is only the last stages of alcoholism. A social drinker becomes a problem one when, according to Shanthi

INTOXICATION

The Effects

ALCOHOL is formed by fermenting sugar with yeast spores. Ethyl alcohol, or pure alcohol, is the basic raw material for the various liquors available. It has no nutritional value but produces feelings of sedation, euphoria, intoxication and finally unconsciousness. Whisky, rum and gin have around 40 per cent pure alcohol, wines 8 to 15 per cent and beer 4 to 8 per cent alcohol content.

Depending on what the person has eaten, 20 per cent of the alcohol that is drunk is absorbed immediately by the blood stream through the walls of the stomach and the rest from the small intestine. Eating peanuts or cheese helps line the stomach walls and slows down the absorption of alcohol.

Until the liver oxidises all the alcohol it keeps coursing through the body, including the brain. The effects of alcohol depend on the blood alcohol level (see illustration). It is in the brain that the effects of intoxication are produced. Research has shown that alcohol primarily depresses the central nervous system resulting in thought becoming jumbled and disorganised and the faculties of discrimination, memory, concentration being dulled and then lost.

The early warning signs of alcoholism include an increasing tolerance for alcohol, the quick gulping of pegs, blackouts or temporary amnesia and an intense preoccupation with drinking. The crucial stage comes when the drinker loses complete control over the amount of alcohol he consumes and when to have a drink. He has ready excuses for his drinking. He exhibits grandiose behaviour, spends money lavishly and starts showing signs of aggres-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by ... Chennai and eGangotri

RAGHU RAI

Ranganathan of TTRC: "His drinking starts affecting on a continuous basis his health, his job efficiency and his relations with his family and friends." The WHO estimates that one out of 10 drinkers turns alcoholic.

Most drinkers do not realise when they have crossed the thin red line between social drinking and alcoholism. In Madras, Udayakumar, 37, a former packing manufacturer, thought he had his drinking well under control till one day he realised that "a quarter of a bottle of rum was a mosquito bite". In Bangalore, a salesman remembers that while initially he could hardly hold a peg of whisky he suddenly found himself going on long drinking bouts. Says he: "Every cell in my body craved for alcohol and when I took a drink it was like setting off a nuclear reaction. I didn't stop drinking till I became unconscious." And in Bombay, a factory supervisor initially started drinking during week-ends with friends. Then, as he says, "after a while I drank once in three days, then every alternate day, then every day and then every hour".

Researchers now agree that alcoholism is a disease, because alcoholics exhibit predictable symptoms and suffer the same physical and mental trauma: severe shakes, damage to vital organs like the heart and liver, and psychological breakdown. Society, which always dismissed alcoholics as weak-willed or immoral people, is only now reluctantly beginning to accept this home truth. In Bangalore, Malavika, a 30-year-old management consultant married to a lawyer, confesses: "I thought all drunkards were bums till my husband became an alcoholic. Initially I was bewildered and thought he drank because he was not happy with me. But I soon realised that although he desperately wanted to give up alcohol he couldn't. It was as though he had caught a disease."

ONCE the disease catches on it moves with terrifying rapidity, reducing its victims to physical, mental and moral wrecks. Try as they will, they find it impossible to kick the habit even though they know that it is steadily destroying their lives. A Bombay naval officer remembers with tears how he tied his favourite Labrador and whipped it mercilessly in a drunken fit. The next morning the dog seemed to forget the beating and wagged its tail, but he was so insane that he whipped it again. Mathew, the Delhi copy-writer, remembers how he threw up a Rs 5,000 job in a leading advertising agency when he quarrelled with his employer over a trivial matter.

Probably the most damaging effect of this wave of alcoholism, according to a doctor, is that "not only the drinker but everyone in the family suffers. Alcoholism is a family disease." As the alcoholic becomes more and more obnoxious, the wife and children get seriously affected. Malavika, the lawyer's wife, recalls the traumatic experience when guests dropped in one morning and found her husband lying on the floor dead drunk. The naval commander's wife once tried to jump out of a fourth floor window after he slapped her in a drunken rage. Children too are badly affected. In a typical case in Bangalore, Arun, 17, whose father has been a chronic alcoholic, dropped out of school and took to drugs and alcohol. In sion. He begins to stock up alcohol and if threatened hides his stock. He drinks to prevent withdrawal symptoms.

How alcohol affects a normal drinker weighing 60 kg who consumes more than 60 ml of whisky an hour on an empty stomach:

The chronic stage is reached when the drinker goes on binges for days together, followed by abstinence for a short period. He develops suspicious ideas, fears and doubts about both himself and his family members. He loses his tolerance for alcohol and gets highly intoxicated on small quantities. If he does not take alcohol his body develops severe withdrawal symptoms like hallucinations, tremors and shakes, profuse sweating and irritableness.

In the chronic stage, apart from the severe breakdown of relationships with his family, friends and colleagues at work, the alcoholic also suffers from acute physical damage. Prolonged drinking can lead to cirrhosis of the liver, jaundice, stomach ulcers, heart and brain damage. Little wonder then that alcohol is called the demon drink.

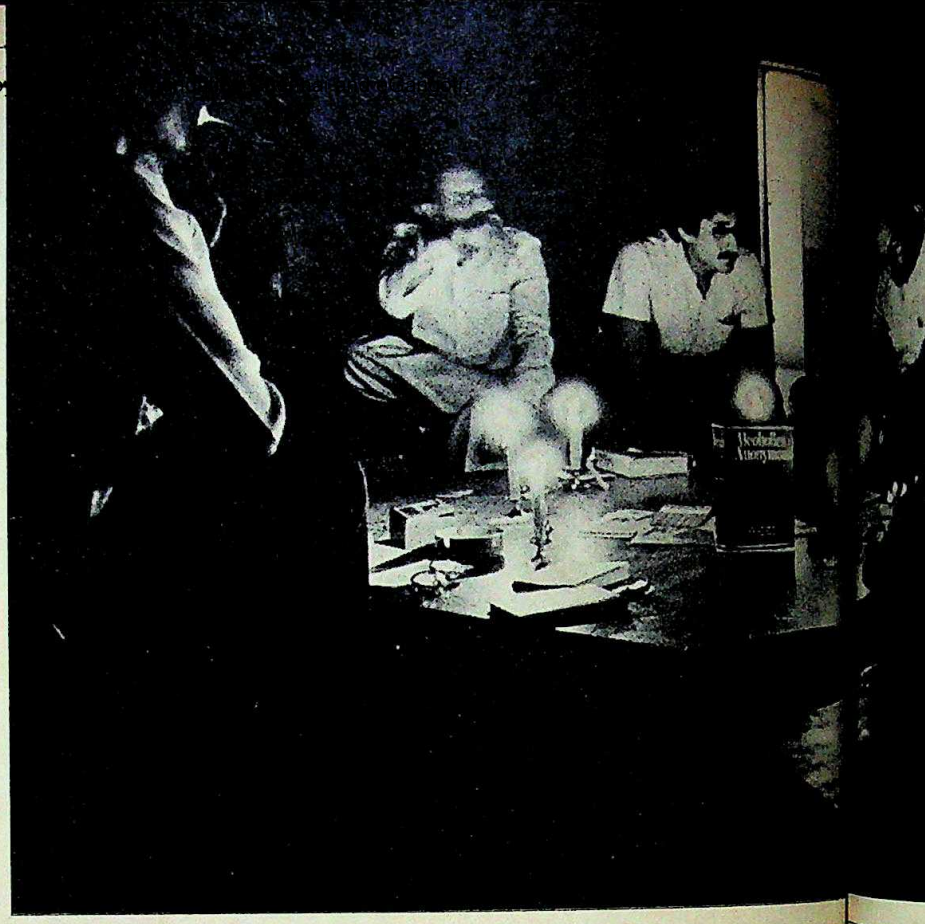
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by

fact studies abroad indicate that alcoholism could also be a familial disease, with children of alcoholics being more prone to becoming alcoholics themselves.

If more families have not broken up, it is because most Indian wives fear the stigma attached to divorce. Last fortnight Malathi, 38, the wife of a former supervisor in a printing press and mother of five children, came to social workers at the Maharashtra State Women's Council for help. Her husband had beaten her so badly that her cheek and shoulder were blue-black. She said her husband had lost his job because of his drinking, and when she wanted to take up a job her husband refused to allow her and suspected her fidelity. Her eldest son had become a vagrant and a petty thief. But when the council suggested she divorce her husband, she flatly refused. Says the council's social worker Anila Merchant: "For most sufferers marriage provides some form of security."

A just-published study of workers at the Madras Port Trust, done by sociologist Saraswathi Sankaran, shows how damaging alcohol can be. Of the 162 workers surveyed, more than half of them drank heavily, and a third were addicts.



DE-ADDICTION

Creditable Successes

WHEN Shanthi Ranganathan, a Madras housewife, decided to set up an exclusive centre for the treatment and rehabilitation of alcoholics five years ago, many people dismissed her efforts as the desperate actions of a grief-stricken wife. Her husband, an industrialist, had just died from alcoholism and Shanthi recalls: "People thought I was crazy. They could not accept that alcoholism could be cured, and doctors warned me that it was a disease of only relapses and remissions." But Shanthi was determined. She did a course in the US on the treatment of alcoholics and started a centre in her sprawling home on the quiet Santhome High Road in Madras.

Today the T.T. Ranganathan Clinical Research Centre (TTRC) has grown into an institute of national repute and is the only one of its kind for treating alcoholics. Given the excellent cure rate of almost 60 per cent, the annual inflow of patients has gone up from 62 in 1981 to 320 last year.

Before the centre was established, there were hardly any treatment facilities for the country's three million alcoholics, most of whom were admitted to the general wards of hospitals and treated for symptoms like jaundice or hallucinations. The centre's success lies in the fact that it offers treatment for the basic problem of alcoholism. It first admits patients to a nursing home for withdrawal symptoms like hallucinations, vomiting and severe shakes.

Once the "detoxification programme" is over, patients undergo intensive individual and group therapy sessions. Surprisingly, most patients blame their problems on others. A bank manager undergoing treatment blamed his son who dropped out of college as the reason for his heavy drinking.

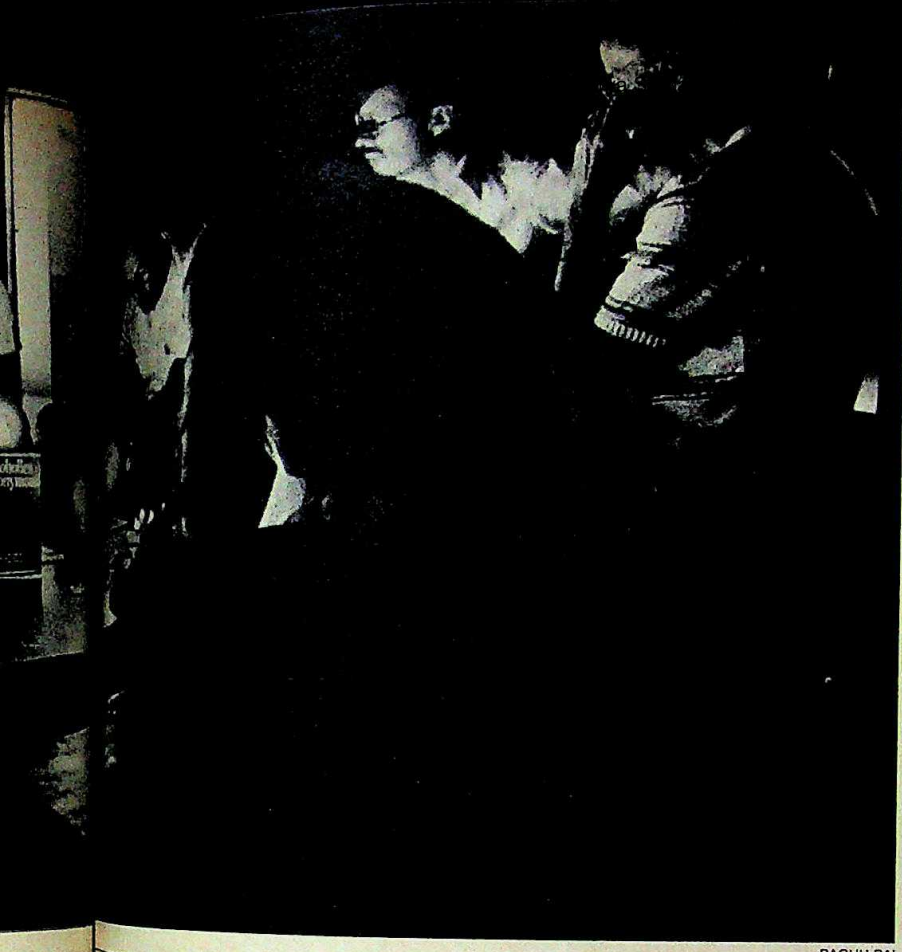
The group therapy sessions help patients to confront their problems head on. In these sessions, recovering alcoholics narrate their problems, providing hope and making it easy for new patients to identify with them. Says psychologist Christina Chakravarthy: "Group therapy helps in assuaging their guilt and releases their bottled-up feelings." The patient is able to admit both to himself and others that he is an alcoholic.

But to ensure that he does not yield to fresh temptation, the patient is put on a drug called Antabuse which causes a violent reaction if he consumes alcohol while on the course. The reactions could even result in death unless an antidote is administered within 24 hours.

However, getting an alcoholic to admit that he is one and keeping him off liquor for a month is, as psychiatrist J.V.Devar puts it, "only half the battle won". The more difficult part is rehabilitating him so that he can start living a normal life. Most alcoholics have snapped ties with their family and friends and have probably lost their jobs too. One of the major hurdles psychiatrists face is in getting the family to be more understanding towards recovering alcoholics. This is easier said than done as the wife of a salesman-turned-alcoholic narrates. Her husband found that he hardly had any role to play at home because she did all the work and the children held back

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by eGangotri



RAGHU RAI

Alcoholics Anonymous meeting

Sankaran compared the work performance of the drinkers and non-drinkers and was stunned to find that the heavy drinkers were absent every sixth working day. As a result, the non-drinkers took home 50 per cent more money than the drinkers, spent 8 per cent more on food, 30 per cent more on clothing, 168 per cent more on health care and a whopping 300 per cent more on children's education. Says Sankaran: "Whether it is poverty, malnutrition, marital disharmony or delinquent children, alcohol seems to have been the major cause of all their miseries."

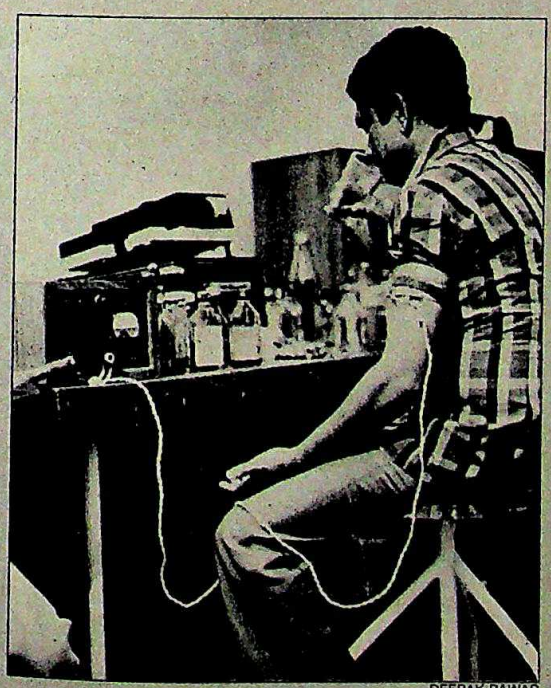
While alcoholism and its related problems increase alarmingly, progress on the treatment of sufferers has been tardy. Most alcoholics find that doctors treat the problem as a moral issue. Said one alcoholic: "My whole world had crumbled, and here was this doctor telling me I must develop the will power to stop drinking." Only now are hospitals recognising alcoholism as a major problem and setting up specialised clinics for treatment (see box). As a consequence, there are facilities for treating hardly 3,000 of the estimated three million alcoholics in the country.

from him. To overcome these problems, the centre holds regular family counselling sessions where the families are taught how to cope with recovering alcoholics.

While centres like TTRC may be difficult to replicate in the country, elsewhere, hospitals which have set up de-addiction clinics (and there are very few) have also been reporting encouraging results. One of them is the de-addiction centre run by the KEM Hospital in Bombay. Using a judicious combination of group therapy, individual counselling and an Antabuse course, the clinic reports that in the past two years it has been able to achieve a cure rate of 46 per cent. And in Bangalore, NIMHANS psychologists using aversion have reported an encouraging 45 per cent cure rate. Says psychologist T. Kumaraiah: "We found that married people responded to treatment better than the rest, and the recovery rate was the highest among the older groups.

But probably one of the most successful ways of treating addicts is the Alcoholics Anonymous (AA) programme which is fast gaining popularity in the country. AA is a non-profit world-wide organisation of recovered alcoholics trying to help others in the same plight. There are already 100 such groups in the country, with Bombay alone boasting 55. Other cities with AA groups are Bangalore, Goa, Madras, Secunderabad, New Delhi, Cochin, Mangalore, Nagpur, Pune and Mysore.

Aversion therapy: effective



DEEPAK PAWAR

AA members find that the group sessions help alcoholics to come to terms with their problems. In fact the first step for all AA members is to admit that "we were powerless over alcohol, that our lives had become unmanageable". The sessions also help other recovering alcoholics by constantly reminding them of their earlier plight. Said an AA member: "By trying to help others we are actually motivating ourselves to keep away from liquor." For the families of alcoholics, the AA has a separate group called Al-Anon where members hold similar group therapy sessions. Rather than impose a set period of abstinence, the AA's golden rule for its members is: Get up every morning and tell yourself that you will remain sober for the next 24 hours. It seems to work.

—RAJ CHENGAPPA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

But even hospitals that have clinics are faced with problems like the lack of professionally trained staff.

The problem is compounded by the fact that most alcoholics do not get themselves treated till at a very late stage, because most people do not like to admit they have an alcoholic in their family and try to conceal the fact as long as possible. A factory supervisor in Bombay, who had been an alcoholic for five years, first tried to give up drinking himself. When that failed his wife sent him to the local mantravadi to exorcise the spirit that seemed to have possessed him. It was only when he was admitted to the KEM Hospital with an attack of jaundice that he learnt the hospital had a de-addiction programme. In fact, most of the patients usually go to hospital when they have serious health problems such as cirrhosis of the liver or fits of delirium.

If the psychiatrists find it difficult to cope with the problem, the Government seems equally helpless. The state governments, which control alcohol supply and distribution, indirectly encourage people to drink more because revenue from excise forms a major part of the income of most states. In Karnataka liquor is the second biggest money-spinner for the state, netting Rs 50 crore last year, while in Tamil Nadu it accounts for a good 8 per cent of the revenue. Total liquor sales in the country would amount to something like Rs 3,000 crore, and liquor companies form a powerful lobby group.

Ironically, although the Constitution has made prohibition a Directive Principle, the states have made only feeble attempts to make prohibition effective policy. Most governments in fact have given up prohibition altogether. Tamil Nadu and Maharashtra, which had imposed prohibition at different times, ran into trouble and were forced to relax their rules.Tamil Nadu needed the excise revenue to run its midday meal scheme. Maharashtra, which strangely enough has placed prohibition and excise under the same department, is quite happy counting the take from liquor sales while running a prohibition programme to educate people on the evils of drinking. Bihar was forced to lift prohibition after a large number of people died in of illicit liquor in the Dhanbad coalfields. Right now Gujarat is the only state where prohibition is enforced, but liquor is still easily available and the policy is commonly seen as a farce.

WISER from these experiences, many states have set up temperance boards in the fond hope that if they cannot prevent people from drinking they can convince them to drink moderately. But most of these boards do little more than release advertisements in newspapers showing a bottle marked with the familiar skull and crossbones.

With governments unable to curb the menace, people have taken matters into their own hands. In distant Imphal in Manipur, women were so disgusted with their menfolk's excessive drinking that they formed themselves into an association against drunkards and kept vigil at nights in front of liquor shops and bars. Any drunkard they catch is publicly humiliated by making him walk with a string of bottles tied around his neck, and then handed over to the police. In the hills of Uttar Pradesh and tribal areas of Bihar similar people's movements have met with notable success in an area where drunkenness has become a major social problem.

Meanwhile, to formulate fresh strategies against drinking and drug abuse, the Welfare Ministry two years ago set up a working group chaired by its joint secretary. This is likely to stress education programmes on the evils of drinking. As Rajendra Kumari Bajpai, minister of state for welfare says: "A stroke of the pen, like imposing a total ban, is not going to help. If we have to bring alcoholism under control we need to use persuasion, create awareness and show a strong determination to implement our programmes."

But with both the Central and state governments failing to make a serious dent in the two vital factors that the WHO says leads to an increase in alcoholism—easy availability and increasing demand for alcohol—the battle of the bottle may be well and truly lost.

—RAJ CHENGAPPA with bureau reports

Youngsters drinking: vulnerable age

RAGHU RAI

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Crisp, lightweight Dinesh Safaris have caught even Sunil Gavaskar's eye. Because Dinesh Safaris are perfect complements for people with a cool composure and class. Dinesh Safaris. In a repertoire of shades that are just right for Sunny days!

dinesh Safaris
Give you a distinct identity.

SDM 2004

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

GCEL

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Gurukul Kangri Collecti

Wherever you can't go, your voice can.

And whoever you may be. Instant telecommunication links you with the rest of the world. From any remote corner of the country.

Telecommunication. Making boundaries disappear and shrinking the wide world to size. Manageable, friendlier and beneficial.

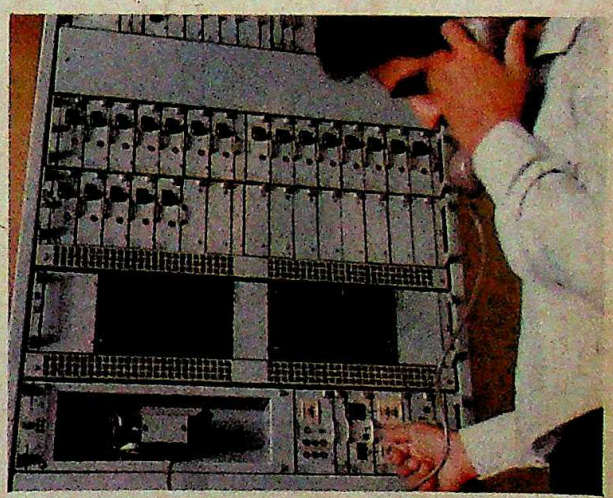
In every sphere of growth. From Economy to Defence. And at GCEL, we believe growth begins from communication. And in the field of communication, GCEL's growth has helped India grow more accessible. Within and beyond.

GCEL's Communication Equipment

At GCEL, the communication equipment range is as wide as the country's needs. From the basic telephone instrument to state-of-the-art static and mobile satellite communication terminals. Designed and developed to meet specific needs. Like UHF Radio Relay Equipment. Upto 120 channels. Multi Access Radio Telephone Equipment (MART). Upto 6 VHF channels. Installed in several parts of the country on turnkey basis. Because at GCEL, we mould and shape technology.

The Better Technology of GCEL

At Gujarat Communications and Electronics Ltd., our objectives are clear. And simple. Since 1975. That India's future is hi-tech. And every Indian should be part of it. Wherever he or she is in India. So at GCEL, we develop technology that's better and relevant. To help every Indian live a little better.



GCEL

Gujarat Communications & Electronics Ltd.
Regd. Office: Third Floor, Anurag Commercial Centre, Race Course Road, Baroda 390 005.

Live better. The better technology is here.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Mudra:A:GCEL:3001

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

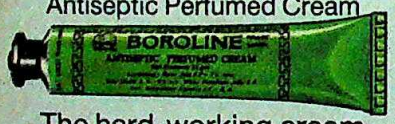
Skin that is lively even after the razor has taken its daily toll. Skin that can stand the nicks of the sharpest blade. Skin that stays fresh and protected. With Boroline.

Razor Skin

Boroline fights and cures infection in cuts, pimples, rashes and dryness. Its antiseptic action protects your skin.

Boroline

Antiseptic Perfumed Cream



The hard-working cream that protects your skin

GD

G D Pharmaceuticals Limited
Asha Mahal Calcutta 700053

Not a cosmetic or toilet preparation.

Response 1001

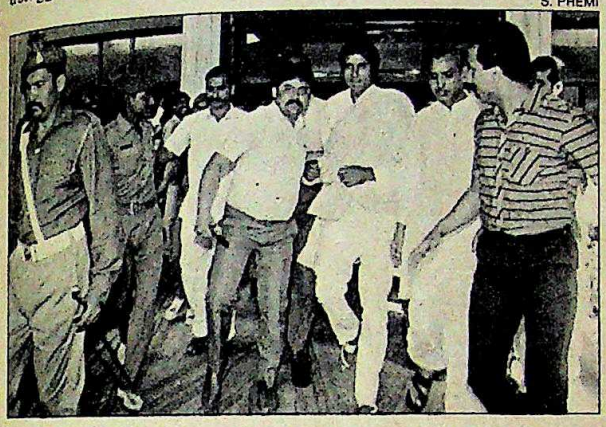
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Money Spinner

TIME is money. Superstar-turned-MP Amitabh Bachchan, after raking in crores from films, garnered Rs 1.30 crore for his constituency at a 180-minute meeting with the Uttar Pradesh chief secretary—a figure which works out to a staggering Rs 1 lakh per minute prompting a Congress wag to remark: "It is perhaps the first and last time that an MP has been given this VIP treatment." And his meeting with Chief Minister Bir Bahadur Singh had all the trappings of a house full matinee show. Peons and security guards, liftmen and clerks, typists and junior officials crowded outside the conference room, autograph books in hand to get the star's signature or even a glimpse of his silk churidar-kurta clad form.

S. PREMI



Amitabh Bachchan: star appeal

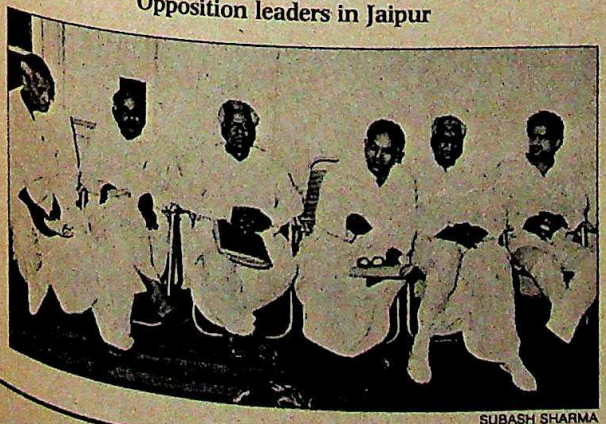
But the problems were less glamorous—right from construction of new roads, bridges and improvement of drinking water supply for Allahabad to a 32-bed hospital for Ramnagar. A piffling deficit of Rs 5 lakh is being made good by Nirman, an organisation promoted by Bachchan for Allahabad's development. Nobody missed out on the political undercurrents either. Only two of five MLA's of his area turned up for the discussion.

Shared Interest

TWO IS always better than one. Opposition leaders of Haryana and Rajasthan, convinced that their states stand to lose their legitimate share of the river waters as an outcome of the Punjab accord, met in Jaipur last fortnight to wage war together. But before girding themselves for battle, they intend seeking answers to some questions from one of the architects of the accord—the prime minister himself.

Briefly, these revolve around why the Supreme Court has not been brought in to work out specifics of the power to be shared from five Punjab power projects. Even more important, how serious is Punjab Chief Minister Surjit Singh Barnala when he says that they need not construct the SYL canal and finally, what exactly do Central assurances amount to when a commission has already been appointed to decide on the sharing of waters. If the combine works smoothly, the Centre is likely to have a lot more on its plate in the coming months.

Opposition leaders in Jaipur



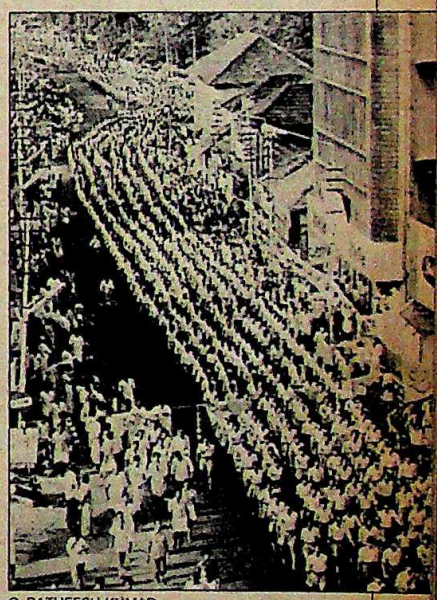
SUBASH SHARMA

Solidarity Show

AS AN impressive show of Hindu solidarity, it had few equals. The RSS-organised Hindu Sangamam in Kerala, held to coincide with its 60th birthday celebrations, saw two lakh of the faith congregate at Ayodhaya Nagar in Trivandrum and patiently listen to Balasaheb Deoras insist that Hinduism was " an identity, even Marx referred to India as Hindustan". The recent "Kuwaiti Scandal" in the state provided him with more ammunition, according to him, "showed the Government's dependence on communal forces".

A "long march" through the streets of the capital by uniformed RSS volunteers drew appreciative comment for its discipline, but the Sangamam created major ripples in its wake. The massive Hindu turn-out and the repeated proclamations of Hindu unity left local political leaders uneasy as to the possible political fall-out from the impressive show of solidarity.

Sangamam marchers: creating ripples



C. RATHEESH KUMAR

Home Truths

STRANGE are the ways of the world. When T. Prakash Rao contested the elections to the Hyderabad corporation on a Majilis-e-Ittehadul Muslimeen ticket in February, the poor man prayed fervently that he be elected a corporator and not be in the unenviable position of losing his deposit. But his misgivings were unwarranted as a month later, on March 14 to be precise, Rao to his surprise was elected mayor. As luck would have it, a report in the papers a few days later, informed the new mayor that he would be going on a tour to Europe in May. The occasion was an international meeting of all the mayors of cities whose population is expected to be four million by the end of the century. Rao's future seemed suddenly promising but unfortunately things were'nt going so well closer to home. His efforts—eight calls in four weeks—to meet Chief Minister N.T. Rama Rao and talk to him about the Rs 100-crore promised to develop the city, have been in vain. Rao it appears has a lot to learn. Pre-election rally promises are not to be taken so literally.

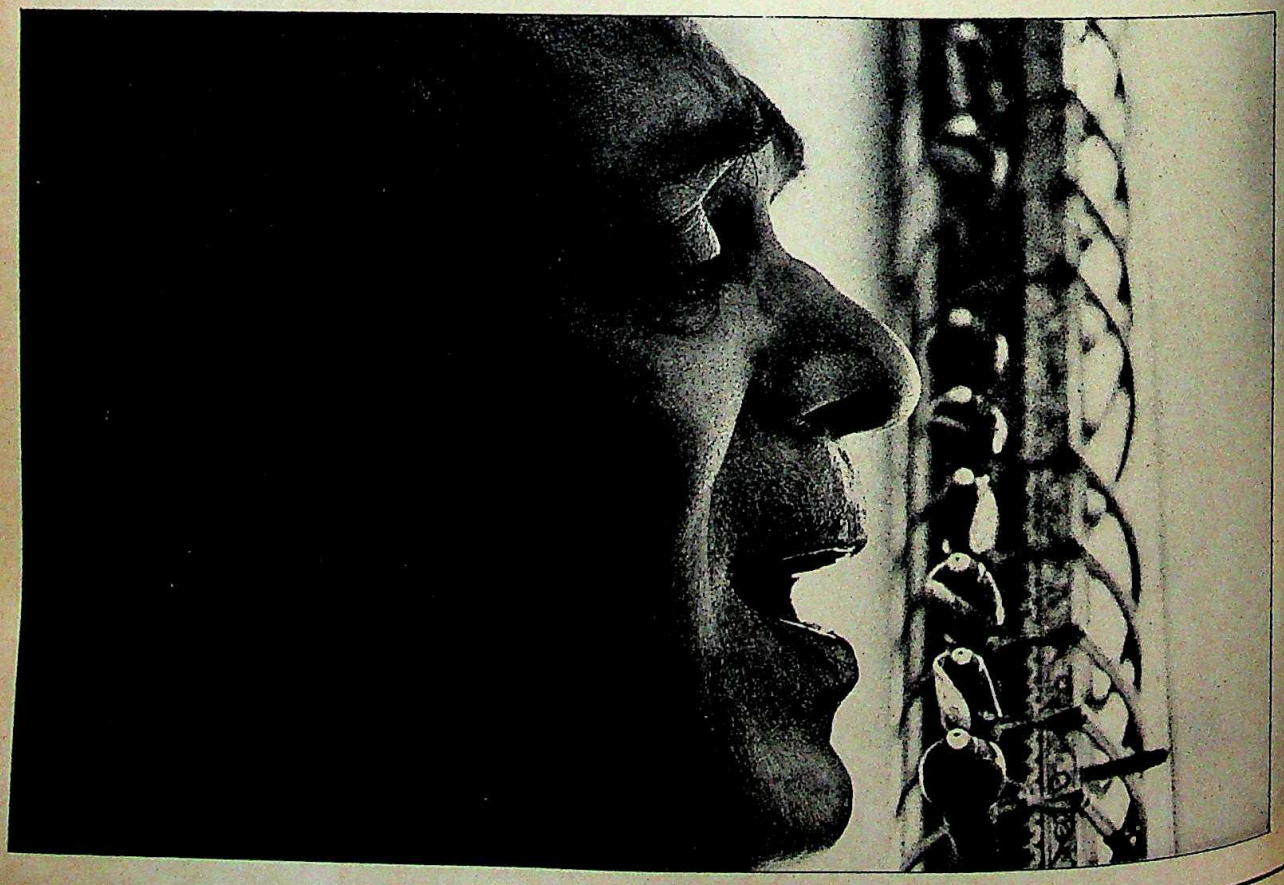
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WITH this issue INDIA TODAY introduces a new series of photo essays—to be carried periodically—on the living legends of Indian art and music. The purpose is to explore the inner lives and motivations of these great masters through their own thoughts and words. We begin the series with sitar maestro Ravi Shankar who although acknowledged as a giant in his own field, is nonetheless a lightning rod for controversy because of his experimentations with new and non-traditional forms.

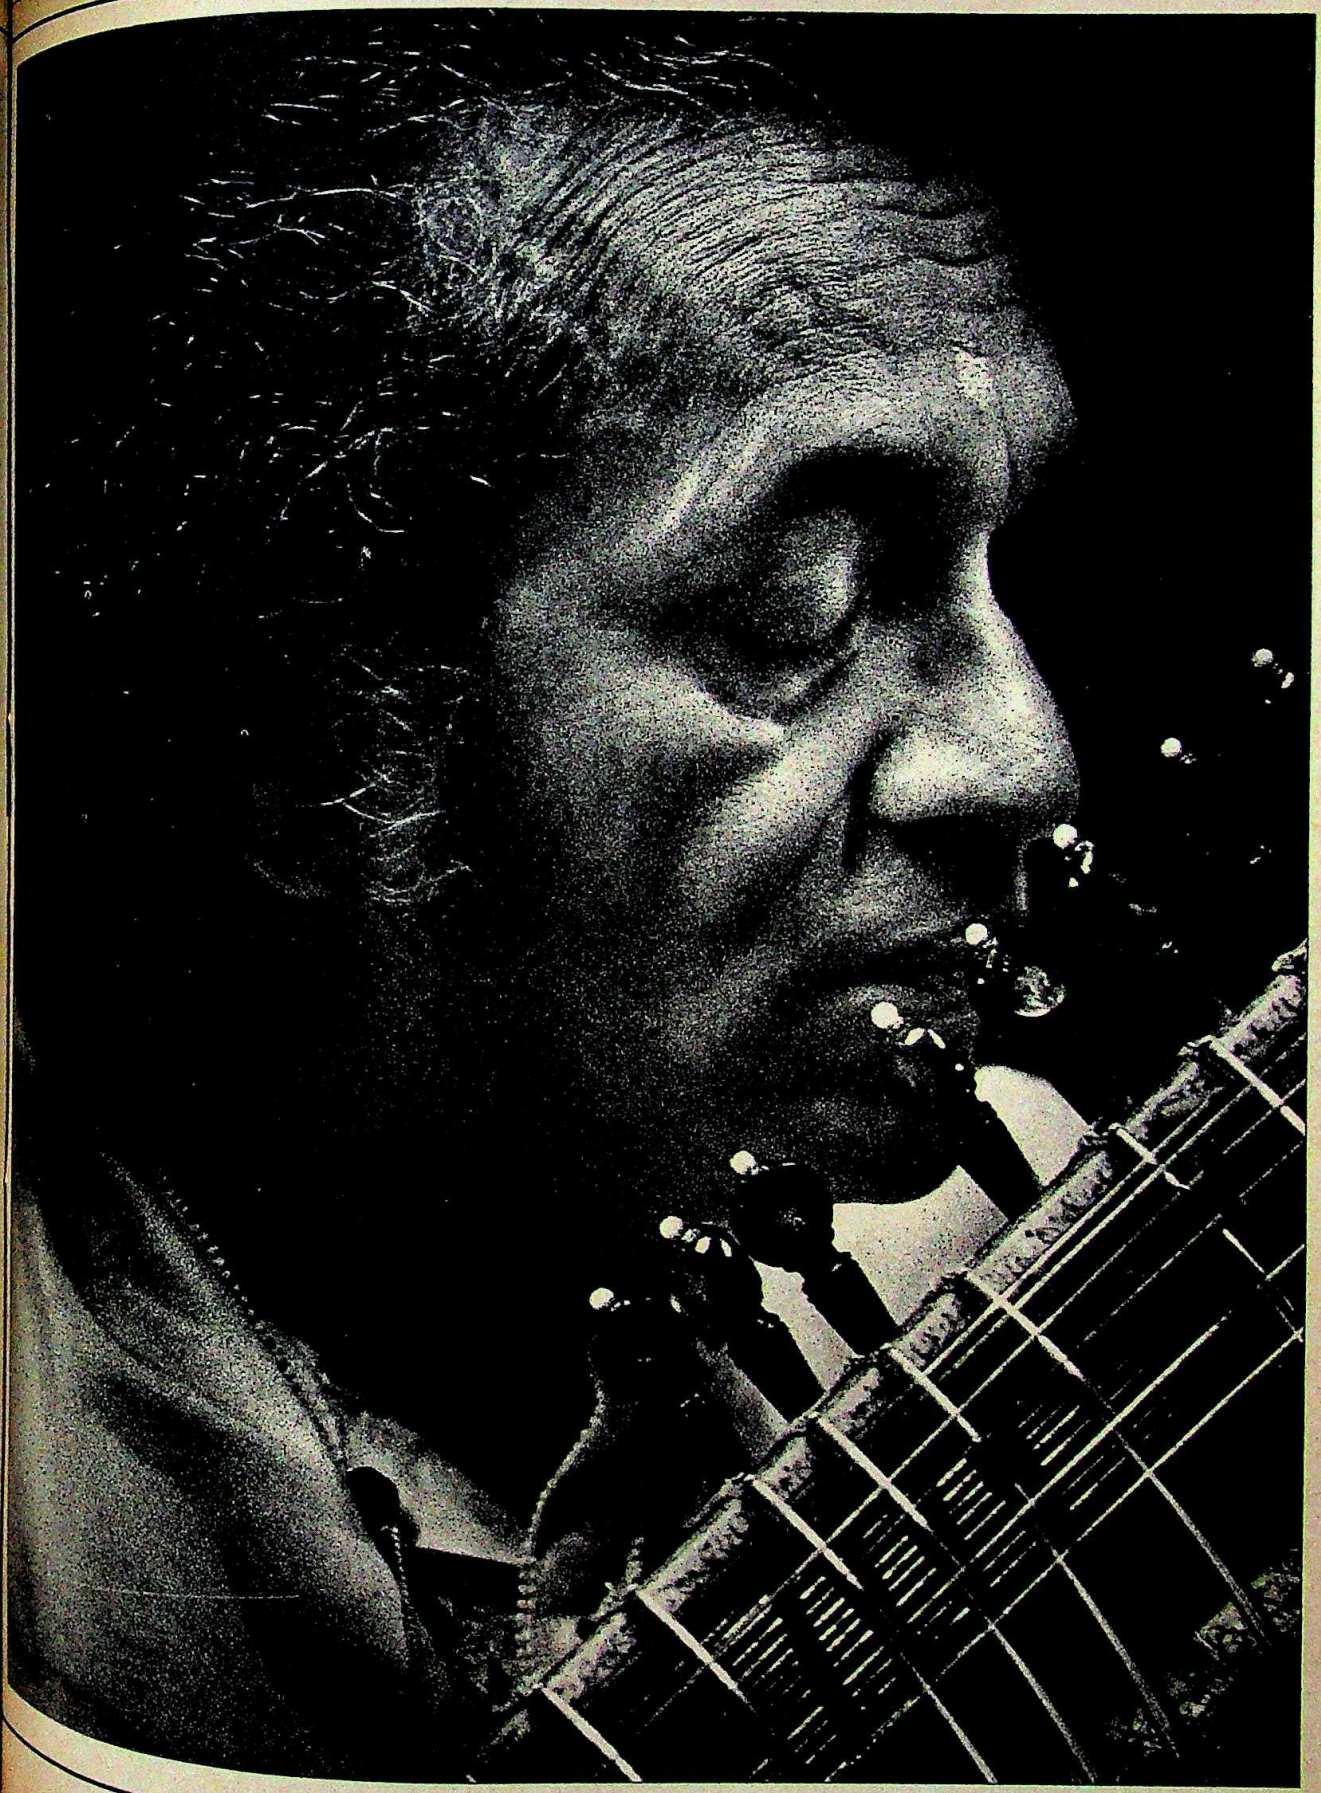
RAVI SHANKAR

A LONELY JOURNEY



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ON THAT cold February night in Delhi he had played until dawn to a packed auditorium. He had played well and he had played to his heart's content. The audience knew that. But more importantly, Ravi Shankar knew it. An upcoming young musician, who had recently been quoted as saying that Ravi Shankar was "out", along with hashish and the Beatles, ran up to the aging guru of the sitar to congratulate him.

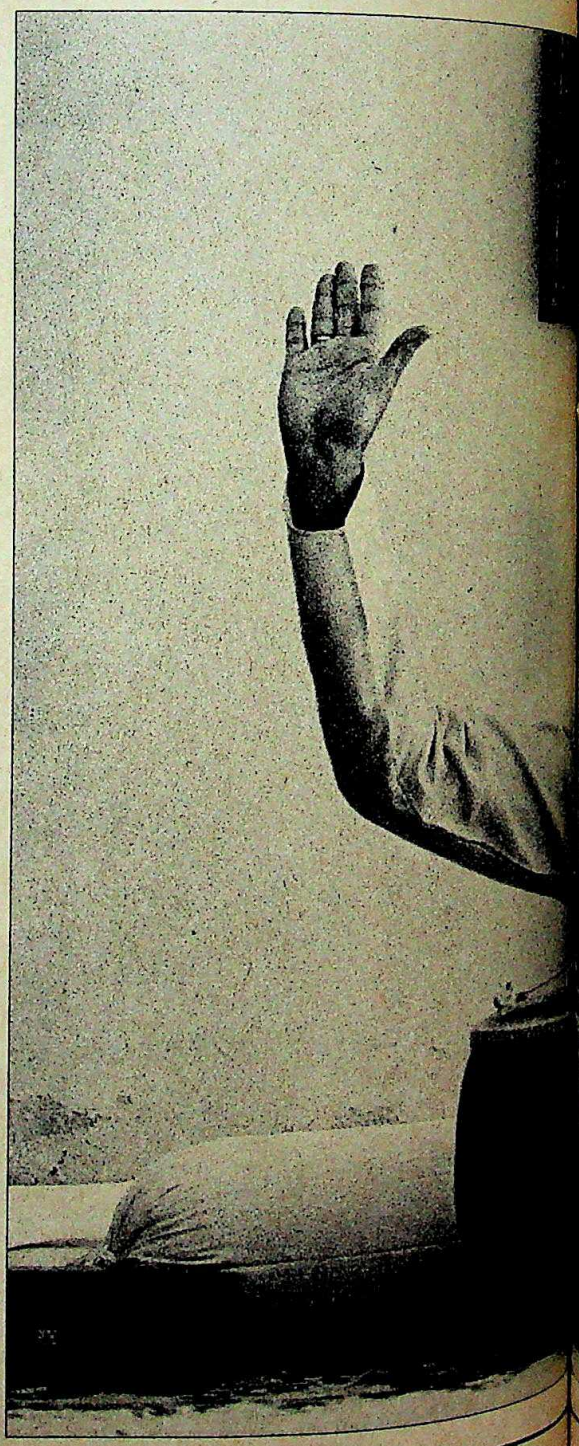
"The youngster praised me. I said, beta, why do you praise me? I'm "out" with hashish and the Beatles. But I blessed him before I got into my car. It is true that the period of the '60s has finished. But my music is still alive. It still fills houses. But according to them, I'm finished. I feel hurt sometimes. After all, I am a human being."

At 66, his face is mobile, ever-changing. The eyes can blaze like meteors or descend into a limpid pool of sadness. The mouth is sensual, far younger than the rest of his face. In profile, his hair swept back, he is an aquiline figurehead delicately carved on a totem pole. He has blazed a trail of Indian ragas across the globe several times over and he is starting the journey all over again. But all the time, he nurses within himself a wound the size of the universe.

"It is a ruthless thing after you reach a standard or if you are seen as having arrived at the top. It is ruthless. I have to listen to unlettered, ordinary people say things that are so humiliating. They constantly try to tear you down. Our so-called critics think that to play short pieces is sacrilege. But I have never compromised my integrity. The great musicians of our time, Onkar Nath and Abdul Karim Khan have performed short pieces when they made records. But my critics call me impure. They say my music is all commercialised and jazzified and mechanised....

"Sometimes I wish, like my other musician brothers, that I had done only one thing. But I've always had other interests. Sitar and music has been my main thing. I loved dance and painting, but I've left those. But I still have another creative side—that of a composer. This side no one understands in India. Outside India, they do. Take Leonard Bernstein. He is a conductor, a pianist, a composer. And each facet is recognised as a different side of him. He is a classicist, yet he composed West Side Story. I've done the same thing. I've experimented with Indian classical music, folk music, popular music, symphony orchestras, electronic synthesisers, jazz. I've never been frightened of it.

"But people here don't understand this. They like their old ways, yet they can wear any dress. They themselves live a bastardised existence. A khichree culture. Yet these so-called purists have prejudiced minds who say Ravi should only stick to the sitar. Leave alone accepting, they do not even try to listen. These purists have a warped sense. What is their measuring yard? Are we still singing the Vedas? Our music has continued to develop for a thousand years. Creative artists have always experimented and always suffered abuse. I am conscious of the fact that not all my experimentation has been good. But the die-hard purists still want their rasam and their chutney and their pappad served the same way. They don't even want to know what spaghetti tastes like.



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Even when I played in the West during the days of the hippie generation I told them I don't compromise. You have to hear this music as it is, I told them. But the music was new to them. I had to give it to them in doses. I couldn't give them so much that they got indigestion. They were not used to it then. But now when I play I go on for hours. I am hurt because I did that pioneering work, and all my brother musicians who went there later took full advantage of the groundwork, and now they attack me. They blast me here. They say they play pure music, pure sitar. Musicians are getting the Muhammad Ali syndrome of 'I'm the Greatest, I'm the Greatest'. Why is this happening here? They cannot bear to see anybody soar. They want to clip their wings.

"What I have tried to do is to keep the Indian base. Keeping that base I have tried to exploit new sounds, new tonality. Instrumental sounds are different, sitar, sarangi, shehnai, bansuri. But when you add the bassoon, French horn, violin, double bass, and the cello, the sound quality is different. I've experimented with that more as an extension. But people call this a sacrilege. We must always maintain our tradition—the Hindustani and Carnatic systems of music. They have to be preserved. Just like Bach has to be preserved. But that doesn't mean we shouldn't be doing anything else.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Look to what heights, to what distances we take our ragas and music. But we always come back to the basic structure and mooring. I have experimented but I don't try and just mix a cocktail. That's only gimmickry, a part of the pop world that lasts two days and is gone forever. Today Madonna, tomorrow Bruce Springstein, twenty-day wonders."

The experimental side of Ravi Shankar, the "West" inside of him goes back to his childhood. It is not something he inherited in the '60s when, as George Harrison's guru, he became the only classical musician to gain world-wide pop and poster attention. He was barely 10 when he went to Paris from his home in Varanasi to perform in his brother Uday Shankar's (Dada's) fabled dance troupe and came into contact with Pablo Casals, Gertrude Stein, Segovia, Romain Rolland, Cole Porter. In dada's troupe he danced and played the flute and the dilruba. At that young age he came to a crossroads in his life when Ustad Alauddin Khan (Baba) joined the troupe for a year as a soloist.

"Baba, then in his mid-fifties, was a court musician from Maihar state, a disciple of Swami Haridas of the Tansen Gharana. He began loving me like a son. Baba was a sufi. He had a bad temper while teaching. When he was gentle, you could not find a gentler person. But when he was angry he erupted like a volcano. I was then a spoilt brat. People called me a prodigy and a genius. My head was stuffed with self-love and self-pride. I thought I was the cat's whiskers. But Baba taught me that I was a nothing. You're like a peacock, he said. A jack of all trades. He brought me to my senses. Before that I was in love with myself. Like a flower child. I suppose when I associated with the hippies I saw in them something of myself from those early days. Before Baba left the troupe he told me that if I wanted to learn music I would have to leave everything.

"When he left the troupe I went through a period of great uncertainty. I was becoming better as a dancer. I was having a lot of fun, staying at the best hotels. But Baba still haunted me. About two years later, I left for Maihar. I shaved off my hair, bought khadi clothes. I got a hut next to Baba and slept on a rassi ki khatia, with snakes, rats, cockroaches, flies and jackals outside. I said to myself, where on earth have I landed? I began cursing. But I was determined to stay. I stayed for seven-and-a-half years with him.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Baba was a hypersensitive person in public. His real playing was when we used to listen to him in private. He would have us in tears within two minutes. He had that strength. The gift he gave me was the appreciation of the spiritual aspect of our music, drenching it with its own purity, bathing the heart with the music.

"You can weep to a folk song, to Simon and Garfunkel, the Beatles, Beethoven. In Vivaldi there's beauty. But in Baba's teaching and music there was spirituality. The purpose of music was to attain God. To please God. But I still don't know, even after my tapasya with Baba, where I am on my journey. No matter how far one reaches, the destination seems to be farther and farther away. That's the whole problem. In Western music there's a beginning and an end in black and white. Baba used to say till his very end that he had not really made it as a musician. He used to cry like a baby that he had worked so hard and achieved so little. He used to say that may be if he were born again he would be able to achieve his dreams—only if he were reborn still armed with his musical gifts. At that time I really didn't understand. But now it is clear. I feel the same way.

"Our music has eroticism and spirituality at a very high level. It combines an enjoyment of life with an awareness of God. But somewhere we've lost that duality. My main message is to reach, to achieve that tranquillity which is only in our music. To reach the synthesis. Sometimes I come close. But I suffer because I am not there. When I'm close to it my hand moves along the sitar but I don't notice it. The audience becomes one with us. There is no audience, no musician. I don't even feel the sitar in my hand. Then, you sing. You don't play. It is like singing.

"To try and achieve this I still live in the past quite a bit. I try and keep the past within me, through my music, my tradition, my gurus. But I still feel alien today. The thought of nuclear war frightens me. I abhor pollution. As a human being, to live in the present, my music has saved me. Otherwise I wouldn't have been able to live. Along with the music I can immediately switch myself to a higher level of awareness. It is like a tonic—these moments, even for four hours—it keeps you going for the next few days. Then it is gone.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"What is left is pain and sorrow. You are giving all the time, and not only the physical energy. But you are excavating your own guts and giving from the lowest to the highest levels. Sure, you get some materialistic comforts. Then there's the ego satisfaction. And those moments are terrific when a performance goes well. When that finishes, you are alone. Alone with your own thoughts. It is a feeling of great loneliness, of having everything and having nothing. It is my constant company.

"I have lived my life like a sailor. I had a marriage, children. But there was never enough time for them. I got divorced, and that hurt. I have shared my life in so many different places. It has always been like that. Now, I'm really alone in the true sense of the word because I've thought that for some time now I don't want to be involved. I'm experimenting with myself. Trying to enjoy the loneliness with my students. They're like my children. It's not that I'm not having affairs or anything. They're like a passing phase. But I'm trying not to get involved with anybody.

"In a way I have also become scared of commitment.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

I have become frightened of commitment. I have not been able to give. I have seen my family suffer. I have a very strong guilty conscience. No matter what heights I may have reached, in my depths I feel pain. Yet, there are things I have had to deaden within myself. I deaden certain things, that flowering, that feeling of being in love. Somehow, I have constantly been in love. Sometimes strongly with one person, sometimes with two, sometimes with 10. But now I'm going through a dry period emotionally. And I'm a little afraid now. Afraid of involvement. True, there are some parts of me that are dead. Some parts of my inspiration suffer because of this. But I try and get involved with other things.

"I have this strange nature. I always feel I'm being chased. I mean, why the hell am I doing so much? I can sit here comfortably, eat in peace, love my disciples. But I'm constantly being chased. What is it? Often I panic at this and ask, why, why? I have to travel, with all this jet lag, all the arrangements, do this documentary, do that orchestration. I have committed myself for the next two years all over the world.

"Why the hell? But what can I do? I cannot find the answer. Am I trying to prove myself? I have much to be grateful for. I have received abuse but also more than enough praise to make up for it. But I have this dilemma. I'm just like a little one, believe me. You'll be surprised to know that within me is this little child who refuses to grow up, who is still immature. He won't heed me. That's the whole problem.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"I have an ego. I want to be remembered as one of the best who gave his best. That I was taken seriously. The musicians I loved with all my heart—Ustad Fayaz Khan, Amir Khan, D.V. Paluskar, Nikhil Bannerji—have all died. I often think of what I will leave behind. I think of great people like Abdul Karim Khan. We all think of Tansen, we sing his music. But it is not really his music or his sentiments or his tunes. I think that the Indian musician, no matter how great, no matter how high he has reached, when he dies, he's done with. Maybe he leaves behind a 78 RPM record, or a few LP's. That's the only thing that will stay.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

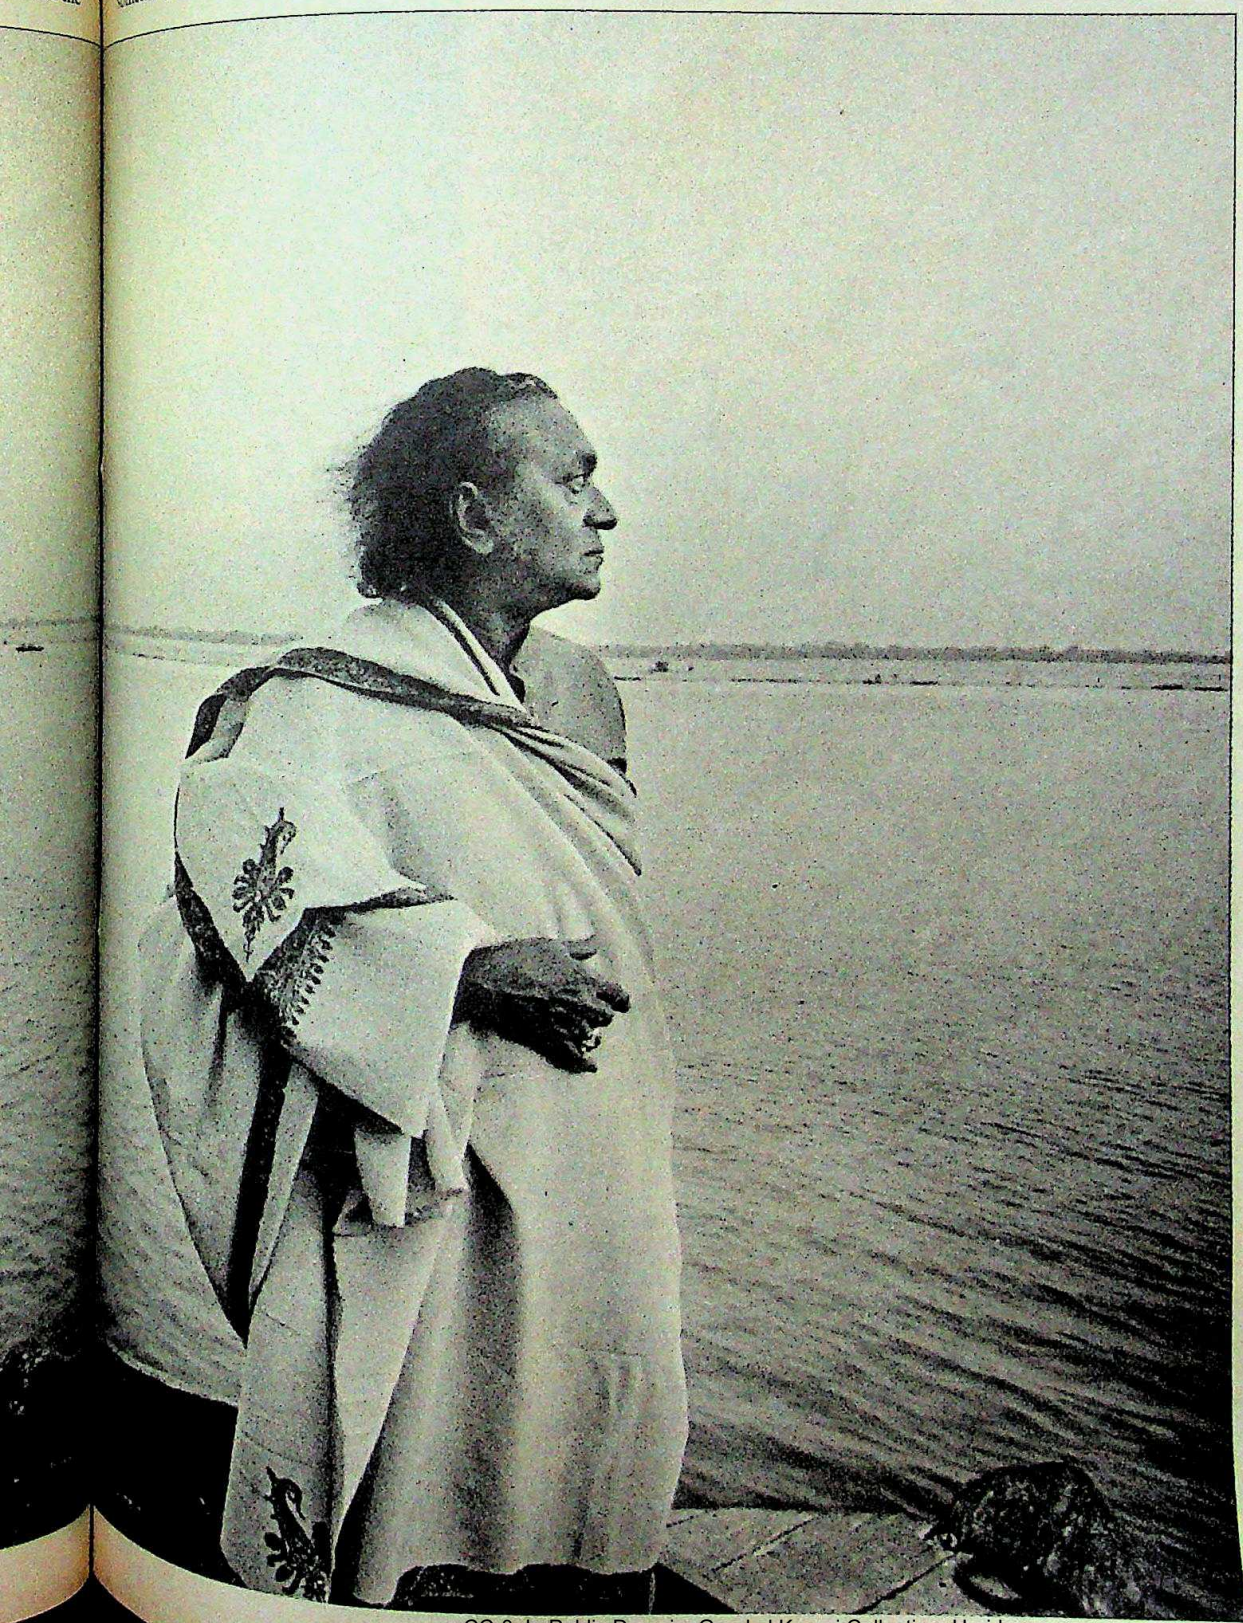
"But take Beethoven or Wagner. Their greatness, their spirit will never die and they will never be disputed as great. The proof is there in black and white. With me, it's not so much that I want to be remembered. It's not that I want to preserve myself for posterity. But I want to do something that will stay as a compositional work, something that just does not end. Something people can listen to. A painter paints and he leaves his work behind. We still talk about and see the works of Rembrandt. That is why I like creative and compositional works. It is to convey the joy you receive while creating it to an audience much later on. Maybe, mentally I feel that these compositional works will remain behind—only if they are good. The bad never stays."

—INDERJIT BADHWAR in Varanasi



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIAN RESTAURANTS

Currying Favour

AS IF the unflagging nostalgia for the Raj exemplified by films and television serials were not proof enough of Britain's unconquerable obsession with its former colony, now comes documented testimony that Indian cuisine has overtaken Chinese in popularity. According to "The Good Curry Guide 1986/1987", curry is Britain's most popular dining-out food. Consequently, with every roomali roti tossed over the wok, Indian restaurants are raking in the shekels.

The guide is edited by Pat Chapman, founder of the "Curry Club" which claims 8,000 members. Unlike in the Indian sense, the term "curry" for the British is a handy, all-purpose vogue word that spans the boundless range of Indian food. The guide lists more than 700 recommended curry restaurants in the UK, and, besides covering Pakistani, Bangladeshi and Sri Lankan restaurants, also includes the odd Nepalese, Burmese, Thai, Singaporean, Malay and Caribbean establishments that offer their own idiosyncratic versions of "curry". Chapman, an unwavering curry aficionado, says: "Once one acquires the taste for curry there seems to be no going back. One simply has to have a curry and too long without leads to a craving. Social historians may in time write tomes about the mild, harmless addiction to curry which has swept Britain and is about to hit the US."

The curry rage that has gripped Britain is certainly startling and, according to addicts, due to a variety of reasons: the abiding interest in India is one. The durable media focus is another. The numerous "India festivals" have helped it along. And the presence of a huge Indian community has indubitably contributed to the panache with which an Englishman now orders a sizzling beef masala without furtively looking for the nearest fire hydrant. There are those who publicly pronounce that in 1986, India is "no more fashionable" and this is the "year of Africa." But Karen Blixen notwithstanding, when packed movie houses featuring Out of Africa empty out into London's West End, smart young Britons still head for Thames Tandoori or Gaylords.

Those who have featured Indian food programmes on television or written books like Madhur Jaffrey have attained celebrity status. But 20 years ago the story was quite different: a handful of sleazy Indian restaurants tucked away in the shabbiest end of town catered to a woozy, well-lubricated clientele. This period also saw the birth of the famous Indian "standard menu", still a feature in many curry houses: it grouped curries into "heat strengths"—from mild through medium to hot and very hot. In each grade, there was a selection of meat, chicken and sea food curries. Curry historians say it was inevitable that with the success of the standard menus, Indian restaurants were to proliferate in clone-like fashion. Standard menus usually also meant standard decor: red wallpaper, coloured table cloths, small oil lamps and the odd kitschy brass idol. And as young Britons became curry gourmets, their expectations from Indian restaurants changed.

Curry is Britain's most popular dining—out food. And consequently Indian restaurants are raking in the shekels.

Today—thoroughout Britain—there is a "new wave" of sophisticated Indian restaurants in prime locations, tastefully designed, serving quality food from a meticulously selected menu. Chapman's guide favourably compares these restaurants with the finest French and English restaurants in town—both in terms of elegance and quality of cuisine.

The etymological chart of Indian restaurants is in itself a fascinating read. There is a Taj Mahal in almost every high street. Names of places and rivers are popular choices: Agra, Asia, Bombay, Ganges, Indus, Khyber, Rawalpindi, Malabar and Goa head the table. There are safer bets: Light of India, Star of India, Gateway of India, and Emperor of India. Others are redolent of the Raj: Viceroy of India, Last Days of the Raj and Memsahib.

In a bid for respectability, restaurateurs have shrewdly renamed establishments after the towns in which they are located—such as the Glasgow Tandoori. Curry-watchers say this is a typically imaginative move by the Asian restaurateur. Apparently no other cuisine has adopted this method: there are no Peterborough Pastas, Hull Hamburgers, Chatham Chinese or Dublin Doners. And now, restaurants are being named after successful films or television serials. There is a plethora of Far Pavilions, Jewels in the Crown, Passages to India, Eastern Eyes

Popular curry restaurants Mumtaz (top) and Gaylord: acquired taste

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

mtaz (top) taste

sian restacuisine has e no Peter-gers, Chat-
. And now, after suc-
s. There is a vels in the stern Eyes

and even one basement bar aptly-named Jewel in the Ground. At last count there were 14 Gandhis in Britain—some of them, uncharitably, non-vegetarian.

A number of these "Indian restaurants" are non-Indian owned. Many are run by Bangladeshis and the owners' list is chockful of Choudhurys, Islams, Alis and Mohib-ur-Rahmans. Most of these are distinctly downmarket, but as exotic as the spices with which they curry their clients' favour. At the Rajpooth Tandoori in Durham, a full lunch costs £1.65 (Rs 28), while in Islington the Sonar Goan prices its "kashi" (a whole lamb stuffed with basmati rice that will serve 25) at £400 (approx: Rs 7,200).

Some rely on unusual cuisine to attract customers. Several attract notice for their showmanship or quaint location. One such is Sajus—in Chorley—which functions from a converted church. People wonder whether they might get a culinary uplift from such a sanctified setting. There are accompanying cracks about "vindaloo in the vestry", "baptistry biryani" and queries if "pappadams will be served with holy communion".

The food in such ecclesiastical environs is reportedly not heavenly. In Folkestone, at The India Restaurant, the owner-cum-chef, Ali Shraf, is French-trained. So a string of extraordinary dishes grace the bill of fare—duck, partridge, pheasant, crab and lobster—and he uses cream, wine, brandy and delicate spices to create inventive dishes. Restaurants throughout the country create their own whimsical dishes. Thus there are cyclone chickens for those who relish flaming hot food, tandoori trout, the Indo-Kenyan pili pili chicken and gulab jamuns flambeed in cognac.

The Indian food rage that has gripped Britain is because of both standard menus and 'new wave' sophistication.

Not everyone is a robust curry lover—health officers in Southhampton for instance. Some of its 20 Indian restaurants have regular brushes with the law. Even if the food is not spectacular, some restaurants display a sprightly sense of humour—a 20-foot sign on the facade of Memsahib in South-West London proclaims: "Food from the subcontient: Victims wherever we can find them". Its owner, Ron Dutta, has been getting into hot water with the Wandsworth Council, but says: "There is no law which says I can't insult myself." His restaurant is covered with slogans such as "our food must be good, 20,000 flies can't be wrong" and "our curry is so oily I am thinking of selling shares". And at the British Raj in Royston the anecdotal menu helpfully informs patrons: "The eating of spicy food promotes perspiration which itself takes your fatness away."

A mostly unresolved debate amongst curry-eaters centres round which are the country's finest authentic Indian restaurants. Chapman's guide lists the top 30 in the land. Many of these are unexceptional choices. But there are definite doubts about its choice of the best. The choice of the Taj group's Bombay Brasserie will certainly be questioned by many Indians who have complained both about the quality of its food and its sloppy service. The latter is also lambasted by the guide. The restaurant's plus point is its marvellous ambience, but for all the glowing account of the group's international "expertise", its Paris venture—a moored houseboat on the Seine with a stunning view of the Eiffel Tower—is increasingly criticised for providing indifferent food in the form of "thalis". Many rate the Pakistani-owned Salloos higher, with customers being ecstatic about its superb food, especially the piece de resistance—"the barra" (whole lamb stuffed with rice, nuts, raisins, spices and baked). Patrons are not so ecstatic about the outrageous prices charged and a recent tendency to spike the food with hot spices. Perennial London favourites include the elegant Viceroy of India and the two Gaylords. Gaylords is widely credited for introducing tandoori cooking to this country and although there are other claimants, Gaylord India was Britain's first haute cuisine Indian restaurant.

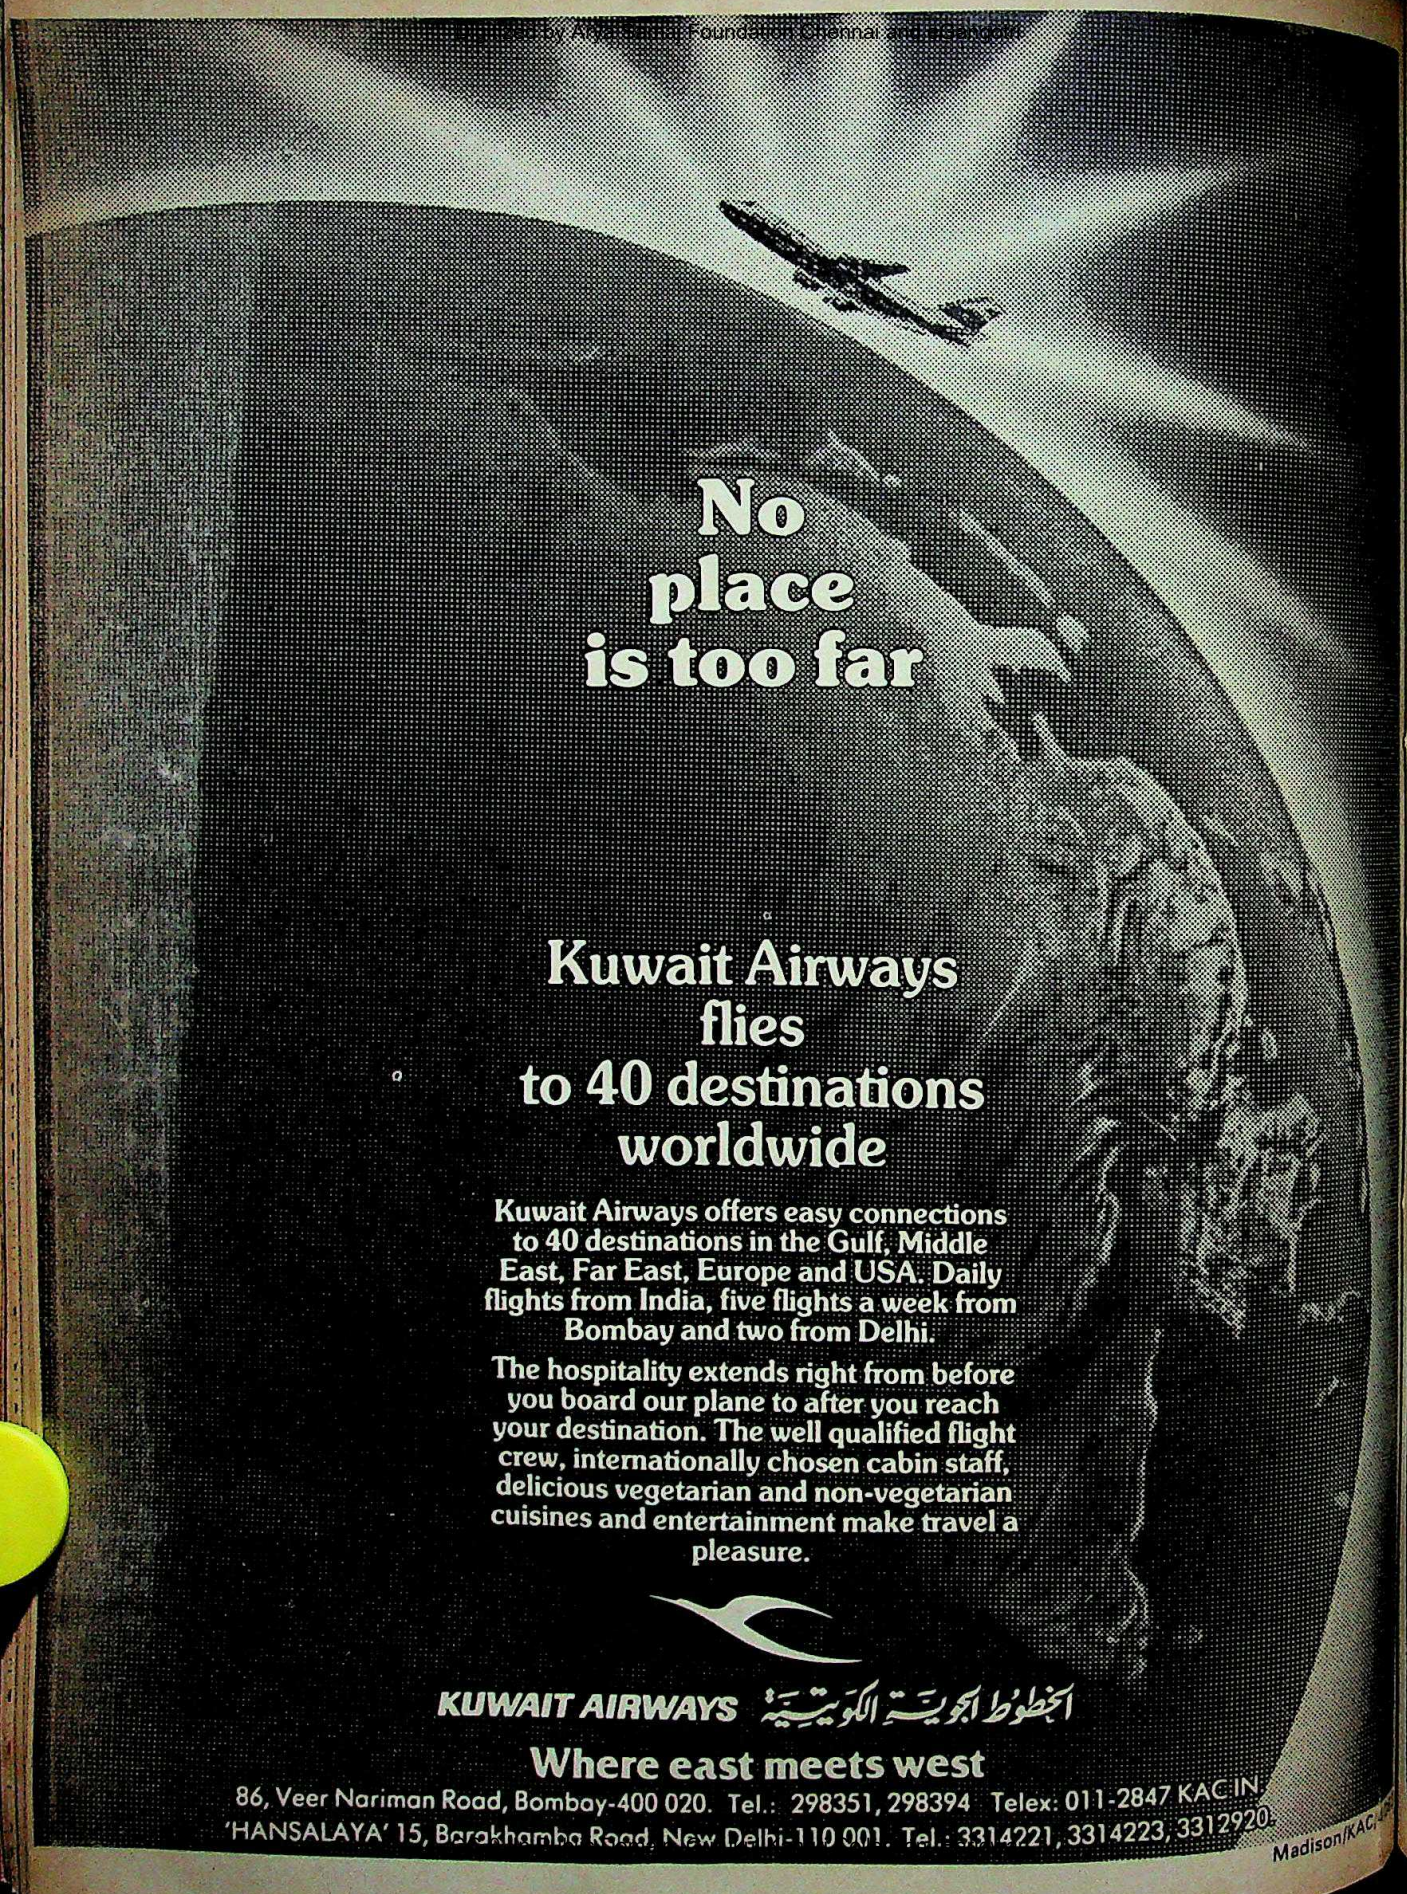
Other highly rated London-based restaurants include Romna Gate, Bangal Lancer, Tandoori of Mayfair, Bombay Palace, Malabar, Red Fort, Sonar Goan and Kensington Tandoor. South Indian vegetarian food outlets—one of the fastest growing in the land—have not so far had much publicity—even in the guide. For consistent quality Woodlands is still streets ahead. The curry guide, which did extensive research throughout the UK, lists other top Indian restaurants elsewhere in Britain. Among them: Khyber (Plymouth), Palash (Portsmouth), Rajdoot (Manchester), Maharaja (Birmingham), Lancers Brasserie (Edinburgh), Shish Mahal (Glasgow) and Everest (Cardiff).

With an estimated 400 Indian curry houses in Britain, one might imagine that Indian food outlets have reached saturation point. Far from it, Indian restaurants are opening at the rate of 400 a year and it looks like curry will continue to be the hottest item on British palates, literally and figuratively, for menu years.

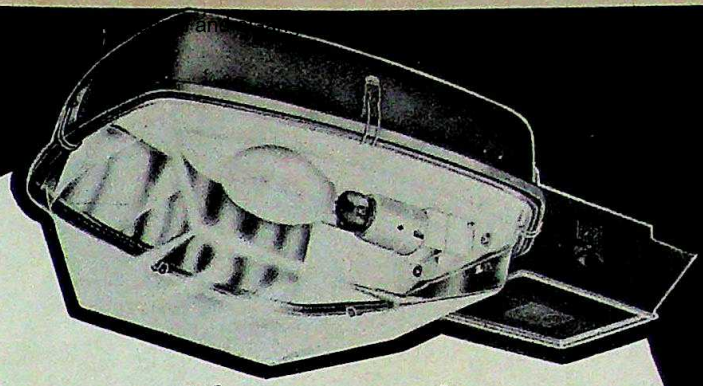
—RAMESH CHANDRAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

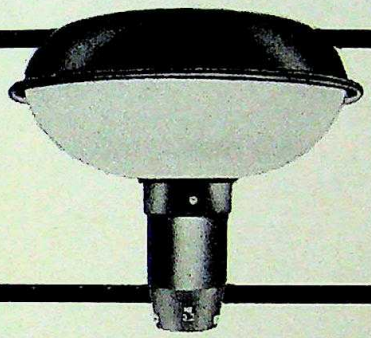


bajaj

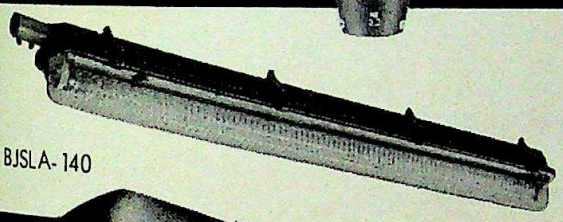


brings you a wide range of energy-saving Outdoor Luminaires.

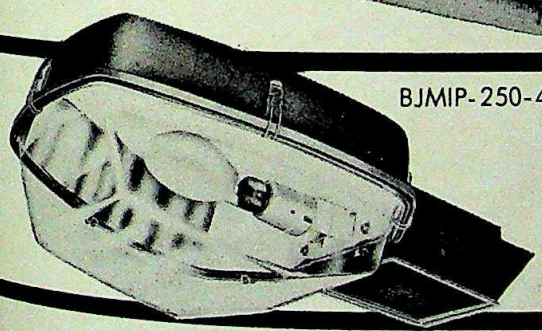
BJPTI-80-125



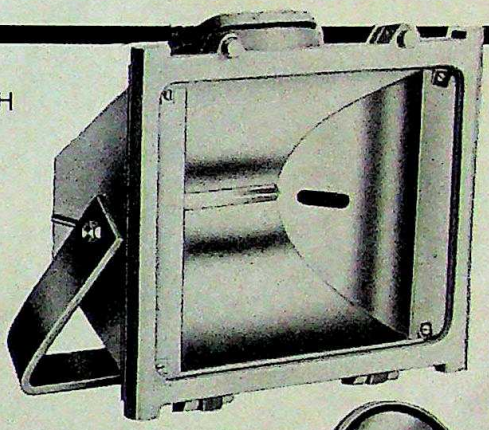
BJSLA-140



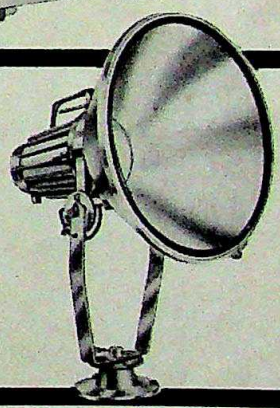
BJMIP-250-400



BJEF-1000H



BJEF-21 (S)



Suitable for Fluorescent, HPMV, HPSV Lamps, Bajaj Streetlighting Luminaires are designed for the wide and uniform illuminance of roads and traffic junctions — and to withstand all extreme weather conditions.

The other outdoor luminaires include Post Top Lanterns for entrances, parks, campus lighting, HPMV/HPSV/Halogen Floodlights for general area lighting, marshalling yards, airport apron lighting, sports, monument landscaping, etc.

Bajaj offers a total integrated lighting service from the designing to the electrification and installation of lighting fittings on a turnkey basis for any indoor/outdoor location.

For details write to:

Lighting Project Services
Bajaj Electricals Limited
45-47 Veer Nariman Road, Bombay 400 023.

Heros' BE-779 B

bajaj

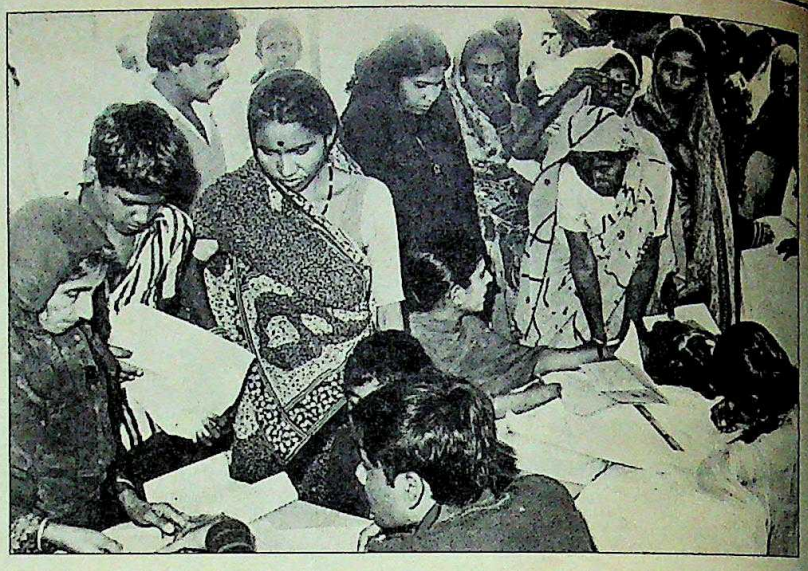
The lighting people since 1938.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BHOPAL TRAGEDY

In the Balance



Queues at Bhopal Legal Aid camp: running out of time

THE countdown has begun. In New York, Judge John Keenan will soon decide whether US courts are the proper forum for the legal battle between the Indian Government and Union Carbide Corporation (UCC) over compensation for the victims of the Bhopal gas leak in December 1984. On that decision hangs the fate of some 200,000 sick and incapacitated people in Bhopal, and the survivors of those who died in the December tragedy.

As Keenan's decision nears, the Government has two options before it. First, it can do a turnabout and accept the latest Carbide compensation offer of $350 million (Rs 420 crore), a figure higher than the last one of $100 million (Rs 120 crore). While the Government has claimed $1 billion (Rs 1,200 crore), accepting the latest Carbide offer will bring small but speedy relief to the Bhopal victims.

The second option is to hold out for more in the hope that Keenan will rule in favour of a US hearing. If attorneys from both camps, after their long sessions with Judge Keenan in his federal courtroom, seem fairly confident that the case will be heard in the US then the odds are that UCC may be pushed to up its offer of $350 million.

But holding out for more is a gamble because if Keenan says the case must be sent back to India, the Government will only be able to get the assets of Carbide's Indian subsidiary, valued at under $80 million (Rs 96 crore)—and that too when the case is finally decided in India's overburdened courts.

Even if the case is to start in the US, it could drag on for years. As the UCC spokesman said: "The US legal system is also overloaded—that is if the conditions (described) in India are true."

Not surprisingly, then, the Government is watching Carbide's moves very closely. In Minneapolis, the law firm of Robins, Zelle, Larson and Kaplan representing the Government is considering whether yet another case should be launched against Carbide to stop a $1.42 billion (Rs 1,680 crore) sale of its highly profitable batteries section. The Government fears that the sale may be the first of many steps by which the corporation reduces itself to a shell because of the complicated financial commitments it has made to its shareholders to ward off a potential take-over last year by a chemical company, GAF Corporation. If this happens, Carbide may well plead difficulties in paying out a sizeable compensation.

As it is, Carbide plans to sell two other sections of its consumer products unit and another $1 billion of assets, including its 61-acre corporate headquarters which it would lease back as office space. Independent corporate analysts have said that the company's speciality—chemical businesses—may also be sold. The money from the sale of assets would be paid out to shareholders as a one-time dividend, cash that might otherwise go to the Bhopal victims. And if the company is left with nothing other than its losing chemical businesses, it may have to keep selling assets every year to pay out dividends.

Clearly, such moves will have major implications for UCC's claimants. The latest balance sheet of the company puts its assets at $8.639 billion (Rs 10,350 crore), substantially lower than the earlier $10 billion figure. After taking into account its debts, the capitalised value of the company is estimated at $5.489 billion (Rs 6,600 crore)—well below the earlier figure of $7.198 billion. Some experts feel that the company's financial position as reflected in its debt-capitalisation ratio is better than the industry average. But experts hired by the Government, who have scrutinised the company's records, fear that after disinvestment the market value of its assets may be just $657 million.

What the Government wants to ensure is that cash stays in the UCC coffers. But so complex is the functioning of such a gigantic multinational that opinion over its future and finances is divided even among the government's own lawyers. According to Senior Counsel D.S. Sastri, the company has incurred debts which will leave it "lean as a stick". But Michael Ciresi, the Government's attorney in Keenan's court, says that although Carbide's asset base is being eroded, he prefers to wait and watch the sale transactions before taking action.

When the Government does move the court in this matter, it will do so under the New York law on fraudulent conveyances. If the court accepts, it can stop the distribution of special dividends. The money can then be kept in a corporate fund if their distribution is made tantamount to defrauding debtors.

So far, Judge Keenan has been using the carrot and stick method to get the parties to agree on an out-of-court settlement. He appointed a plantiff's executive committee and at the same time warned he would send the case to India if the Government remained inflexible on its $1 billion claim.

It isn't long to a decision on where the case is to be heard. Meanwhile, Bhopal is full of women suffering from all manner of internal complications, men who cannot go to work, children with seriously injured lungs. Hospitals are short on equipment, space and medical know-how for anything other than purely symptomatic treatment. Nor are funds available for creating alternative employment for those who cannot work. There is little time to be lost.

—SHAHNAZ ANKLESARIA AIYAR in Washington

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

cc coffers.
ng of such t opinion is divided own law-
unsel D.S.
rred debts tick". But nt's attor-
s that alis being watch the g action.
oes move vill do so raudulent pts, it can lividends.
n a corpo-
n is made btors.
een using co get the urt settle-executive ne warned dia if the ble on its on where eanwhile,

ng from all
ions, men dren with pitals are d medical her than
t. Nor are lternative o cannot e lost.

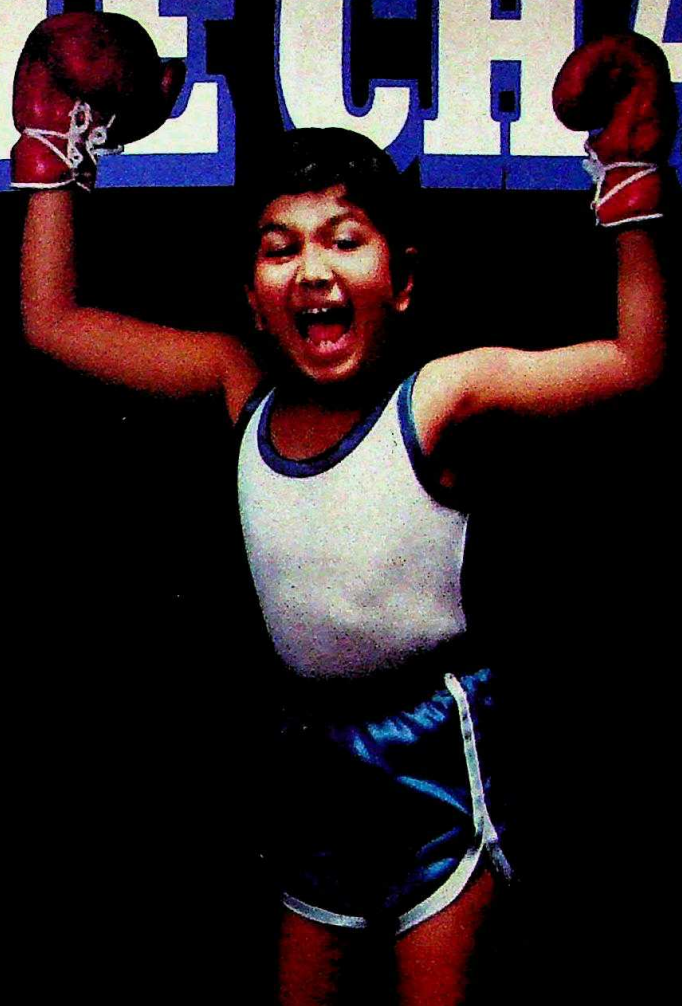
Washington

THE CHAMP



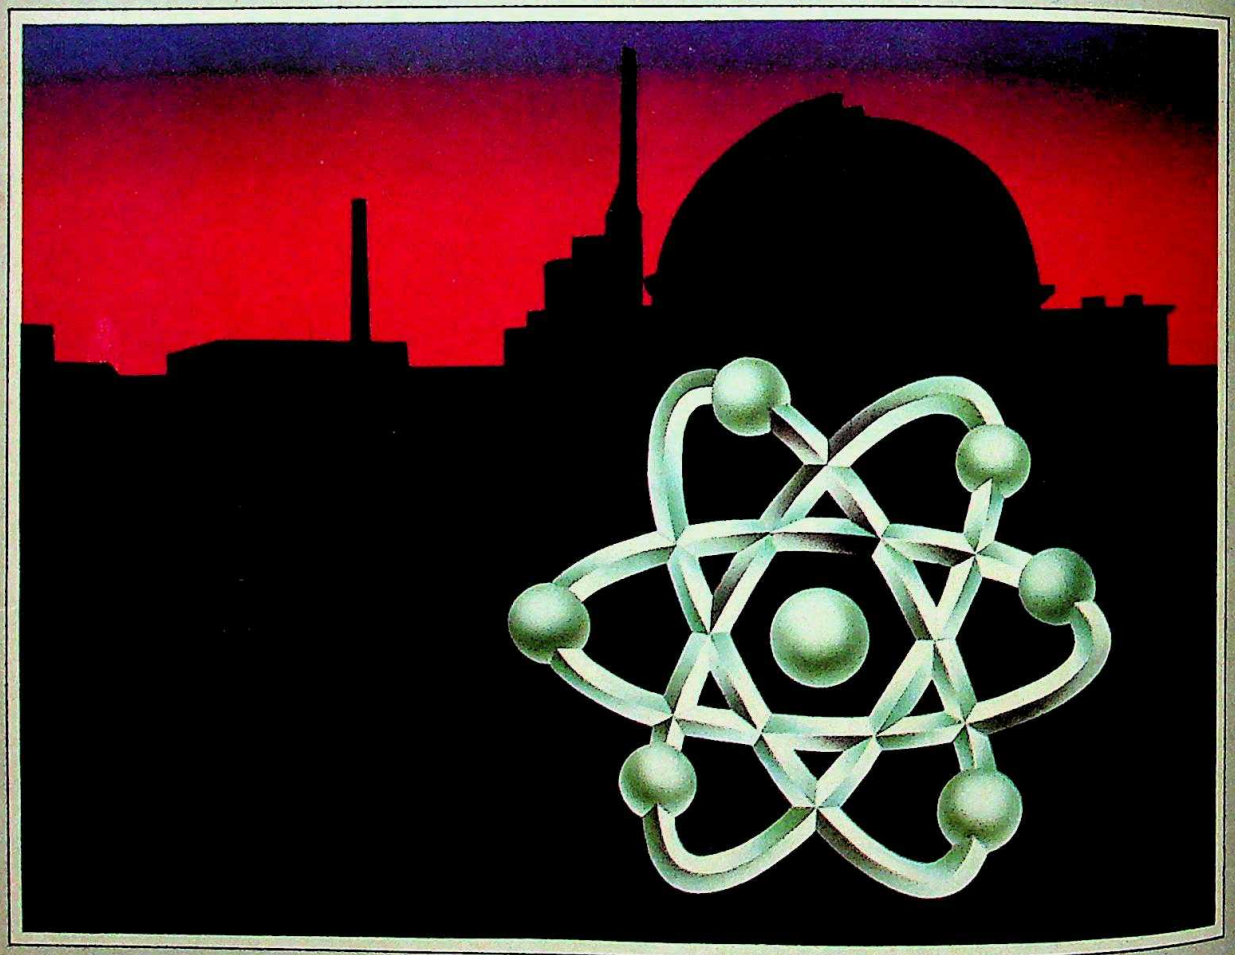
Champs* from Carona

Carona Sahu Co. Ltd. A Khatau Enterprise *Registered trademark

Available at select Carona/CSC shops

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When the Bhabha Atomic Research Centre wanted high-tech electronic power supply systems, they chose Keltron. That's right Keltron! The people who make your television set.



That's not high fashion. Not high flying claims. That's just hard facts.

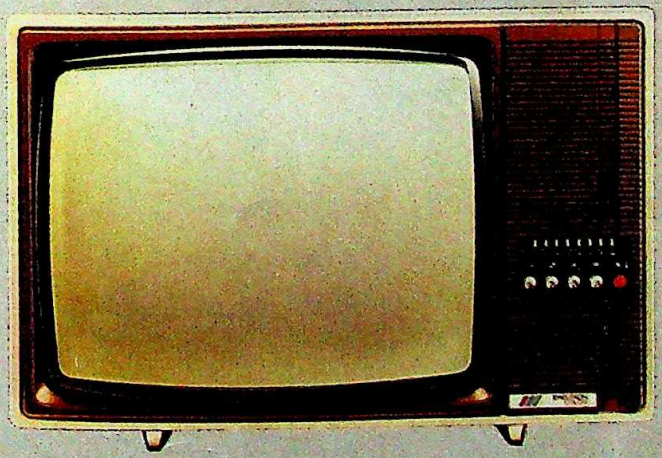
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Most people get taken in when buying a television set. Taken in by high-flying technical jargon. Or they get their heads turned by a good looking cabinet and dazzling full-colour life style. But a TV set has nothing to do with frills. Or with claims. It's only as good as its heart. And the heart of a television set is high technology.

Keltron makes no claims. It quotes its history. A history of high-tech electronics in national areas. Space Research, Atomic Energy, Doordarshan, the Asian Games, the Defence Services. That same high-tech goes into our television sets. Proof? The Electronic Components Association names Keltron the best television set made in India. And Keltron TV's failure rate is 0.05%... the lowest in the country.

So when you're out looking for a colour TV set,don't get taken in by jargon. And don't let good looks turn your head. Don't settle for a manufacturer's claims. Ask for the record.



KELTRON TV

Hard core, high-tech. No frills, no fuss.

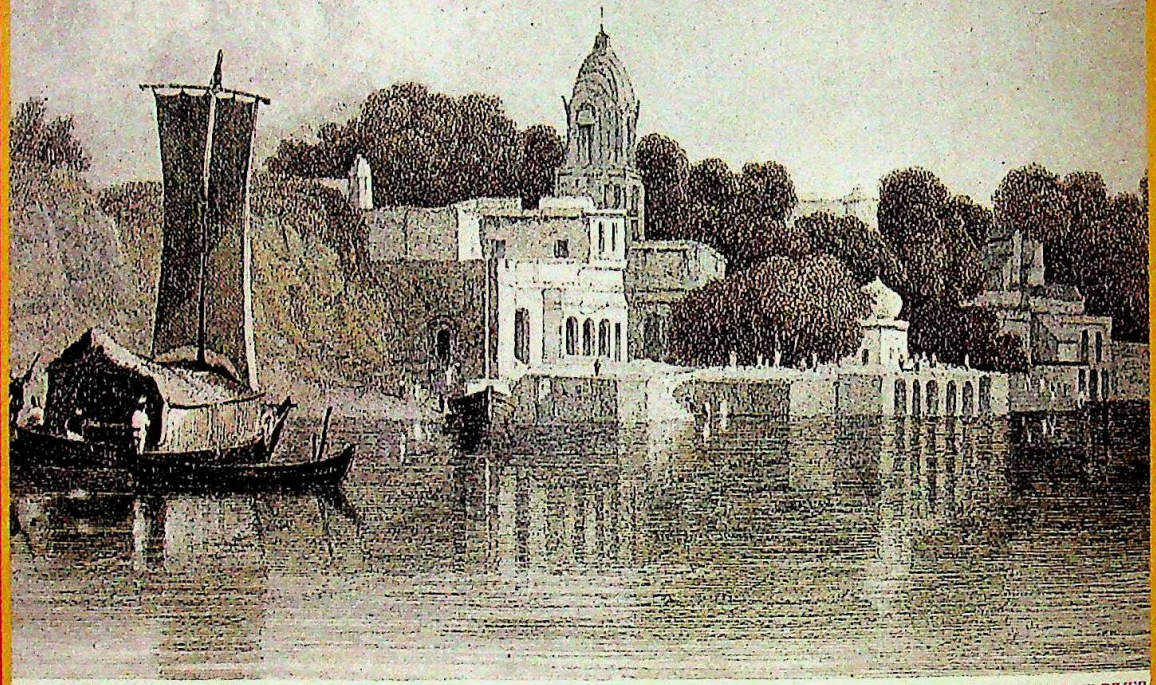
Kerala State Electronics Development Corporation Limited, Consumer Electronics Division, Sasthamangalam, Trivandrum-695 010 Phone: 63106

BRANCHES: • Bombay Phone: 4927448 • Bhopal Phone: 66354 • Madras Phone: 452310 • Madurai Phone: 43746 • Calcutta Phone: 245654 • Gauhati Phone: 31541 • Delhi Phone: 562602 • Hyderabad Phone: 65702 • Vizag • Bangalore Phone: 564492 • Ahmedabad Phone: 463664 • Trivandrum Phone: 60241 • Cochin Phone: 354560 • Also sales-service facilities available in all major towns.

FULCRUM-KEL-BA-1-85

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For those who value taste



From the Classic collection at ITC Ltd., 37 Chowringhee, Calcutta

VIEW OF CAWNPORE FROM THE RIVER
Drawn by S. Prout. Engraved by C. Mottram.

Contemporary Classics from ITC

CLARION C-CL-2

STATUTORY WARNING: CIGARETTE SMOKING IS INJURIOUS TO HEALTH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CONSOLIDATING FUNDS

THE INDO-GULF fertiliser project has finally found a third promoter: the Birla-owned Gwalior Rayon. The Rs 725-crore joint sector venture between the Pradeshiya Industrial and Investment Corporation of Uttar Pradesh (PICUP) and an Arab firm, Gulf Consolidated Company for Services and Industries (GCCSI), ran into trouble when the Arab promoter fell behind in its contributions to the project's equity (INDIA TODAY, January 31). GCCSI had earlier suggested the Southern Petrochemical Industries Corporation as a co-promoter, but this was not acceptable to the Government. Under the terms of the latest arrangement, the Birlas will contribute Rs 60 crore to the project. Together with GCCSI's earlier contribution of Rs 11 crore, that amounts to 40 per cent of the equity. PICUP is to shell out another 11 per cent, and the remaining 49 per cent is to be raised from the public. Reliance Industries is learnt to have also been in the race, but lost out to the Aditya Birla-run firm.

OPEN DOOR POLICY

REAL estate development in the capital, for many years a monopoly of the Delhi Development Authority (DDA), will soon be thrown open to private real estate companies. A bill to permit this is in the works because official projections show a massive housing scarcity developing in Delhi over the next 15 years. The Regulation of Activities of Private Developers and Builders Bill is expected to confine the DDA's role to providing the infrastructure in residential areas, apart from imposing certain safeguards to ensure that private companies do not take people for a ride.

THINKING BIG

THE MODIS are gearing up to launch the Estee Lauder range of cosmetics. The Delhi-based group already exports the American cosmetics company's products to the Soviet Union but is now looking at the up-scale home market, with prices of its lipsticks, perfumes and face creams planned to be twice as expensive as competing products now on sale. The group has also been looking for a suitable collaboration with a Scotch whisky manufacturer for manufacturing whisky in India, and has settled on a small company in Scotland. Both ventures are still at a nascent stage, and the whisky collaboration is still to be finalised. Other group projects on the anvil include a plan to start the retail marketing of vanaspati in a big way.

DEFERRED PAYMENTS

THE GOVERNMENT has decided to clamp down on the financing of project exports to Iraq through the Exim Bank in future. The word in the project export industry is that this extreme step has been taken because recent official-level talks on settling Iraq's dues to Indian firms failed to arrive at a satisfactory settlement of the problem. Iraq owes 24 Indian companies over Rs 800 crore for work done in Iraq. Caught in a war with Iran, the Iraqi Government has deferred payments for more than two years under agreements arrived at annually with India, and has partially cleared some dues in the form of oil shipments. Despite the delayed payments, Indian companies have hung on in Iraq (most of the overseas construction contracts which the Exim Bank cleared last year were for projects in that country). If reports about the latest development are true, project export figures could plummet.

DECIDING VOTE

THE BATTLE to control Swadeshi Polytex has ended, with Rajaram Jaipuria and his nominees having emerged triumphant at the annual general meeting in March, but the Swarups have gone to court on the election results. The poll outcome has ousted Mahendra Swarup, chairman of Paharpur Cooling Towers, and his nominees from the board, although just before the shareholders' meeting they had added to their 17 per cent shareholding by buying another 9.7 per cent from Ashok Jaipuria and his associates. Ironically, Rajaram and the Swarups had joined hands last year to oust Ashok's father Sitaram from the company, but they soon fell out and began soliciting proxies.

TOP OF THE CHART

THE TATA Iron and Steel Company (TISCO) has emerged at the top in corporate rankings for 1984-85, heading the list on sales, profits, capital employed and net worth. The steel giant is followed by stablemate Tata Engineering and Locomotive Company (TELCO), which is second in sales and capital employed. Reliance Industries comes second on net worth and gross profits, ahead of TELCO on both counts. The rankings, done by The Economic Times, show the fourth place in sales going to Hindustan Lever, followed by DCM, Southern Petrochemicals, Gwalior Rayon, Mahindra & Mahindra, IEL, and Larsen & Toubro. The profitability rankings for the same period, after the top three industrial concerns, are held by Larsen & Toubro, Hindustan Lever, Associated Cement, Gujarat Narmada, Southern Petrochemicals, ITC and IEL respectively.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

STEEL AUTHORITY OF INDIA LTD.

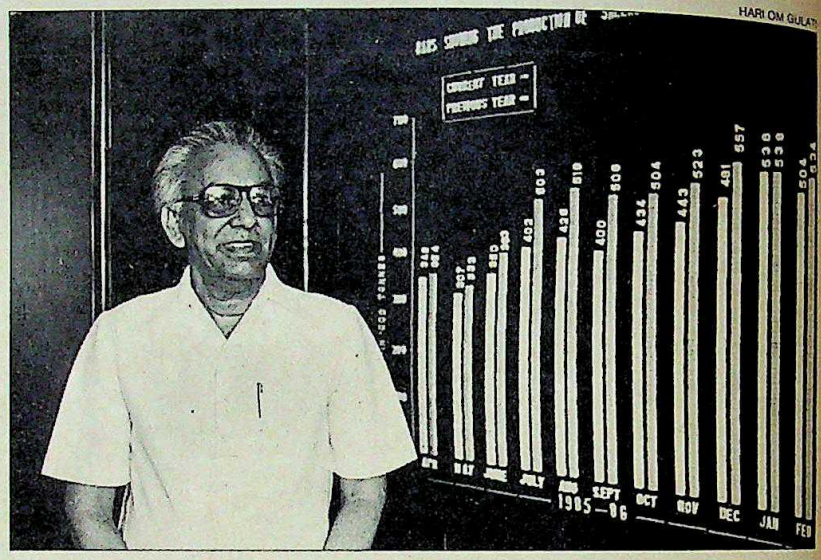
Dramatic Turnaround

SIX MONTHS ago, the Steel Ministry was fighting a furious battle for hiking steel prices, with both civil servants and the steel minister arguing that a price increase was essential if the Steel Authority of India Ltd (SAIL) was not to end up in the red once again. Opposition to the proposal came from an unlikely quarter: SAIL itself. The newly-appointed chairman of the public sector behemoth, V. Krishnamurthy, argued that Indian steel prices were already too high, that prices had been raised earlier in the year, that SAIL's inefficiencies should not be passed on to the steel consumer through higher prices, and that profits were possible at the existing steel prices if the company improved its efficiency levels.

The price hike never went through. And vindication came last fortnight for Krishnamurthy when he announced that SAIL had closed 1985-86 with record profits of over Rs 150 crore (up from Rs 4 crore a year earlier), on an all-time high production of 6 million tonnes of saleable steel (up from 5.28 million tonnes).

Behind those figures lies the dramatic story of a major corporate turnaround. Ten months after taking charge, Krishnamurthy has steered the country's largest company around and achieved improvements in capacity utilisation, sharp savings on costs, lower raw material consumption per tonne of steel, better technical efficiency parameters, and a more disciplined labour force. Russi Mody, chairman of Tata Iron and Steel Company (TISCO) and perhaps the doyen of the country's steel industry, told journalists recently: "Krishnamurthy is doing the best that can be done within the limitations of the public sector."

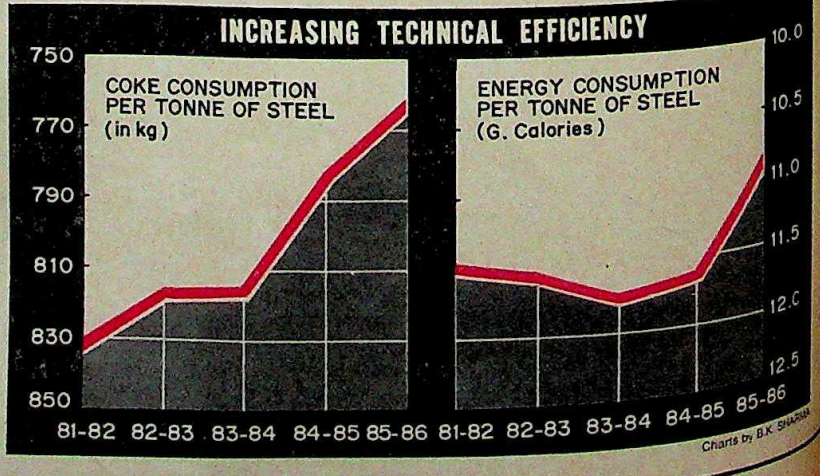
"I wandered through the steel plants," says the SAIL chairman, explaining how he brought about a change that has made everyone in the steel industry sit up and take notice. "And I talked to senior and junior executives, and workers. I must have met 25,000 or 30,000 people in small groups. The ideas and solutions came from them." These ideas he put together three months ago in a 13-page booklet called 'Priorities for Action' and mailed to every executive in the company. The booklet talks of virtually everything under the sun: teamwork, discipline, upkeep of equipment, attention to raw materials, quality, productivity, energy conservation, project implementation, customer satisfaction and a host of other issues. And the organisation seems to have taken them seriously, because the performance parameters have improved.



Krishnamurthy: man of stature

The purchase of raw material has not increased despite ingot steel production going up by 12 per cent, the rate of coke consumption has been reduced by 4 per cent, and energy consumption by 6 per cent. "There has been a tremendous thrust towards improving technological discipline, and these are the results," says Subrata Ray, managing director of the Rourkela steel plant. Rourkela's rate of coke consumption per tonne of hot metal used to be 850 kg a year ago; this has now fallen to 811 kg (the lowest ever), and the new year's target is 800 kg. The plant's inventory level has dropped from Rs 211 crore to Rs 160 crore, with the new year's target Rs 145 crore. Measures like these have helped turn in record profits after absorbing cost increases of Rs 165 crore due to higher coal prices and freight rates.

Meanwhile, members of the Association of Indian Engineering Industry (AIEI), SAIL's primary customers, say that it has become an active member of the association, listening to complaints, promising better delivery schedules and improved quality: another Krishnamurthy talking-point. Says AIEI Secretary-General Tarun Das: "We have never seen this kind of customer-orientation before in SAIL; everyone has noticed it."



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"The basic transformation that has taken place is in the way people think, in their attitude," says M.R.R.Nair, SAIL's director (personnel). "The feeling in SAIL used to be that we had done everything possible internally, and that the problems lay elsewhere, with the Government, with lack of funds and so on. But you will see from 'Priorities for Action' that everything that needs to be done has to be done internally." And certainly, there has been internal change: To take one example, despite being saddled with thousands of surplus employees, the company's annual overtime bill used to run up to Rs 45 crore. Krishnamurthy ordered that all overtime should be stopped in SAIL's loss-making steel plants from January, and abolished altogether in even the profitable plants from April. There have been murmurs of protest, and a one-month strike at the alloy steel plant in Durgapur when the company refused to hire extra hands despite the plant's capacity being raised by 60 per cent. But Krishnamurthy has refused to bend, and the orders have stuck. He now says, "everyone said the Ganges would be on fire the next day, but nothing happened."

IN ANOTHER example, he found that the Durgapur steel plant was burning expensive furnace oil because it wasn't getting enough gas. But this cost an extra Rs 40 crore. Krishnamurthy examined the details and revised the plant's furnace oil budget from one lakh tonnes to 60,000 tonnes. The saving runs into crores.

Success has brought confidence to a demoralised organisation which, before Krishnamurthy came on the scene, had seen his predecessor being kept on ad hoc extensions of tenure on an almost daily basis, with upstart joint secretaries in the Steel Ministry summoning the head of the country's largest company to their offices. But everyone knows that the new man has direct access to the prime minister, and things have changed. Says K.R. Gangameswaran, managing director of the Bhilai steel plant: "The greatest thing which Krishnamurthy has done is that the Government has faith in him. So people down the line can benefit from the new confidence. Now we can take decisions that we couldn't earlier."

He has a point. SAIL used to have little control over major decisions concerning its future: the Government used to decide on sources of equipment supply, hand down orders on expansion projects, determine prices and dictate who should be supplied how much steel. But Krishnamurthy is a man of stature. In the past he has been chairman of Bharat Heavy Electricals and Maruti Udyog, and secretary to the Governments in the Department of Heavy Industry. And he has clearly been able to give the company greater control over its own destiny.

Nevertheless, it hasn't been a smooth ride over the past 10 months. Krishnamurthy ran into some flak with his proposal to induct people from the private sector TISCO and elsewhere on to the SAIL board and had to beat a retreat. And some of the meetings with trade unions have been stormy: he was in the middle of one such session last fortnight over the new year's production target of 7.2 million tonnes (an increase of 20 per cent over 1985-86).

The 61-year-old Krishnamurthy, who is on a two-year contract that expires in May next year, nevertheless has his eyes on the future. He talks of shifting the company's production increasingly to high-value, sophisticated types of steel products so as to respond to market changes, taking production up from 6 million tonnes to 10 million tonnes in three years, and then raising it further to 15 million tonnes "with modest additional investment of about Rs 1,000 crore". That money, he says, can be generated internally by SAIL if it handles its affairs well.

But projects have been delayed in the past for want of money and because of poor project management. So Krishnamurthy has "completely changed project management", revamped the project monitoring system, appointed a vice-chairman exclusively in charge of projects, and talks of "changing SAIL's record of not completing projects in time and within the stipulated cost." That is a formidable task, given the fact that steel projects in India have taken a decade and more to complete (compared to four years in Japan). But he is confident that he will be as successful here as he has been in the case of improving SAIL's day-to-day operations.

The money is not easily available, however, because the seventh five-year Plan has not provided enough for the company's expansion and modernisation plans. So Krishnamurthy intends raising between Rs 800 crore and Rs 1,000 crore internally in each of the next three years to finance projects. This is crucial, for most of SAIL's plants are a quarter century old and reaching vintage status (the average age of a Japanese steel plant is no more than 10 or 12 years).

Whatever Krishnamurthy may or may not have done in the last 10 months, he has not set his sights low. He talks now of making every plant in the company run to full capacity ("The annual production targets will be the same as the rated capacity"), of changing the organisation's culture, and of tapping new steel-making technology which needs natural gas by locating some production units in West Asia.

With substantial achievements already under his belt, the ambitious talk of the future sounds credible. But in a sense, the turnaround at SAIL has just begun. With outdated plants, under-utilised capacity, excess manpower, a poor project completion record and efficiency norms that even today are nowhere near the best in the world, the company has a long way to go. But for the first time in a long while, the mood in SAIL is one of optimism that the problems can be tackled.

—T.N. NINAN

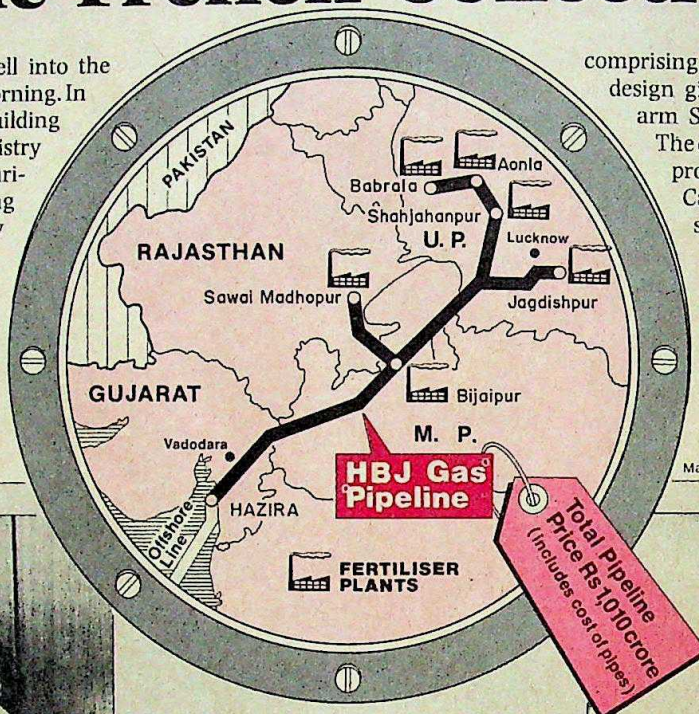
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HBJ PIPELINE

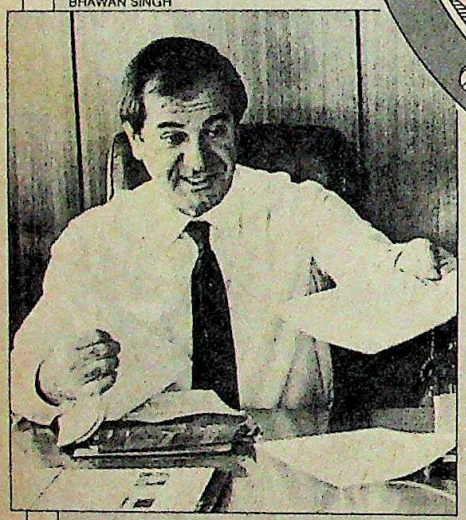
The French Collection

THE LIGHTS burned well into the early hours of Friday morning. In the red sandstone building that houses the Finance Ministry in the capital, senior officials furiously pored over a daunting array of price and currency figures. Several hours and long calculations later, the explosive file was forwarded to Finance Minister Vishwanath Pratap Singh before making its final move to the Minister of State for Petroleum Chandrashekhar Singh's, room 1.5 km away. Eventually, on Sunday April 6, a top Petroleum Ministry bureaucrat placed a phone call to an office that adjoins a five-star hotel in the capital.



Map by B.K. SHARMA

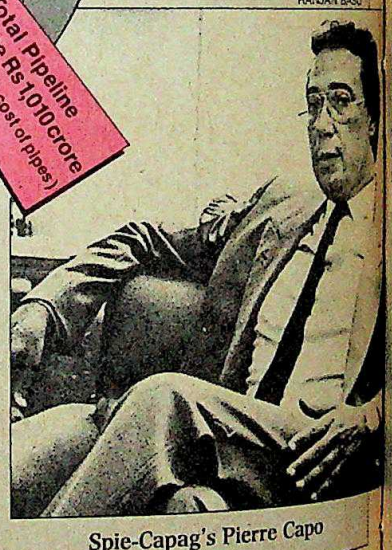
BHAWAN SINGH



Snamprogetti's Ottavio Quattrocchi

The Spie-Capag consortium bid Rs 92 crore less than Snamprogetti to bag the contract; but failure to meet the tight time schedule could make it a bitter victory.

RANJAN BASU



Spie-Capag's Pierre Capo

That call, to Pierre Capo, representative in Delhi of Spie-Capag, ended months of cliff-hanging drama, rumour-mongering, public smear campaigns, official procrastination, policy reversals, allegations of all manner of wrong-doing, and rang down the curtain on one of the most convoluted government decisions in recent memory: the award of the contract to build the 1,730 km-long Hazira-Bijaypur-Jagdishpur (HBJ) pipeline.

"We are very glad to have won, very proud," said Spie-Capag Vice-Chairman Jean Monville who had flown in hours earlier to be in on the final act. But Ottavio Quattrocchi, Snamprogetti's long-time representative in India who had intensely lobbied for the project, declined to talk to the press, saying only that "the Government has taken a decision in the country's best interests". Quattrocchi also shot off a telex message to the French congratulating them on their victory.

That victory was the outcome of the French-Japanese consortium's price, the package of loans and soft credit it offered, and the official assessment made in day-long sessions of the foreign exchange outgo. Spie-Capag and its Japanese partners Toyo Engineering Corporation and Nippon Kokkan (NKK) had bid around Rs 760 crore, Rs 92 crore, less than its major rival, the Snamprogetti-led consortium comprising the Italian engineering and design giant itself, its pipeline laying arm Saipem, and Dodsal of India. The other two consortia in the race proved either too expensive (the Canadian-French combine consisting of consortium leader Nova and Alberta Corporation, Majestic Contractors and the French firm Entrepose) or short on soft credit (the Mexican firm Condux, Brown & Root and India's Essar).

Last fortnight, however, it looked as if the official caution had paid off. Pointedly referring to the delays that have dogged the award of the contract, Singh told Parliament: "At current exchange rates there will be a savings of over Rs 100 crore." He is right in one sense. The bill for the entire pipeline was originally placed at Rs 1,700 crore. But on re-evaluation, this was reduced to a realistic Rs 1,100 crore. Last year, when the project was offered on a turn-key basis and the contract for the pipes, valued at over Rs 320 crore, hived off, the cost plunged to around Rs 780 crore. It will now wind up around Rs 715 crore, excluding reduced imports of certain items.

What Singh failed to mention was that the first 640-km stretch from Hazira in Gujarat to Bijaypur in Madhya Pradesh and the second 554-km stretch to Jagdishpur in Uttar Pradesh were supposed to be ready by June to feed, eventually, six fertiliser plants coming up along the route. Had the schedule been kept, there would have been a considerable saving in fertiliser imports which cost Rs 1,300 crore last year.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

While that assessment may not be universally shared in official quarters, few would disagree that the brouhaha over the HBJ project has been unprecedented. The latest storm was triggered off towards the end of last year after price bids in the second tendering had been opened. At around Rs 764 crore, the French combine had emerged as the lowest bidder. But in early November, the Italian ambassador to India took the unusual step of writing to Singh questioning the qualifications of the Japanese members of the French consortium. Subsequently, Quattrocchi wrote to the Gas Authority of India Ltd (GAIL), the public sector company that was set up to run the pipeline, along the same lines. The charges included:

► NKK did not qualify because the two pipeline laying contracts in Japan that the company cited were city, not cross country pipelines as stipulated in the tender.

► NKK took 9 years to complete one of the Japanese pipeline projects.

► NKK had been in the running when the HBJ job was being awarded on a piecemeal basis. It had then listed 98 km of experience for a project in Thailand, but when the project turned turnkey switched the figure to 100 km. (The tender specified that as the minimum stretch that would be taken into account to assess previous experience).

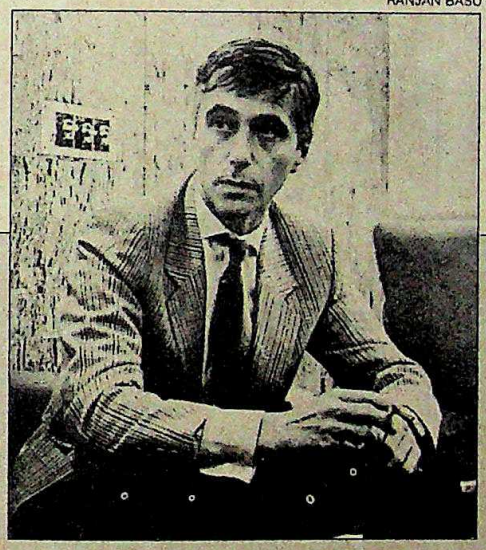
Certainly, these were serious charges and the Government appointed a committee under Cabinet Secretary P.K. Kaul to look into the allegations. But GAIL was furnished with ready explanations for the charges. NKK's Japanese client wrote on December 5 that the pipeline concerned was, indeed, cross country.

The French also claimed that the project involved 20,000 km of pipelines and so it took nine years to build them. The French however had no ready explanation for the third charge, but GAIL wrote to the Petroleum Ministry that "NKK was qualified earlier also when we had called exclusive tenders for laying of pipeline on a piecemeal basis".

The Kaul Committee, whose report is confidential, is believed to have gone into the charges in great detail and given a clean chit to the Japanese. Even so, it was touch and go for the French-led consortium. They had an initial price edge when the price bids were opened last November, but lost ground because there was a substantial yen element in their bid. With the yen soaring, the margin between them and the Italians was sharply cut to around Rs 42 crore. The whole affair was by now so tightly wrapped up in claims and counter-claims that in spite of extending yet again a publicly announced deadline for the decisions, it called on March 27 for yet another round of bids valid till April 7. The only question that now remains is whether the victors, already pressed for time, will be able to complete the job on time. If not, it will be a bitter victory.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI

RANJAN BASU



Monville: satisfied

JEAN MONVILLE

Bitter Fight

JEAN MONVILLE, vice-chairman of Spie-Capag, the French leader of the winning consortium, flew in from Paris for the final negotiations, and spoke to Principal Correspondent PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI after the contract was in the bag. Excerpts:

On the final negotiations:

We were invited over the telephone on Sunday, April 5 to the Petroleum Ministry for discussions. Government officials then asked us to offer a last discount on prices. We had a day's notice. After contacting our partners and suppliers, we agreed to cut our quotation of $606 million (Rs 727 crore) to $570 million (Rs 684 crore).

On being asked to quote again:

We were both disappointed and satisfied—disappointed because we were the lowest, and satisfied because this would be the quickest way to end the whole thing. It was our bad luck that the yen rose, but the French Government would have acted similarly.

On the questions raised about the competence of his Japanese partners:

Except for the statements about Nippon Kokkan, most of the attacks were directed at people in government who were making the technical choices. An official of the Nova and Alberta Corporation (the leader of the Canadian consortium) had attacked Spie-Capag in a newspaper in the United States. We told him that we would sue him, but the matter has now been resolved. To put it in a nice way, some of our competitors were a bit too tough and we did feel bitter at times, but their reaction in the end was very sporting. Snamprogetti sent us a telex message congratulating us and wishing us all the best for the future.

On the role Indian firms will play:

BHEL has submitted proposals for the cathodic protection system (equipment to ensure that the pipes do not corrode). We are prepared to work with them. But we cannot accept the TCIL proposal on the telecom and telemetry systems. They have a collaboration with Japan Radio Equipment. TCIL will be in the picture if they sign up with a French company. Our French loans are tied to buying equipment in France.

On the delay in awarding the contract and downstream time problems:

It is quite normal for clients to take their time to decide. As for us, we have made a commitment that we will complete the job on time. We will start preparing now, but the actual pipeline laying will begin in September, after the monsoons. The consortium will simultaneously take up four separate stretches of the first portion of the pipeline and complete a total of 6 km a day.

On penalties for failure:

We will lose face and credibility. Secondly, we will have to pay a penalty of 10 per cent of the total amount.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SOUTH OF DELHI

Sprawling Enclaves

ALONG much of the 30 km-long stretch of macadam from Delhi to Gurgaon in neighbouring Haryana, billboards tout "exquisite" residential colonies, "luxury" homes and "deluxe" apartments. Closer to the Haryana town, the hoardings get bigger, loudly proclaiming what has been evident for months: the hottest real estate action in the north lies south of the capital.

Lured by the smell of big money, nearly every private construction company worth its salt is heading for the border town, scrambling for huge tracts of land, forking out breathtaking prices that spiral upwards with every passing month, blitzing the home-hungry with media advertisements and hauling them in vans and buses to sites spread over nearly 4,000 acres of land.

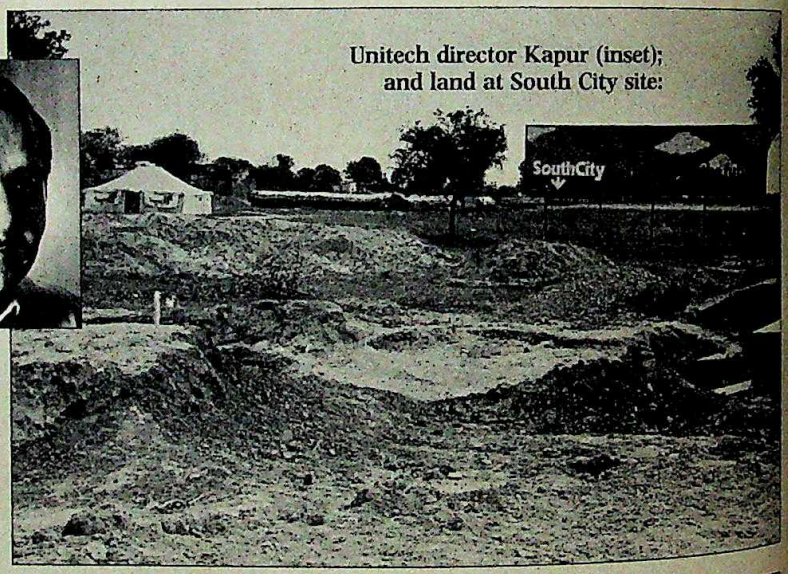
The players in this cash-churning drama include both the big daddies of the real estate business and a ragtag of smaller firms. DLF Universal and the Ansal group are establishing several townships on a total of nearly 2,500 acres. Utility Builders and Leasing India, an engineering and construction firm, is hawking plots in a 323-acre stretch in the foothills of the Aravalli range, construction company Unitech has jumped in with a 130-acre project called South City, and Gulmohar Estates, launched by former ITC chairman Ajit Haksar and associate Rakesh Aggarwal, is offering deluxe apartments and bungalows on a 23-acre plot, at prices that match those in Manhattan.

"Before 1981, no one had heard of Gurgaon. But everyone is furiously rushing to the area now," says Gurgaon's Deputy Commissioner Sanjay Kothari. The latest to do so is a new venture called Shaandar Holiday Resorts, which bought 500 acres of hilly terrain last month. The goal: a camping resort for the capital's week-enders. Farms are in too. The Taj group of hotels has one, while Khosla Properties' Gold Mine Farms is hawking eucalyptus farms and orchards 40 km from Delhi.

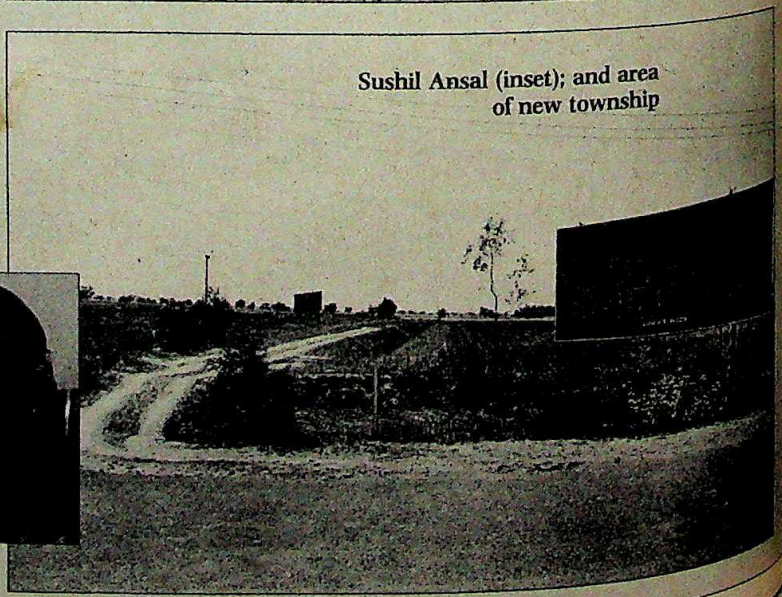
If all manner of real estate developers are flocking to Gurgaon, the reasons are evident enough. Haryana has no urban ceiling law and allows private builders to lay out residential colonies, unlike in nearby Delhi. Again, unlike Delhi, land is readily available in Gurgaon. As Sushil Ansal, managing director of the Ansal group argues: "We have no choice but to go there." K.P. Singh, managing director of DLF Universal, in turn, points out that the capital has inevitably to expand southwards because the density of population is low there, whereas Delhi's industrialised northern fringes are congested. He adds that a new highway now being built will shorten the commuting time to the capital. Finally, south Delhi is chic. And as Satya Sheel of Shaandar Holiday Resorts puts it, "Gurgaon is respectable because it's to the south of Delhi. Companies are building for the rich."

That's certainly true, for the hoi polloi have little chance of coughing up the asking rates, which in Gulmohar Estates vary from a substantial Rs 8.7 lakh for a two-bedroom apartment to a horrendous Rs 40 lakh for a plush garden bungalow, the tag including charges for maintenance, five television channels, phone connections, water and power on tap 24

Photographs by HARI OM GULATI



Unitech director Kapur (inset); and land at South City site:



Sushil Ansal (inset); and area of new township

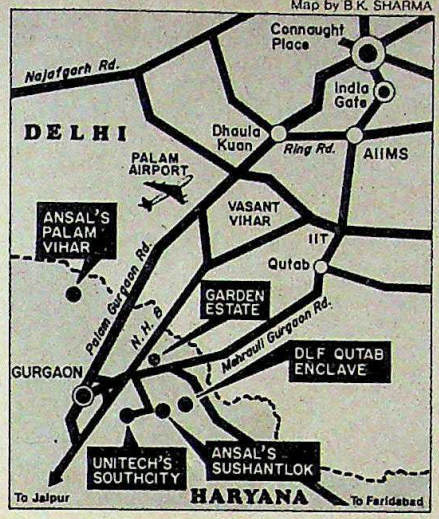
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

hours a day in a state where these are in short supply. The Ansal group's rates vary from Rs 1.05 lakh to Rs 4.89 lakh for plots bought on instalment payments, while the bill for houses ranges from Rs 2.5 lakh to Rs 9.85 lakh. These rates are cheaper than those in the capital, where land prices go up to as high as Rs 5,000 per square metre. But Gurgaon is hick, and has little to say for itself other than its proximity to south Delhi.

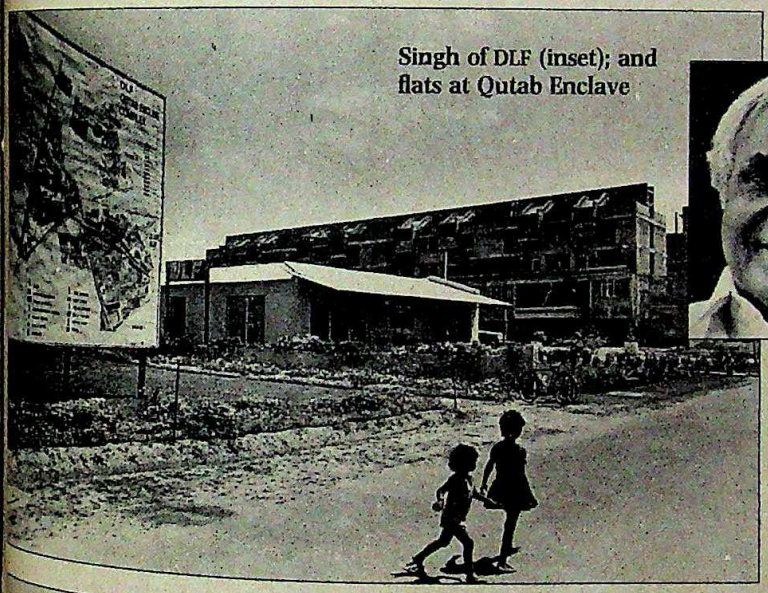
Nevertheless, the plots on offer have been snapped up eagerly. DLF found the response so overwhelming that what started out as a 60-acre project has grown to 1,600 acres, with plans to acquire another 300 acres. Ansal has expanded similarly and Utility claims to have sold 79 per cent of the plots it had on offer. Unitech Director R. Kapur say that over a third of the 1,500 plots the company is offering have been sold since they hit the market in mid-February, and Haksar claims that Gulmohar Estates has received 6,000 enquiries, 200 of them from abroad.

Map by B.K. SHARMA



If the response has been overwhelming, buyers are clearly banking on the localities becoming the hottest properties in the region in a decade or so. A surgeon based in Saudi Arabia said that he preferred to invest in land rather than deposit the cash in a bank. The surgeon already owns a house in Delhi and has now bought a plot of land near Gurgaon.

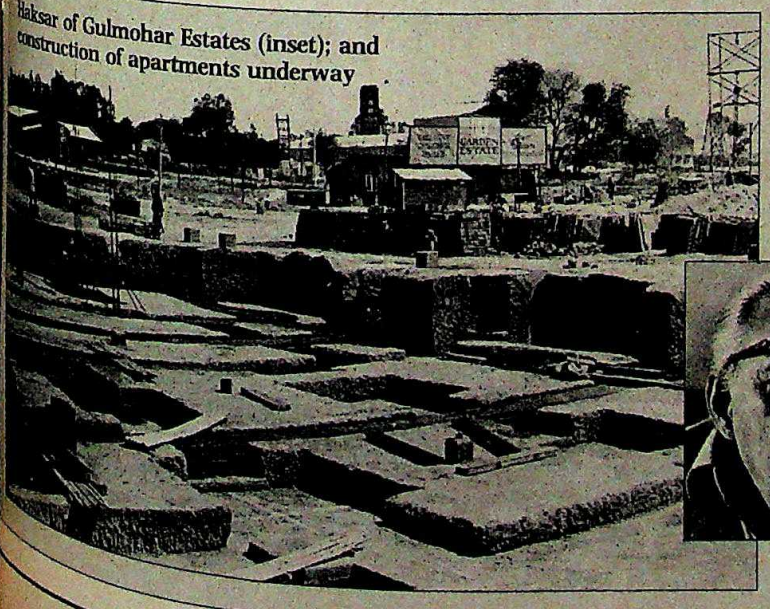
The doctor is dead right in his calculations: land prices in the area have zoomed over ten-fold in six years. When DLF first tested the Gurgaon waters in 1980, it shelled out some Rs 30,000 an acre. Barely 18 months later, another developer forked out about Rs 1 lakh. Now the rate is almost Rs 4 lakh, and prices per square metre from the ultimate buyers can reach Rs 25 lakh per acre.



Singh of DLF (inset); and flats at Qutab Enclave

With such prices, the profits must be handsome for the developers. Although the Haryana Government has imposed a ceiling on post-tax profits of 15 per cent, this works out to a tidy sum on projects running to Rs 100 crore or more. Besides, as Housing and Urban Development Corporation Chairman S.K. Sharma cautiously suggests: "There are always hidden profits in real estate." Private firms predictably deny this, saying that chartered accountants certify profits and that statements must be submitted to the state Government.

But it is also true that the Haryana Government requires 45 per cent of privately-developed plots to be reserved for middle and lower income groups on a no-profit, no-loss basis; the remaining 55 per cent can be sold on the free market and it is this segment which firms are eyeing, and non-resident Indians form a part of the prize catch. Non-residents have bought 40 per cent of Utility Builders' plots, while they account for some 20 per cent of DLF's land sales. Gulmohar Estates and Utility are also vetting applications to ensure that neighbours will be pucca enough. Says S.M. Pande, managing director of Utility Builders: "We have been trying to invite people to apply for plots. It's very important who



Haksar of Gulmohar Estates (inset); and construction of apartments underway

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the neighbour will be."

Developers such as DLF's Singh argue that the official obligation on the industry to provide plots at lower rates jacks up corporate break-even points. Says Singh: "In our case, the break-even figure is nearly Rs 400 per square yard." Then, Haryana charges Rs 60 per square yard for the development of infrastructure.

But high prices are clearly not a limiting factor; indeed, they have probably contributed to the boom by helping keep out the hoi polloi. So the 4,000 acres now being developed will support a population of nearly 2 lakh, almost equivalent to the present population of Gurgaon town. The town's population by the turn of the century is expected to be 7.5 lakh.

But the Haryana Government has no complaints: as far as the state authorities are concerned, private companies are putting into development the cash that the Government does not have. But as an official put it: "We welcome the role played by private firms, but there should be some limit to this. If there's none, they will go on expanding."

Questions are also raised about infrastructure. Gurgaon faces a serious water shortage. The Government is toying with the idea of a canal to supply water from the Yamuna to the area, but nothing has been done so far. Many of the new colonies have deep tubewells that should help tide over the water problem for six or seven years, but after that residents could be in trouble.

As is inevitable when land is involved, charges of malfeasance are being aired. Pande of Utility talks of having to grease official palms to get things done quickly. And he takes a swipe at rivals by suggesting that firms are riding the south Delhi wave too heavily. Says Pande: "DLF calls one of its colonies Qutab Enclave while an Ansal area is named Palam Vihar. Both the Qutab Minar and Palam are in Delhi, and the names suggest that the colonies are in Delhi, which is quite untrue."

But more serious charges have also been raised. After dithering for years, the Centre launched its National Capital Region (NCR) plan some months ago to chart the future growth of the area around the capital. But private firms are pre-empting the official plans for the area. Says R.S. Sethi, the Delhi Development Authority's land commissioner: "Private firms are presenting a fait accompli to the planners."

Still, according to Urban Develop-

HARYANA

Rural Uplift

RAM NARAIN is sitting pretty. Late last year, the 72-year-old Narain and his four brothers sold 13.5 acres of land on the outskirts of Gurgaon, near Delhi, to a real estate company for a cool Rs 55 lakh. The firm struck a deal with the brothers: in return for letting it keep the money as a deposit, it would pay them 12 per cent interest, less tax. So the retired army havildar now gets a cheque for Rs 9,000 every month.

Earlier, farmer Chander Bhan, 52, also peddled land to the same firm—four acres for more than Rs 10 lakh. With the cash, he bought 23 acres some 25 km from Gurgaon, where land is far cheaper, and built a farmhouse to boot. And some two years ago, Jagmal Singh Yadav went into business after hawking eight acres of family property for Rs 10 lakh. The former government head clerk's share of the family bounty came to Rs 2.5 lakh.

Jagmal Singh Yadav went into business after hawking eight acres of family property for Rs 10 lakh.

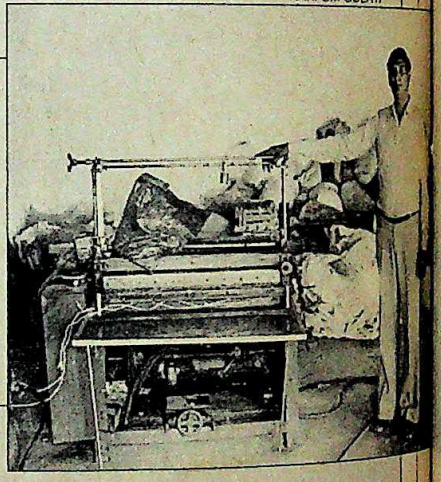
Narain, Bhan and Yadav are among the scores who have hit the jackpot in the dusty villages that skirt Gurgaon. With real estate developers scrambling for land in Gurgaon's vicinity, many villagers have made small fortunes overnight, the amounts depending on land sites and the time of sale. Says Chander Bhan's lawyer son Nawal Singh Yadav: "Almost every family has sold land valued at more than Rs 1 lakh.

Remarkably enough, prosperity has not radically altered rural lifestyles. Villages like Sirhaul do not bristle with television antennas, and cars do not roar down their narrow village lanes. A few like Rampal Singh, a member of the Sirhaul panchayat, have spent some money on improving their homes but many have not.

The real estate boom has come as a windfall for brokers too. Some of them charge a brokerage of up to 2 per cent for each land deal. Ram Anand, for instance, is reputed to have risen considerably in the world since the first real estate firm came scouting for land, and now owns a car and a jeep. Anand himself, however, downplays his wealth (he says that he bought his vehicles from the proceeds of a small inheritance).

The last is true, but it is also true that nosy strangers are regarded with suspicion. For affluence has brought in its wake huge tax liabilities. Lawyer Yadav narrates the tale of a man who sold land for around Rs 80 lakh but had to cough up over Rs 30 lakh to the Government.

HARI OM GULATI



If the tax department is detested, another arm of the Government is equally unpopular. A few years ago, the Haryana Urban Development Authority acquired rural land on which to build houses, but market rates have dramatically soared since then. So several villagers are sore that they have had to stand by while more fortunate neighbours make their pile. The stage would therefore seem set for the social tensions inevitable when incomes change dramatically. That these have not developed so far in the midst of this rural ferment is a tribute to the equanimity of the Haryanvi villager.

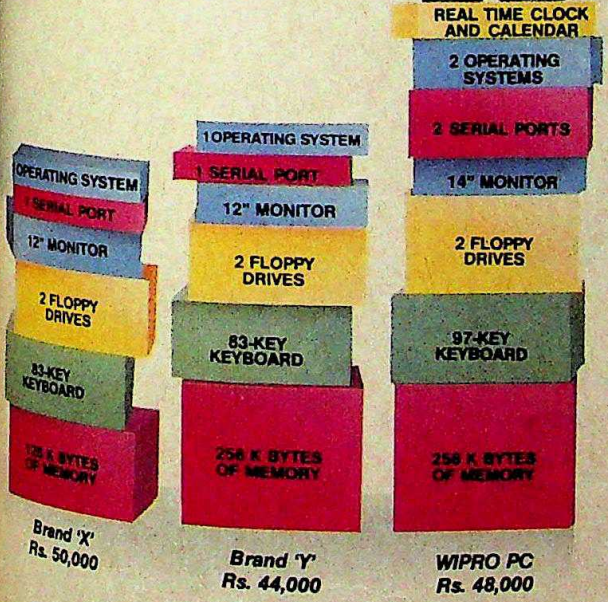
—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MORE YOU COMPARE, THE BETTER IT LOOKS.

SEE HOW THE WIPRO PC STACKS UP AGAINST THE COMPETITION.



Brand 'X' Rs. 50,000

Brand 'Y' Rs. 44,000

WIPRO PC Rs. 48,000

The biggest name in minicomputers now offers you a small business computer that spells value for money like no other PC does.

The WIPRO PC.

It costs just Rs 48,000 for a completely operational, ready-to-use configuration. Which includes 256 K Bytes of memory. And a printer (quoted extra on most other PCs).

There's a lot more.

To begin with, the WIPRO PC doesn't stop at running IBM PC software. So you also get a large number of ready-to-use software packages designed specially for the Indian user. And this means you don't end up spending money on application software development.

Then, it lets up to three people use the same resources. And run different programs. At the same time. With its multiuser DBOS†. And its multi-terminal support.

And, of course, you get the single user MS-DOS. So you can run the entire library of IBM PC software. From Lotus 1-2-3 to Wordstar... dBase III to Flight Simulator.

You also get the Concurrent CP/M, which lets up to four different programs run on the same terminal. Simultaneously.

What's more, it offers extra on-line storage up to 40 MB. An extra large 14" colour or monochrome display. A versatile 97-key keyboard. Four extra IBM PC compatible slots. A whole lot of features that give it the edge!

And the fact that it's from WIPRO means you'll get nothing less than the very best when it comes to service support. Whether it's hardware maintenance or software implementation.

To add to it all, add-ons cost much, much less than on other PCs. For example, additional memory of 256 K Bytes costs you just Rs 2,000.

So come get your hands on the WIPRO PC. The only limit to how much it can do is your imagination.

The WIPRO PC/XT, which includes a 10 MB Winchester disk drive, 256 K Bytes of memory and a printer, is priced at Rs 70,000.

† Supported only on the WIPRO PC/XT.

To see, hear or know more about the WIPRO PC, call or write to:

WIPRO Information Technology Ltd.
S B Towers
88 Mahatma Gandhi Road
Bangalore 560 001
Phone: 569622 Telex: 845-8356

WIPRO PC

IBM ® PC, IBM are registered trademarks of International Business Machines Corporation.
MS-DOS is a registered trademark of Microsoft Corporation.
CP/M is a registered trademark of Digital Research Inc.

A great deal more. For a good deal less.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Garden Silk Mills Pvt. Ltd., Surat, an associate of the Vareli Group of Industries.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Rediffusion/G/4692

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Experience Gets More Indian And Even More Unbeatable

Now Indian Flight Attendants On Pan Am To Make You Feel Even More At Home.

Pan Am's New Indian In-Flight Service

On Pan Am the experience is getting more and more unbeatable. Our new Indian flight attendants make a smiling difference. Specially when they serve you our delicious Indian cuisine exclusively created for the discerning vegetarian and non-vegetarian. And of course we've also introduced announcements in Hindi. It's like you never left home.

More Room For Comfort

While you're getting all the attention from our Indian flight attendants, settle back and get the feel of our seats. Much more roomy and more space to stretch your legs!

Specially in the Clipper® Class where we threw out the 8 across seating and made it six. This is what makes every Pan Am flight more relaxing and enjoyable.

Only Pan Am Has India And America Under One Roof

If you are catching a connection at JFK, New York, you don't have to switch airlines or even switch buildings. For Pan Am has the only terminal Worldport® with all international and internal flights under one roof. So instead of crossing the Atlantic with one airline and changing to another to fly inside the States, Pan Am gives you one airline all the way to over 45 US cities.

Only Pan Am Has Its Own Free Helicopter Service

Also at the Pan Am Worldport is another bonus for First and Clipper Class travellers. A free helicopter service that takes about 8 minutes to Manhattan, 15 to Newark.

So fly the Indian way to the States, fly Pan Am. From Delhi each Monday, Wednesday, Thursday and Saturday, and from Bombay on Tuesday, Friday and Sunday.

For information and reservations see your Travel Agent or call Pan Am, New Delhi 345222/345244 or Bombay 2029048.

Pan Am. You Can't Beat The Experience.®

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

recent Secretary Ramesh Chandra, Haryana and Uttar Pradesh had raised with the Centre the question of decisions they had already taken before the NCR plan came into force. "The states had argued that the regional plans should be such that any previous expenditure doesn't become infructuous. To some extent, this was conceded. Even so, the NCR board will examine whether these things fit into the overall pattern. If anything radically stands in the way of coordinated planning, we will consider what action should be taken." But the fact remains that with such large colonies coming up for the well-heeled, the Government is unlikely to suggest any real changes to the decisions of private companies.

If the NCR plan isn't a serious question mark over the new colonies coming up, water might well be, as well as the fact that many of them were started half a decade ago, and might take as much longer before they become habitable. But in the ultimate analysis, the hard fact is that Qutab Enclave, Palam Vihar, Gulmohar Estates, South City, Gold Mine Farms, Shaandar Holiday Resorts and all the other about-to-bloom schemes around Gurgaon make for the biggest real estate boom north of Bombay.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI

DELHI

Posh Plans

THE VISION is breathtaking: expressways and flyovers cutting a swathe through the skyline, a subway-cum-surface rail system that can disgorge up to 20,000 commuters an hour into the heart of town, three major new settlements, each designed to accommodate one million people. By the turn of the century, the stately capital that Edwin Landseer Lutyens built will have become a megapolis, one of the world's 27 super cities with populations of over 10 million.

These are ambitious plans, but ambition seems set to turn into reality. Last month, the Delhi Urban Arts Commission, a watchdog agency for preserving the city's heritage, submitted a 200-page report to the Central Government that endorses a blueprint prepared by Delhi Administration nearly a year ago. Titled Delhi 2001, it will go to the Cabinet in a few weeks.

Both documents plan a vaster city with more of everything—people, housing, a rapid transit system and oases of serenity in a sea of frenetic activity. By the year 2001, Delhi will house over 12 million people, 4 million more than now, with all the accoutrements that a bigger population calls for—15 new telephone exchanges and 21 hospitals, three new university campuses and 20 flyovers, and much more. Three virgin land areas (see map) of around 60 sq km each may be developed to house an additional 3 million people, and a million more squeezed into undeveloped parts of the city. And metropolitan limits will stretch from Gurgaon in Haryana and NOIDA in Uttar Pradesh.

Linking much of this will be a surface metre gauge rail network to be constructed around the existing ring rail. The commission also favours a 15-km long subway. The bill for this: a daunting Rs 1,050 crore or more. The lines will end up close to the bustling central business district in the heart of town. This means that some of Delhi's major arteries will be dug up for years.

While most of Delhi will make fast tracks, the walled city will move along at a sedentary pace. Out will go rickshaws, handcarts, buses and cars—and a number of the area's 1.5 lakh small traders and businessmen who, town planners believe, have contributed to the congestion by shifting in. In will come that old Calcutta faithful, the tram. Says a senior Delhi Development Authority (DDA) town planning official: "The walled city will be basically meant for pedestrians, with trams to ferry them around."

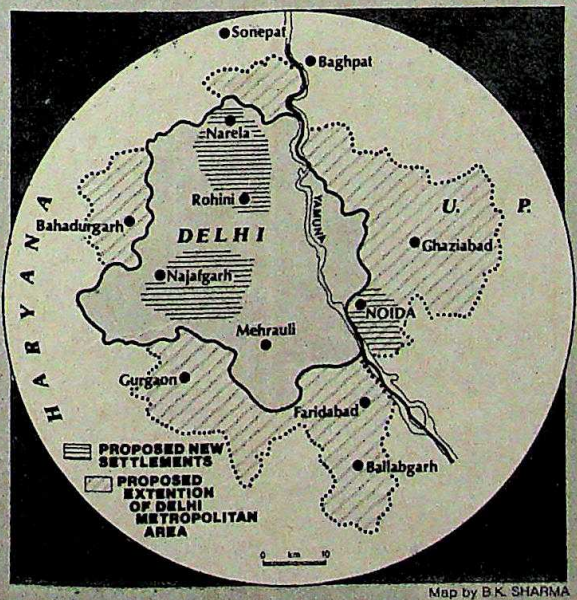
And the Yamuna river-front may be just such another big promenade. The river is to be spruced up and confined to a 550-metre channel. Delhi Administration would like to hand over the 8,000 acres of land thus freed to businessmen, but the commission has loftier goals in mind: three new university campuses, or the development of a Venice-like waterfront for the pursuit of leisure.

But flyovers, rapid transit systems, promenades and buildings call for money—a hefty Rs 13,000 crore at 1981 prices, and perhaps double by the time projects go on stream. And this excludes the cost of the underground. Where will the cash come from?

The DDA reckons that the private sector will fork out 70 per cent of the money, directly or indirectly: businessmen will build factories and residents houses and the DDA will recover its investments in similar buildings from the private sector. Also, the Administration hopes to get a few hundred crore rupees by selling commercial property. Finally, the Central Government will fork out the remaining 30 per cent of the funds required.

"Spread over a 15-year period, Rs 4,900 crore is not very much," the DDA official argues. Adds A.P. Kanvinde, one of the five architects of the commission's report: "If we are prepared to enter the 21st century, we must find the money." This is equally true of the three other metropolitan cities, but will money for them be as forthcoming? With the commission's report due to go to the Cabinet, the charge that Delhi is a pampered city will be given credence. As one cynic put it last fortnight: "Would a report on the future of another city be forwarded all the way to the top?"

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI



Map by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INFORMATION SHOPS

Keyed Up

EVER THOUGHT of hooking on to a computer packed with information in California and finding out everything you ever wanted to know about the brewing of diabetic beer, microwave methods to detect cancer or about calorie-reduced foods? Well, companies in India have begun doing precisely that—and in steadily larger numbers as the months go by.

Information "shops" that sell data at the push of a button are commonplace in the developed world. But they still constitute a fledgeling industry in India yet to really come into their own.

But things are changing. And industry and research bigwigs have begun moving in. Tata Chemicals, Defence Scientific Documentation Centre, the Gas Turbine Research Establishment and dozens of others acquired passwords for direct access to the computers of Dialog, the premier California-based information-selling company in science and technology.

And the Bangalore-based Informatics has set up a telex facility to contact computers the world over. After a secret password is telexed, it gets hooked on to a computer-storehouse. While many of the bigger companies telex directly for information, Informatics is the only one to go commercial. "All you do is ask and we have the answer, precise, accurate and complete," says Managing Director N.V. Sathyanarayana.

Sathyanarayana: information on sale

Sathyanarayana, 32, started the service a little more than three years ago, and business has doubled in the last two years, but remains modest at Rs 8 lakh. According to R.K. Bammi, CIPLA's Bangalore-based research director: "This sort of service is essential. The computer can do in minutes what an army of clerks will take months to do."

The enthusiasm notwithstanding, India lags far behind the services available to information-seekers in the West: they can call information on their personal consoles by simply dialing the database's telephone number. And though the Posts and Telegraphs Department has developed a public switch telephone network capable of the necessary audio-to-visual transformation, it is hardly efficient, thanks to bad telephones in the first place and limited international circuits in the second. The alternative—to have a computer-to-computer link with foreign databases—is an expensive proposition (a link with Dialog would cost about Rs 18 lakh a year). "We can't afford this unless we are also allowed to have multiplexing (sub-links with clients who would share the cost) but the P&T says it is against the rules," says a disappointed Sathyanarayana.

Meanwhile, some industrial giants are seriously thinking in terms of forming an information consortium. Whatever be the outcome of their move, there is no doubt that Indian industry is beginning to wake up to the information explosion.

—SRINIVASA PRASAD

MRTP

Blow Hot

THE NAME of the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices (MRTP) commission strikes terror in the heart of the hardiest of capitalists. So Dilip Piramal, chairman of Blow Plast Ltd (turnover Rs 66 crore), was rattled to receive a letter from it informing him that his latest sales gambit was in jeopardy. The commission had upheld the complaint of Delhi advocate Madhu Singh that Blow Plast's 'VIP bag-a-bargain offer' was "grossly misleading".

Launched in January, the scheme claimed that the customer, by judicious use of the 20-page booklet of discount coupons, could save up to Rs 5,000 on various purchases. Singh said she went to buy a suitcase and discovered that the scheme promised more than it delivered. Among her grouses:

► Dealers who usually offered a standard 22 per cent discount on bags now asked customers to choose between the booklet and the discount;

► Blow Plast had raised its prices earlier this year, thus effectively negating the cost to them of the discounts;

► The discounts were available at selected outlets only, so the money spent on travel to and fro ate into the offer.

The VIP bargain: altered offer

The commission agreed with her and slapped a temporary exparte injunction on Blow Plast. Piramal countered that:

► All luggage manufacturers, and not just VIP, had raised prices following excise levy increases;

► There was no obligation on the customer to use the booklet;

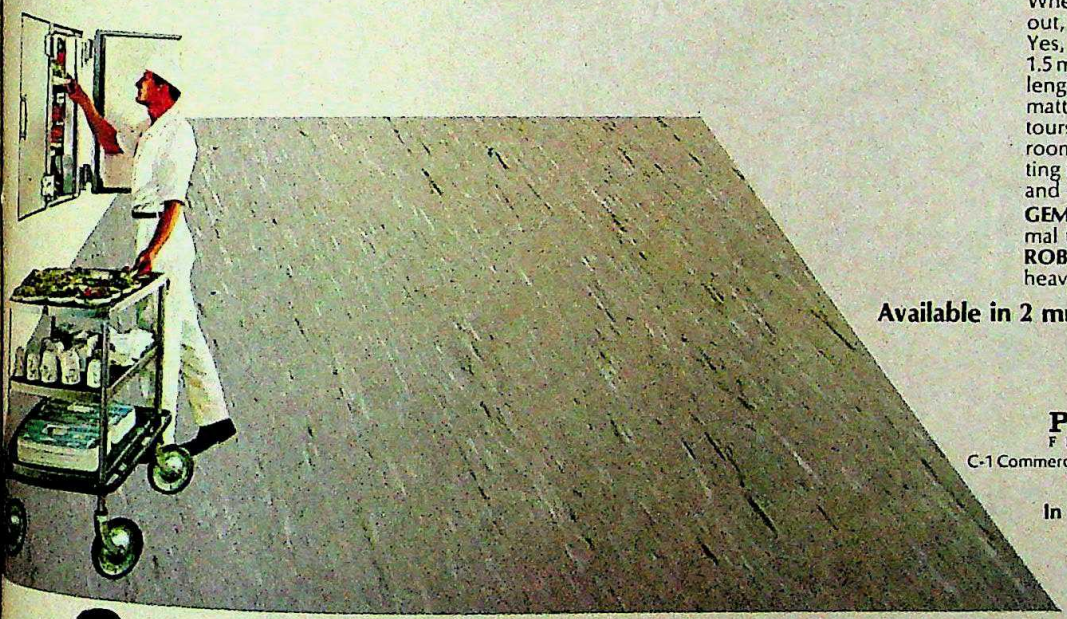
Says Piramal: "It's not that when you buy our bag you have to spend Rs 50,000. You are free to take it or just leave it."

The inquiry continues, but the commission has allowed Blow Plast to go ahead with the scheme. But the advertisements have to change. Notably, the words, "Believe it or not, to save up to Rs 5,000 all you have to do is to buy a VIP now" are to be replaced by "Leading consumer products will be available at the stores specified on the rebate coupons as well as any other supplementary lists". It now remains to be seen whether Piramal's sales pitch will have the same force it did earlier. —JAGANNATH DUBASHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The magic of Vinyl... for offices... banks... hospitals... computer rooms... hotels... schools... stadiums... railways...



Every office, commercial establishment or shop, bank, school or hospital, hotel or restaurant, computer room or lab, airport or railway carriage deserves the wonder of Wonderfloor.

The revolutionary new concept in flooring that brings about a magical transformation to any room.

Look down on splendour

Let your eyes rest on the beauty of Wonderfloor. Gaze at the subtle colour variations of simulated marble. Matchless in beauty... matching any decor.

Soft to tread on hard to dent

The magic of Wonderfloor... every floor needs it. Scratching and Scrubbing make no impression. Spills and Splashes leave no blemish. Smears and Stains vanish with a swish. Fire and Flame can't go far. Wonderfloor... it truly catches the eye. And its veneer of splendour fades not with time.

Roll out a cheerful welcome

Whenever Wonderfloor is rolled out, it says a cheerful welcome to all. Yes, Wonderfloor comes in tiles and 1.5 metre wide rolls of continuous lengths. Ready for laying out flat in a matter of hours, following the contours of even the oddest shaped rooms, rolling down stairs and fitting into corners. No unsightly strips and joints!

GEMINI. A tough flooring for normal traffic areas.

ROBUST. Extra tough flooring for heavy traffic areas.

Available in 2 mm & 1.5 mm thicknesses.

PREMIER VINYL
FLOORING LIMITED
C-1 Commercial Centre Safdarjang Development Area
New Delhi-110 016 Phone: 661435 660023

In collaboration with

DEGUSSA

West Germany.

...elegance at your feet

WONDERFLOOR

VINYL FLOORINGS

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Dad, why does water spiral anticlockwise down a drain in Australia?"

His capacity to ask questions is infinite. Because he's growing, exploring.

Water does spiral anticlockwise in Australia. Clockwise in the northern hemisphere.

So much wonder in the world was, until now, imprisoned in dull text books and rote learning...

Not any more. With the CLASS programme, computers are going to make education fun. And the SCL Unicorn is the first choice of the CLASS programme.

Because it's made right here in India. No more dependence on foreign kits. The Unicorn is made by SCL, a Government of India concern.

Software? There's plenty of it. Being developed indigenously not only by NCERT and the Ministry of Education, but by many software houses as well. Regional language software in Hindi, Telegu, Marathi and Gujarati is ready and lots more is underway.

And the SCL Unicorn is perfectly Indianised. It's built to be 100% reliable under user conditions of temperature, humidity, dust and so on.

It has special school administration packages... for examinations, student enrollment, fee collection. Even a word processing facility.

Supported by an all-India network of sales and service.

And, considering your kids are going to use it in school, it would be an invaluable ally if they had it at home as well.

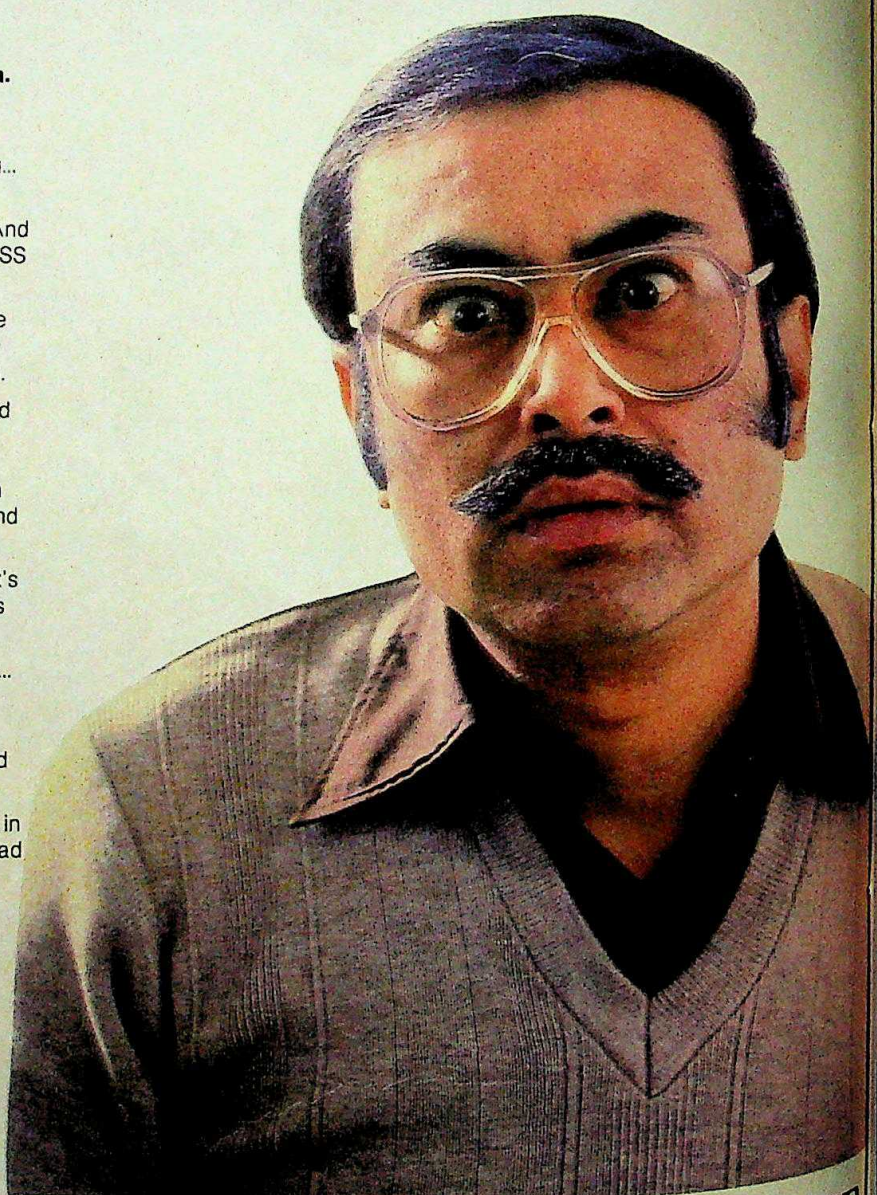
The SCL Unicorn. Makes more sense, whichever way you look at it.

Clockwise. Or anticlockwise.

Semiconductor Complex Ltd.

(A Govt. of India Enterprise)
Registered Office: Phase VIII, S.A.S. Nagar-160059 (Punjab)
Tel: 87443, Gram : CHALSI, Telex: 0395-270 LSI IN

EDUCATIONAL



THE SCL UNICORN PERSONAL COMPUTER

It has all the answers.

Computers based on the SCL Unicorn Personal Computer Modules are available from:

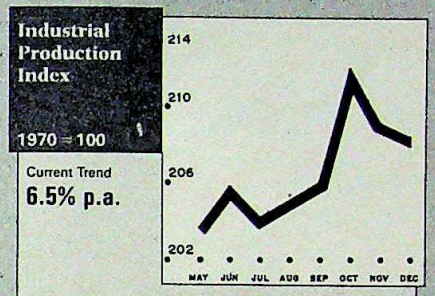
Computer Aided Learning Systems Pvt. Ltd. New Delhi, Tel: 6419534 Tlx: 031-4884 • Computer Kinetics, Srinagar, Tel: 74072 • Computer Point (I) Ltd. at all their outlets—Bangalore, Tel: 578718, 578452. Bombay, Tel: 4930543, 4936716. Delhi, Tel: 699421. Madras, Tel: 441192 • Crescent Computers, New Delhi, Tel: 666807 Computers Pvt. Ltd. Bombay, Tel: 242774, 222370 • 21st Century Electronics Pvt. Ltd. Noida (U.P.), Tel: 805-3185 • Datek Marketing Group, New Delhi, Tel: 0175-389 • Dedicated Digital Machines Pvt. Ltd. New Delhi, Tel: 6411905, 6413111 Tlx: 031-3974 • Digital Innovations Pvt. Ltd. Baroda, Tel: 66544, 67344 Tlx: 0175-389 Gram: DIGISYSTEM • Electronics Systems Punjab Ltd. Chandigarh, Tel: 87492 Tlx: 0395-391 Gram: SYSTEMS, MOHALI • Informatic Computer Systems, Trivandrum Tel: 662734, 656114 • Integrated Data Systems, Hyderabad, Tel: 225315 Gram: DATALINE • Kerala State Electronics Development Corporation Limited, Tel: 561-0 Tel: 60621 (10 Lines), Tlx: 0884-273, 0884-283 Gram: ELECTRONIC • Microelectronics Inc. Madras, Tel: 450217 • Namtech Consultants Pvt. Ltd. Bangalore, Tel: 228059, 228-8 Tlx: 0845-8116 Gram: NAMTECH • Pascal Computers Pvt. Ltd. Calcutta, Tel: 434092 Gram: ARPINTCO • Premier Microsystems Pvt. Ltd. Calcutta, Tel: 668607 • Rapid Computer Services & Spares Pvt. Ltd. Bombay, Tel: 392067, 352099, 358537 • Safeguard Microsystems, Bangalore, Tel: 568324 Gram: SAFEGUARD Tlx: 0845-8 • Sujatha Sales & Electronics Ltd. Bombay, Tel: 222999 Tlx: 011-3855 Gram: ELECTECH • Suvik Electronics, Ahmedabad, Tel: 2584, 2680, 2687, 2374 Gram: SUVIK GANDHINAGAR • Swaruna Information Products, 502 Pushpanjali Complex, Kothi, Hyderabad, Andhra Pradesh • Technolab Innovex, Madras, Tel: 422135, 423893 • Webel Computer Ltd. Calcutta, Tel: 442645, 431915, 431091 Tlx: 021-2242 Gram: BENTRONICS

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

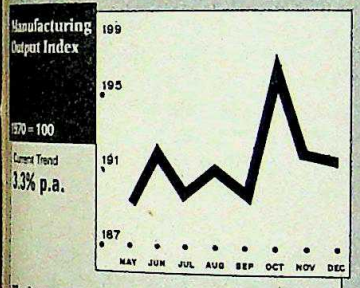
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WHOLESALE prices are rising at a steady and fairly consistent 7 per cent per year. The money supply and commercial bank credit position have eased somewhat of late. The post-Budget scare which gripped the bourse did not have any effect on long-term buoyancy. The picture on the power generation front is none too good and leaves much to be desired. And, after quite some months, gold prices have risen. All data are seasonally adjusted. The current trend is computed on the basis of the last six months data to which a regression is fitted.

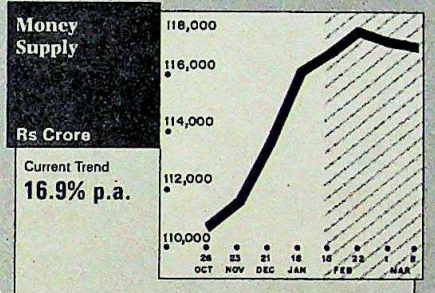
Wholesale prices rose by 1.1 per cent between 1st and 22nd March. While the annual inflation rate is 7 per cent, the price rise is accelerating.



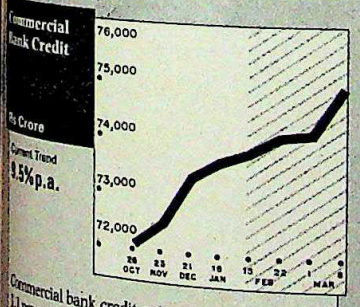
Between October and December 1985, the industrial production index fell by 1.7 per cent—an indication of trouble ahead.



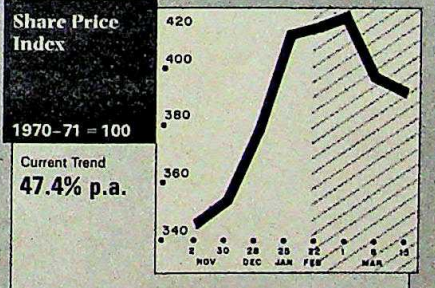
The drop in manufacturing output—2.7 per cen between October and December—is evident, bu the reasons for the recession are nuclear.



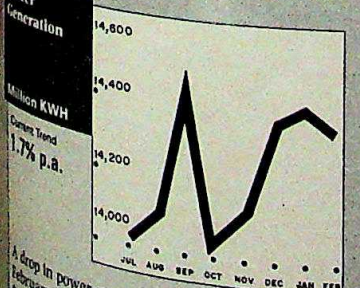
Money supply dropped by 0.5 per cent between 22 February and 8 March, resulting in a tightening of M3 to below 17 per cent.



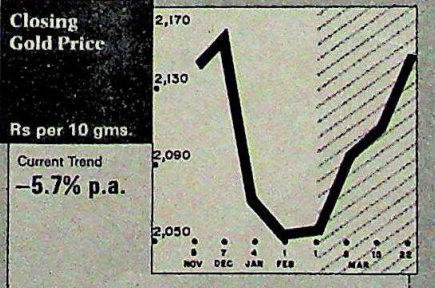
Commercial bank credit expanded marginally by 1.1 per cent between 22 February and 8 March. But the overall credit growth has been small.



Share price crashed by 6.3 per cent after the Budget. But gains were only marginally hit, so the long-term trend remained positive.



A drop in power generation by 0.4 per cent in February has sharply lowered growth on this front, spelling yet more trouble for industry.



Finally March saw an upturn in gold prices—by 4.4 per cent between 1st and 22nd March. This reduced the declining trend to 6 per cent.

INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION

Growth of Items in November, 1985

	% Growth
Cement Machinery	127.9
Synthetic Rubber	88.7
Ferro-Alloys	44.7
Watches & Clocks	43.7
Newsprint	26.8
Airconditioners & Refrigerators	19.9
Beverage Industry	17.9
Storage Batteries	13.1
Cosmetics	12.6
Fertilisers	12.4
Artificial Leather & Oil Cloth	9.6
Pens & Pencils	8.5
Railway Rolling Stock	6.6
Linolium	5.4
Iron & Steel	5.4
Synthetic Resins & Plastics	5.3
Petroleum & Coal Products	5.3
Man-Made Fibres	4.3
Drugs & Pharmaceuticals	3.3
Tobacco Manufacture	2.2
Mining & Quarrying	2.0
Jute Machinery	1.8
Paper & Straw Board	1.7
Organic Chemicals	1.7
Mining Machinery	0.5
Paper	0.4
Electricity	0.3
Jute Textiles	-0.1
Electrical Lamps	-0.2
Tea	-0.9
Power-Driven Pumps	-1.8
Cotton & Blended Mixed Fabrics	-2.0
Non-Ferrous Basic Metal Industries	-2.1
Textile Machinery	-2.5
Motor Cars	-3.4
Chemical & Pharmaceutical Machinery	-3.6
Grain Mill Products	-3.6
Electrical Motors	-4.3
Inorganic Chemicals	-4.4
Razor Baldes	-4.5
Internal Combustion Engines	-4.8
Hurricane Lanterns	-5.1
Soaps & Glycerine	-5.3
Paints & Varnishes	-5.5
Explosives	-5.5
Iron & Steel Structurals	-6.1

Of the 86 series considered, 28 of them with a total weight of 43.8389 had a positive growth and 58 of them with a total weight of 44.137 had a negative growth

SELECTED INDICATORS

	1986	1985
Petroleum Refinery Products
Thousand Tonnes, February	3520	3055
Fertiliser
Thousand Tonnes, February	481	437
Thermal Plant Load Factor
Percentage, February	57.6	54.6
Revenue Earning Goods Traffic
Million Tonnes, February	22.07	19.25
Rail Movement
Net Tonnes Kms, February	14291	14525

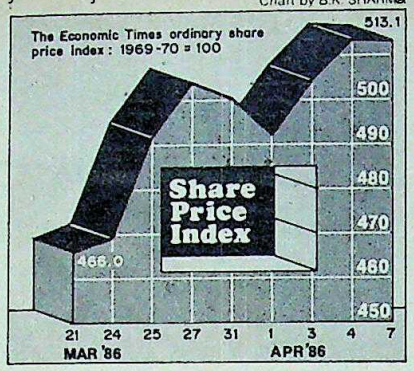
Compiled by THE POLICY GROUP/ICIM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

Sunny Days



OPTIMISM reigns again on the stock-market. Following the precipitous crash immediately after the budget, shares rallied last fortnight in the wake of the tax concessions and modifications announced by the finance minister. Most important for the market, the reinstating of the tax concession on inter-corporate dividends removed the danger of the market getting destabilised by companies disinvesting in the Unit Trust. Some other budgetary proposals remained untouched, notably the new laws on investment allowance and the capitalisation of interest. But the market was visibly cheered. The President of the Calcutta Stock Exchange, S.L. Bardhan, described the tax concessions as "a step in the right direction which will go a long way in regaining investors' confidence in the share market", and gains were notched up on almost every major trading counter.

The recovery carried upward the prices of automobile companies like Bajaj Auto and Telco, textile units like Century Spinning and Bombay Dyeing, engineering units like Blue Star, Bharat Forge, Kirloskar Cummins and Larsen & Toubro, and pharmaceutical and chemical shares like Bayer, Glaxo and Ranbaxy.

Good corporate results helped the recovery along, with Reliance climbing by Rs 23 to Rs 323 following a hike in the dividend and the announcement that the Government had cleared the company's project for manufacturing TV glass shells. Escorts rose by Rs 11 to Rs 87 following improved profits, and Tata Steel shot up by Rs 210 to Rs 1,310 following the announcement of record production. The relaxation on inter-corporate dividends will particularly help a company like ITC, which rallied by Rs 9 to Rs 72.50. Finally, the financial institutions resumed their buying, thus further bolstering the new bullish mood.

Nevertheless, the recovery is only partial. In fact, the majority of shares are only slightly higher than the lowest points that they have touched this year: clearly, the recovery has a long way to go before there can be another boom on a market which was rattled considerably by the budget.

Also, several imponderables remain. For one thing, companies might be happy to claim the higher rates of depreciation for energy-saving assets acquired, but if blocks of assets are to be written down at the proposed rates of between 33.3 and 50 per cent depreciation, companies might not have enough surplus left over to hand out generous dividends. In the final analysis, however, last fortnight's mood on the market was in sharp contrast to the bearishness that prevailed earlier. And the fresh cheer should be expected to carry forward into the new fortnight.

ACTIVE STOCKS

	1986 HIGH	1986 LOW	CLOSE 7.4.86	Change in Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	45.00	26.00	32.25	1.50 +
Associated Cement	389.00	236.00	249.00	9.00 +
Atlas Copco	92.50	71.00	71.00	2.00 –
Associated Bearings	990.00	730.00	750.00	10.00 +
Avery India	146.00	103.00	118.00	4.00 +
Bajaj Auto	2775.00	1950.00	2375.00	175.00 +
Baroda Rayon	490.00	315.00	360.00	30.00 +
Bata India	82.50	65.50	69.00	1.00 +
Bayer	680.00	445.00	515.00	15.00 +
Bharat Forge	86.00	48.00	62.00	4.00 +
Birla Jute	97.00	42.90	51.00	7.75 +
Blow Plast	160.00	98.00	111.50	13.50 +
Blue Star	110.00	75.00	85.00	10.00 +
Bombay Dyeing	120.00	77.00	84.00	5.00 +
Brooke Bond	96.75	74.00	93.00	9.00 +
Ceat Tyres	520.00	240.00	410.00	10.00 +
Century Spinning	1690.00	1220.00	1355.00	125.00 +
Chloride India	122.00	91.00	100.00	5.00 +
Citurgia	65.00	43.00	47.00	1.00 +
Colgate	262.50	200.00	225.00	20.00 +
Cyanamid	100.00	70.00	72.50	7.50 -
DCM	58.50	36.00	41.00	2.00 +
Dunlop	74.50	49.75	68.25	3.75 +
Elecon	117.50	80.00	95.00	9.00 +
Escorts	94.00	69.00	87.00	11.00 +
Food Specialities	285.00	215.00	270.00	55.00 +
Garware Nylon	61.50	36.00	43.00	6.00 +
Glaxo	87.00	62.00	71.00	5.50 +
G.E. Shipping	36.00	22.50	25.00	1.00 +
Gujarat St Fertilisers	1700.00	925.00	1415.00	180.00 +
Gwalior Rayon	88.00	59.00	74.00	13.00 +
Hindustan Lever	163.00	124.00	150.00	22.00 +
Hindustan Motors	128.50	52.60	54.00	48.00 –
Hind.Dorr	505.00	380.00	440.00	50.00 +
Indian Explosives	84.50	64.50	73.00	7.00 +
Indian Hotels	157.00	115.00	135.00	15.00 +
Indian Organic	90.00	63.00	72.50	7.50 +
Indian Rayon	151.00	100.00	122.00	19.00 +
Indrol	390.00	200.00	305.00	95.00 +
Ingersoll-Rand	480.00	360.00	435.00	42.50 +
ITC	76.50	53.00	72.50	9.00 +
J.K. Synthetics	132.00	90.00	116.00	23.00 +
Kinetic Engineering	325.00	220.00	285.00	45.00 +
Kirloskar Cummins	715.00	647.50	595.00	47.50 +
Lakme	195.00	120.00	137.50	10.00 +
Larsen & Toubro	204.00	157.00	179.50	17.50 +
Lipton	69.00	46.50	64.00	6.00 +
Lohia Machines	70.00	44.00	55.00	9.00 +
Madura Coats	92.00	71.00	87.50	11.00 +
Mahindra & Mahindra	86.00	52.00	62.00	8.00 +
Motor Industries	910.00	605.00	740.00	130.00 +
National Organic	777.50	530.00	640.00	65.00 +
Nirlon	77.00	48.00	51.00	4.00 –
Orkay Silk Mills	167.00	120.00	161.00	32.00 +
Peico Electronics	104.50	56.00	56.00	2.25 –
Pfizer	125.00	78.00	86.00	1.50 +
Premier Auto	745.00	555.00	682.50	107.50 +
Ranbaxy	160.00	105.00	135.00	30.00 +
Raymond	97.00	72.00	81.00	6.00 +
Reliance Industries	367.00	226.00	323.00	21.00 +
Shriram Fibres	88.00	62.50	67.00	4.50 +
SPIC	184.00	129.50	157.00	25.00 +
Tata Steel	1440.00	1090.00	1310.00	210.00 +
Telco	910.00	575.00	680.00	90.00 +
Vulcan Laval	162.50	85.00	120.00	12.50 +
Wimco	98.00	54.00	67.00	11.00 +

WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

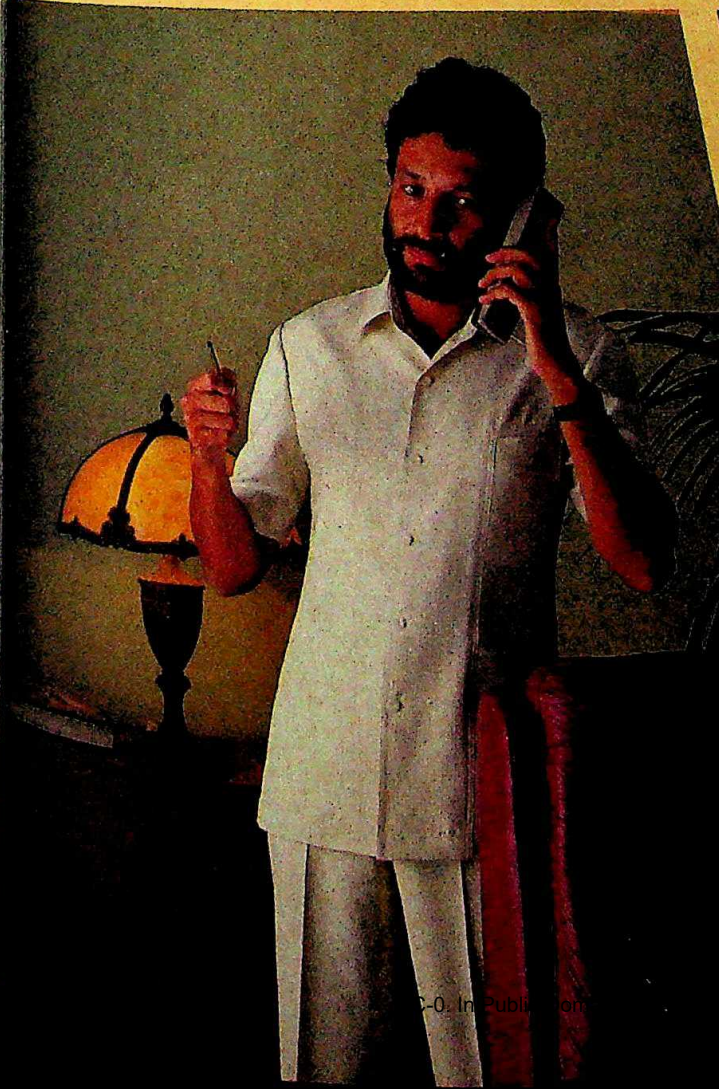
COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	Selling Rates Rs	T.T. Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	9.0923	8.9962
Austria	Schilling	100	75.8137	74.6821
Bahrain	Dinar	1	32.7430	32.6919
Bangladesh	Taka	100	41.4730	41.2210
Canada	Dollar	1	9.1059	9.0252
Denmark	Kroner	1	1.4433	1.4148
Egypt	Pound	1	14.7913	14.6010
France	Franc	1	1.6743	1.6489
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	1.6150	1.1623
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	1.0910	1.0830
Iran	Rial	100	15.1770	15.1030
Italy	Lira	100	0.7730	0.7591
Japan	Yen	100	7.6245	6.9579
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.7530	0.7450
Kuwait	Dinar	1	42.4030	42.3830
Malaysia	Dollar	1	4.7232	4.6518
Mauritius	Rupee	1	0.8930	0.8940
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.5830	0.5700
Netherlands	Guilder	1	4.7080	4.6528
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7730	0.7619
Singapore	Dollar	1	5.7635	5.7064
Spain	Peseta	1	0.0830	0.0815
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4501	0.4430
Sweden	Kroner	1	1.6922	1.6771
Switzerland	Franc	1	6.3478	6.2871
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.7810	0.7730
Thailand	Baht	100	47.2130	47.1910
UK	Pound	1	18.3166	18.1953
USA	Dollar	1	12.6500	12.5400
UAE	Dirham	1	3.3480	3.3299
USSR	Rouble	1	17.4010	17.2532
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	5.3390	5.2883

These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo Limited, New Delhi and quoted between the banks on 7.4.86.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitiz[illegible]aj[illegible]dation Chennai and eGangotri

COOL, COMFORTABLE, ELEGANT... THE SUMMERWEAR FOR THE CONNOISSEUR



Unmistakably...

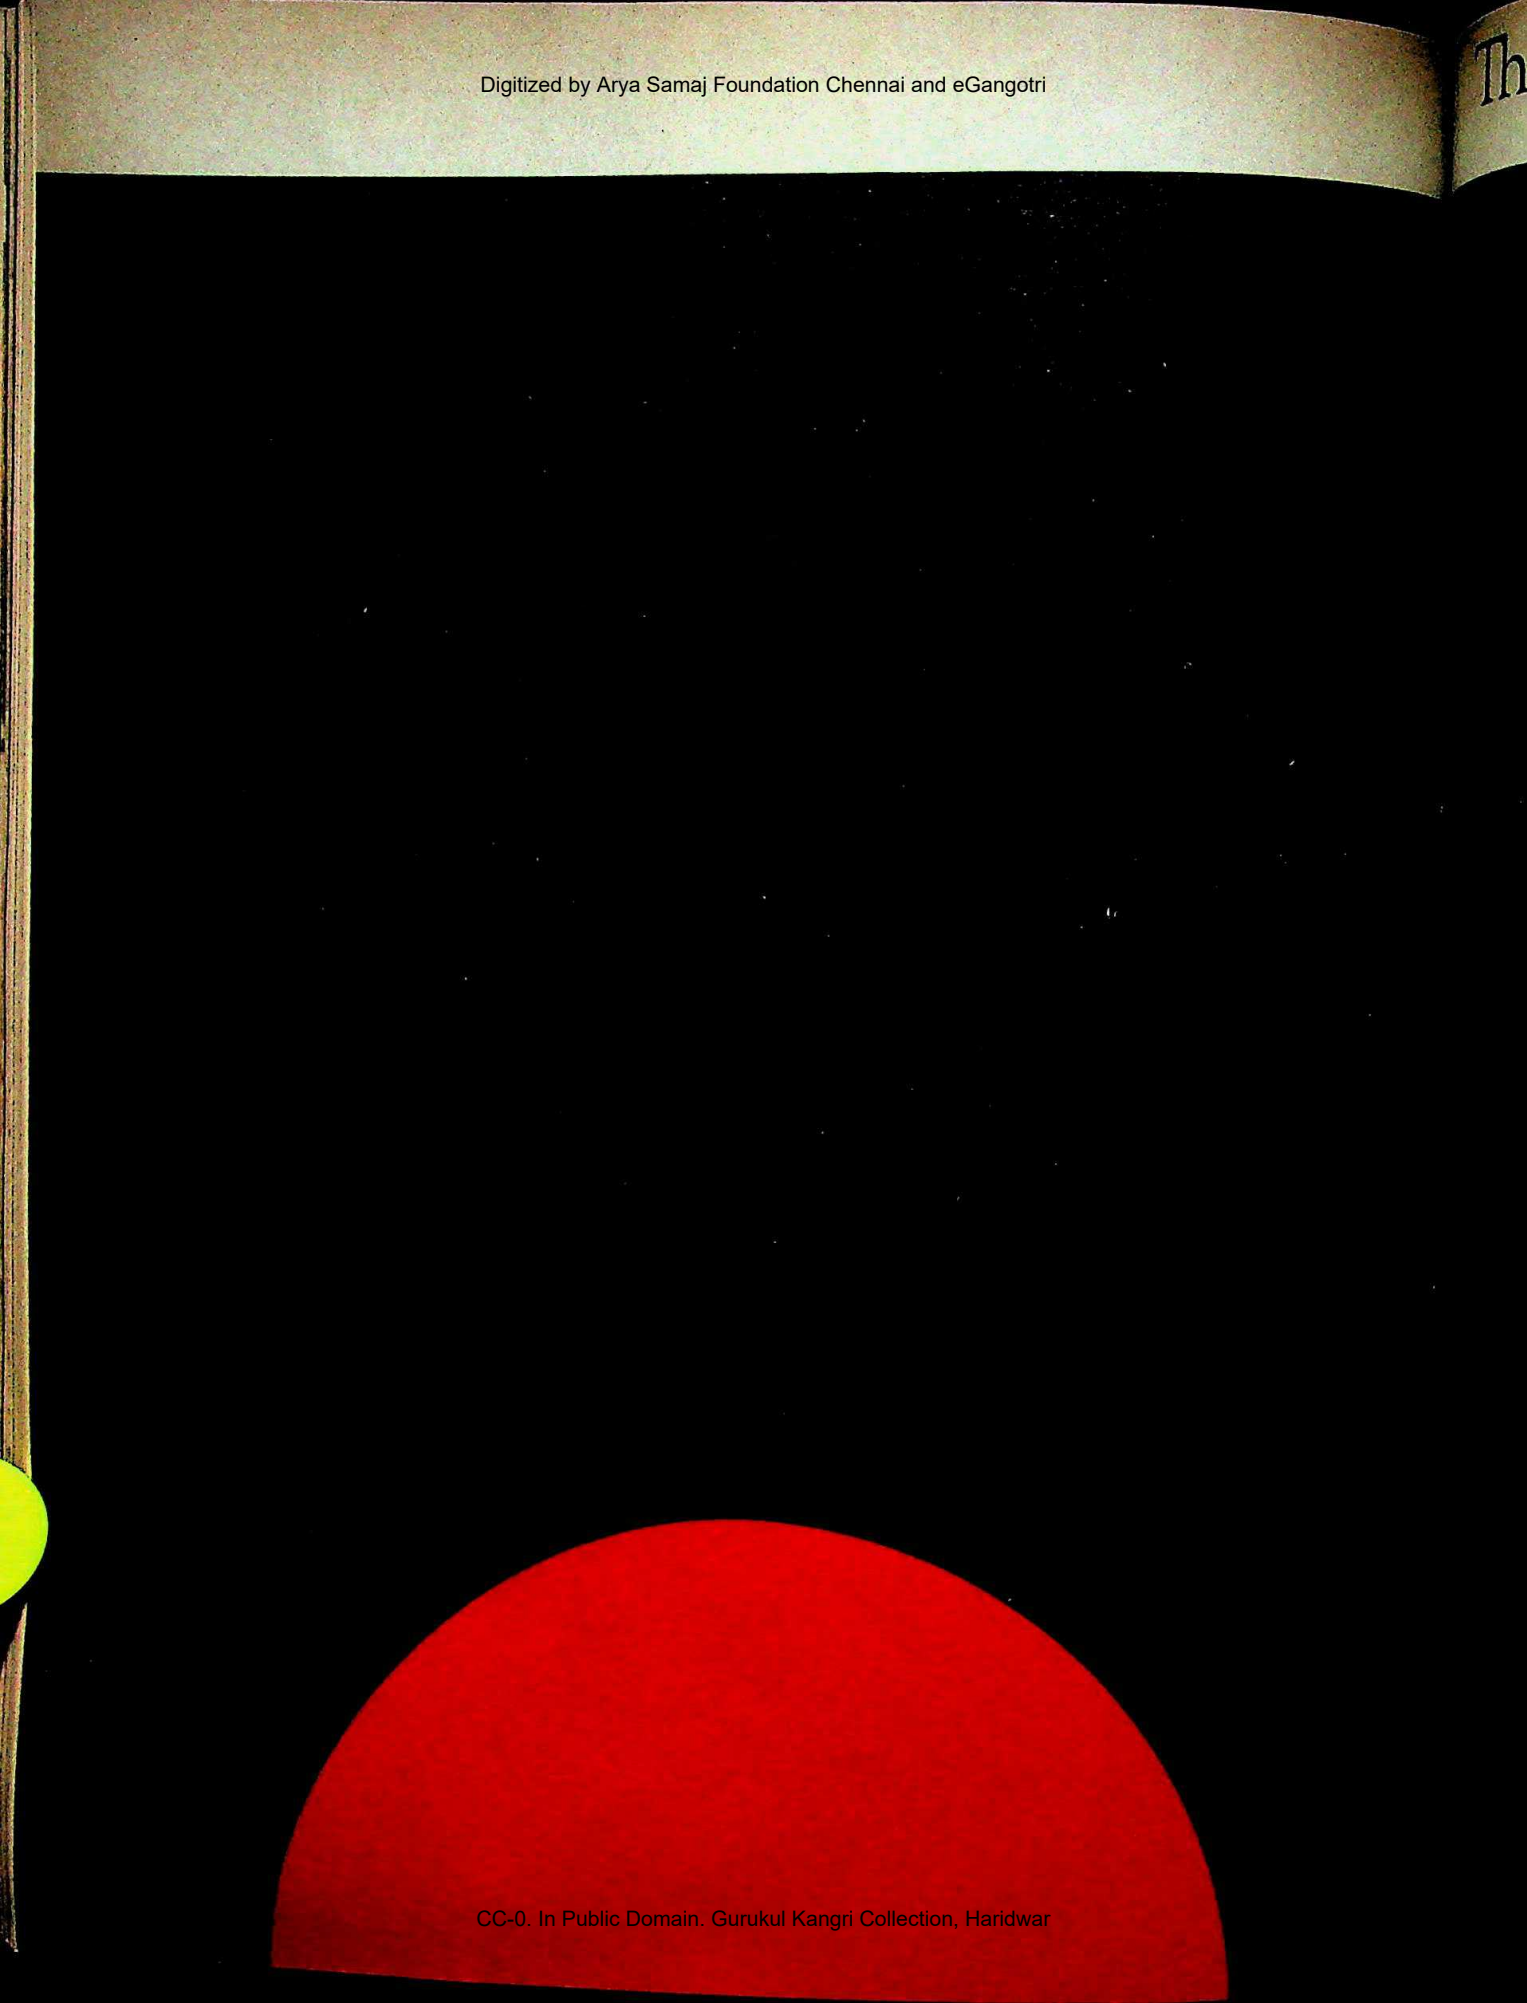
DIGJAM

GOLD CREST, SNOW FLAKE, FLAMING GRACE, PALM BEACH, MONARCH, ELEGANCE

AJAX/DWM/86 S

CC-0. In Public Domain. [illegible] Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

The greatest cooling power under the sun.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Most air conditioners work well when it isn't too hot.

But when the mercury climbs over 40°C, they start to wilt from heat exhaustion.

And by 46°C, there's just one machine in India still going strong.

Amtrex.

The only one specially engineered to handle extreme heat.

In Delhi, for instance, only Amtrex survives peak summer without the help of a water tank.

And in cooler cities, Amtrex takes on the summer like a wrestler lifting a teacup. The largest rooms are cooled in a matter of minutes.

Space does not permit us to spell out the technical evidence. But in brief: Extra large cooling coils. Larger air flow. Oscillating louvres. A perfectly balanced air conditioning cycle.

And for the first time in India: Gas charging on an automatic machine. A powder-coated body for corrosion-resistance. High-precision rippled fins.

Our sales executive will give you the details.

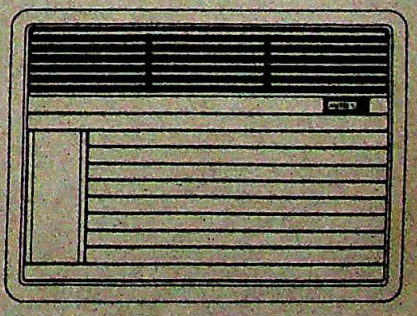
He'll also tell you about our after-sales support: Seven-days-a-week service. Complaints attended to in 24 hours.

And if your machine has to be taken away for repairs, we install a standby.

Amtrex has already found its way into some of India's best addresses: Reliance. Gwalior Rayon. Hoechst. Diners. Bank of India. Escorts. Bank of Baroda. Canara Bank.

If you'd like to add your name to this distinguished list, get in touch with:

Amtrex Ambience Pvt. Ltd. (An enterprise of Lalbhai Industries Consolidated) Rachana, Opp. Bombay Garage, Shahibaug Rd, Ahmedabad 380 004. Tel: 383035. Branches/offices at: Bombay: 233909. Delhi: 5718634. Calcutta: 443988. Madras: 474535. Hyderabad: 236104.



AMTREX

Air conditioners

0.5, 1.0, 1.5 & 2.0 tonnes

Also: reversible and split units

CC-0. Mumukshu Bhawan Varanasi Collection. Digitized by eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Europe's signpost.

Lufthansa shows the way to Frankfurt and Frankfurt is showing the way to Europe. With excellent connections to 72 European destinations and to 17 destinations in North America.

Lufthansa
German Airlines

Book your flight through an appointed IATA agent.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE DEFENCE SERVICES

Day of the Soldier

THIS IS the story of a soldier who refused to die or fade away. Condemned to an early grave a decade ago, by his own failing health as well as the policies of the Indian Army, he has battled not only the disease but also the army establishment. His victory—a testament to his courage—is certain to result in a radical alteration in some questionable rules and regulations of the defence services. No fewer than 157 army officers stand to benefit from the legal triumph of one officer who would not give up.

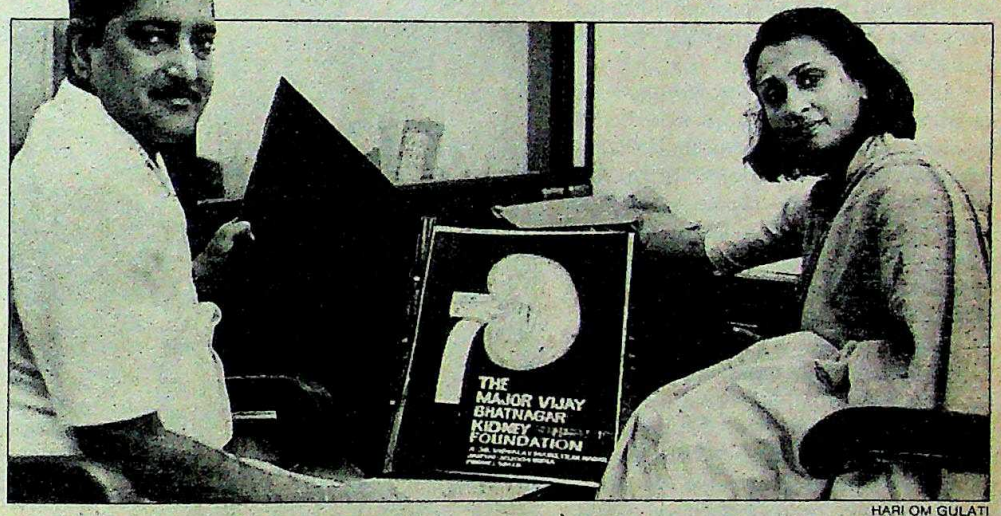
Ten years ago, Major Vijay Bhatnagar was a 35-year-old officer in the Bombay Sappers, in charge of constructing roads in high border areas. When he began to suffer from repeated bouts of nausea, dizziness, and a swelling of the joints, he was diagnosed as suffering from failure of the kidneys. After keeping him under observation for a year, the army told him that he was being "boarded out" on grounds of medical disability—on a P-5 rating.

After 14 years of service, Bhatnagar was put on a disability pension of Rs 160 a month. "Basically I was told to go back home and die," he said. He got himself admitted to a government hospital in Chandigarh for dialysis. The hospital agreed only because Bhatnagar's father was ready to donate a kidney. But soon after this, his father had a heart attack and was no longer in a condition to donate a kidney. With no donor in sight, the hospital ceased the dialysis and discharged Bhatnagar.

Since private dialysis is a costly affair—as much as Rs 500 per session—Bhatnagar turned once again to the army. But the army responded that it was not its policy to dialyse patients with chronic kidney disease. His wife, Asha, then went knocking at the doors of every minister and senior general she could find. For a while, Bhatnagar was admitted for dialysis but because there was no donor, he was again discharged.

However, a way had been found. With the money Asha had raised from regiments, relatives and friends, and by selling her jewellery, Bhatnagar was taken to New York Downstate Medical Centre—under oxygen in a comatose state. Says Asha: "When he arrived in New York, he was 15 lbs heavier with water retention, his eyes were like slits. And he had lost hope."

Availability of kidneys is not a big problem in the US. Within 24 hours, a kidney from an accident victim in Virginia, 500 km away, was flown for Bhatnagar. The operation was successful. Six months later, just as they were packing to leave, he had a seizure. The kidney had failed. He was rushed to hospital, the kidney removed and he was back on dialysis.



HARI OM GULATI

Bhatnagar and wife Asha: battling the establishment

Even as the doctors searched for another kidney, they discovered that Bhatnagar had contacted hepatitis. They predicted this would take a year to clear and that no transplant would be possible before then.

Bhatnagar had neither the money nor the will to survive another year of dialysis. But after some fretting and despairing, a determined Asha plunged into money-raising again. As if by a miracle, the hepatitis cleared up within four months. In the month that followed a new kidney was found and transplanted. By 1979, it was functioning well and Bhatnagar came home in 1980.

Back home, he had problems finding a job as a transplant patient is often treated as a liability. Steadily over a period of time he and Asha, with loans from friends and banks, started a travel business and beauty parlour. They also started the Vijay Bhatnagar Kidney Foundation in Jaipur, to educate Indians about kidney programmes, lobby for changes in the laws governing donations, and provide donated dialysis machines to medical institutions.

But Bhatnagar had some unfinished business. "I was always conscious," he says, "that the army should make medical treatment for diseases such as mine a must for servicemen. There was a larger fight ahead which I had to plunge into. The army had to be stopped from boarding out people with kidney disease to their deaths."

Bhatnagar took the unusual step in 1981 of filing a writ petition against the army in the high court. "I didn't know that I even stood a chance," he says. Five years later, the court ruled in his favour, holding the army order discharging Bhatnagar illegal and unlawful and should be quashed. It ordered his reinstatement, with payment of full compensation as well as back pay due to him.

The army appealed for a stay but its appeal was summarily dismissed in March 1985. The army then appealed to the Supreme Court, which sustained the verdict of the lower courts. The verdict could now apply to 157 other officers who have been boarded out with similar medical ratings.

Bhatnagar was recently reinstated to his rank in the army under a special presidential order. So far, however, the army has not given him his back pay and benefits ordered by the courts. But for a man who has battled death and despair—and won—it can only be a matter of time before he emerges triumphant again.

—INDERJIT BADHWAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

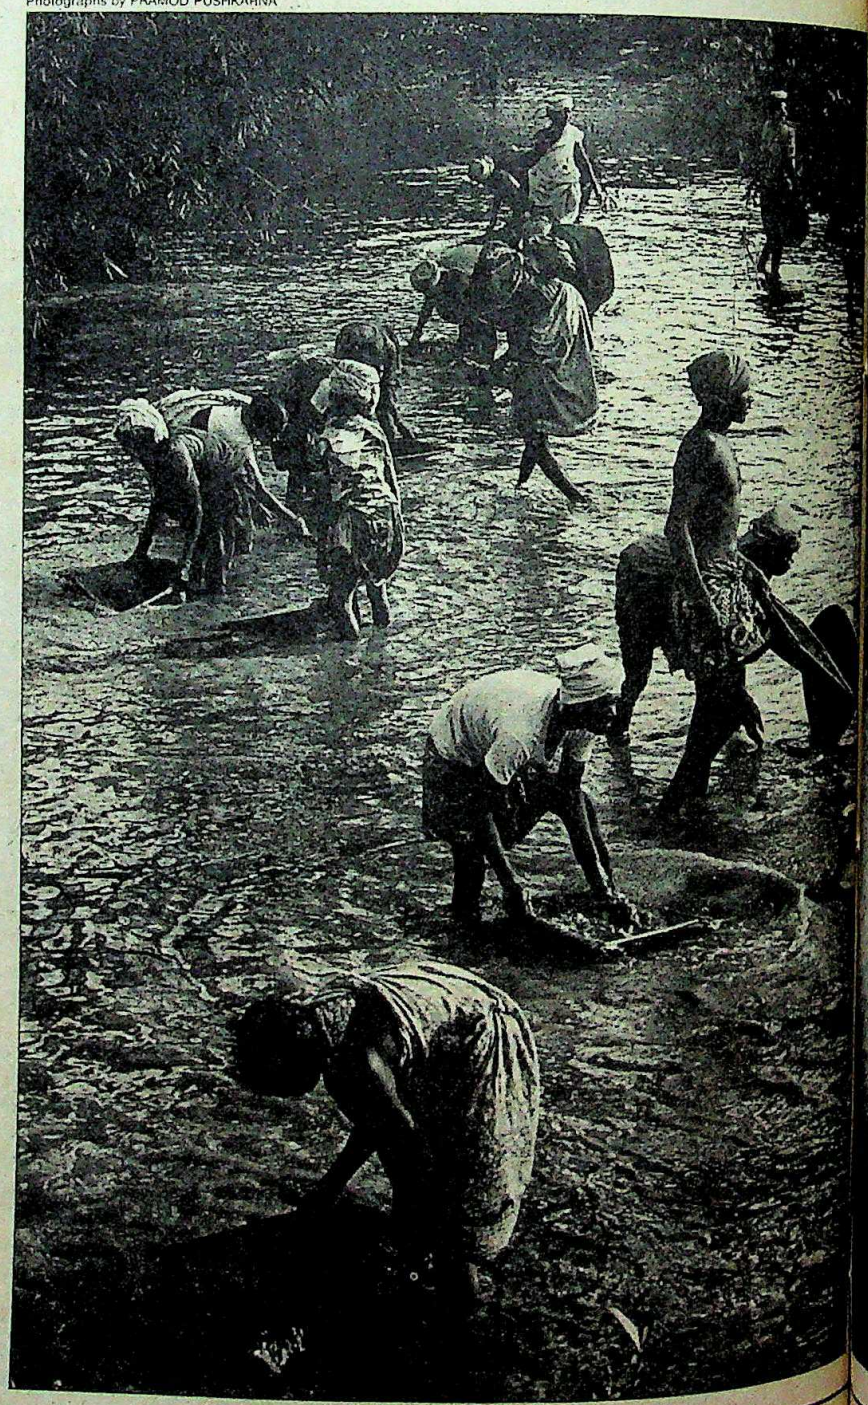
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BASTAR

Manna from the Earth

THE DISTRICT of Bastar in Madhya Pradesh is known best for its tribals and its backwardness. Yet parts of it have turned into an unlikely El Dorado. The discovery of tin, an expensive (and in India, rare) metal, has not only introduced a new occupation but has changed the face of the local economy. But prosperity has brought in its wake problems of environment and smuggling, as well as the generation of black money. Senior Correspondent SREEKANT KHANDEKAR and photographer PRAMOD PUSHKARNA travelled around the areas. Khandekar's report:

Photographs by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



THE WEATHER is cool and yet the dark bodies glisten with sweat in the early morning sun. The work is back-breaking and yet some of the tribals have come from as far as 200 km to try their hand at something they have never done before. Indeed, most of them had never even heard of tin until they came in search of it.

Mining, even open cast mining, is not easy with primitive implements. The quarries are between six and 30 feet deep and several tribals, still learning this skill, have been buried alive. There is earth to be transported to the stream, where the womenfolk stand bent over in muddy water for hours on end, panning the soil over and over again to get a handful of tin ore. But that fistful represents the kind of money that these impoverished tribals have never earned before: one kg of tin sells for anywhere between Rs 250 and Rs 300. Several thousand tribals are employed in this new occupation across central Bastar; and though no precise figures are available, the value of the metal mined runs annually into several crore rupees.

Confides Sahadeo, a tribal of village Katekalyan, who is a member of the local Janpad panchayat: "No tribal will ever tell

Map by B.K. SHARMA

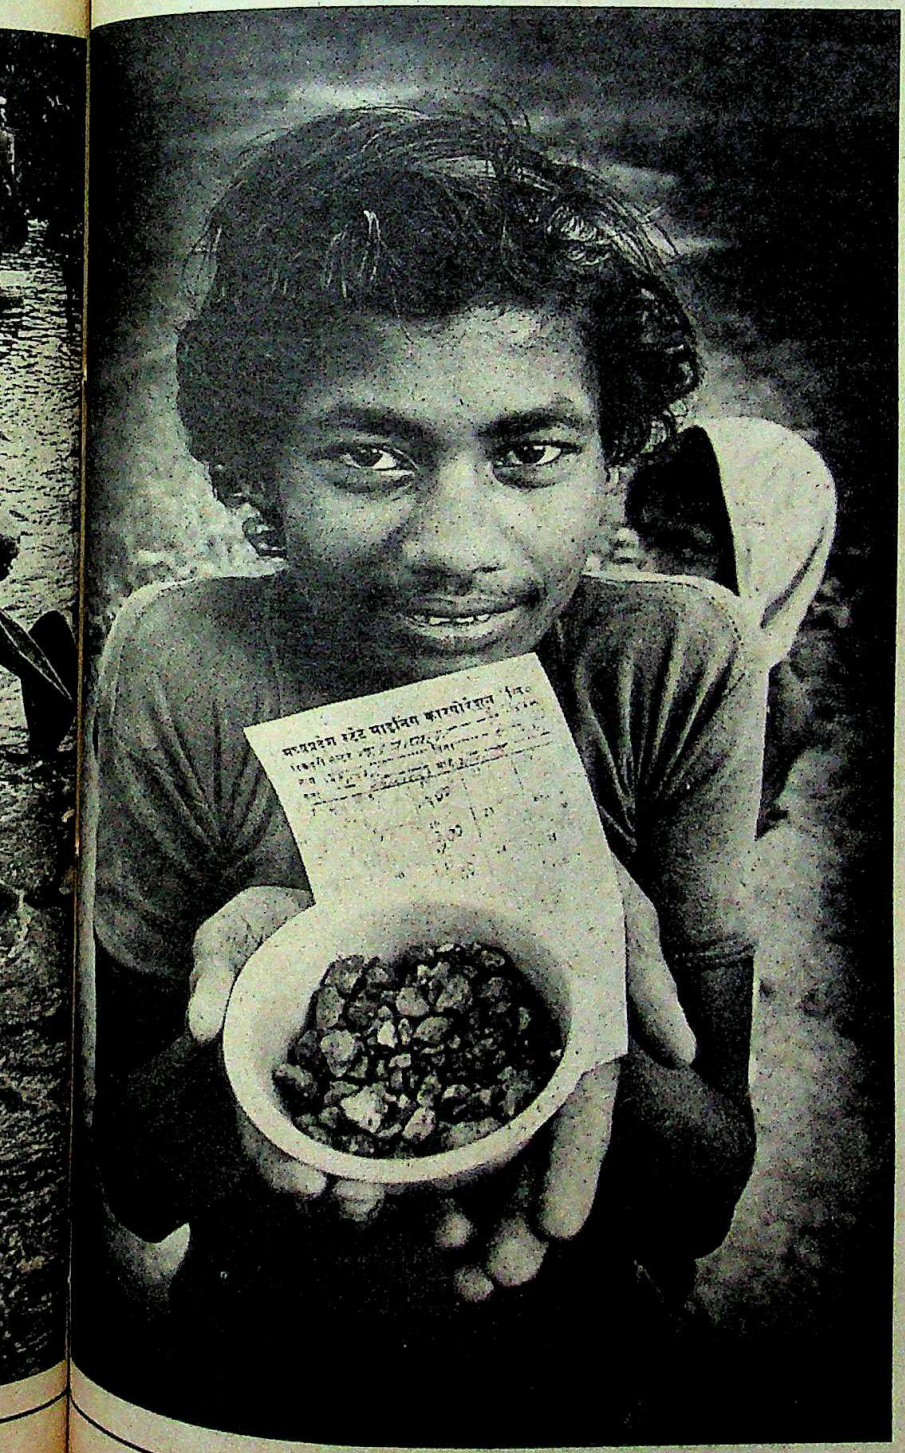
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

...how much he earns: everyone is scared to give the correct picture. But take it from me: there are several who have made as much as a few hundred rupees on a lucky day."

For the tribals—and even more so for the traders who live off them—it has been manna from earth. According to a farmer in Pushpal village, close to the Orissa border, it is hard to get labourers to work in the fields for even Rs 20 a day, which is a fantastic wage in the interior of a tribal area anywhere in the country. But wages have more than trebled in recent years. Five years ago, Pushpal farmers sent 1,600 kg of surplus paddy to the rice mill; today they send none, but can instead afford to import 3,000 kg of rice. Everyone is out mining tin, and agricultural production has consequently suffered.

(From far left) Panning for tin; a day's reported output; molten tin at the MPSMC centre: new prosperity



Recalls Maharaja Tiwari, a trader from Uttar Pradesh who has been settled in Pushpal for three decades now: "Twenty years ago, when I bought a bicycle and transistor, literally thousands of tribals turned up to gawk at them. Today most households have them along with watches and, in some cases, even two-in-ones. The village has changed dramatically in the last few years."

Tin was first discovered in the mid-'70s, and the Madhya Pradesh State Mining Corporation (MPSMC) took up mining in 1978-79. But its record has been dismal. Between 1980 and the end of 1985 the MPSMC mined only 56 tonnes of ore, purchased another 89 tonnes and got just 38 tonnes of tin metal. This is a small fraction of the actual production of ore, the bulk of which is being smuggled out by tribals and traders.

When the Corporation started its operations, it first hired local tribals at Rs 9 per day and expected them to come up with a minimum of 300 gms of ore daily. But the labourers soon realised that they stood to gain much more if they worked for themselves, and the illegal mining of tin began. Says MPSMC's Managing Director C.K. Chaurasia: "Even 40 or 50 chowkidars could not have prevented this since the area is so vast."

While the state Government's failure to evolve a clear policy has been a major reason for the current mess, the existing problems have also been compounded by the nature of the metal as well as the terrain—forested and hilly with a low population density—in which the ore is found. First, the melting point of tin is low, around 230 degrees centigrade, so that almost anyone with a fire (and common sense) can heat the ore and extract the molten metal at home. Second, tin is a compact metal so that it takes very little space and can be smuggled out easily. Says Bastar's Superintendent of Police C.P.G.Unni: "Even a motorcyclist can take out 50 kg or more in a bag without anyone finding out."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Meanwhile, the Forest Conservation Act was introduced in 1980 and it specified that forest areas could not be used for any purpose other than afforestation without the prior permission of the Centre. The state Forest Department, therefore, compelled the Corporation to stop work, but the mining itself carried on. The only thing that changed was that the Corporation bought ore from the tribals and no questions were asked about whether they had dug up a forest area or not.

Several tribals were prosecuted for illegal mining, but since the Corporation was unable—or unwilling—to stop either them or the smugglers completely, the state Government issued a notification in 1984 permitting tribals to mine tin in the district but demanding that they sell the ore only to the Corporation.

This was too much to expect. The Corporation paid only Rs 40 per kg of ore, compared to the Rs 60 offered by a smuggler. And so, according to local estimates only 3 to 10 per cent of the total ore mined actually goes to the Corporation. Last month, in Korapal, which is one of the MPSMC's 10 purchase centres in the interior, tribals were selling the Corporation only 100 to 200 gms of ore at the end of the day's work: clearly only a fraction of what they had mined. The Corporation has now hiked its offer to Rs 50 per kg from April, but even this maybe inadequate. Indeed, the dangers of trying to physically force the tribals to sell the ore at lower prices became apparent in December last year when a corporation employee, Narayan Singh Jhala, was axed to death when he tried to perform his duty too enthusiastically.

The traders have come like homing pigeons to where the money is. Tongpal village, adjoining the tin belt on a state highway, consisted of a handful of shacks before the '80s: now it has several dozen shops. Again, Pushpal village has not only half a dozen grocery stores but five tailor shops as well, because the men think it is stylish to get clothes stitched rather than wear ready-mades. And the women are increasingly discarding their traditional cotton sarees, available for Rs 15, to wear nylons sarees for which they are willing to pay anything from Rs 60 to Rs 125.

And prices have soared. Egg consumption has multiplied manifold and in Pushpal an egg costs a rupee. A bottle of mahua , the local liquor, sells for Rs 5, compared to a rupee in the late '70s. In Katekalyan, another village where the MPSMC has its purchase and smelting centre, rice costs twice as much as five years ago, and a chicken sells for an incredible Rs 50 or more. Many tribals have preferred to spend their money buying gold chains.

The tribal seems to have scant respect for the money that has come his way, and banks do not seem to have enticed him. Stories abound of money being shoved into coarse gunny bags and kept at home; of wads of notes being roughly thrust into the rafters of their huts, only to be eaten by termites; of bus conductors being at their wits' end to give change for big denomination currency notes. The tribal tradition of living only for the present and not worrying about the morrow has not changed, not yet.

AND THE trader has taken full advantage of the tribal's ignorance and his carefree attitude to life and money. Says a shopkeeper from Sultanpur in Uttar Pradesh who made Bastar his home only recently: "I cheat, everybody cheats. The tribals are simple: if they like something, they'll pay anything for it. We know that once we get them interested, they are hooked." He grins and adds: "I pay one-and-a-half rupees for a haircut here. But I know that if a barber talks convincingly, he can get a tribal to pay Rs 10 or more after telling him that he is actually getting a filmi haircut."

"No tribal will ever tell you how much he earns. But take it from me: there are several who have made a few hundred rupees a day."

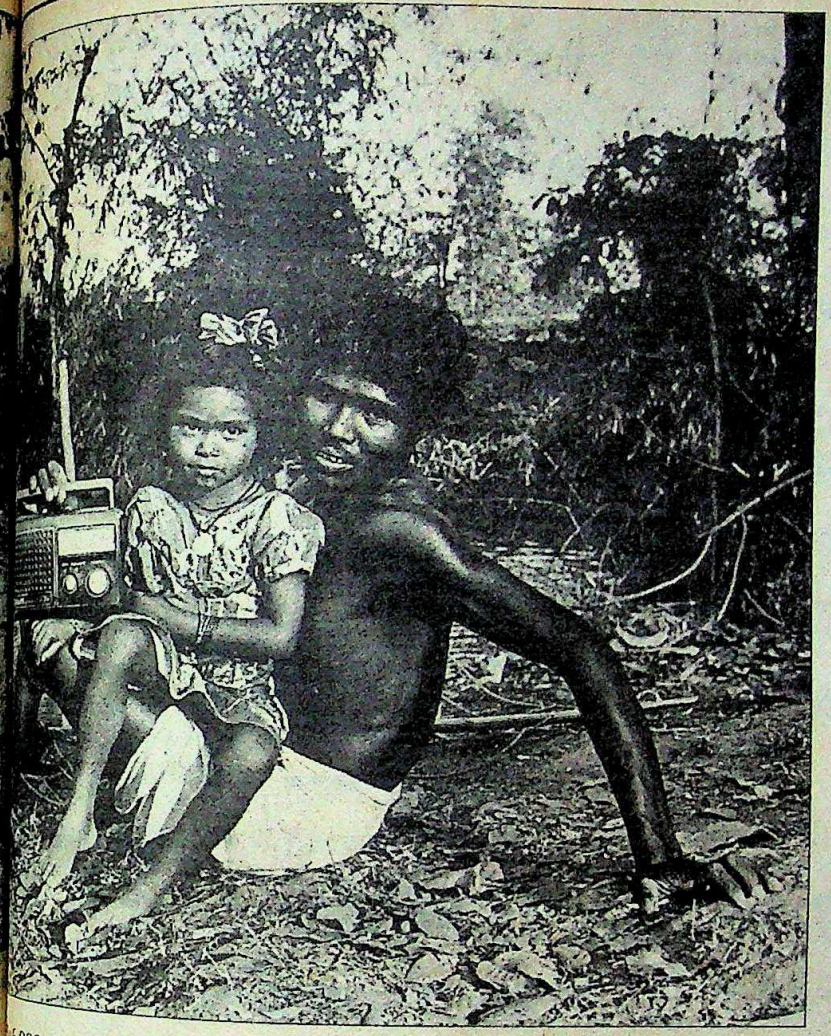
SAHADEO
member, Katekalyan panchayat

Tin-rich tribals are sold third-grade watches with dials that carry the name of well-known companies; a cheap transistor that goes for Rs 80 in the district headquarters of Jagdalpur sells for Rs 300 less than 150 km away; tribals are known to pay heavy charges to repair their dead transistors, when all that has happened is that the batteries have run down. Maharaja Tiwari narrates an incident in which he intervened to abuse and tell a trader that enough was enough: a shopkeeper had charged a tribal Rs 65 for the repair of a torch that cost only Rs 40 when it was new! Says Tiwari: "The traders, particularly from Jagdalpur, have made the real money."

There is enormous loss in allowing the unrestricted mining that has been going on: Both tantalum and noibium, found along with tin, are lost with the slag that illegal miners discard after drawing out tin. The state Government has been losing

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Tribal with transistor: dramatic change in fortune

...5,000 per tonne of royalty that it could ...e secured in systematic mining. And ...e haphazard excavation has meant ...mage to trees which are uprooted, cut ...r burnt to make place for quarries. ...reover, huge quantities of coal are ...quired to melt tin. And in the interior, ...e simplest way to get coal is to burn ...es, particularly sal, which works best. ...extract one kg of tin metal one requires ...kg of sal wood coal as compared to 18 ...g of coal of any other species of wood. ...w many trees have been lost thus and ...w many more will go this way in the ...ture is anybody's guess.

Apart from this, the tin-mining has ...nerated huge quantities of black ...ney, and corruption in all the wings of ...e State Government is rampant: officials ...the police, forest and mining wings each ...cuse the other of turning a blind eye to ...e smuggling. The police seized tin worth ...18.50 lakh being smuggled out in 1984 ...d metal valued at Rs 20.37 lakh in 1985. ...t even police officials admit that this ...mounts to practically nothing.

When the thanedar of Kukanar recently seized 185 kg of the metal, worth roughly Rs 50,000, he was awarded a meagre Rs 100: clearly, inaction is far more lucrative. Admits Unni reluctantly: "It is true that the temptations for the police are great. I have suggested to the state Government that like in Customs, 2 per cent of the catch should go as a reward to the police officer so that he has an incentive to perform."

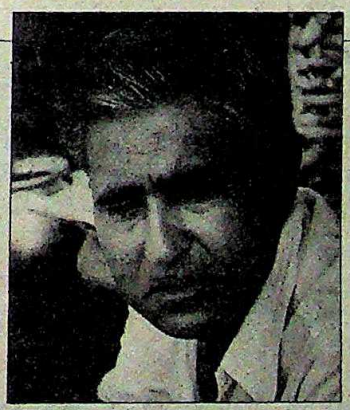
In the initial stages, the metal was smuggled north to Raipur, situated on the Bombay-Calcutta rail route, and south by road towards Hyderabad. But Unni says that now the tribals normally carry the ore across the river Sabari into adjoining Orissa, where too some tin ore exists. Six months ago, about 5,000 kg of tin was seized in Malkangiri in Orissa, a major smelting and despatch centre, but such successes are rare. Tribals cross the Sabari anywhere in a 70-km long stretch and are hard to apprehend, even if the police is really interested.

Argues one police official: "The real culprit is this notification which permits tribals to mine. Even if we catch them carrying ore towards the border, that is no crime; it becomes an offence only if we actually get them in the act of crossing into Orissa. Moreover, we can never snare the real money-makers, the non-tribals, because they themselves never handle either the metal or the ore."

Unless the state Government takes a clear-cut policy decision on the tin question, no concrete action is possible at the district level, where far too many officials and local politicians of all hues are busy raking in the profits. India imports 2,000 to 2,400 tonnes of tin annually, and there are clear advantages in organising tin mining on a scientific basis in Bastar. But the Mineral Exploration Corporation is still trying to determine the primary deposit, in the rock, while the secondary deposit, just below the soil surface, in Bastar is estimated at 15,000 tonnes of ore. There is talk of the National Mineral Development Corporation joining hands with the Madhya Pradesh Government to mine the metal systematically, but nothing concrete has emerged so far.

Perhaps the Government does not want to take any decision that will make it unpopular with tribals who have chanced upon undreamt of riches. But the chances really are that at the end of it all the tribal, unless he is guided, will end up just as he was at the beginning: poor and cheated.

—SREEKANT KHANDEKAR in Bastar



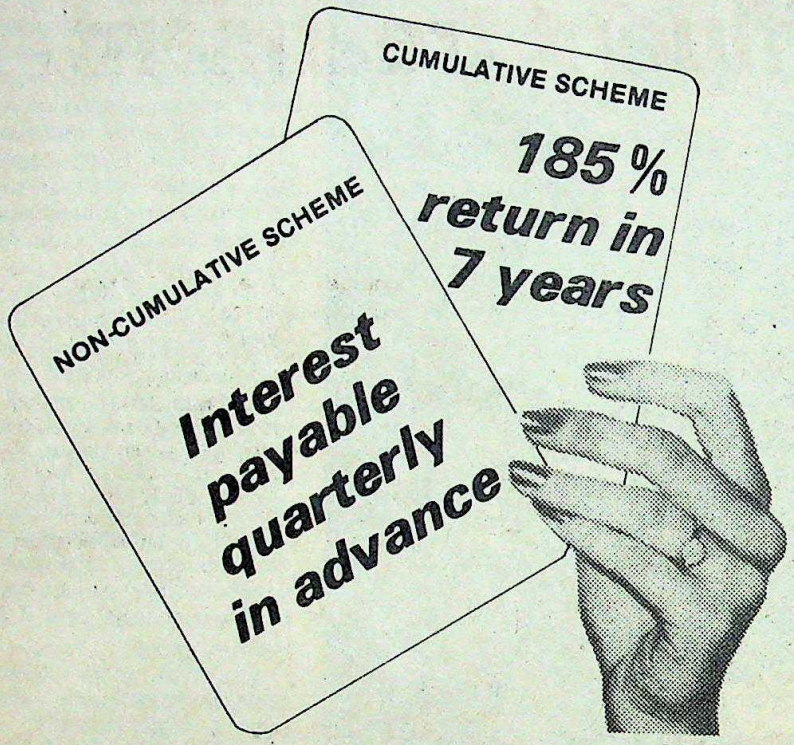
"Twenty years ago, when I bought a bicycle and transistor, thousands of tribals came to gawk at them. Today most households have them."

MAHARAJA TIWARI
trader from Pushpal village

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

You had to work for your money. Now let it work for you.



East India Hotels Secured Debentures

SALIENT FEATURES OF DEBENTURES

☐ Choice of both Cumulative and Non-Cumulative Schemes : The East India Hotels Secured Debentures on Rights basis offer you both Cumulative and Non-Cumulative Schemes.

☐ Interest from day one : 15% interest per annum from the day of realisation of application money.

☐ Quarterly Interest in Advance : 15% interest per annum is payable quarterly in advance.For Cumulative Debentures interest will be cumulated at quarterly rests. Thus a sum of Rs.1,000 invested in East India Hotels Debentures will become Rs.2,851 after 7 years including 5% premium on redemption.

☐ Security : Debentures are fully secured

☐ Liberal Buy-Back and Easy Liquidity : The Company will re-purchase Debentures from any holder upto the face value of Rs.40,000/- provided the Debentures are held continuously for one year. In addition, the Debentures shall be listed at Calcutta, Delhi and Bombay Stock Exchanges.

The East India Hotels Ltd
(A member of The Oberoi Group)
Regd. Office : 4 Mangoe Lane, Calcutta 700 001

PRESSMAN

ISSUE OPENS ON 16TH APRIL 1986 AND CLOSES ON 17TH MAY, 1986

For more details, contact:

Managers to the Issue

Grindlays Bank p.l.c.
Merchant Banking Division
19 Netaji Subhas Road
Calcutta 700001

Creditcapital Finance Corporation Limited
Allahabad Bank Building
Third Floor, Apollo Street
Bombay 400023

Advisors to the Issue

The Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corporation
Merchant Banking Division
Hongkong House
31 B B D Bag, Calcutta 700001

Principal Brokers to the Issue

Amritlal Bajaj & Co.
606 Kailash,
26 Kasturba Gandhi Marg
New Delhi 110001

Brijnath Khandelwal & Co.
13 India Exchange Place
Calcutta 700001

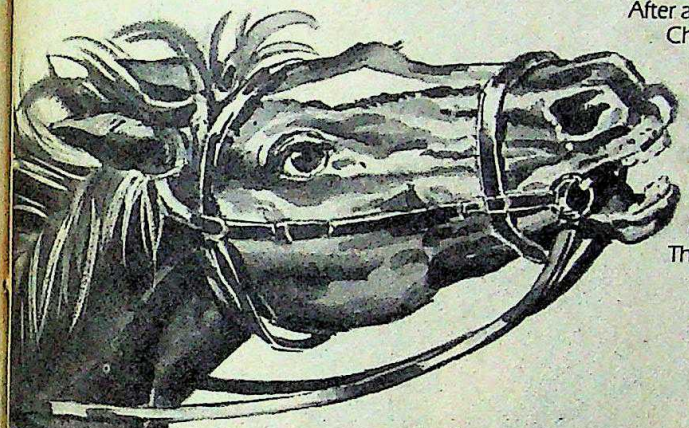
Consultant to the Issue

L.K. Panday
Maharashtra Bank Building
45/47 Apollo Street
Bombay 400023

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Gwalior Rayon selects HGE for effluent treatment.



This horse really appreciates that.

After a strenuous gallop in the ravines of the Chambal, he is always given a cool drink in the Chambal. The river into which many companies send their effluents, including Gwalior Rayon. But Gwalior Rayon's wastewaters are made totally safe by HGE before they reach the river. Safe enough to satisfy the most fastidious pollution control experts — and this horse as well. He only wishes more companies would follow Gwalior Rayon's example. Then the Chambal would be clean and pollution-free again.

HGE — Turnkey Capabilities

HGE (Hydraulic and General Engineers Ltd), a subsidiary of Batliboi, is the only company with turnkey capabilities in industrial effluent treatment. From concept to commissioning. With dependable after-sales service. Since HGE houses all the skills —manufacturing, engineering, contracting— it can keep costs low and guarantee timely execution without cost overruns. HGE is also a leader in Sewage Treatment Plants, trusted by Municipalities and Water Supply and Sewerage Boards the country over.

HGE — Clients

Besides Gwalior Rayon, HGE's other clients for industrial effluent treatment include —

* Maruti Udyog
* Century Pulp & Paper Mills
* Century Spinning * Harihar Polyfibres
* Corn Products * Rashtriya Chemicals & Fertilizers * National Newsprint & Paper Mills * Parle Products
* Bharat Petroleum * Dairies, Sugar Mills and Pharmaceutical Plants

So if you have an effluent treatment problem — just hand it over to HGE. And it becomes HGE's responsibility — totally.

Hydraulic & General Engineers Ltd.
203 Arun Chambers, J. Dadaji Road, Tardeo, Bombay 400 034.
Subsidiary of
Batliboi & Co. Ltd.

HGE. We'll help you keep your reputation clean.

CHAITRA-B BB 231

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KERALA

Private Problems

EDUCATION, Kerala's biggest money-spinning industry, seems to be going into yet another head-spin, sending the private school graph soaring upwards in a controversial spiral. Long a captive in the hands of private educational organisations, the country's most literate state seems to have capitulated completely to their designs this time.

Already 740 private schools have been sanctioned in the state ever since the Karunakaran Government assumed power in 1982, and Education Minister T.M. Jacob appears a man in a tearing hurry to speed up this process, notwithstanding the negative reactions it has spawned in certain quarters.

Fuelling the wrath of the pro-public sector education lobby is a proposed state Government directive ordering the closure of all uneconomic government-run schools with less than 100 students on their rolls. This is likely to throw hundreds of poor students out on the streets; if the order is implemented 400-odd schools will have to shut down.

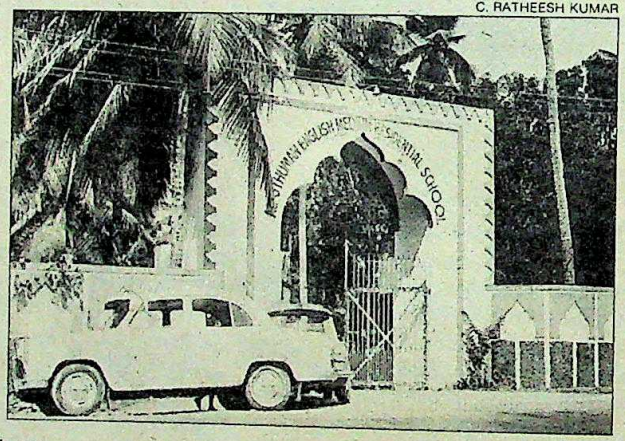
Charges Baby John, former education minister and Revolutionary Socialist Party (RSP) leader: "Jacob is in a mad rush to totally privatise education in the state. The poor will suffer as they cannot afford to send their children to school again." Jacob, however, staunchly defends his stand: "These days no parent likes to send his children to government-run Malayalam medium schools. How can we continue running schools which have 70 students and nearly 30 teachers?" he says.

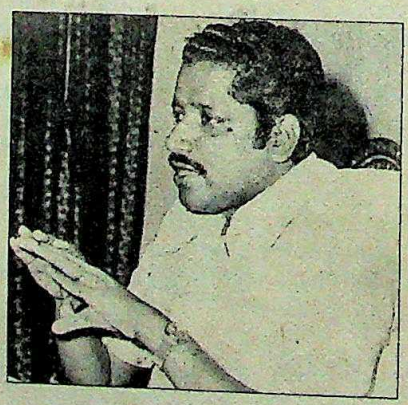
Education, which claims as much as 43 per cent of the state's total revenue expenditure and employs almost 47 per cent of the state's government servants, is an obsession with the people, striking a deep chord in every Keralite's psyche. The propriety of the Government action in encouraging education in the private sector at the expense of the public sector has thus sparked off an intense debate cutting across political affiliations, ideologies and individual interests.

K.K. Kurian, president of the Kerala Recognised Private Schools Managers Association, says rhetorically: "Parents are falling over each other to get admission for their children in private schools." He predicts that "the Government-run schools are doomed due to lack of discipline among students and the highly-unionised teaching staff".

Critics see hidden dangers in allowing an unbridled proliferation of private educational institutions.

C. RATHEESH KUMAR





Education Minister Jacob; and (top) a private school near Trivandrum

But critics see hidden dangers in allowing an unbridled proliferation of private educational institutions. Because of the lucrative nature of the industry and the high demand, more and more people are coming together to form trusts and float new schools. Says a top academician: "The formula is simple—use the words English medium and then think of a good Christian saint like St. John or St. Mary—and you are in business." Most of these schools make money in the appointment of teachers and from the inevitable donations under various guises, despite specific government directives that schools which take donations will be de-recognised.

A lucrative offshoot of this money-spinning industry are the elite government-recognised private schools who prefer to admit only those children whose parents are either in the Gulf or are affluent planters. In the central Travancore area, 10 such 'public schools' have come up in the last five years. One of them even advertises: "Ideally suited for children whose parents are abroad."

Defending the private schools, Mary Roy, the champion of Christian woman's fight for equality and who also runs the blue chip Corpus Christi School in Kottayam, maintains: "Even though education has become an industry in Kerala, it is a fact that the worst private school is better than any government school."

And T.M. Jacob asserts: "Parents in the Gulf want to send their children to the best private schools situated nearest to their villages than to Ooty or Bangalore. This has resulted in public schools mushrooming in central Travancore area, which has the largest foreign remittance in the state." But Jacob hastily adds that he wants a peaceful coexistence between the private sector and the public sector schools and blames the earlier Nayanar ministry for the legacy of 700-odd aided and unaided schools.

There is no denying that private schools, aided by high fees (Rs 5,000 a year on an average) provide better educational facilities than government-run institutions, which are seriously hampered by unionisation and indifference among the teaching staff, resulting in poor standards. But in a state where education is the number one priority, the increasing and seemingly inexhaustible demand for private schools is certain to create an imbalance that could raise more questions than the current boom is attempting to answer.

—SHREEDHAR PILLAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

ntroducing Eveready Super
ith advanced Zinc Chloride technology
uper charged for maximum power and life

Eveready presents a new generation
of high technology Zinc Chloride batteries.
New Eveready Super.
Eveready Super's advanced technology
is designed to give you
unmatched performance
in your power-hungry
modern machines like two-in-one,
cassette recorder, Walkman,
electronic toy and photoflash.
In your modern machines nothing
outlasts Eveready Super.

New Eveready Super

Designed just for your modern machines.

EVEREADY

CC-0. Bibliotheca Alexandrina.

Rediffusion/UC/4224

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Mudra: A.RIL.3095

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

From the mist-wrapped slopes of the Darjeeling hills comes a tea so distinct, so impeccable in flavour...

Nurtured in the finest tea estates. Carefully and discerningly hand-picked. And sealed into a unique gold foil pack to retain that garden-fresh flavour.

FLAVOUR SO DARJEELING, IT DESERVES A GOLD LABEL.

Brooke Bond GOLD LABEL

The very essence of Darjeeling

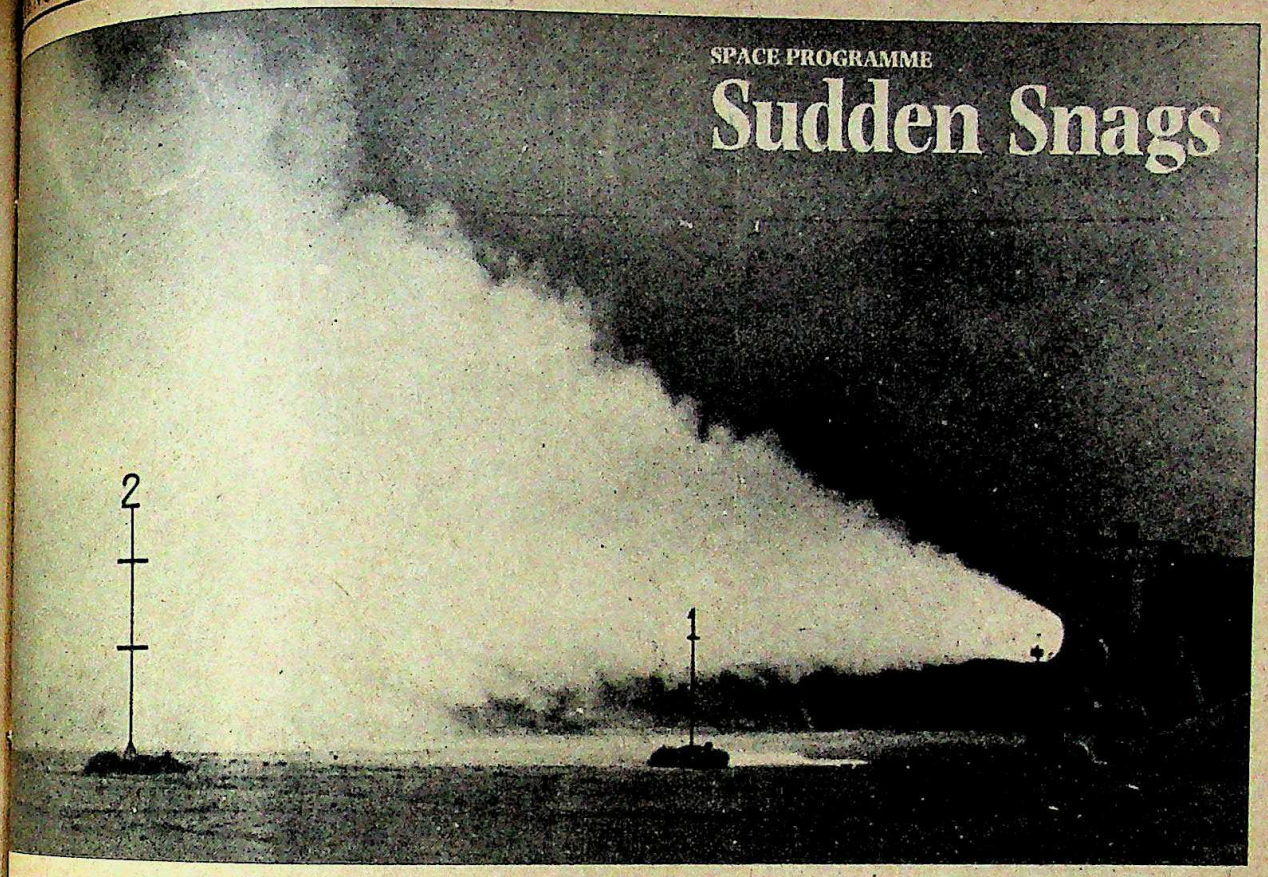
BBI-1834

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SPACE PROGRAMME

Sudden Snags



Testing ASLV boosters: starting trouble

ST when everyone, including the prime minister, was patting the Indian Space Research Organisation (ISRO) for meeting targets, events in the past few months have suddenly plummeted its tightly scheduled programme into uncertainity.

The first shock came when the US space shuttle Challenger blew up seconds after lift-off at Cape Canaveral on January 28. For in September the Challenger was set to have launched INSAT 1C into space as a back-up satellite for INSAT 1B, and those plans now have to be indefinitely postponed. India's space scientists have reason to be jittery because INSAT 1B, which handles 4,300 two-way telephone circuits and relays most of Doordarshan's national network programme, has already been 30 months in space and if it starts malfunctioning, all these services would be put into jeopardy. "That bird is vital and till we send it up we are all spending sleepless nights," confessed INSAT Project Director Pramod Kale.

ISRO scientists have been spending sleepless nights over other projects as well. The Challenger disaster has put on ice the sending of the second Indian into space. And the Augmented Satellite Launch Vehicle (ASLV), ISRO's second generation satellite launcher that was first scheduled to go up in December and then in March, has now been postponed to July or August after unexpected snags developed at the testing stage. To add to ISRO's woes, scientists working on the first Indian Remote Sensing satellite (IRS 1) announced that it would not be ready by December when it was to have been shot into space by a Soviet launcher. IRS 1 is now likely to be ready only in mid-1987.

1986, the year that ISRO was to come of age has suddenly become one of teething problems, plunging India's tightly scheduled space programme into uncertainity.

All this has made 1986, the year that ISRO was to come of age, suddenly a period for teething problems. Irked by the flurry of questions in Parliament about the delays, Professor U.R. Rao, ISRO's chairman, said last fortnight: "We have put our scientists on almost impossible schedules. But when we slip behind by a couple of months it is highlighted while there are any number of power projects that are delayed for years that don't receive any attention."

But if ISRO has being getting flak for the delays it is because in the past two decades it has built up a sizeable reputation for delivering. Space scientists realise that delays of any kind are bound to hurt the entire programme simply because it has a domino effect on other on-going projects. As P. Ramachandran, project director for putting up a wholly indigenous INSAT II satellite by 1990, said: "Unless scientists get free from the existing projects we can't get our own act together on time."

But right now ISRO's main worry is how to get the Rs 70-crore INSAT 1C satellite up in the sky as quickly as possible. With the shuttle project in the doldrums, ISRO is negotiating with the US space agency NASA to use an expendable rocket instead which would eject the spacecraft into orbit, as was done for the ill-fated INSAT 1A. This can only be possible by December. Moreover, ISRO's prestigious programme of sending a second Indian into space on the shuttle will have to be shelved for the time being. But, as Professor J.P. Singh, INSAT programme director, says: "We just can't delay 1C and if it means postponing the manned space programme then we have to sacrifice it."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

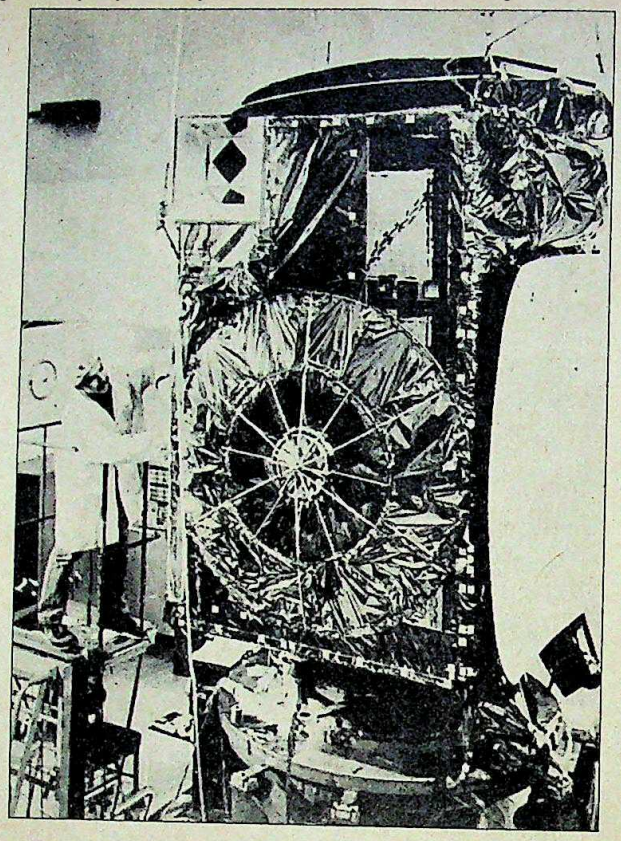
This would certainly be discouraging news for space scientists N.C. Bhat and P. Radhakrishnan, one of whom would have been the second Indian to be shot into space if the original plan of sending 1C in a space shuttle had not been disrupted. Both were selected last year from among 340 applicants after NASA offered a piggy-back space ride to any country sending up a major payload on the shuttle. And for the past six months, both have been on an intensive training programme to familiarise themselves with their tasks in space. In fact when Challenger blew up, they were in the US for their final briefing. Both of them are now back in Bangalore, and a disappointed Bhat says: "It's like waiting in an airport and not knowing when your plane is going to arrive."



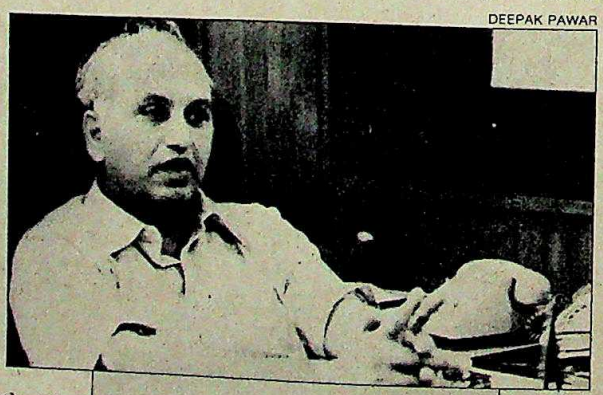
Insat 1C: waiting for a launcher

Another project which is making ISRO scientists anxious is the ASLV. The five-stage rocket, which will launch a 150 kg satellite into a low earth orbit, is a technological leap over it's predecessor. The SLV3 could only launch satellites of no more than 35 kg. ISRO will soon need to send up still heavier satellites (1C, for example, weighs 1,000 kg). The ASLV is designed as a major step in upgrading the country's launching capability.

But while scientists at the Vikram Sarabhai Space Centre (VSSC) in Trivandrum, where ASLV is being integrated, have tested several modifications like the strap-on boosters, they have run into some trouble with the most crucial element in the launcher: the close loop guidance system (CLGS). Working like an autopilot, the CLGS, the size of a briefcase and bristling with microprocessors, is the ASLV's brain and will not only regulate the speed of the rocket and its angle of inclination but also ensure that it ejects the 150 kg satellite into the exact spot the scientists want. Being built for the first time in India, it is crucial to the space programme because all future satellite launchers will be equipped with it.

Trouble started when the onboard computer registered several inexplicable glitches when the system was being integrated on the test stand. Scientists are struggling to correct the anomalies. Said VSSC's Director S.C. Gupta: "We are working seven days a week and 24 hours a day to get it right. It's a very tricky problem." Till they solve the CLGS defects the exact flight date of ASLV will not be announced.

DEEPAK PAWAR



"We need time. We can't cut corners because space will never forgive us."

U.R. RAO
chairman, Indian Space Research Organisation

The rocket launch, scheduled for December 1985, was delayed for other reasons. In late 1984 a cyclone submerged all the rocket testing stands under a metre of water and it took two months for scientists to get the project ticking again. Then last year they decided to opt for the CLGS system, which was originally scheduled to go up only on the second ASLV flight. This involved mastering sophisticated rocket guidance systems without compromising on the time-frame for development. With ISRO scientists now struggling to correct the problems, a delay of another four months has become inevitable.

Another project which is giving ISRO scientists plenty of worry is the IRS. Designed to compete with the LANDSAT, the US series of satellites used by many countries, IRS when ready would be almost state of the art. India subscribes to LANDSAT but with IRS it could start generating its own data for remote sensing. That would be crucial because remote sensing satellites have varied uses, like mapping water and forest resources, apart from helping to study crop patterns and floods and weather conditions.

IRS has run into problems because the import of certain vital electronic components from countries like the US has been delayed. Says Project Director K. Kasturirangan: "The procurement time for components has gone up from six months to two years and this has inevitably led to slippages in the schedule." But he hastens to point out that even if there is a six-month delay it would be a record of sorts if IRS is ready by the middle of next year as the turn around time for building satellites of the IRS class is usually six years. ISRO is doing it within five.

As the pressure to complete projects on schedule mounts, ISRO scientists wonder if they can deliver. Realising that quality cannot be compromised in spacecrafts, Rao said: "We need time, patience and perseverance. We can't cut corners because space will never forgive us." While the space department seems to have plenty of perseverance, what seems to be running out is time.

—RAJ CHENGAPPA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

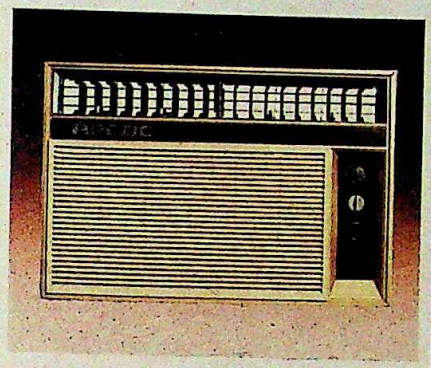
ARCTIC

THE PROVEN PERFORMER

For 100% efficiency and total comfort - Arctic, the time-tested airconditioners have been going strong for the last 40 years.

Keeping pace with the latest international technology Arctic Airconditioners bring a cool world of difference to your place – Faster cooling. Balanced temperature. Humidity control. Silent operation. And sleek looks that go well with any decor.

Arctic Airconditioners even today are the cool and calculated choice of all discerning buyers – business executives, administrators, doctors, govt. departments, labs, computer rooms and the family man too.



Available in 1.0, 1.5 & 2.0 Ton Capacity.

Also Split Type 1.5 Ton & 2.0 Ton Capacity

Mfg. by :-

Electronics Limited

METICULOUS ENGINEERING DOESN'T COST YOU. IT PAYS YOU

Regd. Office/Sales H.O.

Atma Ram House, 1, Tolstoy Marg, New Delhi-110001.
Ph-3315008-009-010 Cable-ARCTIC Telex-031-2670

1 & 1.5 ton models on D.G.S&D. Rate Contract Through

APS Electro Stampings (India) Pvt. Ltd.

16/5, Mile Stone, Mathura Road ,Faridabad-121 002
Phone: 81-24771, 81-24878 Grams: APSELECTRO

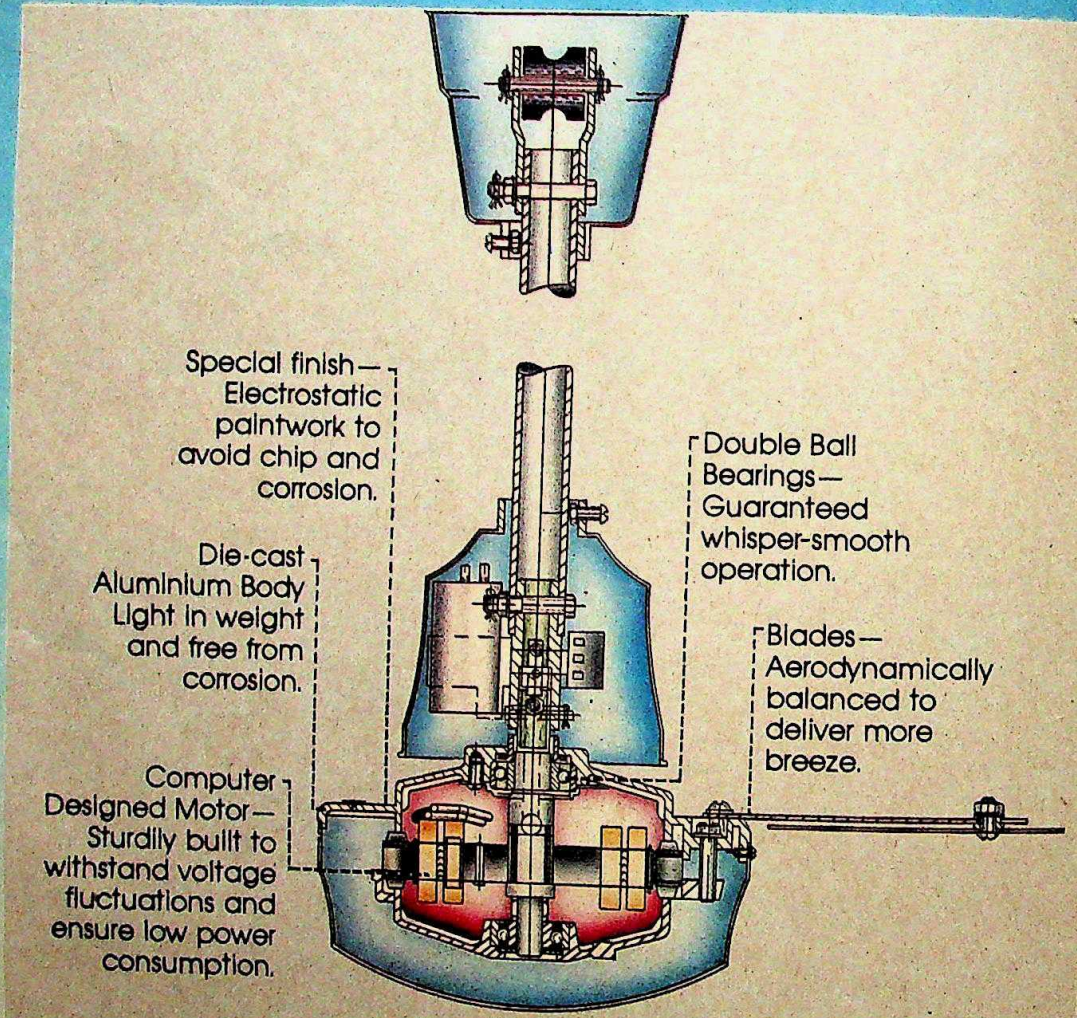
Branches (Phone Nos) :
Bombay (250187), Calcutta (447654), Chandigarh (32456), Faridabad (812-3647), Ghaziabad, Indore (31859), Jaipur (75671), Lucknow (32264), Madras (812352), New Delhi (353311), Patna (24845), Secunderabad

3M 560

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Orient is only five decades old.



These are only a few of the wide range of Orient Fans.
Available in variety of sweeps and shades. To suit your budget and match any decor.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

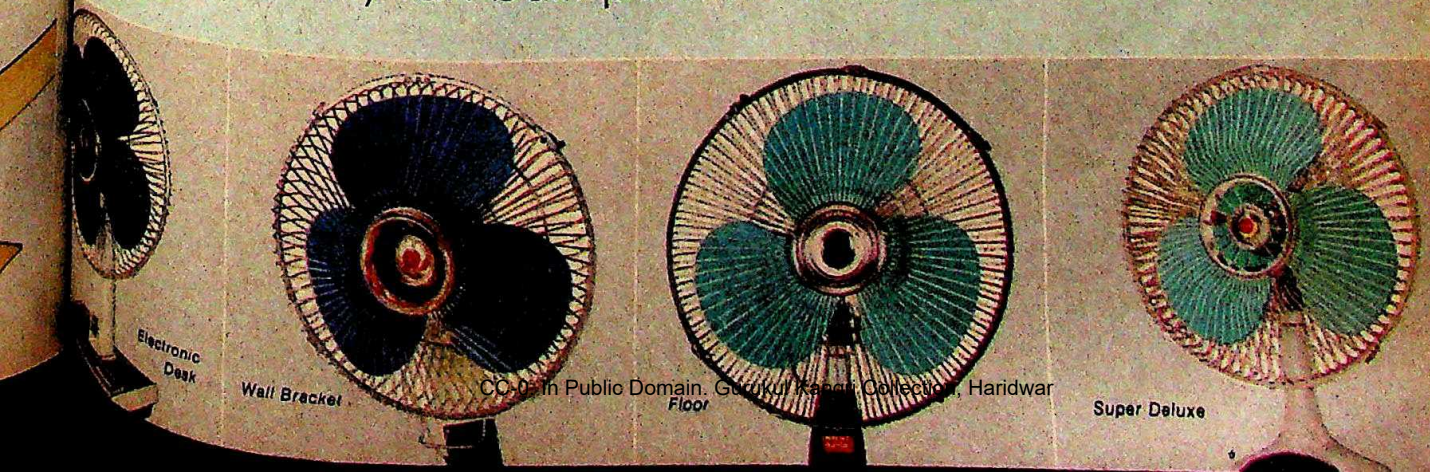
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

And it's already a legend.

ORIENT

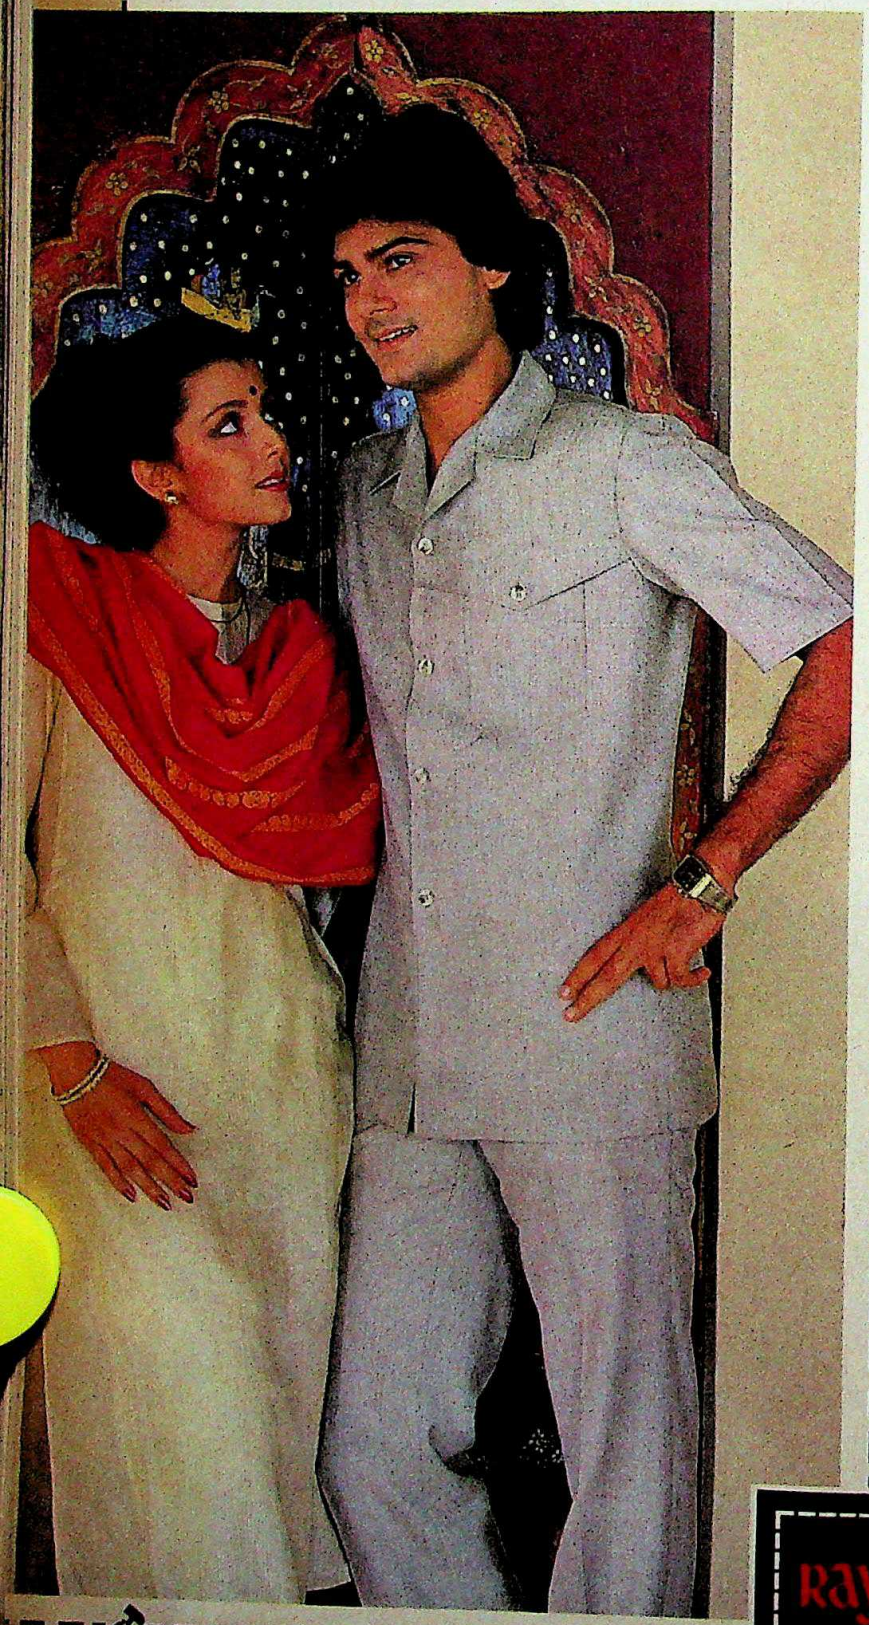
The only fan built perfect inside out.

CC/OGI/86

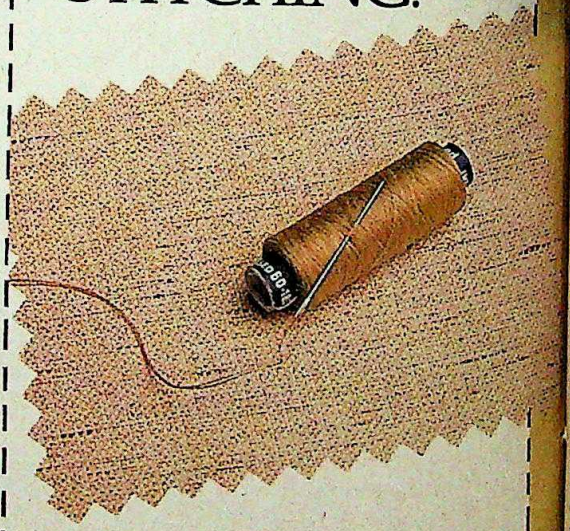


CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



EVER SINCE I DISCOVERED RAYMOND'S READYMADES, IT'S GOODBYE TO POOR STITCHING.

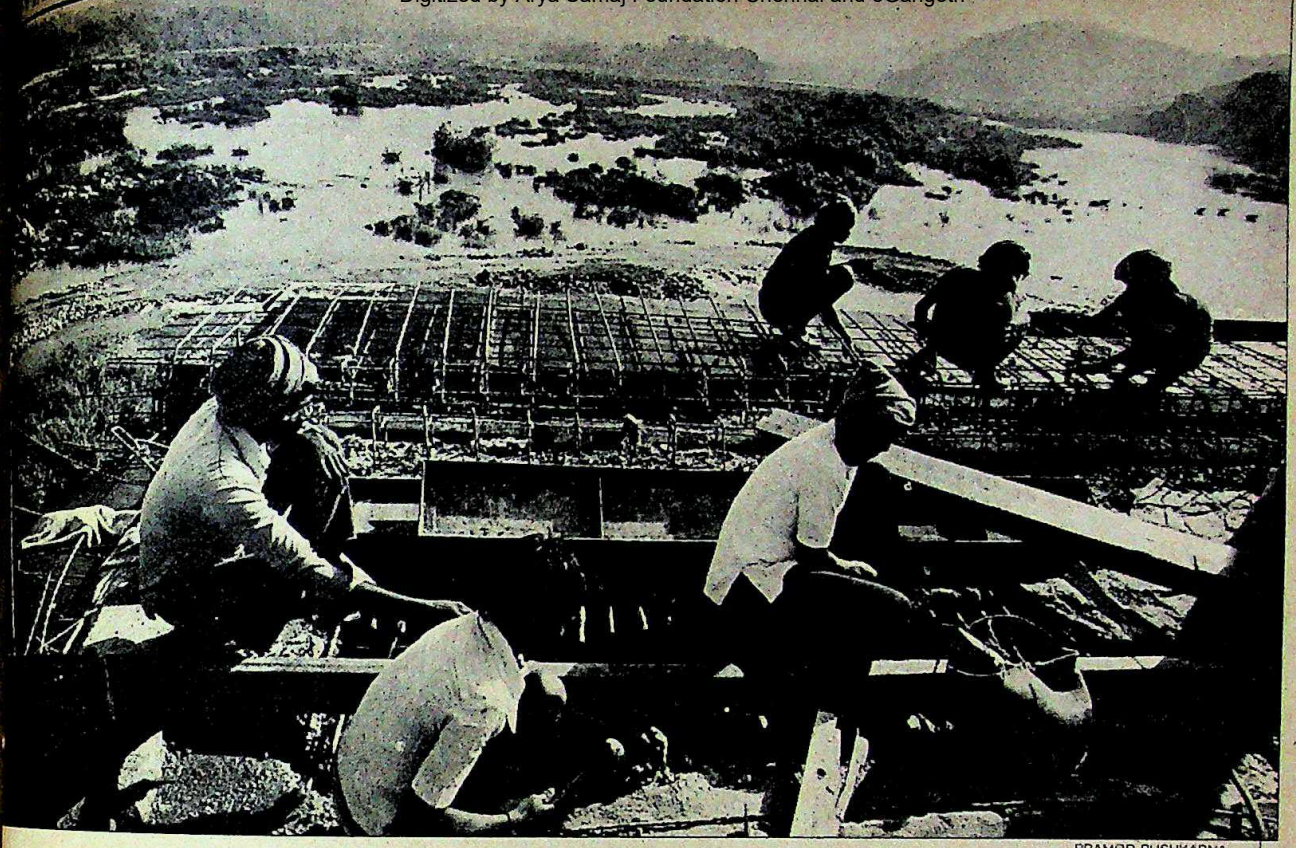


Trousers
•
Safaris
•
Shirts
•
Suits
•
Blazers

Raymond's Mens Wear

Location courtesy: The TOC40 at Public Domain. Guru Nanak Road, Bombay.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Work on the unapproved dam

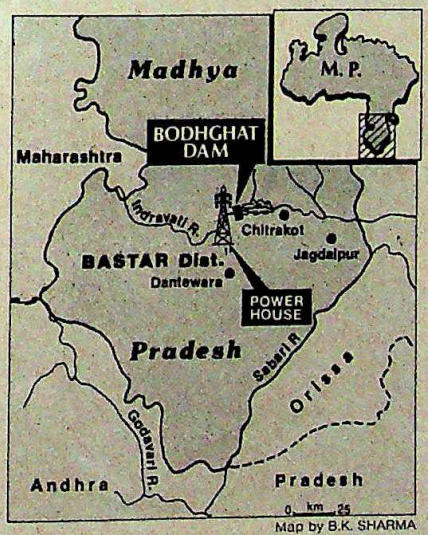
INDIRA SAROVAR

Expensive Dithering

ONE OF the finest examples of how not to go about a major development project exists in Madhya Pradesh's southern-most district of Bastar. The Indira Sarovar Hydro-electric Project—until recently called Bodhghat—stands as a monument to sustained bureaucratic and political indecision. Seven years after the laying of the foundation stone, with well over Rs 15 crore having already been spent (designed capacity: 500 MW), the project has still not got the final go ahead from Delhi because of a controversy over environmental issues.

The dilly-dallying has been expensive: in 1970, the project cost was estimated at Rs 126 crore, in 1979 at Rs 210 crore. In 1983 at Rs 475 crore. According to guesstimates, at today's prices it may well have swelled beyond Rs 600 crore. Asks a Bastar district official: "Be it yes or no, why can't they decide one way or the other and finish with it?"

Work on the project is proceeding at a snail's pace because of the lack of a final clearance, and its veritable army of engineers is grossly underutilised. "We have six Sundays and one Monday," bitterly laughs a junior engineer at Bodhghat, where whiling away the time is a major occupation.



Map by B.K. SHARMA

Currently employed are one chief engineer, one deputy chief engineer, three superintendent engineers, 15 executive engineers, 70 assistant engineers, 22 graduate engineer trainees, 30 sub-engineers and about 300 other people. There are also two land acquisition officers, two naib tehsildars, four revenue inspectors and eight patwaris, all paid by the Madhya Pradesh Electricity Board (MPEB). The monthly salary bill is Rs 6 lakh and the total expense on this is already in excess of Rs 2 crore. Another Rs 13 crore has been spent on constructing a bridge, and on foundation work for tunnels, the powerhouse, the water intake point and the dam itself.

The dam was ill-fated from the outset. Investigation of hydro-electric potential on the river Indravati first started in the mid-1950s after a visit of the then prime minister Jawaharlal Nehru to Bastar. This progressed gradually until the '70s when, in the course of a power struggle, charge of the project shifted no fewer than six times, going back and forth between the state's Irrigation Department and the MPEB. The MPEB ultimately won out in 1981.

The dithering reached ridiculous heights because the Union Government approached the World Bank for financial assistance in 1983. The Bank's experts visited India twice that year to examine the dam's technical feasibility and negotiations in Washington in April 1984 followed. Finally, an agreement for a $300 million loan was signed in March 1985. Says a Delhi official: "We had all the facts with us. If we still had our doubts, why didn't we address ourselves to them before approaching the World Bank? One year after being sanctioned the loan we still don't know whether we want the project! On the other hand, why was the MPEB permitted to spend so many crores on a project whose future was uncertain? The whole thing makes us look so foolish."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE PROGRESS of the Bodhghat file past the desks, corridors and shelves of the bureaucracy would confuse anyone. After one project report in 1970, an improved one was prepared in 1978. The environmental appraisal committee of the Department of Science and Technology cleared the project in January 1979, stipulating however, setting up of fuel depots to supply free wood to labourers employed in construction; drawing out of a detailed plan for rehabilitating oustees; creation of a sanctuary by having a 5 km wide belt of vegetation around the reservoir's periphery; strict enforcement of anti-poaching laws; promotion of pisciculture as well as crocodile farming; arrangements to prevent the spread of water-borne diseases; compensatory afforestation and the formation of a monitoring group to oversee the implementation of these steps.

The then prime minister Morarji Desai laid the foundation stone in the same month and Planning Commission approval—for Rs 210 crore—followed, with completion expected by 1985. Today, that sounds like a bad joke.

The Central Forest Conservation Act (FCA) came in late 1980, and so the project authorities had to seek fresh sanctions for the transfer of forest land. The MPEB applied for this new permission in February 1981. Today, five years later, the decision-makers are still dilly-dallying. The papers were forwarded from the MPEB to the state Forest Department which sent them on to the Union Ministry of Agriculture and Forests in February 1983. More information called for from the state Government came only in August 1983.

The Union Agriculture Ministry then referred the matter to the Department of Environment (DOE), which set up a working group for a reappraisal. How the group went about its job is a story by itself: they visited the site only in April 1984, eight months after being formed, and submitted its report only in February 1985. The total exercise took one-and-a-half years. And the much-awaited report, which approved the project, once again stressed the conditions laid down in the environmental sanction of January 1979 and also advocated care in handling the oustees and providing them vocational training. The report also stressed on the point of discouraging too many industries in the forest areas.

Between February 1985 and now, four high-level bureaucratic meetings have taken place in Delhi but clearance—or rejection—under the FCA has still to take place. A lot of this time was wasted in correspondence between the Centre and the state about some additional information that was asked for. At one stage the MPEB was also accused of clearing forests without permission.

Meanwhile, the process of land acquisition has begun at Bodhghat and Rs 53 lakh have already been paid for about 500 hectares of land. Says an official: "Work has just begun, and by the end of 1986 we should be able to acquire 75 per cent of private lands." Some 9,200 people, three-quarters of them tribals, from 42 villages will be displaced by the dam.

But what appears to have put the decision-makers in a dilemma is not so much the problem of oustees as that of the forests that will be submerged under the 130 sq km reservoir. Many figures have been quoted about the number of trees in the affected area but the latest—and considerably scaled-down—statistics of the state Forest Department puts the figure at 2.8 million.

How reliable these figures are is questionable. According to the Forest Department's survey, some parts of the submergence area show a density of 325 trees per hectare, while others show 863 trees per hectare. Such wide variation in a small radius defies explanation. Also, in one section, trunks with a girth of less than 20 cm have been classified "trees" while in another, trunks of this size have been ignored.

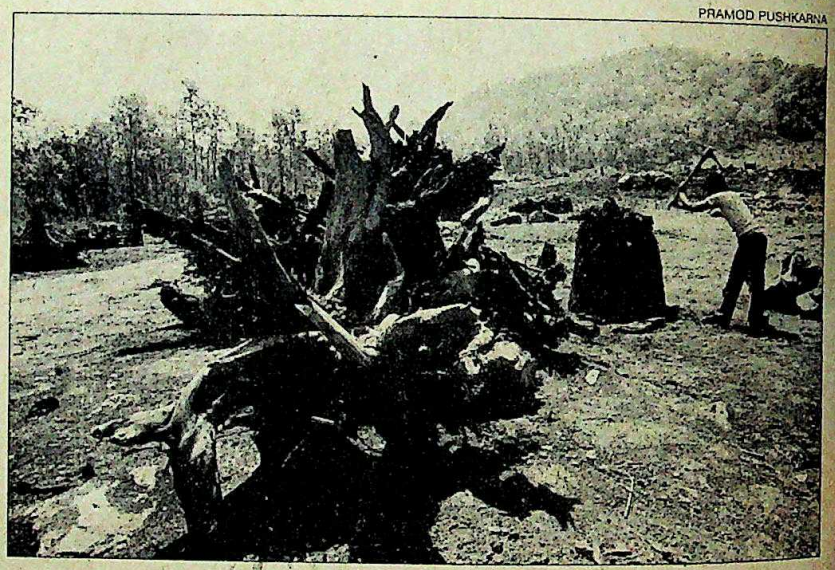
Another major discrepancy is that only trees standing on forest lands seem to have been considered though it is well known that in tribal areas like Bastar, there are a vast number of trees standing on private and revenue lands. These appear to have been forgotten while conducting an exercise as massive as a tree count.

The escalations have directly affected the cost of producing one unit of electricity at Indira Sarovar and some people feel that the delay has rendered it less economically feasible than it once was. Whichever way the ultimate decision goes, it is now a no-win situation.

—SREEKANT KHANDEKAR in Bodhghat

Uprooted trees: symbol of destruction

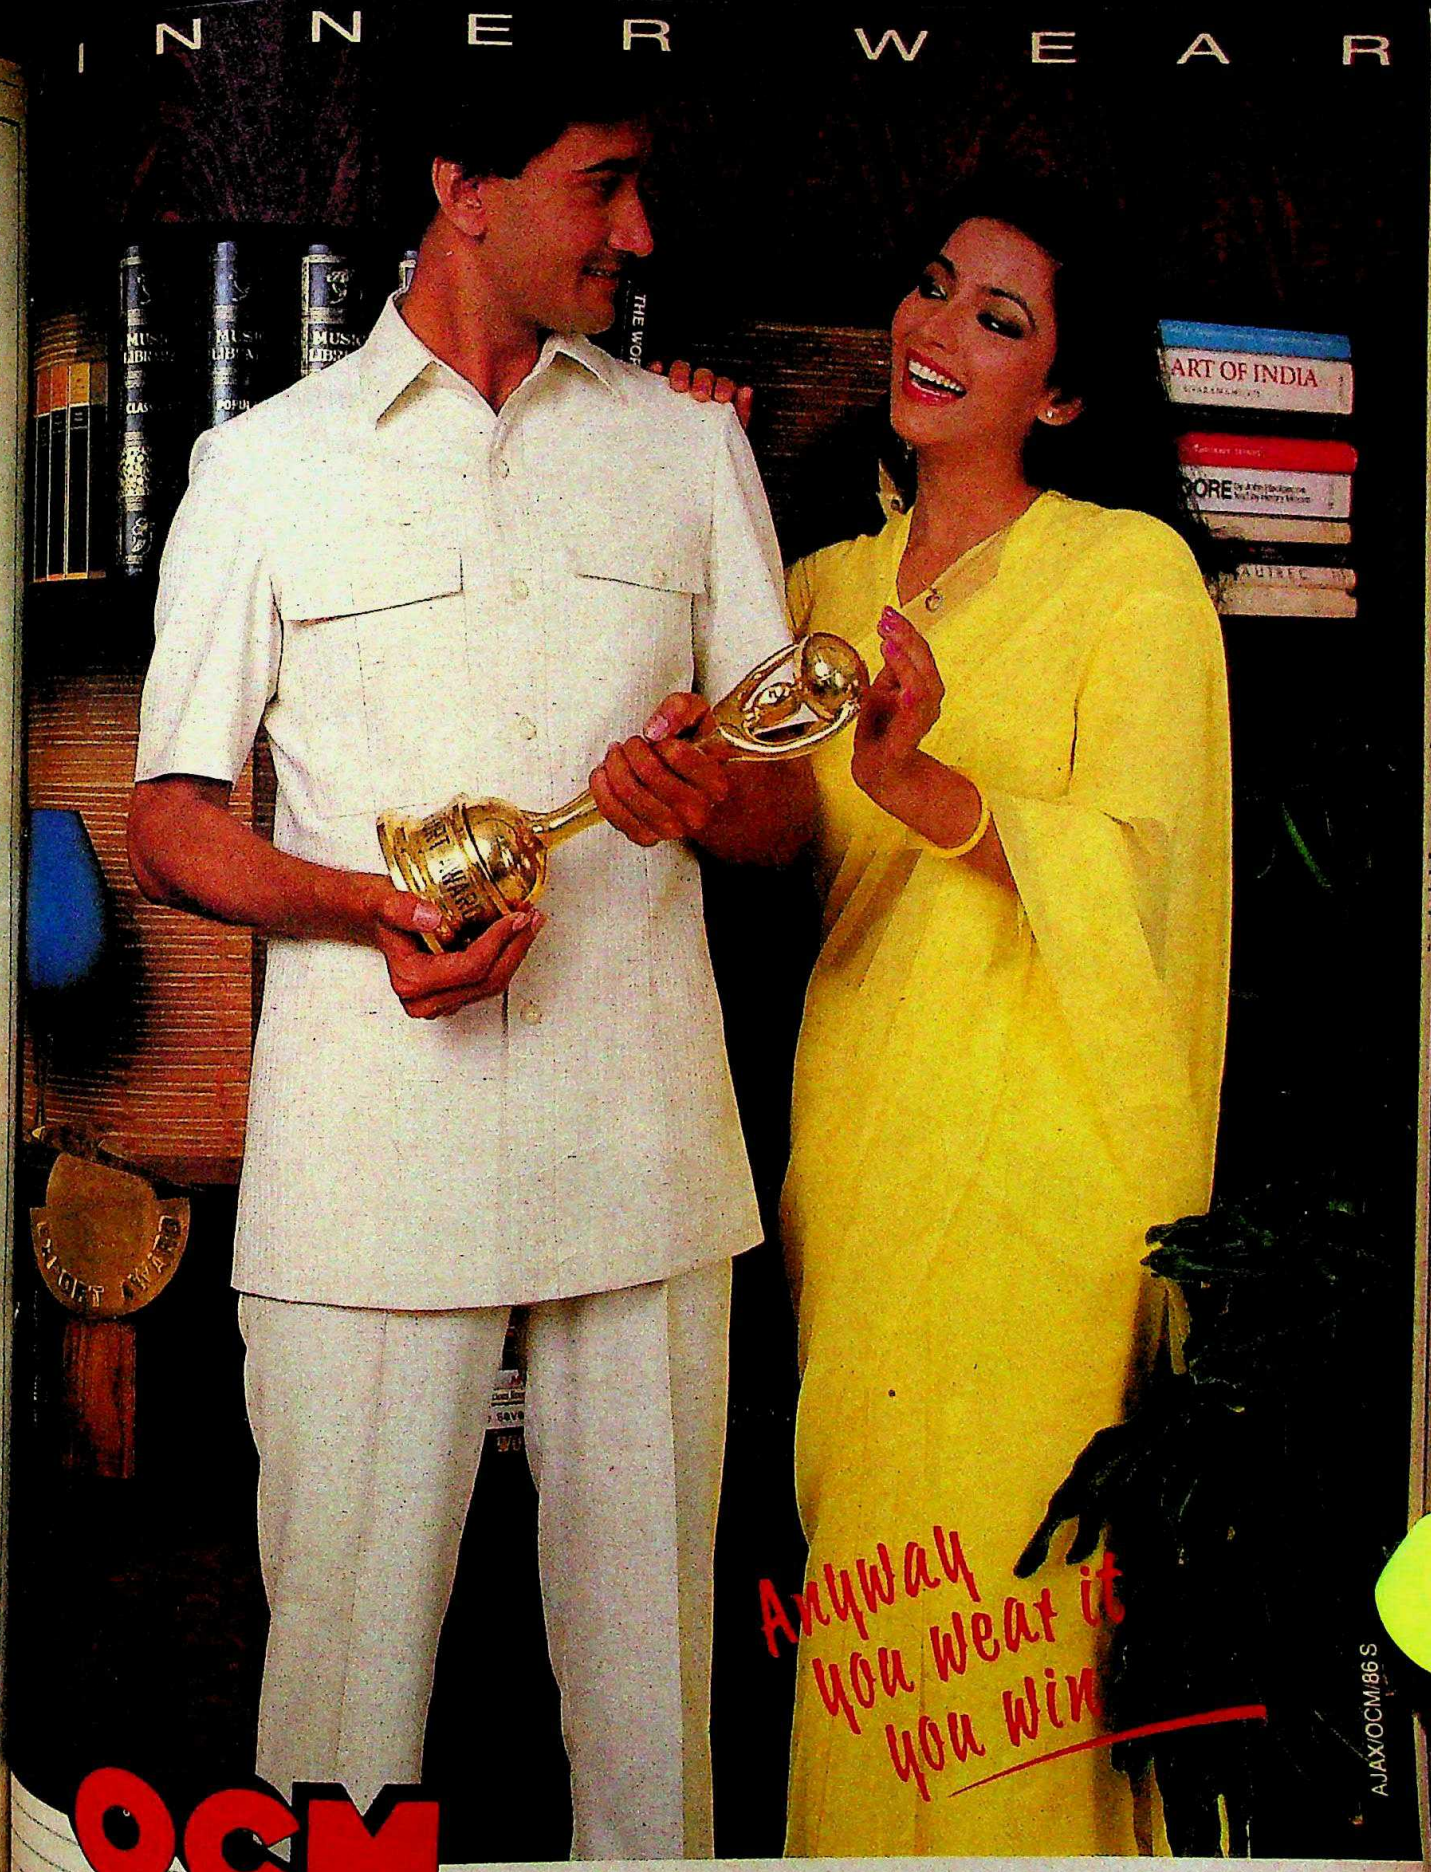
PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



What appears to have put the decision-makers in a dilemma is the problem of the forests that will be submerged under the 130 sq km reservoir.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

INNER WEAR



OCM
SUITINGS
THE PERFECT FABRIC FOR THIS SUMMER

TW, 70/30, SZ, SILVER SPLENDOUR, SAFARI, MILLIONAIRE, MOONLIGHT, SILVERLINE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TECHNOLOGY

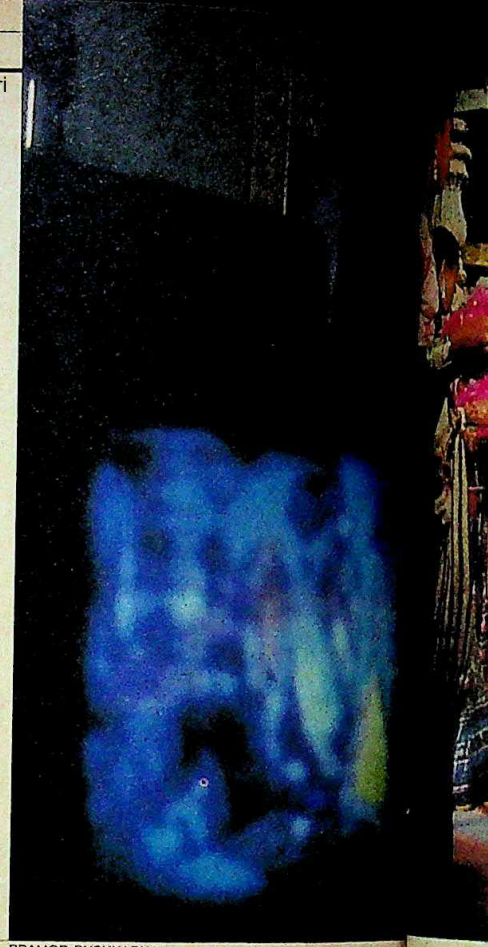
Electronic Epics

A CHERUBIC Vishnu with a canopy of snakes over his electric blue face and an incandescent Laxmi by his feet lies suspended in mid-air, as if floating in ether. Distressed humans float up to the deity and complain about the demons ravaging the earth below. From the depths of the orange sky, Ravana, dominant and deadly, zooms forward, his feet trampling the spinning globe. Lord Shiva glides into view resting on a tiger skin.

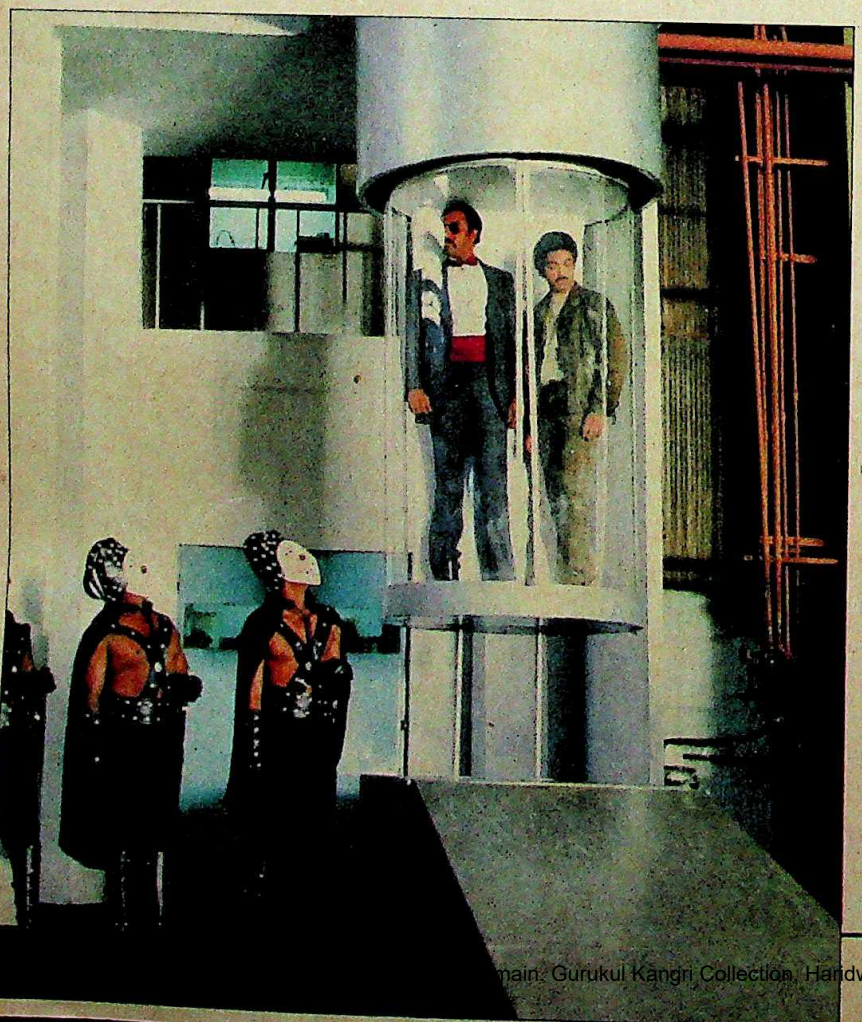
So begins Ramanand Sagar's video version of Ramayana. All laws of gravity are defied, there is a willing suspension of disbelief, for we are in epic land where gods and men rub shoulders with one another and miracles are quotidian fare. Dazzling technology and the advent of video magic leaves nothing to the imagination. Sagar's Ramayana in 52 episodes will shortly be aired (four episodes have already been completed) and the Mahabharata, for which movie Moghul B.R. Chopra is currently casting, will have a similar run. Move over Humlog; Doordarshan now offers Bhagvanlog.

Fantasy never disappeared; it only slipped into the side-streams of cinema and is now being reincarnated on television and video, and above all, being transformed by the magic of special effects into a technicoloured dreamship where space and time and movement are controlled by the touch of a button. Prem

Fantasy is being transformed on television and video by special effects into a technicoloured dreamship where space and time and movement are being controlled by the touch of a button.



PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



...main. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridw...

Stills from and special effects for Kamalhasan's Vikram (far left and left); and Ramanand Sagar's Ramayana (above): fantasy inviolate

Sagar's Vikram aur Betal and Moti Sagar's Dada Dadi ki Kahani have already unveiled the electronic era. While the big screen is still dominated by modern escapist fare like Kamalhasan's forthcoming spectacular Vikram, the little screen is coming alive with electronically retold epics. And video has opened an Alladin's cave of gimmicks—studios echo with such arcane phrases as spins, dissolves, wipes, bipacking, special effects generators, optical printers, chroma keys, blue screens and double camera set-ups.

In Umbergaon, Gujarat, 170 km from Bombay, Ramanand Sagar is "writing the Ramayana" with "his camera". Hira Bhai Patel's Brindaban studio has been converted to 50 acres of Ramayana landscape. Scattered all over are columns of plaster of paris, bits and pieces of palaces, moulded blue-birds, thrones and many-splendoured bows. Reality continues to rudely intrude into the world of carefully constructed illusion. Vashist, dignified in his saffron robes, clogs and rudraksha, dispels the illusion when he nonchalantly flicks the ash from his bidi into his water

Collection, Haridwar

5 for 2 Bonus*!
from Tata Burroughs

(Watch this space)

* In price-performance
For those in the market for a micro computer.

Tata
Burroughs
Limited

We provide total solutions

Shilpi TBL 5/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

pot. The next instant, a little girl shyly approaches 'Ramji' (Arun Govil, the Vikram of Vikram aur Betal) and says namaste, as if to a god. Illusion restored.

Wisely, Ramanand Sagar does not want details of his special effects to be revealed in print. "It's like going into the kitchen to see how rasgullas are made. Is it not better just to eat and savour them, to keep the mystery?" To capture some of this mystery, Sagar left the script of Ramayana at Vaishnodevi. "When I finished the script, I left it there, hoping that some ras would fall on it from above." The ras may not have been forthcoming, but divine power is manifested in the earthly devices of modern special effects—gods fly, split into a thousand manifestations or transform themselves into other shapes.

The Ramayana and Mahabharata are tailor-made for special effects. When Vishwamitra wants to perform a yagna, Ram creates a shield of arrows to stop the demons from polluting the yagna. Hanuman (in this case Dara Singh) has to fly. He is photographed against a blue background, which is later matched to the desired backdrop by a technique called blue screen. Sagar also did extensive research for authenticity—for the costumes and jewellery, he consulted the acknowledged king of celluloid Rams—Andhra Pradesh Chief Minister N.T. Rama Rao and Professor Sankhalia in Pune, whose standards for authenticity were a bit too revolutionary for him. "The professor told me that women of those times from Kaushalya to Sita had to be topless. But I decided that I could not do this in India. I consulted other Vedic scholars who told me that even if this were the case, it was against the common man's concept of Sita."

In B.R. Chopra's Mahabharata too, fantasy remains inviolate. Bhishma arrests the flow of the Ganga with a tide of arrows, storms blow people away; Karna shoots bomb-like arrows and the wars are an ideal battlefield for special effects. Says Chopra: "Fantasy is a part of Indian life, you cannot break the belief."

But it is the Sagar brothers who, in Vikram aur Betal, for the first time opened up the bag of gimmicks in an Indian television serial. "What can one make with one and a half lakhs?" asks Prem Sagar. "The way out is to use visuals. We have no stars. The hero is the production. Thus we spend 90 per cent of the budget on the production and 10 per cent on the stars."

Thus, there is a flying uran khatola and a throne with a none-too-righteous king; Betal flies through the air a la Superman, a rakshasa carries away a screaming Kajal Kiran like an Indian King Kong. The extent of the illusion is enhanced by the fact that the rakshasa is actually four and half inches shorter than the petite actress. One episode has the remains of a girl brought to life by the five elements. We see the body taking shape as the wind blows and a fluorescent green light (supposed to be the soul or life), hovers over the bones. Reality, except for the moral messages in each tale, seldom intrudes. One illusion is heaped upon the other, by the director-puppeteer moving sets and actors at will with his magic special effects machine and chroma keys. Explains Sagar: "The rakshasa never visited the site of the shooting; he was on my floor in front of the blue background. He had no idea who he was abducting or fighting in the jungle...or who was shooting arrows into his hairy heart."

The illusion is complete with a visit through the Sagar villa in Andheri, Vikram and Betal land, with tiny plants which become big trees, newspaper and straw coatings which become horrific caves, painted gates which are transformed to huge palace gates or durbars; like looking at Cinderella when the midnight hour has struck. Fantasy has been created from virtually nothing.

While the Sagars are creating Indian fantasies on video, Kamalhasan is creating a different kind of fantasy on film. Vikram, probably the costliest Tamil film made so far, is a modern day fairy-tale of the 007 genre. Its hero is a spoofy, sexy James Bond played with tongue-in-cheek panache by Kamalhasan, also the film's producer. Replete with missiles and mid-air action and a bevy of beauties including Dimple Kapadia, the film is a marriage between high technology and fantasy. Not only have the use of Apple 2 and IBM PC-70's contributed to it, the people involved in the making of the film include scientists working at the Bharat Electronics Limited (BEL) in Bangalore. Students at the Madras IIT wrote the computer programme for the rocket, called Agniputra II. The story has been written by Kamalhasan and Dr Rangaragan of BEL, and Periyanaigam, also from BEL, helped with the titles and effects and even loaned a microcomputer for the rocket.

The marriage between high-tech and the world of celluloid was formalised in the formation, some years ago, of Motion Graphics—Kamalhasan is one of the partners, along with some young technologists—for creating special effects. Says Kamalhasan: "The hero Vikram, belongs to an intelligence agency BRA—shades of Bond—the Bureau of Research Analysis. The film has the spirit of Spielberg and the authenticity of rockets and nuclear missiles: we also have made a Cessna which does all but fly. We have used all kinds of effects: computer images in which faces crumble, the teleprinter titles roll in as if from nowhere, zoom towards the camera and explode in your face. The film will really bring out the boy in all men." Including, no doubt, the new pioneers of the electronic epic.

—MADHU JAIN in Bombay and Madras

Still from Vikram: mid-air action

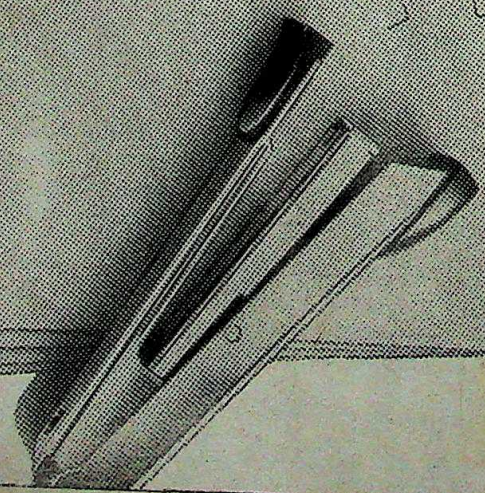
Kamalhasan's Vikram is a modern-day fairy-tale of the 007 genre. Replete with missiles and mid-air action, it is a marriage between high-technology and fantasy.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Since its launch, Finesse 4515 has had an average uptime of 90%.

In fact, 90% of installations have had an uptime of 90% and above.



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Since its launch in April 1984, Finesse 4515 has become the single largest selling plain paper copier. And with good reason.

90% average uptime: the service factor.

HRL's service centres are geared to answer your SOS in 24 hours. Across a network spanning 93 cities and towns.

The case history of every copier is maintained on a computer. If uptime falls below 90%, the computer sounds a Red Alert.

But HRL firmly believes in the old adage: prevention is better than cure. So whether you ask for it or not, your machine gets a head-to-toe checkup regularly.

So it's no surprise that Finesse 4515 has a track record of 90% average uptime.

A major reason why people who become our customers stay our customers.

Designing for longer life: the reliability factor.

Finesse 4515 has been designed and engineered for long-term reliability. Microchip circuits that live to a ripe old age. And very few damage-prone switches or controls — most of the adjustments are automatic, leaving little room for human error.

Critical components for Finesse 4515 are already being made right here in India. At HRL's modern manufacturing facilities. To Toshiba's ruthless tolerance specifications and exacting quality standards.

And one thing is certain: Your Finesse 4515 will never be out of action for want of spares and consumables.

State-of-the-art features: the technology factor.

Finesse 4515 offers everything a discerning buyer looks for in a copier. Modern features that reflect the world's most advanced electronics technology:

Reduction and enlargement. 100% edge-to-edge, corner to corner, non-void copying. Microcomputer-controlled, colour LCD panel for simple operation. Straight-line paper path with automatic paper alignment. Clamshell design for easy maintenance.

Getting perfect copies means leaving as little as possible to human judgement. So in Finesse 4515, exposure and toner density are controlled automatically. To ensure that originals are copied with perfect exposure, and for copies of consistently high quality.

The case for Finesse 4515 is clear.

It will be even more clear when you actually start using it.

In fact, 50% of Finesse 4515 sales are to satisfied customers placing repeat orders.

But right now, no one can blame you for being nervous.

No one can blame you for making the world's oldest consumer statement: "I'm looking for something reliable."

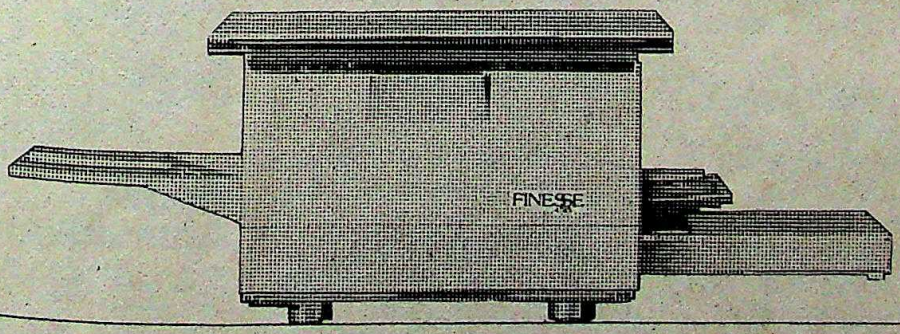
Look no further.

FINESSE 4515

PLAIN PAPER COPIER

In technical association with Toshiba Corporation, Japan.

India's largest selling copier.



HRL HINDUSTAN REPROGRAPHICS LIMITED

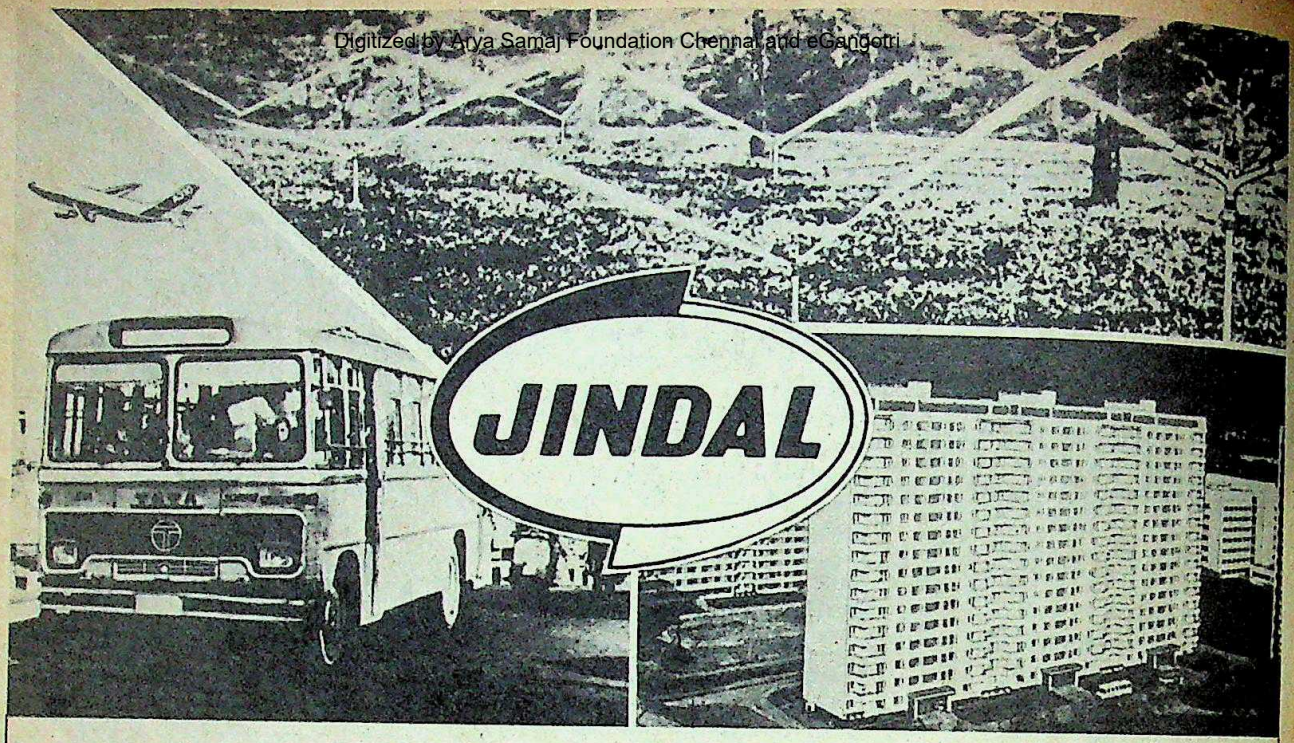
For further information, contact: Hindustan Reprographics Limited. Head Office: 5th Floor, Kundan House, 16, Nehru Place, New Delhi 110 019. Tel: 6432908, 6417694.

Branch Offices: Bombay: 74, Regent Chambers, Nariman Point, Bombay 400 021. Tel: 232764, 240888. Bangalore: 10/2, Queen's Road, Bangalore 560 052. Tel: 72494. New Delhi: 801, Deepali, 92, Nehru Place, New Delhi 110 019. Tel: 6418792, 6439209. Secunderabad: P 1-1-58/11, Sarojini Devi Road, Srinath Chamber, Secunderabad 500 001. Tel: 75264. Madras: 8, Haddows Road, Jai Laxmi Estate, Madras 600 006. Tel: 476846, 474633. Calcutta: 11/1A Sarojini Naidu Sarani, Calcutta 700 017. Tel: 296720.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

HRL.4.86

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



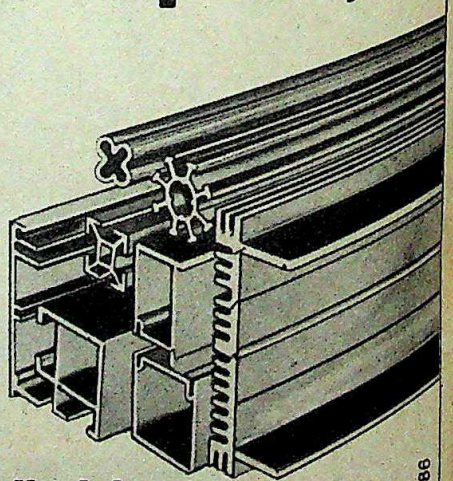
Extrusions give shape to architecture, transport, agriculture etc.

Jindal Aluminium Limited produces over 3,000 extruded shapes in various sizes and alloys conforming to national and international standards for thousands of applications.

Today Jindal Aluminium Ltd. holds the No. 1 position in the aluminium extrusion industry. This modest achievement has been made possible with continuous research and development efforts to update technology, combined with harmonious labour relationship resulting in high profitability.

Aluminium extrusions at Jindal undergo stringent quality control measures in order to meet specific and exacting demands of architecture, transport, communication, defence, aero-space, electronic and other major industries.

Jindal Sprinkler Irrigation Equipments are widely recognised for high efficiency and superior quality. It is the first choice of the farmers, tea/coffee, planters throughout India.



Jindal Aluminium Ltd.

16th K.M. Tumkur Road, Bangalore-560073
Tel. No. 384697, 384255 Telex: 0845-305
Gram: JINDALEX.
New Delhi, Bombay, Calcutta, Siliguri, Bahadurgarh, Rajkot, Chirawa, Nagpur.

adlyads-034/86

JINDAL In Pursuit of excellence

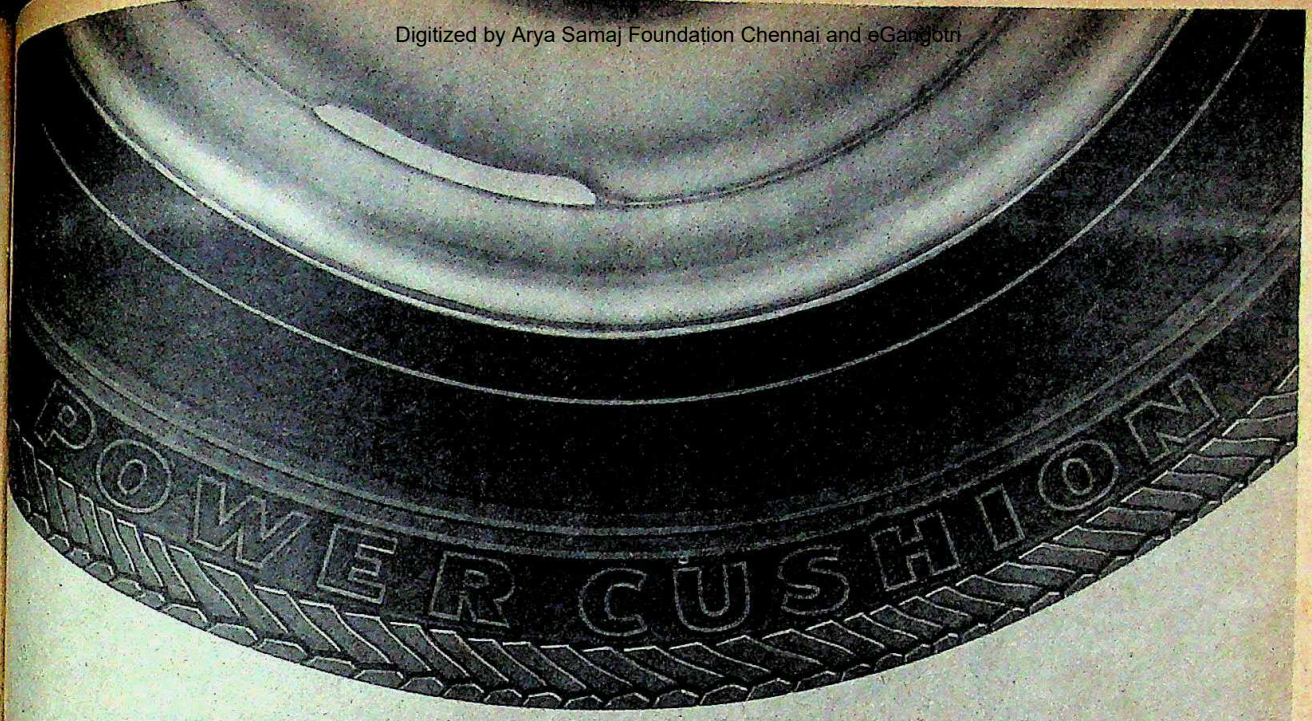
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



The strong grip of leadership

Goodyear demonstrate leadership worldwide. In technology and research, innovation and quality, in popularity amongst users and performance on world race-tracks.

The largest earthmover tyre, the tyre that landed on the moon, the largest-selling car tyre in the world — each one is a Goodyear!

Right here in India Goodyear lead with Power Cushion. The tyre you have made an unquestioned leader. Well, that's Goodyear. The finest, the world over. As Power Cushion is in India.

And with all reason.

Deeper and Wider Tread: More rubber on the tread than any other car tyre. (Consumers testify to over 50,000 Kms. of non-skid safety).

Computer chips in for more mileage, more safety:
Power Cushion's computer-perfected tread design ensures greater grip, more comfort, more safety as tread adjusts automatically to road profile.

Unique Arrow-Head Design:
For a quicker start-stop, lower rolling resistance, more fuel saving.

'3-T' Nylon Casing:
Resilient and abrasion-resistant casing that ensures more retreads.

That's Goodyear Power Cushion

GOODYEAR

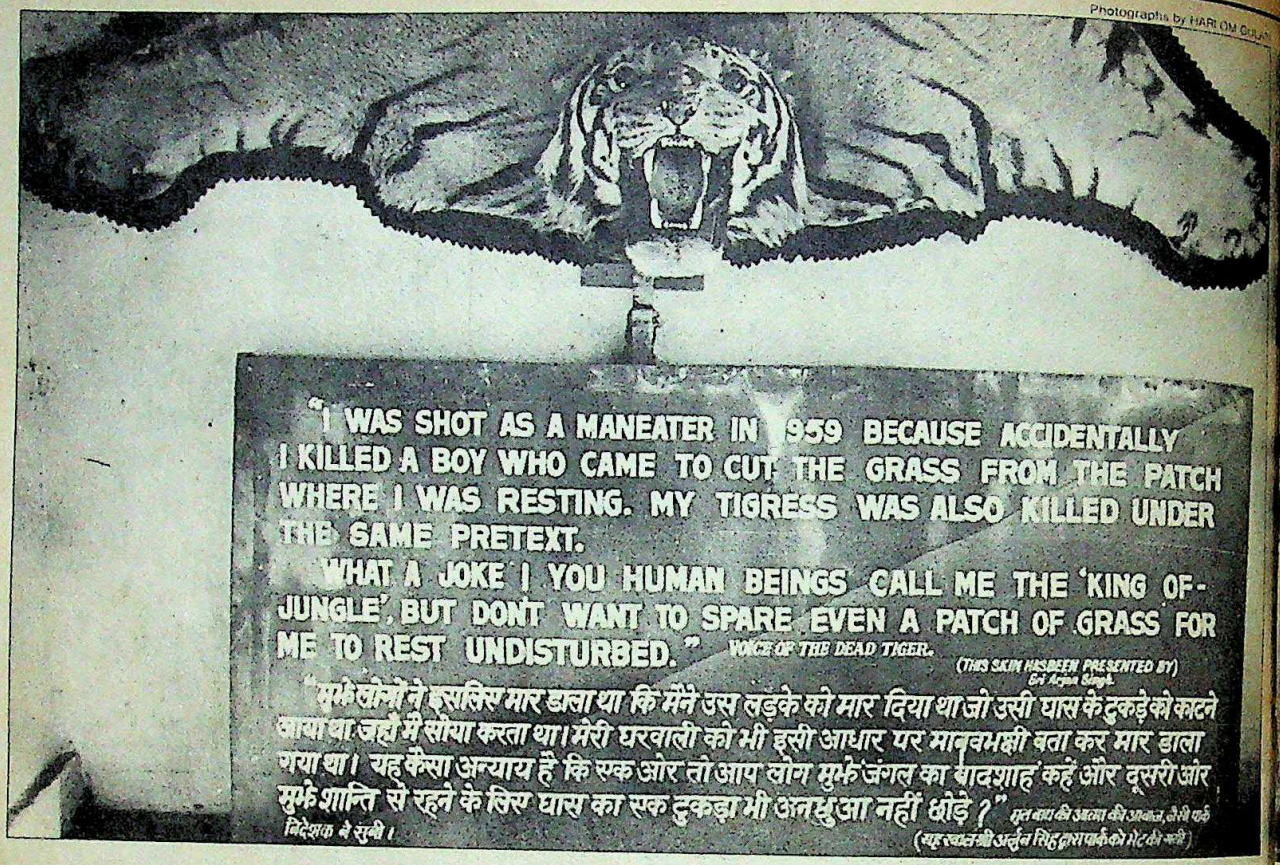
LEADING THE WORLD IN TYRE TECHNOLOGY

Contract/GY-20/85

adlyads-034/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Poignant legend at Dudhwa

TIGER SANCTUARIES

Conflict in the Wild

A FARM worker looking for a place to relieve himself casually approaches a cane field on the outskirts of the Dudhwa national park in Uttar Pradesh. Unknown to him, a tiger lurks in the cane; the great striped beast pounces and one more digit is added to the statistics of man-eater victims.

Exacting gruesome revenge, the victim's grieving relatives leave a poisoned goat carcass on the spot, knowing the tiger will return. It does, finishes the poisonous repast and ambles off into the jungle to die a painful death. As the jungle reverberates to the sound of the tiger's death roars, one more number is added to the tally of tigers killed by human vendetta.

This seesaw battle has been going on around the Dudhwa national park for some time, taking a heavy toll of tiger and human lives. The human toll is properly tabulated: nearly 180 persons are known to have been killed by tigers since 1978 in Kheri district (which includes Dudhwa). But no one knows the precise count of tigers poisoned by prey turned predator.

Dudhwa has earned for itself the top spot in man-eating's hall of fame: between 20 and 25 people are killed by tigers every year. However, for many years the Sunderbans tiger reserve had occupied the gory position, with 40 to 42 deaths annually. That figure was brought down to 21 last year by concerted action to cut down the chances of confrontation between man and the king of the forest. Though officials say that the problem has arisen only in the Sunderbans and at Dudhwa, it occasionally surfaces elsewhere too: the news-letter of the Wildlife Association of South India recently reported a poisoned tiger near Masinagudi forest, and an injured tiger found dead in Kakankote forest near Mysore.

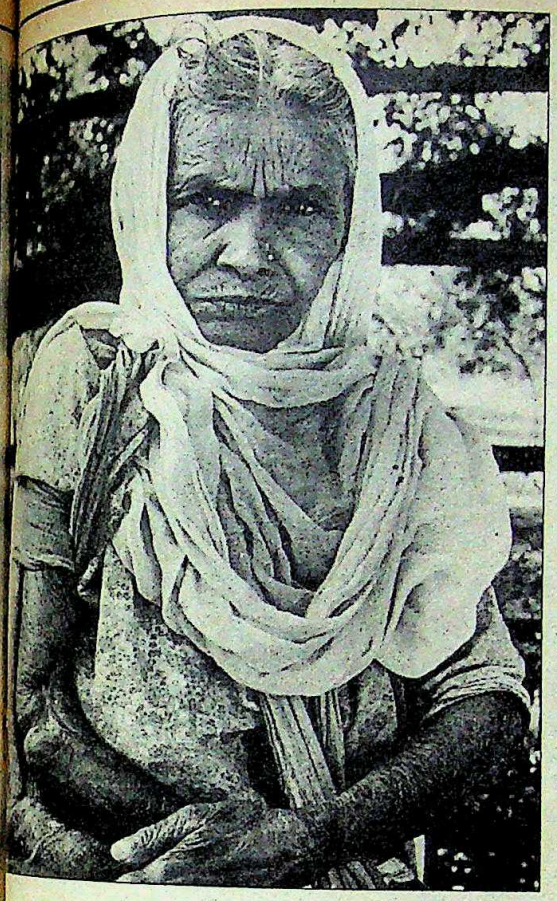
The battle between people and tigers around the parks has broken out with reason. With the tiger population in the country going up quite sharply (from 3,015 in 1979 to 4,005 in 1984), and those in the tiger reserves from 711 to 1,121 in the same period, the areas reserved for tigers have become increasingly crowded. The tigers often break bounds, and the conflict escalates with villagers going into the reserves to poach on the tiger's prey species (deer, cheetal and wild pig), and collect firewood, honey and grass.

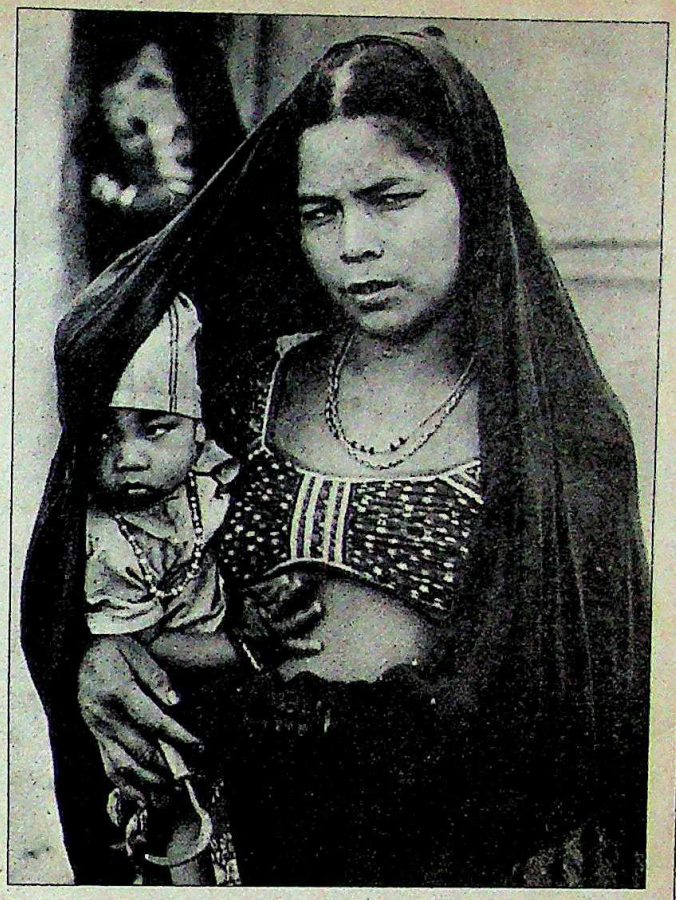
The International Union for the Conservation of Nature recommends a minimum habitat of 2,000 to 3,000 square miles for a contiguous population of 300 tigers; nowhere is this kind of territory available. But, argues R.L. Singh, director of Project Tiger, the area of parks like Dudhwa is sufficient for the tiger residents, provided the privacy and peace of the habitat is maintained and there is enough food. Unfortunately a major road and railway line trisects Dudhwa, turning it into three separate zones.

Prosperous farmers living in the three-mile buffer zone around the Dudhwa park brag about the number of tigers eliminated. Evidence is hard to come as those who do it cover their tracks well. Yet recently, a junior park warden at Dudhwa was detected burning the carcass of a tiger. The official inquiry did not solve the mystery but G.C. Mishra, the park direc-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri





Mauled victim Hasina (left) and a widowed Phoolmati: close encounters spects that the tiger had been ed by villagers and the warden was ying the evidence so that he was not d for dereliction of duty.

me months ago, a limping tigress ed and despatched to Lucknow Zoo und to have been injured by pellets.
Arjan Singh, Dudhwa's honorary e-warden, says another tiger had its shown off because someone had e a crude bomb in the carcass of its d a young farmer, Gurnihal Singh
, 27, who lives two miles from the said someone must be poisoning the as those seen around his Ainthpur seem to have vanished this year.
used to see pug marks of five or six
. Now I see no pug marks at all."
conservationists have realised that only way to save the humans and around reserves like Dudhwa is to their habitats separate and inviolate.
ost states are taking steps to enlarge core area of the parks where human ement and forest exploitation are not wed. The core areas of the Simlipal arnataka) and Bandipur (Orissa) tiger ves have been expanded. The Agri-e Ministry had also been persuaded its Kokilabari seed farm, and the Arjan Singh: defending the cats vacated area has been added to the Manas tiger reserve in Assam. Orders have also been issued to stop grazing in the Melghat reserve in Maharashtra. Two villages inside Kanha, Madhya Pradesh have been relocated and a contiguous forest of 100 sq km added to the reserve.

However, developments at Dudhwa have been in the opposite direction. Since 1978, the number of villages in its buffer zone has increased from 21 to 80, rendering the habitat conflict more acute. Wildlife conservationists, therefore, feel that the Dudhwa tiger is more sinned against than sinning, and that settlers around the park are in fact to blame for incurring the wrath of the ferocious felines. And when it comes to the crunch, the politicians and the state Government always intervene on the side of man. Inevitably, this brings tiger lovers like Billy and Misra into confrontation with local politicians.

"The trouble is that humans have a vote and the animals don't," says Billy. The Wildlife Act says there should be no disturbance to the habitat but because of pressures from the voting public, successive directors have allowed people to take park material out. Some weeks ago, Suresh Ajmani, the agitated local MLA of Dudhwa led a delegation of villagers to the park director to complain that the people were not being allowed to collect grass and firewood from the park grounds. "This has been allowed for decades and withdrawing the permission now is gross injustice," argued Ajmani. "Dictatorial" park officials were depriving poor people of fuelwood, and he threatened to complain to higher authorities.

Misra explained that in January this year Ajmani along with a local delegation had pleaded with the chief minister, who

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Dudhwa tiger is more sinned against than sinning, and settlers around the park are in fact to blame for incurring the wrath of the ferocious felines.

was visiting Dudhwa, to allow villagers to collect grass and firewood from the park. In spite of protests, the chief minister conceded the demand. But the officials approached the Ministry of Forests and Wildlife in New Delhi, and a call from the prime minister's office to Lucknow made the chief minister hastily revise his order.

BUT THE conservationists' concern for wildlife and the eco-system is inexplicable to the poor villagers scrabbling for a living on the edge of the forest. Some years ago, several graziers were killed in police firing when they insisted on herding their cattle into the Bharatpur bird sanctuary. Elsewhere, outraged villagers recently told a senior wildlife official: "Hum bhookhay mar rahen hain aur aap baagh paal rahe hain." (We are dying of hunger and you are more bothered about raising tigers.) To eliminate this kind of strife, villages near parks are now being offered grass at concessional prices to stall-feed their cattle, and firewood for burning. But these changes take time to get implemented. Lakhimpur's conservator of forests, A.P. Misra, disclosed that the Government had approved a proposal for the state's forest corporation to open depots around the park to supply grass and firewood at cost. But the project is still grounded as the corporation pleads that it does not have the staff to manage such an operation.

Officials point out that unless the people living on the periphery benefit from the wildlife area and are proud of it, that area cannot exist. "In a democracy wildlife cannot live without the will of the people," says Billy. Adds R.L.Singh: "Now our concern is to improve the conditions of the people living around the tiger reserves. And unless the feeling is removed that conservation is at their cost, conservation cannot succeed."

Near Dudhwa, park officials try to convince villagers that one or two good, stall-fed buffaloes will give more milk than a dozen head of useless cattle which need to be grazed every day. But till animal husbandry practices change, villagers like Lalla of Masaankhamb village, will be forced to take their cattle to graze in the grass fields near the park. Lalla was killed by a tiger in February, and for a while other cowherds didn't venture near the park. But, asks Lalla's grieving wife Phoolmati with a shrug: "Wahan nahin to kahan jayen?" (If we don't go there where will we go?). A short distance away lives Hasina, mother of a park mahout. Her right arm is a mangled mess, chewed up by a tiger last October as she slept outside her hut. Hasina was saved by her quilt; the tiger dragged it off mistaking it for her. Disabled, Hasina awaits compensation.

Taking advantage of the outcry following the man-eating incidents around Dudhwa and at the Corbett park, where two foreign tourists were recently mauled to death, a group of "sportsmen hunters" jumped into the fray and sought permission to bring in foreign trophy hunters to kill the man-eaters at $30,000 per head. If periodic 'cropping' of old, decrepit and man-eating tigers were allowed, wildlife could become a revenue-earning resource, they said in a proposal to the Central and Uttar Pradesh Governments six months ago.

But the proposal has little chance of going through. The director, wildlife, in the Ministry of Forests and Wildlife, M.K. Ranjeet Singh, dismissed the proposal to trophy hunt the man-eaters: "Allowing cropping of decrepit tigers will open a Pandora's Box; permission to shoot one animal will lead to the shooting of others. We cannot take a chance with a man-eater; it has to be destroyed immediately. We cannot wait for trophy hunters and it may not be correct to view it as a revenue-earning exercise." Stressing the same point, R.L. Singh added: "So far nine man-eating tigers have been destroyed at Dudhwa and one trapped. Not one of them was old, disabled or a nursing mother."

No one is more incensed by the tiger-hunting suggestion than Billy. "These despicable proposals are triggered by self-interest," he snorts. "Before Project Tiger was started there were 26 shikar companies who got $10,000 per tiger. Now they want to get back into the act." Billy, author of four authoritative books on the tiger, dismissed as bakwas (nonsense) the theory propagated by some wildlife experts that the Dudhwa tigers have a man-eating "trait" which is passed on from mother to cub. Heredity seldom plays a part in such an aberration, he says. To a tiger, anything that moves is prey. When it gets used to seeing humans day and night encroaching on its forest habitats, the tiger sheds its awe of the human being. "With familiarity has come increasing contempt and the tiger has accepted the human as a prey species. When there is nothing to eat it attacks humans. The cause of man-eating is always human pressure," Billy said plainly. And Misra confirmed: "It is not true at all that a tiger starts hankering for human flesh having tasted it once. If that was the case there would be a human killed every seventh day. It's just that after having killed a man once the tiger starts considering man a part of his menu."

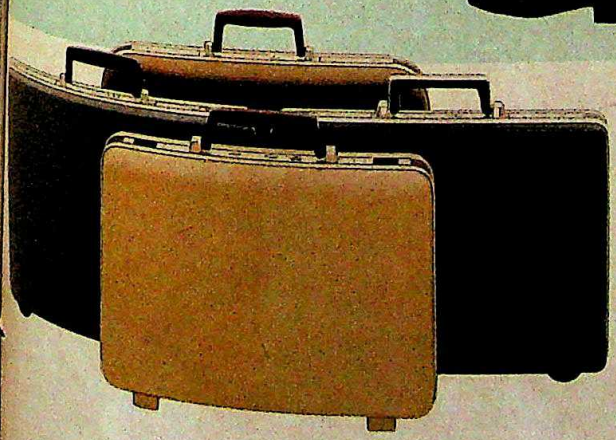
But man is not prepared to sit back and be killed. And the poignancy of this escalating conflict is best illustrated by the legend under a tigerskin which adorns one wall of the reception centre at Dudhwa. Signed 'Voice of the Dead Tiger', it says: "I was shot as a man-eater in 1959 because accidentally I killed a boy who came to cut grass from the patch where I was resting. My tigress was also killed under the same pretext. What a joke. You human beings call me king of the jungle but don't want to spare even a patch of grass for me to rest undisturbed."

—RAMINDAR SINGH in Dudhwa

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

There are briefcases and briefcases, but a VIP is a VIP.



In an age where everybody looks like everybody else, VIP makes you feel like the leader.

Because it's a leader in its own right. The one with the widest range, the latest features and the smartest colours. To make your choice easier.

Don't just get yourself a briefcase. Get the VIP treatment.

VIP Briefcases
a VIP makes all the difference

BPL/2417

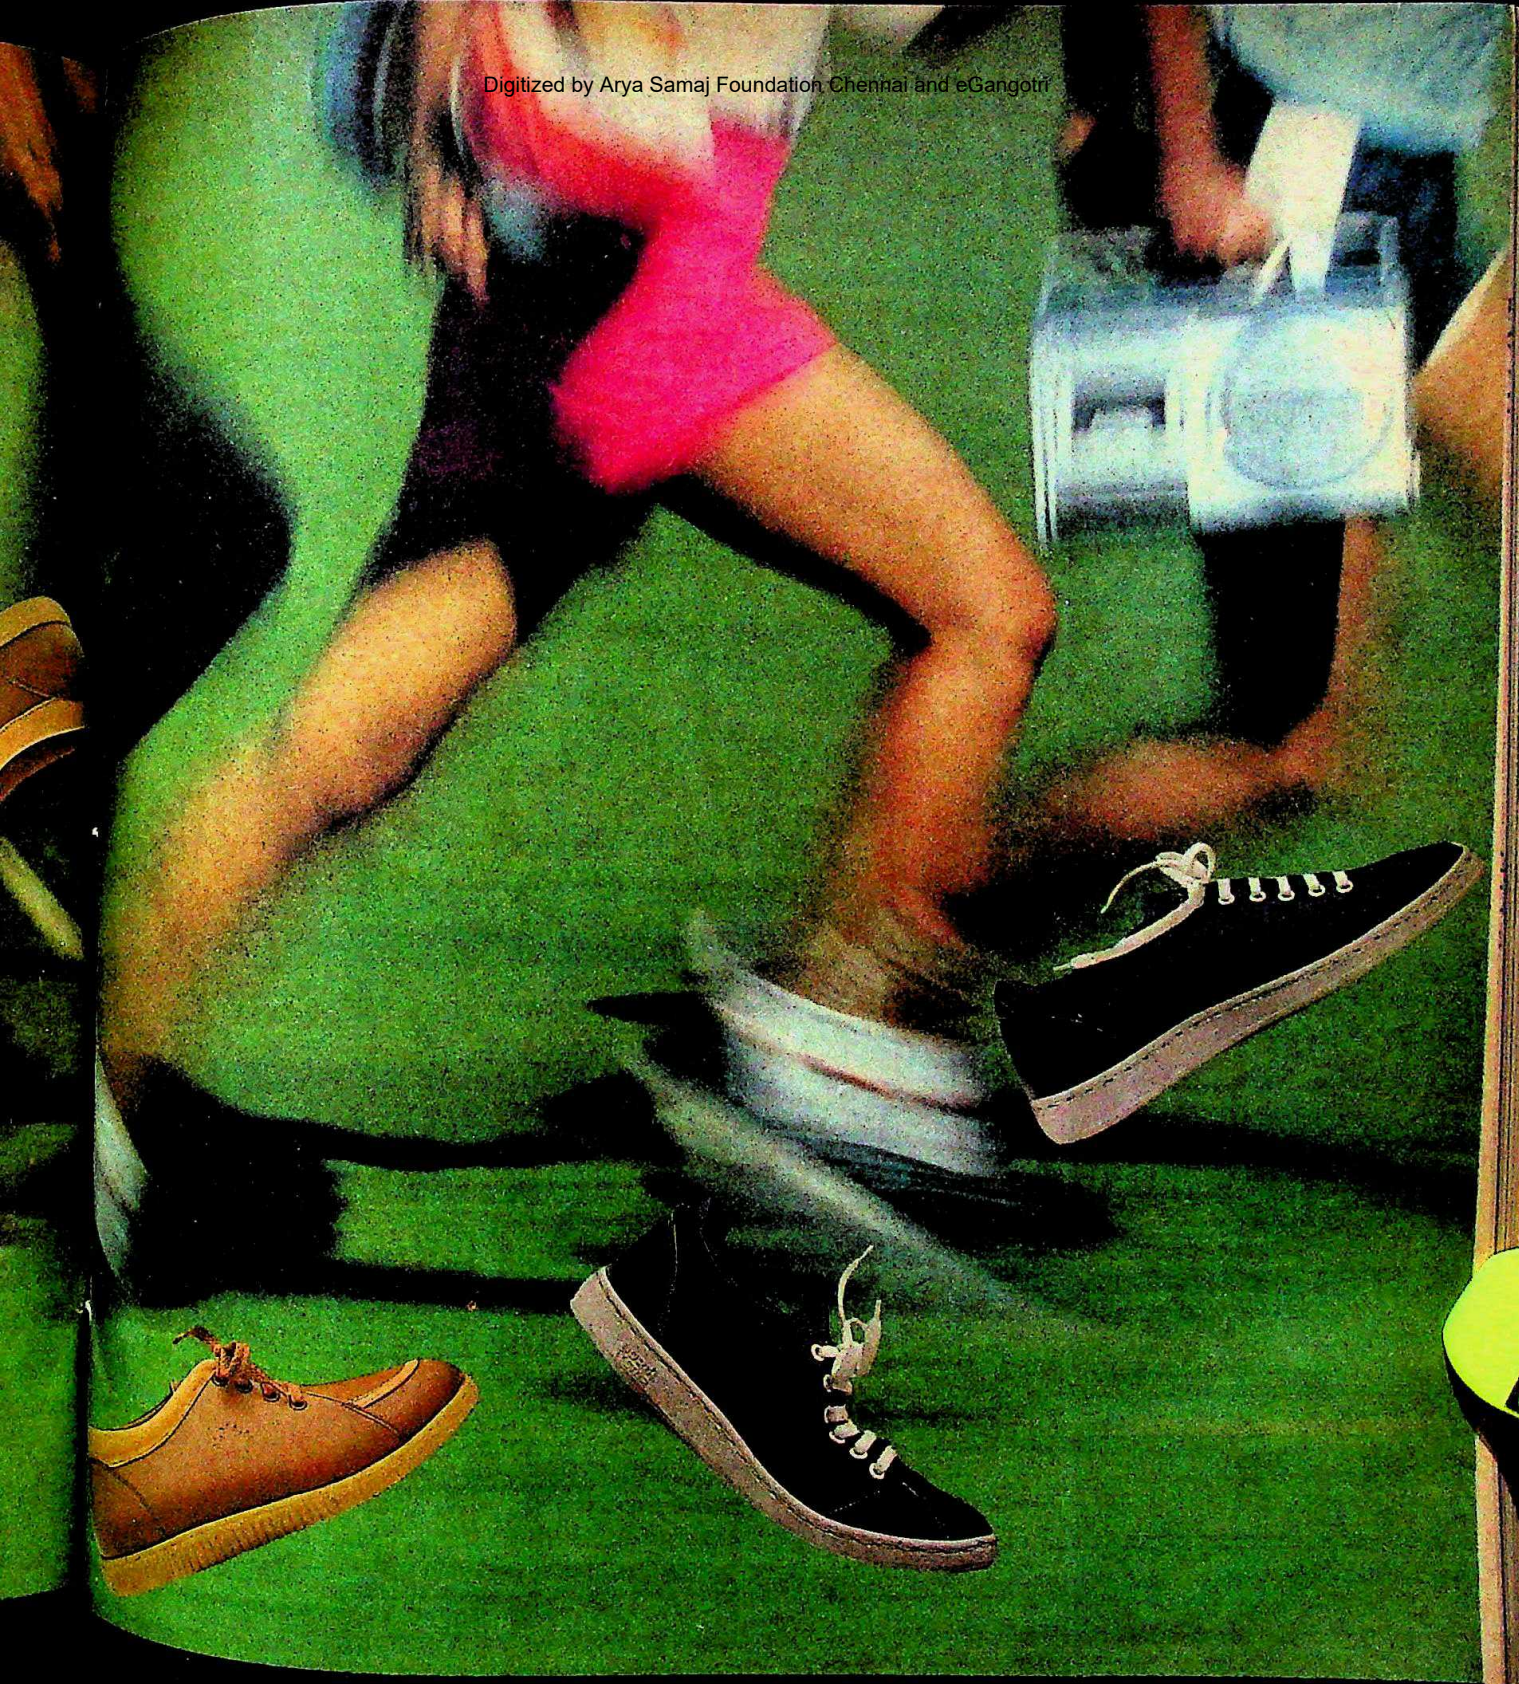
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FOOT LIB

Available at select Bata & BSC stores

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



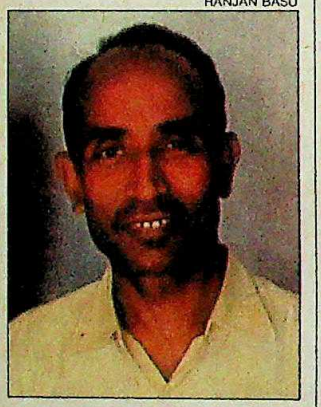
NORTH STAR®

It's a great feeling!

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

◆ Move over Germaine Greer. Make way for Shyam Sunder Lal Gupta of Delhi, a diminutive and nondescript man who has just struck a vital blow for Men's lib. Gupta, 51, became the subject of an unprecedented court verdict last month which ordered his divorced wife to pay him Rs 1,200 per month as maintenance. After 32 years of marriage, a daughter, a son and two grandchildren, Gupta divorced his wife last year "on grounds of cruelty". Since he had lost his job years ago and gifted his house to the wife, he had no option but to claim maintenance. Said Gupta: "I believe it's men who are persecuted by women. Even the laws are in their favour. And I am proud I have broken this." He has now started an International Federation of Indian Men to fight the oppressive tyranny of women.

RANJAN BASU



Gupta: men's lib

◆ The Kapoor clan has a penchant for doing their own thing. While Papa Shashi Kapoor was busy in his world of art films and glamour, his teenaged blonde-haired daughter Sanjna Kapoor, upped and moved in with her current boyfriend Aditya Bhattacharya, son of director Basu Bhattacharya, who has been recently rated by one glamour magazine as "the sexiest man in India". Sanjna then made her second independent move, this one on stage—as Raina in Motley's production of Shaw's Arms and the Man in Bombay, thereby giving notice that yet another Kapoor is readying to join the big bad world of showbiz.

◆ Party-buffs all over Delhi were all agog at the familiar-looking female who turned up at all the important social events and seemed to know everybody, but they couldn't quite place her. The lady would've come and gone unrecognised had someone not spilled the beans. It was none other than Asha Puthli—minus the streaks and tinsel in her hair but still aglitter and aglow. In India to do a music video for her talk show on cable TV in Manhattan, the jet-set singer flitted from party to party, dropping names and witticisms at the drop of a Kleenex. "It's a statement, an extension of my beliefs," she said of her show, expounding on the McLuhan concept of global media and cross-cultural phenomena to whoever would listen. "My show deals with a wide range of subjects. Any subject, anyone that shrinks the world into the brotherhood of man," she lectured, while her audience wondered whatever happened to the Puthli of an older, more recognizable era.

Puthli: the cross-cultural phenomenon

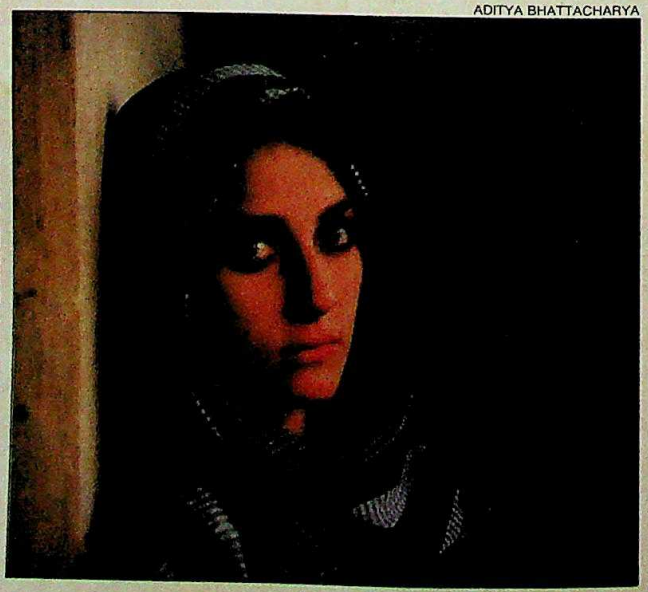
ADITYA BHATTACHARYA



Kapoor: flying into the world of show-biz

◆ "The problem is the image. And you use whichever medium is the most effective. You can use a knife, a pen, a brush, or a lens which can sometimes be sharper than a knife." Thus spake Viswanadhan, 46, intense and frizzy-haired, and laying down his brush, picked up a camera. The result was Sand, his first film in a proposed

HARI OM GULATI

Vishwanadhan: honoured series on the five elements. That he wasn't merely dabbling was proved when his second film, Water Ganga, won the Grand Prix at the Cinema du Reel—the international festival of ethnographical films organised in Paris last fortnight. A wordless visual study in colour of the sacred and inviolate river and the people along its course, the film won the respect of the jury and critics for its stark beauty and sensitivity. Viswanadhan, who finds cinema a more tangible medium, says: "Painting is more personal, more internalised. It has the privilege and fear of solitude. It was to break this solitude that I made the film."

—Compiled by MOHAMMED ASLAM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

2015

2014

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

12988

12987

12986

12985

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Storming the Citadel

Benazir Bhutto returned in triumph to Pakistan last fortnight to stake her claim to the legacy of her father, the late Zulfiqar Ali Bhutto. Her tour of the country drew huge crowds. Her presence has altered the political scene and threatened President Zia's rule.

COVER STORY 26

The Pakistan Hand

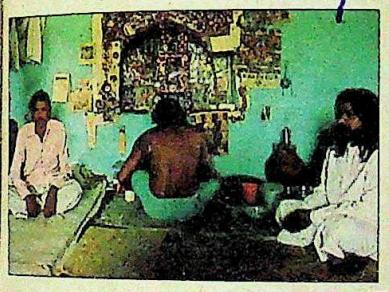
The Indian Government's assertion of Pakistan involvement in Sikh terrorism in Punjab is based on solid evidence. INDIA TODAY has obtained details of interrogation reports of numerous terrorists detailing the extent and nature of the Pakistan hand in Punjab.

SPECIAL REPORT 42

Pre-emptive Strike

Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi struck decisively last fortnight to stem dissidence in the Congress(I) by expelling Pranab Mukherjee and suspending three others from the party. An inside report plus interviews with Mukherjee and Kamalapati Tripathi.

CURRENT EVENTS 46



Dacoits' Dilemma

The dacoits in Gwalior jail, including Phoolan Devi and Malkhan Singh, face new tension and uncertainty with Phoolan's fate a bone of contention between the Madhya Pradesh and Uttar Pradesh governments. An exclusive report from inside the jail.

SPECIAL FEATURE 116

Ershad's Gamble

As the countdown began for parliamentary elections in Bangladesh, the split in the Opposition paved the way for General Ershad to sweep the polls and legitimise his rule, despite a boycott by a major opposition alliance backed up by student militancy.

NEIGHBOURS 128

The Smut Glut

The showing of soft-porn films containing 'blue' scenes that were not shown to the censors but interpolated later has become the biggest organised racket in Kerala. The censors are helpless because of police connivance with the producers of the films.

CINEMA 146

CONTENTS

COMMENT 9
CAPITALOOK 12
VOICES 18
INDIANOTES 23
COVER STORY
Pakistan: Storming the Citadel 26
SPECIAL REPORT
Sikh Terrorists:
The Pakistan Hand 42
CURRENT EVENTS
Congress(I): Pre-emptive Strike 46
Rajkot: Dealing in Drought 53
Bihar: Declaring War 59
Andhra Pradesh: Idle Worship 60
Haryana: Clever Coup 65
Charles Sobhraj: The Sethia Twist 66
Karnataka: Wordy Duel 67
Punjab: Divided Militants 68
Manipur: Death Row 71
[illegible]NOTES 72
[illegible]TO FEATURE
Kumbh Mela:
Nectar of the Gods 74
TRADEWINDS 89
BUSINESS
Tax Raids: Vindicated Efforts 92
Shaw Wallace: Guilt Edged 93
Fertiliser:
Cooperative Success 95
Lcv's: Rough Road Ahead 101
Polyester: Tax Tussle 102
Calcutta: Metro Moves 107
Godrej: Perking Up 108
The Economy Monitor 113
The Markets: Up and Down 115
SPECIAL FEATURE
Madhya Pradesh:
Dacoits' Dilemma 116
CRIME
Karnataka: The Brute of Bellary 121
WILDLIFE
Mysore Zoo: Adoption Aid 122
GUEST COLUMN
Libya: The Reaganeagle Factor 127
NEIGHBOURS
Bangladesh: Ershad's Gamble 128
GLOBE-TROTTING
UK Asians: Ganging Up 132
ARCHAEOLOGY
Lumbini: Monumental Effort 134
HEALTH
Family Planning:
Achieving the Impossible 138
THE ARTS
PWA: Bleak House 143
CINEMA
Malayalam Films: The Smut Glut 146
SPORTS
Australasia Cup:
Drama in the Desert 150
Madras Race Club: Reined In 155 BOOKS
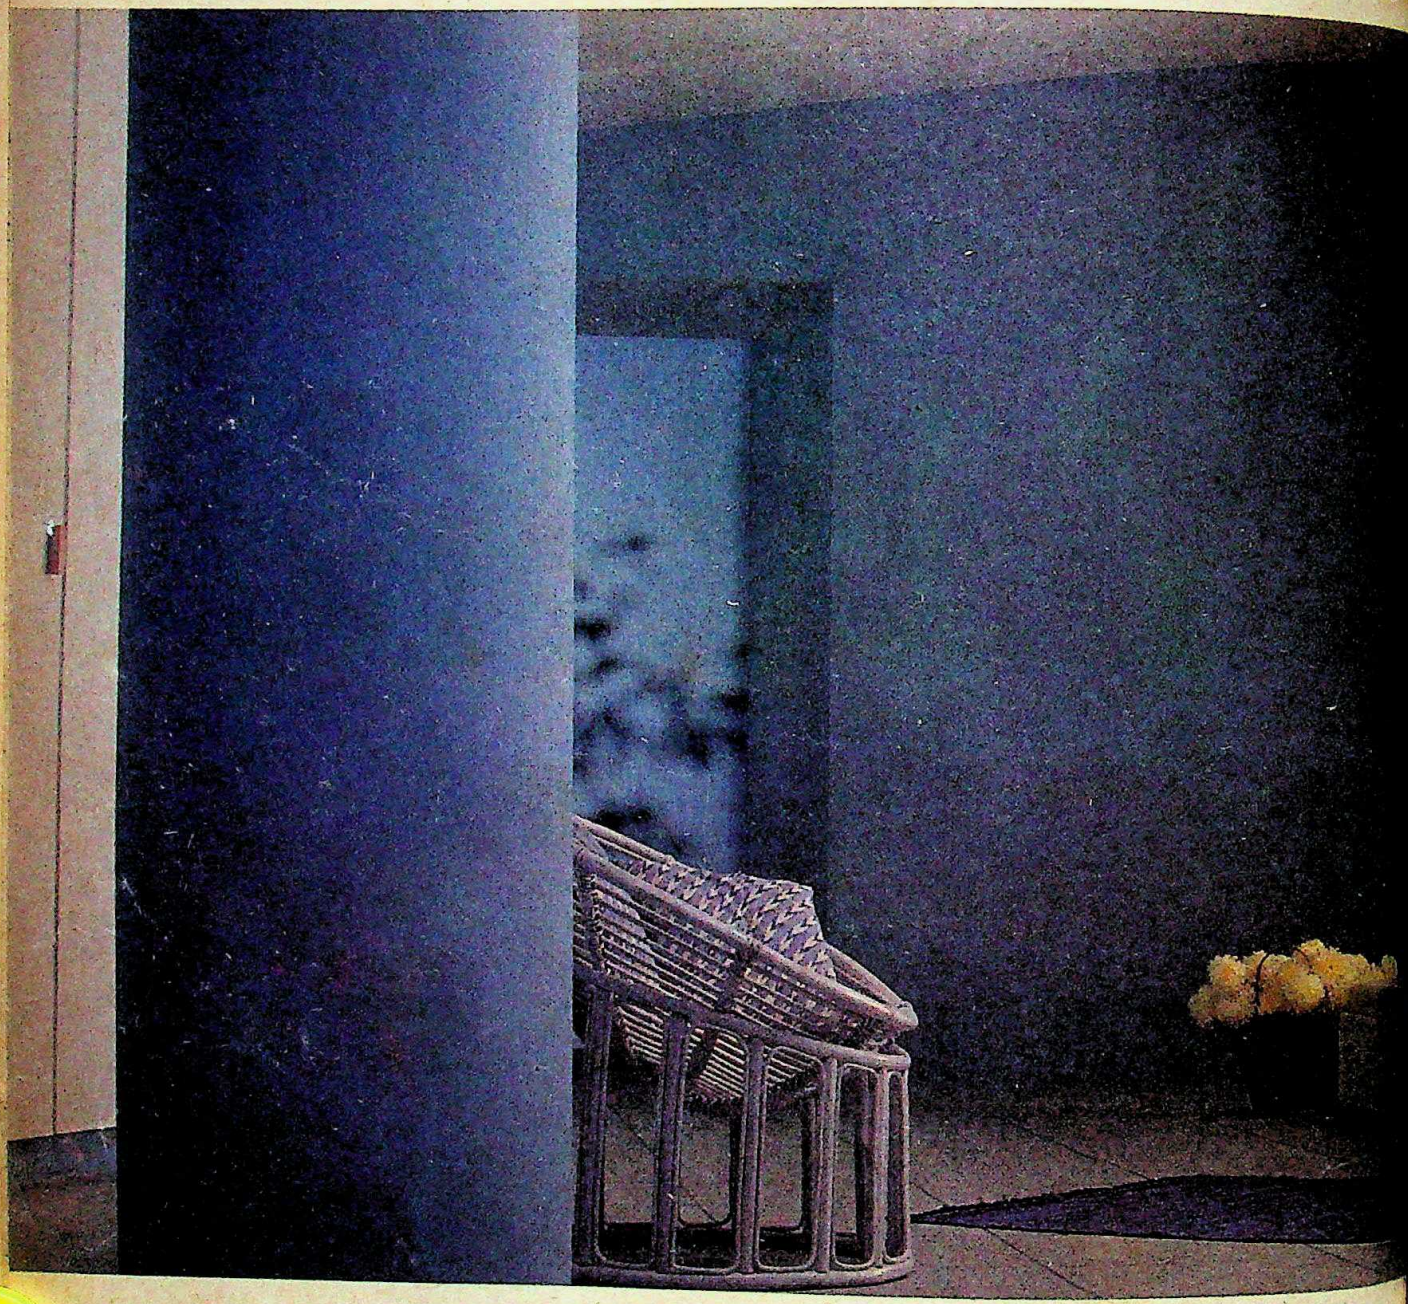
The Last Roar 156
EYE-CATCHERS 160

Cover photograph by SYED AKHTAR ALI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When you choose Dulux Acrylic Emulsion yo



IEL

IEL Limited

Just

Only echnology

More valu litre. An exc

Talking of lo You'd never such a ri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

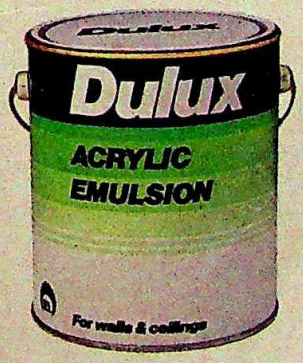
...on you don't have to worry about all these...

Just enjoy that Dulux finish.

Only Dulux 'years ahead' world-wide paint technology can give you a complete wall finish—Dulux Acrylic Emulsion.

More value for your money. More coverage per litre. An exciting range of colours. And, looks that can be easily washed to stay new.

Talking of looks, that's a beautiful surprise for you. You'd never expect an acrylic emulsion to give you such a rich finish. But then, that's the magic of Dulux Acrylic Emulsion. Unmatchable.



The magic of Dulux. No one else has it!

CLARION C-IELAE-3

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

ESCORTS

Why does the Rajdoot continue to be India's largest-selling motorcycle even today?

ESC-9031

BECAUSE 700,000 USERS HAVE EXPERIENCED ITS UNMATCHED ECONOMY, SAFETY AND TROUBLE-FREE PERFORMANCE.

* 56 km/litre (at 40 km/hr with a load of 130 kg).
* Easy availability of low-cost spares.
* Largest service and spares network for easy maintenance.
* Widest range of models to meet everyone's specific needs. Standard and deluxe models to choose from.
* Constant upgradation of technology.
* Best low-speed pulling power in its class.

RAJDOOT
175 cc
Tried. Trusted. Trouble-free.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

VOLUME XI NUMBER 9
FOR THE FORTNIGHT MAY 1-15, 1986

EDITOR
AROON PURIE

MANAGING EDITOR — SUMAN DUBEY
SENIOR EDITOR — T.N. NINAN
PICTURE EDITOR — RAGHU RAI
FEATURES EDITOR — INDERJIT BADHWAR
ASSOCIATE EDITOR — DILIP BOBB
ASSISTANT EDITORS — PRABHU CHAWLA, AJAY KUMAR

CORRESPONDENTS

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT — RAMINDAR SINGH
NEW DELHI — SHEKHAR GUPTA, PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI, RAJ CHENGAPPA, MADHU JAIN
AHMEDABAD — RAMESH MENON
BANGALORE — SRINIVASA PRASAD
BOMBAY — M. RAHMAN, JAGANNATH DUBASHI
CALCUTTA — INDRANIL BANERJIE
CHANDIGARH — GOBIND THUKRAL
HYDERABAD — AMARNATH K. MENON
JAIPUR — SREEKANT KHANDEKAR
MADRAS — S.H. VENKATRAMANI
PATNA — FARZAND AHMED
TRIVANDRUM — SREEDHAR PILLAI
NEW YORK — MADHU TREHAN
LONDON — RAMESH CHANDRAN

NEWS COORDINATOR — RADHIKA ROY

CHIEF OF PRODUCTION — SHIRLEY JOSHUA, ANURADHA KAPOOR

COPY DESK — ANUPAMA GOPAL, SIMRAN BHARGAVA, ANN NINAN

CHIEF PHOTOGRAPHER — BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHER — PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CARTOONIST — AJIT NINAN MATHEW

CARTOGRAPHER — B.K. SHARMA

LAYOUT ARTISTS — LOKESH BHARGAVA, ANUP GUPTA, PEALI DUTTA GUPTA

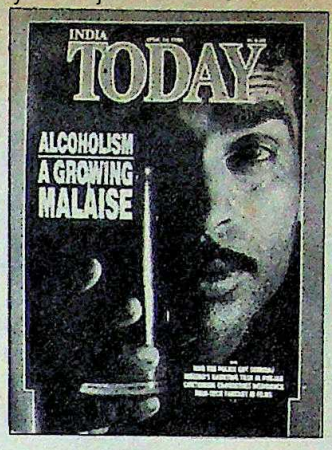
MARKETING DIRECTOR — MOHINI BHULLAR

ADVERTISING MANAGERS

BOMBAY — GEORGE SEBASTIAN
DELHI — NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA — MEERA PAUL
MADRAS — R. ANAND
BANGALORE — L. SRINIVASA RAGHAVAN

GENERAL MANAGER — CHANDER RAI

• EDITORIAL OFFICE LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD, F-40 CONNAUGHT PLACE NEW DELHI 110001. PHONE: 3315801-4. TELEX: 31-61245 INTO IN CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI • SUBSCRIPTIONS: INDIA TODAY SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT, POST BOX 69, FARIDABAD HARYANA • TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA TODAY CIRCULATION MANAGER, F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE, MIDDLE CIR. CR, NEW DELHI. PHONE: 3313076-8. TELEX: 31-4724 INTO IN • ADVERTISING OFFICES: 28 A&B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER II, NARIMAN POINT, BOMBAY-400021. PHONE: 2026152, 2029326, 2029435. TELEX: 11-5373 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BOMBAY • 114, CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001. PHONE: 312070, 312071, 312097. TELEX: 31-66518 THOM IN. CABLES: LIVMEDIA, NEW DELHI • PAGUN CHAMBERS, 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF ROAD, MADRAS-600105. PHONE: 477188,477770 CABLE: LIVMEDIA MADRAS • 74/1ST. MARKS ROAD, BANGALORE-560001. PHONE: 568448, 579037, 579089. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BANGALORE • 12CEVEREST46CCHOWRINGEE ROAD, CALCUTTA-700016. PHONE: 445398, 447726. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, CALCUTTA •
COPYRIGHT 1984 LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. REPRODUCTION IN ANY MANNER IS PROHIBITED. PUBLISHED BY CHANDER RAI FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD, NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT THOMSON PRESS INDIA LTD, FARIDABAD HARYANA • INDIA TODAY DOES NOT TAKE RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL •



TAXING MALAISE

The cover story on alcoholism ("Growing Malaise", April 30) is both interesting and alarming. The only disincentive to excessive drinking and smoking would be an enormous price hike on these commodities. But the Government's collections from taxes on alcohol are substantial and a downward trend in sales would not be favoured. The growing malaise of alcoholism can only be controlled by the Government.

New Delhi — SACHIN SAKSENA

■ The reference in your cover story on alcoholism to 'Mathew', a copywriter in a leading advertising agency in New Delhi, has caused me serious embarrassment as I have been receiving calls from my friends and business associates. I have recently started out on my own after leaving Lintas, my last employers, with goodwill.

In the absence of the full name of the person you are referring to, your report is going to serve as a disincentive to my present and future clients and thereby affect my new business venture. I am sure you will agree that alcoholics do not embark on business ventures and employ staff and premises, as I have done. As far as I am concerned, I have never visited Alcoholics Anonymous anywhere any time.

New Delhi — SAM MATHEWS

The person referred to in our report on alcoholism was not Sam Mathews, and the embarrassment caused by the inadvertent coincidence of names is regretted.

—Editor

■ As a grateful and recovering member of the wonderful fellowship of Alcoholics Anonymous, I wish to express my appreciation for your lead story on alcoholism. AA has perhaps one of the most successful programmes for treating addicts. I would also like to add that we at AA have no desire to dry up the world. Our purpose is to stay sober and help alcoholics achieve sobriety.

New Delhi — MOHAN

REASON WOUNDED

The only hope for Punjab ("Upsurge of Violence", April 15) lies in weaning the mass of Sikhs away from the militants. Those who believe that the militants can be suppressed by physical force are living in a world of illusion. Heinous as their crimes are, the reactions of the press, government and political parties only help the militants' cause. The people wonder why these same groups did not condemn as vociferously the murder of innocent Sikhs in June and October 1984. Why were those guilty of murder then let off, while those picked up as extremists are still kept in custody. Tackling militancy in Punjab is a delicate task requiring an understanding of the Sikh psyche.

Patiala — KULRAJ SINGH AND OTHERS

■ The unending crisis in the state is a pointer to the inefficiency and apathy of the Punjab Government, both the present and the erstwhile ones, in dealing with the fissiparous forces who are out to sunder the country. Determination has been the hallmark of the terrorists, and by their well-planned attacks on innocent people, they have time and again proved that they have the support of alien forces.

Ahmedabad — M.V. RAVINDRAN

■ The communal vein in the terrorist violence is disturbing. The divide between the two major communities in the state seems to be total. The police is totally demoralised and communal. Ribeiro's appointment should boost the sagging morale of the police.

Calcutta — RAJVIR GREWAL

■ Punjab has become another pawn on the political chess-board. Moves are made without consulting the people and the Government's decision is forcing people to make moves that they don't want to. The state needs to tread carefully.

Amritsar — KAMALJIT SINGH GOLDIE

■ The Government's policy of interfering and not allowing the police or those responsible for maintaining law and order to concentrate on one task has meant the weakening of defences. The state is bowing down to the terrorists' sinister designs by not ensuring communal harmony. It's an 'Upsurge of Super-Violence'.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Shimla — VIVEK MOHAN

■ Sometimes the Punjab problem seems quite hopeless. I can't understand why people feel Hindus and Sikhs are not brothers. Sikhism is as much a part of the Hindu religion as Shaivism and Vaishnavism.

Patna — MALAY VAHAN

■ Peace can only be brought back to Punjab by force. If we want peace we must prepare ourselves for war against the terrorists acting at the behest of foreign powers. Every party should unite and work jointly, fired by a spirit of national solidarity. National integration is the weapon for our survival.

Begusarai — RAJEEV BHARADWAJ

■ If the people unite to resist the growing communalism, the terrorists will be demoralised and return to the mainstream. The Akali Government should not be so weak-kneed.

Patna Saheb — MAJOR BALBIR SINGH

LAW OF THE GUN

In your Special Report ("Operation Disarm" April 15), you did not emphasise the fact that the verification procedure for the issue of gun licences is hardly likely to improve the efficiency of the understaffed Uttar Pradesh police. If the Government had the foresight to consider an armed people as a deterrent to crime, such senseless projects would never see the light of day.

Madras — MEHUL KAMDAR

■ At a time when law and order is practically non-existent and the police ineffective, people must be allowed to make arrangements for their own protection. Gun licences must be abolished. History is with us in this regard. It was the British who first introduced the arms licence in India, to disarm the Indian people, after suppressing the 1857 mutiny.

Calcutta — AROUN SHAHI

■ Your article faithfully echoes the sarkari tune regarding reducing the number of licensed weapons with citizens. Licensed weapons are rarely used in committing crimes—a fact which even the Lucknow SSP could have corroborated if he knew his facts. What needs to be curbed is the menace of illegal firearms which outnumber the former 10:1.

Shimla — VIJAY SUD

AGE OLD SCOURGE

"The Dues of Death" (April 15) on the Dom Raja is poignant and moving. Choudhury's pathetic statement, "If I open a shop who will come"? is a telling comment on our society. It is a pity that the scourge of untouchability is yet to free our hearts and minds.

Allahabad — R.K. SINHA

■ It is regrettable that a magazine of your stature has seen fit to publish such bizarre and nightmarish photographs. They are nauseous, to say the least. I have hidden the issue from my children lest they get scared.

Wellington, Tamil Nadu — USHA SUNDAR

BIG DADS

Your article ("Poaching Problems" April 15) has left out the fact that the IAS rules the roost in all departments. Rules are tailor-made to suit them. For instance, a deputation to the public sector means permanent absorption to all except IAS officers, who are free to jump from post to post. They refuse to work in the districts, except as very junior officers, and the IAS is the only service where everybody rises to the level of additional secretary irrespective of competence.

Bangalore — K. NIRMALA

GOODBYE HERO

Tamil Nadu's chief minister ("The Fading Star" April 15) has become a black hole! MGR is a spent force. He should gracefully retire when he is still widely admired and respected. After all, how long can Tamil Nadu tolerate this Rip Van Winkle?

Bombay — SHANMUGHAM MUDALIAR

NORMS FOR BANKS

Your story ("Vulnerable Targets" April 15) raises one question. When the banks do not take adequate security measures, why do the insurance companies compensate them? Is it because the compensation is paid out of public money and not out of their pockets? Also, insurance companies must insist on some security norms that all banks have to follow.

Varanasi — V.K. AGRAWAL

■ Your article quotes Police Commissioner Soman as saying that "nobody knows the procedure to be followed when there is a robbery". But he conveniently forgot the police who issue gun licences indiscriminately, endangering innocent citizens.

Nagaon, Assam — BIVASH MODI

PRESSING REFORMS

Your report on Sobhraj ("The Escape Scandal" April 15) raises a very disturbing thought. If Ved Prakash Garg had not been sacked for leaking his letter to the press, and his suggestions accepted and implemented, Tihar Jail would not be in the soup it is today. It also brings to mind President Zail Singh's statement about the prison: "It is shocking, shameful and unbelievable."

New Delhi — MAJOR SHAMSHER SINGH (Retd)

CORRUPT CAST

The Doordarshan article ("The Money Machine" April 15) made shocking revelations about high-level corruption. Will 'Corruption in TV' figure as the next episode in Sach-ki-Parchhaian?

Allahabad — ANUNTH SHREENIVAS

■ On the day I was reading your article, Doordarshan screened the telefilm Hum Nahin Sudhrenge, which centred on corruption. Perhaps by showing this film, which was suddenly brought in place of another film, Doordarshan wanted the viewers to know that things just won't improve.

Bombay — K.S. VENKATESWARAN

JUMBO EXPOSE

Your exposure of Air-India's manner of leasing freighter aircraft ("Double Dealing", March 31) has put the airline's officials on the mat. Instead of setting their house in order, the Maharajah's men have inserted a quarter page advertisement in leading newspapers in defence. There is nothing new in their denials, which could have been made through a press release as is the practice.

Riyadh, Saudi Arabia — NAJMA WARSI

■ Your article ("Bad Taste" March 31) ridicules our efforts in exporting fresh fruits and vegetables. On the contrary, Air-India should be congratulated for not cutting its freight rates since now there will be more going round for the common man at reasonable prices.

Pune — D.B.N. MURTHY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

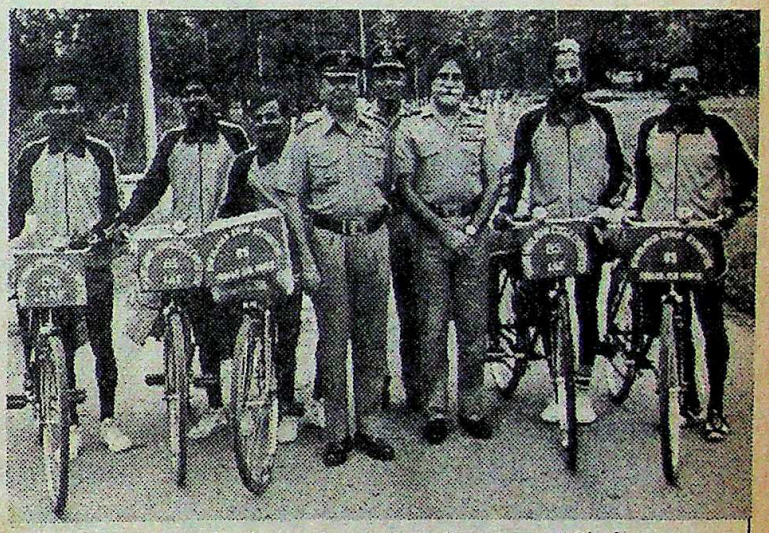
The toughest test of men and machines.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

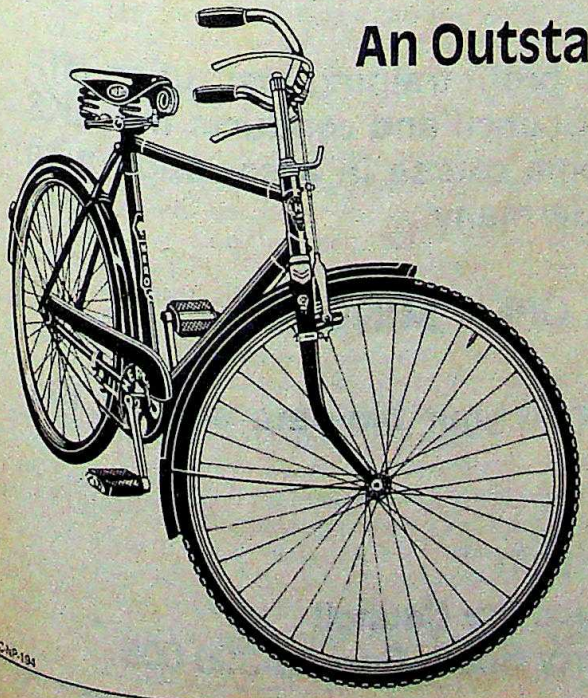
Air Marshal M.M. Singh Flags Off the team at Leh

A historic 5350 Kms. Journey from Leh in Ladakh to Chabua in Assam in just 94 days.

Dare-Devils of Air Force Adventure Foundation take to wheels in a Trans-Himalayan Expedition on HERO BICYCLES



Air Marshal P.P. Singh receives the team at Chabua



An Outstanding Performance Indeed.

The valiant fliers of the Indian Air Force embarked upon an adventurous venture on ground through Himachal Pradesh, Uttar Pradesh, Nepal, Sikkim and Bhutan on Hero Bicycles and HERO stood by them on its wheels.

HERO

India's Largest Selling BICYCLE

HERO CYCLES PVT. LIMITED, LUDHIANA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Hundreds of businessmen have succeeded without an MBA degree.

None has succeeded without common sense.

The EKS Advanced Management Correspondence Course is built around this sober truth.

Rather than belittle management education, EKS highlights the crucial factors — instincts, insights, gut feelings, emotions, power and, above all, strategy — which can build success or tear it apart.

Baroda Productivity Council is a non-profit training institution affiliated to the National Productivity Council and conducts the EKS (Energo-Cybernetic Strategy) diploma course in association with Mewes System of Frankfurt, West Germany.

Minimum qualification : ONLY AN OPEN MIND.

For the course prospectus please mail your bio-data and Rs.10/- (postal order or money order) to :

EKS Division
3 H, Baroda Productivity Council
Productivity House, Productivity Road, Baroda-390 005.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

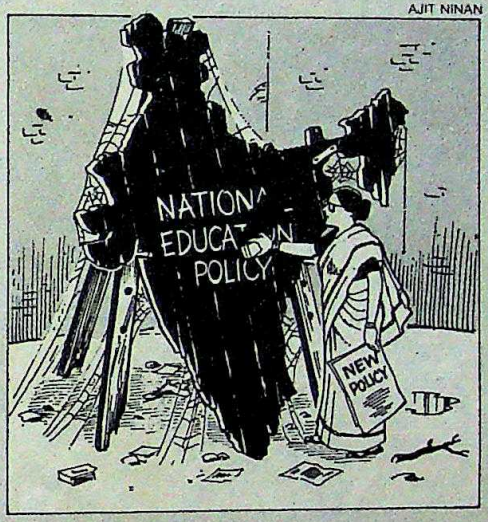
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Learning Reform

THE SPECIALISTS may say what they will, but the problem with education in this country is very easily put. Too serious a business to be left to governments alone, education is a mess because there isn't enough money, teachers don't teach, children often don't learn, most schools and colleges don't really equip the young for productive work and education by and large doesn't prepare the next generation for modern, civilised, responsible living. Everything else is a matter of detail.

What is easily put, however, is hard to change. The answer to reforming education is clearly more than a matter of issuing a policy. There have been policies before; there was nothing wrong with the education policy of 1968, nor with the concept of the 10+2+3 system unveiled some years later. The problem was not in the ideas they espoused; it lay, much more, in the determination and ability of the authorities to implement them—and, still more, in the obstacles to a thorough overhaul.

AJIT NINAN



The new education policy must be viewed against this sort of background. The new document says little that isn't well known already. The aim to create a new education service or to set up navodaya vidyalayas—model schools which were first put forward by the Kothari Commission in 1966—may or may not turn out as intended, but no one can quarrel with the emphasis on improving the education of the so-called backward communities or women, or with the idea of reforming the examination system or creating a national curriculum with a common core and variable add-on components. The idea of vocationalisation, or shifting a growing stream of school-leavers (almost a quarter by 1995) to vocationalisation is admirable, as is the intention to de-link jobs from degrees, and the move to put education on the concurrent list of the Constitution and thereby make it the joint responsibility of both the Centre and the states.

But, as in the past, it isn't intentions that are the problem. These intentions, and others that will undoubtedly be thrown up in the public debate that is to follow, are good and deserve to be supported. But they don't address some of the crucial issues which have made a mockery of education and caused it to deteriorate so sharply in the past few years. The facts are indisputable and at one level it is the steadily eroding quality of educational institutions everywhere that needs to be addressed. Why, for instance, is there an increasing trend to privatisation, especially in professional institutions where serious students are willing to pay capitation fees and those who can't afford it must make do with lesser quality government institutions? Why is it that in Kerala, government schools close and private ones flourish?

What is there in the new drive for vocationalisation that may cause it to succeed when all such previous efforts to do so have failed? What will the Government do about the growing criminalisation of campuses which obliges it to post policemen as vice-chancellors? Or about the widespread cheating that has become virtually a national characteristic, leading to the extraordinary high rate of failure in public examinations which are properly conducted? Or, indeed, the rampant political interference—and not just of the Nilangekar kind—which bedevils the campuses and which has little to do with the nuts and bolts of education. And these are only the proverbial tip of the iceberg.

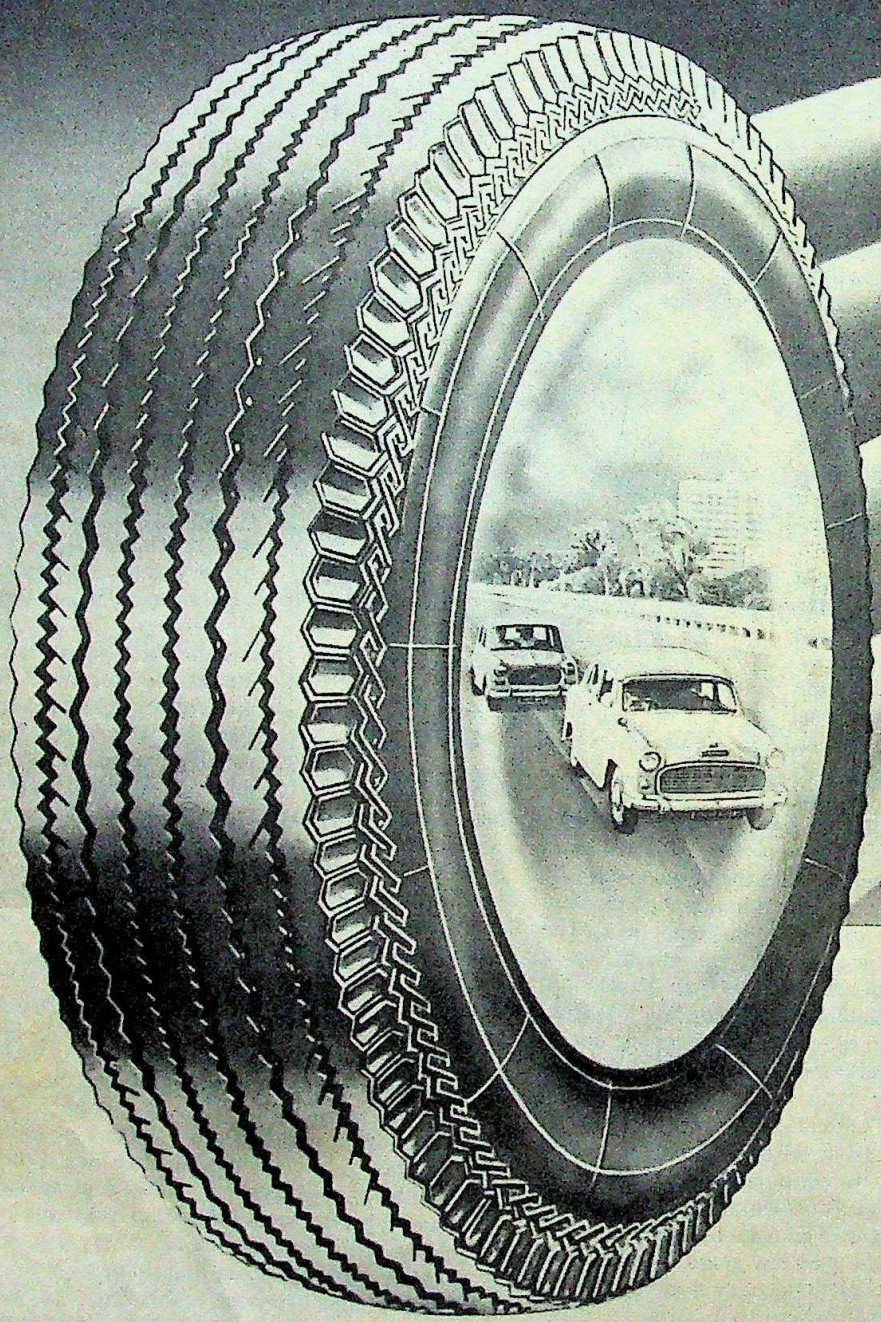
Yet they indicate that the answers do not lie merely in statements of policy, and a new policy is not, in itself, going to usher in the sea change that is being sought. The problem, at a deeper, more fundamental level, is that reform can come only with a change of social attitudes, and money. For example, is society, for instance, willing to accord teachers the sort of monetary and public status they enjoy in western and some eastern countries where they are looked up to and paid decently so that better talent is attracted to the profession and they are properly motivated and can inspire their wards? In reforming the examination system, is the Government, along with parents and students, prepared to invest the confidence in teachers that is needed to make for a proper, fair and progressive evaluation system? It is precisely because the answer to this has so far been en emphatic 'No', that students are forced to learn by rote and cram their way through exams. Are parents, for instance, willing to rebel against the payment of bribes for admission or force their children not to cheat if that is the only way they will obtain that priceless piece of paper, a degree, which qualifies them for employment of any kind? Consider the move to de-link degrees from jobs. Even if the Government takes a lead, is the upwardly mobile working class and the middle class willing to divert its young, all but the brightest of them, to vocational institutions to learn a trade or profession rather than prepare for a generalised written test at the end of a meaningless three years spent in a college to get a clerical job?

A society gets the kind of education system that it deserves, and change will come only if society at large is not just willing to but actively wants to make that change. The impulses that guide the conduct of schools and colleges emerge not from what the Government decrees but from what society wants. People, who are simultaneously products of the education system and its users, must want change and want it badly enough to actively participate in that change. Unless this realisation goes home, all policy changes put together will result in little more than superficial change, and a new education culture will remain a distant dream.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

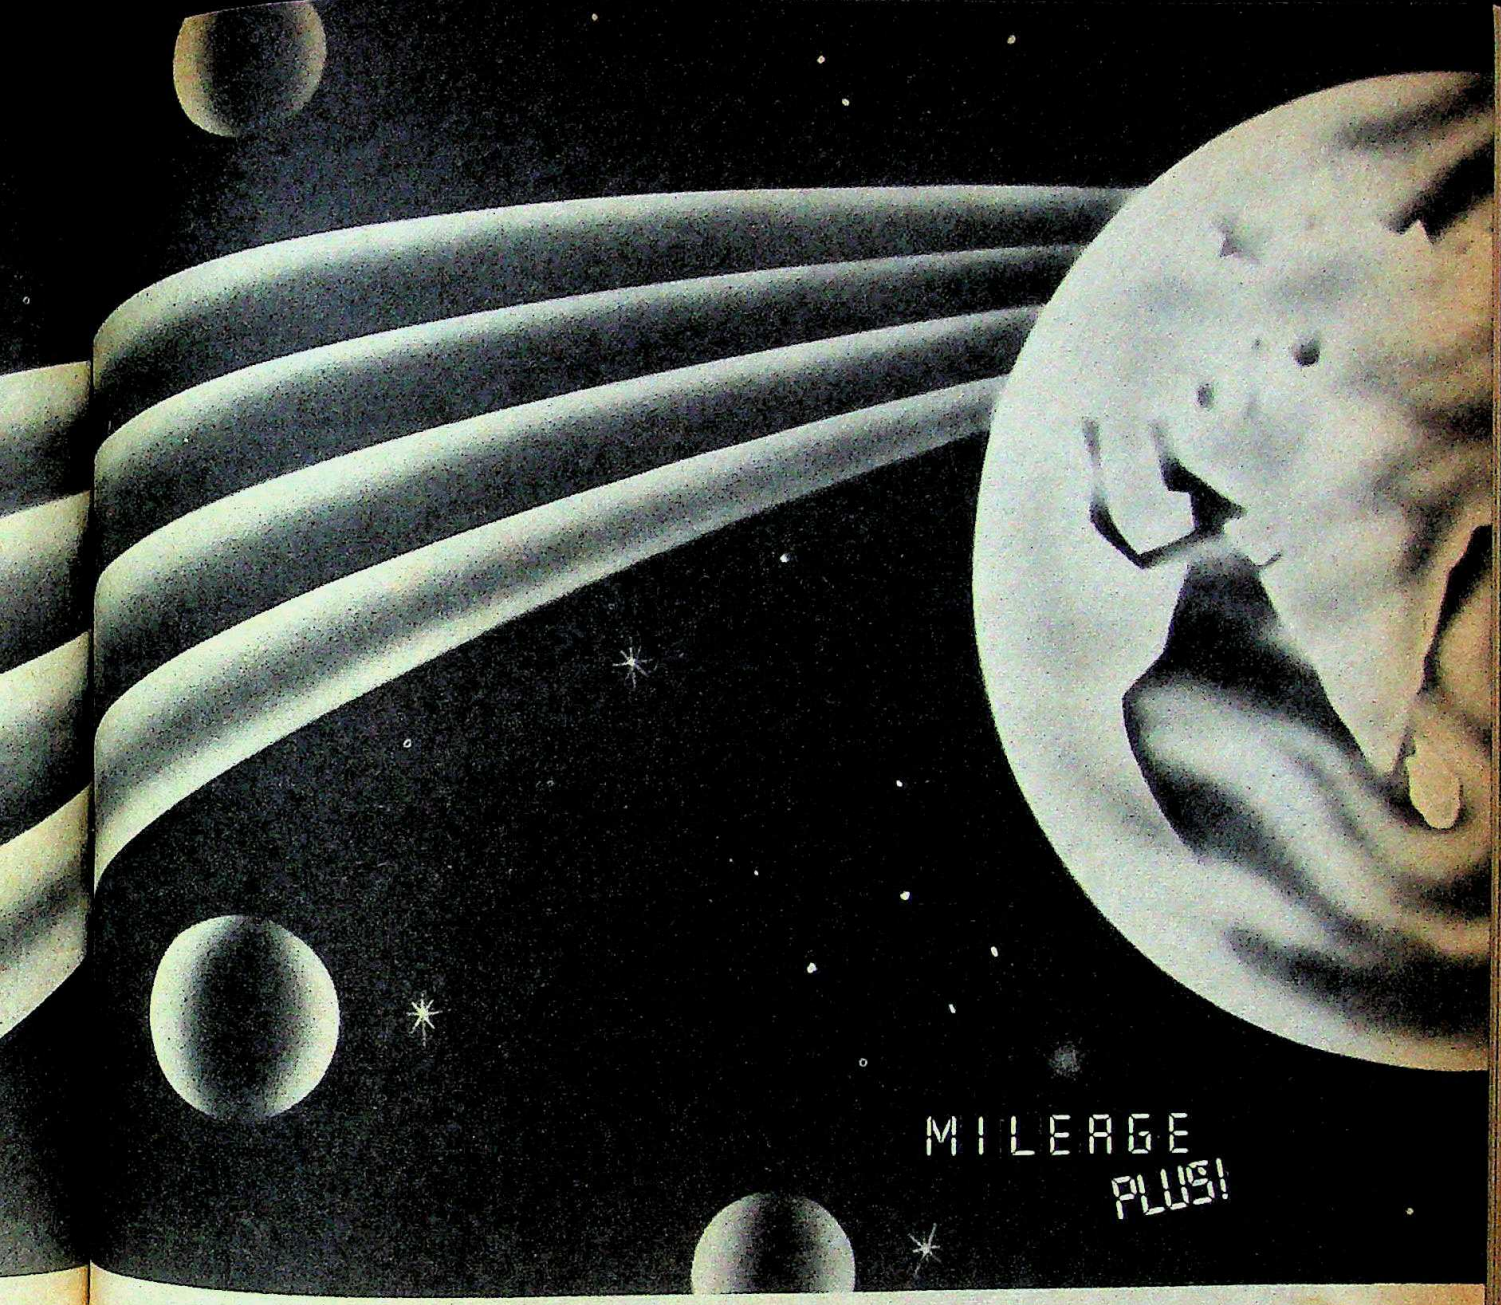
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Breakthrough beyond expectations



Modi Continental R80 Nylon Car Tyre

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar



Quite immodestly it's a breakthrough!

An Investment of Research

Crores of rupees of Modi Continental research has created R 80 – the state-of-the-art nylon car tyre.

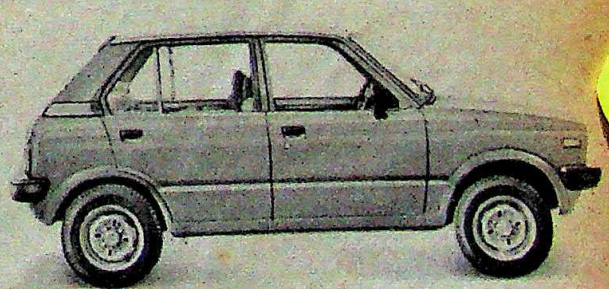
To give you more

The R 80 premium is extra wide, giving you a surer grip.

The scientifically designed tread surface with 15% more non-skid depth, the seven zig zag shaped ribs and the width give you a road grip you've never known.

Beyond Expectation

Yes! It's a breakthrough beyond expectations. With better mileage than you ever thought was possible. Don't let technology pass you by. Change to R 80 — a footprint ahead of the rest.



Modi Continental

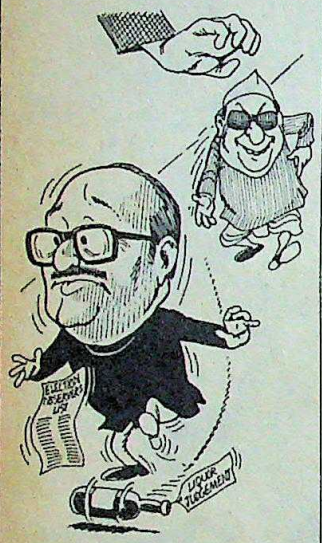
Tyre that never tires

C-0[illegible] Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Falling Out

● Even though the Congress(I) is yet to formally announce the dates for the all-important party elections, the run-up to the event has already started taking its toll. Party Treasurer Sitaram Kesari and Vice-President Arjun Singh, once the closest of political allies, have fallen out over the list of observers for the elections.

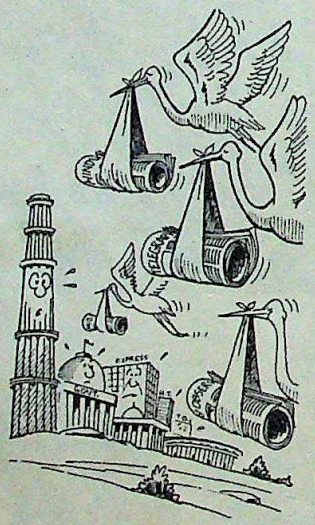


Kesari, who was known for the way he had successfully managed the party elections the last time they were held in 1972, was offended that the list had been drawn up without taking his advice. Singh had drawn up the list himself without consulting other party functionaries and then asked Kesari, and some others, to have a look before it was finalised.

Kesari pounced on the Madhya Pradesh High Court judgement striking down the liquor policy, decided upon by Singh when he was the chief minister, as a handy lever to get his own back. Kesari, who is also minister of state for parliamentary affairs, made no attempt to disguise his feelings and openly declared in the Central Hall of Parliament that the judgement was a "shame" and the party could not but take serious note of it. Obviously, word of this reached the prime minister and Kesari was chastised because the very next day Kesari, a regular in the Central Hall and one of its most vocal stars, was missing from his regular haunt.

Media Rush

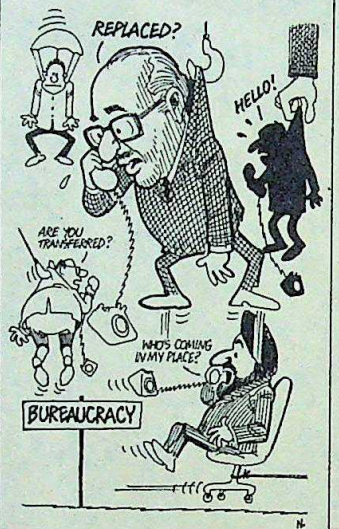
● Delhi seems to have become the new media Mecca if current publication plans are any indication. The Bombay tabloid Mid-day has already made its appearance on Delhi news-stands along with the weekly Sunday Mail, and a host of others are waiting in the wings. The Madras-based Hindu has plans to launch a Delhi edition shortly as do the Calcutta-based Telegraph and the Bombay weekly paper, Sunday Observer. Meanwhile, the Singhania group's plans to launch a daily from Bombay called India Post also includes an eventual Delhi edition.



Considering the fact that Delhi already has five general and two financial dailies, the rush to Delhi also heralds a new media war. The Singhania paper, the brain-child of Vijaypat Singhania of Raymonds, is offering fat salaries in a bid to lure away the best journalistic talent and give the established national dailies a run for their money.

Transfer Mania

● The country's top level bureaucracy has been bitten by the transfer mania. The imminent retirement of three secretaries to the Central Government has galvanised the bureaucratic gossip grapevine and over a dozen secretaries are rumoured to be in line for transfers or promotions very shortly. The transfer trauma has temporarily suspended work in the ministries as the concerned secretaries make frantic attempts to decipher their fate by trying to exchange rumours and extract information from each other about their prospects in the Goverment. As soon as the prime minister and his cabinet leave for Parliament, the RAX telephone starts buzzing in the offices of the secretaries concerned. One senior secretary rang Revenue Secretary Vinod Pandey and told him that he was being shifted to Krishi Bhawan as Agricultural Secretary. Yet another senior bureaucrat floated a rumour that Civil Aviation Secretary S.S. Sidhu, is replacing Cabinet Secretary P.K. Kaul. But the most interesting of bureaucratic gossip was that some senior secretaries are being shifted so that both G.K. Arora an additional secretary in the prime minister's office and Roop Krishan Tikoo, the central government's establishment officer may both be promoted as secretaries. They belong to the 1957 batch of the Indian Administrative Service.



Twisted Tale

● The Government has awarded the controversial Hazira-Bijaypur-Jagdishpur (HBJ) pipeline contract to a consortium of firms led by France's Spie-Capag, but the story is not quite over. In a surprise twist to a convoluted tale, Majestic Contractors Ltd, one of the members of the unsuccessful Canadian-French consortium, has now decided to virtually pull out of the country, leaving behind only a mailing address at a firm of accountants in the capital.

Majestic has bid for a number of pipeline contracts in the last four years but has not achieved any great success so far. In the wake of losing out on the prestigious HBJ contract therefore, the company has decided to wind up its offices in the commercial wing of New Delhi's Ashok Hotel and, after giving its handful of Indian employees the golden handshake, is currently shopping around for buyers for its office equipment.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

You are looking at our new International selection of suitings.

POLYESTER WOOL, WORSTED AND POLYESTER BLENDED SUITINGS

SUITINGS FROM THE Cezari COLLECTION

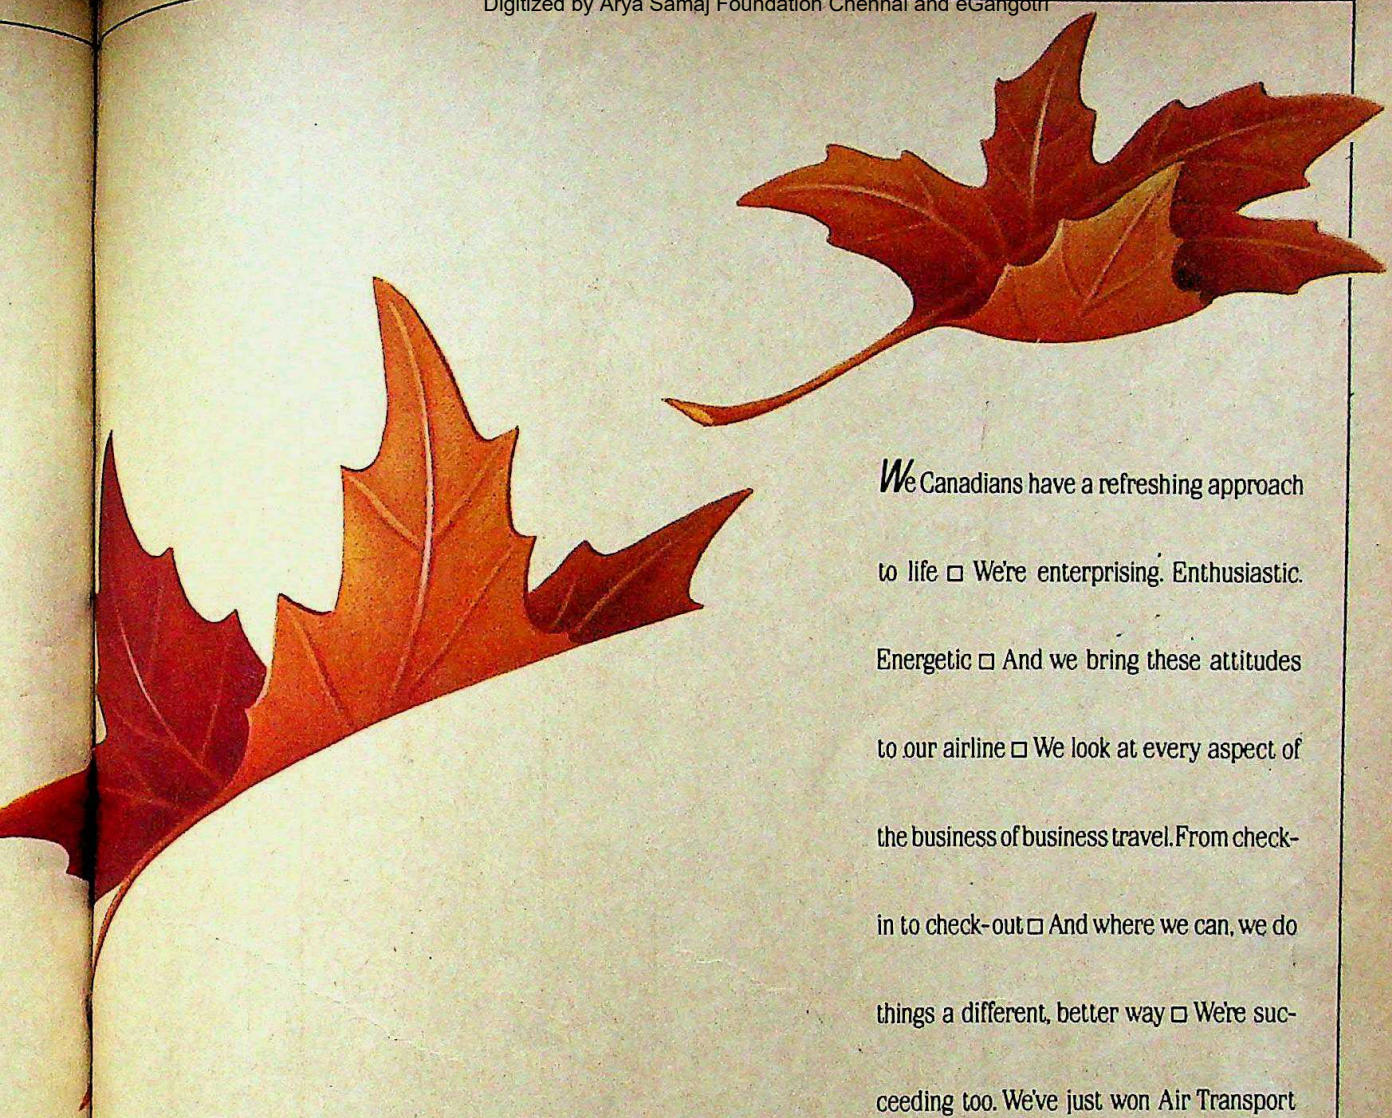
BOMBAY DYEING

CC-0. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



We Canadians have a refreshing approach to life □ We're enterprising. Enthusiastic. Energetic □ And we bring these attitudes to our airline □ We look at every aspect of the business of business travel. From check-in to check-out □ And where we can, we do things a different, better way □ We're succeeding too. We've just won Air Transport World's Passenger Service Award □ We believe that airline travel needs a fresh approach. So when you have the option, opt for Air Canada □ We think you'll enjoy the breath of fresh air we're bringing to flying.

A BREATH OF FRESH AIR

AIR CANADA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

We'll deliver. Wherever on earth. SKYPAK The worldwide couriers.

Avenues SC 2378

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

तमसो मा ज्योतिर्गमय

"O God! Lead me from darkness to light."
Man's eternal quest. For light is life. And light is our business. With a production line of quality torches, dry cells and miniature bulbs.

Right since independence,
GEEP's founder, Late Mr. M.R. Shervani, realised that portable light source will continue to be one of the basic necessities for hundreds of millions of Indians, especially where other fruits of progress will be slower to reach.

GEEP is now playing a much wider role.
Guided by the philosophy of its founder of delivering the masses from darkness of fear, ignorance and backwardness. Subserving everything else to common good.

GEEP

(A Shervani Enterprise)

Geep Industrial Syndicate Limited
A national pride

Plane Pack/GIS/285

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
INTERNATIONAL EDITION

GIFT INDIA TO SOMEONE YOU CARE FOR...

GIFT FOR _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ CODE _____

COUNTRY _____

Please send one year's subscription of INDIA TODAY, International Edition and my gift card to the person named above. Enclosed is my cheque/DD/M.O. for Rs_____ payable to Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.

MY NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ CODE _____

COUNTRY _____

Send this advertisement and payment to:
Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.
Subscription Department
P.B. No. 69, Delhi-Mathura Road
Faridabad 121007, Haryana, India

Annual Airmail Subscription Rates

Rs 185
BANGLADESH
BHUTAN
NEPAL

Rs 345
AFGHANISTAN
BURMA
MALDIVES
PAKISTAN
SRI LANKA

Rs 385
BAHRAIN
CHINA
HONG KONG
INDONESIA
IRAN
IRAQ
KUWAIT
MALAYSIA
OMAN
PHILIPPINES
QATAR
SAUDI ARABIA
SINGAPORE
TAIWAN
THAILAND
U.A.E.
YEMEN

Rs 485
AUSTRALIA
EGYPT
ETHIOPIA
FRANCE
W. GERMANY
GHANA
GIBRALTAR
IRELAND
JAPAN
KENYA
SOUTH KOREA
LEBANON
LIBYA
MALAWI
MALTA
MAURITIUS
SEYCHELLES
SIERRA LEONE
SOUTH AFRICA
SUDAN
SWITZERLAND
SYRIA
TANZANIA
U.K
ZAMBIA
ZIMBABWE

Rs 585
BAHAMAS
BARBADOS
BRAZIL
CANADA
FIJI
GUYANA
HAWAII
JAMAICA
NEW ZEALAND
PANAMA
U.S.A.

NH 943

● Within a few weeks the prime minister seems to have shed some of his wide-eyed innocence. He seems now to have acquired a sharper awareness of the gravity of his problems, partly because the easy confidence with which he set about solving some is now clearly seen to have been misplaced.

■ Editorial comment in The Statesman

● The post of Lok Dal president is not vacant. As long as Chaudhary saheb is among us, and we hear that he is recovering fast, he remains the president.

■ H.N. BAHUGUNA in The Sunday Observer

● By the same yardstick, doesn't that mean that the press is very fickle?

■ Prime Minister RAJIV GANDHI in answer to a question on whether his honeymoon with the media was over

● Whenever there's a negative reaction from the Opposition, I take it to be a compliment. If they try to disturb the meetings, abuse or stone the gathering—it means I made my presence felt, that I'm bothering them.

■ AMITABH BACHCHAN in Onlooker

● I feel deeply hurt since the statement demanding my resignation came from you and since I am also trying to bring about a clean administration as you are perhaps trying to do at the national level. It appears this itself is an offence.

■ R.K. HEGDE, Karnataka chief minister, in a letter to the prime minister ● Sobhraj is smart but obviously I'm smarter than he is.

■ M.B. ZENDE, Bombay police inspector, after arresting Sobhraj

● History will prove that Thimpu was an act of statesmanship. We have known that Jayewardene was wily...I don't think anybody felt an answer was around the corner.

■ ROMESH BHANDARI in The Illustrated Weekly of India

● You must realise that those wanting to create Khalistan want that Lahore should ultimately be its capital. They (the Pakistan Government) allow the Sikhs to take out processions in Lahore, but when our mothers and sisters try to come out to demand democracy, they treat them ruthlessly.

■ BENAZIR BHUTTO at a public meeting in Sargodha

● As an Indian citizen I protest against the appointment of Pierre Cardin as designer for our hostesses' uniforms. Do we have to march into the 21st century in somebody else's clothes?

■ M.V.KAMATH in Mid-Day

● There are several other ways by which you can fuse the East and West. Marry a European, eat their food, speak like them. But leave shastriya sangeet alone.

■ USTAD VILAYAT KHAN commenting on East-West fusion music in The Sunday Observer

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

ONLY VIMAL

From India's most modern textile plant

ONLY VIMAL

Summer of Vima

Easing into a glorious summer. Lightly. With Summer-styled Polyrich Suitings. In shades that put summer in the shade. And textures that just breathe. Ah.

VIMAL® A RELIANCE PRODUCT

Polyrich Suitings

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The greatest cooling power under the sun.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Most air conditioners work well when it isn't too hot.

But when the mercury climbs over 40°C, they start to wilt from heat exhaustion.

And by 46°C, there's just one machine in India still going strong.

Amtrex.

The only one specially engineered to handle extreme heat.

In Delhi, for instance, only Amtrex survives peak summer without the help of a water tank.

And in cooler cities, Amtrex takes on the summer like a wrestler lifting a teacup. The largest rooms are cooled in a matter of minutes.

Space does not permit us to spell out the technical evidence. But in brief: Extra large cooling coils. Larger air flow. Oscillating louvres. A perfectly balanced air conditioning cycle.

And for the first time in India: Gas charging on an automatic machine. A powder-coated body for corrosion-resistance. High-precision rippled fins.

Our sales executive will give you the details.

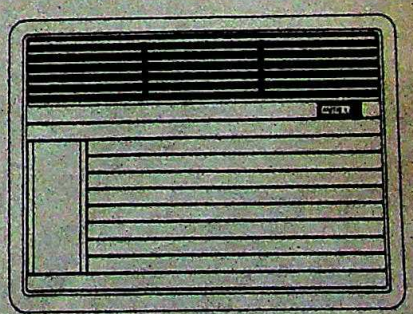
He'll also tell you about our after-sales support: Seven-days-a-week service. Complaints attended to in 24 hours.

And if your machine has to be taken away for repairs, we install a standby.

Amtrex has already found its way into some of India's best addresses: Reliance. Gwalior Rayon. Hoechst. Diners. Bank of India. Escorts. Bank of Baroda. Canara Bank.

If you'd like to add your name to this distinguished list, get in touch with:

Amtrex Ambience Pvt. Ltd. (An enterprise of Lalbhai Industries Consolidated) Rachana, Opp. Bombay Garage, Shahibaug Rd, Ahmedabad 380 004. Tel: 383035. Branches/offices at: Bombay: 233909. Delhi: 5718634. Calcutta: 443988. Madras: 474535. Hyderabad: 236104.



AMTREX

Air conditioners

0.5, 1.0, 1.5 & 2.0 tonnes

Also: reversible and split units

lection, Haridwar

Trikaya. A

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FASHION SPORTSWEAR

THAT'S A LOT OF FUN

Power now zips you up from top to toe in professional sportswear. Track suits, jogging suits, shorts, T-shirts, socks, specialist sports shoes. And to carry your kit, snazzy soft bags in a variety of shapes and sizes. Power combines the best of both worlds. Scientific design to aid your performance and a casual elegance that makes you look great anywhere you go.

POWER®

makes the DIFFERENCE

Available at select Bata & POWER stores

CLARION/CBATPA-2

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TELLING TUNE

■ If you can't lick 'em, join 'em, is one of the wisest of old sayings and if any enterprising person interested in old sayings wanted to confirm the truth of this hoary utterance, he couldn't have done better than to visit SSN College at Narasaraopet in Andhra Pradesh.

There, in the heat and dust of the afternoon, students were poring over question papers for the junior intermediate exams. Soon, as has become the practical norm these days, they began poring over their notes and books in order to be better able to answer the questions. And oblivious of the invigilator who sauntered leisurely around. To be fair to him, he wasn't the usual invigilator but a stop-gap panchayat babu who had been rushed in to fill the breach caused by a teachers' strike.

And he had his priorities right: for when the chief superintendent of examinations came calling, the vigilant invigilator burst out whistling Mandakini's air from Ram Teri Ganga Maili. The students were nonplussed for a moment, but had the sense to put their books away, just before the chief superintendent's un-Mandakini-like features hove to round the door. If music be the food of success, play on!

SEEDY STORY

■ Arutha Rao is an inspector of factories in Khammam district of Andhra Pradesh who had clearly inspected well but not wisely, with the sad result that he ended up before the disciplinary tribunal. Not a man to be cowed down by events, he took this setback phlegmatically, determined, apparently, to turn it to his best advantage.

So he appeared in court, armed with nothing but his virtue and a small pouch. Judge K. Taranath hadn't come yet, and Rao walked up quietly to the judge's chair, opened his pouch and started sprinkling seeds on it. Even as the seeds rolled this way and that, a bank clerk noticed Operation Seedstar and grabbed Rao. Rao offered him seeds, was refused, offered him money, but even that didn't work, and was hauled up by the police.

In the police station, he explained his sudden change to farmer. The seeds were potent things, capable, it was said, of influencing anybody to change his mind. Rao had tried to make the judge change his, but ironically succeeded in making him more determined than ever to teach Rao a lesson. These seeds fell on barren ground.

SACK KNOWLEDGE

■ Books are the cream of civilisation, and no home is complete without a few of the paper oblongs adorning a shelf or two. And the best haven for a tired mind and body is a library with a high ceiling, thick walls, and rows upon rows of shelves groaning with the wisdom of the ages.

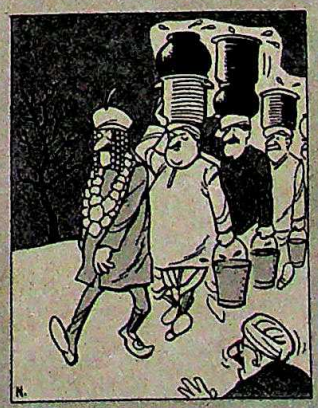
The government KKTM College at Pulloot near Kodungalloor in Kerala is quite a nice place. But this abode of learning has one startling deficiency: it doesn't have a library worth the name, the library being a small room with a couple of cupboards. But the KKTM College would not like to lag behind anybody and so it has gone ahead buying books by the dozen for its eager students to imbibe information from.

The only problem is, there's nowhere to keep them. Therefore, the management, even as it waits for some good Samaritan to come forward with the price of furniture, has made use of the cheapest and most versatile packing material: gunny bags. Hence the curious sight of young boys and girls going about their studious business with gunny bags slung on their shoulders as they search for the particular book they want. Well, no one said that the search for truth was easy.

WATER OF LIFE

■ As Rajiv Gandhi knows by now, Rajkot in Gujarat is facing what stony-faced Doordarshan news-readers call an "acute water shortage": so everybody is wandering around with his tongue lolling out and anything will do.

The father of a bride in a village in Banaskantha district pondered the problem one morning. The groom and his horde were due to arrive and though he had tried to get as much water as he could, he knew there wasn't enough. And when there wasn't enough one knew that tempers could rise with little to cool them down. By the time the bridegroom's bus signalled its presence by a cloud of dust, he was tearing his few hair out and biting his last serviceable nail.



But an angel stepped off the bus, a rather dusty angel in the shape of the groom's father, who pointed to the water cans his followers were unloading. "This," he told his opposite number who, not believing his eyes, was almost touching his feet, "is Palanpur water. Have a sip and let's keep the rest for the happy occasion." And they drank happily ever after.

—Compiled by JAGANNATH DUBASHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BRILLIANT more than 'tutorials'–
A MOVEMENT!

'Tutorials', in common parlance, suggests an emergency ward for exam casualties. The dictionary gives no such narrowed meaning to the word 'tutor' or 'tutorial'. Tutorials can impart a wide spectrum of positive services, including helping ambitious youth outscore others in competitive exams, which is essentially what Brilliant is about.

While student performance in exams justifies our existence, we nurse other goals, like holding up a student ideal to the nation's youth. What the student is today, the nation is to-morrow.

We zealously guard the opportunity we have to come in contact with some of the best brains among our students in a crucial phase of their growth, when they weigh their options for a suitable career.

We wish to foster in our students a taste for the pure pleasure of problem–solving.

We aim at imbuing them with a passion for study of natural phenomena to the point of emotional fusion with them.

We would like our young minds to bend to the imperative impulsions of imperious logic as in solving mathematical problems.

We wish to see above all the discipline that steadies them while they are engaged in a self-oblivious objective study of the complex world around them.

Our main satisfaction derives from assisting in the emergence of an intellectual elite ever anxious to have a hand in helping humanity forward.

BRILLIANT TUTORIALS

12, Masilamani Mudali St., T. Nagar, Madras-17
Ph : 442099, 443308

EMINENCE THROUGH EXCELLENCE

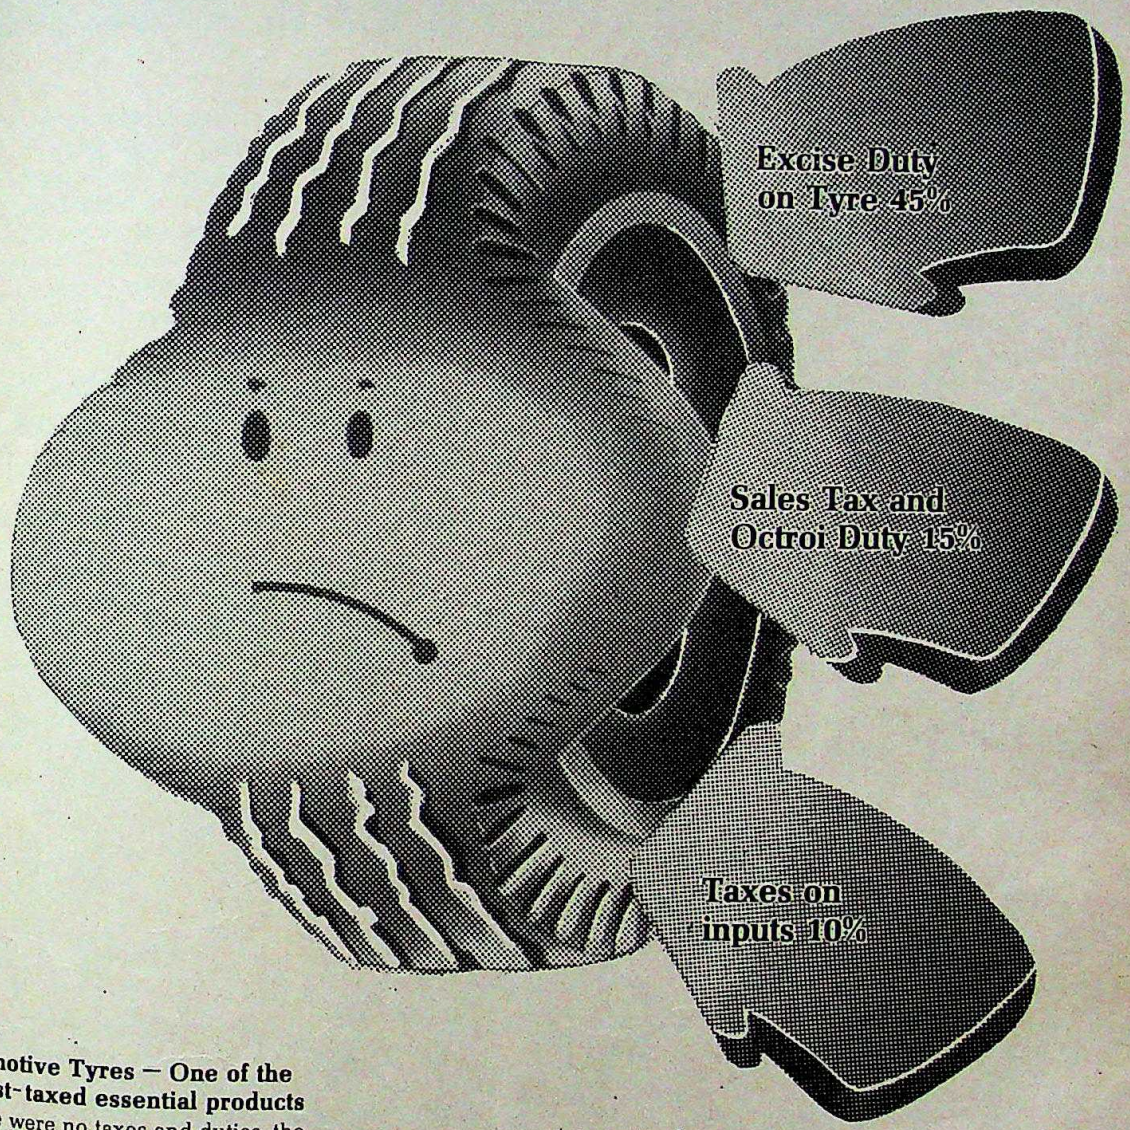
BRILLIANT FOR *IIT-JEE * XGIPILS *MBBS ENTRANCE * MBA ENTRANCE *IAS PRELIM *TOEFL *TARGET-IIT

Efficient/BT/449/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

What Inflates Tyre Prices?



Automotive Tyres — One of the highest-taxed essential products

If there were no taxes and duties, the price of a nylon truck tyre will be Rs. 3000. This price is inflated by over Rs. 2000 on account of taxes and duties.

Is it right that tyres (that move the common man and his daily necessities) attract a higher rate of duty than many luxury items?

Raw Material Prices — More than Double the International Prices

Item	Rate Per Kg.
	International	Indian
Natural Rubber	Rs. 10	Rs. 18
Nylon Tyre Cord	Rs. 35	Rs. 92
Carbon Black	Rs. 9	Rs. 23

Is it not paradoxical that natural rubber (grown in India) costs nearly twice as much as the landed price in England (which grows no rubber)?

Can the tyre prices come down?

Yes they can. Indeed they must. To revive the Road Transport Industry. And to accelerate the growth of the Automobile Industry.

The Tyre Industry believes that a tyre is not a luxury, it is an essential commodity. The wheels of industry run on it. The Tyre Industry is anxious to bring down prices to reasonable levels. And will do so. If taxes and duties are reduced. If raw materials are made available at international prices.

For more details about the tyre industry contact:-

Automotive Tyre Manufacturers' Association

108, Uday Park, New Delhi-110 049

Indian Tyre — the better tyre

SPACE PLAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BENAZIR BHUTTO Storming th

THE FRAIL arms rise majestically over her chadar-covered head, much in the fashion of an orchestra conductor, beckoning, at the same time, to the crowd to join in. But the waiting multitudes hardly need any such exhortation and hundreds of thousands of palms reach skywards in frenzied clapping, rhyming with the slogan of "Ajj tan ho gayee Bhutto" (everyone chants Bhutto's name today). The frenzy builds up to an even higher peak as the conductor begins to hurl flower-petals at the crowds in almost child-like enthusiasm and even the content and tenor of the slogans changes rapidly. A new chant begins: "Zia-Junejo, laanat bhejo" (rid us of Zia and Junejo) and many more follow growing increasingly angrier and abusive.

Suddenly, in the burning Punjab plains this summer, the political temperature has shot to a degree no one anticipated, surprising even Benazir Bhutto, the 32-year-old daughter of late Pakistan President Zulfiqar Ali Bhutto, now making a bid for her late father's legacy and bringing in grudging nods of acceptance even from her arch rivals, the leaders of the Pakistan Muslim League who run the national cabinet. And, above all, General Zia-ul-Haq, the longest lasting military dictator in Pakistan's history who, for the first time, faces a serious challenge to his regime. "This kind of a thing isn't surprising," he said at Islamabad last fortnight, arguing, "the steam always blows when the lid is taken off the vessel of boiling water."

On another plane, a better expression could hardly have been found for the Growing from strength to strength and reassured by the massive show of popular support, Bhutto's daughter was threatening to change the political scenario in Pakistan.

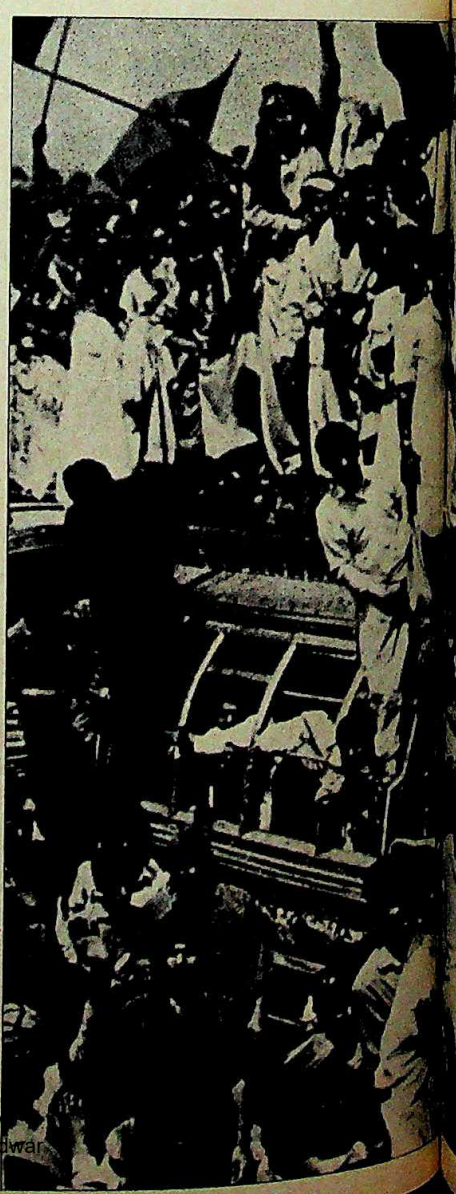
Benazir surrounded by her supporters (left); and a section of the crowds at a public rally

ASHRAF NAGI



Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the Citadel

current mass upsurge that is engulfing Pakistan with the rapidity of a flash flood. Suppressed for nearly a decade, their right to free speech and political activity kept in the deep-freeze of martial law, and their popular leaders either in exile or incarcerated in prisons, the masses of Pakistan last fortnight were drowned inextricably in a catharsis, a sense of release and relief and, more vitally, a belief that the worst was finally over. "With such an expression of popular mood, rest assured, no one in Islamabad will think of imposing martial law again in a hurry," argued a Lahore academic. Added S.M. Zafar, law minister in Ayub Khan's cabinet and a Muslim League leader: "This successful solo flight by Benazir has rendered the very logic of the politics of the last nine years irrelevant. All of us politicians have to change our thinking and strategy to the changed situation now. Everything has worked out for her like a dream and she has an extraordinary opportunity."

For Benazir, making a political comeback after nearly two years of exile in London, it indeed was an extraordinary opportunity. And the exuberance of success was evident from day one. Said an exhausted but excited Benazir, shortly after the tumultuous, 10-hour truck ride into Lahore, the gateway of Punjab: "With that kind of following, today I could have taken over by force, burnt the cantonments, burnt the ministers, houses and taken over the secretariat. But our party is against violent means. I hope Zia gets the message now and does not try to dig in his heels."

If the million-and-a-half strong gathering at Lahore was dismissed by her detractors as merely a crowd of inquisitive Pakistanis curious to see Bhutto's attractive daughter, doubts were soon laid to rest. Growing from strength to strength and reassured now by the massive show of popular support, Bhutto's daughter was threatening to lock horns with Zia, announcing a deadline of autumn for holding fresh elections. "Or else," she threatened, "we will launch a peaceful campaign to throw out this government."

Suddenly, the arrival of the young former President of the Oxford University

ASHRAF NAGI

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Union was threatening to change the whole political scenario in Pakistan. A bit like Indira Gandhi (she begins her speeches with a deadpan "Bhaiyon aur Behnon') and every bit a Bhutto replica spouting populist jargon and socialist rhetoric, she was soon engaged in a blistering campaign that took her across Pakistan. From Rawalpindi to Multan and Sargodha to Lahore, where political fortunes are traditionally made, and into the North-Western Frontier Province (NWFP), she was delivering the same message with telling effect: that the days of dictatorship were over, that the country needed an immediate mid-term poll and finally, though not in so many words, that it was time power was restored to its rightful heir.

If none of the other meetings broke the record in numbers that Lahore had notched on April 10, in each city or highway intersection where she stopped to address a meeting, record books were being rewritten. At Peshawar, lakhs of people gathered to the Pushto chant of "Zia za" (Zia go), and in the interior of Punjab at Gujranwala and the textile town of Faialabad, lakhs waited until the early hours of the morning to hear Benazir who had, by now, perfected her message, ending each speech with "and you have all decided now that Zia should...Jaawe.." Repeated a dozen times while crowds joined in the rhythmic incantation which echoed long after she had driven away atop the highly decorated truck that has become her favourite pulpit.

While this new political gale swept the Punjab plains, the men in power in Islamabad were trying to work out just how bitter was their moment of truth, and in the absence of reassuring political logic, were pinning their hopes on the theory that Benazir's crowds were nothing but a seasonal phenomenon driven by curiosity more than by any political commitment. "This is just a short drama," said Federal Information and Broadcasting Minister Shujat Hussain, whose father, Chaudhri Zahoor Elahi, had been murdered by Al Zulfiqar, the pro-Bhutto extremist organisation many years ago, adding "The people who are going to see her at the rallies are mature and understand the meaning of destabilising the democratisation process we had initiated. Her appeal will fade away in no time."

Prime Minister Mohammed Khan Junejo, who initiated his own round of public meetings in various parts of Pakistan, was more hesitant. "We will put no restriction on these rallies as long as they conform to law. But no one can question

While this new political gale swept the Punjab plains, the men in power in Islamabad were trying to work out just how bitter was their moment of truth.

President Zia (left); and banners graphically painting the popular mood

RAGHU RAI

CC-0. ... Gurukul ... Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the fact this is a democratically elected government," he said at Sukkur, and diplomatically added: "If the people want elections at some stage we could look at that demand."

His anxiety was amply reflected in the actions of Arbab Jehangir, the chief minister of NWFP, who took the risk of attending Benazir's Peshawar meeting to get an idea of the crowd strength, and in a rash of decisions by the Government to please the people. While Junejo promised to give possession of land to slum-dwellers, a process first initiated by Bhutto, there was a stray reduction in prices, and even a hint that the Government was considering a substantial cut in oil prices. "We want to counter this campaign of curiosity with sound work," said Punjab's savvy Women's Affairs Minister, Shaheen Atiqur Rehman, who asserted: "Surely, people will realise who stands for development and who for revenge. I can say most emphatically that people want no more destabilisation in the country now."

General Zia himself launched straight into the campaign against the Bhutto demand for mid-term elections stating repeatedly that in no circumstances could "street-power be allowed to take over power from a legally elected government." But there were signs of nervousness even among circles close to the Government. Late last fortnight, Shujat Hussain had begun loudly declaiming the "persistent use of abusive language" in the Bhutto rallies, and at lower levels, government supporters were warned of the possibility of violence if the campaign continued.

At the same time, there were also indications of another kind of change of mood. The most telling instance, obviously, was the backing for the mid-term poll demand by none else than Yusuf Jogazai, the deputy speaker of the Pakistan National Assembly, just as Speaker Sayed Fakhr Imam—considered a political heavyweight sitting on the fence—spoke of such a possibility in London. And Pakistan Peoples Party (PPP) leaders did not mask their optimism. "A new realism is dawning on these people who have no people, not even a cat or a dog behind them," said PPP spokesman Salman Taseer, claiming: "I have seen people run miles, barefoot, along the Grand Trunk Road just to get a glimpse of Benazir Bhutto. She is their Joan of Arc, with courage, credentials and she is attractive. The people are bowled over."

If indeed the people were bowled over, it was due to Benazir's tellingly effective use of the three most potent weapons in her arsenal: the nostalgia for her father and his family, the craving for a freer political system and the insecurities inherent in Pakistani society, such as the apprehension of an economic crunch and the acute xenophobia given the presence of India and the Soviet Union on the flanks. But her stock weapon was the first of these. Her cheer-leaders called her "Benazir, Bhutto ki Tasveer, Qaum ki Taqdeer, Inquilab ki Shamsheer." (Bhutto's reflection, nation's fate and the sword of revolution) and she herself played up to that sentiment with consummate skill. Seeking to cash in on her father's execution exactly nine years ago, she and her partymen rarely refer to him by name. He is just called shaheed (the martyr), and at each rally crowds shout the slogan of "Jab tak suraj chand rahega, Bhutto tera naam rahega". A cry so familiar across the border in India. True enough, the Government had realised where the threat lay and had decided to counter it directly.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Zia himself led the campaign in Karachi asking how could the people allow someone to claim right to power "generation after generation" without asking questions on the past record of the family. "Even when you go to a cattle or horse fair, you asked questions about the pedigree of the animal you want to buy," he said regretting that the same question was not asked of politicians making hereditary claims to power. At another level the Government supporters were accusing her of raising fascist slogans and perpetuating a personality cult.

But it does not take much to see who is winning in this game. Said Murtaza Sheikh, a Rawalpindi businessman: "The real surprise is the kind of sympathy wave we see for Bhutto today, nine years after the event," and added, "now they wave his huge portraits saying he brought glory to the gallows anew and the day he was executed not a dog barked on the streets." That bit of analysis, however, has another significant aspect. A lot of the sympathy that Benazir is able to draw today comes from a sense of guilt among large sections of the population for having taken the execution so timidly. At her roadside rally at Chungi Amar Sidhu on the outskirts of Lahore Lubna Butt, a teenaged cheerleader orchestrating the crowds said: "Nine years ago Zia committed a murder. But we committed a bigger crime by keeping quiet. This is time for revenge and for making amends." The Bhutto nostalgia is an integral part of the Benazir gameplan: her bodyguards invariably turn out

INTERVIEW

"We want to bring popular rule"

SHE SITS taut and erect, her frail frame sinking into the plush upholstery of the sofa. Surrounded by the shouting, screaming, shoving mob of males around her, she looks like the young damsel in distress. But her aura of authority permeates the large drawing-room of the mansion in Lahore's exclusive Gulberg locality. At 32, Benazir Bhutto, or 'Miss Sahiba' as she is called by her reverent, partymen, is a woman in control. "I am a tough person now," she says. It is this toughness and tenacity that makes her so dominant in Pakistan's political firmament today. Last fortnight, she gave an exclusive interview to Principal Correspondent SHEKHAR GUPTA in Lahore. Excerpts:

Q. Did you anticipate the kind of reception you have got in Pakistan? Why did this happen?

A. We did indeed anticipate that people were in this kind of mood. What has happened is historic and unprecedented in the history of this country. People think they have, in the PPP a vehicle of change to democracy. They see it as their best chance to get rid of the tyranny of nine years and Zia has no choice now but to go.

Q. What do you think will be General Zia's next step?

A. There is nothing very much he can do now. We do not want to be vindictive. There is a door open to him and he can walk out of it. But if he doesn't and tries to play tricks, people will not tolerate it. We will remove him surely but through peaceful means.

Q. Don't you think he could bring in the army to crush your movement? He has used the gun before.

A. I am not sure he can rely on the same gun any more. The army also gets influenced by the popular mood. I am not sure if they will shoot at their own people again. Also, General Zia must understand the possible consequences of calling in the army when he has himself lost popular support. In Pakistan that happened once before when Ayub Khan decided to call in the army and then General Yahya Khan immediately said thank you sir, khuda hafiz (good bye), and took over the power himself, I hope the same mistake is not repeated now.

ASHRAF NAGI

Q. Are you not trying to usurp in the streets the power that some say they acquired through elections?

A. To begin with General Zia came to power by deposing a popularly elected government. He never had the people's mandate to take over power in the country. Now they held a sham election and claim popular backing. The other day a minister had the cheek of claiming that the Pakistan National Assembly members had been voted in by 50 per cent of our people. I say just this. Can you come out in the streets and collect even 50 persons behind you? They must understand now that their time is up.

Q. Are you not trying to perpetuate dynastic rule?

A. What do you mean by dynastic rule? Dynastic rule means ruling by divine right. But when we have such overwhelming support of the people who are totally disillusioned with the regime it is not the perpetuation of a dynasty.

Q. What do you think is the greatest challenge facing you today?

A. The immediate challenge is to translate this mass upsurge into a meaningful movement to bring in democracy.

Q. What will be your future strategy? How do you plan to translate this support into a movement leading to power?

A. I am not making a bid for power. We only want to bring popular rule back to Pakistan. The people's courage and enthusiasm is enormous and we plan to gradually raise the pace of the movement while keeping it absolutely peaceful. I hope good sense will prevail and Zia will see the fait accompli. But if he

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

in T-shirts reading "long live Bhuttoism".

But in a country obsessed with future gazing there are as many voices as there are 'political maulvis' as to the exact contours of her game-plan. The most acceptable scenario, however, is that following the demonstration of her mass support through public rallies across the country she would have proved two points: that the people want change and for this the vehicle they prefer is her party and not the smaller parties in the loose conglomerate of the Movement for Restoration of Democracy (MRD).

"It is a bit tragic," says MRD idealogue and prominent Lahore lawyer Aitzaz Hasan, "that she has decided to make the rest of the MRD irrelevent to begin with rather than attacking the army which will be her biggest rival in the quest for power." But such niceties apparently did not figure in Benazir's scheme of things though she made an effort to placate the other opposition leaders by holding a long meeting with the frontier leader Khan Wali Khan at Peshawar and planning another with Baluch Patriarch Ghaus Bux Bizenjo at Quetta in the first week of May. But she had, so far, deliberately avoided making a frontal attack at the army though she repeatedly taunted the generals for giving away the Siachen glacier to India.

According to political analysts in Pakistan, she is possibly hoping for a deal with the army leading to Zia's ouster. Says Maushahid Hussain Sayed, the articulate young editor of Islamabad based English daily The Muslim: "Her assumption number one is that the Americans would be prepared to ditch General Zia-ul-Haq the way they have done with their long standing but unpopular allies in the Philippines and her assumption number two is that her demonstration of mass strength will produce cracks in the 'club' (the military coterie around Zia), and that, finally, with a wink from the Ameridoesn't there will be problems.

Q. Do you foresee a problem of dissidence within your own party? Your detractors claim that you face an uncles' problem in the sense that it is tricky for you to deal with the men who were your father's contemporary and knew you as a child.

A. I do not think we have that problem (Laughs). Yes initially, more than me some of these people themselves found it awkward communicating with me but now there is no problem. I give them respect and there should be no complaints.

Q. But there are problems. For example hasn't your senior party leader Ghulam Mustafa Jatoi accused you of "dictatorial tendencies"?

A. Well, I do not know why he said it. I will not comment on it even though I have been hurt by that allegation. Now that he is going on his vacation to London, I only hope that he will use the time to think about the line he has taken. I did nothing to offend him and I do not know why he should have made a statement like this.

Q. And there are also problems with your other allies in the movement for the restoration of democracy. Are you planning to go it alone now and hijack the whole movement as they allege?

A. We have always been with them and there is no reason for them to feel left out. At the same time they must realise that the PPP has always been the most dominant partner in the MRD, when they talk about the MRD's sacrifices they are actually talking about the PPP's sacrifices. We do not intend to hijack the movement but at the same time we cannot let them hijack the peoples party. Our workers have gone to jail, been hanged and given stripes and it is thus understandable that people have a special feeling for us.

Q. Why have you refrained from making any reference at all to India in your public speeches?

A. There has been too much rhetoric for far too long, now let us talk substance. This is the time to talk of peace and democracy and not for rabble-rousing.

ASHRAF NAGI

Q. Do you mean that India is no longer such a useful bogey in Pakistan politics? Is it no longer the best way to get people charged?

A. Yes, I think there can be peace and the two countries can live together in harmony. There is no such problem between the two countries that cannot be sorted out bilaterally in the spirit of the Shimla agreement. The central issue between the two countries is still, ultimately, Kashmir, but normalisation is possible provided the process is initiated sincerely and at an absorbable pace. We do not want any regional instability. We just want peace so people could progress.

Q. In India there is an apprehension that Pakistan is backing Sikh terrorists. What do you think of the Khalistan campaign?

A. As I said before we stand for regional stability. We do not want any more break-ups in our subcontinent. How can I ever sympathise with the Khalistan demand. As you know the capital of Khalistan is Lahore. The Khalistani maps also include half of Pakistan. I am not going to be party to further breakups of Pakistan. My duty is to preserve the federation and not to break it.

Q. Then how will you counter those in Pakistan who want revenge for the break-up of the country?

A. I do not understand this kind of two-way game. You give it to somebody and invite retaliation. How can we afford this? My answer to the question is, you do not take revenge for such things by dividing your own country.

Q. What is your view of Pakistan's nuclear programme?

A. Pakistan's nuclear programme was unfortunately misunderstood during my father's time and was established as a quid pro quo. My father wanted a peaceful nuclear energy programme, but there were doubts that should not have been there. We want to remove all doubts. We do not want to bomb. We stand for a peaceful nuclear programme.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

cans and a nod from the 'club' General Zia will be forced to step down". The rest could be easy, swearing in the senate Chairman Ghulam Ishaq Khan as the action president and a mid-term poll under Junejo's caretaker dispensation. Benazir has made it clear that she is not exactly averse to the idea.

While on this there is no great dispute, there are grave doubts within the MRD about her willingness or the ability to take on the army. "There are two clear choices before her, confrontation or conciliation", says Iqbal Haider, general-secretary of the Karachi-based, left-of-centre Qaumi Mahaze Azadi, a constituent of the MRD, pointing out that "it will be tragic indeed if she were to compromise with the army to remove this government since this will only mean a change of face and not of the system, and the army will use her and the PPP as a kind of sandbag in its own defence."

Government spokesmen claim that there is no chance of any fissures dividing the army leadership. They argue that even after the civilianisation of the Government, Zia has not alienated them. Even the western diplomatic corps finds it hard to believe that the army would turn against Zia as long as he remains in uniform. But PPP ideologues say their approach takes this possibility into account. Their strategy hinges on isolating Zia from the Pakistani masses as well as Junejo. In fact, Benazir has attacked Junejo only very sparingly.

If much of the challenge facing Benazir today is the army and the US, it is because both factors have been integral to the calculus of politics in Pakistan. Political analysts are near unanimous on the view that American interests are inextricably tied with the Pakistani army. "This is their most allied ally in this part of the world," says Wali Khan. It is through the Pakistani Army that the American channel all their arms aid to the Afghan Mujahideen and given their close relationship with the generals, invariably influence national decision-making. "The Americans need a surrogate Islamic mercenary army capable of absorbing modern technology," says Aitazaz Ahsan, arguing that in keeping with their global interests the Americans are hardly likely to back Benazir against the army.

Benazir, for her part, studiously refrained from saying anything against the US, but as her campaign gained momentum, she found it increasingly difficult to contain the growing anti-US feeling among her supporters. As a matter of fact, her detractors within the MRD had only one criticism to level against her—that she was soft on the Americans and had visited that country on the eve of her return to Pakistan basically to remove their apprehensions. Benazir, however, defends her visit as merely an effort to acquaint the Americans with the human rights situation in Pakistan.

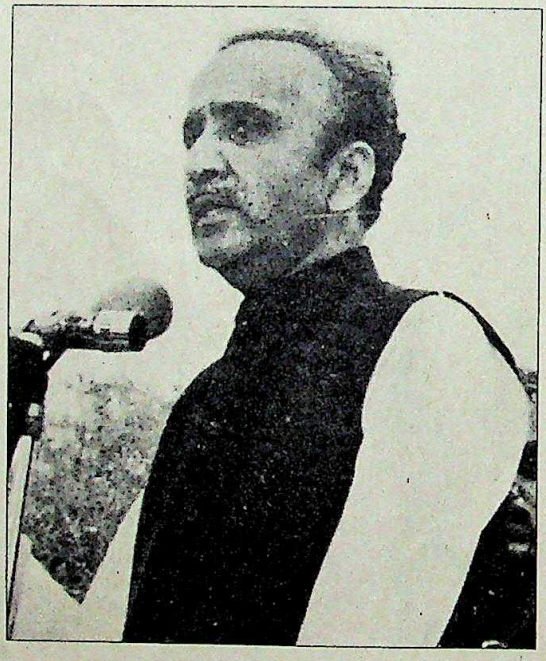
The reason why the US looms so large in Pakistani politics is not far to seek. The Zia regime has been the Americans closest ally in their most ambitious overseas military operation of all times—Afghanistan—and rightly or wrongly, there is hardly anyone in Pakistan who believes that a change is possible without the Americans okaying it.

That, indeed, poses one of the more serious dilemmas facing Benazir. She cannot afford to alienate the Americans and yet has to cater to a constituency that does not exactly love them. Her approach on the American issue will also determine, to some extent, even the prospects of her relationship with the other parties in the MRD most of whom have a pro-left orientation. But today, even more than the old issue of Kashmir, Afghanistan is on the mind of every Pakistani who feels a little mystified by Benazir's lack of commitment or even comment on such a crucial issue. "She is orchestrating a populist rhetoric but is evading the crucial question," charges Khurshid Mahmood Kasuri, spokesman of the Tehrik-e-Istiqlal party and an increasingly estranged member of the MRD.

It is, however, not merely among the pro-government circles and the MRD that Benazir faces criticism. Some of it has come from her own partymen who accuse her of being brash, arrogant and ignorant of the art of realpolitik. While two of the old stalwarts, Abdul Hafeez Pirzada and Mumtaz Ali Bhutto have already made their way out of the party, the other two, Ghulam Mustafa Khar and Ghulam Mustafa Jatoi have made critical references to her. While making light of the dissensions, Benazir's own supporters also underline the need for a unified, strong party infrastructure if she is to take on the Government with any chance of success. "Bhutto had the courage to take to the streets and protest. That should underline to Benazir the need for a strong party organisation," reasons Nisar Osmani, chief of bureau of the Dawn in Lahore and a veteran political analyst.

Benazir herself is conscious of that need. Last fortnight, as party workers from Faisalabad made claims to the post of the district president, Benazir angrily retorted: "Show me your detention order. How many times did you go to jail? Chairman Shaheed appointed a lot of people, but when he was being hanged no one said a thing." She has been voicing the same concern in private discussion with close confidantes. She feels resigned to the possibility of arrest and incarceration in case the Government decides to put down her campaign forcibly. But when that happens she would like to leave behind a strong party organisation capable of taking the protest to the streets.

Refreshingly however, in spite of all these problems within her own constituency and support base, she has not fought shy of joining issue with the Government on many controversial questions. She has been prepared to adopt stances that could hardly make her popular with many



Prime Minister Junejo addressing a rally

Their (the PPP's) strategy hinges on isolating Zia from the Pakistani masses as well as from Junejo. Benazir has attacked Junejo only very sparingly

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA

No Illusions

HER FIRST appearance in India was at the historic Shimla summit, where her svelte figure encased in chic outfits striding down the Mall almost stole the show away from her illustrious father and Mrs Gandhi. Benazir Bhutto is back, and though not in India she could very well be, considering the eagle-eyed attention with which her tumultuous home-coming is being tracked by the Pakistan desk at South Block. Overnight, the Benazir factor has altered Pakistan's domestic political profile and added an intriguing new element to India's equation with its combative neighbour, an equation that has for decades formed the corner-stone of Indian foreign policy.

Perhaps for the first time in the last nine years, Pakistan's military dictatorship faces a serious internal threat to its tenacious hold on power. Despite President Zia-ul-Haq's cosmetic concessions to democratic privileges and the easing of the military stranglehold, it is obvious that Benazir represents the oasis in the Pakistani desert for a predominantly large part of the population and is capable, on current form, of backing Zia into a tight corner.

In that context, South Block cannot but be elated at last fortnight's developments. For one, a domestic crisis will not only force Zia on the defensive, it will also concentrate his efforts inwards rather than across the border in Punjab, as the Indian Government is convinced he has been doing.

But the elation is also tinged with a certain amount of scepticism. "We were not really surprised at the kind of reception Benazir was afforded in Pakistan. It was along expected lines. She was the safety valve for popular expression," said a top official in the Ministry of External Affairs. What has been of some surprise is the kind of political savvy that Benazir has shown since her return. "Originally, her tour programme was not scheduled to go beyond Rawalpindi. The fact that she extended it is an indication that her political antennae are finely honed to the popular mood," said the official. The fact that her supporters have shown a high degree of discipline so far also indicates, in the eyes of South Block, that she has total control over them.

The Ministry of External Affairs also believes that her strategy has been meticulously planned out in London before her return, as witnessed by her carefully calculated visits to Washington and Moscow before her arrival in Pakistan. Though there was no official recognition of her presence in either capital, her meetings and media coverage were of the level of a major political personage. "She knows full well that the route to Islamabad is via Washington," said a Foreign Ministry official.

PANA

A young Benazir in Shimla during the 1971 summit

Other Pakistan analysts in the ministry have taken careful note of the fact that her criticism has not only grown more strident but, significantly, focussed on Zia and not on the heavily-politicised Pakistan army, whose backing she will undoubtedly need in her bid for "people power". They also applaud her politically sagacious statement to members of the National Assembly, another power group, that "You have an important role to play in the transition." The Indian estimation is that Benazir is banking on the fact that key National Assembly members will resign and switch their support to her once the tide turns. "Already, the deputy speaker of the Assembly has issued a statement in her favour and if other members follow suit, we think half her battle will be won," said one analyst.

There is, at the moment, no change or shift in the Indian Government's policy on Pakistan. "We have to see whether she can maintain the momentum or whether her campaign can force Zia into some sort of panic," said an official. In any case, Indian analysts are fully aware that Benazir has till May 10 to make her move, after which the Ramzan period will halt activity for a month. "We believe that Zia is not going to be so foolish as to try and curb her activities in any way, as that would only boomerang on him," said one observer.

The Indian Government is also careful not to overreact to the fact that many of Benazir's statements on the no-war pact, the nuclear bomb issue and Sikh terrorists have been favourable to India or have coincided with the Indian viewpoint. "She has also made some very negative statements, like the one on the Siachen glacier where she said the Indian army would not be in control had she been running the country," said an official. "So we are not harbouring any illusions. Make no mistake about it. Benazir as president of Pakistan will be a lot different from Benazir as an opposition leader mustering support for her cause. If she ever does seize power, we know that she will be one tough customer to deal with. Probably tougher than any of her predecessors."

—DILIP BOBB

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

sections of the population. Her clear-cut rejection of the separatist Sikh cause in India is one such instance. Similarly, her indirect rejection of the process of Islamisation that Zia initiated is bound to upset some people. But her supporters insist she has chosen the approach consciously. As one of her close aides explained: "Miss Sahiba believes that it is better to take up the inevitable inconvenient positions now rather than make hawkish statements and then be left with promises that are impossible to fulfil."

Similarly, her conciliatory statements on many other issues relating to India, such as Kashmir and the nuclear programme, are unlikely to prove great vote-catchers in times to come. Understandably, the new stance so typical of a mainline Pakistani leader hoping to ride populism to power, has caught the attention of the Indian foreign policy planners in New Delhi. There is an increasing feeling there that the Government should slow down the process of negotiations with the Zia Government as that tends to give greater legitimacy to the military ruler's position. Also, Indian planners wonder if it is worthwhile

UNITED KINGDOM

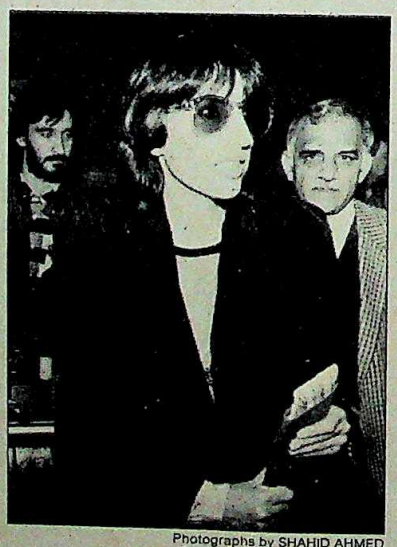
From Exile

AS BRITAIN'S television screens showed the massive crowds milling around Benazir Bhutto in Lahore and elsewhere in Pakistan, the huge Pakistani immigrant population faithfully following her progress also seemed caught in the same excitement. The interest was only natural, for London has been the nerve-centre of the activities of the PPP from where most of Pakistan's prominent opposition leaders have been fighting their battle against martial rule. As one PPP member pointed out, the "thrust and momentum" to Benazir's current "mission" had begun in London. She had been given a tumultuous send-off from London last month after addressing a series of meetings in such Pakistani strongholds as Bradford, Yorkshire and the suburbs of London.

Whilst many jubilant PPP followers were hailing Benazir as "Pakistan's Corazon Aquino" and beginning to hope for general elections in the near future, several important leaders viewed the latest developments in Pakistan with cynicism. Abdul Hafeez Pirzada, who along with Mumtaz Ali Bhutto recently formed the Sindhi-Baloch-Pushtoon Front for achieving greater autonomy for Pakistan's minorities against Punjabi domination, was one of those clearly distrustful of the unfolding events. "In her first rally, Benazir has spoken about Lahore being the heart of Pakistan. She is not averse to reinvoking the hated 1973 Constitution. She has pandered to the army by appointing the butcher of Bangladesh, General Tikka Khan, as the secretary-general of the PPP without holding any elections. She wants Pakistan to be a nuclear power. She has also stated in press interviews that the Siachin glacier would not have been lost if she were in power. What kind of conclusions do you draw from all these statements? She is desperate to come to power and for that she will go to any extent to please the generals. Benazir personifies a new brand of militant Pakistani nationalism," Pirzada said.

Benazir's critics say she owes her charisma solely due to her father's undiminished magnetism, a point echoed by Ghulam Mustafa Khar who, perhaps next to Benazir, is the best-known of Pakistan's politicians in exile. A razor-tongued, flamboyant politician, Khar was one of Bhutto's closest advisors and considers himself the "senior-most" amongst all PPP leaders. This has often been the cause of the protracted squabbles between Benazir and Khar over "political strategy" which finally led to the latter's suspension from the party—a move that Khar has refused to acknowledge. He is unremittingly critical of Benazir's lack of knowledge in party affairs. Says Khar: "I think she began with a blunder. Lahore ought to have been her last stop. She ought to have stormed through the country ending with a bang at Lahore, forcing the Government to react. Instead she created a big impact at first and will now progressively end with a whimper. She is totally ignorant about the realities of Pakistan. Her westernised outlook is a drawback. It's fine to talk flowery English but where is your ideological base? Does the party have a programme, a strategy?"

(Clockwise) Benazir, Mustafa Khar and Mumtaz Bhutto



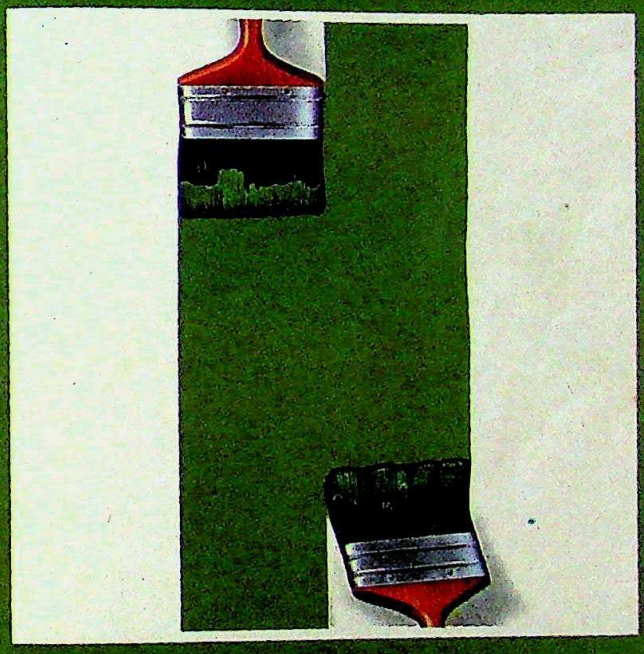
Photographs by SHAHID AHMED

However, most of the opposition leaders plan to eventually return to Pakistan in spite of these grim predictions. Under the present circumstances, they cannot leave as there are a number of cases against them in Pakistani courts. Khar for instance, could face up to 14 years imprisonment in a martial law case, a charge he is fighting in a civilian high court. But for the present, they predict a time when Benazir will not be able to carry the PPP with her. Lacking her father's abilities, they prophesy a leadership staggering from one crisis to another, a point roundly disputed by thousands of her excited supporters in the UK who anticipate a dream-like future for Pakistan under Benazir.

—RAMESH CHANDRAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Asian Paints: looking at shades through the eyes of a computer

When it comes to matching shades, the human eye can falter. At Asian Paints, we leave this task to the computer. So, when you run out of one of our shades, the next paint can you buy will be a perfect match.

Asian Paints has been the largest paint company in India since 1967. Achieving leadership was a proud moment for us; but it was only a moment in our quest for excellence.

asian paints

Leadership through excellence

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The only thing the Standard 2000 comes without is your driving licence.

All the power you need

The powerful, fuel-efficient Standard HCC 206 petrol engine is specially developed for Indian conditions with a matched power train. It develops 82 BHP at 4250 RPM.

Luxury - inside out

The roomy interior seats five adults in comfort. The front seats are reclinable while the steering wheel is collapsible and is fully adjustable for reach and rake.

The window glasses are electrically operated.

There's also a stereo cassette player with four speakers and balance control.

Doors to safety

Another unique feature is the central door locking system which locks all doors simultaneously. It also has child-proof rear door locks.

Standard 2000. There comes a time in your

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

STANDARD 2000

the only Indian car with advanced features that spell class.

Taking the heat off

The Standard 2000 comes to you with a totally engineered airconditioning system and the airconditioning unit can be fitted at specific dealer points.

The Standard 2000.

The only Indian car whose counterpart, the Rover 2000, is currently being manufactured in the UK.

Standard 2000.
Now on the roads!

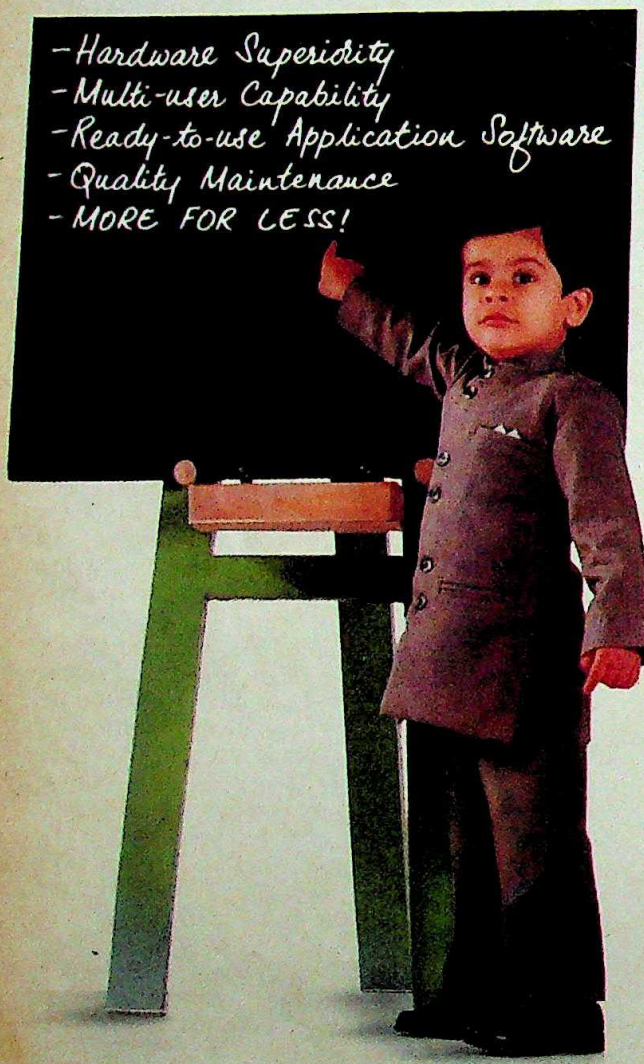
STAMPRO

Standard Motor Products of India Ltd.
Madras 600 063.

time your life when nothing less will do.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MOST PCs ARE CREATED EQUAL.



THE WIPRO PC DARES TO DIFFER.

The biggest name in minicomputers now offers you a small business computer.

The WIPRO PC.

It comes with a unique package of benefits.

To begin with, it doesn't stop at being IBM PC compatible. So you can run the entire library of IBM PC software. From Lotus 1-2-3 to Wordstar... dBase III to Flight Simulator. As well as a large number of ready-to-use software packages designed specially for the Indian user. For aspects such as Financial Accounting, Sales Analysis, Order Processing and Inventory Control.

Then, apart from the single user MS-DOS Operating System that runs on the IBM PC, you get the multiuser DBOS†. As well as multi-terminal support. So, up to three people can use the same resources. To run different programs simultaneously.

You also get the multi-tasking Concurrent CP/M Operating System, which lets up to four programs run on the same terminal. Simultaneously.

What's more, it offers extra on-line storage up to 40 MB. An extra large 14" colour or monochrome display. 14 extra keys. Two extra terminals. Four extra IBM PC compatible slots. A whole lot of features that give it the edge!

And the fact that it's from WIPRO means you'll get nothing less than the very best as far as service support goes. Whether it's hardware maintenance or software implementation. Support that makes WIPRO the most trusted name in the computer business.

And even when it comes to price, this package is unbeatable. For Rs 48,000, you get a completely operational, ready-to-use WIPRO PC. Including 256 K Bytes of memory.

So come get your hands on the WIPRO PC. The only limit to how much it can do is your imagination.

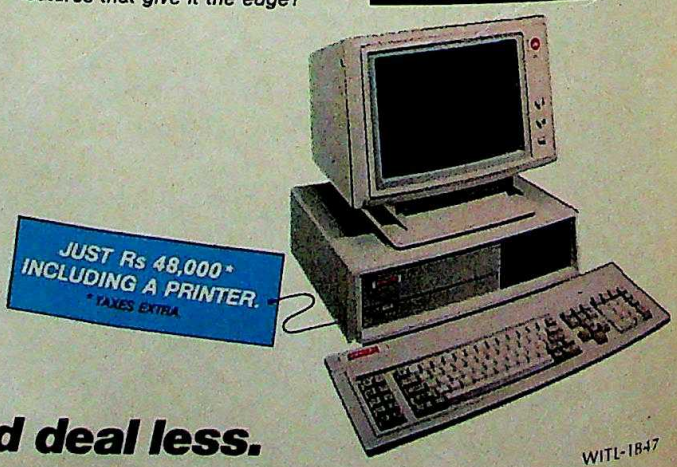
The WIPRO PC/XT, which includes a 10 MB Winchester disk drive, 256 K Bytes of memory and a printer, is priced at Rs 70,000.

† Supported only on the WIPRO PC/XT.

To see, hear or know more about the WIPRO PC, call or write to:

WIPRO Information Technology Ltd.
S B Towers
88 Mahatma Gandhi Road
Bangalore 560 001
Phone: 569622 Telex: 845-8356

WIPRO PC



IBM® PC, IBM are registered trademarks of International Business Machines Corporation.

MS-DOS is a registered trademark of Microsoft Corporation.

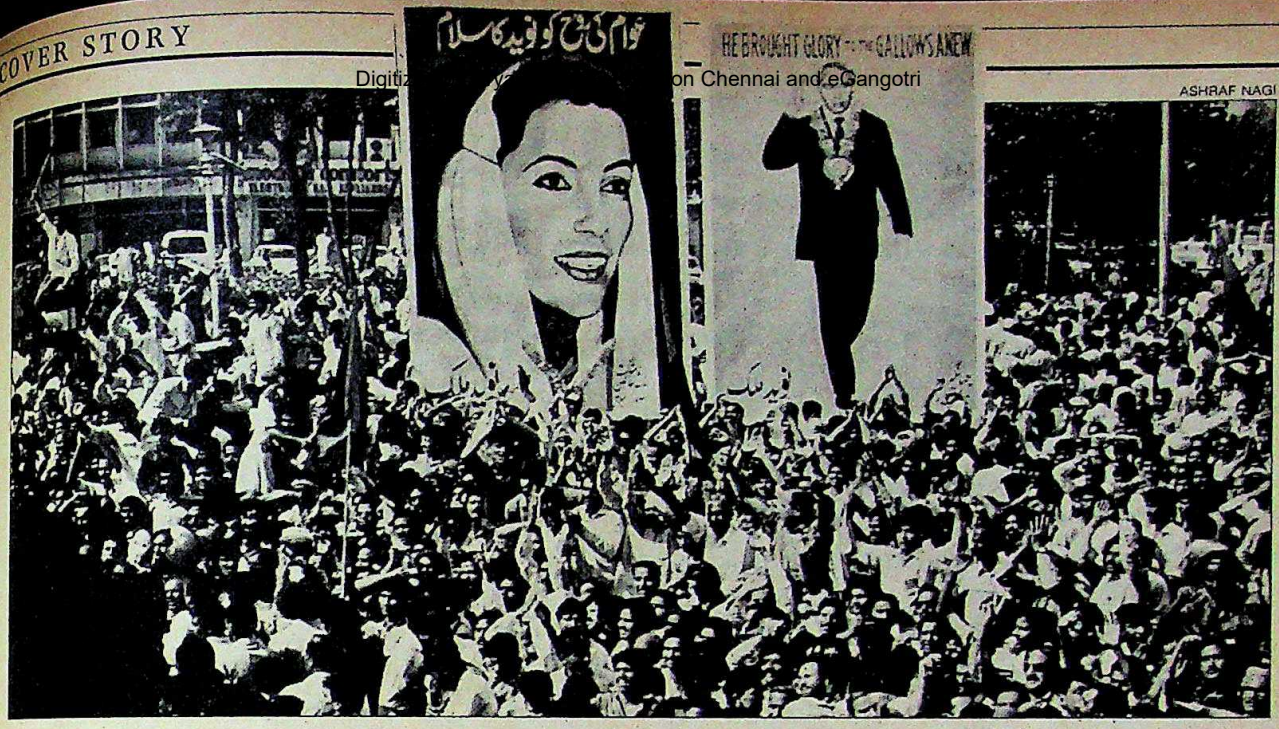
CCP/M is a registered trademark of Digital Research Inc.

A great deal more. For a good deal less.

WITL-1847

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitiz... on Chennai and eGangotri



ASHRAF NAGI

Placards at the public rally in Lahore making long-term commitments to a regime that may not survive long, at least not in its present state.

Diplomatic circles in Islamabad believe that the long delay in Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi's proposed visit to Pakistan is a consequence of this new rethinking. Indian officials themselves do not deny this but claim that the delay is not solely due to this. Said India's Ambassador in Islamabad, S.K. Singh: "Gen Zia had himself said that our prime minister's visit here would be the culmination and climax of the process we initiated in December. Now that there has been a go slow on this there is nothing unusual about the delay in the prime minister's visit."

But so fluid is the situation in Pakistan now that even in the Indian External Affairs Ministry there is a growing feeling that the best policy is to wait and watch. The argument goes that it is all right for Benazir Bhutto to make conciliatory statements now, but there is no overlooking the fact that it was her late father who gave the slogan of waging a thousand years war against India and who exhorted his people to make the bomb even if it meant having to eat grass. "With Benazir swearing by Bhuttoism," says an Indian official, "it will not be easy for her to pursue such an independent, original foreign policy."

But that is just one of the numerous problems confronting Benazir today. In her bid for power, she has started talking about economics as well, promising higher minimum wages, self-reliance and a greater role for the public sector. But it is unlikely to cut much ice with large sections of society in Pakistan who wallow in the luxury of the Gulf boom. "Economic nemesis has already hit us," says economist Akmal Hussain, adding, "from 15 per cent in 1975, today the country spends 92 per cent of its aid inflow on debt servicing. At this rate, by 1990 we will have a negative aid inflow." Other problems relate to the extremely slow pace of industrial development—at a time when hordes of skilled labourers are returning in increasing numbers from the Gulf—and the abysmally low literacy rate (13 per cent). Says Hussain: "If macro-economic independence is the index of national sovereignty, we have already lost it to our debtors and any new regime will now face the challenge of reversing that." Unfortunately for Benazir, it is difficult to translate these facts into the kind of language ordinary people would understand and thus, when she talks of economic reform, she hardly finds many listeners.

But in spite of the problems and the challenges, the honours in round one have gone to her. Her campaign has caught the imagination of the middle classes, of the youth and a large section of the poor. The international media has given her wide notice and searched all round for parallels ranging from Cinderella to Corazon Aquino and Eva Peron. Barely three weeks since she stepped on the soil of her homeland after twenty five months in exile, she poses the toughest challenge to General Zia's nine year rule.

There is no going back for her now and she will either end up on the pinnacle of her and her late father's ambition or fall by the wayside to join the huge heap of political castaways in Pakistan

But that, as Benazir herself admits, is just the beginning. The crucial second round will begin on May 10 when the month of Ramzan begins making it impossible to hold rallies. The Zia regime is banking on this cooling off period while Benazir will attempt to politically consolidate her position by working out practical arrangements with other factions in the MRD. But she knows that she cannot stay away from the limelight for a whole month and her supporters claim that even iftar gatherings will serve as a political platform.

Whether she can do it or not the coming weeks will tell. But Benazir seems unrelenting in her hop, step and jump quest for power in which she has made a satisfactory first move. There is no going back now and she will either end up on the pinnacle of her and her late father's ambition or fall by the wayside to join the huge heap of political castaways in Pakistan. Whichever way his ambitious daughter ends up, whether in power or in the dustbin of history, she will without doubt be at the centre of the drama rapidly engulfing her country now.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA in Pakistan

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Since Its Launch, Finesse 4515 Has Outsold Every Other Copier.

In fact, 50% of our sales
are to satisfied customers
coming back for second helpings.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Since its launch in April 1984, Finesse 4515 has become the single largest selling plain paper copier. And with good reason.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

State-of-the-art features: the technology factor.

Finesse 4515 offers everything a discerning buyer looks for in a copier. Modern features that reflect the world's most advanced electronics technology:

Reduction and enlargement. 100% edge-to-edge, corner to corner, non-void copying. Microcomputer-controlled, colour LCD panel for simple operation. Straight-line paper path with automatic paper alignment. Clamshell design for easy maintenance.

Getting perfect copies means leaving as little as possible to human judgement. So in Finesse 4515, exposure and toner density are controlled automatically. To ensure that originals are copied with perfect exposure, and for copies of consistently high quality.

Designing for longer life: the reliability factor.

Finesse 4515 has been designed and engineered for long-term reliability. Microchip circuits that live to a ripe old age. And very few damage-prone switches or controls — most of the adjustments are automatic, leaving little room for human error.

Critical components for Finesse 4515 are already being made right here in India. At HRL's modern manufacturing facilities. To Toshiba's ruthless tolerance specifications and exacting quality standards.

And one thing is certain: Your Finesse 4515 will never be out of action for want of spares and consumables.

90% average uptime: the service factor.

HRL's service centres are geared to answer your SOS in 24 hours. Across a network spanning 93 cities and towns.

The case history of every copier is maintained on a computer. If uptime falls below 90%, the computer sounds a Red Alert.

But HRL firmly believes in the old adage: prevention is better than cure. So whether you ask for it or not, your machine gets a head-to-toe checkup regularly.

So it's no surprise that Finesse 4515 has a track record of 90% average uptime.

A major reason why people who become our customers stay our customers.

The case for Finesse 4515 is clear.

It will be even more clear when you actually start using it.

In fact, 50% of Finesse 4515 sales are to satisfied customers placing repeat orders.

But right now, no one can blame you for being nervous.

No one can blame you for making the world's oldest consumer statement: "I'm looking for something reliable."

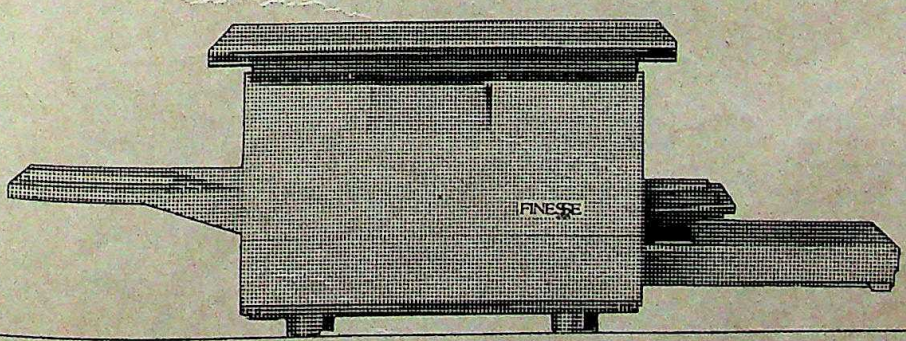
Look no further.

FINESSE 4515

PLAIN PAPER COPIER

In technical association with Toshiba Corporation, Japan.

India's largest selling copier.



HRL HINDUSTAN REPROGRAPHICS LIMITED

For further information, contact: Hindustan Reprographics Limited. Head Office: 5th Floor, Kundan House, 16, Nehru Place, New Delhi 110 019. Tel: 6432908, 6417094.

Branch Offices: Bombay: 74, Regent Chambers, Nariman Point, Bombay 400 021. Tel: 232764, 240888. Bangalore: 10/2, Queen's Road, Bangalore 560 052. Tel: 72494. New Delhi: 801, Deepali, 92, Nehru Place, New Delhi 110 019. Tel: 6418792, 6439209. Secunderabad: P 1-1-58/11, Sarojini Devi Road, Srinath Complex, Secunderabad 500 001. Tel: 75264. Madras: 8, Haddows Road, Jai Laxmi Estate, Madras 600 006. Tel: 476846, 474633. Calcutta: 11/1A Sarojini Naidu Sarani, Calcutta 700 017. Tel: 296720.

HRL.3.86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SIKH TERRORISTS

The Pakistan Hand

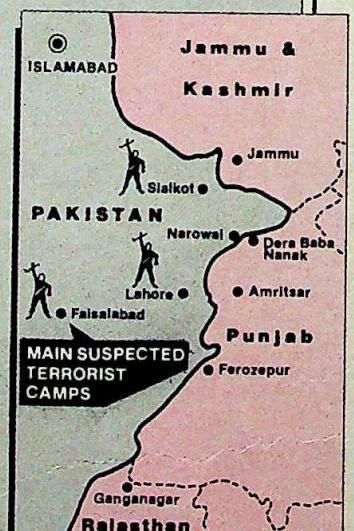
THE INDIAN Government's allegations of a "Pakistan hand" in the terrorist network in Punjab has achieved a certain credibility mainly because of the sheer weight of its frequency. But so far, the charges of camps across the border have not been backed by decisive evidence. However, last fortnight, the Government said in the Lok Sabha that it now had irrefutable evidence of Pakistani involvement in Sikh terrorist activity appeared to be more than mere wishful thinking. Features Editor INDERJIT BADHWAR and free-lance contributor TAVLEEN SINGH investigated different aspects of the evidence. Badhwar spoke to intelligence and foreign policy sources while singh managed to obtain confidential interrogation reports of terrorists captured in the last few months who have been trained in Pakistani camps. Their report:

TWO WEEKS ago, Minister for Internal Security Arun Nehru informed the Lok Sabha that the Government had "clear evidence" of Pakistani involvement in the training of Sikh terrorists. "We have details of names, locations, training schedules and the type of assistance Pakistan has given to these terrorists," he informed the house.

Nehru went on to add that in the past six months, between 25 and 30 terrorists had been captured. During interrogation, they had admitted to having been trained in Pakistan, and gave specific names of people they had met, the dates on which they had met them, and the places they had been taken to. Though there is always a certain element of doubt attached to confessions extracted in the privacy of an interrogation chamber, the latest statements obtained by INDIA TODAY have more credibility than most.

This is mainly because of the damning similarity between almost all the confessions despite the fact that the terrorists have been arrested and interrogated at different districts in Punjab and Rajasthan. In addition, the details in the confessions dovetail with the information collected by Indian intelligence agencies on Pakistani involvement in Punjab terrorism. The Government, for instance, has long suspected that the terrorists being trained were kept in technical custody at Faisalabad jail, a fact that a majority of the terrorists interrogated recently have admitted to.

> "One basic reality established by all the interrogations is that crossing the Indian border into Pakistan poses no major problems. Most of the terrorists who were captured said that they were taken to Faislabad jail where they were subjected to intense indoctrination."



Intriguingly, a profile of the terrorists captured in the past six months indicates that most of them were hard-core criminals before they took to terrorism. They include Harjinder Singh Jinda, a convicted bank robber who had escaped from Ahmedabad jail, Devinder Singh Bai, a suspected murderer who later became a close associate of Bhindranwale, and Upkar Singh and Bakshish Singh, two notorious drug smugglers.

One basic fact established by the interrogations is that crossing the border into Pakistan poses no major problems. One terrorist, Gurvinder Singh, stated that he crossed over from Harowal village near Dera Baba Nanak. Another, Sarabjit, admitted that he took a bus from Jammu to the Kashmir border and slipped across to a village called Kharuaray. Yet another, Jindal, said he crossed from Ganganagar, and Devinder crossed over from a point beyond Ferozepur to a village in Pakistan called Ghodachak. As he states in his confession: "Every third day, somebody was crossing over and so we always knew exactly what was taking place in Amritsar." In fact, long-time drug smugglers-turned terrorists like Bakshish and Upkar Singh, used their intimate knowledge of the border gained in their clandestine heroin smuggling trade, to assist fellow terrorists in crossing over.

The interrogations revealed that in most cases the initial contact with Pakistan was made either in the Golden Temple in Amritsar or in other gurudwaras in Punjab through recruiting agents.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Gurvinder stated that he met a man called Balwinder Singh in the Golden Temple in November, 1984. The agent told him he should cross the border for training and also that he could help him get across. Devinder also stated that his initial contact was with a recruiting agent in Huzoor Sahib in Nanded who also told him that Bhindranwale was alive and in Pakistan.

Once across the border, matters are well-organised. In Devinder's words: "We went to a Pakistani chowki (police picket) after crossing and when we said we were the Sant's (Bhindranwale's) men they welcomed us and gave us milk and sweets." Other interrogation statements follow the same pattern. Jindal says: "At the Pakistan picket they gave us food and then a jeep arrived with some men in uniform. They took us to a house in a town and the next day we went by army jeep to another house some five hours away." Jindal says that he was in Pakistan for about six months. Sarabjit, Gurvinder and Devinder, however, were all taken to Faisalabad jail where they came across over 200 others, most of whom had arrived there after Operation Bluestar. Devinder says that at least 100 were from Gurdaspur.

For several weeks, the terrorists were subjected to intense and sustained indoctrination. According to Gurvinder, "Pakistani officers would come and talk to us every day and tell us that we had to work against the Government of India when we got back and that we had to create Khalistan. We were told that we must make sure that we kill Hindus only so that there would be communal riots in Punjab. They said there must be complete havoc, a bloodbath, because that was the only way we would get Khalistan. We were also given lectures by other Sikh leaders who were brought there." Devinder, who was in the Golden Temple with Bhindranwale till two days before Operation Bluestar, identified these leaders as Bhai Jasbir Singh, Bhindranwale's Delhi-based nephew who was later extradited to India and is now in custody, Balbir Singh Sandhu, self-styled secretary general of Khalistan who was earlier believed to have been killed in the Golden Temple action, and Sukhdev Singh, head of the Babbar Khalsa.

Devinder, Sarabjit and Gurvinder were also taken to Lahore where they met other Sikh extremist leaders who had fled the Golden Temple. These included Attinder Pal Singh, former acting president of the All India Sikh Students Federation (AISSF) and Gurjit Singh, another nephew of Bhindranwale. It was in Lahore that the arms training started. According to the confessional statements, they were trained in the use of .38 and .455 revolvers, Sten guns and grenades. Sarabjit also admitted that they were taught the use of chemical weapons and given instructions on how to blow up bridges, open handcuffs and manufacture home-made bombs.

> "Sarabjit admitted that they were trained in the use of .38 and .455 revolvers, Sten-guns and grenades. He said that they were instructed in the use of chemical weapons, how to blow up bridges, how to open handcuffs and manufacture home-made bombs."

The training over, they were helped back across the border. Said Gurvinder: "On September 9, 1985, we were taken to the border near Ajnala and Bakshish Singh and Malikiat Singh (two drug smugglers) helped us to cross. After crossing, we were met by Hari Singh who belonged to the Khalistan Commando Group. He told us to go to the Golden Temple and meet Mohkam Singh who would give us further instructions. We met him and he told us that Makhan Singh, the AISSF president in Phagwara, had to be killed." But Gurvinder was arrested outside the Golden Temple before he could carry out his instructions.

Sarabjit and Devinder, however, returned from Pakistan with about 20 other terrorists and with clear instructions to prevent the state elections from taking place. In Amritsar, they made contact with the new AISSF leaders like Harinder Singh Kahlon and United Akali Dal leaders like Baba Joginder Singh, Inderjit Singh Sekhon and Jagdev Singh Talwandi. They were told that their target would be Gurcharan Singh Tohra, the Akali leader. Admits Devinder: "I crossed over just before the Punjab accord and went to the Akal rest-house (in the Golden Temple) where we all discussed how Tohra should be killed. We tried a few days later in the Jyoti Swaroop Gurudwara, but we failed."

Acting under the orders of Baba Gurbachan Singh, one of the members of the AISSF ad hoc committee, Devinder says his next assignment was to kill Ram Lubhaiya in Tarn Taran. As he described it: "We stole a scooter and went to his (Lubhaiya's) house where he was distributing milk at that time. I emptied my revolver into him and then ran towards the Sadar police station where I started reading a newspaper outside the main gate. I saw lots of policemen rushing around but they didn't bother about me. I later even attended the funeral."

Sarabjit, in his confession, detailed some of the places in Pakistan where some extremist leaders of the Bhindranwale era are housed. According to him, Attinder

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Pal Singh, Gurjit Singh, Sukhdev Singh and Balbir Singh Sandhu were living in Lahore while Bhai Kanwar Singh was the main extremist leader in Sialkot. He also added that apart from Faislabad jail, another 500-odd Sikh youths are being indoctrinated in Kot Lakhpat jail in Lahore.

According to information gathered from the interrogations and other highly-placed intelligence sources, between 1,500 and 2,000 Sikh extremists are currently receiving guerrilla training from Pakistani officers in a dozen scattered military camps across the border, including the ones mentioned by captured terrorists during their interrogation. They are trained in the use of automatic weapons, and in demolition and sabotage. These camps also provide them sanctuary after they perform terrorist hits and flee back into Pakistan.

Meanwhile, Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi has had what are described as six "rough sessions" during personal talks with President Zia-ul-Haq on this issue, and more recently with Pakistan Foreign Minister Sahabzada Yakub Khan during last fortnight's non-aligned meeting in New Delhi. In fact, the main reason behind the cancellation of Rajiv's proposed visit to Pakistan this year is Pakistan's refusal to guarantee that it will close down the camps and put an end to all infiltration. Two months ago, the Government delivered a strong note to Pakistan demanding the return of several Sikh extremists—most of them belonging to the AISSF—who have crossed the border into Pakistan. In addition, the note identified by name and passport numbers other Sikh extremists in the UK, USA, and Canada and requested the Pakistan Government not to permit their entry because of their use, in the past, of Pakistan's territory as a staging ground for terrorist activities in Punjab. The Pakistan Government has not responded, except to stick by their stubborn denial that they are aiding Sikh terrorists.

Most of the information on this subject now with the Indian Government has come from intelligence activities within Pakistan, counter-intelligence within India which consists mostly of surveillance—but not arrest—of known extremists who have crossed the border and have returned, as well as from the interrogation of captured terrorists. In the Pakistani training camps, the extremists are given weapons training, ideological indoctrination on how to fight the menace of the "Hindu Raj" as well as short courses in survival. Before they leave, they are given weapons with no identifiable markings, ammunition, and money. The rate of their infiltration into India, sources said, increases directly in proportion to any increase in political turmoil in Punjab.

In addition, the Pakistan Government has been actively courting and supporting Sikh dissidents and extremists living abroad and has ignored several Indian diplomatic protest notes on this issue. In 1984, according to intelligence sources based in London, a Pakistani-owned printing press near the city printed 20,000 copies of slain Sikh extremist leader Jarnail Singh Bhindranwale's portrait and distributed them within the Sikh community. The charges were paid by the Pakistan Government. Also, the Pakistan mission in London buys thousands of copies of an "independent" newspaper called Watan—aimed exclusively at militant Sikh sentiment—and distributes it free to the Sikh immigrant community.

Most of the extremist Sikh activities and propaganda aimed from abroad at Sikhs in India are, according to the Indian Government's intelligence-gathering, based in London. A Pakistani official of cabinet rank—Muazzam Ali—who is an adviser to Zia on overseas Pakistanis, is in charge of coordinating most of these activities. Senior Pakistani officials in the UK are reported to attend almost all functions organised by extremist Sikhs. The man in charge of these liaison activities is believed to be Qutb-ud-din Aziz, former minister for press affairs in London.

Pakistan's interest in Punjab actively started as far back as 1964, a year before the Indo-Pakistan war, when Pakistan Radio began to experiment with propaganda broadcasts aimed at the Sikhs in Punjab. During the 1965 conflict these broadcasts, urging separatism, were beamed directly into Punjab.

Between 1965 and 1971, clandestine contacts between Sikh extremists and Pakistan continued. In 1971, Jagjit Singh Chauhan, the self-styled London-based Khalistan leader, visited Pakistan and reportedly met with senior government officials. But by then Punjab seemed to be coming back to normal after a series of unstable governments. During the Bhutto period and the post-Simla era, Pakistan's Punjab activities were at a lull mostly because Bhutto feared that any activity at that time in this direction would cause India to retaliate by supporting the Baluchistan insurgency on Pakis-

> "Pakistani army officers would come and talk to us every day. They instructed us to ensure that we killed Hindus only as this would lead to communal riots in Punjab. They also said that there must be total havoc, a bloodbath, because that was the only way to get Khalistan."
>
> —GURVINDER SINGH extract from his confession

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

tan's western front.

Zia began reactivating the Sikh cause in the late 1970s. His diplomatic missions began contacting Sikh activists and Khalistan supporters in different parts of the world, particularly in the UK and the US. The politician who ran this operation for Zia was Choudhuri Zahoor Ilahi who, according to diplomatic sources, "was given huge amounts of funds by Zia for the purpose, and reported directly to his chief of staff, Major-General Arif". Ilahi spent time in the UK and in the US contacting people like Chauhan and Ganga Singh Dhillon. And he began issuing them invitations to form organisations and to persuade Sikhs from abroad and also those in India to visit Sikh shrines in Pakistan during Sikh festivals.

Until then the Pakistan Government had been extremely reluctant and restrictive in allowing Sikh pilgrims to visit Pakistan. But, according to diplomats then posted there, Zia had later read and been influenced by the importance of the Anandpur Sahib resolution, which referred to the Sikhs as a "nation", as a tool for appealing to separatist sentiment. The moment he opened up the shrines, large numbers of Sikhs began visiting Pakistan. In striking contrast, Zia did not welcome Hindus at Hindu shrines and very few visas were given to Hindus desiring to visit the Hyat Pitafir shrine in Sind. The most important Hindu shrine—the Sadhu Bela temple—has still not been opened up to Hindu pilgrims.

During the Sikh pilgrimages, according to intelligence sources from Pakistan, extremist Sikhs from abroad intermingled openly with Indian Sikhs to discuss Sikh separatism. And Sikh pilgrims received the red carpet treatment in Pakistan. Zia, according to Indian intelligence reports, would make it a point to meet as many of them as he could.

In addition, Pakistan's intelligence operatives would seek out young, unemployed Sikhs from Punjab and ply them with ideological and political indoctrination. The main theme during these ideological sessions was that the Sikhs in Punjab had been fools to cast their lot with India. They would hammer home the point that Islam and Sikhism are both monotheistic and closer to each other than to Hinduism, and that Guru Nanak had insisted that after his death his feet should be pointed towards Mecca.

According to these sources, the first links between the Pakistan Government and Sikh militants in India were established between the Pakistan Army and the Dal Khalsa in early 1982. It was during this period, reliable sources say, that radical Sikh youth leaders began crossing over for arms assistance and training.

The early recruits were chosen by Pakistani military officers only after very careful screening and scrutiny. If there were any doubts the militants were sent back. Many of those who came back to India during that period were identified—but not arrested—by Indian counter-intelligence officials working near the border. These officials chose, instead, to follow the militants around, and to infiltrate their homes and organisations with informants in order to get as clear a picture as possible of what was going on in the Pakistan training camps.

From the intelligence gathered at the time, one thing was clear: Pakistan's aim, through the use of Sikh militants, was to destabilise Punjab, cause non-Sikhs to flee the area, create a Khalistan through a Bangladesh-type upheaval, and cut off all access to Kashmir. This was the "foreign hand" to which Mrs Indira Gandhi used to refer to.

Following Operation Bluestar, Pakistan intensified its Sikh propaganda war. Long accounts of Sikhs demonstrating across the world were carried on Pakistan TV for as long as four months after Operation Bluestar and beamed to Punjab. And on six separate occasions Pakistan TV beamed shots of Mrs Gandhi's effigy being burned and hacked to pieces in London's Hyde Park by militant Sikhs. Following Mrs Gandhi's assassination, several Sikh militants from India and abroad visited Pakistan and met with senior government officials. Those who visited included Jasbir Singh, Bhindranwale's nephew now on trial in India for sedition, Devinder Singh Parmar, Chauhan's London-based supporter, Ganga Singh Dhillon, and Major-General Jaswant Singh Bhullar.

Propaganda, training, providing sanctuaries for guerrillas—these are all the classical tools used by one nation trying to destabilise a part of another along a contiguous border. Reliable sources say that Pakistan, without hesitation, is in effect engaged in this clandestine, undeclared hostility across the border. The Indian Government, sources say, despite countless notes it has sent to Pakistan, is still hoping that the Zia Government will relent but Rajiv, as one source put it, "is coming to the end of his tether and is thinking of a new, tough, Pakistan policy which could be enunciated within the next few weeks."

> "Sarabjit and Devinder confessed that they returned from Pakistan with about 20 other terrorists with instructions to stop the Punjab elections from taking place. In Amritsar, they were told that their target would be Gurcharan Singh Tohra, the Akali leader."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CONGRESS(I)

Pre-emptive Strike

PRANAB Mukherjee had written to Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi in mid-April, expressing his views on the Muslim women's bill. A few days later, Congress(I) Working President Kamalapati Tripathi sent in his own letter, complaining of bogus members being inducted into the party when organisational elections were due. Tripathi's residence on New Delhi's tree-lined Janpath had quickly become the nerve-centre of political activity, with dissidents meeting in a series of conclaves to draft yet more letters and plan their strategy. Affairs in the Congress(I) were finally coming to a boil.

The message was not lost on Rajiv, who struck back with the lightning speed and sharp political instincts that once marked his mother Indira Gandhi's manoeuvres. Sensing that the dissidents in his party were finally making their long-delayed play, Rajiv orchestrated a demand for action within the party, informally consulted senior leaders, and then delivered a blow which no one—least of all his targets—expected.

The crack-down was planned well and executed without fuss. Pranab Mukherjee had once been the most powerful minister in Indira Gandhi's cabinet, but also a man without a firm political base and a questionable reputation as finance minister. Expelling him would have the maximum impact in terms of putting every other dissident in the party on guard, without running the risk of alienating political heavyweights. The others were light-weights too, but recognised personages like Mukherjee. Former Uttar Pradesh chief minister Sripati Mishra was a spent force, former Union minister and governor A.P.Sharma had once been a trade union leader of some consequence but had long since become irrelevant, and Prakash Mehrotra—former governor of Assam and high commissioner in London—had never politically counted for much anyway.

Best of all, none of them had expected the pre-emptive counter strike. Indeed, they may have underestimated Rajiv, whose government Pranab had termed weak and blundering in a provocative interview to The Illustrated Weekly of India. These remarks hardly called for such a harsh action against Mukherjee. After his unceremonious ouster, all he could say was: "I am shocked" (see box). The octogenarian Tripathi was similarly immobilised, pleading for time till he read the next day's newspapers before he reacted. He could hardly have been happy with the fact that the news of the action was brought to him by daughter-in-law Chandra even as he discussed strategy with Rajiv's targets.

BHAWAN SINGH

Rajiv Gandhi: decisive move

If surprise was the key element of the expulsion and suspensions, Rajiv himself may have lulled the dissidents into complacency. On receiving Tripathi's angry four-page letter, he had first telephoned him from Rajasthan, then sent Human Resources Development Minister P.V. Narasimha Rao to listen to his complaints, and finally cut short his Rajasthan visit and returned to New Delhi for a two-hour meeting with him.

If that suggested to the dissidents that Rajiv was susceptible to pressure, they completely misread his mind. For Rajiv clearly decided that if the plotting at Tripathi's residence was not stopping despite his efforts to meet them halfway (as he had successfully done in earlier months with former chief ministers Madhavsinh Solanki and Gundu Rao), then it was time to get tough.

Said Congress(I) Vice-President Arjun Singh: "Indiscipline had to be curbed. Disciplinary action was absolutely necessary because their activities were distracting our leader's attention away from domestic and international issues." Similar statements of support came in from several centres, most gleefully from Pranab Mukherjee's arch rival, Programme Implementation Minister A.B.A. Ghani Khan Choudhury. Even Tripathi seemed to be reweighing his options, suggesting that he was not about to turn his back on six decades of loyalty to the Nehru family. He told INDIA TODAY: "As a Congressman I don't want my party to be finished. My job is to forewarn my leader about the true nature of events, to save him from future predicaments and inconveniences of the kind that Mrs Gandhi had to suffer."

The key question was whether the message had gone home to everyone in the party, or whether the dissident leaders—including Solanki, Gundu Rao and Jagannath Mishra, apart from others like V.C. Shukla, would rally together. In the immediate aftermath of Rajiv's action, however, there was hardly a murmur of protest, except for the resignation of one Mukherjee sympathiser in West Bengal. Jagannath Mishra said in Patna: "I am too small a person to make any comment." But it remained unclear if the storm had blown over.

There was no doubt, however, that the immediate initiative lay with Rajiv. Soon after his meeting with Tripathi, numerous phone calls from the prime minister's residence were made to young MP's and other Congress leaders to gather information about the response that Tripathi's letter was receiving. A day before Rajiv acted, Youth Congress(I) President Anand Sharma convened a meeting of over 40 young MP's attended by Congress Parliamentary Party General Secretary K.K. Tiwari, former Youth Congress(I) president Tariq Anwar, and AICC(I) Secretary V.M. Pannicker.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It was resolved at this meeting to request the party high command to take strong action against all the disgruntled elements who were using Tripathi for their own ends. Said Sharma: "Dissidence has grown only after Rajivji gave a call for the purge of power-brokers from the party. It is good that action has now been taken."

Even as Arjun Singh and others planned the pre-emptive strike, there began an orchestrated campaign in support of Rajiv. Following Indira Gandhi's style of functioning, Union ministers, chief ministers as well as other prominent Congress(I) leaders were asked to support Rajiv Gandhi in his attempt to fulfill his Bombay Congress(I) centenary session promise of purging the party of power-brokers. Said party General Secretary K. Moopanar: "The time has come when we have to present a united and cohesive look, and not seem like a bunch of fighting and greedy politicians out to capture everything."

Meanwhile, the big question remained: why had an octogenarian like Tripathi and a discarded politician like Mukherjee decided at this moment to take a stand? The answer lay in the coming organisational elections and the preparatory membership drive that ended on March 31, 1986. Since Rajiv had chosen Arjun Singh with the sole objective of carrying out the party's election schedule, various factions had launched membership drives to outmanoeuvre each other. With Rajiv welcoming several politicians who had broken with Indira Gandhi, many of these new entrants were able to not only join the party but also to become PCC(I) and DCC(I) office-bearers in states like Uttar Pradesh, Bihar and West Bengal. During the last six months, over 70 DCC(I) office bearers in various states had been replaced by those who had either been in the Opposition or who had fought against the Congress(I). With official connivance, these politicians were able to enrol more members than the 'Indira loyalists', posing a clear threat to them. Even in Varanasi, Tripathi's daughter-in-law was outmanoeuvred in the membership drive by newcomers from the Congress(S) and the Lok Dal. The targets of the

PRANAB MUKHERJEE

"I am shocked"

BARELY 12 hours after he had heard the news of his expulsion from the Congress(I), the once-ranking minister in Mrs Gandhi's cabinet sat relaxed and unruffled in the basement office of his south Delhi residence. Puffing away at his pipe between sips of orange squash, Mukherjee, 51, spoke to Features Editor INDERJIT BADHWAR about his precipitous dismissal. Excerpts:

Q. How do you feel about being expelled?

A. I am shocked. It is shocking. I did not even hear directly from the prime minister's office or the leadership. The first I got to know about it was when I heard from reporters that there had been a news flash about this.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Mukherjee: unceremonious ouster

I have been a proud Congressman. I helped merge the Bangla Congress with the main Congress Party, and now I have been deprived of my membership. But nobody can take my contribution away.

Q. It seems you and some others were engaged in a surreptitious attempt to draft a paper challenging the party leadership on the Muslim women's bill and other issues.

A. That is just not correct. I never hid my views from the prime minister. In fact, I wrote a personal letter to Mr Gandhi on April 22, in which I clearly spelt out my views on the Muslim women's bill. As a party man, I have every right to communicate with the leader of the party.

Q. You have been speaking out on behalf of the old guard.

A. I have to admit there has been a feeling of worry, of great anxiety over the party's performance. In a parliamentary democracy a party must win elections. But the party has been losing successively. We have been going down since the 1984 general elections. In 11 assembly elections we lost three states and barely kept our seats in Rajasthan and Maharashtra. We have fared poorly in by-elections. And we lost in three metropolitan cities: Bombay, Calcutta and Hyderabad. This decline is a matter of concern.

Q. What were your other concerns?

A. They also relate to the performance of the Government. There should be more initiatives, and policy should be action-oriented in places like Punjab and also in Assam, where the language issue is going to be a serious problem. The issue of growing religious fundamentalism has to be dealt with. Members of the party and I have discussed these things among ourselves, but I do not know what I have done to be classified as a dissident.

Q. Is there a feeling that the Old Guard was being sidelined?

A. I don't know what is the Old Guard. The Congress is a big organisation. There is nothing wrong in bringing in the new. But efficient management consists of getting the services of a broad base of party people, and not responding only to a particular group of people.

Q. What about your own future?

A. I was dropped from the Government. I was dropped from the parliamentary board and the working committee. Now I have been dropped from the party. To those who think I have no power base I can only say that I will remain an activist. I believe in the Congress ideology, and in whatever way I can I will propagate that.

Q. Kamalapati Tripathi also wrote to the prime minister. But he has been treated differently. Why is this so?

A. That is for you to find out and ask them for their reactions. All I can say is I am shocked.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

loyalists are people like Union Ministers K.C.Pant, Bali Ram Bhagat, Abdul Ghafoor, Margaret Alva and PCC(I) chief Priya Ranjan Das Munshi. In fact, among those unhappy with the return of the prodigals (but not party to the dissidents' activities) were even some of Rajiv Gandhi's closest aides: N.D. Tiwari, Arun Nehru, Arjun Singh and Narasimha Rao.

With ministerial berths already beyond their reach, the dissidents facing total extinction found Tripathi willing to take up their cause. But protest against the bogus membership was clearly conceived as only the start of a major revolt. Said a Congress(I) leader from Bihar: "This noise about bogus membership is just a cover-up for an attempted coup in the party. They have been running down the leadership in public and were trying to find a leader in Tripathi."

For the moment, Rajiv's swift counter-attack has made this grand plan come unstuck. But this is only the first battle in what is certain to be a war of attrition caused by Rajiv Gandhi's effort to re-mould the Congress(I) into his own vehicle.

—PRABHU CHAWLA

KAMALAPATI TRIPATHI

"Congress has been derailed"

LETTER-bombs are not associated with octogenarian politicians. But Kamalapati Tripathi's four-page letter to Congress(I) President Rajiv Gandhi last fortnight was nothing if not a minor bombshell that sent shock waves through the party. Inevitably, there was a strong reaction from the party president.

Tripathi spoke to Assistant Editor PRABHU CHAWLA last fortnight shortly after sending his letter to Rajiv, and before the action against those who had been confabulating with the Congress(I) working president. Excerpts:

Q. Why did you write to the prime minister?

A. For the last few months I have been receiving complaints from Congress workers that bogus members were being enrolled in the states, and that people from the Lok Dal, Bharatiya Janata Party and other opposition parties have been enrolled as Congress members in Uttar Pradesh, Madhya Pradesh, Rajasthan and Bihar.

Q. What can be the motives for enrolling bogus members?

A. Some people in the party are conspiring to grab control of the organisation through devious methods. They are not only encouraging bogus membership, they are also depositing huge amounts of money as membership fees. In Uttar Pradesh alone, over a crore of rupees have been deposited in this fashion.

Q. Have you given all these details to the prime minister?

A. Yes, I have. I also requested him to order a CID inquiry into this massive inflow of money and to find out the real forces behind this move to capture the organisation. We are receiving a lot of money but we don't know who are the people depositing it.

Q. Who are these people?

A. It is difficult to name any individual, but there is a pattern behind this move. I have an apprehension that all those who left the party and lost their credibility as Congressmen are now active in this game. They are the same people who fought against the party in the elections in the recent past and they have been able to re-enter the party somehow. The sad part of the story is that some of them are now the office-bearers of the party, appointed by the PCC(I) chiefs who themselves are nominated and not elected in the various states.

BHAWAN SINGH

Tripathi: re-weighing options

All those Congressmen who stood firm on January 1, 1978, to elect Indira Gandhi as the AICC(I) president are being purged systematically and those who humiliated her at the Shah Commission hearings are being given positions of prominence.

Q. The prime minister made a statement that the party will be supreme and get all due importance. Are you satisfied with this?

A. I don't think the party is receiving the attention and the importance it deserves even now. Earlier we used to say this is the Congress Government, now it is the Government's Congress.

Q. What difference do you find between Indira Gandhi and Rajiv?

A. Indira Gandhi was an effective link between the old guard and the new Congress workers. She was a freedom fighter and knew everything about the party and its individuals, and about the party's culture. The present prime minister is a newcomer to politics. To that extent the difference is there for everybody to see. He has no link with the old guard.

Q. Do you think that there is a communication gap between Rajiv and the ordinary Congress worker?

A. Yes. There is a lack of proper communication between him and others. But I don't blame him. As prime minister he has to perform so many other duties and has so many other responsibilites.

Q. Some people feel that you are unhappy at the appointment of Arjun Singh as vice-president.

A. That is not true. In our party's constitution there are no posts of working president and vice-president, but the party president thought he should work through a working president and later on with a vice-president.

Q. Were you consulted when the post of vice-president was created?

A. Why should I tell you? It is our internal party affair.

Q. Rajiv promised a clean party and an efficient government. Has he fulfilled his promise?

A. Both the Congress Party and Rajiv's Government are the cleanest the country ever had.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

*"Dignity consists not in possessing honours but in the consciousness that we deserve them."

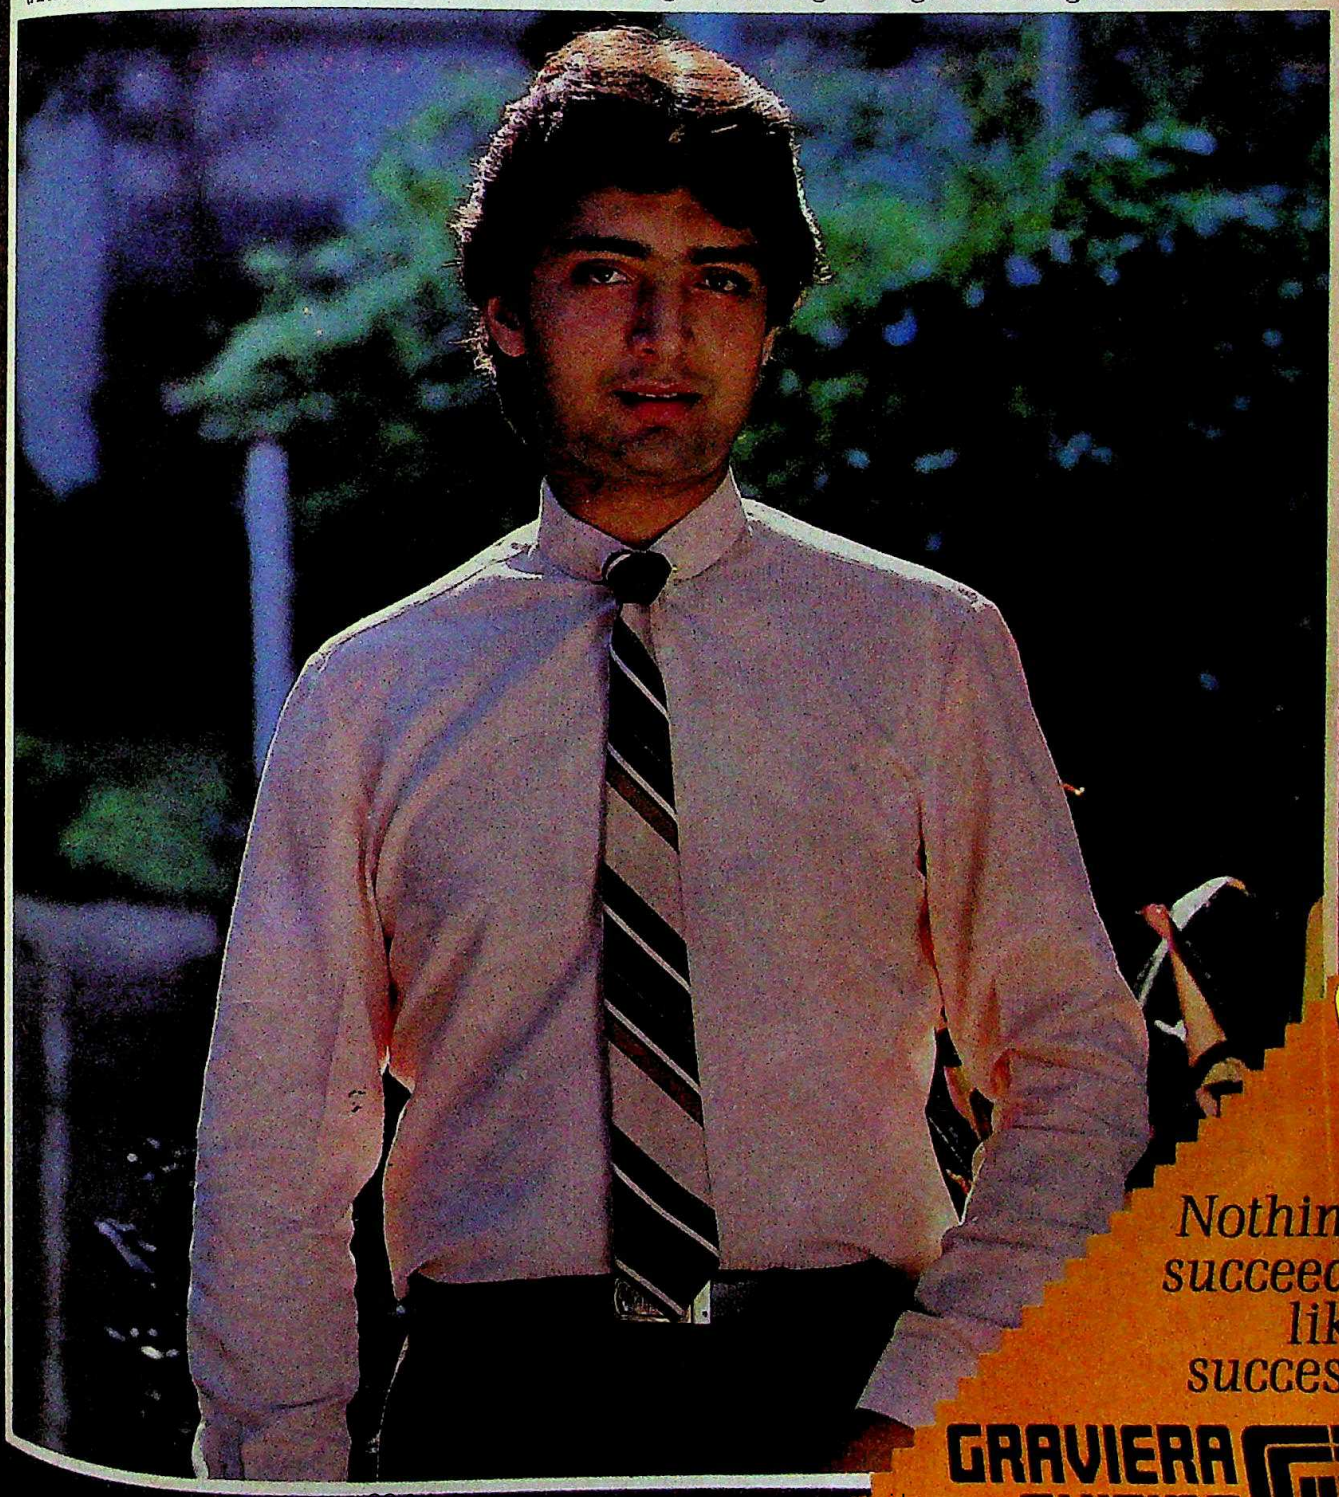
* (Aristotle. Philosopher and Guide.)

Remember one thing—no honour is conferred lightly. You deserve your success—so don't laugh it off. Be modest by all means but know that your success is well-deserved. Wear your honours with dignity. Because you deserve them!

Your dignity lies in the way you walk, or talk; and in what you wear. Show good taste in your choice of clothes. It's vital! Your clothes leave behind a sub-conscious impression on the people that matter and on everyone else.

Choose Graviera Suiting and Shirting for elegance and comfort. Graviera is quality fabric that fashions suits and shirts, safaris and trousers which are elegant and comfortable. It's wash 'n wear, easy-care fabric, with polyrich fast colour. There's a wide, wide range of suiting and shirting to choose from. Deep sober colours and soft pastels, in a variety of superb weaves and textures. All Graviera fabrics are that rare blend of graciousness and good sense.

Dignified pace-setters like you deserve a dignified suiting like Graviera!



Nothing succeeds like success!

GRAVIERA SUITING GR

Haridwar

MAPP-STM-86-80

Our sternest critic

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Gopalkrishnan Nair is known in our Pune factory as a strong, silent type. And that's precisely how he likes his SKF bearings to be.

Gopalkrishnan is one of our top quality controllers. He handles the third and most intricate stage of checking, once the bearings have passed pre- and post-application examinations. 'Our main concern', he reports, 'is to make our customers' lives as comfortable as possible. Though SKF products enjoy the highest reputation for quality, we're forever striving to reduce noise levels even more.'

Gopalkrishnan submits each and every bearing to sophisticated statistical auditing equipment.

Tolerances, dimensions and above all noise are are measured in microscopic detail. The slightest imperfe tion, and Gopalkrishnan's been known to close down the production line to locate the source of error.

'Insisting on perfection is the only way to maintai our standards.' When this sternest of critics passes a bearing, you'd think our meticulous quality contr process had reached its conclusion.

In fact, there's yet another stage – a random spo check by our independent Standards Room!

Right down to the details

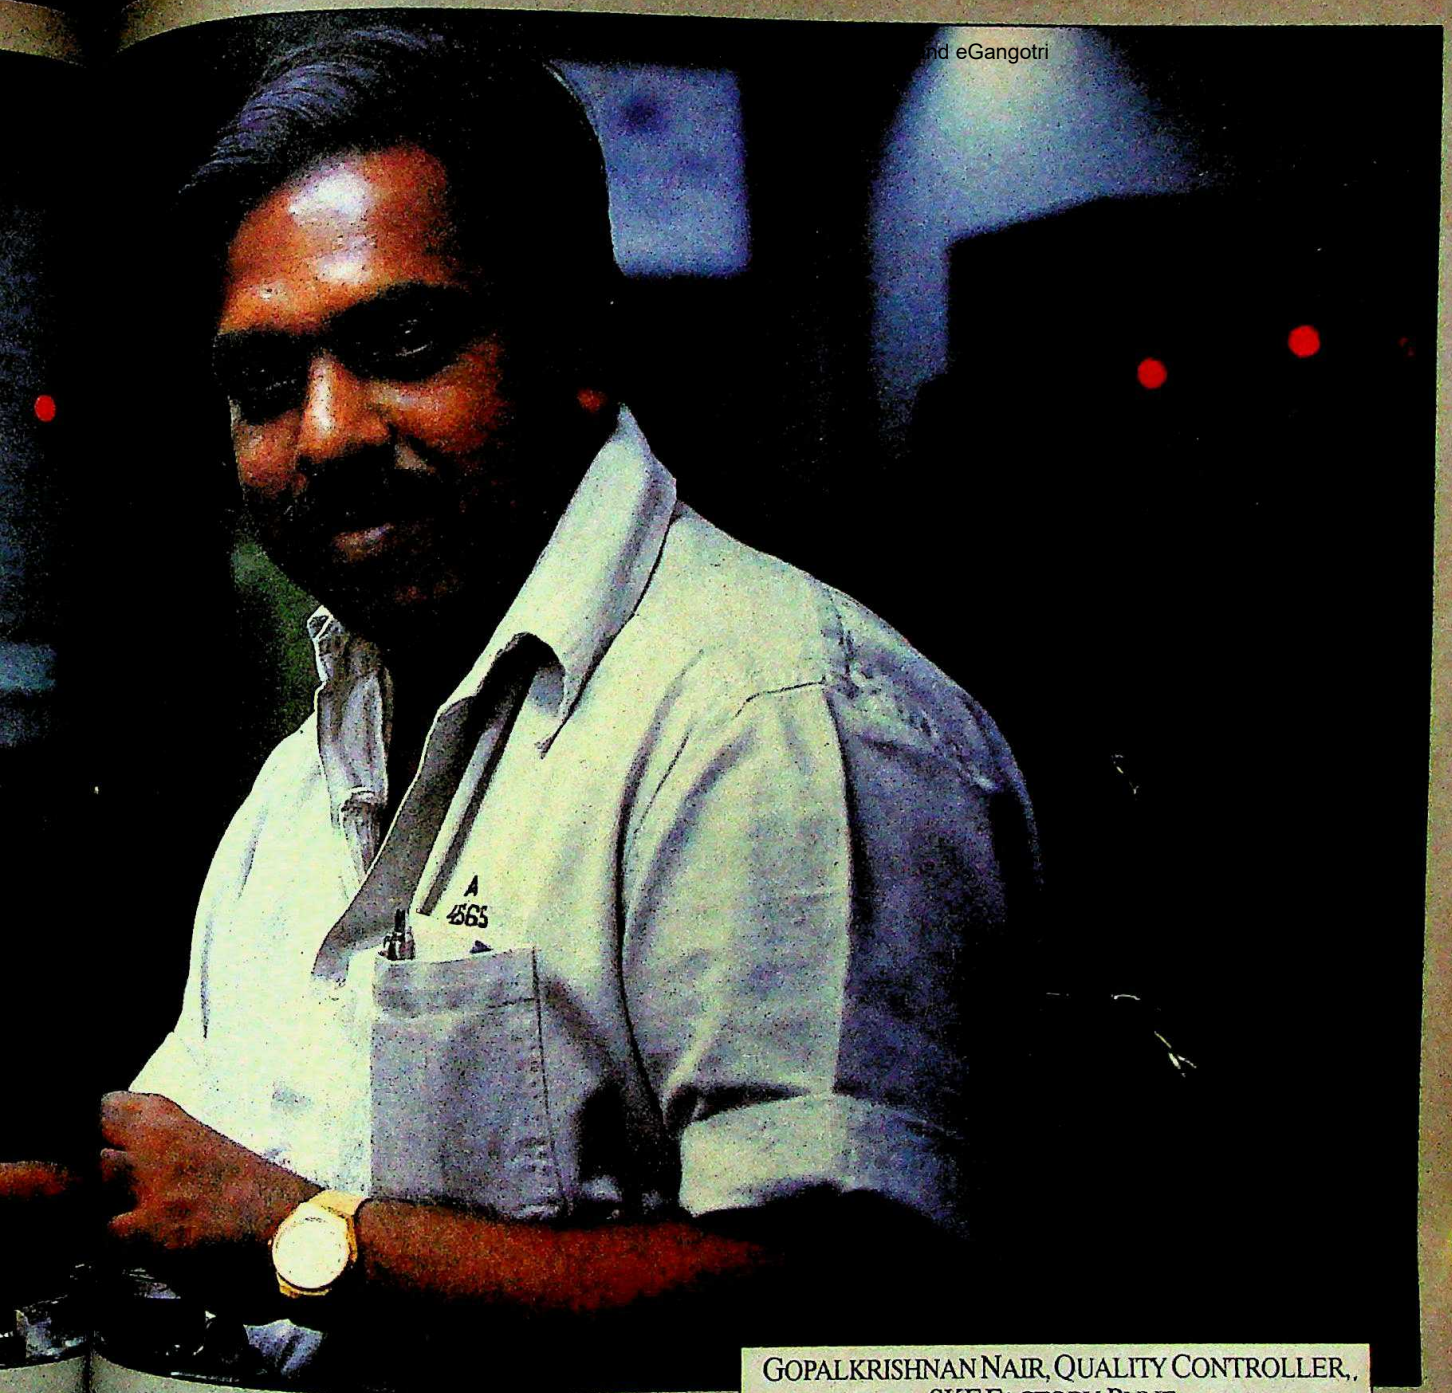
SKF in India are backed by the vast resources of th SKF Group, the world's leading manufacturer of rolling bearings. But it's the efforts of our local people that ha

PRODUCTION EXCELLENCE 25 SILVER JUBILEE

Associated Bearing Company Ltd., Hoechst House, Nariman Point, Bombay 400 0

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

nd eGangotri



GOPALKRISHNAN NAIR, QUALITY CONTROLLER,. SKF FACTORY, PUNE.

de us India's largest bearing manufacturer; making
y contribution to the economy for well over 60 years.
Producing an annual output of some 16 million ball taper bearings, as well as supplying steel, housings technical equipment – all to the standards that have n us such worldwide acclaim.
And offering a service to match – from the moment contact us through sales, technical support, manufac-
, distribution and aftercare.
For Gopalkrishnan and everyone at SKF, it's more
a job to serve you well.
It's a real question of pride. That's why you can
us. Right down to the details.

How do SKF achieve such high standards of quality and service?
I'd like to find out more.
☐ Please arrange for an SKF representative to visit me.
☐ Please arrange for me to receive your brochure.

Name
Company
Job Title
Address
Telephone
Postcode

e: 23 22 44. Telegram: PENBALL. Telex: 011-2657.

SKF

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Light abounds in inspirations

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Featured here, our latest brass and bone china collection

And it takes a master artist to capture them for you, in crystal, silk, marble, wood, lacquerwork. It takes the refinement of the Kapoor Lamp Shade Company.

We pioneered the aesthetics of home & hotel lighting in this country. And to this day we remain India's largest exporters to the sophisticated western markets. For 35 years our exquisitely designed lampshades have illuminated the lives of patrons across three continents.

Whatever your budget, come to us. We'll breathe new life into your home.

kapoor
LAMP SHADE CO.

Source of the most exclusive lamps, chandeliers and decorative accessories in India

Showrooms in New Delhi, Bombay, Madras, Bangalore, Hyderabad, Ahmedabad, Indore, Goa and Gangtok

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAJKOT

Dealing in Drought

THE MEANDERING rows of empty pots and pans have become Rajkot's most familiar sight. For the city's housewives, life revolves around getting water for the family. Every conversation in the city invariably turns to the shortage of water. The area's largest newspaper devotes a quarter of its news space to reporting on the crisis. Residents get up at dawn to be the first at the community tap. With tempers running high, quarrels break out often. But the gross tragedy of this inhuman situation escapes them as they push and jostle to reach the tap, which often doesn't oblige. Even when it does, the trickle is often contaminated and unfit to drink.

For the past few months, Rajkot (pop: 5.5 lakh) in Saurashtra, Gujarat, has been reeling under an unprecedented water shortage. Water comes only on alternative days and then too in a thin trickle for 20 minutes. The city was getting 110 lakh gallons before the crisis began, but today the supply is down to 70 lakh gallons every alternative day: less than a third of the normal. That is barely 6 gallons per head daily—once again, less than a third of the minimum prescribed by the World Health Organisation. The pressure is so low that the water doesn't even reach houses on the ground floor. To trap all the water they can get, people have dug thousands of small pits at the points where the corporation pipes connect with the house connections.

The problem began with the failure of the monsoon last year, when Rajkot recorded the lowest rainfall in a decade. As the rest of Saurashtra also reeled under an unprecedented drought, the sources of supply to Rajkot started drying up. The Aji dam—Rajkot's principal source—now has only enough water to last till the end of April. The state Government is rushing in with investments for augmenting water supply, earmarking Rs 11.6 crore for Rajkot out of a water supply budget of Rs 86 crore this year. But the additional water may not be available quickly enough.

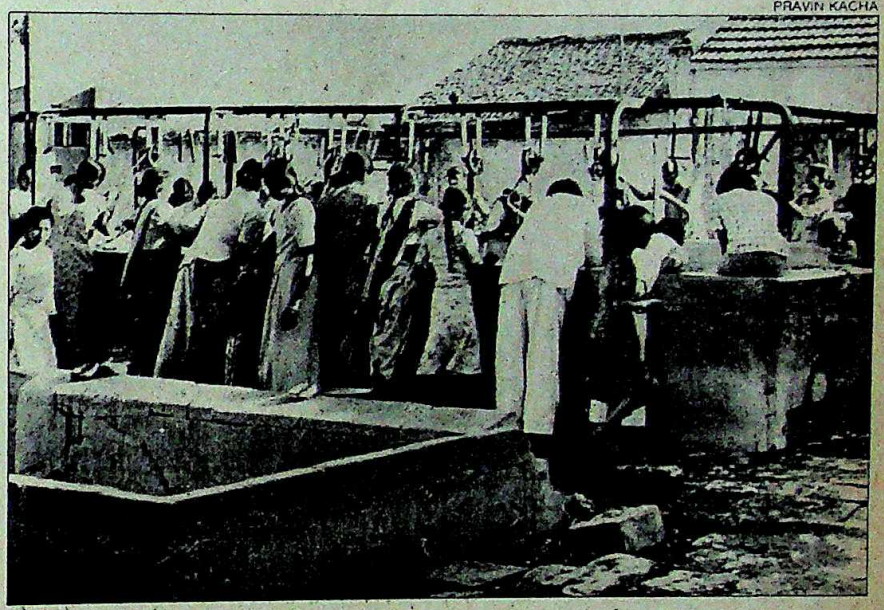
Inevitably, fortune hunters have turned the tragedy into an opportunity to make a fast buck. All over Rajkot, one can see all manner of vehicles—from bullock-carts to Toyota trucks—fitted with tanks, making the rounds and selling water. Many vehicles are even equipped with diesel pumps so that water can be lifted to the upper storeys. Advertisements appear in local dailies announcing that "good quality water can be home-delivered"—provided, of course, you have the money to pay: somewhere in the region of Rs 25 for a barrel of 600 litres. Says a resident sarcastically: "One cannot beat Gujarati enterprise." Bhimjibhai Muljibhai is one of those who has struck paydirt in water. Jobless before the drought began, Muljibhai saw the water crisis grow and bought a tanker for Rs 1,200 with a capacity of 600 litres, fitted it to a three-wheeler and started fetching water from Nana Mouva, a village 15 km from Rajkot. He makes eight trips a day and takes home Rs 3,500 every month. "What's wrong with selling water?" he reasons. "Everyone is doing it." "Everyone" also includes the relative of a cabinet minister and four sitting corporators.

Private truckers—who fetch water from villages 40 to 50 km away—make up to Rs 300 per trip. Hotels, restaurants and major institutions are their clients. Durgesh restaurant buys Rs 4,500 worth of water every month. The Bank of India spends over Rs 600 a day to provide water for its 400-odd employees. The municipal corporation maintains that water sharks bring in only about 2.5 lakh gallons to the city. But unofficial estimates say the figure is much higher. As the days hot up, both the quantity of the water and its rates will rise.

As always, the disadvantaged suffer the most. Says Dharamsinh Nanji, a fitter in an air compressor unit who earns Rs 750 a month and has 11 dependants: "I have been spending Rs 10 every day for the last three months. How long can I pull on like this?" Migrating is no solution either since, as he says, "living without a salary would be much worse". Says housewife Jyoti Bhatnagar: "The least that can be done is to grant a water allowance for the people of the city."

Residents around a public well; and (below) water pits alongside an open drain

PRAVIN KACHA



JAVESH CHAUHAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

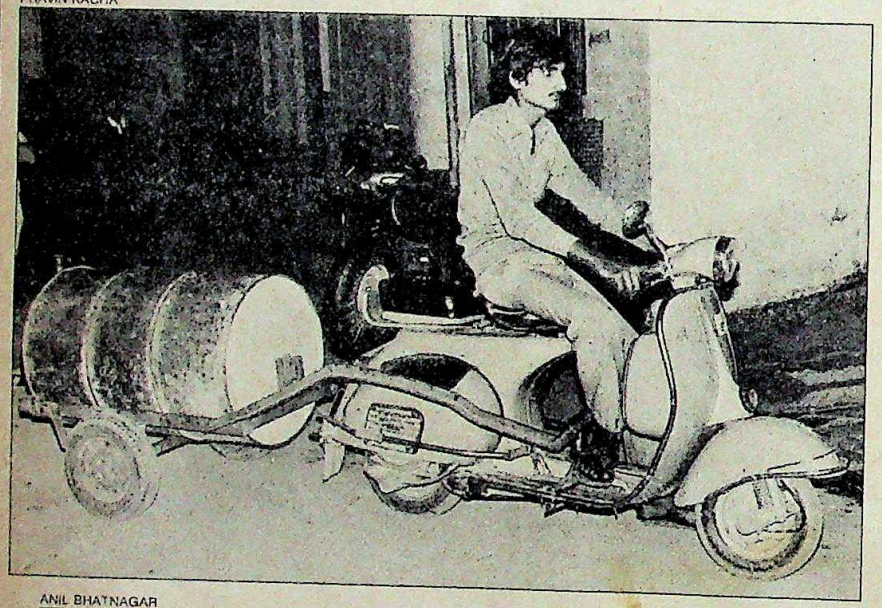
Inevitably, those who cannot afford to pay, or many who are just greedy, resort to illegal means to get water, like digging up the mains at cross-connections, breaking open roads and pipelines, fitting bigger pipes to their water connections or installing pumps fitted directly to the mains so that they can draw more water in the crucial 20 minutes.

IN A drive to check these malpractices, the municipal corporation arrested 72 people last month, all of whom had tampered with their water connections. One of them is Vrajlal Jani, who with a concealed pump, was drawing about 10,000 litres of water for his restaurant. Madhu Gosaria was another person with a hidden pump, who was drawing more water than many of her neighbours.

A conservative estimate by the municipal corporation puts the number of pits dug in the city's roads at around 30,000. "Plumbing has become big business," says Bashir Ahmed, a plumber who now keeps busy fitting pits with taps or with bigger pipes. Citizens know fully well that digging pits on roadsides is illegal but, as Kishan Dave, a foundry worker, says: "When not even a drop of water comes into the house, what alternative do we have but to dig pits?"

PRAVIN KACHA

Private water carrier: trading in misery



ANIL BHATNAGAR

"What's wrong with selling water? Everyone is doing it."

BHIMJIBHAI MULJIBHAI water carrier

This, however, has thrown up a new fear for citizens and corporation and health officials. Since a large part of the city has open drains and since the pits more often than not happen to be right next to these drains, the hazard of contamination through seepage is ever-present. In some areas, gutter water has seeped into drinking water mains, while in some others, labourers have been seen drawing water out of gutters, ostensibly for construction purposes. As a result, even potable water is not quite harmless. Says Lalita Vashram, a housewife living in Manhar Plot: "The first few buckets we get are muddy and stink of sewage."

A sample of water collected from a main pipe and analysed by the public health engineering department showed the presence of 2,400 organisms in 100 ml, and an equal amount of fecal coliforms. The department's scientific officer, M.S. Marfani, said that the water supplied by the corporation was potable but since pits had been dug all over the city, chances of pollution were high. P.K. Laheri, joint secretary, water supply, called upon people to use chlorine tablets to prevent an epidemic but as Khimji Pipalia, a corporation wireman pointed out, "We do not have enough money to buy water: Where can we buy tablets from?"

Fearing an outbreak of water-borne diseases in the city, state Health Minister Vallabhai Patel recently asked Municipal Commissioner S. Jagadishan to cover the pits. But when he set about the task last fortnight, there was a public outcry and tempers in Rajkot touched a new high. Within hours, Social Welfare Minister Sushila Seth, who is from Rajkot, requested him to stop the operation. Mayor Vajubhai Vala, who heads the BJP-controlled corporation, bluntly said: "First give us water, then close the pits."

Corporators have hardly helped matters. Anxious to appease their constituents, they pressurised Jagadishan into digging 264 tubewells at a cost of Rs 13 lakh. Only 116 found water, but 56 of these ran dry in a few days. Says Jagadishan: "All the money has gone down the drain."

Desperate to save water, the corporation has begun daily spraying of cetyl alcohol over the little water left in the Aji dam, to cut evaporation by 15 to 18 per cent. The state Government is also gearing up its efforts. From the first week of May, eight water trains carrying 6.5 lakh gallons will ferry the precious liquid from Gandhinagar, 225 km away, and Dhantharwadi in Amreli district, 200 km away. The exercise will cost the Government a mind-boggling Rs 7.5 crore over a month.

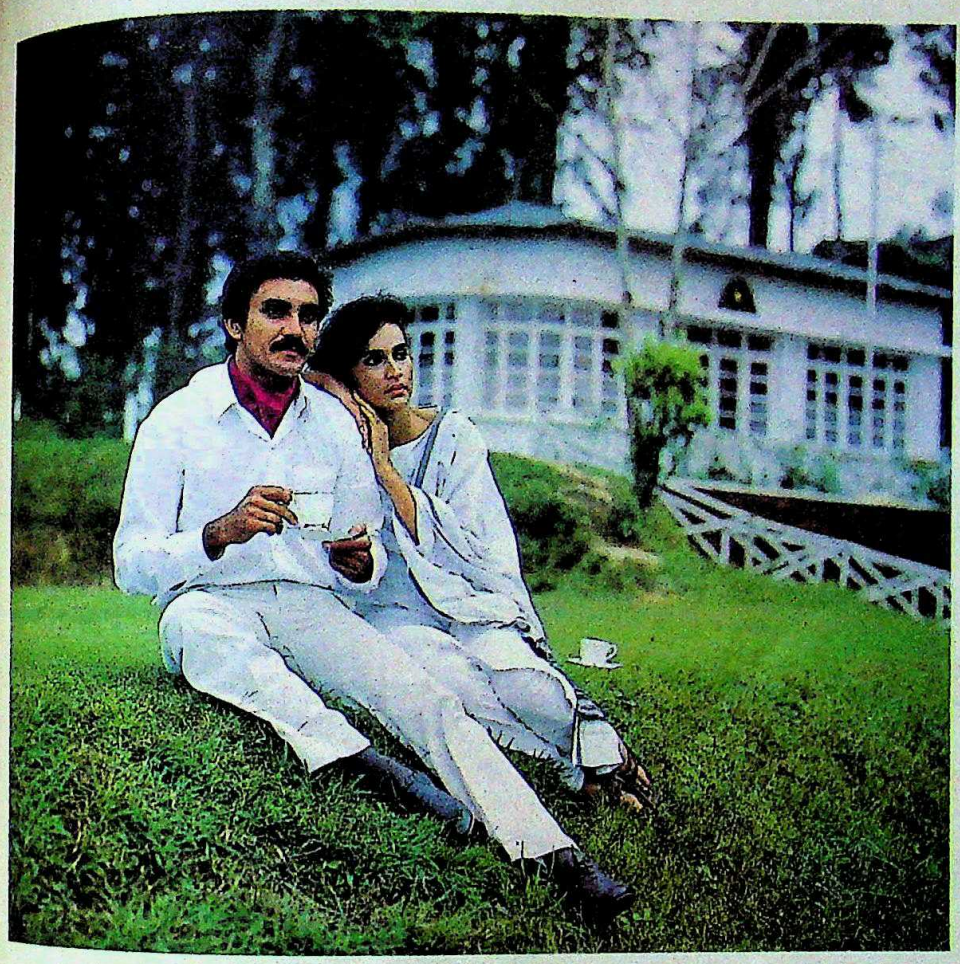
But these are mere palliatives. As officials point out, the concept of water management is completely absent. Says former health minister Manoharsinh Jadeja: "The Government has bungled on the water crisis in Rajkot." The aim should be to learn and build from the Rajkot experience. The real challenge will come when government tankers will have to go to far-off places in search of potable water.

Whatever the Government's lapses, the ultimate tragedy is that the crisis has brought out the worst in human behaviour. A housing society in Rajkot, which has a huge well full of water, is selling water and using the profits to build a compound wall and a road for its members. When it comes to trading in human misery, there are obviously no limits.

—RAMESH MENON in Rajkot

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

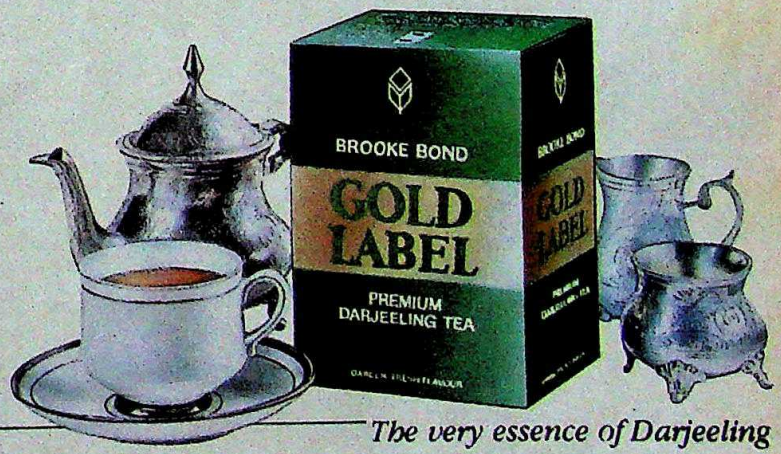
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



From the mist-wrapped slopes of the Darjeeling hills comes a tea so distinct, so impeccable in flavour...

Nurtured in the finest tea estates. Carefully and discerningly hand-picked. And sealed into a unique gold foil pack to retain that garden-fresh flavour.

FLAVOUR SO DARJEELING, IT DESERVES A GOLD LABEL.



Brooke Bond GOLD LABEL

The very essence of Darjeeling

BBI-1834

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

SPARTEK FLOORS: Elegant, tough, easy to maintain

SPARTEK FLOOR TILES are now made in India, in collaboration with CeramicUS of USA...leaders in ultra-modern Ceramic technology. Technology that offers you unlimited decor options - in terms of colours, designs, textures, sizes and shapes - in a flooring material that has the most advanced physical anti-wear properties till date. Including the incredible advantage of being so easy to lay that it's ready for live-in use in a matter of 48 hours.

For more details write to:
SPARTEK CERAMICS INDIA LIMITED
52 CHAMIERS ROAD,
MADRAS 600 028.

SPARTEK
Now made in India in collaboration with CeramicUS.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

There are briefcases and briefcases, but a VIP is a VIP.

In the professional world where impressions count, a VIP briefcase gives you the leading edge.

Because VIP is the name that commands respect. Its excellence shows in every sleek contour, well-finished interior and innovative feature. And the range could leave you astounded with its colour and variety.

Don't just get yourself a briefcase. Get the VIP treatment.

V.I.P. Briefcases
a VIP makes all the difference

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

EVER SINCE I DISCOVERED RAYMOND'S READYMADES, IT'S GOODBYE TO ILL-FITTING CLOTHES.

Trousers
•
Safaris
•
Shirts
•
Suits
•
Blazers

Raymond's Mens Wear

Location courtesy: The Taj Mahal Hotel, Bombay.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BIHAR

Declaring War

IN BIHAR, notorious for its 'ordinance raj', the promulgation of one more ordinance is not necessarily an event of any importance. But last fortnight's ordinance taking over the L.N. Mishra Institute of Economic Development and Social Changes—called 'The Private Educational Institutions (Taking Over) Ordinance 1986'—predictably raised a political storm. The institute, hitherto under the control of the redoubtable Jagannath Mishra, was the ex-chief minister's base for carrying on covert and not so covert dissident activities. By summarily ordering its take-over, the beleaguered Chief Minister, Bindeshwari Dubey, has made it clear that he intends to take the fight into the rival camp.

Operation take-over was a remarkable show of strength by Dubey. After the ordinance was decided upon at a cabinet meeting, Governor P. Venkatasubbiah's signature was promptly obtained, and within hours of the decision, armed police moved into the sprawling campus of the institute on Bailey Road. Patna's Divisional Commissioner Krishna Singh went straight to the air-conditioned chamber of the institute's chairman-cum-director-general, Jagannath Mishra, to hand over the transfer document and take personal charge. A dumb-founded Mishra resignedly complied and left in a huff. The drama came to the press' notice only later when aides of the state Education Minister L.N. Jha went around to newspapers' offices with a brief press note, even as journalists were still working on their copy on the cabinet meeting.

"It is a case of political vendetta and I will fight this out politically," said an angry Mishra. "The whole game is aimed at provoking me to leave the party but I am not going to oblige them." Predictably, the take-over also gave a fresh fillip to dissident activities against Dubey. Fifty legislators signed a statement demanding immediate recall of the "retrograde step". Dissidents announced plans to stage a show of strength before the governor and demanded that Dubey call a meeting of the Congress(I) Legislature Party to seek a vote of confidence. Kamalnath Singh Thakur, MLC, recalling that Dubey would never have become the chief minister had Mishra not thrown his weight behind him said: "This is an act of cowardice, political immorality as well as ungratefulness. How can we tolerate it?"

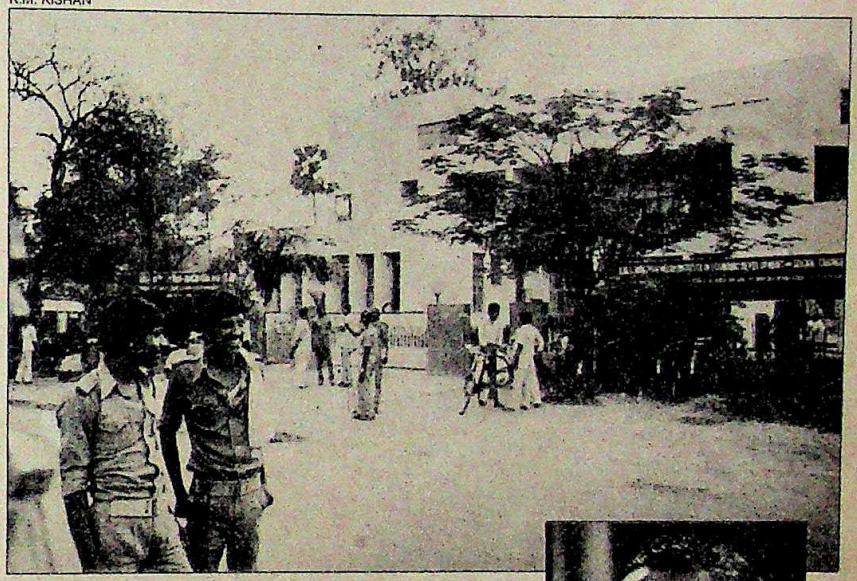
Mishra's supporters say Dubey took over the institute in a last-ditch attempt to stay on in power. They explained that since the high command was known to be considering the dissidents' demand for a change in the state leadership after the termination of the Lok Sabha session early next month, Dubey decided to show that he was strong enough to take on the dissidents. But in the heat of the moment the dissidents overlooked one crucial fact: that Dubey could not have taken this precipitate step without the backing of the party high command. Though firm evidence was lacking—and neither Mishra nor Dubey's supporters would comment on it—it is believed that Dubey got the green signal from Delhi when he was in the capital earlier in the month.

The education minister dismissed the dissidents' allegations and asserted that the take-over was part of the Government's attempt to streamline management education. The ordinance, he pointed out, also empowered the Government to take over more such institutions. Said Jha with a smile: "The Government has every right to take over professional institutions in private hands and improve and diversify its activities." But then Jha gave the game away by adding: "Moreover, there was strong suspicion that the institute was being misused for political reasons."

Whatever the protestations of Mishra's followers, the take-over should have been expected. Mishra and Dubey have been on a collision course ever since Mishra started using the institute for his jan jagran abhiyan (campaign to raise public awareness) and his Hindi daily Pataliputra Times started exposing the "inefficiency and corruption" of the Dubey Government. Even as Mishra would publicly, albeit indirectly, criticise the Dubey Government, the institute would release analytical studies about various poverty-removal schemes launched by the state Government showing large-scale misuse of public funds even as achievements lagged behind the targets. Matters came to a head when the Dubey Government stopped the annual grant of Rs 10.70 lakh to the institute, despite a no-objection certifi-

The L.N. Mishra Institute: take-over

K.M. KISHAN



"The whole game is aimed at provoking me to leave the party but I am not going to oblige."

JAGANNATH MISHRA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

cate from the education and finance departments. Simultaneously, the Pataliputra Times was starved of government advertisements. Angered by this, Mishra, who had taken care to hide his hand behind the rising dissidence, openly lashed out at the Government in the budget session for its inefficiency.

Set up by Mishra as the Bihar Institute of Economic Development and renamed after Mishra's elder brother L.N. Mishra after the latter's death, the institute grew in size and stature after Mishra became the chief minister in 1975. Today, it enjoys the status of an autonomous institute affiliated to the University Grants Commission, and is recognised and aided by the Union Ministry of Human Resources Development. A despondent Mishra listed the institute's achievements: it has been shortlisted by the Central Government for training of IAS officers, selected by the Union Ministry of Agriculture for evaluation of the implementation of the IRDP and NREP, is the recipient of a grant from the Union Education Ministry to start a training scheme in computers, and the first to start a course in rural management. Says Mishra: "I had introduced the management education course in Bihar but now many substandard institutes have cropped up. Instead of curbing their activities, the Government is trying to demolish an institute that has gained wide recognition."

Mishra's apprehension that the take-over would abridge the institute's academic growth is not without basis. Most institutes doing specialised work which have been taken over by the Government for similarly laudable objectives—like the Mithila Sanskrit Research Institute at Darbhanga, the K.P. Jaiswal Institute at Patna, the Nav Nalanda Mahavir at Nalanda and the prestigious A.N. Sinha Institute of Social Studies at Patna—have become a graveyard for scholars caught in the crossfire between bureaucrats and academicians.

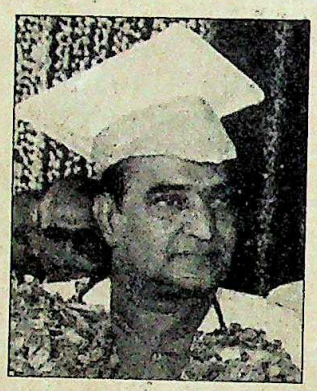
Whether the Mishra institute also goes the same way is a matter that may, in the normal course of things, have interested only academics. But because the take-over was essentially a political decision, the issue has taken on wider ramifications. With Mishra's supporters breathing fire and brimstone and Dubey refusing to give in to their pressure, the stage has been set for a fight to the finish between Bihar's two-best known Brahmins.

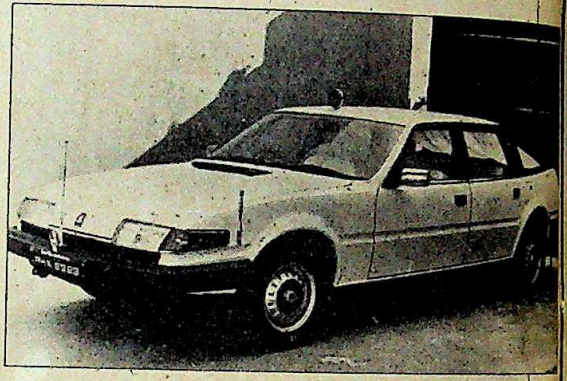
—FARZAND AHMED

ANDHRA PRADESH

Idle Worship

FOR THE 62 million Telugu-speaking people, New Year's Day on April 10 marked the start of Aakshya Ugadi—the year which does not wither away. Andhra Pradesh Chief Minister Nandamuri Taraka Rama Rao, whose public image has noticeably withered in recent months, chose the auspicious day to kick off yet another attempt to bolster his image. Having usurped the state governor's usual role of university chancellor, NTR had already appointed himself the chancellor of the newly created University of Health Sciences and, on New Year's Day, appeared at Vijayawada in saffron dhoti and kurta to formally inaugurate the new university.





NTR at inauguration ceremonies (left); and his Standard car: self indulgence

The next step aimed at giving his image a lift was a new shell-white air-conditioned Standard 2000. Unveiled on what was now becoming an eventful New Year's Day, NTR made a dramatic entry at various venues in the most expensive of all cars manufactured in the country. And as eyebrows were raised—NTR had after all promised an austere government—the wily actor-turned-politician announced a Rs 10-crore raffle with the Standard as the first prize.

But it was soon obvious that this was nothing more than a publicity gimmick. For even as advertisements began appearing in newspapers announcing the raffle, officials were still to work out whether the tickets were going to be priced at Re 1 or Rs 1,000.

There was more to come. Rama Rao followed this with the announcement of a colour television set as a prize to the person who came up with the best suggestion on how to spend the money raised through the raffle! Commented the former state Congress(I) president, Y.S. Rajasekhar Reddy, tongue firmly in cheek: "The chief minister's raffle should be a regular monthly feature and he must use his extraordinary persuasive capacities to collect Rs 120 crore a year. With equal amounts from the state and Central governments, the total of Rs 340 crore can be used for drought relief."

Unfazed, NTR continued to cut ribbons and launch projects and programmes named after him. On April 11 he declared open the Taraka Rama Udyanavam—a 69-acre park developed at a cost of Rs 38 lakh by the Visakhapatnam Urban Development Authority. And on April 17 he inaugurated the Rs 105 lakh Taraka Rama Bahulartha Pranganam at Velamkothur in East Godavari district. This is a multi-purpose project offering rural development, education and housing in one complex.

Later, in a speech at a meeting of the Andhra Pradesh Chambers of Commerce and Industry, he called for a freeze on imports and an end to all foreign collaborations since these affected India's self-respect and international prestige. His image-building programmes and his empty rhetoric have begun to embarrass his partymen and supporters. Influential members of the Telugu Desam have begun to say openly that their leader has more than a touch of megalomania. And commenting on his chambers of commerce speech, the leading Telugu daily, Eenadu, which in the past has unabashedly supported NTR and his Telugu Desam, said in a hard-hitting editorial: "The chief minister seems to talk without restraint and reveals his mental confusion. Progress is not possible by mere emotional outbursts." But was Rama Rao listening?

—AMARNATH K. MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Are you ready for the best in life?

There's only one thing that stands between a man and the best things in life. A decision. A sharp-edged decision in favour of excellence. Even in the choice of a blade.

Savage. A classic of Wilkinson technology. A blade like no other. The only one with the unique Gothic Arch edge. Specially triple coated with polytetrafluoroethylene and chromium and ceramic. For the smoothest, most pleasurable shaves. Day after day after day.

Get the Savage experience.
It's ready. When you are.

Wilkinson India Ltd.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

OBM 1199 R

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

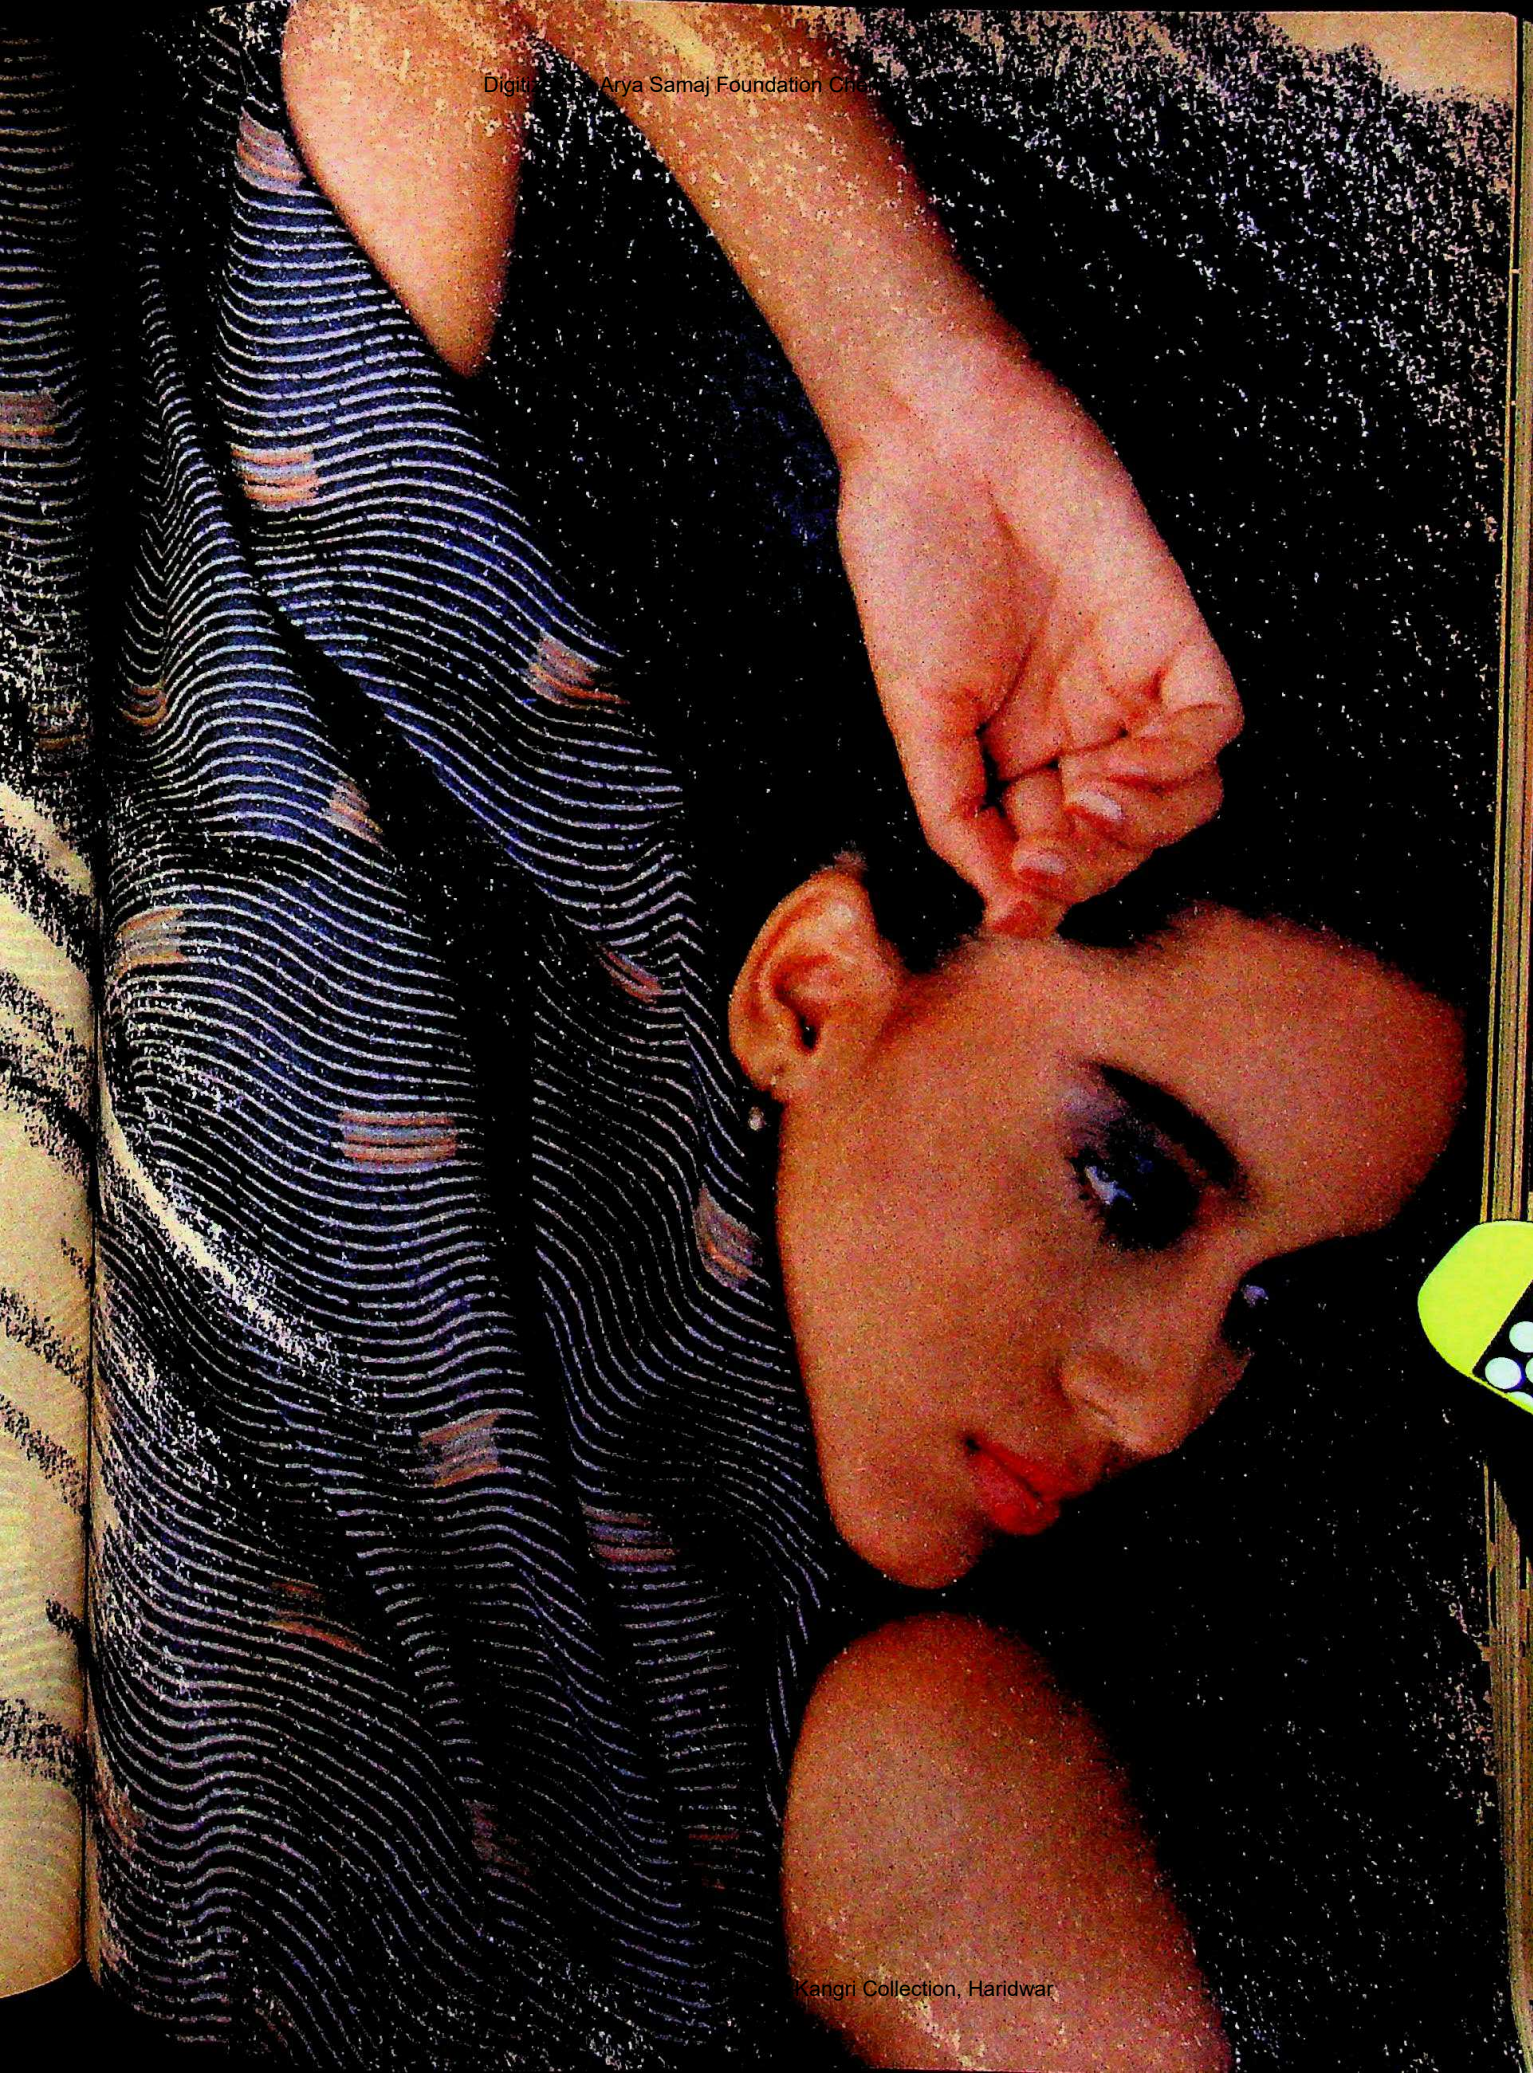
Garden®

...and Garden creates the new woman.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

rden Silk Mills Pvt. Ltd., Surat, an associate of the Vareli Group of Industries.

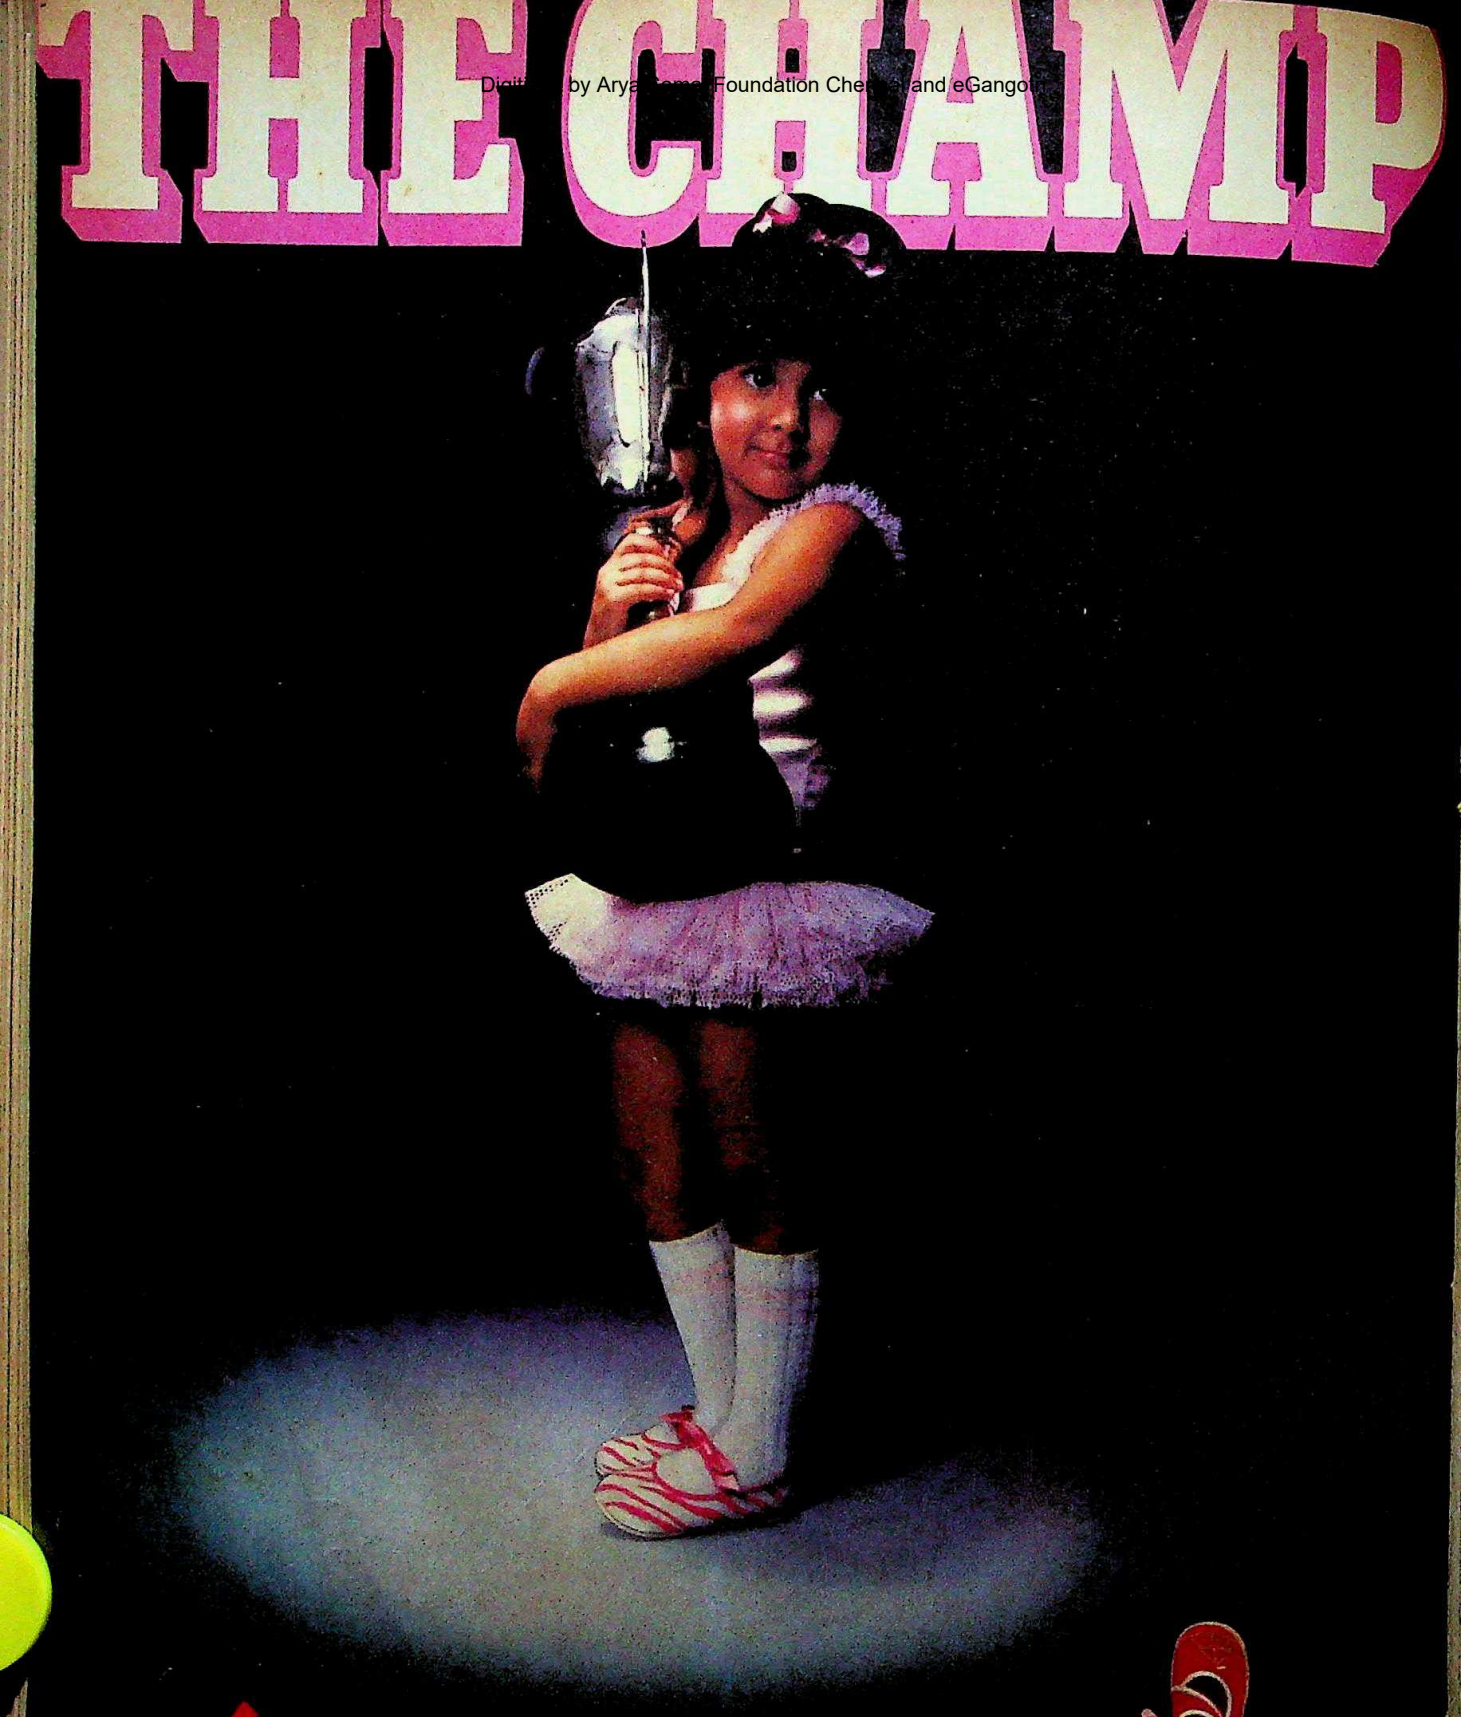
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai



Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE CHAMP



Champs* from Carona

Carona Sahu Co. Ltd. A Khatau Enterprise *Registration applied for Available at select Carona/CSC shops.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HARYANA

Clever Coup

THE MOST tenacious survivor in Indian politics, Haryana Chief Minister Bhajan Lal, scored yet another political victory last fortnight when Birender Singh submitted his resignation as the state party chief after an increasingly stormy seven-month relationship with Lal. The final break came when Lal successfully prevailed upon the party high command to agree to a postponement of a party workers' convention called by Singh.

But the postponement was only the proverbial tip of the iceberg. Lal and Singh held diametrically opposite views on the Punjab accord, with Lal trying to match Lok Dal leader Devi Lal's fiery opposition to the accord with similarly hawkish postures and Singh trying to take a more reasonable stand. Singh had also offended Lal by sincerely trying to give the party a watchdog image. His resignation was given after he unsuccessfully tried to persuade Rajiv Gandhi to sort out the discord.

Lal managed to persuade the high command that Singh was immature and, more important, that his dovish stand on the Punjab accord was no answer to the political challenge posed by Devi Lal's Haryana Sangharsh Samiti, which has been getting increasing support among the people on a blatantly anti-accord stand. Bansi Lal, the other strongman of Haryana politics, also threw his weight behind the wily chief minister's effort to run down Singh. Bansi Lal, who does not want any Jat leader other than his son Surinder Singh to come up, has always viewed Singh—grandson of the legendary Sir Chhotu Ram—with suspicion.

Singh's resignation will not merely subdue the voice of reason in Haryana, it is also a setback to Rajiv's plan to revamp the party at the state level. Singh, 38, was one of four party chiefs in and around their forties appointed last year with the express objective of making the party "superior" to the Government.

Mincing no words, Singh had declared at his installation ceremony: "We are not going to depend upon the Government. We shall organise our rallies through mass efforts. We shall be the watchdog of the interests of the people of the state and offer constructive criticism. The party will not be ignored now." Lal's prompt retort was: "My brother is young, energetic, but shall surely need our help and support."

But Singh kept his word. Numerous district level conferences were organised without much government help. With no contribution from Lal, the enthusiastic Singh collected a hefty Rs 10 lakh and cleared old debts of the party worth Rs 2 lakh. Not only this, he shot off letters to Lal asking him to improve the Government's image and drawing his attention to allegations of corruption and nepotism against his ministers and officials. When a minister of state, Kartar Devi, openly challenged the party high command by terming the Punjab accord as anti-Haryana, Singh wrote to the chief minister asking him to seek her explanation and take suitable disciplinary action. But she was only voicing Lal's viewpoint.

Birender Singh

Birender Singh is only the latest to learn that it never pays to underestimate Bhajan Lal, the longest-serving of all Congress(I) chief ministers.

Bhajan Lal

Lal has been blowing hot and cold on the implementation of the accord. At one stage he said he would not agree to the transfer of Chandigarh to Punjab unless Abohar and Fazilka were conceded to Haryana. At another time he declared that the Sutlej-Yamuna link canal must be constructed before Chandigarh could be handed over. Then he confounded everybody by saying that Punjab, Haryana and Himachal Pradesh should merge. Most recently, he said that Haryana would only be satisfied with 1,200 villages from Punjab as part of the package deal.

As opposed to this, Singh maintained that Haryana should take a realistic approach, accept the verdict of the commission on Chandigarh and areas in lieu of it and strive to get the maximum share of the Ravi-Beas waters. Haryana, he felt, should agree to make some sacrifices in the national interest. Says he: "My friend Lal does not see the Punjab problem from a national point of view. There is no need to make tall claims."

Singh was hoping to align the party behind his point of view on the Punjab accord at the Jind convention scheduled for April 22 and 23. His plan was to indoctrinate the 12,000-odd party workers who were expected to come—at least one from every village—to his stand so that they could take the message to the people. Encouraged by the response he had got at numerous public meetings, he was going to argue that the real battle that Haryana should wage was for the retention of its share in the Ravi-Beas waters.

The Jind convention was also going to pass a resolution asking the Government to call the municipal elections which have not been held for 11 years. Another proposed resolution would have asked the Government to revamp the administration and speed up development. But Bhajan Lal persuaded the high command to postpone the conference on the pretext that it would clash with the harvesting time. Surprisingly, this argument was bought by the high command even though the convention was one of party workers.

Bhajan Lal knows that his political survival depends on Punjab staying in a state of turmoil. "If the Punjab problem is sorted out and peace returns, we shall see Bhajan Lal out immediately," said a state Congressman. "He is more of a liability for Rajiv." That might be so in the long run, but Singh is only the latest to learn that it never pays to underestimate Lal, the longest-serving of all Congress(I) chief ministers.

—GOBIND THUKRAL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SOBHRAJ CASE

The Sethia Twist

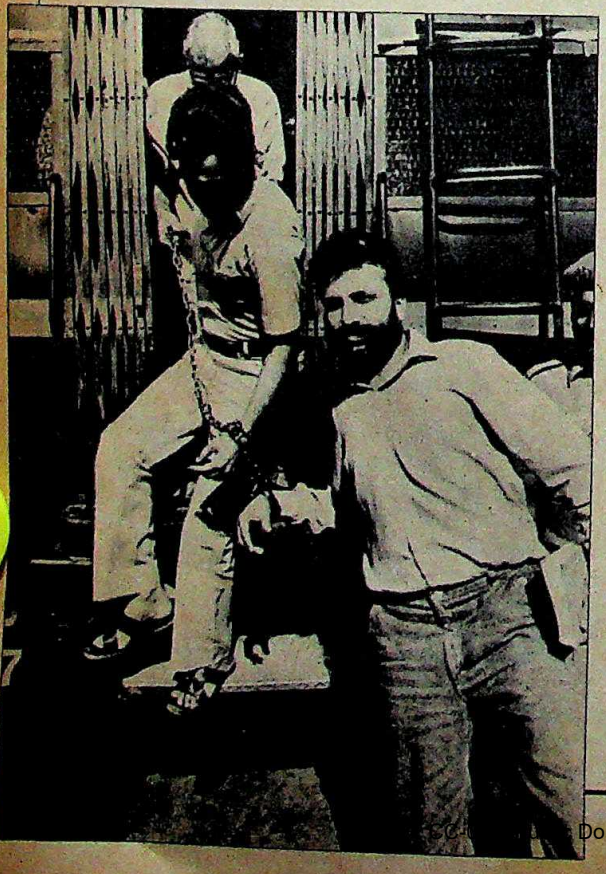
HE SITS like a malevolent spider in his solitary cell, eyes gleaming above a freshly-cultivated French beard, spinning out his frustrating web of fact and fantasy. For the team of police officials engaged in the interrogation of Charles Gurmukh Hotchand Sobhraj ever since his recapture last month, the predominant part of their time has been spent in trying to separate the two. It is no easy task. The calculatingly complex tapestry of truth and half-truth has, for one, successfully shifted the focus of attention from Sobhraj to his fellow inmate in Tihar jail, Rajinder Sethia, the London-based businessman facing trial for alleged bank fraud.

No two people could be so unalike or have such different backgrounds. Sobhraj clawed his way out of the gutters of Saigon to murder and rob his way across 12 countries. His associates, and his many victims, were drop-outs and delinquents trudging their futile way along the hippy trail. Sethia, suave and debonair, is a high-living millionaire accustomed to mansions and Rolls Royces, whose many-tentacled business dealings took him too close to the edge. Yet, the latest twist in the tail of the Sobhraj saga has joined the two as alleged co-conspirators, plotting devious deeds in the dank depths of Tihar jail.

Within days of Sobhraj's anticlimactic capture, Sethia was charged with having aided and partly financed his escape. Then, in a high-voltage courtroom drama in Delhi last fortnight, the senior police official in charge of the case, Deputy Commissioner of Police (crime), Amodh Kanth, burst into the middle of the hearing waving a sheaf of papers. The papers contained vital information from Interpol which, he claimed, he had received 15 minutes earlier and were documents recovered from a raid on the London flat of David Hall, the Briton who had played a major role in the Tihar jail break-out and was arrested along with Sobhraj in Goa.

Sobhraj: fact and fantasy

Sethia in custody: serious charges



As reporters covering the trial furiously scribbled in their notebooks, Kanth dropped his bombshell. Sethia, he alleged, had financed the jail-break with the intention of getting two witnesses against him in the bank fraud case "physically eliminated". The police version, like the stories that Sobhraj sits spinning, is a maddeningly complicated cat's-cradle of supposedly supportive evidence that, in the end, raises more questions than it attempts to answer.

The police, along with sleuths from the the Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI), claim that Sobhraj and Sethia "pooled their minds and resources" to hatch their macabre plan. Crucial to the alleged plot was a man called Gordon Greenhall, a friend of David Hall.

When Hall was arrested in India for possession of drugs last December, Greenhall arrived in Delhi to see him along with Hall's wife, Maria. In the short time he was in India, police claim he became "unusually friendly" with Sobhraj and Sethia. They also claim that they recovered documents from London which prove that Greenhall was paid $20,000, allegedly by Sethia, to do a survey of nine international airports, including two in India, to ferret out security loopholes. The actual reasons for the effort are unclear and even the police have no logical explanation. Greenhall's report was allegedly handed over to Sobhraj who passed it on to Hall for safe keeping. Hall passed on the Greenhall report to his wife Maria, who took it back to London where it was found during the raid on Hall's flat.

The Sethia connection, police allege, is a note written on a slip of paper which was found in Hall's London flat. The terse note says: "Please pay bearer $20,000. Many thanks. Raj." The handwriting, police allege, matches that of Sethia, who is always referred to by his friends and relatives as 'Raj'. The police also recovered two diaries kept by Hall that have a list of names and addresses. The notings in one indicate, according to the police, that a plot had been hatched to hire a man referred to as 'Mr Smith', an Australian, to "eliminate" two people whose names and addresses have been noted in the diary—S. Satsangi and a man called Tulsi. Police claimed in court that both men are key prosecution witnesses in the fraud case against Sethia.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The other shaky pillar on which the new police charges against Sethia rest is their claim that he financed the Sobhraj escape. When Sobhraj was arrested, he was carrying $62,000 on him. Police claim that $32,000 was brought in from London and the equivalent of Rs 9 lakh was transferred from Sethia's account in London by his nephew, Dalbir Singh Bhalla, who has been in India for the last five months. The bulk of the money, police allege, was used to finance the escape.

But the police version is stretched thin enough for Sethia's counsel, celebrated criminal lawyer Ram Jethmalani, to pick innumerable holes in. The crucial question is one of motive. Police now admit that Tulsi is not listed as a prosecution witness, but, is in fact, a close family friend of the Sethias in London and has been for the last 20 years. The other witness, Satsangi, a former employee of the London branch of the Punjab National Bank, is listed as one of the witnesses, but his written statement to the CBI could hardly be construed as crucial in the case against Sethia. Police, however, insist that Satsangi is a key witness.

Even so, it seems surprising that a man of Sethia's background would hire professional assassins to eliminate prosecution witnesses. Or, for that matter, why he would finance Sobhraj's escape, especially when he was on the brink of obtaining bail. Sources close to Sethia say he had once given his case files to Sobhraj, who had promised to help him get bail, and through his nephew, paid Rs 24,000 to Sobhraj's girl-friend Sneh Sengar, an advocate, as fees for her legal work on the case. They say that it is possible that Sobhraj had some devious reason for conveying information in the files to David Hall, who entered it in his diary.

Sethia's nephew, Bhalla, says he can account for every penny of the Rs 9 lakh he transferred—Rs 4.5 lakh was given to Jethmalani as legal fees, for which he has a receipt. He says he has told the police this and showed them receipts accounting for the rest of the money. Yet, the police seem equally convinced that Sethia is guilty of the new charges they have brought against him. When asked if Sethia really seemed a man who would hire professional assassins, Kanth hesitated and said: "Maybe you develop that kind of mentality in jail." But that is hardly going to suffice in the courtroom where the real Rajinder Sethia will stand—or fall.

—DILIP BOBB

KARNATAKA

Wordy Duel

THANKS largely to the intervention of a most unexpected ally, the state Congress(I)'s latest attempt to browbeat Karnataka's wily Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde into resigning his position promptly boomeranged on it. Within days of announcing its "Remove Hegde" campaign, the state unit had to beat a hasty retreat when party President Rajiv Gandhi said that he had not asked for Hegde's resignation.

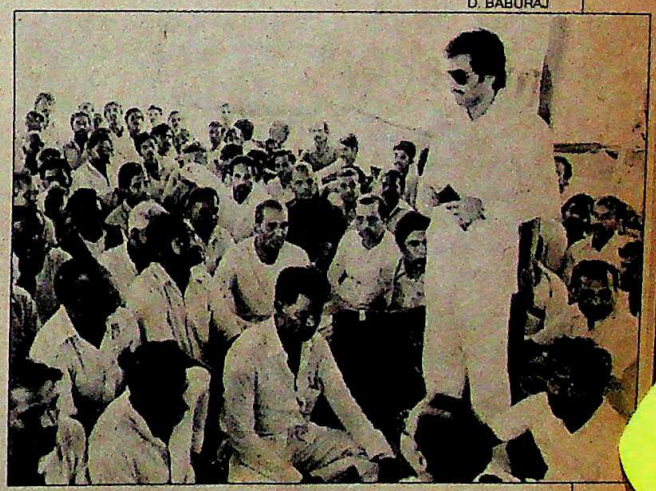
Even as the Karnataka Pradesh Congress Committee(I) led by its young President Oscar Fernandes began its relay hunger strike in front of the Vidhan Soudha, an emissary of the prime minister delivered a four-page letter to the ailing chief minister in Bangalore's St John's hospital. Rajiv clarified in the letter that he had never asked for Hegde's resignation during his three-day visit to the drought-affected areas of the state last month, setting at rest a raging controversy. Admitted a senior state Congress(I) leader: "The letter from the prime minister to our arch-enemy could not have been timed better, for the chief minister's credibility as a clean politician was eroding very fast."

The state Congressmen's plan for a massive agitation for the dismissal of the "most corrupt government the state has ever had" had, in fact, been chalked out after the prime minister had openly criticised the state Government. Accompanied by local Congressmen, Rajiv had taken the state Government to task for ignoring the interests of the poor. And in the course of one of his acerbic digs at Hegde's "value-based" politics, Rajiv was reported as having questioned Hegde's moral right to continue in office. Newspaper accounts of his speeches had him asking how Hegde could remain in office even after the Supreme Court decision upheld the Karnataka High Court's judgement in the arrack case which had severely castigated the Government.

In a hard-hitting rejoinder to Rajiv's broadside, Hegde asked him to set his own house in order before asking him to quit. Choosing to ignore Hegde's retort, Fernandes and S. Bangarappa, decided to take the political battle to the streets and announced an ambitious agitation plan to unseat Hegde. Said Oscar: "The focus of our agitation is to expose the maladministration and the anti-people policies of the Government and finally seek its dismissal through democratic methods." Added Veerappa Moily, former finance minister: "Hegde has lost the mandate to govern because his image is tarnished. He is a captive chief minister. We will take the people into confidence about this government's betrayal."

Undeniably, Hegde's Government is not as popular as it used to be. It is faulted for its inadequate response to the worst-ever drought. Charged Nasir Ahmed, state Youth Congress (I) vice-president: "Neither Hegde nor his ministers like to visit the dusty and dirty villages because they have a luxurious life-style." But with dissatisfaction against the Government yet to crystallise, the people's response to the agitation was predictably poor.

D. BABURAJ



Bangarappa with party supporters

Even a section of Congressmen stayed away. All PCC(I) office-bearers and MLA's were expected to join the hunger strike but barely half their number turned up. And the agitation finally died out when Fernandes, as well as his senior colleagues were urgently summoned to Delhi even as senior party leaders had announced their plans to tour upcountry areas. Said an exuberant Hegde: "They (the Congressmen) realised that this was neither the time nor a good issue with a reasonable cause to launch a state-wide agitation." The chief minister may be still in hospital, but clearly his is not a lame-duck administration.

—PRABHU CHAWLA in Bangalore

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUNJAB

Militant Divisions

FOR A change, the focus in Punjab last fortnight was not on terrorist violence. The killings continued, but with the death count falling off, there was a comparative lull in the violence. Compared to 115 people dying in terrorist and police action in March, only 45 died in the first three weeks of April. But the action shifted quickly to the growing infighting among the militant sections of the Sikhs. The faction led by Harinder Singh Kahlon, the convenor of the All India Sikh Students' Federation (AISSF) who is backed by the Damdami Taksal, emerged as the clear winner at the end of the first round. Upstaged for the moment was the rival faction, led by Baba Joginder Singh's United Akali Dal (UAD) with the backing of the president of the AISSF, Manjit Singh, who is ensconced in the Jodhpur jail.

Kahlon lost no opportunity last fortnight to decry the UAD as a party of "government agents". He also openly accused Gurdev Singh, the acting jathedar of the Akal Takht, of siding with the UAD instead of "punishing" the Baba, and of colluding with him in trying to limit the role of the five-member panthic committee, which is packed with men owing loyalty to him and the Taksal.

After Kahlon made these accusations at a press conference on April 11, the panj piaras (five head priests, including Gurdev Singh) summoned him before the Akal Takht last fortnight for an explanation. But Kahlon swore allegiance to the Akal Takht and blamed the critical remarks on the "mischief" of newspapermen. Gurdev Singh, who was expected to take a tough line, accepted Kahlon's explanation.

Kahlon, in the last year, has consolidated his hold over the AISSF and has now emerged as a big challenge, not just to the jailed AISSF leaders in Jodhpur, but also to the Akali Dal and the UAD. Even intelligence agencies concede that he has a major following among Sikh youth in Amritsar, Gurdaspur and Kapurthala.

The fight between the two groups is now being waged at several levels. At a superficial level, there is the struggle for the physical control of the one-room UAD office, which had been bequeathed to the Baba by Jagdev Singh Talwandi of the breakaway Akali Dal faction. But the infighting has deeper roots.

Kahlon derives his strength from the backing of Baba Thakar Singh, the acting jathedar of the Damdami Taksal. Ever since the rise of Bhindranwale, the last jathedar of the Taksal, the leadership of the Taksal has been crucial for getting support among the militant sections of

SATPAL DANISH

EXTREMISTS

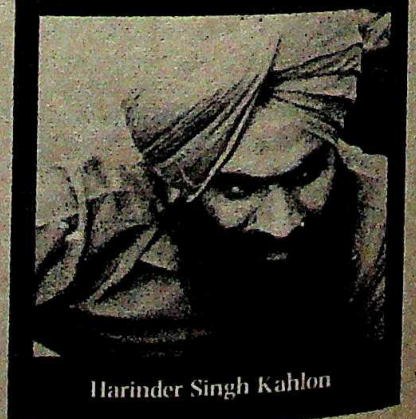
Temple Ties

EXTREMISTS and leaders of the All India Sikh Students Federation (AISSF), wanted for various criminal offences, have once again begun to use the Golden Temple as an occasional hideout. The temple is not yet the kind of terrorist sanctuary that it once was in the past, nor are as many arms stored in its premises. This is mainly because the extremists think the temple is vulnerable: in the seven months that the Akalis have been in power, the police has entered the temple no fewer than four times. Nevertheless, there is little doubt that terrorists are increasingly take refuge in the temple.

Chief Minister Surjit Singh Barnala says he has "clearly told the police to arrest all those who are either proclaimed offenders or wanted in criminal cases". But whenever Barnala telephones police officers in the districts to find out why wanted men were not arrested when they addressed public rallies, he is given the stock reply that "our people got the information late", or "we could not recognise them".

The Amritsar police has a wanted list of 110 absconding militants but has arrested only 10, the most important among them being Bhai Mohkam Singh. Amritsar police chief Surjit Singh Virk, who admits that even the arrest of Mohkam Singh was a fluke, says: "The police officials who recognise these persons are scared to lay their hands on them, and those who have the guts to nab them often fail to recognise them at the right time." Jalandhar Range DIG P.C. Dogra finds police officers at the ground level a frightened lot: "When the terrorists are calling the shots, fear naturally grips the force." But, he adds: "Our morale is rising, our intelligence is becoming more accurate and we shall surely get them."

Till such time, however, the wanted men continue to frequent the temple with virtual impunity. The most important among them are:



Harinder Singh Kahlon

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sikh youth. In order to gain time and to scuttle any move to appoint another jathedar, Joginder Singh has continued to maintain that Bhindranwale is not dead. A section of the Taksal, in the militant-sponsored Sarbat Khalsa of January 26, wanted to honour Bhindranwale for his supreme sacrifice in defending the Sikh panth but the Baba opposed the move.

It was around then that the Kahlon group got hold of a letter written by Manjit Singh exhorting his uncle, Didar Singh, to work with the Baba and wrest control of the Taksal leadership. Against this background, the two sides tried to outwit each other in the January 26 Sarbat Khalsa. Joginder Singh eventually succeeded in getting his grandson Jasbir Singh, now in Bharatpur jail, nominated as the Akal Takht chief and his associate Gurdev Singh as acting jathedar.

The Taksal leadership accepted this in the knowledge that the Akal Takht chief could be removed during any Sarbat Khalsa, of which two are to be held every year, at Baisakhi and Diwali. But the Taksal faction scored a major victory when it succeeded in bringing in a five-member panthic committee with Wasan Singh, Dhanna Singh, Gurbachan Singh Manochahal, Gurnam Singh and Raur Singh to, guide the political and religious affairs of the Sikhs.

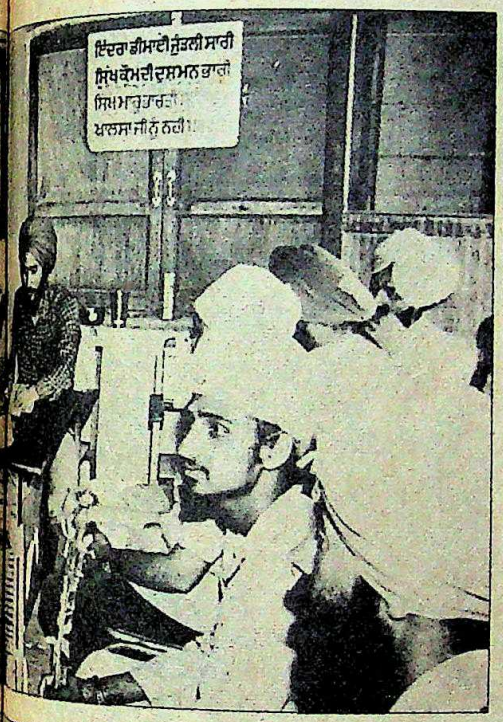
Between January and April, Kahlon and the Taksal openly attacked the UAD as a party of government agents. The Baba, in order to establish his hold, led a gherao of the Assembly (INDIA TODAY, April 15). The infighting reached a new high after the second Sarbat Khalsa on April 13, with Gurdev Singh summoning Kahlon and Wasan Singh to the Akal Takht for an explanation.

The huge collection of money for the Akal Takht's kar seva is another bone of contention. Both factions have been collecting money, but the Taksal faction charges that there is no account of the Rs 40-50 lakh collected by Joginder Singh's group. On the other hand, the Taksal's collection, done only through the golak (cash box lying in front of the Akal Takht) is open to scrutiny. The golak is opened every second or third day by the panj piaras or their representatives. Charged Kahlon: "Baba is using the money he has collected to finance factional infighting. He should retire or face another Sarbat Khalsa."

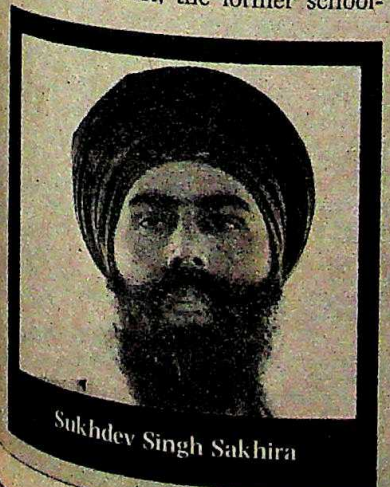
Though the Akali Dal and the Centre are happy at the infighting, efforts for a dialogue with the militants, which the Centre proposes to open, can hardly materialise till a clear line of leadership emerges. And there is also the danger that in an attempt to bolster their support among the Sikh youth, the rival factions could be tempted to take increasingly militant postures. Late last fortnight, it remained unclear whether the strife-torn politics of Punjab would calm down or heat up yet again. But to the extent that events were influenced in any major way by the moves and counter-moves of the various extremist factions, the future was not very rosy.

—GOBIND THUKRAL in Amritsar

Kahlon group leaders in the AISSF office: staking claim



Harinder Singh Kahlon, 32, convenor of the AISSF and the most important leader among the militants. He has been charged with making a seditious speech at the January 26 Sarbat Khalsa. Born into a modestly-placed farmer's family of Jalandhar district, the former school-teacher is totally committed to the AISSF, which he has knit into a formidable organisation.



Sukhdev Singh Sakhira

Wasan Singh, in his 30s, is the main spokesman of the five-member panthic committee. Tall and thin, the soft-spoken Wasan Singh is a proclaimed offender in four cases of murders and shoot outs. However, he denies the charges. "In the eyes of the police every young Sikh is a terrorist and a proclaimed offender. I take no notice of that," he declares. For many young Sikhs, he is a legendary hero.

Gurbachan Singh Manochahal, 30, a member of the panthic committee. He has seven cases of murder and dacoity against him and is believed to have been to Pakistan. He was involved in a major encounter with the CRPF in Nausher Panuwan three months ago in which one jawan was killed. He narrates the details of the encounter with great gusto. "Those whom God protects have no fear," he pronounces.

Sukhdev Singh Sakhira, 25, known to be close to some Akali ministers, is wanted in six cases of murder. He also faces charges of sedition for a speech he made in Tarn Taran last month.

Tarsem Singh Kohar, 27, is the self-proclaimed head of the 'Khalistan Liberation Army'. He often comes to the temple but operates from his home district, Gurdaspur. Sturdily built, Kohar has nine murder cases against him, including one for master-minding the attack on a train last month at village Kotla Gajran near Amritsar in which three people were killed. He does not deny his involvement in the cases. "We are only defending our honour and faith. In the process, if some people are killed, what can we do? For every Sikh killed, we shall kill 10. Khalistan is our objective and we shall have it," he told INDIA TODAY in one of his hide-outs.

—GOBIND THUKRAL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

To ride the long, rough roads you need a tyre that can take life's

HEAT 'N DUST

Your tyres are at constant war. With friction, wear and tear. Bad roads. And the ever-present natural elements like heat and dirt. To face such conditions is not a task for the weak hearted. The very reason why Vikrant builds sheer toughness into every one of its tyres. Right from the word 'go'.

VIKRANT + AVON

Joining hands with Avon .... for better and tougher tyres!

Today, Vikrant has joined hands with Avon, the leading British tyre manufacturer, whose tyres are orginial fitment on such celebrated names as Rolls-Royce, British Leyland and more.

A superior plant .... for superior tyres

Vikrant has one of the finest and the most modern tyre plants located in Mysore. This plant now has the capacity to produce a million tyres per annum. For Trucks and Buses, Cars, Jeeps, LCVs, Tractors, Trailers, Motor Cycles, Scooters, Autorickshaws and Animal Drawn Vechicles.

These high quality tyres have made their mark in sophisticated markets like the U.S.A., the U.K., the U.S.S.R. and Australia as well. Obviously, quality has a way of taking you far!

VIKRANT

THE RELIABLE TYRES

VIKRANT TYRES LIMITED

Administrative Office and Factory:
K. R. S. Road, Metagalli, Mysore 570 016

VIKRANT TYRES

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MANIPUR

Death Row

NEARLY two months after fourteen-year-old Neelam Panchbhaiya died in mysterious circumstances in Imphal, her death continues to haunt Chief Minister Rishang Keishing. The state's main opposition parties—the CPI, CPI(M) and the Manipur People's Party (MPP)—charge that Keishing's son Simrey is involved in Neelam's 'murder' and demand a judicial inquiry. But Keishing has refused to comply and the issue has snowballed into a major political row. Students, women's groups and political activists took to the streets last fortnight to condemn Keishing's intransigence.

Even dissidents within the Congress(I) openly demand a judicial inquiry. Says Lalit Singh, state finance minister and Keishing's arch rival: "It is unfortunate that the chief minister feels the issue is politically motivated. We only feel that a proper and impartial enquiry should be instituted to remove misgivings among the common people." Obviously shaken by the developments, Keishing and his family have shut themselves up in their fortress-like residence in Imphal and made themselves unavailable to the press.

Initially, Keishing tried to dismiss Neelam's death as "suicide by drowning". Subsequently, outvoted in the nine-member cabinet on March 17, he agreed to a magisterial enquiry. The failure of the enquiry to come out with its conclusion a month later has only served to strengthen the widespread belief that the chief minister is trying to organise a cover up.

Neelam, the youngest of six children of Professor Y.P. Panchbhaiya, a Garhwali settled in Imphal for the last 24 years, disappeared en route to her tutor's house on the evening of March 6 and it was not until March 8, two days later, that her body was discovered floating in a river. The police, after investigations and a post-mortem, concluded that Neelam had committed suicide by drowning because she had got two out of 60 in a Maths test. They even produced a notebook allegedly belonging to her as evidence. But Neelam's family members say she was kidnapped and murdered.

Students protest in Imphal: gathering storm

Neelam (left) and Keishing

The official conclusion undeniably suffers from several major drawbacks. There was only three feet of water at the spot where the body of the five feet two inches tall Neelam was found. Moreover, the notebook produced by the police is not Neelam's. And enquiries at the school have established that she did not get such low marks in the Maths test. Says Anil, Neelam's brother: "We were fools to have trusted the police." Adds Poonam, her elder sister: "She certainly did not commit suicide."

Local experts maintain that even the post-mortem was improperly conducted. Says H.Nabachandra, a forensic expert at the Regional Medical College, Imphal, who unofficially witnessed part of the autopsy: "From the little that I saw, it was definitely not a case of drowning." His primary reasons:

► When the lungs were dissected there was no sign of water, nor was there any froth in the respiratory tract.

► The body was not bloated and the skin of the hands was not wrinkled as it should have been had the body been in water for more than a day.

► No forensic expert was consulted and the post-mortem was written out by the district medical officer who is essentially an administration man.

However, Neelam's family has no inkling of who could have murdered her. "She had grown up here and we had always felt safe in Imphal even with all the terrorist activities," says the girl's mother. But Keishing's detractors have little doubt that Simrey, educated at Delhi's St Stephen's College, had a hand in Neelam's death.

"Our suspicion that the chief minister's son was involved is based on eye witness reports that a government car (MNG 1064) under the chief minister, was found parked near the river not far from the residential colony where the Panchbhaiyas live," says Joykumar Sharma, MPP general secretary. But these remain rumours and MPP leaders—and Congress(I) dissidents—maintain that no one is prepared to come out openly before the magisterial enquiry as long as Keishing is in power.

Thus, even though the involvement of the chief minister's son in the entire affair is currently no better than wild conjecture, public opinion is solidly against Keishing. And the the dissidents feel it is the right time to strike. Three cabinet ministers even offered to resign. And the tragic death of Neelam Panchabhaiya recedes into the background as an incidental cause of the gathering political storm over Manipur.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE in Imphal

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Lucky Ride

A TICKET to ride on the Bangalore Transport Service (BTS) can, if you are lucky, bring in a lot more than aches and pains. Innovative Karnataka Transport Minister P.G.R. Scindia dreamt up a new scheme last fortnight to make BTS' 15 lakh daily passengers pay their fare more willingly, and to improve the service: through a lottery! Thus, every BTS ticket sold became a lottery ticket with prizes of Rs 1,000, Rs 500 and Rs 250, and 12 consolation prizes of Rs 100 each. Incentive to the conductors came in the form of a bonus of Rs 25 for the one who sold the winning ticket. The results were not long in coming. Revenue went up by Rs 50,000 on a daily turnover of Rs 11 lakh and Scindia pronounced the scheme a success, presaging plans to extend the scheme to the entire state. There

An assortment of bus tickets is an additional bonus: buses are no longer littered with used tickets, now safely tucked into passenger's pockets. What Scindia does not know is that the Delhi Transport Corporation tried a similar gimmick but eventually had to give it up.

Unusual Crusade

DHARAM SINGH Rawat, 56, is not your dyed-in-the-wool bureaucrat even though he is a member of the IAS. Posted as the director of Urban Land Ceiling in Uttar Pradesh, he feels that just about everything is wrong with the bureaucracy in general and the Urban Land Ceiling Directorate in particular. Last month, after his countless letters to Chief Minister Bir Bahadur Singh and others on the subject had elicited little response, Rawat decided to do something few IAS officers would dare to do: he went on a seven-night dharna outside his office in Lucknow, demanding that the department be either overhauled or wound up. He would work the whole day, and then proceed to the protest site outside. While his superiors dismissed him as a crank, Rawat succeeded in attracting both attention and sympathy. Though the director called off his dharna, his cause has already become public. Now, only time will tell whether Rawat is a crank or a crusader.

Smuggler's Cell

ANO HOLDS barred fight between the moderate and hardline factions among the 300-odd Punjab extremists at Jodhpur Central Jail is costing the authorities money and raising some uncomfortable questions. Rs 10 lakh are to be spent on beefing up security, with new watch towers and higher walls and railings, but red-faced jail officials are yet to figure out how bottles, knives, stones, and nails found their way into the prison. The obvious questions: Were no searches carried out? How and who managed to turn scraps of iron, empty tins, wires and even transistors, into such effective weapons? While the search for answers goes on, the authorities are getting their own back at the prisoners—visits by friends and relatives have come to a full stop and even a committee sent by the Akalis to inquire into the quarrel has been politely told that its services are not required.

Array of implements confiscated from jail

Child Crime

IT WAS child's play, inspired by the TV film Hum Kisise Kam Nahin. Twelve-year-old Amit Jaiswal of Nishatganj colony in Lucknow planned a heist of all the household riches, inspired by actor Rishi Kapoor's search for lost diamonds in the film. The plan was perfect, save for the ending. With the parents away and only elder sister Rachna to tackle, young Amit got his two teenaged friends to knock on the door when the Sunday evening bulletin appeared on the screen. Like well-oiled dacoits who had done this a countless number of times, they waved an imitation pistol under the frightened Rachna's nose, tied up brother and sister and within minutes, left the house with over one kilogramme of gold, jewellery, diamonds and Rs 52,000 in cash.

S. PREMI

Amit: aborted fortunes

In a scene straight out of a Hindi pot-boiler, Amit dramatically freed himself and his sister and summoned help. The cops arrived, a report was lodged, but they smelt a rat. "One slap," says Lucknow SSP Tilak Kak, "was enough for Amit to come out with everything." The car was quickly traced to the house of a government employee in Indiranagar, the valuables recovered and the winsome dacoits were left kicking their heels in the cooler. Father Jaiswal, an ayurvedic doctor, refused to bail out his son; but his most pressing problem was not the heir, but the questions being asked about the fortunes and how he, as a government official, came by them!

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUBLIC FEARS

THE GOVERNMENT has shelved its proposal to part-privatise some leading public sector companies by selling some of their shares to the public. Industry Minister N.D. Tiwari had said last November that firms like BHEL and HMT might raise share capital from the public in view of the resources crunch in the seventh plan. And Maruti Udyog has been pressing the Government for permission to hawk 35 per cent of its Rs 80 crore plus equity to the public and allow its Japanese collaborator Suzuki to jack up its stake in the company from 26 per cent to 35 per cent so as to raise much needed cash for expansion. To allay official fears that the Government might lose control of the firm, Maruti even obtained an informal assurance from Suzuki that its joint venture agreement could be modified to include a clause stipulating that Suzuki would vote with the Government at board meetings. An official decision on the whole matter was expected by December, but Industry Ministry bureaucrats have argued that firms can raise cash by floating bonds instead of unloading equity. Also, the public sector Scooters India Ltd sold some shares to the public years ago, but this has not helped improve managerial efficiency.

BRANCHING OUT

IN A radical departure from its traditional automotive business, the Tamil Nadu-based TVS group is branching out into a host of consumer durable products and into computer peripherals. Sundaram Clayton, one of the companies in the flourishing TVS stable, has plans to invest around Rs 50 crore in manufacturing refrigerators, washing and drying machines, microwave ovens, toasters, grinders and mixis in Andhra Pradesh and Pondicherry. While the production of these items will begin in about two years' time, the Rs 50-crore computer peripheral venture will take shape in Bangalore by September next year. The diversification is expected to take the company's current turnover of Rs 160 crore (including that of Ind-Suzuki) to nearly Rs 700 crore in the next five years.

POOR BONDS

THE EUPHORIA over public sector companies entering the capital market has quickly evaporated after the poor response to the bonds issued by companies like the Rural Electrification Corporation (REC) and the National Thermal Power Corporation. The railways have postponed their plans to go to the public for money, and the National Hydel Power Corporation (NHPC) does not expect any substantial over-subscription on its forthcoming issue of Rs 150 crore. Indeed, NHPC intends relying on financial institutions for the success of its issue. And REC now finds that its profits will be squeezed because of the cost of servicing more expensive capital, and the Government has agreed to giving it a subsidy.

FUND OF INTENT

A NEW government agency to finance municipalities and local development bodies that wish to build roads, sewage lines and so on is in the works. To be called the Development Corporation for Urban Infrastructure, the new institution will have an initial seed capital of Rs 100 crore, with the financial institutions contributing to this. But Urban Development Minister Abdul Ghafoor has already announced in Parliament that a new apex house financing body is in the offing, and there is some opposition in the Government itself to the establishment of yet another organisation.

DRUG COMPROMISE

THE LARGE Indian drug companies have managed to stall the new drug policy after it had come very close to getting the Government's final approval. The new policy will now take several more weeks to finalise and some compromises on the major issues are inevitable. The production of some bulk drugs is now likely to be reserved for the Indian sector. But the prices of essential drugs manufactured by fewer than three producers will still be controlled and the Government will monitor the prices of others. However, the most contentious issue—whether companies that have diluted their foreign shareholding to 40 per cent or less should be treated as Indian or foreign firms—remains unsolved. The whole package, will go to the Cabinet for a final decision in the next few weeks.

PRICELESS CONTROL

THE GOVERNMENT seems to have had some success with controlling wholesale prices in recent years. Last year closed with a price increase of no more than 4.15 per cent, and there hasn't been double-digit inflation in any of the last five years. In contrast, three of the previous five years saw double-digit inflation. Indeed, wholesale prices have risen only 33 per cent in the last quinquennium, compared to 50 per cent in the previous five-year period and around 75 per cent in the quinquennium before that. Though consumer prices have been rising at a faster rate throughout this period, wholesale prices at least seem to be coming under greater control.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Chairman's Speech

Statement of Mr. Charanjit Grover, Chairman & Managing Director, GROVER LEASING LIMITED at the 2nd Annual General Meeting held on 7th April, 1986, at New Delhi.

Mr. Charanjit Grover
Chairman & Managing Director

Ladies & Gentlemen,

On behalf of my colleagues on the Board and on my own behalf, it gives me great pleasure to extend a cordial welcome to you all to the 2nd Annual General Meeting of the Company. The Annual Report, with the Statement of Accounts of the Company for the Financial Year ended 31st December, 1985 has been with you for some time and with your permission I take them as read.

Operating Results

During the year under review your Company has made significant progress and its Gross Assets have increased to Rs.410 lacs from Rs.145 lacs during previous year registering a growth of 182%. The Net Profit has also increased four fold i.e. Rs.22.92 lacs, as against Rs.6.64 lacs in 1984. During the year we have gone for Public Issue to augment long term resources and the same has been well received in the market with 20 times oversubscription.

With the enlarged capital base the Company has been in a position to consolidate its operation and substantial Leasing/ Hire Purchase contracts have been entered into at competitive rates. But the profit of the Company has had to bear with certain expenses incurred by the company to secure better results in near future. However it is expected that the profitability will be higher in1986 as Capital funds raised were deployed in business in the last quarter of the year. In the year under review your Company has opened a branch at Madras, which is fully operative and its working has been satisfactory.

Dividend

The Directors have recommended a stepped up dividend of 18% (Pro-rata) per Equity Share as against 10% declared last year subject to tax and I hope you all will appreciate this.

Economic Scene

On assuming office, our Prime Minister Sh. Rajiv Gandhi has been the moral dimension of liberlisation and has created new Socio-economic order aimed at increasing production base and higher standard of living. The Government policies of liberalisation with reduction of taxation has boosted investment opportunities and expanded the capital market. The long term fiscal policy announced by the Finance Minister recently will enable the industrial sector to plan the operations with much greater certainty and stability.

The Central Budget for the year 1986-87 has given major thrust to implement the various elements of long-term fiscal policy. From the angle of simplicity and neutrality the investment allowance has been withdrawn and new funding scheme has been introduced, which will be neutral as between large and small companies. The depreciation rate has been rationalised and accelarated to render replacement easier for modernisation, however it could affect the distributable profits to a large extent. Further more the application of Sales Tax on the right to use of goods has created anamoly in the inter-state lease transactions and to my mind, this may act as hinderance to the industry in the inter-state transactions and rationalisation is required without any further delay.

Future Out-look

I am pleased to inform you, that the results for the current year are encouraging and your Company has finalised lease and hire purchase transactions to the tune of Rs. 200 lacs in the first quarter. The company has evolved a growth plan target of Leased Assets & Hire Purchase stock aggregating to the tune of Rs. 10 Crores for the year 1986. With good market standing the Company is confident of achieving the target and your company is getting continuous demand from the Blue-chip companies for finance and additional demand from the existing clients.

Expansions and Diversifications

Your Company is planning to expand the areas of operations and diversify into new areas. Various innovative measures are being considered to broad-base the Company's operations. To finance the long-term operations, your Company is considering to come out with convertible debentures scheme in this year on rights basis to shareholders and deposit holders.

Your Company is planning to diversity into manufacturing; particularly Chemicals & Fertilizers. The licences for these activities have already been sought from the respective authorities of Government and I am confident, your company will be able to secure the same shortly.

To cater to the needs of wide market and to expand the operations at other important places your Company is planning to open new branches at Bombay and Ahmedabad this year

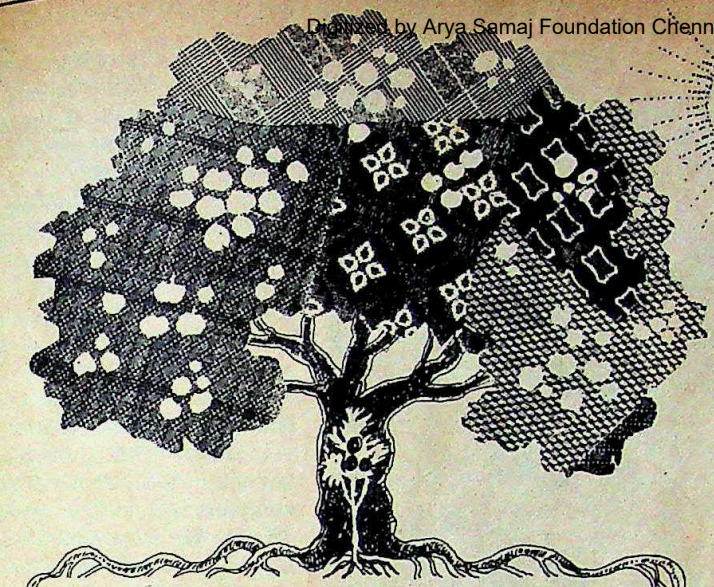
Acknowledgements

I would like to conclude by expressing our gratitude to the Punjab National Bank and Grindlays Bank for their whole hearted Co-operation and timely support. Thanks are also due to the State and Central Govt. Agencies, customers and other well wishers of the Company. I would like to record my appreciation of the services rendered by the officers and the staff of the Company for successful operations and I hope they will continue to do so. Finally I wish to thank the shareholders of the company and the Depositors for the confidence they have reposed in us. The Company on its part will do its best to fulfil their expectations.

N.B. : This does not purport to be the part of the proceedings of the Annual General Meeting.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Profitable since inception... Growing ever since.

ARIHANT FABRICS LTD.

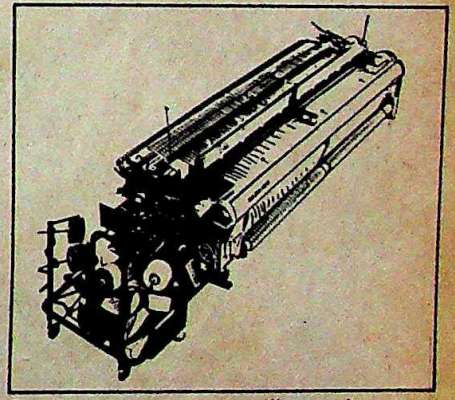
Arihant Fabrics . . . a company on the move right from day one. Commercial production started in 1978-79 with a complement of 12 power looms to manufacture both synthetic and woollen fabrics under the popular trade name "OSWAL".

Gradually, the Company expanded/modernised its operations: initially by adding more looms and then by installing a Texturising plant with a capacity of 96 spindles and a Process House with a capacity of processing 36 lac metres of cloth per annum.

NOW GROWING FURTHER . . .

The Company has now undertaken further modernisation and expansion schemes:

- replacing 12 Nos. looms with an equivalent number of imported "Sulzer Ruti" Projectile Weaving Machines.
- installing a Rieter Scragg Texturising Plant with a capacity of 216 spindles.



The Company, once again, offers to share its prosperity with the public . . . with an issue of 71,550 15% Secured Redeemable Convertible Debentures of Rs. 150/- each for cash at par (convertible portion Rs. 50/-; non convertible portion Rs. 100/-).

Issue Opens for Non Resident Indians
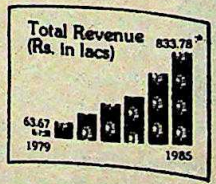
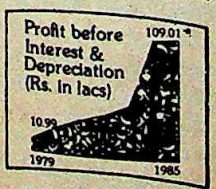
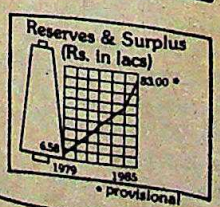
MAY 12, 1986
Indian Public
MAY 19, 1986







Issue Highlights

- Rapidly growing company-with excellent track record.
- Popular range of fabrics—"OSWAL" Suitings, Shirtings and Dress Materials; now introducing a range of elegant Sarees.
- An opportunity to invest in a 20% dividend paying company.
- Now installing SULZER Ruti Projectile Weaving Machines and an additional Texturising plant.
- Dynamic management, highly competent Board.
- 15% Interest on Debentures.
- ⅓ of Debentures to be converted into Equity Shares on 31st Dec., 1986.
- Easy Liquidity—Listing at Ahmedabad, Bombay, Delhi and Ludhiana.

Managers to the Issue

STATE BANK OF INDIA
Merchant Banking Division

AN INVESTMENT WITH OVER 100% RETURN

Here's How
Investment in 1 Debenture	Rs. 150.00
Sale Value of 5 Equity Shares at Rs. 40/- per share*	Rs. 200.00
Interest @ 15% for 6 months	Rs. 11.25
Sale value of Non-Convertible portion of Debentures on expiry of 6 months at 16% yield	Rs. 93.75
	Rs. 305.00
Less Investment	Rs. 150.00
Return on Investment	Rs. 155.00 or 103.33%

(Market Value of Equity Shares: Rs. 44.00 as on 28.2.1986, Ludhiana Stock Exchange).

Makers of OSWAL® SUITINGS SHIRTINGS & DRESS MATERIALS

A PRODUCT OF OSWAL ARIHANT FABRICS LIMITED

ARIHANT FABRICS LTD.
Regd. Office & Works: B-35, Phase-V, Focal Point Ludhiana-141010

Sobhagya/324/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection. Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TAX RAIDS

Vindicated Efforts

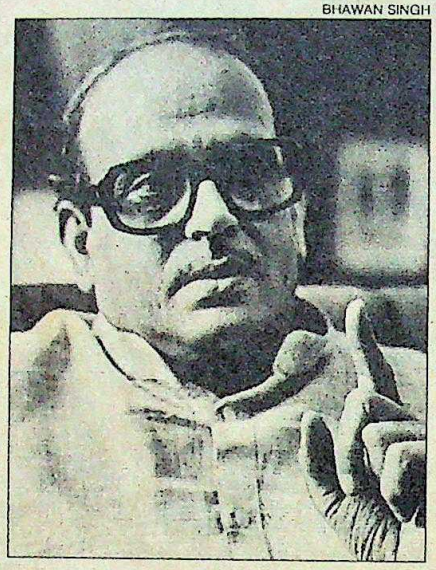
GIVEN THE public furore over the manner in which tax officials had conducted highly publicised raids against companies with as impeccable credentials as Bata India, respected groups like the Kirloskars and blue chip giants like Voltas, the denouement last fortnight was sweet revenge for the once embattled Finance Minister, Vishwanath Pratap Singh. In Delhi, Bata India Chairman M.M. Sabharwal switched from an earlier tone of injured innocence and wrote a contrite letter to the Government that a delighted and vindicated Singh promptly released to the press. Wrote Sabharwal: "We acknowledge our mistake in having raised incorrect drawback claims and we request you to forgive us for the lapses." The letter said Bata was sending in cheques totalling Rs 98.57 lakh to the taxman.

If that marked payday for tax officials, there were equally rich pickings in the more celebrated case concerning the Kirloskars, who were charged (among other things) with increasing their shareholdings in a German company without Reserve Bank permission. Answering questions on the subject, S.L. Kirloskar, the octogenarian head of the group, admitted last fortnight that "We did not obtain the general or special permission of the Reserve Bank of India for increase in the percentage of non-resident holdings to 52.05 per cent in M/s F.H.Schule so far."

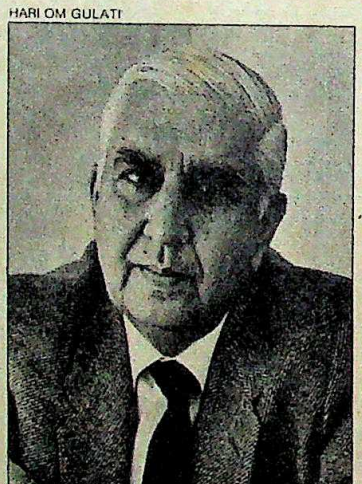
That was not all. In-house company notings recovered during the raids confirmed what the tax officials had been saying all along, and gave the lie to the kind of injured protestations that companies and businessmen had been indulging in for several weeks. In Bata's case, for instance, an internal memo virtually echoed the charge by tax officials when it said that duty drawback claims were computed "taking into consideration duty paid synthetic rubber as the main ingredient, although we were using duty-free natural rubber as the main ingredient". The note went on to say that "in reality we were able to get a higher rate than what it could have been".

If that punctured the opposition to the raids and stopped the tarring of the Government's actions with a very black brush, the Finance Ministry gave every indication that it was now on the warpath and that it would drive home its newfound advantage. Officials in the ministry said they would soon initiate action to debar anyone convicted by a court for an economic offence from becoming either the managing director or the director of any company. Said one of the secretaries in the ministry: "When a government official is arrested for criminal activity, he is immediately suspended. But in the case of companies, no one thinks it fit to remove the managing director if he is charged with an offence. Instead, they use their position and spend shareholders' money to hire the most expensive lawyers to fight their case."

BHAWAN SINGH



HARI OM GULATI



Singh (top); Sabharwal (left); and Kirloskar: denouement

If the Government has its way, this state of affairs will soon change. The Finance Ministry is now working on a scheme under which the financial institutions' nominees on the boards of companies will be directed to ask for the immediate removal of managing directors and chairmen once they are charged with an economic offence. Said V.P. Singh: "There cannot be two sets of laws for illegal activities, one for government servants and the other for company officials. We cannot condone crimes committed by civil servants, and there is no question of doing this for others merely because their position enables them to defend themselves using public money."

Whether this scheme will work, whether direct parallels can be drawn between government and company officials in all cases, and how much of a storm it will create remain to be seen. But V.P. Singh has been riding the crest of a new wave now for several weeks, especially after he went on the counter-offensive in Parliament in March by showing that many of the companies raided had been advised by their own lawyers not to indulge in the practices that finally led to the raids.

If nothing else, that counter-blast proved that the Government had done its homework well before launching the raids, and that V.P. Singh had not been on an unbridled rampage through the most hallowed boardrooms. Singh told INDIA TODAY: "The admission of guilt by companies shows that our raids were conducted after a thorough scrutiny of the documents and of intelligence reports." Indeed, as Minister of State for Finance Janardan Poojary said in Parliament last month, raids on just 11 business houses in the previous four months had unearthed tax evasion totalling a staggering Rs 49 crore, the Kirloskars topping the lot with Rs 22.70 crore. Next in line was Voltas with Rs 6.43 crore.

Both companies' cases are illustrative of top management flouting its own legal advisers in order to try and wrest tax advantage. For example, during their searches on the Kirloskars, officials from the Directorate of Revenue Intelligence (DRI) found an internal memo written by one of the group's general managers on the question of duty payable on compressors. This read: "Several sessions of discussions were held with the excise consultants and auditors. Initially it was felt that it will be prudent to voluntarily disclose the facts and pay the difference in duty." But this was not done as the excise authorities might then "be strongly inclined to cancel the price list approved by them." The group's tax adviser, C. Sapre, had in turn given the company an explicit warning: "In the first place let me make it clear that the penalty could be as high as three times the value of the goods in addition to the recovery of duty short levied, not to mention the provision for confiscation of land, building, machinery etc and the provision for prosecution for evasion of duty." The basic charge against the Kirloskars was that they were manipulating the prices of their compressors in order to pay a lower excise duty than what was actually due.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A KIRLOSKAR official had also recorded that "appropriate administrative steps were not taken, which resulted in the conduct of business which was contrary to the representations made to the Central excise authorities....Warranty charges were received by us on a day to day basis and the amount was also utilised by us to meet normal factory expenses. Money was physically collected and utilised by the company. On these facts we and the excise consultants felt that there was a strong possibility of penalty and prosecution under the Central Excise Act." Yet when the Kirloskars were raided they initially denied any excise evasion.

If anyone upstaged the Kirloskars in beatedly denying the charges laid at their door by the tax officials it was Voltas, which at times seemed to have launched a public relations war on the Government. The Excise Department's charge against Voltas was that it was not including the amount charged as service charges in the final price list for their product, and the department estimated that the company had saved excise duty of more than Rs 6 crore on the basis of wrong information supplied to the tax authorities. When the Government charged the company with violation of the law, it mantained that it had never manipulated its prices. But once again, the company's internal memos—seized during the raids—gave the game away. It turned out that Atul Sevalvad, a Voltas legal consultant, had

SHAW WALLACE

Guilt Edged

IT IS a classic case of the biter bit. A company chairman battling furiously to prevent a takeover by charging the usurper(s) with violations of the Foreign Exchange Regulations Act (FERA), has himself been charged with violating FERA, and worse, found guilty. The company is Shaw Wallace, its chairman is S.P.Acharya, and the men who may have something, if not a great deal, to say about the rather unexpected turn of events, are the very same persons who have been accused by Acharya of violating FERA: the Dubai-based M.R.Chhabria and the Bangalore-based Vijay Mallya.

Shaw Wallace has been asked to pay a fine of Rs 1.10 lakh while Acharya has been asked to personally pay Rs 12,000 as penalty for two FERA violations. Interestingly enough, although the order was delivered to the company two months ago, the officials of the Enforcement Directorate (and more understandably Shaw Wallace executives themselves) have kept the event a closely guarded secret, with not a word being leaked out. This is in contrast to the instant publicity given to the actions taken against Mallya and Chhabria.

Acharya: fined for violations

In a 12-page order passed in February, the Additional-Director of Enforcement, R. Swaminathan, who is also looking into the accusations against Chhabria and Mallya, has charged both Shaw Wallace and Acharya with investing abroad without the approval of the Reserve Bank of India (RBI) and deliberately not remitting the substantial profits raked in by Shaw Wallace Overseas Limited (SWOL), London, its fully owned subsidiary abroad.

SWOL was floated in 1934 and came under the FERA purview from 1973. The RBI, when granting permission to Shaw Wallace to run SWOL, had made it clear that all the dividends would be remitted back to India and that the company would not make any investments abroad without its prior approval. But in 1979, SWOL acquired a 3 per cent stake in British Gas stock by investing 89,554 Pound Sterling without the RBI's permission. In addition, Swaminathan held that the company misinformed the RBI that SWOL was not making any profit and that the question of remitting dividend did not arise. Swaminathan in his order proved that the company had in fact made a net profit between 1979 and 1982, and more damningly, that the company in question had not remitted the dividend at all.

Both Acharya and Shaw Wallace maintained that their dealings did not violate any FERA provisions. They also maintained that the procurement of British Gas stock was not an investment for which the RBI's permission was required. Acharya also argued that he did not attend any of SWOL's board meetings although he was one of its members. Swaminathan, while dismissing Acharya's plea, ruled that "I am satisfied that purchase of 3 per cent British Gas stock was an investment" and that Acharya couldn't escape penalty by saying that he was not attending the board's meetings. He concluded: "As managing director of the company, he was responsible for all the matters of the company. I therefore find him guilty."

Swaminathan chose to treat the investment in British Gas and non-remittance of dividends as two separate violations and imposed two penalties. While Shaw Wallace was fined Rs 1 lakh for unauthorised investment and Rs 10,000 for not remitting dividends, Acharya was asked to pay Rs 10,000 and Rs 2,000 for the same offences.

—PRABHU CHAWLA

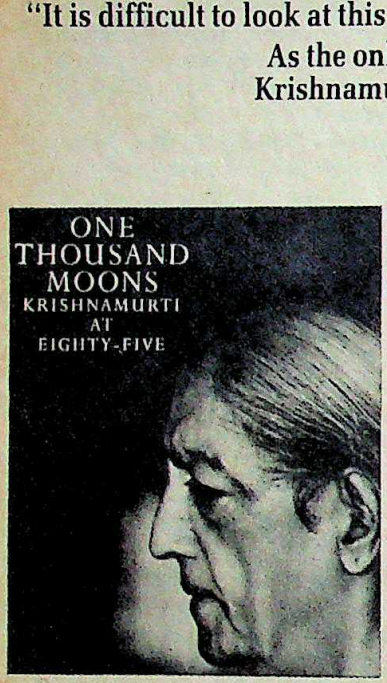
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ONE THOUSAND MOONS KRISHNAMURTI AT EIGHTY-FIVE

"It is difficult to look at this lavishly illustrated book without shaking one's head in wonder. As the only book in existence to give us an inside look at Krishnamurti's life in his later years, it is to be treasured".

— San Francisco Chronicle.



George Bernard Shaw called Krishnamurti "a religious figure of the greatest distinction", and added, "He is the most beautiful human being I have ever seen"

Henry Miller wrote, "There is no man I would consider it a greater privilege to meet..."

Aldous Huxley, after attending one of Krishnamurti's lectures, confided in a letter"...the most impressive thing I have listened to. It was like listening to a discourse of the Buddha — such power, such intrinsic authority..."

Kahlil Gibran wrote, "When he came to my room I said to myself, "Surely the Lord of Love has come."

Krishnamurti was one of the most profound and popular spiritual teachers of modern times: Over one million copies of his books are in print, and hundreds of thousands of people attended his lectures world-wide. In Europe, India, and in the United States, men and women sought his guidance because they perceived in him the ability to penetrate to the very essence of human problems.

In One Thousand Moons, Krishnamurti is sensitively presented by Asit Chandmal, who had known him since childhood. Chandmal's photo-essay and text reveal Krishnamurti at the age of eighty-five, vigorous and active, a source of continuing inspiration.

Chandmal travelled extensively with Krishnamurti to California, England, Switzerland, and India to document Krishnamurti's daily life. Over 100 photographs in full color depict the private person behind the world-renowned figure.

Chandmal's memoirs include private conversations he had with Krishnamurti, during the last thirty-five years, on education, writing, sex, psychoanalysis, love and death.

We are startled by the humour and attention to detail Krishnamurti brought to Chandmal's problems.

Chandmal also tells of the reactions of crowds listening to Krishnamurti speak: the calmness and the reverence he evoked. The daily life of Krishnamurti is here revealed intimately and respectfully, through the eyes of one who is profoundly convinced of the value of his teaching.

CONTENTS

1. Preface
2. Krishnamurti: His Early Life
3. Krishnamurti's Life At Age Eighty-Five
4. Krishnamurti: A Memoir
5. Photo section: Krishnamurti in India, California, England, Switzerland.

Fully illustrated, including over 100 plates in full color. Published by Harry N Abrams Inc.; New York; U.S.A.

EUROPE : £ 19/95 per copy
(including handling/postage)
Krishnamurti Foundation Trust Ltd. 24 Southend Road, Beckenham KENT BR3 ISD, England.

AMERICA : $ 25/- per copy
Krishnamurti Foundation of America. Post Office Box 216, Ojai, California 93023.

(Enclose $ 2.50 postage/ handling charge for each book. California residents please add 6% sales tax).

INDIA : Rs 195/- per copy
(including handling/postage in India only).
Krishnamurti Foundation India. 64-65 Greenways Road, Madras 600 028,
Tel : 417596/416803
Krishnamurti Foundation India
115 Maker Chambers III
Nariman Point Bombay 400 021
Telephone: 225660

This book is being offered at a special discount only in India.

ORDER FORM

Enclosed is my cheque/DD/M.O for Rs/£/$_____
Please send_____ copies of One Thousand Moons Krishnamurti at Eighty-five.
To,
Name: _____
Address: _____
City: _____
Code: _____

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

written to the company that "It is not permissible in law to exclude expenses pertaining to this service from the assessable value for several reasons. The service has been rendered before the sale takes place and to charge a separate amount for this would hardly be a rational explanation of the situation." Earlier, the solicitor firm of Crawford Bayley & Co. had said: "In our opinion, the switch-over in the method of assessment to excise duty in respect of the said goods which the company proposes is fraught with serious legal consequences...The excise authorities are bound to know that, for some reason, the price of the said goods under the proposed change-over is lower than the earlier price based on manufacturing cost plus profit."

Last year when the Supreme Court had ruled that no company can claim excise rebate on service charges, Voltas executives had advised that the company should pay to the Government Rs 2.55 crore collected by it from the dealers. In one of their internal memos the company officials had written that "during the disputed period of over three-and-a-half years we had retained with us the excise duty on post-manufacturing expenses deducted by us, but collected as part of the selling prices from all our dealers." The note also admitted that the company wanted to postpone payment of excise duty and keep assessable value to the minimum.

But the company chose to ignore the advice given to it and finally it was left to the DRI to call the bluff. Voltas Chairman A.H. Tobaccowala commented on the issue at the company's annual meeting of shareholders, but this drew another sharp retort from V.P. Singh. And the department has served a legal notice on all the directors, including Ratan Tata.

Meanwhile, Singh made his overtures of peace as well. The Government framed rules that would be followed by raiding parties, and spelt out the rights of those raided. Also, the proposal to empower tax inspectors to do house-to-house searches was withdrawn.

The overall message, however, was that industry and business should reform itself. As a Finance Ministry official said: "If they don't do it themselves, the Government will have to step in and do the job." And considering the move to debar those convicted of criminal offences from being a member of any company board, the message is clear: the Government means business.

—PRABHU CHAWLA

FERTILISER

Cooperative Success

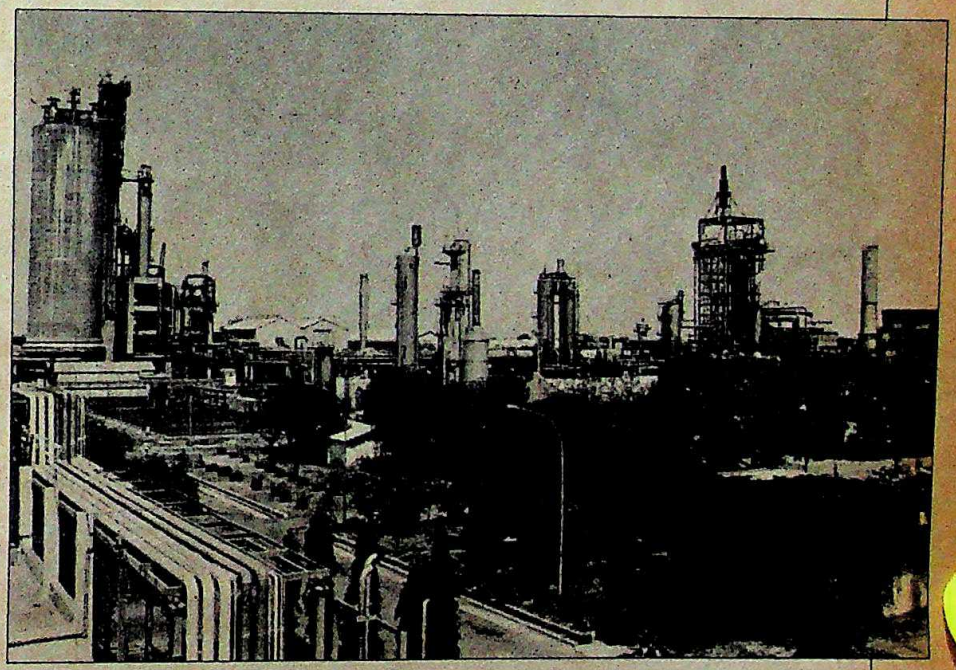
TWO DECADES ago, the Indian Farmers Fertiliser Cooperative (IFFCO) was only the germ of an idea. Even today, the largest cooperative enterprise in the country is virtually unknown outside fertiliser circles. Yet there are few success stories to parallel IFFCO's, in either the private, public or cooperative sectors.

Despite being among the youngest fertiliser outfits in the country, IFFCO and its offspring, the Krishak Bharati Cooperative (KRIBHCO), now account for a quarter of India's total fertiliser production, straddling a giant industry like colossuses. Where others in the fertiliser industry—in both the private and public sectors—have either floundered or chugged along at a sober pace, IFFCO has led the field with record production levels, unprecedented profits and a blistering pace of expansion; the six-year-old KRIBHCO now promises to follow suit after having commissioned its first plant four months ago.

While rival producers struggle to find the money needed for new projects, IFFCO is investing yet again in a giant Rs 700-crore fertiliser plant in Uttar Pradesh's Bareilly district while KRIBHCO—its first Rs 900-crore unit at Hazira just commissioned—is already confident enough of its profits and resource generation to ask the Government for another Rs 700 crore project. If all goes well, the two companies will between them have an asset base in the next five years of around Rs 3,000 crore: enough to put every private sector giant in the shade.

Both companies announced their working results and held their annual shareholders' meetings in the last two months. In March, IFFCO announced record profits of Rs 49.17 crore, reported its usual string of productivity and safety awards, talked of a Rs 150-crore modernisation plan, and indicated how far and wide it had spread its wings: apart from investing Rs 105 crore in KRIBHCO's share capital, it has invested in a chemical plant in Senegal that has just gone on stream and has begun supplying a crucial raw material for IFFCO's phosphatic fertiliser plant at Kandla, on the Gujarat coast; it has also invested Rs 8 crore equity in Godavari Fertilisers and Chemicals at Kakinada.

In April, KRIBHCO Chairman Bansi Lal Mehta, reported at the company's annual shareholders' meeting that it had successfully completed its giant unit at Hazira, in Gujarat, that capacity



IFFCO's nitrogenous fertiliser plant at Kalol: proven technology

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

utilisation had already crossed the 100 per cent mark, that by-products would be used in a new Rs 223-crore project for manufacturing heavy water (required in atomic power stations), and that the Government had been asked to allot the company a new Rs 700-crore fertiliser project.

The secret of IFFCO's prosperity lies in its productivity levels. Fertiliser prices are pegged by the Government at a level that assures a 12 per cent return on capital at 80 per cent capacity utilisation. Profits rise or fall if productivity levels exceed or fall short of this norm. And in 1984-85, the cooperative sector recorded 107 per cent capacity utilisation in nitrogenous fertiliser and a staggering 134 per cent in phosphatic fertiliser. In contrast, the public sector managed only 60 and 67 per cent, respectively, while the private sector managed 90 and 91 per cent. A KRIBHCO official said last fortnight at Hazira that it too had exceeded the 100 per cent capacity utilisation level because "our plant is technologically speaking one of the best in the world". Said Operations Director Hardev Singh Kohli: "Sunny days are ahead of us."

IFFCO field worker advising farmers: effective programme

But the success goes well beyond financial data and capacity utilisation, and takes in the efficient use of modern technology, effective project management, optimum use of manpower and an unprecedented farmer education programme. When IFFCO first launched itself in 1967-68, its first managing director, Paul Pothen, decided that only proven technology would be used. The nitrogenous fertiliser plant at Kalol in Gujarat was thus a carbon copy of one at Donaldsonville in the US which was doing extremely well; in comparison, two of the public sector's sick units at Ramagundam in Andhra Pradesh and Talcher in Orissa used unproven coal-based technology and promptly ran into trouble. Similarly, effective project management saw to it that IFFCO's third plant, at Phulpur, came up in double-quick time. Said Paul Pothen: "We knew what we were after, the cooperative sector was on test, and I chose my men carefully and then gave them free rein. They delivered the results."

THERE are other contrasts with the public sector. A KRIBHCO official pointed out last fortnight that the public sector fertiliser plant at Sindri in Bihar employed more than 30,000 people to produce a quarter of the fertiliser that KRIBHCO will do with no more than 1,100 people. IFFCO in turn has at Kalol a far bigger plant than Sindri, but employs no more than 810. While the cooperative giants—which between them have close to 30,000 cooperative societies as their main shareholders—make do with fewer workers, they treat them well. Workers get a cash reward every time the capacity utilisation figure goes up. The Kandla plant has on occasion gone up to a capacity utilisation level of 150 per cent. And the KRIBHCO plant, though targeted to produce 1 lakh tonnes of fertiliser during a 120-day trial run period, produced 2.62 lakh tonnes and once hit a capacity utilisation level of 130 per cent.

The farmer education programme is equally path-breaking: IFFCO last year organised 2,250 farmers' meetings that were attended by 1.55 lakh farmers. In addition, there were 345 soil testing campaigns where 28,500 soil samples were analysed, and 1,681 separate demonstrations were held on improved farming techniques. For good measure, over 400 plant protection campaigns were organised. Said Swaminathan Mani, systems manager at the IFFCO plant in Kalol: "We try to take care of the farmer's needs in as many ways as possible." Added former managing director L.R.Talwar: "Even government departments have acknowledged that if any worthwhile agricultural extension work has been done in the country, it has been done by IFFCO."

There have been problems, of course. IFFCO's plant at Phulpur was shut down for a prolonged period when the Assam oil blockade prevented the supply of the crucial raw material naphtha, and KRIBHCO's Hazira plant was similarly commissioned several months late because the pipeline that was to feed it with gas was not completed in time by the Oil and Natural Gas Commission. Each day of delay in starting up the Rs 900 crore plant is estimated to have cost the company Rs 1 crore. Now, after the plant has started commercial running, the problem is not one of raw material supply but of end-product distribution: the railways promised two rakes every day for freighting the fertiliser, but have been able to provide only one.

Finally, IFFCO may not have been half as successful if it had been in the private sector because, through several years of profitable functioning, it has paid out meagre dividends to its shareholders, preserving the bulk of the Rs 477 crore that it has generated so far for reinvestment, expansion and growth. Ordinary company shareholders may have been unwilling to accept such a policy, and at the company's annual meeting last year even the cooperative societies murmured in protest at the niggardly dividends. But with the resource position tight because of the money needed for the new project at Bareilly, dividends are unlikely to be generous for at least another couple of years. With success, however, written all over the IFFCO and KRIBHCO books, there will be few who will want to carp.

—RAMESH MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

troducing Eveready Super
ith advanced Zinc Chloride technology
uper charged for maximum power and life

Rediffusion/UC/43

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When the Indian Navy wanted high-tech electronics for their training aids, they chose Keltron. That's right, Keltron! The people who make your television set.

That's not high fashion. Not high flying claims. That's just hard facts.

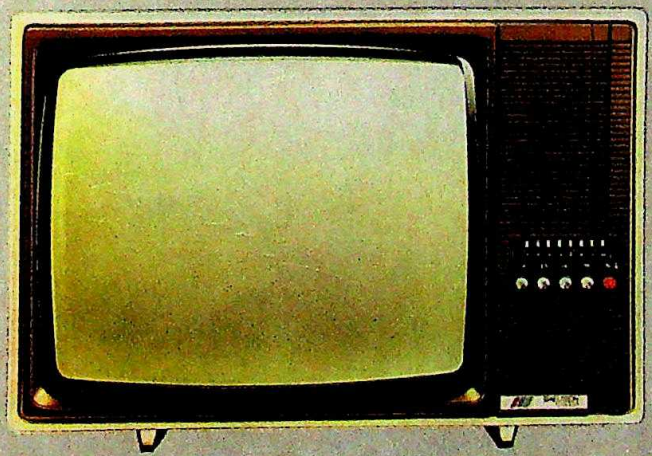
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Most people get taken in when buying a television set. Taken in by high-flying technical jargon. Or they get their heads turned by a good looking cabinet and dazzling full-colour life style. But a TV set has nothing to do with frills. Or with claims. It's only as good as its heart. And the heart of a television set is high technology.

Keltron makes no claims. It quotes its history. A history of high-tech electronics in national areas. Space Research, Atomic Energy, Doordarshan, the Asian Games, the Defence Services. That same high-tech goes into our television sets. Proof? The Electronic Components Association names Keltron the best television set made in India. And Keltron TV's failure rate is 0.05%... the lowest in the country.

So when you're out looking for a colour TV set, don't get taken in by jargon. And don't let good looks turn your head. Don't settle for a manufacturer's claims. Ask for the record.



KELTRON TV

Hard core, high-tech. No frills, no fuss.

Kerala State Electronics Development Corporation Limited, Consumer Electronics Division, Sasthamangalam, Trivandrum-695 010 Phone: 63106

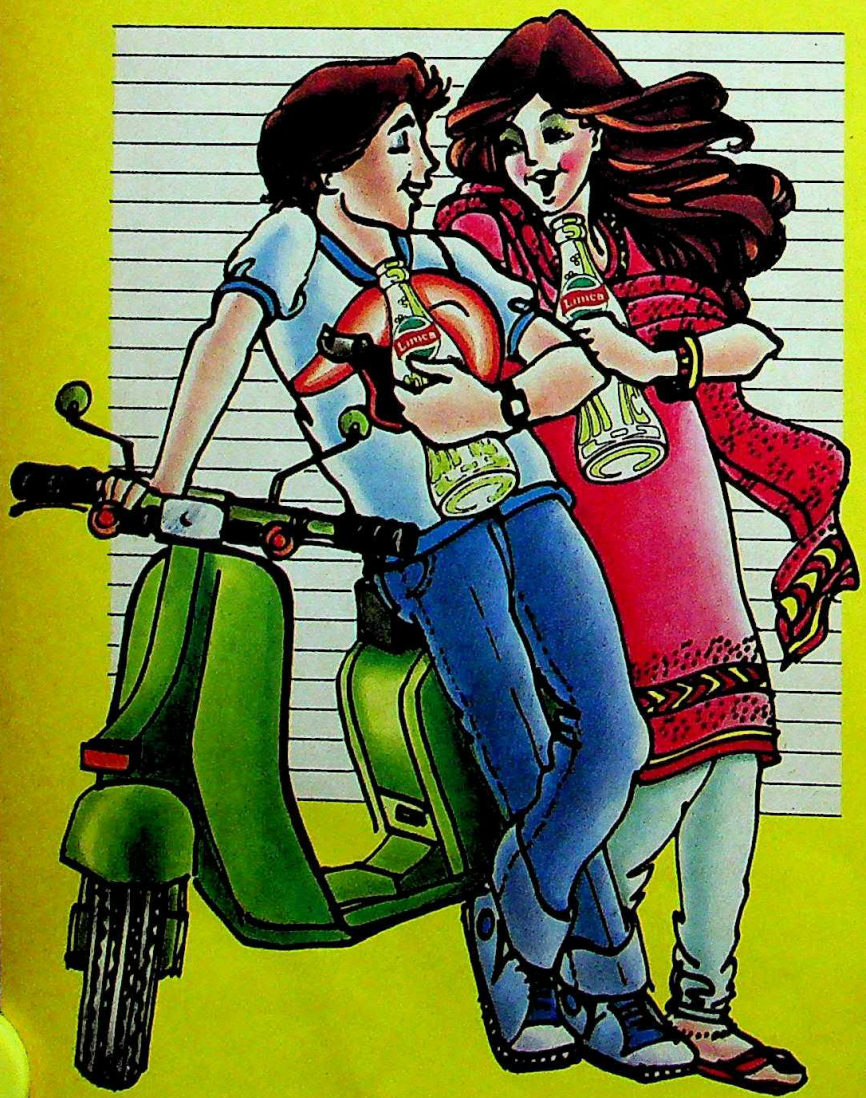
BRANCHES: • Bombay Phone: 4927448 • Bhopal Phone: 66354 • Madras Phone: 452310 • Madurai Phone: 43746 • Calcutta Phone: 245654 • Gauhati Phone: 31541 • Delhi Phone: 562602 • Hyderabad Phone: 63786 • Vizag • Bangalore Phone: 564492 • Ahmedabad Phone: 463664 • Trivandrum Phone: 60241 • Cochin Phone: 354560 • Also sales-service facilities available in all major towns.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Remember your thirst ride?

Remember the wind in your face? The song in your heart? Remember your thirst Limca after you'd raced the sun to its zenith? You can still taste the zingi lime 'n' lemoni effervescence each time you have a Limca. The isotonic salts really quench your thirst. Just like the thirst time.



*Limca. Each time is the thirst time!

Limca is veri veri lime 'n' lemon

SERVE CHILLED

ARTIFICIALLY FLAVOURED. CONTAINS NO FRUIT JUICE OR FRUIT PULP.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LIGHT COMMERCIAL VEHICLES

Rough Road Ahead

BARELY a year after they were readying to ride the crest of the light commercial vehicle (LCV) market with their Japanese marvels-on-wheels, the light truck industry's latest entrants face a bumpy ride. Costs have soared, price calculations have gone haywire and truck manufacturers have marked up price-tags in show-rooms. Yet profit margins have been mercilessly squeezed. Customers have cancelled bookings, sales projections have nose-dived, and at least one firm has deployed production staff in its marketing department and faces problems with ancillary suppliers who are no longer assured of large orders.

That is a grim scenario, and the principal actors in this drama are DCM-Toyota, Allwyn-Nissan, Swaraj Mazda and Eicher Motors. The villains of the piece—the soaring Japanese yen (up 40 per cent in the last seven months) and the Government (which slapped on higher excise and customs duties in the budget). Reacting sharply to the levies, Mitsubushi (Eicher's Japanese collaborator) Managing Director M Ueda said at a press conference in Delhi some weeks ago: "The rules of the game have been changed at the halfway stage." Echoed Harpal Singh, Hindustan Motors vice-president for marketing: "If the Government's objective is to promote new technology, it has to nurture it. It has reversed the process it set in motion."

The new LCV companies have been lobbying the Government against the taxes, but officialdom has so far remained unmoved. An Industry Ministry official said last fortnight that the higher customs duties (up from 25 per cent a few years ago to 50 per cent now), were meant to force companies to reduce imports of components from Japan and speed up indigenisation. But industry executives argue that the Government has already vetted the pace of their indigenisation programmes, and that since they are sticking to the agreed schedule, the extra tolls are unfair. For good measure, Maruti Udyog Managing Director R.C. Bhargava contended that it took up to two years for component suppliers to update their technologies for the new vehicles, so that there was "no direct relationship between customs duty and indigenisation."

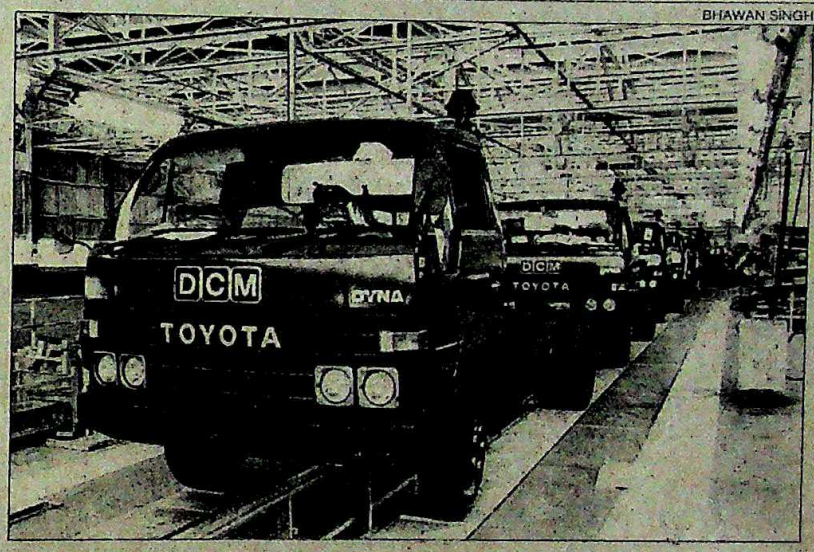
The mounting din is understandable. Taxes account for Rs 85,000 in DCM-Toyota's new price of Rs 1.80 lakh, raised from Rs 1.55 lakh. The cost of other companies' vehicles too has shot up by Rs 30,000 and more. Manufacturers have passed on most of the additional burden to customers, absorbing some to stay in the market. DCM-Toyota would have had to charge almost Rs 2 lakh if it had passed on the full cost escalation to buyers, a price dangerously close to that of a heavy duty truck. Inevitably, most manufacturers have had to cut costs.

But sales remain depressed. Allwyn-Nissan hoped to sell 3,000 trucks in its first year of operation, but industry sources say it has managed less than 1,500, and a company spokesman said he could meet the target only with Government help. Swaraj Mazda is doing no better, and DCM-Toyota may at best achieve 75 per cent of its initial target. Warned Allwyn-Nissan Managing Director, C. Sheshagiri Rao: "If the Government does not intervene to end the stagnation, the industry may face a recession that will affect the economy."

Recession may be too strong a word, but there is little doubt that that LCV sales will stay in low gear. Inder Singh, Swaraj Madza's dealer in Delhi, reports that orders have slowed down by 40 per cent after a price rise in early April. DCM-Toyota had one-third of its 15,000 bookings cancelled, and many who did not cancell their bookings are nevertheless not taking delivery either.

Some lay the blame for the bind the LCV companies are in at the manufacturers' doors. Says Singh of Hindustan Motors: "Their vehicles are overdesigned to take higher loads. It's like designing a bullock-cart and ending up with an elephant. That's why they can't cut prices." He also refers to a survey report that 65 per cent of LCVs are not overloaded, a conclusion that is heresy to the new companies, which swear just the opposite. Says Subodh Bargava, chief executive, Eicher group of companies:

BHAWAN SINGH



Costs have soared, price calculations have gone haywire and truck manufacturers have marked up price-tags in show-rooms. Yet profit margins have been mercilessly squeezed.

Eicher's Bhargava (left) and Allwyn-Nissan's Sheshagiri: grim scenario

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Any apprehension of overdesign is misplaced. The price relates to the high technology, which is more efficient."

Meanwhile, savage fights for market shares are in the offing. Older LCV manufacturers have obviously not been hit by the soaring yen. And their lighter payload vehicles are cheaper than the new vehicles. Market leader Bajaj Tempo's vehicle is priced at Rs 95,000 and the company has been highlighting its cheaper spares. Moreover, established companies like TELCO have launched a vehicle in the Bajaj range and Hindustan Motors could follow suit. TELCO is also believed to have other models of LCVs in the works, signalling a clear segmentation of the market.

There could also be a glut because of the rapid increase in manufacturing capacities despite stagnation in sales. Two years ago, the industry comprised three companies licensed to produce 35,200 vehicles a year. Last year, this jumped to 1.05 lakh when another five threw their hats into the ring and Bajaj Tempo doubled capacity. A lot of the additional capacities have yet to go on stream but the wars will get bloodier unless demand surges significantly.

DCM-Toyota's Executive Director Vivek Bharat Ram believes that it will in the long run, and points out that despite all the problems, his customers have been regularly repaying bank loans: indicating that they are making money. The railway network may function more efficiently, but it will be at a diminishing rate. "That is why I'm bullish that demand will catch up. It's a question of who will take up the challenge," he says. Eicher's Bhargava adds that the new trucks were the last to enter most countries but captured sizeable market shares in five years.

For all the brave talk, however, most of the new entrants are hedging their bets. DCM-Toyota is branching out into dumpers, ambulances and small buses in an effort to diversify. Allwyn-Nissan has crane carriers, ambulances, concrete mixers and tankers on its anvil, while Eicher too may explore similar avenues if the going gets too tough in LCVs. The consensus is that all the companies may have to exercise such options in the short run. With the Government unwilling to do a rescue act, LCVs have a rough road ahead of them. Whether the shakeout that is common to fledgling industries lies on that road is now the big question.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI
with bureau reports

POLYESTER

Tax Tussle

DIMETHYL terephthalic acid (DMT) and purified terephthalic acid (PTA) are not the stuff epic battles are made of, but appearances can be deceptive. Savage fights have erupted repeatedly between the rival lobbies that depend on these two raw materials for producing polyester fibre and yarn, the Government has favoured first one and then the other, and each time there have been cries of foul from the aggrieved lobby.

Last fortnight the Government stepped into the act once again when it raised the import duty on both PTA and DMT by Rs 3,000 per tonne; but since DMT is mostly locally produced and PTA is imported, the PTA users are now the ones that are doing the shouting. A Finance Ministry spokesman argued that the duty hike was meant to protect domestic DMT manufacturers, who have been faced with mounting unsold stocks. And certainly the move has met with immediate success. Kapal Mehra, chairman of Orkay Silk Mills (which uses PTA), said that he was planning to shift from PTA to DMT after making the requisite changes in his plant. Argued Mehra: "It is better to save your own industry rather than encourage that of Taiwan."

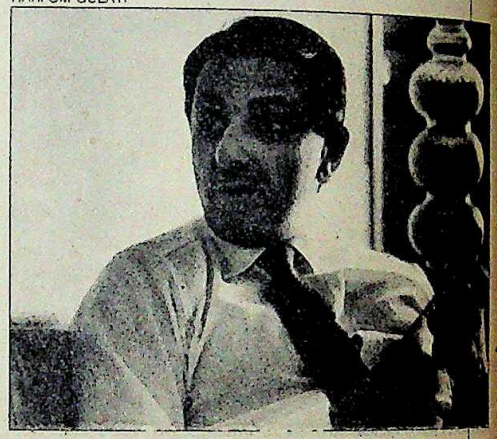
Reliance Industries, the country's biggest user of PTA, shot off protest telegrams to New Delhi even as it announced a downstream increase in the price of its polyester fibre. But Bombay Dyeing and Manufacturing Company—which has the maximum unsold DMT stocks—complained that the Government had not done enough.

Those protesting the latest decision complained that the Government had hiked import duties a few months earlier by 40 per cent, that DMT manufacturers were already charging more than the price recommended by an official body, that the increase in duties ran counter to the intentions stated in last year's textile policy, and that the Government—in choosing to protect DMT producers—was protecting an obsolete, inefficient raw material that is getting rapidly displaced world-wide by PTA. Said Anil Ambani, executive director of Reliance: "The DMT manufacturers are already charging more than what they should. They don't need additional protection."

But the Government seems to have had reasons for its decision. Figures presented to them showed that it was considerably cheaper for a polyester manufacturer to use PTA rather than DMT. The irony is, of course, that even after the latest duty hike PTA remains a cheaper raw material because of falling prices abroad, and a Bombay Dyeing executive admitted that "we have been handed a potato".

There is little doubt, of course, that all decisions concerning both DMT and

HARI OM GULATI



Nusli Wadia of Bombay Dyeing: getting protection

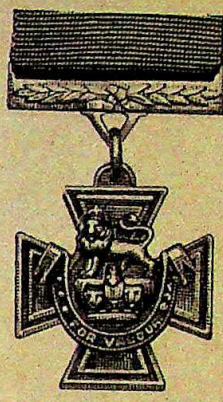
PTA are determined by the effectiveness of the lobbying, and at the moment Nusli Wadia, chairman of Bombay Dyeing, seems to have a more effective lobby in New Delhi than the once-favoured Reliance. This is ironic, for Bombay Dyeing has a production cost for DMT that is far higher than that of the older public sector unit, Vadodara's Indian Petrochemicals, which has been selling its DMT without too many problems. In contrast, Bombay Dyeing has been forced to hire a chicken farm near its plant to store unsold stocks, while its plant has remained partially or fully shut for a good part of the January-March quarter.

Oddly enough, Bombay Dyeing sprang a surprise last fortnight by asking the Government for permission to expand its capacity from 60,000 to one lakh tonnes. Others feel the future is with PTA, and Indian Petrochemicals may switch its DMT plant to PTA. And with Reliance's 75,000 PTA plant due to go on stream by the end of the year, this may end up as the one company that is not affected by the new hike in customs duty. Clearly, the great terephthalic battle is still to be fully fought out.

—JAGANNATH DUBASHI

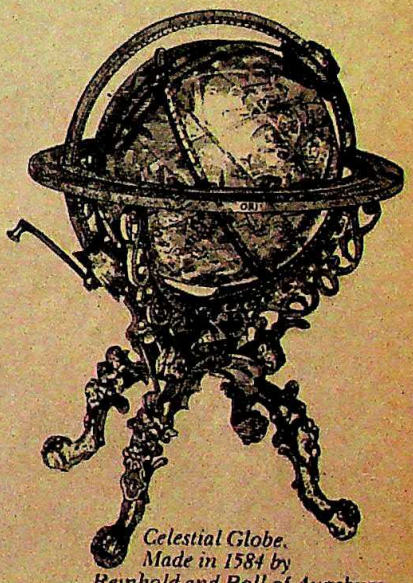
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Percussion Pistol.
By Alfred Gauvain of Paris.
First shown at Great Exhibition, Crystal Palace, London, 1851.



Victoria Cross.
Supreme military honour since 1856.
Originally made from guns captured in Crimean War.

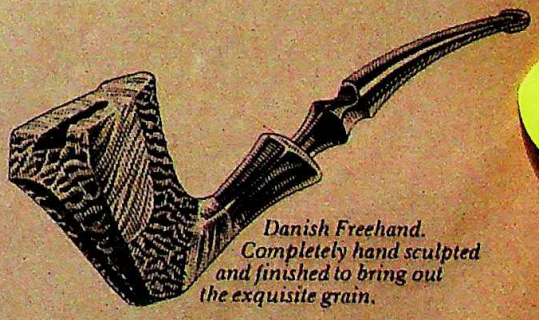
Head of Balzac.
Study in bronze by Auguste Rodin, 1840-1917.



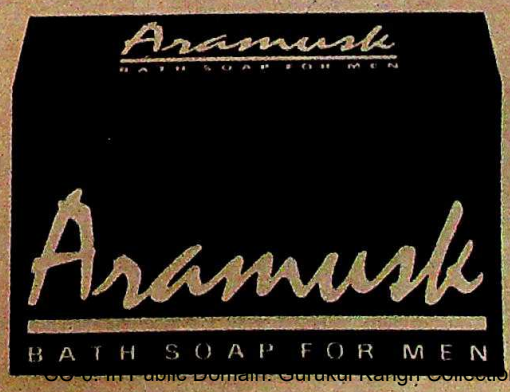
Celestial Globe.
Made in 1584 by Reinhold and Roll of Augsburg.
Almost certainly sold in 1854 to Emperor Rudolph II, Prague.

Waterford Decanter.
Classic full lead crystal brought to life by the breath of a master glassmaker.

Another certain something that's extravagantly male.



Danish Freehand.
Completely hand sculpted and finished to bring out the exquisite grain.



Aramusk. A bathing experience that pleasures the senses.
Capturing the timeless aroma of musk, said to be rarer and costlier than gold.
From Shaw Wallace.

Available in selected cities only.

Introducing Aramusk. Bath Soap For Men.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

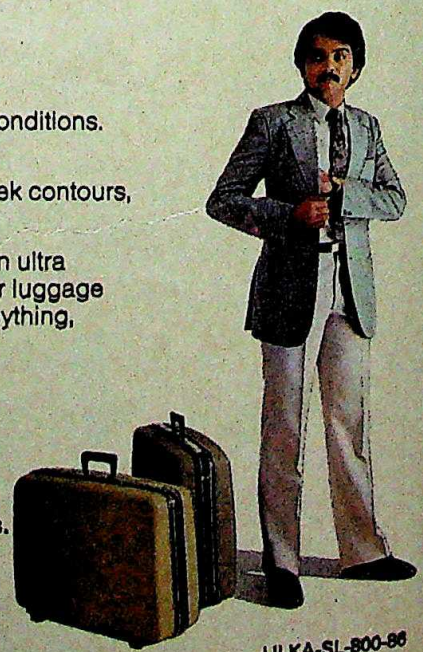
Let's face it.
Safari is not a showpiece.
It's the luggage that roughs it out. Anywhere.

No matter how you travel, where and how often, Safari endures the worst conditions. That's the honest truth.

That's why we put so much into this luggage. The streamlined look, the sleek contours, the smooth finish are routine for our fanatical craftsmen.

Now consider the raw stamina of Safari. Made of the toughest material in an ultra modern plant, Safari endures shocks, rough handling, the pressure of other luggage on top of it, jerky take offs and turbulent landings. It never gets rattled by anything, anywhere.

Safari. It survives.



safari

The luggage that knows its business.

ULKA-SL-800-86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Full featured ★ Superb performance ★ Unbeatable price

DCM TYPESTAR-I

an electronic Typewriter par excellence

You get what you need ... at a price hard to beat.

The DCM Typestar-I is what an electronic typewriter should be. Up to-date. Practical. With a full set of conveniently usable features. And a very attractive price tag. No unnecessary frills to make you pay more for features that your Secretary may never require.

Designed to fit into the office of the future.

If and when you need more sophisticated capabilities the DCM Typestar-I can even work as a computer printer as it comes with a built-in computer interface.

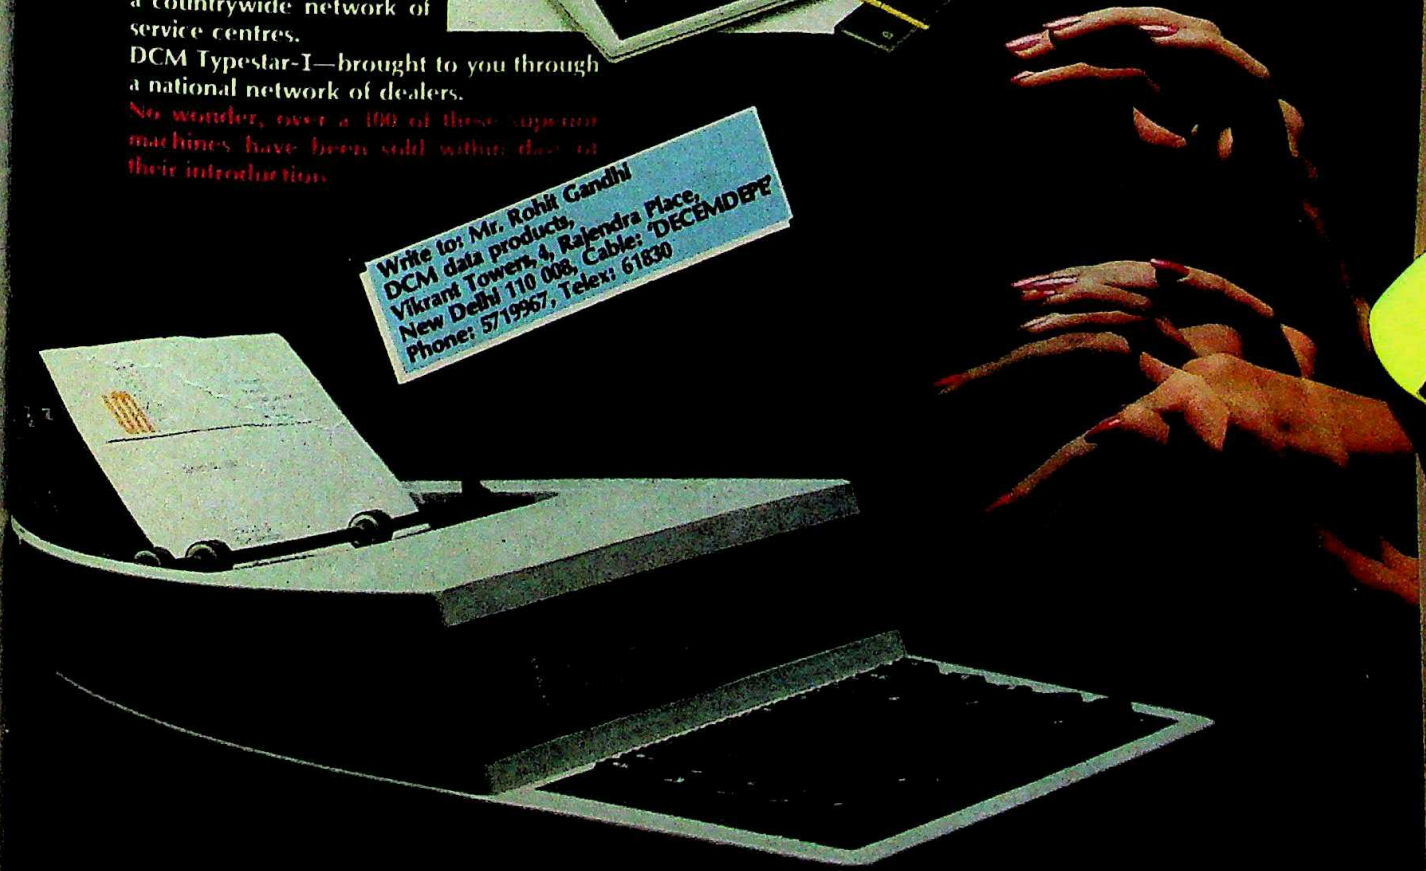
Backed by the leader in office automation.

With the DCM Typestar-I you have the assurance that it comes from a Company with over a decade of experience in supporting and servicing similar equipment through a countrywide network of service centres.

DCM Typestar-I—brought to you through a national network of dealers.

No wonder, over a 100 of these superior machines have been sold within days of their introduction.

Write to: Mr. Rohit Gandhi
DCM data products,
Vikrant Towers, 4, Rajendra Place,
New Delhi 110 008, Cable: "DECEMDEPE"
Phone: 5719967, Telex: 61830



From India's leading computer company

DCM
data products

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When she won't talk to you and yet can't seem to forget you...

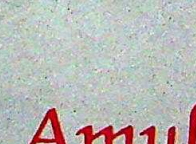
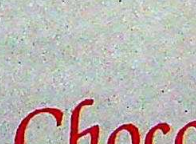
win her over again with Amul Chocolates.

Six delicious varieties...
Amul Coffee, Amul Crisp,
Amul Bitter, Amul Milk Chocolate,
Amul Fruit & Nut, Amul Orange.

Amul Chocolates
a gift for someone you love



Soft and creamy, like Swiss chocolates...



its creaminess sealed in silver foil...

and foil-board carton to keep it fresh.

Marketed by : Gujarat Co-operative Milk Marketing Federation Ltd , Anand.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CALCUTTA

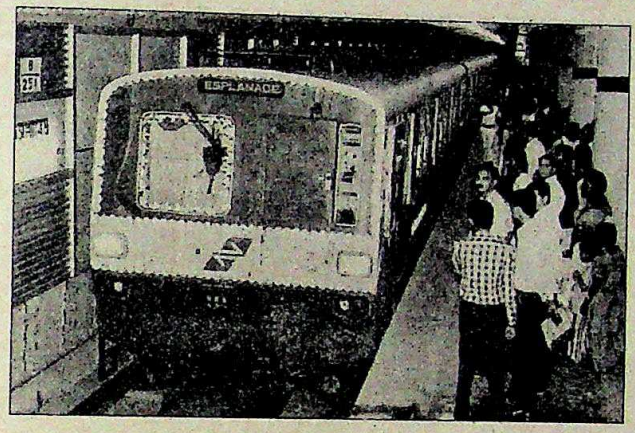
Metro Moves

THE MOOD is distinctly upbeat along south Calcutta's main thoroughfare, from Tollygunj to the city centre of Chowringhee. For the opening of the country's first complete underground railway stretch on April 28 along this route signals boom time. Real estate prices are shooting up and so are commercial prospects as realtors and urban planners get ahead with their plans to extend the city's business district out of its central Calcutta confines down the metro stretch. "Initially almost everybody took the metro with a pinch of salt but today Calcuttans are realising the tremendous social benefits it will generate," says a cheerful metro rail General Manager H.S. Sinha.

Calcutta's metro rail, thundering silently along sound-proof concrete tunnels more than two storeys below ground level, is not just another addition to the city's multifarious old transport modes. It is a generational leap for a city dominated by obsolete tramcars, slowed down by primitive rickshaws and choked by burgeoning crowds. And Calcuttans show signs of treating this symbol of modernity with a reverence they have accorded few public creations in recent times, as testified by the spotlessly clean metro stations, the lack of beggars and hawkers and the exhibition of a certain awe at the air-conditioned subterranean complexes and gleaming tube trains, zealously guarded by railway police.

Whereas it takes commuters more than an hour of gruelling bus trips to get from Tollygunj to Esplanade, the metro will cut commuting time to 15 minutes. So far, the tube has been running just on a 4-km stretch from Esplanade to Bhowanipur, carrying under 15,000 passengers daily. But this number will soon go up to 2 lakh every day as four 8-coach rakes get into operation, covering nine stations every 10 minutes.

In the next five years, when the system's northern stretch is also complete, the world's smallest metro system (17 km long) will be the most heavily used: carrying 17 lakh passengers daily: an intensity of use that is three times more than the next most heavily used system, in Mexico city. Ironically, even this saturation use will not prevent it from suffering an annual loss of Rs 1 crore: but this is small before the Rs 30 crore subsidy that is now paid out annually to the city's government-owned tram and bus companies, which carry less than 25 per cent of the city's total passenger load. Says Sinha: "Considering that the majority of world metros chalk up colossal losses, our modest loss projections are commendable when our fare rate (Re 1 minimum fare) is the lowest in the world."



Passengers on the Calcutta subway: a generational leap

But problems remain. Even Sinha admits that a single metro line in the city will serve a limited purpose: "When the Planning Commission originally recommended a metro for Calcutta in 1969, it approved three lines, out of which one was taken up ultimately in 1974 to begin with." The other two—one running from Salt Lake to Rajaramtolla on the Howrah side of the Hooghly and the other from Dakhineswar in the north to Thakurpukur in the south—were conceived as integral parts of a complete 60-km metro system for the city. "It would be criminal to call it a day after completing the first metro line, now that we have developed the expertise and several private sector companies have become dependent on metro work," said a metro official. But the Government is strapped for cash, and seems unwilling to extend the system to becoming a complete package for the city's commuters.

Sinha argues that the high cost of the metro—Rs 388 crore spent till the end of 1985-86 and another Rs 422 crore to be spent in the next five years—should not be a consideration for future planning. "Our costs work out to $40 million per km, which compares favourably with the cost of metros built in other Third World cities like Sao Paulo, Santiago and Mexico City," he explains.

Curiously however, the metro's severest critics are not the supposedly pusillanimous mandarins at the Centre, but the state's Marxist rulers, who have never lost a chance to deride it. The state Government is squabbling over who should pay for the restoration of the city's surface, devastated by the metro work. Metro authorities are restoring roads and surfaces as they were a decade ago while the state Government insists that the geometry of roads, traffic intersections and points where metro commuters are going to be disgorged need extensive remodelling. But neither the Railway Board nor the state Government is prepared to foot the bill for the necessary remodelling.

To top it all, the Marxists, much to the opposition of the metro authorities, are determined to bring the trams on the metro route. Should this kind of bickering continue, whatever changes the metro rail era promised will be confined to the underground, leaving the city surface with its decaying symbols of a 19th century civilisation and dousing the current hopes of changing skylines, congestion-free streets and all the other effects of an urban renewal boom.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GODREJ

Perking Up

IN THE TV advertisement, the well-known housewife walks into a grocer's. She tells you, in that I-am-so-virtuous voice, that though the market is full of products, the consumer should not be misled by claims of quality for a price and should go for modestly-priced winners. At this point she raises a detergent powder and a detergent cake, walks out of the shop, and watches in mortification as a taxi passes her by without even so much as a how d'ye do.

The lady is of course the redoubtable Rajani Prabhakar, one of the most successful TV creations of last year, and the company whose products she's touting is Godrej Soaps Pvt Ltd (turnover: Rs 190 crore). The company, perhaps borrowing a leaf from the account book of the termagant whose urban adventures it sponsored, has moved aggressively into the front shelves of the shops with new products, new packaging, new advertising campaigns and a new-found drive that suggests it is finally shaking off its staid image. Says Director Ardeshir Godrej: "We did a survey some time ago and found to our chagrin that people perceived our products as old and not modern. That was when we decided to move, in order not to get left behind."

So the company wiped the dust off its thinking caps and the results:

► Godrej's front-runner premium Cinthol soap now comes in a glossy pack, with a lower weight and price: sales have increased 50 per cent in the last few months, yielding a market share of about 12 per cent.

► Ponds get its highly successful Dreamflower brand of premium soap made at Godrej; this and Cinthol now account for about 25 per cent of the premium soap market.

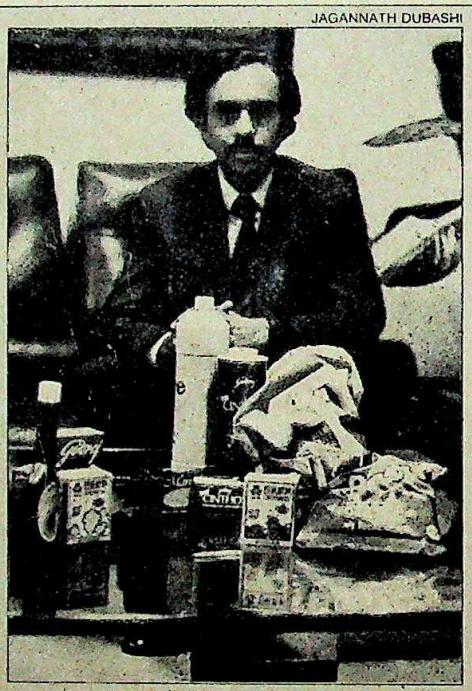
► Crowning Glory—a one-of-its-kind Indian shampoo soap launched with the blessings of the delectable Dimple Kapadia—is also moving quickly six months after launch, with 2 per cent of the market.

► The company has been confident enough to launch yet another soap, Marvel, in March this year—without any test-marketing at all.

► Finally, a low-priced detergent—Besto—was launched last May. At Rs 8 per kg, it is half the price of Key, and about the same price as the legendary Nirma. Besto now claims a 10 per cent share of the expanding market.

On the anvil are plans for another, cheaper, toilet soap, a shampoo and more inputs in the company's successful cattle and animal feeds business, which contributes about a sixth of the total turnover. Says Godrej: "We don't want to diversify completely out of our strengths. We know soaps and chemicals the best, and we will stay in them for some time."

JAGANNATH DUBASHI



"We don't want to diversify completely out of our strengths. We know soaps and chemicals the best and will stay in them for some time."

ARDESHIR GODREJ
director, Godrej Soaps Pvt. Ltd.

Nevertheless, the group decided to take a giant step last month into consumer drinks, based not on the usual fizzy waters, but on the lowly soya bean. Soya has been trying to break into the consumer market for some time now, though daunted by people's perception of it as a dull, tasteless food whose only saving grace is that it is one of the few vegetarian foods rich in protein. Noble Soya House, as the new venture of Godrej and the Bhiwandiwallas is called, will try and market it in the form of flavoured milk, in easy-to-store packs.

Godrej was sold on soya for two reasons: it has already become a fashionable food abroad—Hong Kong drinks more soya milk than Coca Cola—and it should be attractive to Indians, for the idea of a 100 per cent vegetarian drink with high protein content should be welcome. Secondly, with Godrej's immense marketing network—200,000 retailers all over the country—it would be quite easy to push the drink. So the decision to tie-up with soya leader Kibun of Japan for knowhow, and to ask the public for money to partly finance the Rs 11.8 crore plant which the company is setting up to manufacture 90 million 200 ml packs of soya milk a year. "In the third year of production", says Ghanshyam Sheth, company director, "we should be at full capacity and earning profits of about 10 per cent on turnover."

The laundry giant is shaking off the cobwebs because it clearly realises the need for expansion. Also, explains Godrej, import policies with regard to equipment and raw materials have been liberalised, so that "with quite a lot of stuff on OGL (open general licence) it's easier to plan your growth." The last few years have been steady but unspectacular, even as other companies hogged the limelight and the profits, and a need was felt to cash in on the TV boom and the new atmosphere for industry before it was too late. "We have gone on what you might call a capacity utilisation spree and are using up all our 20,000 tonnes a year for soap," says Godrej. He is cagey about figures, but admits that a Rs 10 crore profit two years ago boosted the expansion drive.

Apart from all this, Godrej will remain in the public eye because it spends about Rs 50 lakh a month on advertising, mostly through the sponsorship of TV programmes. It has just bought the 104-part serial Buniyaad, directed by Ramesh Sippy, and is looking at others. "We find", says Godrej, "that the vast majority of those who have a TV are those with disposable money to spend on consumer goodies. That is the market we are aiming at and that is the market we will get." The going for Godrej seems good with Rajani on their side.

—JAGANNATH DUBASHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

The most envied colour TV within a stone's throw!

Now who'd want to hurl a stone at such a beautiful TV! Mentally, though, many might.

Some of your neighbours for instance. Who may have seen your new ONIDA and envied its classy, futuristic looks, the most astounding true-to-life colour, and the sharpest picture they've ever seen on a TV screen! And have been deeply regretting the fact that they're stuck with colour TVs that are obviously a generation behind!

You may of course argue, your neighbours are the nicest lot. Hardly the type to stoop to violence no matter how much they envy your ONIDA TV. Well... thank heavens!

ONIDA With cordless remote.

Neighbours' envy. Owners' pride.

In case you want more details rush to the nearest Dealer

itized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

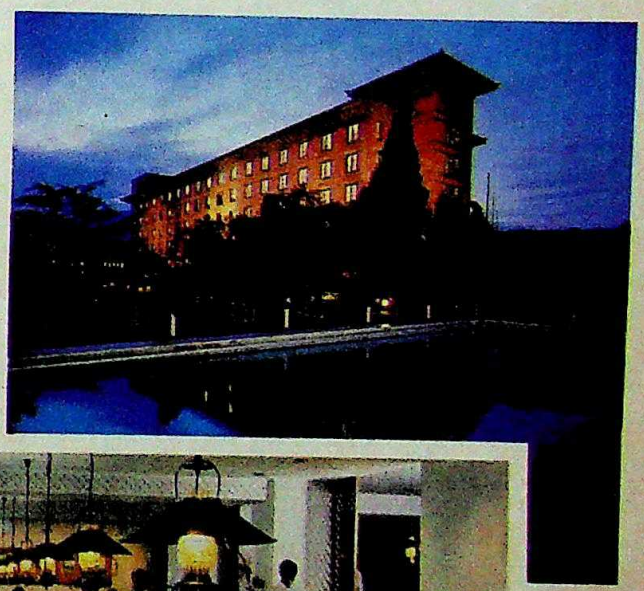
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

From Sita, Mercury and Casino Nepal:

The Soaltee Surprise

Escape to the new world of an ancient kingdom in Kathmandu.

Combine a perfect retreat with the most luxurious holiday at the Soaltee Oberoi: 4 days, 3 nights of unmatched pleasure. Your choice of Continental or Indian breakfast every day. Two deluxe half-day city sight-seeing tours. Free accommodation for 2 children up to 12 years in the same room without extra bed. Free airport- hotel-airport transfers.



Plus

Free-play casino-coupons worth Rs. 1,200

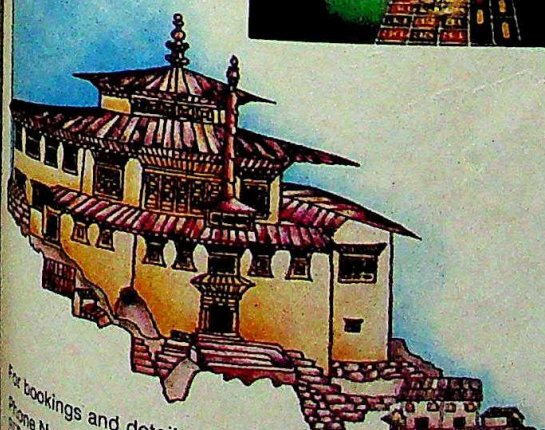
All, for Rs. 1,234 per person on a twin-sharing basis (Rs. 1,830 for single-occupancy) — inclusive of all taxes. (Prices indicated in Indian rupees.)



Hotel Soaltee Oberoi

EIH-104/2

For bookings and details, contact your nearest Sita, Mercury or Oberoi Instant Reservations Office or a bonafide travel agent.
Phone Numbers: Bombay SITA 240666 MERCURY 2024343 OBEROI 2024343 Ahmedabad SITA 409105 OBEROI 464451 Delhi SITA 3311122, 3312764 MERCURY 312008 OBEROI 699571 Srinagar SITA 78891, 77186 MERCURY 78786 OBEROI 71241 Kanpur SITA 68171 Jaipur SITA 68226 Agra SITA 66181 Varanasi SITA 42945, 43121 MERCURY 62021 Calcutta SITA 297185 MERCURY 443555/59 OBEROI 292323 Madras SITA 478861 MERCURY 8112220 OBEROI 478156 Bangalore SITA 578091 MERCURY 577681 OBEROI 53444 Hyderabad SITA 233628 MERCURY 34411 Cochin SITA 33012, 31101.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

The classy vest. See it as a basic executive perk.

While you tackle a hectic schedule every minute of your working day, make sure physical comfort is in body hugging proximity! New VIP Royal vests. Designed with the minutest attention to detail. And stitched to perfection to give you the kind of executive comfort you've never had before. VIP Royal. You've come to deserve this perk.

VIP Royal VEST

The executive line of comfort.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

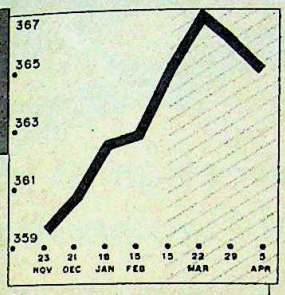
Inflation has slowed down marginally. Money supply has increased somewhat and bank credit is, therefore, less tight. Exports have picked up, the trade gap is marginally narrower and foreign exchange reserves have risen. Shares prices are now on trend and even gold prices have started picking up after falling steadily for the past several months.

All data are seasonally adjusted. Current trend is computed on the basis of the last six months data to which a regression is fitted.

Wholesale Price Index

1970-71 = 100

Current Trend
5.3% p.a.

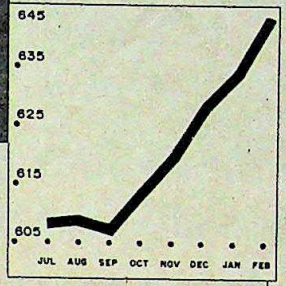


Wholesale prices dipped by 0.5% in the latter half of March. Nevertheless, the long term trend suggests that inflation is gaining momentum.

Consumer Price Index

1960 = 100

Current Trend
13.5% p.a.

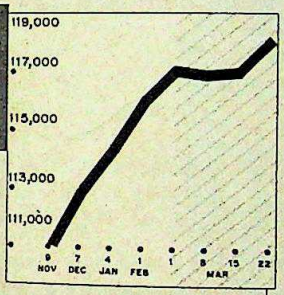


Consumer prices have shot up by 3.8% between November and February, and continue to rise much faster than wholesale prices.

Money Supply

Rs Crore

Current Trend
16.7% p.a.

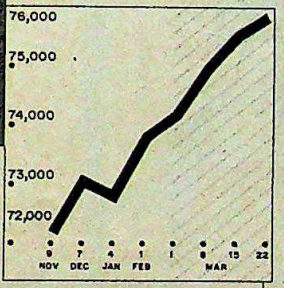


Money supply increased marginally by 0.9% in March. The six month trend, however, remains well within the 16-17% range.

Commercial Bank Credit

Rs Crore

Current Trend
11.5% p.a.

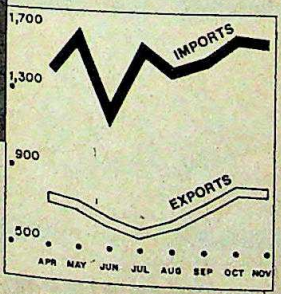


Bank credit jumped by 2.3% in March, considerably easing the "tight-money" position. At 11%, the trend is now still higher than before.

Foreign Trade

Rs Crore

Current Trend
17.7% p.a.
IMPORTS
23.0% p.a.
EXPORTS

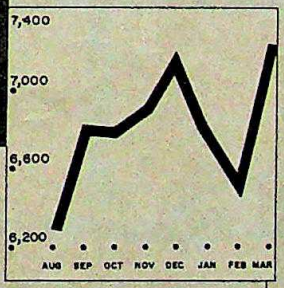


Export growth between August and November has brightened the trade picture, but increasing imports have kept the trade deficit large.

Foreign Exchange Reserves

Rs Crore

Current Trend
2.9% p.a.

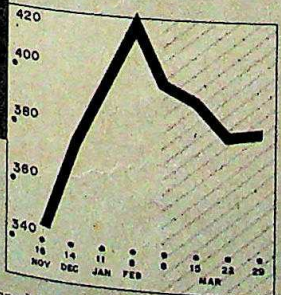


Foreign exchange reserves have risen abruptly, after dropping through January and February, and are now at an eight month peak.

Share Price Index

1970-71 = 100

Current Trend
42.1% p.a.

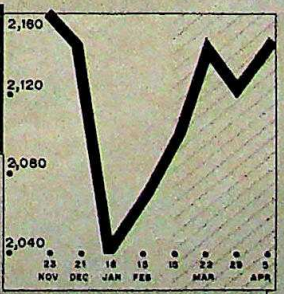


Share prices dipped by 3.6% in the last three weeks of March, reversing the earlier decline. The long term trend remained buoyant.

Closing Gold Price

Rs per 10 gm.

Current Trend
−4.6% p.a.



A 3.7% spurt in gold prices between February 15 and April 5 lifted the long-term trend, which is still negative but less so than before.

INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION

Growth of Items in March, 1986

	% Growth
Linseed	15.35
Copra	12.27
Barley	10.98
Oranges	10.6
Coconut Oil	9.69
Timber	8.91
Khandsari	7.98
Fish	7.5
Maida	7.22
Ball-Bearings	7.2
Linseed Oil	7.06
Bananas	5.69
Trucks	5.56
Cashew-Nuts	5.21
Country Liquor	4.32
Gingelly Oil	4.06
Arhar	4.04
Jowar	3.96
Rubber	3.57
Mustard Oil	3.44
Cars	3.25
Mustard Oilcake	3.08
Tobacco	2.99
Board	2.62
Gingelly Seed	2.37
Cotton Seed	2.19
Petroleum Crude & Natural Gas	2.17
Milk	2.17
Bajra	2.08
Rice	1.95
Rape & Mustard Seed	1.93
Ragi	1.89
Groundnut Seeds	1.86
Phosphatic Fertiliser	1.77
Paper	1.7
Tractors	1.52
Electricity	1.47
Caustic Soda	1.04
Groundnut Oilcake	1.03
Polythene Moulding Powder	0.98
Nitrogenous Fertilisers	0.97
Jute Textiles	0.86
Ghee	0.86
Whisky	0.82
PVC Compounds	0.72
Industrial Instruments	0.68

Of the 139 series considered. 66 of them with a total weight of 40.935 had a positive growth and 73 of them with a total weight of 45.69 had a negative growth.

SELECTED INDICATORS

	1986	1985
Coal
Thousand Tonnes, March	18645	16667
Saleable Steel
Thousand Tonnes, March	918.2	814.0
Cement
Thousand Tonnes March	3251	2739
Fertiliser
Thousand Tonnes, March	560.4	471.0
Thermal Plant Load Factor
Per cent, March	57.4	55.5

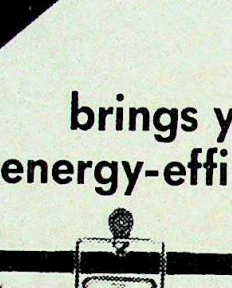
Compiled by THE POLICY GROUP/ICIM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

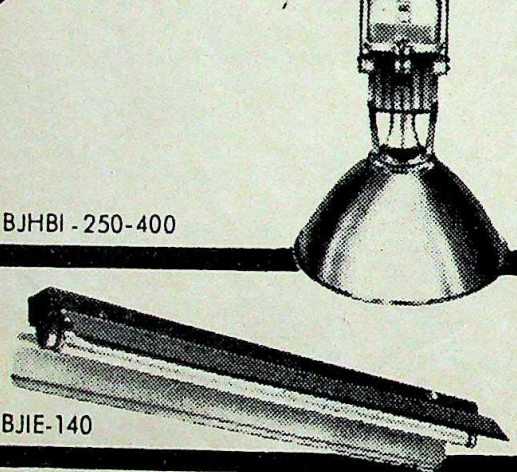
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

bajaj

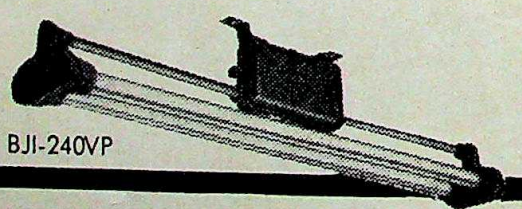
brings you a complete range of energy-efficient Industrial Luminaires.



BJHBI - 250-400

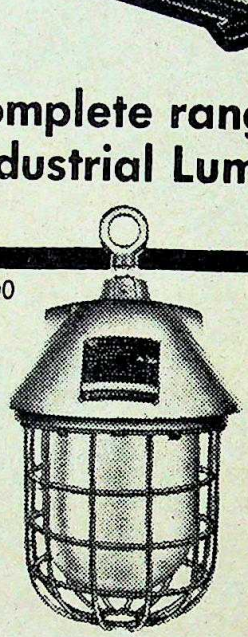


BJIE-140

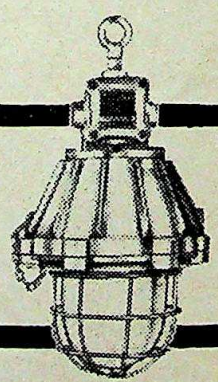


BJI-240VP

BJIW-200



BJFW-200



Engineered for high efficiency and designed to suit any high, medium or low bay application as well as different atmospheres like high ambient temperature/humidity in rolling and textile mills, corrosive vapours in fertiliser and chemical plants, etc.

Bajaj offers a total integrated lighting service from the designing to the electrification and installation of lighting fittings on a turnkey basis for any indoor/outdoor location.

For details write to:

Lighting Project Services
Bajaj Electricals Limited
45-47 Veer Nariman Road
Bombay 400 023.

Heros' BE-780 A

bajaj

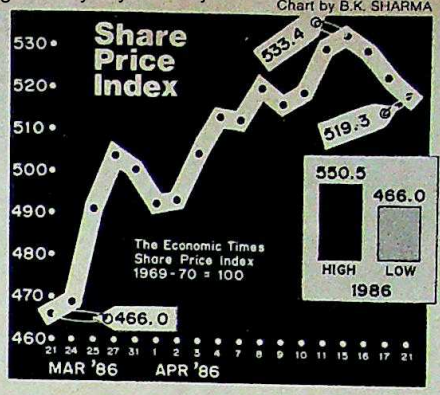
The lighting people since 1938.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

Up and Down



THE MOST unrelated developments can send shock waves through the stock-market. Just when share values were sustaining their recovery and climbing back to near the pre-budget levels, the American attack on Libya and fears of a possible oil boycott that might affect an oil-importing country like India as well, sent stock prices downward again.

Inevitably, price movements varied substantially during the fortnight. Reliance took a small beating, moving down from Rs 348 to 343, in the wake of the Government's decision to hike the customs duty on purified terephthalic acid (PTA), a major raw material for the textiles and petrochemicals giant. Just as inevitably, Bombay Dyeing—which manufactures a domestic substitute for PTA—found its share price soaring from Rs88 to Rs 104 in next to no time. Orkay (which also uses PTA as a raw material) slumped far more than Reliance, losing Rs43 at Rs 118 despite the news that the Government had finally cleared the company's long-delayed debenture issue.

Other developments were similarly pegged to individual corporate events and expectations. Gujarat State Fertilisers climbed quickly by Rs 122.50 to Rs 1,537.50 because of expectations of a convertible debenture issue tied to the company's expansion programmes. Tata Steel also did well, moving up by Rs 102.50 to Rs 1,412.50, because the market looked forward to a stepped up dividend and even a bonus issue. The company is also expected to use its comfortable financial position to launch a major expansion programme. Two automobile companies also did noticeably well: Bajaj Auto shot up by Rs 200 to Rs 2,575, and Premier Automobiles gained Rs 122.50 at Rs 805.

Through these various ups and downs, the market now seems in healthier shape than it has been for some time. The market may have been somewhat over-sold during the post-budget slump, and the subsequent recovery helped restore some balance. The financial institutions have also used this period to offload some shares and adjust their portfolios by buying at other counters. The low carry-over charges for share transactions confirms that neither bulls nor bears have a stranglehold on the market any more, as has often been the case in the recent past.

The future should see a lot of activity concentrated in the new issues market. Tata Fertiliser is due to come up with an issue of unprecedented proportions, totalling Rs400 crore, and several companies have large expansion plans on their drawing-boards. So new capital raised on the market this financial year should be substantially more than what was done last year.

ACTIVE STOCK

	1986 HIGH	1986 LOW	CLOSE 21.4.86	Change In Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	45.00	26.00	30.50	1.75 –
Associated Cement	389.00	236.00	251.00	2.00 +
Atlas Copco	92.50	71.00	73.00	2.00 +
Associated Bearings	990.00	730.00	750.00	nil
Avery India	146.00	103.00	119.00	1.00 +
Bajaj Auto	2775.00	1950.00	2575.00	200.00 +
Baroda Rayon	490.00	315.00	380.00	20.00 +
Bata India	82.50	64.00	64.50	4.50 –
Bayer	680.00	445.00	525.00	10.00 +
Bharat Forge	86.00	48.00	65.00	3.00 +
Birla Jute	97.00	42.90	48.00	3.00 –
Blow Plast	160.00	98.00	114.00	2.50 +
Blue Star	110.00	75.00	95.00	10.00 +
Bombay Dyeing	120.00	77.00	97.00	13.00 +
Brooke Bond	96.75	74.00	91.00	2.00 –
Ceat Tyres	520.00	240.00	410.00	nil
Century Spinning	169.00	1220.00	1385.00	30.00 +
Chloride India	122.00	91.00	97.00	3.00 –
Chlorgia	65.00	43.00	53.00	6.00 +
Colgate	262.50	200.00	217.50	7.50 –
Cyanamid	100.00	70.00	75.00	2.50 +
DCM	58.50	36.00	38.50	2.50 –
Dunlop	74.50	49.75	67.50	0.75 –
Elecon	117.50	80.00	85.00	10.00 –
Escorts	105.00	69.00	95.50	8.50 +
Food Specialities	300.00	215.00	217.00	nil
Garware Nylon	61.50	36.00	42.00	1.00 –
Glaxo	87.00	62.00	67.00	4.00 –
G.E. Shipping	36.00	22.50	23.50	1.50 –
Gujarat St. Fertilisers	1700.00	925.00	1537.50	122.50 +
Gwalior Rayon	88.00	59.00	80.50	6.50 +
Hindustan Lever	163.00	124.00	144.00	6.00 –
Hindustan Motors	128.50	52.60	56.00	2.00 +
Hind. Dorr	505.00	380.00	460.00	20.00 +
IEL	84.50	64.50	72.50	0.50 –
Indian Hotels	157.00	115.00	135.00	nil
Indian Organic	90.00	63.00	74.50	2.00 +
Indian Rayon	151.00	100.00	135.00	13.00 +
Indrol	390.00	200.00	310.00	5.00 +
Ingersoll-Rand	480.00	360.00	435.00	nil
ITC	76.50	53.00	74.25	1.75 +
J.K. Synthetics	132.00	90.00	118.00	2.00 +
Kinetic Engineering	325.00	220.00	290.00	5.00 +
Kirloskar Cummins	715.00	547.50	590.00	5.00 –
Lakme	195.00	120.00	132.50	5.00 +
Larson & Toubro	204.00	157.00	185.50	6.00 +
Lipton	69.00	46.50	62.70	1.30 –
Lohia Machines	70.00	44.00	46.00	9.00 –
Madura Coats	92.00	71.00	88.00	0.50 +
Mahindra & Mahindra	86.00	52.00	64.00	2.00 +
Motor Industries	910.00	605.00	810.00	70.00 +
National Organic	777.50	530.00	630.00	10.00 –
Nirlon	77.00	48.00	53.00	2.00 +
Orkay Silk Mills	186.00	111.00	118.00	43.00 –
Peico Electronics	104.50	56.00	56.00	nil
Pfizer	125.00	78.00	91.00	5.00 +
Premier Auto	840.00	555.00	805.00	122.50 +
Ranbaxy	160.00	105.00	122.00	13.00 –
Raymond	97.00	72.00	86.00	5.00 +
Reliance Industries	367.00	226.00	343.00	20.00 +
Shriram Fibres	88.00	61.00	61.00	6.00 –
SPIC	184.00	129.50	154.00	3.00 –
Tata Steel	1442.50	1090.00	1412.50	102.50 +
Telco	910.00	575.00	685.00	5.00 +
Vulcan Laval	162.50	85.00	125.00	5.00 +
Wimco	98.00	54.00	64.00	3.00 –

WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

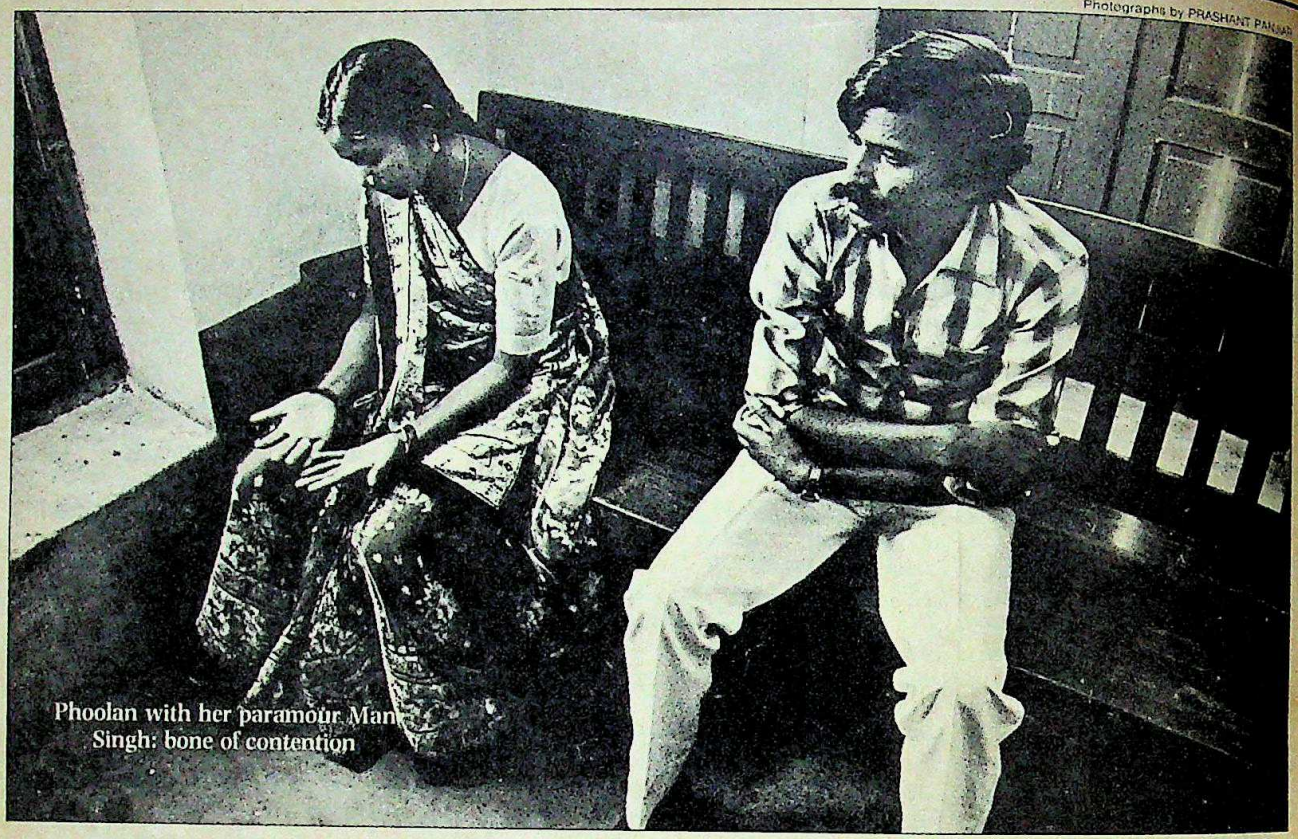
COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	8.8845	8.7987
Austria	Schilling	100	79.7988	78.6687
Bahrain	Dinar	1	33.3052	33.2950
Bangladesh	Taka	100	42.0730	42.0092
Canada	Dollar	1	8.9481	8.8719
Denmark	Kroner	1	1.5146	1.4989
Egypt	Pound	1	15.1732	15.0178
France	Franc	1	1.7652	1.7241
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	1.5884	1.5749
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	1.1230	1.0933
Iran	Rial	100	15.5730	15.4330
Italy	Lira	100	0.7930	0.7811
Japan	Yen	100	7.1187	7.0502
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.7713	0.7601
Kuwait	Dinar	1	43.1507	42.0181
Malaysia	Dollar	1	4.8756	4.8195
Mauritius	Rupee	1	0.9110	0.9032
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.6050	0.5931
Netherlands	Guilder	1	4.9521	4.9032
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7692	0.7517
Singapore	Dollar	1	5.6780	5.6268
Spain	Peseta	100	0.0860	0.0800
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4491	0.4480
Sweden	Kroner	1	1.7398	1.7212
Switzerland	Franc	1	6.6745	6.6103
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.6993	0.6817
Thailand	Baht	100	47.7313	47.6010
UK	Pound	1	18.7687	18.6445
USA	Dollar	1	12.3525	12.2475
UAE	Dirham	1	3.3723	3.3517
USSR	Rouble	1	17.1832	17.1517
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	5.6947	5.5555

These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo Limited, New Delhi and quoted between the banks on 21.4.86.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by PRASHANT PANJIAR



Phoolan with her paramour Man Singh: bone of contention

MADHYA PRADESH

Dacoits' Dilemma

THERE is new tension in Gwalior Central Jail where a large number of dacoits, including Phoolan Devi and Malkhan Singh, have been lodged after their surrender. Phoolan's fate has become a major bone of contention amongst the rest of the dacoits as well as between the Uttar Pradesh and Madhya Pradesh Governments. With Phoolan's last case in Madhya Pradesh over, she cannot evade the Uttar Pradesh Government for much longer. Assistant Editor AJAY KUMAR was allowed into the special jail to talk to the dacoits and gauge their new mood of uncertainty. His report:

THE COUNT-DOWN has started for Phoolan Devi, the most famous dacoit in Gwalior Central jail. She had surrendered a little over three years ago to the Madhya Pradesh police in the hope that she would escape the long arm of the Uttar Pradesh Government, which has 68 cases lodged against her. The courts in Uttar Pradesh have been repeatedly sending warrants for her, but so far the Gwalior jail authorities have been returning them on the plea that she still has cases against her in Madhya Pradesh. But with her last case disposed of two months ago, time is running out for the bandit queen.

At stake is not just Phoolan's fate, or that of the 73 other dacoits (including Malkhan Singh and his gang) housed in the same jail, but also the credibility of the Madhya Pradesh Government itself and its well-publicised policy of inducing dacoits to surrender. "There is no doubt about it," says J.P. Gupta, a leading criminal lawyer of Gwalior. "If Phoolan is sent off to Uttar Pradesh, the people of Madhya Pradesh will lose faith in the word of the Government."

One of the unwritten conditions of the surrender of Malkhan Singh's gang in June 1982—which became a precedent for the subsequent surrenders of the Phoolan Devi and Ramesh Sikarwar gangs—was a commitment by the state Government that all the cases against the dacoits would be transferred from Uttar Pradesh and Rajasthan to a special court in the Gwalior jail. That, it was hoped, would set the ball rolling for their eventual rehabilitation. But nearly four years

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridv

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Malkhan with his son, Bahoran a father's worries

ter, this hurdle is yet to be crossed.

The Uttar Pradesh Government has refused to fall in line, and its main objection is to Phoolan. The powerful Thakur lobby in the state cannot forget the Behmai massacre of February 1981 in which 22 Thakurs were killed. Not surprisingly, the state Government has refused to transfer any of the cases against the dacoits to Madhya Pradesh: not even those of Malkhan Singh, as that would set a precedent which would suit Phoolan.

With their fate hanging in the balance, the dacoits are in a state of virtual panic. More than anything, it is the uncertainty regarding their future and their inability to help their families that worries them. Members of Malkhan Singh's gang say openly that now they regret having surrendered, though Malkhan himself does not go as far. Said Bashir Khan: "It would have been better if we had been killed in the jungle." Added Munshi Lal: "Nobody is happy here."

What is more, they know that Phoolan is the cause of their predicament. Save for her paramour, Man Singh, none of the other 72 dacoits in the Gwalior Jail have any sympathy for her. Asks Malkhan angrily: "Why should so many innocent people suffer because of that one girl? If her case is not transferred for 10 years, are we going to rot here till then?"

Malkhan Singh and Phoolan Devi have long been at loggerheads. Malkhan, who had crowned himself Dasyu Samrat (dacoit king) some time before he surrendered, has never been able to reconcile himself to the fact that Phoolan is the real star of the prison. Phoolan, on her part, has never acknowledged the supremacy of Dadda, as Malkhan Singh is referred to.

Members of Malkhan's gang play chess in the special jail

When, some time ago, Phoolan managed to win over some members of Malkhan Singh's gang, the tension boiled over and a fight broke out on the premises.

Subsequently, Phoolan and Man Singh were shifted out of the special jail in which all the dacoits were housed and taken to the adjoining main jail, where Phoolan now stays with other women prisoners. Her 'banishment' is a sore point with her and she hasn't forgiven Malkhan Singh for it. Says she contemptuously: "Dadda is married to the special jail." According to a jail official, Phoolan had once said she would rest in peace only after she openly slapped Malkhan Singh with her slippers.

The police's sympathetic attitude towards Phoolan's family is another irritant. Deputy Inspector-General (DIG) Ayodhya Nath Pathak and Superintendent (SP) of Gwalior, O.P.Rathore have gone out of their way to help her family. Her brother and her sister's son have been employed as 'half-constables' in the office of the Gwalior SP. They attend office and school on alternate days, and are paid Rs 450 a month. They have also been given two houses in the police lines. The other dacoits resent it that their families have not been shown similar consideration. Said Nawab Singh of Malkhan's gang: "The police is only concerned about

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Phoolan, nothing is being done for our relatives."

Painfully conscious of her isolation and aware that her time is running out, Phoolan's plight is beginning to tell on her nerves (see box). Mortally scared of being sent off to Uttar Pradesh, she has written three letters in the last month alone to Rathore pleading with him to think of some way of keeping her in Madhya Pradesh. She flies off the handle at the slightest provocations: "Why doesn't the Government throw a bomb and kill us."

The other dacoits, mostly from Malkhan's gang, also complain about several irritants. One of the conditions of the surrender was that they would not be handcuffed when taken to court. The Madhya Pradesh police initially honoured the commitment but has been handcuffing them after Ghanshyam Mirdha gave the slip to a police party that had escorted him to his village a year ago. Says Pathak: "I am willing to trust them but the constables refuse to take the risk. There is little I can do unless I get orders from the top."

The authorities' refusal to grant parole is another sore point. Save for Malkhan Singh, who has been out on parole several times hardly anyone else has been allowed out. The police have been using Mirdha's escape as a reason to deny parole. Says a bitter Bashir Khan, a member of Malkhan Singh's gang: "We showed trust in the Government when we surrendered but they don't have faith in us." For the dacoits, the Madhya Pradesh Government's intransigence on these two issues has become a symbol of its insensitivity. Says Malkhan Singh, who has refused to be handcuffed: "If they stopped handcuffing us, we would start trusting them again."

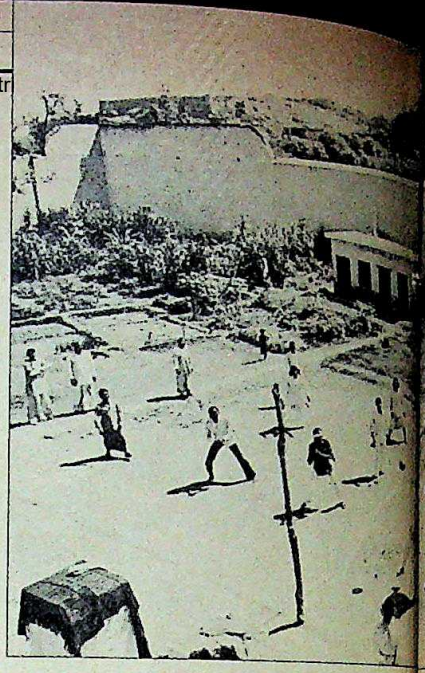
Malkhan's greatest worry these days is schooling for his eight-year-old son, Bahoran. A doting father who even kept his son with him for a brief period while in jail, he says with feeling: "I don't mind if they keep me in jail for a year more than is my due but something should be done for Bahoran." The state Government agreed two years ago to Malkhan's request that the state should arrange his admission in some residential school and pay for his schooling, and a sum of Rs 400 per month was sanctioned.

Malkhan is keen on getting Bahoran away from Gwalior, where he now stays with Malkhan's second wife. Tutored at home, the sprightly and well-behaved Bahoran is not allowed out to play and does not go anywhere without an armed escort. Malkhan's heart is set on admitting him to the Central School at Pachmarhi. But when the Madhya Pradesh Government approached the school authorities, they were told that Pachmarhi admits students only when they are 11 years. Rathore, who has been personally following up on the matter, now admits he is stuck. But, says Malkhan: "These are only excuses. Is this such a big problem that the Government cannot solve it if it wants to?"

THE CONDITIONS on which the dacoits had surrendered were nothing new. They were the same as in 1972, when 508 dacoits, including the gangs of Madho Singh and Mohar Singh, had surrendered at the behest of Jayaprakash Narayan. Then, the cases had been completed within a year-and-a-half and by 1980 the last of the dacoits had left the open jail in Mungaoli to live with their families.

The involvement of JP's band of followers, led by Tehsildar Singh, son of the legendary Man Singh, and of socially conscious lawyers like Gupta, who had appeared free of cost for the dacoits, had gone a long way in smoothening the whole process of rehabilitation. This time around, however, there is no dedicated group following up on the cases on the spot. Tehsildar Singh was not even involved in the main surrenders and Gupta's offer of appearing free of cost again has, surprisingly, not been taken up. Says Tehsildar Singh: "There was a sense of a mission then. This time, the mercenaries have taken over."

Even the proceedings of the special



Dacoits playing volleyball in the jail compound: uncertain fate

PHOOLAN DEVI

"I am fed up of waiting"

PHOOLAN DEVI, 23, is the star undertrial in the Gwalior Central Jail and she knows it. And like all stars, she throws tantrums. On the day that INDIA TODAY met her last month, she was very upset that a police DIG had not called on her though he had spent over an hour with Malkhan Singh and his gang. Initially, she even refused to be photographed, relenting only when she was alternatively cajoled and scolded by the jail authorities.

But she was bitterly defiant right through the interview with Assistant Editor AJAY KUMAR. Clearly irritated by Phoolan's belligerent mood, her paramour Man Singh, who had come along for the interview, threatened to walk out. But Phoolan would not relent, even after she was told that her angry words could damn her. Excerpts:

Q: Now that all your cases in Madhya Pradesh have been concluded, are you afraid that you will have to go to the courts in Uttar Pradesh?

A. No, why should I have any fear? If I have done anything, I will have to face the consequences. I am just fed up of waiting, of eating at the Government's expense. I want to go to Uttar Pradesh so I can pay for my deeds.

Q. Will you ever plead guilty to the Behmai massacre?

A. No, never. I didn't do anything personally except show my face. So I suppose I will have to face the consequences.

Q. Do you now regret having surrendered?

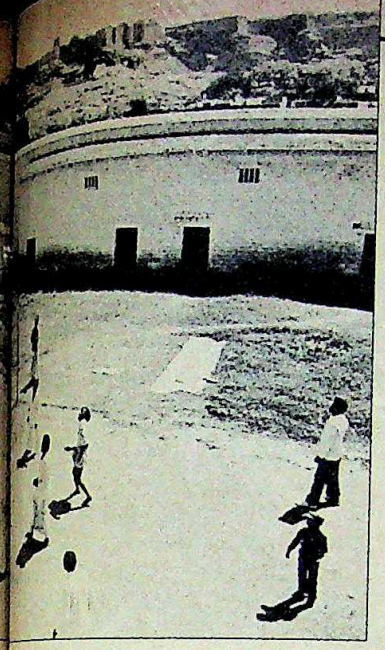
A. Yes, and I am not the only one. Ghanshyam Mirdha escaped because nothing was being done. It's better to die in the jungle than to die a slow death here, saying 'yes sir, yes sir' all the time.

Q. Does this mean that you are not happy in jail?

A. No, I am very happy here. I have no regrets. I have even grown fatter.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



court in the Gwalior jail, currently being presided over by Sessions judge Chandrika Prasad, have followed an odd sequence. The court has been trying the cases of Malkhan Singh and others, and though several cases of kidnapping and murder have come up not a single conviction has been handed down on a major charge. In contrast, in 1972, the dacoits had been persuaded to plead guilty to a major charge. Several had received life sentences and Mohar Singh was sentenced to death—this was later commuted to life imprisonment by the President.

THIS time around, since the whole scheme has come unstuck, nobody has pleaded guilty and all witnesses for the state have turned hostile. Says Gupta's associate Ram Babu Tiwari, who has appeared for the dacoits: "We hardly have to do anything. We haven't had to cross-examine a single witness in the cases against Malkhan Singh." Consequently, the dacoits have been getting acquitted in one case after another. This can only strengthen the Uttar Pradesh Government's resolve not to transfer the cases. Says Gupta: "If this goes on then the Uttar Pradesh Government can say with some justification that what is happening in the special court is a farce."

Unfortunately for the dacoits, they have also become victims of crossed political wires. The surrenders had been negotiated by Arjun Singh when he was the chief minister. Flushed with the favourable publicity of the Malkhan Singh surrender, he could not resist roping in Phoolan also, not realising the problems her surrender would pose. But before he could untangle the knot, he was sent off to Punjab, leaving the vexatious problem in the hands of Motilal Vora, who has neither Singh's personal commitment nor his political stature to influence the Uttar Pradesh Government.

Though Vora has repeatedly told the dacoits and their emissaries that he is doing what he can, relations between him and Singh have become strained and it would be unrealistic to expect him to go out of his way to honour a commitment given by Singh. The dacoits know this. Said Malkhan with a wry smile: "The Government has put us in the jail and, with peace restored, forgotten us."

Even the mediation of the Union Home Ministry has been to no avail. Uttar Pradesh officials once even failed to turn up for meetings in Delhi while a high-level delegation of the Madhya Pradesh Government waited in vain for them to show up.

Understandably, then, there is a feeling of helplessness among the handful of officials in Gwalior, as well as among concerned citizens like Gupta, who empathise with the plight of the surrendered dacoits. Whether it be Gwalior Commissioner Ajay Shankar or Collector Shivraj Singh, or the two DIG's A.N. Pathak and D.C. Jhugran, or Gwalior SP O.P. Rathore, or even jail Superintendent Prem Srivastava, they are all old Chambal hands. They recognise that this problem needs to be tackled immediately before the situation gets out of hand. But there is little they can do since only an intervention at the highest political level can untangle the knot. The solution lies with the prime minister, the only person who can make the Uttar Pradesh Government relent at a time when it is in clear sight of its quarry.

But there is no compelling hurry for Rajiv to act. In the past, dacoit gangs used to invariably crop up within a few years to replace gangs that had surrendered. With the face of the Chambal area transforming rapidly—thanks largely to the Chambal Command Area Project which is changing Chambal into the granary of Madhya Pradesh—and the police not relaxing their vigil, it is unlikely that the menace of dacoity will ever stage a decisive return to the area.

Today, in the six districts of Bhind, Morena, Gwalior, Guna, Shivpuri and Datia, which are normally dacoit-infested, there isn't a single dacoit gang of any strength. Says Jhugran: "Perhaps the one thing that can force the issue (of the transfer of cases) is a resurgence of the dacoity problem." But since that is unlikely to happen, the dacoits are doomed to a prolonged period of uncertainty.

Q. What have you done personally to see that the Madhya Pradesh Government honours its commitment to get the cases from Uttar Pradesh transferred to a special court?

A. I have done all I could. I even sent another to Punjab to see Arjun Singh. I had the maximum faith in him but now I have lost faith in everybody.

Q. Even in Rajiv Gandhi?

A. No, not in him. He is above Arjun Singh so I have expectations from him.

Q. What should the Madhya Pradesh Government do to make you happy?

A. (Pauses, and then says with an impish smile): I would like the Madhya Pradesh Government to set us free.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Voltas announces a new series of packaged air conditioning units.

With the world's most rugged and reliable semi-hermetic compressor, Carrier 06D.

The new packaged units from Voltas offer you the perfect air conditioning system for offices, showrooms, restaurants, auditoria, computer rooms, hospital wings and other medium sized areas.

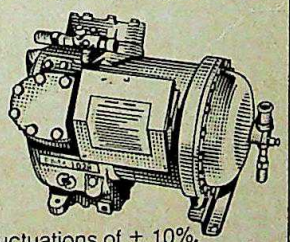
Available in water-cooled and air-cooled versions with nominal capacities ranging from 5.4 to 15 tons, the units are designed to cool, dehumidify, filter and circulate the air in one compact and attractive package.

The rugged 06D compressor is acknowledged the world over for its superior design and outstanding performance. What's more, since the compressor is semi-hermetic, it can be serviced at site to ensure negligible down-time.

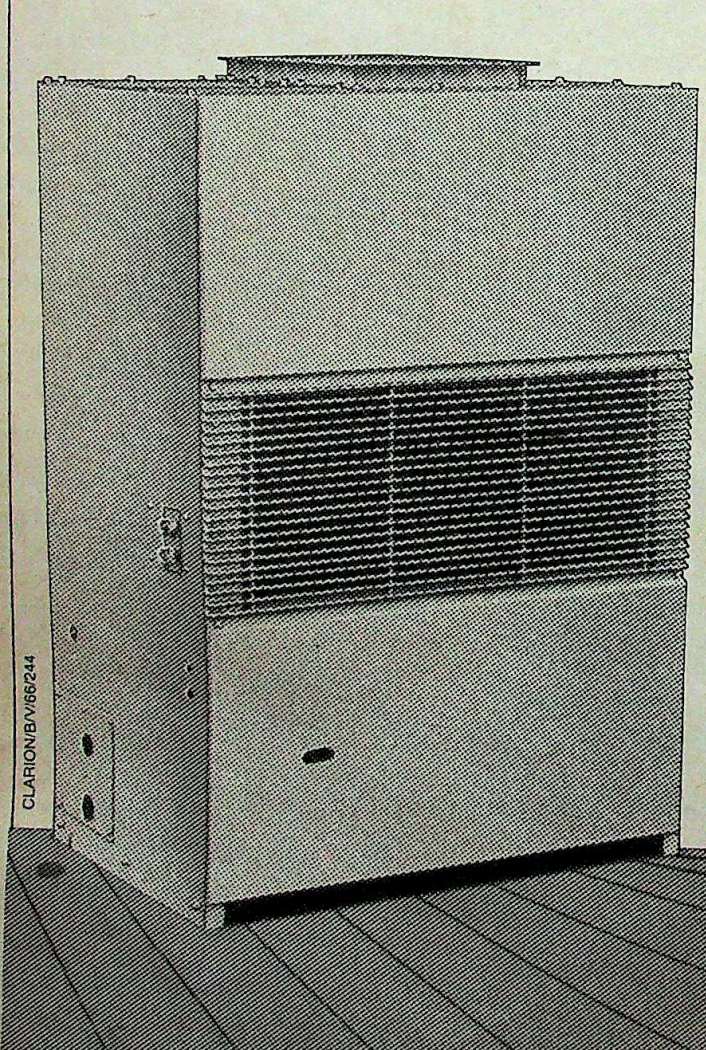
No wonder only Voltas offers comprehensive maintenance service schemes for more than 15 years!

Check out these advanced features which guarantee years of efficient trouble-free service:

- Comprehensive protection for the compressor with a dual pressurestat, motor winding thermostat and a special electronic device to prevent single-phasing and overloading.
- Compressor wear minimised by the positive pressure lubrication provided with an automatically reversible oil pump and a built-in pressure regulator.



- Designed for voltage fluctuations of ± 10%.
- Electrically operated unloader in the larger models reduces energy consumption at part load.
- High heat transfer efficiency with large face-area cooling coil having corrugated and collared fins mechanically bonded to staggered tubes.
- All major components manufactured in-house by Voltas.
- Matchless after-sales service from nine strategically located Voltas branches throughout India.



CLARION/B/V/66/244

Carrier Manufactured under licence from Carrier Corporation, U.S.A.

VOLTAS LIMITED
Air Conditioning & Refrigeration Business Group
BOMBAY, NEW DELHI, CALCUTTA, MADRAS, BANGALORE
AHMEDABAD, SECUNDERABAD, JAMSHEDPUR & COCHIN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

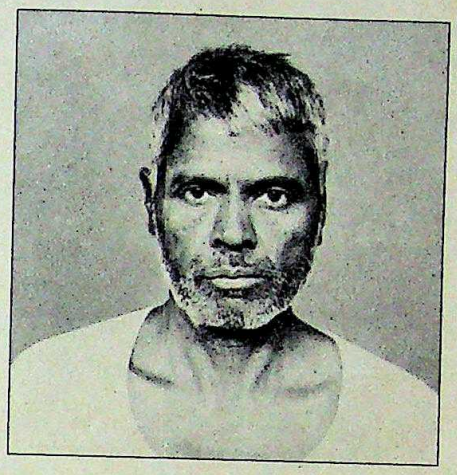
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KARNATAKA

The Brute of Bellary

IT IS not often that a man is arrested for one murder and then confesses to having committed 44. But that startling development is exactly what took place in Hospet in the Bellary district of Karnataka last fortnight, when police arrested the lean and bearded Waddar Sunkappa, 56, for allegedly killing a woman in January this year. But when they interrogated him, they were dumbfounded by his macabre revelations.

He reeled out the names of 44 jogithis" (nomadic women priests in Karnataka) whom, he said, he had killed over the last decade usually by smashing their heads with stones. Police in six districts—Belgaum, Dharwar, Raichur, Bellary, Chitradurga and Bijapur—where he said he had killed the women, were galvanised into leafing through musty files of unsolved murders to reopen investigations and get the evidence necessary to support his confessions in court. In the last fortnight, police in Bellary and Dharwar districts had traced four murders to Sunkappa, and with the latter's willing cooperation were continuing efforts to work out the others.



Sunkappa told the interrogating officers that he had nothing against jogithis and he killed them solely because they are nomads with no dependents. And even if they did, by the time he finished disfiguring his victim's face, not even the closest relation would be able to make a proper identification. The 'success' which crowned his efforts was made amply clear by the enormous difficulty the police had in pinning a murder rap against him.

Earlier, he had been charged with the murder of four jogithis—one in 1974, two in 1975, and another in 1981—all in Raichur district. But the district court could only sentence him to two years of rigorous imprisonment in the 1981 case, and had to acquit him for lack of evidence in the other cases. Interestingly enough, Sunkappa's criminal dossier at the Hospet rural police station goes back to 1946 when, as a 16-year-old, he broke into a house in the town and stole some valuables. He has been arrested an incredible seven times earlier, and has served 19 prison sentences that add up to some 12 years.

Sunkappa (top); latest victim Mudevva (above); and Hosur: macabre revelations

The jogithis' nomadic life-style apart, what has made the job of the police even more difficult is tracing the remains of the victims. Sunkappa claims to have thrown quite a few bodies into the Tungabhadra canal. Not surprisingly, the police found nothing at the spots where Sunkappa said he had struck, and there were no local records of any jogithis missing.

But at Saundatti in Belgaum district, which the police visited along with Sunkappa, the local people recognised him and said a woman seen with him a few years ago was missing. But no one knew her name and again there was no body. Said Raichur district's Police Superintendent K. Srinivas: "Even if we know everything, the only evidence we can get is the things stolen from the victims and recovered from those who bought them. And that is hardly any evidence for a conviction."

Sunkappa's modus operandi, as he revealed during his interrogation, combined simplicity with ruthlessness and a total disregard for human life. The motive was always money—an arrack addict, he was perennially running short of money that could pay for his drinking. He would go to a temple early in the morning on a full moon day and sit there till a jogithi approached him, begging for alms. He would give her a rupee, chat with her and make her feel that he was "one among them". He would then tell her that he had a vow to fulfil and needed a woman priest's help. Would she accompany him to his village "somewhere neary"? The plea was sweetened by the promise of a new sari and, in most cases, the woman agreed.

Some time in the evening, he would take her to a deserted spot on the outskirts of the town, avoiding busy roads, and would excuse himself to answer nature's call. Then, armed with the biggest stone available, he would sneak up behind and repeatedly hit her on the head till she was dead. He would then remove her ear-rings and chains, which all jogithis wear, and whatever money she had on her. Said Gadag Circle Inspector V.K. Hittalkeri: "He is really a cruel fellow. I have been in the police force for 20 years. I have never seen such a man."

What prompted a full-blown police investigation was a series of four murders allegedly committed in a span of less than three months. The saga began on December 1, last year, when police Sub-Inspector A.R. Mukashi discovered the body of a 50-year-old jogithi on the outskirts of Gadag in Raichur district. On January 18, this year, beat constable K. Bhimappa came upon the body of another middle-aged jogithi in the famous Hampi ruins in Bellary district. The Hampi police, not surprisingly, could not identify the victim. Nine days later, a passer-by informed the police at Hospet that he had seen the body of a dead woman, with her head smashed, in a thicket outside the town.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

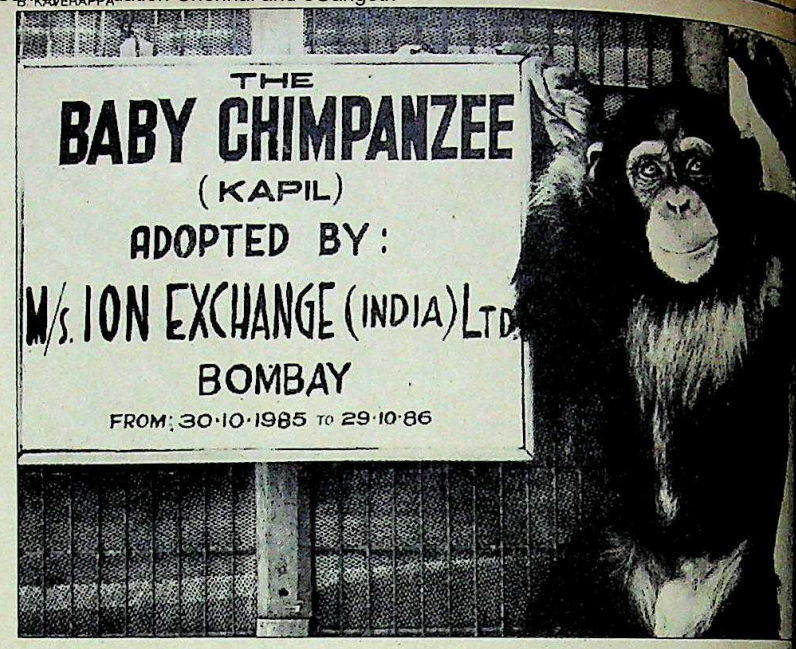
Twenty days later, on February 17, the Hubli railway police found the body of another jogithi under a railway overbridge. In all these cases, the respective police stations, after exhaustively going through the records for any pattern, came to suspect Sunkappa. A team led by Deputy Superintendent of Police Gopal B. Hosur, printed a few copies of Sunkappa's photograph and those of his victims and showed it around to hundreds of people. Patient inquiries revealed that Sunkappa often visited a 35-year-old woman called Hupigamma who lived nearby. She was kept under 24-hour surveillance and within a week Sunkappa walked into her hut to be taken into custody.

Questioned on the Hospet murder, Sunkappa told the police he had nothing to do with it. Sustained interrogation, however, paid off and Sunkappa not only confessed to the Hospet murder but also to those of Neelavva at Hubli, Umanavva at Gadag and Basavva at Hampi. And he told the shocked interrogators that he had lived by killing jogithis and had murdered 44 of them so far. Said a shaken Hosur: "We did not know whom we had caught. His disclosures suddenly made him a very important catch."

Sunkappa, son of a sheep trader, grew up with crime. Inquiries by INDIA TODAY at his native village Hombala, some 150 km from Hospet, revealed that he had taken to crime at the age of 10. The eldest of three brothers, he was often thrashed by his father for stealing from neighbours. Recalled G.S. Yelamali, 58, a neighbour of Sunkappa's family: "He was a bad boy from the beginning and getting worse day by day." While most villagers are upset by the notoriety brought to the village by Sunkappa, his youngest brother Jengirappa, who took up the family profession of sheep trading, refused to talk about his brother, dismissing him as a "different person". Just how different is the question the Karnataka police are now trying to establish.

—SRINIVASA PRASAD in Hospet



Kapil posing for the camera: novel scheme

MYSORE ZOO

Adoption Aid

KAPIL is a precocious but popular two-and-a-half year old chimpanzee in the sprawling Mysore Zoo. A year younger but almost as popular is Priyadarshini, a white tiger cub. Kapil's parents, Max and Anjali, keep a low profile as do Priyadarshini's parents, Arun and Anita. But the chimp and the tiger cub also have adopted parents, and rather unique ones at that—Ion Exchange Ltd and Vikrant Tyres, two local companies.

The Mysore Zoo is the only one in India to have introduced the adopt-an-animal scheme. The zoo took up the novel idea, common in America and Europe but unknown in this country, for the same reasons as its foreign counterparts—to beef up its income by collecting adoption fees and, more important, to develop affection for animals. Said a delighted zoo Curator, C.D. Krishna Gowda: "It's a two-pronged effort to improve the zoo's upkeep while promoting public awareness of wildlife."

Under the scheme, those who want to become "zoo parents" can take their pick from among the birds and animals in captivity and pay for the animal's feed for a year. That can range from Rs 180 for a tortoise to Rs 25,000 for an elephant. The prices of some other animals: Rs 7,000 for an adult tiger, lion or rhino, Rs 5,000 for a panther or a bear, Rs 2,500 for a jungle cat, deer or crowned pigeon. And takers for the king cob pay only Rs 2,500—which works out a beggarly Rs 208 a month. All mon received through such fees is spent improving the surroundings of t animals.

The zoo officials have, howev made it clear that participation in t animal adoption scheme does not stow any special rights on the "paren over their offspring. The animals rema the responsibility of the zoo and its st look to their upkeep. But "parents" get something in return—a certificat adoption, a glossy photograph of th "child", a year's free pass to visit the and free subscription to the zoo ma zines. Above all, their names are paint in bold letters outside their adop animals' cages.

The campaign was really the bra child of American naturalist S Walker who convinced C. Muniswa then chairman of the Zoo Authorit Karnataka, to introduce the sche The latter promptly convened a mee of industrialists and the leading ligh Mysore and outlined his plan. The sponse was immediate—chartered countant A.K. Ranganathan han over a cheque for Rs 180 and adopt tortoise, and others followed. So far zoo has acquired 13 such 'parents' the zoo authorities are confident tha success will entice other zoos in country to ape their pioneering ch

—SRINIVASA PRA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GCEL

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A working still from Basu Chatterjee's popular TV serial RAJANI featuring Priya Tendulkar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri
Scanned by CamScanner
Digitized by eGangotri
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Today, a new breed of good film makers aren't saying it on film.

Gone are the days when many a young film maker depended on the film industry for recognition. And on the intricate 35 mm film format for expression.

Gone are the days too when Doordarshan depended on the film industry for entertainment, and you sought yours in movie halls.

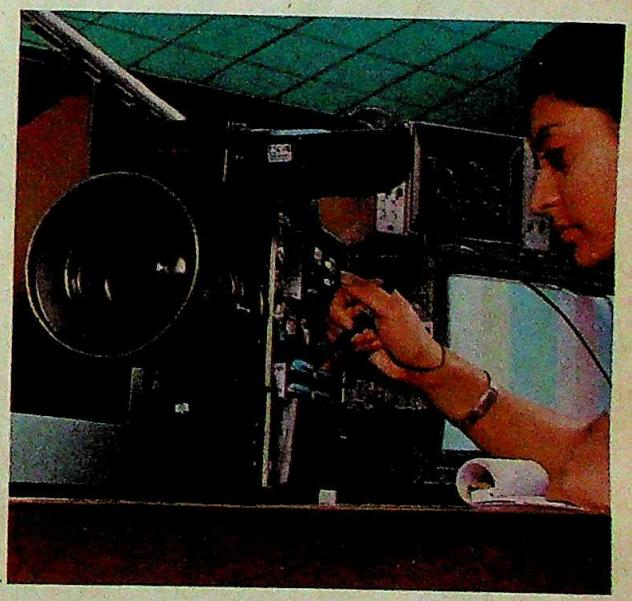
Today, the format is the simple video tape and entertainment has come home. With it, new stars. TV stars. And new film makers. Telefilm makers. Entertaining you with sitcoms, informing you with documentaries and persuading you to spend more time at home.

GCEL's Pro Video System

And helping the new breed of telefilm makers is GCEL. With a good, low-cost Professional Video System package. A package that includes ¾" VCR & Portable U-Matic, Automatic Editing Control, 3 Tube Colour Video Camera, Camera Control Unit and Digital Time Base Corrector. Plus, a truly professional 1" VTR on the advanced B-Format. All built good. With better technology.

The Better Technology of GCEL

At Gujarat Communications and Electronics Ltd., our objectives are clear. And simple. Since 1975. That India's future is hi-tech. And every Indian should be part of it. Wherever he or she is in India. So at GCEL, we develop technology that's better. And relevant. To help every Indian live a little better.



GCEL

Gujarat Communications & Electronics Ltd.
Regd. Office: Third Floor, Anurag Commercial Centre, Race Course Road, Baroda 390 005.

Live better. The better technology is here.

Mudra:A:GCEL:3003 R

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Non-stop to Europe.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Only Lufthansa can bring you 4 weekly flights from Delhi. And 4 weekly flights from Bombay. All bound for Frankfurt. All non-stop and all with arrival times designed to bring you the most convenient connections to Europe and North America.

Lufthansa
German Airlines

Book your flight through an appointed IATA agent.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDO-US RELATIONS

The Reaganeagle Factor

INDIA'S 10-month-old love affair with the United States came under severe strain when the Reaganeagle fell like a thunderbolt on Gaddafi's Libya on the night of April 14. The powerful American air strike was a wrong act wrongly timed, for it came just on the eve of the meeting of the foreign ministers or their deputies of 101 non-aligned countries in New Delhi to prepare for the next NAM summit in Harare, Zimbabwe, in September. The US was condemned in the strongest terms at the New Delhi meeting, and, when the issue came up at the Security Council, was censured even by Thailand, its trusted ally in Southeast Asia.

True to his hawkish colours, Reagan outwardly shrugged off the anger and disgust of three-fourths of the world community, and kept the eagle's lethal claws bared to the gaze of the planet. However, the NAM censure, of which more will be heard at the UN and elsewhere, will not be without an impact. For it was a "proportionate response" to the doctrine of "proportionate response" designed by the vice-admiral who is now Reagan's national security adviser, a doctrine that is said to have magically closed the debate between Caspar Weinburger and George Shultz over the use of force in third world situations.

The air strike on Libya resurrected the sharp divide between India and the United States over Washington's global assertion of military power. For 10 months, Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi had treated the Reagan Administration to a tasty menu of understatements on differences and overstatements on new-blossoming amities. But the Libyan attacks broke the budding romance. Rajiv Gandhi picked up the sharpest words from his diplomatic vocabulary in the statement he made in the Lok Sabha on April 16 and in his inaugural address to the Delhi NAM: The US action was transgression of Libya's integrity and sovereignty, a violation of international law. The prime minister condemned all kinds of terrorism, asked all nations to unite together to combat this growing peril, but he left no doubt in anyone's mind that he regarded the American attacks on Libya as nothing short of state terrorism.

If the prime minister maintained some of his fortified coolness of language, the Indian External Affairs Minister, Bali Ram Bhagat, broke all barriers of reticence. The American strike was a "clear act of aggression" he declared in the Lok Sabha, and it placed "regional security and international peace in grave jeopardy". With Bhagat leading it, a NAM delegation went to Abu Dhabi and Tripoli, where it conveyed sympathy and support, and to New York and the UN Secretary-General, where it asked for a special session of the Security Council for another round of discussion on the US attacks.

To be sure, in responding with anger and indignation to the American act of war, India was, in a large part, fulfilling its role as NAM's retiring chairperson. But the prime minister's and the external affairs minister's remarks in Parliament and the resolutions adopted unanimously by both houses, are unmistakable articulations of India's own strong feelings. For these sentiments of India and the other non-aligned countries, the Reagan Administration will probably have little time. It draws comfort from the fact that the NAM countries are adequately divided among themselves, most of them are currently licking their economic wounds, and a great many of them are in any case too dependent on the US to open more than their mouths in anger.

That this would be a myopic vision may not worry a president whose term will end in two years. The measure of the Third World anger could be seen in Bangkok even more clearly than in New Delhi. The Thai language newspaper Matichon took a swipe at Reagan's remark that Gaddafi was "the mad dog of the Middle East". "The air strikes were not different from an act of a mad dog," it hit back in an editorial on April 16. It likened the American action to "an act of hooliganism".

Colonel Mo'ammar Gaddafi is no good Samaritan of world (or even Arab) politics. His brand of radicalism is often more of an embarrassment than an asset even to his friends and allies. However, Libya occupies a strategic piece of real estate in Arab North Afirca, and is not without clout among the volatile Arab masses. Now Reagan has made him a hero, a man who can stand up to the Eagle, much as the tripartite invasion of Suez in 1956 which made Gamal Abdel Nasser the hero of Arab nationalism.

India's strong criticism of the US attack on Libya is not likely to hurt the bilateral relationship which has improved remarkably in the last one year. Neither the Reagan Administration nor the American media have taken public note of Indian invectives. Foreign office sources say that India has no wish to let Libya muddy the currently calm waters of bilateral Indo-US relations. However, they also point out that the relationship has probably peaked. Its threshold cannot rise much higher. India will not buy American weapons. The US will not sell to India the sophisticated military technologies that Indian eyes are fixed upon, nor change its strategic thrusts in south and south west Asia.

Something else also has happened. The prime minister was under strong pressure to retreat on three flanks of his New Politics. First, he was being persuaded to stick as much as possible to the foreign policy of Indira Gandhi. Secondly, he was under pressure to go slow on his domestic policy of reconciliation and accommodation with regional political forces. Thirdly, he was being urged to fall back on self-reliance. After some four months of inner-party and inner-government struggles, the prime minister appears to have partially conceded some ground on the first and the third, but regained his initiative on the second.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

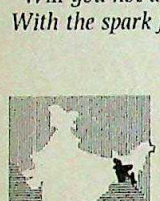
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BANGLADESH

Ershad's Gamble

ON THE eve of the Bangladesh elections, with one major opposition group standing for election and the other staging a boycott, the straight split in the Opposition ranks was proving crucial for President Ershad who, meanwhile, was busy chalking up an impressive pre-election score. Senior Correspondent INDRANIL BANERJIE was in Dhaka last fortnight assessing the situation. His report:

"Will you not awake to light the lamp
With the spark from the thunder".
General H.M. Ershad



LAST fortnight, as the count-down began to the third parliamentary elections fixed for May 7 by President Ershad, Bangladesh split into two opposing camps: one determined to go to the hustings and the other equally determined to stay away. Most enthusiastic about the elections are of course, General Ershad, his new party, the Jatiya Dal (JD), and the supporters of his regime. Less enthusiastic but reluctantly clubbed in is the country's biggest and best-organised opposition group, the eight-party Awami League alliance led by Sheikh Hasina Wajed, daughter of assassinated President Mujibur Rahman.

The other major opposition group, including the seven-party Bangladesh Nationalist Party (BNP) alliance and numerous other parties like the powerful Bangladesh Krishak Sramik Awami League (BKSHAL) formed in 1975 by Mujibur Rahman which are all opposing the polls, consider both Ershad's and the Awami League's claims to be wholly spurious. Begum Khaleda Zia, widow of assassinated President Zia-ur Rahman and leader of the BNP alliance, has repeatedly threatened to disrupt the polls and feels there is no point contesting with martial law still in force, the constitution suspended and fundamental rights curbed. "The election is a blueprint to legalise the illegal military Government," says she. At well-attended public meetings throughout the country, she has been hinting that the Awami League has betrayed the people by falling in line with Ershad's conspiracy to legitimise his rule.

With the Opposition in Bangladesh split, the tepid electoral mood suggests that it will be Ershad who will light the victory lamp.

Begum Zia's stance has struck a responsive chord among large sections of Ershad at rally: chalking up points

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

...Bangladeshi people, sceptical as they have become after 15 years of political double-think, violent coups and mutinies, as well as the velvet promises of iron-handed dictators. Bangladesh's highly militant and vocal student community, which has proved to be the Ershad regime's most implacable foe since the infamous police firing in February 1983 when at least 27 students were massacred, has, inspired by Begum Zia, exploded into action. Pro-Awami League students were attacked, pitched battles were fought with the police and from the beginning of April, bombs and crackers started shattering the peace.

Even the parties participating in the polls were, by last fortnight, beginning to voice their anxiety about the Government's partisanship. Though it is well known that the leader of the Jatiya Party is Ershad, the president is supposed to have no official connection with the party. BNP leaders allege that not only is the president's portrait being used on all JD posters but that even the posters are being printed at the government press at government cost. Moreover, government telephone and transport facilities are being used by JD candidates and Ershad is openly campaigning for his party.

These developments are proving embarrassing to the Awami League, since it had earlier pledged not to participate in the elections till the Government conceded its charter of demands: immediate end to martial law, restoration of fundamental rights and the establishment of a democratic atmosphere to enable resumption of political activities, election of a sovereign parliament to decide all policy issues before presidential elections, release of political prisoners and an inquiry into the February 1983 massacre.

On March 21 this year, a clearly annoyed Ershad went on television to declare that this was the "last chance" for the opposition parties, and hinted that sterner measures would be imposed if they failed to respond.

Bangladesh's militant students have proved to be Ershad's most implacable foe since the police firing on students in February '83.

The widespread feeling that the Awami League has been cowed down by this threat is understandable considering that the decision to contest was announced by Sheikh Hasina the day after Ershad's TV broadcast. Five, albeit minor, parties broke with the Awami League alliance, leaving eight parties (after the merger of a few) in the alliance. For a week, the BNP alliance remained undecided, but ultimately decided to stay out and condemn the Awami League while the Government graciously acceded to the Awami League's request to postpone the election date from April 26 to May 7.

"It's simply not true that we betrayed our pledge," declared Hasina, maintaining that, "what most people are unaware of is that even the BNP had intially agreed to contest the elections." The BNP, however, maintains that the Awami League's decision was taken unilaterally.

From then on, the Opposition's campaign degenerated into a slanging match between Begum Zia and Sheikh Hasina. More important is the undoubted fact that the BNP has been seriously emasculated by large-scale defections of its senior leaders to Ershad's JD (see interview). Defections from the Awami League have been negli-

Police vs students: explosive element

LUFTAR RAHMAN BINU

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

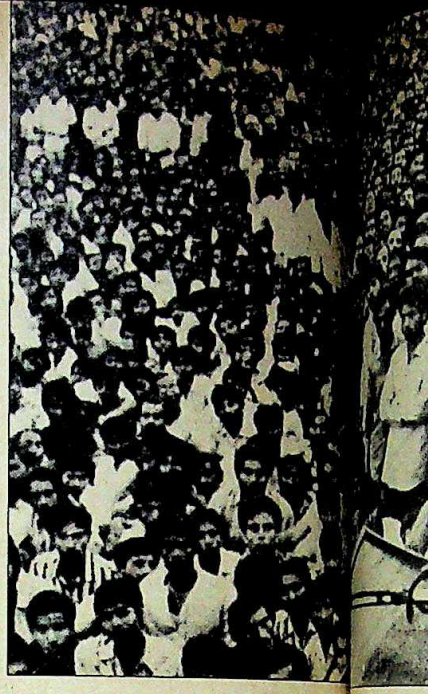
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

gible, though a couple of heavyweights like Vice-President Korabn Ali and Mizanur Rahman Choudhury, former information minister, have crossed over.

Ershad, meanwhile, has been steadily chalking up points, his daily trips to far corners of the country being televised along with his message: "Whatever promises I have given to the people, I have so far been able to keep all, except I have not been able to give you a democratic government. But on May 7, inshallah, I will be able to give my final gift to you all."

Ershad, unlike Pakistan President Zia-ul-Haq, shrewdly kept away the mullahs from the Government and steered clear of fundamentalist forces. His progressive drug policy—now a model for third world countries—the setting up of "family courts" where a married woman can sue her husband on matrimonial and divorce matters for just 25 takas (against the normal 500 taka fee), and the decision to involve women in policing and other jobs have won him considerable support among the basically liberal Bangladeshi peasantry. And the country's small but influential business community was, acoording to Dhaka Chamber of Commerce President Mahbubur Rahman, "won over by President Ershad's decision to denationalise 35 jute mills, 33 textile mills and two banks which had belonged to Bangladeshis before Sheikh Mujibur Rahman socialised the country".

LUTAR RAHMAN BINU



Sheikh Hasina (left) and Begum Zia: debilitating duel

But even President Ershad cannot deny that many basic problems remain.

GENERAL ERSHAD

"Martial law will go"

"A NEW Bangladesh shall we build, this solemn vow we take anew" wrote General Ershad, Bangladesh strongman, in a recent poem. And he says it is in fulfilling this vow that he decided to take the country to the polls—with himself at the helm of the Jatiya Dal, which boasts that it will secure a two-third's majority in Parliament.

Through four years as Bangladesh's dictator, Ershad has miraculously been free of any coup attempts, and the country's vociferous opposition has so far been able to do little other than force a postponing of the elections, first promised last year. This Ershad attributes to "hard work" and the almightly Allah. "I don't believe we can ever change what is destined," Ershad explained during an interview in Dhaka last fortnight with INDIA TODAY Senior Correspondent INDRANIL BANERJIE. Excerpts:

Q. Why did you decide to call elections now?

A. I had pledged that I would restore democracy in the country, and for the last two years I have been trying to call elections. But the opposition parties were refusing to participate. This time I decided to go it alone even if no other party came forward. It was wise of the Awami League to agree to the polls.

Q. Why were the opposition parties refusing to participate?

A. They thought they would be able to create a mass uprising. But they could not muster people. They had no cause and our credit balance was better.

Q. Why does the* BNP *continue to oppose the elections?

A. The BNP does not exist as a party. If they had decided to participate, they would not have been able to put up more than 30 or 40 candidates since most BNP leaders have joined our party. I think Hasina (Awami League) herself mentioned that 178 former BNP MP's have joined the Jatiya Dal.

Q. But the* BNP alleges that you are not allowing many middle-level BNP *leaders to contest the polls?

A. Most of the BNP ministers had been convicted by the BNP government itself on corruption charges. Now the BNP wants them to contest but they are debarred by the election rules which impose a five-year ban following their conviction.

Q. Do you expect free and fair elections under martial law?

A. The Opposition are the rigging experts and the whole country knows it. How can the Government rig the polls? There are over 30 parties taking part and their representatives will be present at every polling booth. How is it possible to rig? One day or the other, people will come to know whether the election results are true or not. Besides I don't want to remain president in a country where the people don't have faith in me.

Q. What will be the use of a Parliament and what will be its relationship with you since you will remain the President?

A. With the completion of the parliamentary elections, the suspended Constitution will be revived and martial

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LUFTAR RAHMAN BINU

cent during 1973-78 to 3.8 per cent in 1980-85. And a growing resource gap has been plugged by foreign aid—a record $1.85 billion are due in 1986-87.

"The Awami League had a good chance of winning but without the BNP and Khaleda Zia it is impossible now," feels Khalilur Rahman of Dhaka's leading English daily, The Bangladesh Observer, echoing a general sentiment. But to remain with the BNP would have meant boycotting the elections, which the Awami League could hardly afford. Says Hasina: "We know elections cannot ensure removal of a military dictatorship, but neither can continuous agitations; and since we do not have guns we can only try with the ballot-box, knowing our movement will ultimately succeed."

With the Opposition split, confused and already quite despondent, the election mood prevailing in the country is understandably quite tepid. That seems to suggest as an almost foregone conclusion that it will only be General Ershad who will light the victory lamp. But it is equally certain that there will be no spark from the thunder.

enerating discontent against the mili- ry rulers. The Dhaka Chamber had, rlier this year, drawn his attention to e fact that the "declining purchasing wer of the vast majority of the pulation", unabated smuggling, undue pressure on small trade by taxation teams in the name of tax surveying, power famine and massive hikes in power tariffs were "wreaking havoc" on the economy. Annual economic growth rates have also been declining from an average of 6.1 per w will go. Parliament as a legislative dy will be sovereign and my relation- p with it will be determined by the ovisions in the Constitution. Nothing re, nothing less.

---

Q. Have fundamental rights been tored as yet?

A. I have revived some fundamental hts. I can't remember exactly. But ople are free to write or express what- er they want. I have also dissolved all rtial law offices throughout the untry.

Q. How did you form the Jatiya Dal?

A. It was all part of a process. We eded a political party to continue with e policies and programmes taken up ring the past four years.

Q. Do you think such a young party ll be able to make any dent in the coming elections?

A. The party may be new but its ders are old. The nucleus of the party mposed of politicians who had de- ed from the BNP. Moreover, a number naller parties like the Democratic on League and an Awami League on have joined us. Our party's great- strength is the achievements of this vernment during the past four years. ody, not even the Opposition can y that they will make things better n they are.

Q. What have been your major achievements as President?

A. I have been able to give the country a new sense of direction and self-respect. I have managed to decentralise administration, beginning with the introduction of the upzilla system. Today we record all important data—like food prices and family planning—from the upzillas and take immediate action if something is wrong. We are trying to decentralise everything, to cut down bureaucratic interference and make people accountable. It's a difficult job but now we are going to get in computers to evaluate people and data and make sure things don't get bogged down.

The constitution will be revived. Parliament will be sovereign and my relation with it determined by the constitution.

Q. In Bangladesh's history, the army has played an important role in destabilising successive governments. Are you confident about the continued support and backing of the army?

A. I have changed the course of history of the country in the last four years. There has not been a single coup attempt. Today, the armed forces are happy with the situation and are totally committed to restore democracy.

Q. Countries like Bangladesh have always been a bit suspicious of India. Does this suspicion linger?

A. Suspicion has greatly been removed due to your new prime minister, especially after the SAARC. But some sections of the people are still supicious of what they consider the Indo-Soviet axis. But then there have been many positive signs—agreement on the sharing of the Ganga waters, the barbed wire fence not coming up. We, however, have been disappointed by India's refusal to hand over the Tin Bigha corridor. After all, India is a big country and it can afford to be more generous.

Q. What is your dream about Bangladesh?

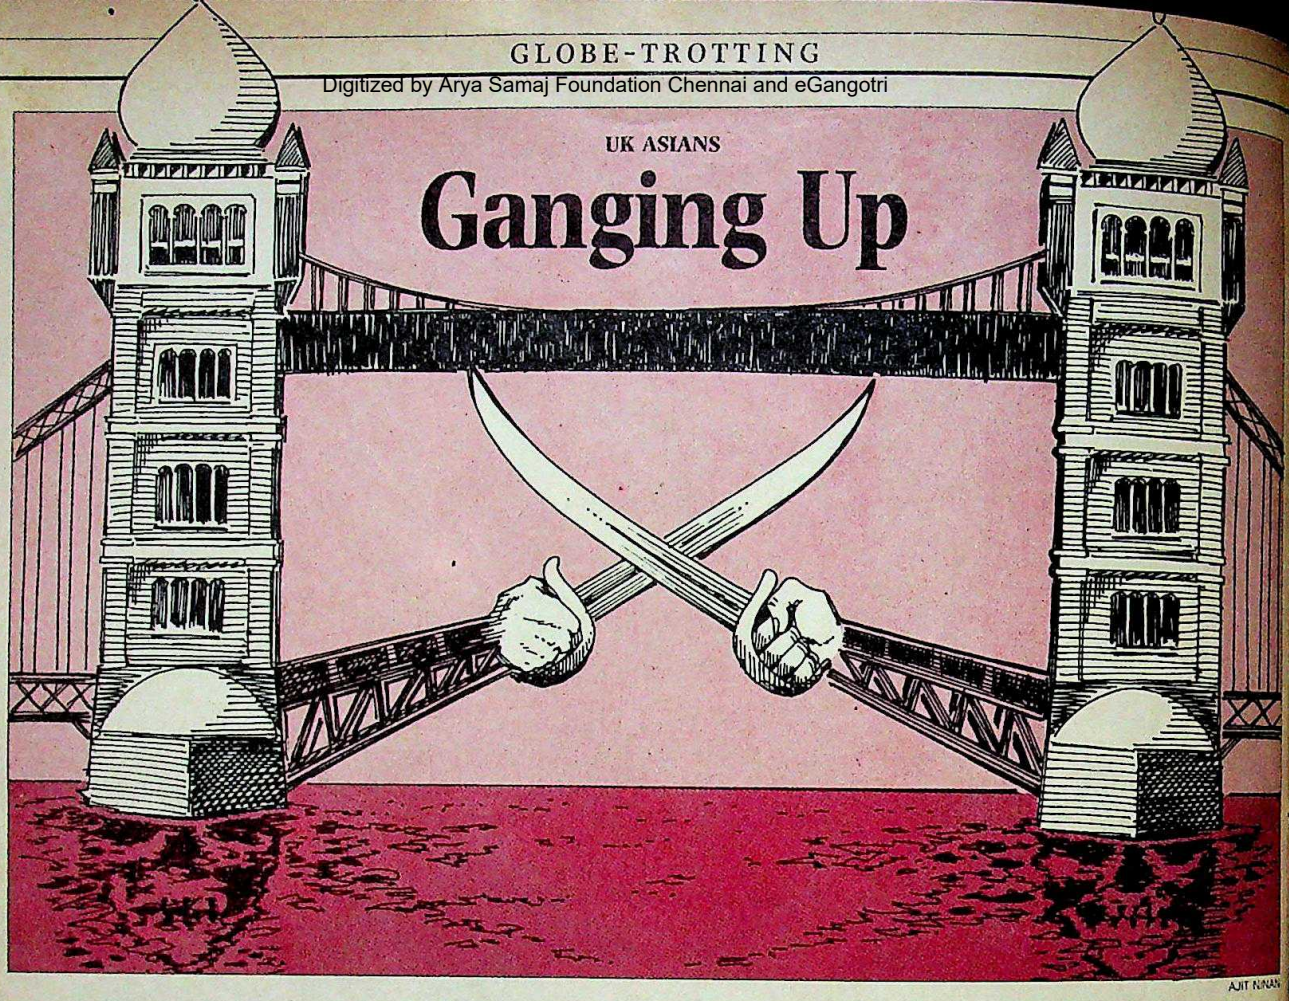
A. The aim is to mitigate some suffering, some pain, not by words but by policy decisions. If we can improve the conditions of the villages, Bangladesh will automatically take off. It has been static for centuries. It has to shrug off this weariness and I have showed that this is not impossible.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UK ASIANS

Ganging Up



AJIT NINAN

A SECRET Scotland Yard police dossier on Asian gangs dealing in protection, drugs and prostitution and battling for control in west London has created deep misgivings among the Asian community and growing apprehension for senior detectives in Asian-dominated boroughs. The dossier's sprawling study on Asian gangs is redolent of Chinese Tongs, the Italian mafiosi and crime syndicates in the US.

The alarming dossier diligently prepared by Scotland Yard's research team states that violent clashes between Asian gangs in London have been growing for the past one year. Organised crime and gang fights within the Asian communities of west London emerged after a series of pitched battles involving Sikh youths from May 1, 1983, to February, 1984. After the arrest of gang leaders there was a lull until January last year. The violence—says the Yard report—has escalated since.

A police coordinating committee set up to combat and monitor the situation commissioned a detailed research document at its meeting of October 29 last year. The report identifies the names and organisational set-up of the gangs, their criminal activities, motivation, distribution and effects on the community. The report states: "The fact is that the gangs are fighting and that serious injuries have been caused. The fact that no deaths have occurred is fortunate." The police report states that at stake may be the leadership of the "disaffected Sikh youth of Southall and Hounslow", who have grown in militancy since the race riots of 1979 and 1981. Five groups—two major and three minor—have come in for special attention:

The Tooti Nungs: This is one of the oldest in west London. The Yard dossier states that the likely origin of the name could be a corruption of "Nihang". Apparently, most members do not wear turbans. Their activities allegedly include protection, drugs and, in a small way, prostitution, with drugs being the main source of income. The Tooti Nungs—known in local street jargon as "the Toots"—are hired to resolve local disputes between Asians in the community which are settled with money or violence. The Toots have a two-tier rank system—the over-20s and the under-20s. There are reportedly 200 known members but the police say the actual membership could run into thousands. The gang has branches in Gravesend, Leicester, Wolverhampton and Birmingham.

The Holy Smokes: The name is said to have originated from the burning of the Hamborough Tavern in 1981 by Southall youth and to emphasise the "higher caste" nature of the Sikh members. It was basically formed to confront National Front (NF) thugs who made forays into Southall. Many belonged to the erstwhile Southall Youth Movement but the police report states that the gang has now drifted into a variety of criminal activities. It has a three-tier rank system and is known to have branches in Birmingham. They are known locally as "the Holies".

The Billi Boys: Whereas the two major groups are predominantly Sikh, this group is mainly Hindu and originated in the Wembley and Willesden areas. The report states that the Billi Boys or Billi Brothers are "allied" with the Tooti-Nungs.

The Cranford Crusaders: This little-known group is believed to have its base at "the Berkeley Arms" in Cranford and is suspected to be carrying on a running duel with white youths in Hounslow. It is believed to have an alliance with the Holy Smokes.

The A1 Gang: A small group which earned its name from the A1 Mini Cab

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

...ere. The police report states that this ...roup has a drug connection.

With such comical names, at first ...ance they could have been dismissed as ...ouths getting together for some harm...ess mischief. Instead the Scotland Yard ...ssier draws up a chilling catalogue of ...mes committed by the tautly-organised ...gs over the years. The report says: ...th principal gangs (the Tooti-Nungs ...d the Holy Smokes) are believed to be ...olved in local crime. An armed robbery ...Southall on November 21, 1985, in...ving young blacks is suspected to have ...n assisted by Tooti-Nungs. The extent ...organisation is supposition but it is ...ged that both gangs are involved in ...rtion and extortion. It is strongly ...pected, but not positively established, ...t both gangs are heavily involved in ...distribution of drugs."

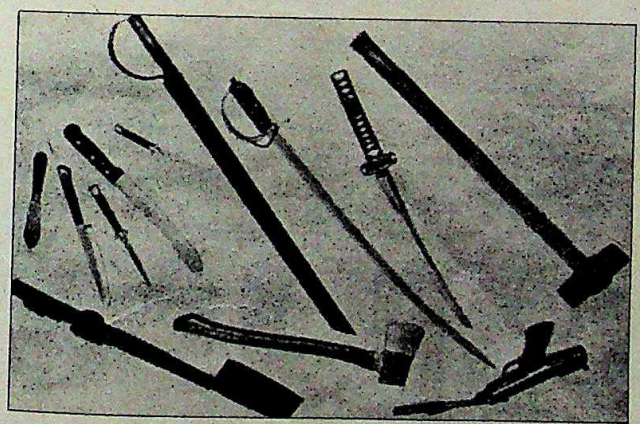
Last October, after a gang fight be...n the "Toots" and the "Holies", the ...e were startled to discover a vicious ...e of weapons that included ceremo...words, meat cleavers, hammers and ...ed stars. The most bizarre aspect of ...comprehensive Scotland Yard report ...e allegation of "ritual rape". Says the ...t: "There is some evidence of ritual ...s but as victims may be reluctant to ...t these to police, the full picture is not ...wn. It is believed that ritual rape is a ...e of a Tooti-Nung initia...ceremony."

...e report states that follow...e affrays of 1983, it was ...gnised that many other inci...s were gang-oriented. Fol...g the setting up of a re...h team to monitor Asian ...s a police micro-computer ...stalled in Southall to con...e with the inquiry. Appar...400 names are on file and ...port states that this may ...be the "tip of the iceberg". ...nd Yard frankly acknowl...s that their inquiry was be...ed by a lack of firm information from ...the Asian communities and a ...of understanding" of the picture by ...police officers. If real progress is to be ...e, the report goes on, target surveil...e, liaison and community coopera...e of paramount importance.

...e most police reports, the Scotland ...report is grim and ominous but not ...y eloquent as to the sociological ...s of why youthful Asians are being ...n into gangland crime. Referring to ...ooti-Nung gang, the report makes a ...mention that, rejected by the host ...unity (read 'white') and with no desire to return to Punjab, the poor achiever in the Sikh community seeks solace in the security provided by a gang.

A GRAVESEND-based small entrepreneur, S.S. Paintal, who came to Britain in the early 1960s and has three sons, said: "What does Scotland Yard know about Indian or Sikh traditions to make these sweeping references? Who are their informants anyway? In my town and within our community, we strive to help one another. It is not just the Indo-Chinese who do that. When he saw that he was not suited to pursuing academic studies, my eldest boy became a welder. My other sons, being of different temperament, will follow more intellectual pursuits. All three speak Cockney, but they speak Punjabi too. All wear turbans and we try to visit India once every year. We are a tightly-knit family. I fail to understand what bloody status a youngster acquires should he become part of one of these stupid gangs."

The police report refers to 'status' in a community by providing "sanctuary from at best a disinterested, or at worst, a hostile white community". This is endorsed by many Asians who spoke to INDIA TODAY. L.S. Grewal, an elderly Ealing-based Asian says: "I used to live in Southall for years. Subtle racism has always existed in this country. But when you live in an Asian stronghold like Southall, Wembley or Leicester it is less palpable. Today, racism has taken a more violent and ugly form. You could get attacked in a tube by a National Front thug for no apparent provocation except that you are brown-skinned or you may be better dressed than the skinhead. I do grant that some of our youngsters have got into undesirable activities like drug-running but do not forget that the Holy Smokes did a great service to the entire Indian community by bashing the hell out of NF goons in Southall."



Weapons recovered from Asian Gangs

Even if people like Grewal are right about the origin of gangs like the Holy Smokes, today Asian gangs have gone far beyond being just 'protection squads' for the Asian community. Community elders say unemployment among the Asian youth is a prime factor. Says Wembley resident B.S. Patel: "If there are two applicants—one white and one brown—for a job slot, you can bet your last dime that the white will get the job, even if the Asian may be better qualified. Now a couple of experiences like that can get terribly demoralising. Can you blame our youngsters for taking out their frustration in other dangerous activities?"

But elders like Patel and Paintal also admit that family bonds among Asians are "disintegrating" or are "not what they used to be", which in turn could lead the youngsters astray. Except to talk about increased gainful employment for Asian youths, community elders seem to have a disquieting lack of ideas or solutions to the problems confronting them.

Understandably, the police report has raised the hackles of the Asian community elders, who are incensed that the proud record of the community is being questioned. Some leaders have questioned the validity of the report, drawing parallels to what they describe as a "smear campaign" against Afro-Caribbean youth a decade ago. They feel the police coordination committees and computers ought to be more gainfully utilised against "fascist thugs" (a reference to the National Front) who roam Asian boroughs, attacking and burning Asian homes with apparent impunity. Some young Asian gang members, while admitting that they do have gang fights, insist that the allegations of ritual rape are " pure rubbish".

There is little doubt that the report may be rather exaggerated and oversinister but the police dossier has been based on meticulous research bolstered by a catalogue of incidents related to drug-running and extortion. Obviously Asian elders in areas like Southall, Hounslow, Wembley and Willesden ought to refocus their attention on their idle youngsters. And community welfare officers have a formidable task confronting them if more macabre Yard dossiers "on Asian armies terrorising London's streets" are to be avoided in the future.

—RAMESH CHANDRAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NEPAL

Monumental Effort

AS A PLACE of pilgrimage it ranks with Mecca, Jerusalem, the Vatican, Varanasi and Amritsar. In antiquity it predates them all. But for centuries, Lumbini, the birthplace of the Buddha a few miles across the India-Nepal border in the terai region of central Nepal, has remained a monument to neglect. Only now is the world beginning to pay rightful tribute to mankind's earliest apostle of compassion—Prince Siddhartha, who came to be known as Buddha, the Enlightened one. An unusual memorial is being constructed at Lumbini which, like the man and his message, will transcend national boundaries: it is a UN project funded by contributions from around the globe and supervised by a committee of 15 Asian nations.

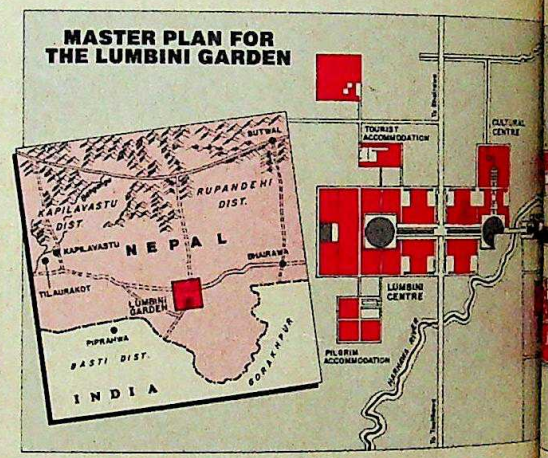
Ironically enough, the inspiration behind the resurrection of Lumbini was a man long dead and virtually forgotten. Nineteen years ago, Lumbini was a forgotten wilderness till U Thant, then secretary-general of the United Nations and a Buddhist himself, visited the site. Anguished by its run-down condition, U Thant appealed to King Mahendra to develop Lumbini as a sacred garden and centre for world peace. The King agreed and in 1970, an international committee for the development of Lumbini was set up by the UN to "create a living, growing centre that could help foster international peace and understanding."

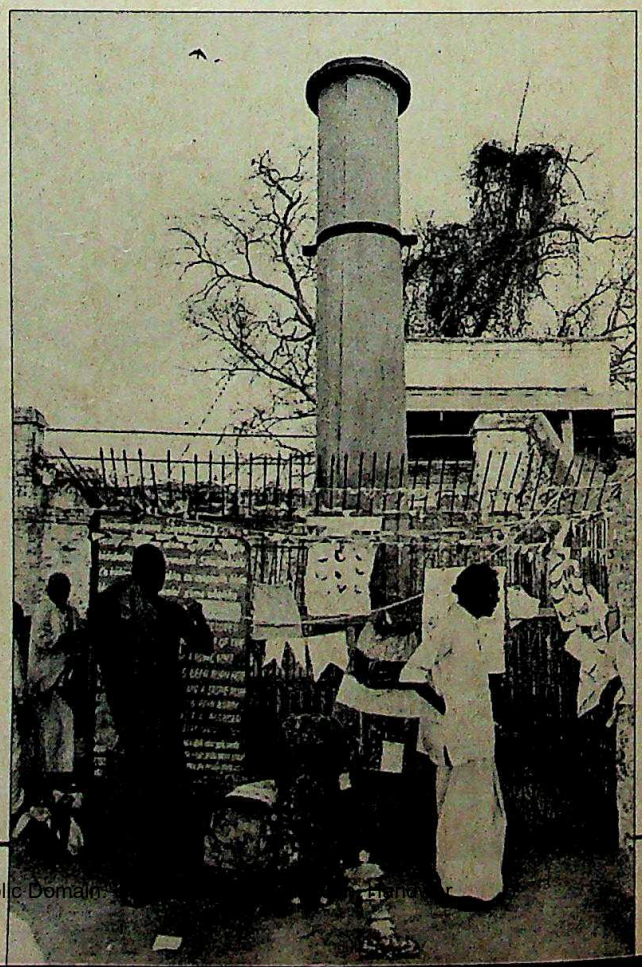
The idea soon caught on. The United Nations Development Fund contributed $1 million to commission celebrated Japanese architect Professor Kenzo Tange to prepare a master plan. With this began a frantic fund collection drive. The master plan, completed in 1978, visualised transforming the three square mile area into the kind of sylvan glade it was at the time of the Buddha's birth. Legend has it that in 623 BC the Sakya queen Mayadevi gave birth to Siddhartha while passing through this sal forest on her way to her maternal home. Evidence of the event is provided by a stone pillar erected here in 249 BC by Emperor Ashoka with an inscription in the Brahmi script identifying Lumbini as the spot where Buddha Sakyamuni (the sage of the Sakya clan) was born. Around the pillar, archaeologists have excavated ancient monasteries and stupas dating to the time of Ashoka's visit. The area is a treasure trove of ancient artifacts and archaeologists have dug up rare pottery, coins and terracotta objects, confirming the belief that Lumbini became an important pilgrimage centre soon after the Buddha's death.

The pillar and the excavated ruins are now being transformed into a "sacred garden" enclosed by a circular pond of water. This will be the focal point of the Lumbini project. Existing buildings are to be removed and the ruins divided by elevated grassy walkways. To the north of the garden, a block of 40 monasteries and viharas is planned with a cultural centre comprising a library, museum and an institution of Buddhist research. Further north will be the new Lumbini village, service centre for the complex with facilities like hotels and camping grounds, restaurants, police station and tourist information and immigration services.

The village will be linked to the sacred garden by a central canal and walkway passing through the monastic block. "The sacred garden represents the past and the village the present. And to make the trip from the present to the past, pilgrims will have to walk along the canal or use paddle boats. From any point along the central walkway, the Ashoka pillar will be visible," says Amrit Sresthacharya, 34, deputy project manager at Lumbini.

The entire area of three square miles—three blocks of one square mile each—is to be heavily wooded with sal





Buddhist pilgrims at the pillar: paying homage

CC-0. In Public Domain.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

...d fruit trees; 620,000 trees have al... ...ady been planted. The newly expanded ...hairhawa airport enables Royal Nepal ...lines to run daily services from Kath... ...mandu and Nepalganj, and a new road ...ks backward Bhairhawa with ...mbini. The airport, the road, electricity ...d water supply are part of the essential ...frastructural facilities provided by the ...epal Government at a cost of $ 7 million ...a token of its commitment to the ...ject.

Lumbini, when it is ready, will above ...be a monument to international co... ...eration. India and Thailand jointly ...nsored a resolution asking the UN to ...e over the project. Eight countries including India, Nepal, Japan and the US have set up national committees to raise resources for the project while the World Fellowship of Buddhists will mobilise resources from its 74 chapters in Buddhist communities. (India will finance the $ 2 million museum which will house relics of the Buddha's life collected from all over the world). Member countries and Buddhist organisations have already pledged $ 11 million out of the $ 55 million required to complete the project. Says the international committee's coordinator Romen Basu: "Funds will never be a problem for a project of this nature."

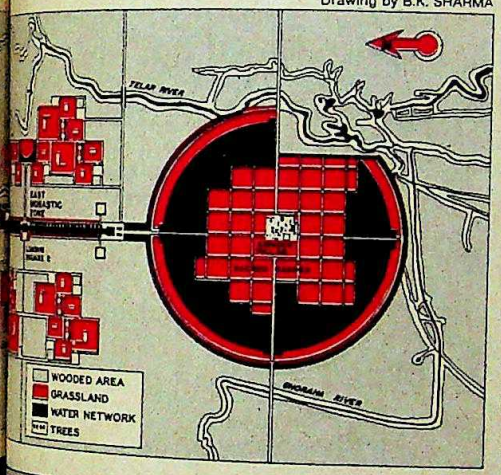
Nevertheless, work has been slow, and pressure has built up for a quickening of the pace. This prompted the Nepal Parliament to constitute, last August, a high level trust to take over the reins of the Lumbini project. King Birendra is the trust's patron and his younger brother Prince Gyanendra is chairman. "Now people can be assured that the donations are properly used. This reassurance is the main reason for forming the trust," says B.L. Shrestha, 51, Lumbini project manager.

Shrestha admits that the 10-year-old project is behind schedule by three years. They had to first acquire 774 hectares of land and relocate eight or nine villages outside the project area. "This kind of work is more problematic than putting up a building, but unless there is a building some people say no work is being done", he says. Another reason for the delay was soil instability in the area where the buildings of the cultural centre are to come up. An international meeting took stock of this problem in June 1984 and since Lumbini is in the earthquake zone and the buildings are expected to last at least 500 years, it was decided not to take any risks. Extensive soil densification and foundation work is expected to be completed this year, after which construction of the buildings in the cultural centre will start.

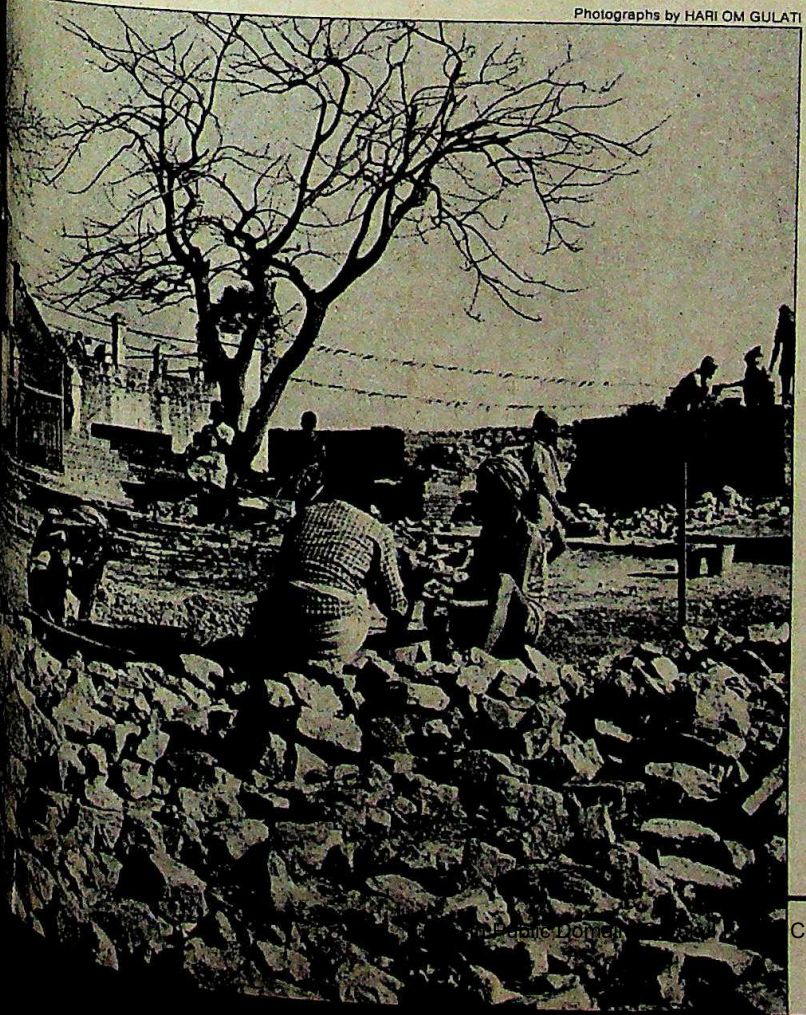
The work would have progressed faster had differences not arisen between archaeologists and engineers over the design of the sacred garden and the fate of the ancient ruins within it. When the master plan was being finalised it was not realised that the archaeological digs around the pillar would yield such a priceless horde of antiquities. Archaeologists oppose the plan to surround the sacred garden by a pond of water till all digging work has been completed. Otherwise, they argue, the ruins and relics that could still be below the soil would get submerged and lost to posterity. Dr Prayag Raj Sharma, 46, professor of Nepali history in the Centre for Nepali and Asian Studies at Kathmandu's Tribhuvan University says he is "not happy" with the water pond. "Submerging part of the site before finishing proper excavation would be like committing a crime against archaeology. Excavation is a major component of the project, but it is not being done with desirable speed. One gets the impression they are more involved in setting up a five star hotel and recreational facilities for pilgrims," he complains.

The chief archaeologist of Lumbini, Tara Nanda Misra, is equally vehement: "Lumbini is still not in the hands of archaeologists; the engineers do what they want. We are being heard now. The trust has been formed because the King wants to put the area under the control of the archaeologists." Shrestha hastens to allay the archaeologists' fears. "If archaeological remains are found we will again consult Tange and remove the ponds from the design. Tange himself has said he is not rigid about the design," he says. The pond would in fact help to drain

Drawing by B.K. SHARMA



Photographs by HARI OM GULATI



Rebuilding monuments with excavated bricks: reason for protest

CC-0. In Public Domain. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

subsoil water from under the ruins.

Further problems arose when a Japanese landscaper working at the site complained about the conservation techniques being used by Nepalese archaeologists who were virtually rebuilding some of the old monuments using old bricks excavated from the site. Misgivings were also expressed about the way deep trenches had been dug near the pillar, damaging layers of ancient bricks visible underneath. The apprehension that the old ruins might be damaged has prompted some member countries of the international committee to suggest that outside archaeologists be brought in to supervise the work. Shreshta disclosed that it had now been decided to get archaeologists from neighbouring countries to advise and guide the archaeology work.

But these are minor controversies, the kind that are inevitable in a project of this magnitude where so many agencies and countries are involved. The final completion may be delayed, but when it is ready, there is no doubt it will restore to Lumbini the position it deserves as one of the world's prime pilgrimage centres.

—RAMINDAR SINGH in Lumbini

KAPILAVASTU

Site Strife

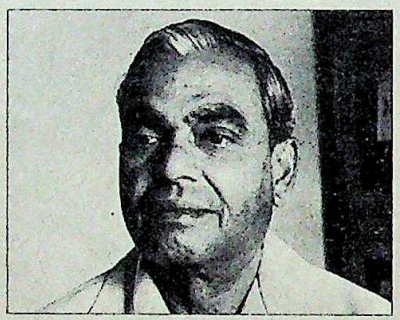
WHERE exactly is the ancient city of Kapilavastu, capital of the Sakya kingdom of Sudhodhana where Buddha spent the first 29 years of his life? Is it at Tilaurakot in Nepal, 20 km west of Lumbini, as Nepalese archaeologists and some British scholars have insisted, or is Kapilavastu really in India at Piprahwa in Uttar Pradesh's Basti district, 11 km south-west of Lumbini?

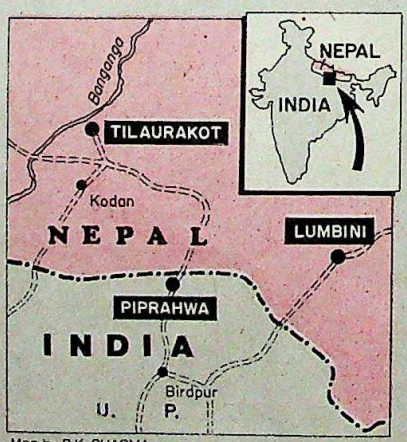
Lack of agreement on this vital question has been a source of friction between Indian and Nepalese archaeologists and historians since 1972 when the claim was first made that Piprahwa was Kapilavastu. With Lumbini now being developed as an international pilgrimage centre, the controversy threatens to erupt once again with fierce intensity. This is primarily because the site which is established as being the real location of Kapilavastu will eventually become part of the Lumbini pilgrimage circuit.

The differences over the identity of the real Kapilavastu arise more out of attitude and interpretation rather than actual fact. Ancient Chinese pilgrims Fa Hien and Hiuen Tsang differed about the distance of Kapilavastu from Lumbini and on their varying accounts rests, partly, the case of the two sides. Hiuen Tsang wrote that Kapilavastu was 16 miles from Lumbini while Fa Hien put it at nine miles. The Nepalese vouch for Hiuen Tsang's account because the distance he mentioned corresponds with the distance from Lumbini to Tilaurakot. Indian scholars insist that Kapilavastu was actually nine miles from Lumbini and the difference in the two versions arose because Fa Hien went straight from Piprahwa to Lumbini while Hiuen Tsang took a roundabout route.

Nepalese historians and scholars like Dr Prayag Raj Sharma of the Tribhuvan University base their claim for Tilaurakot on the descriptions of Kapilavastu in Buddhist texts and scriptures which said that Kapilavastu was on the banks of the Ganga river. The city gates, ramparts and fortifications excavated at Tilaurakot overlook the Banaganga river. "It is a more extensive site, a defended settlement and has mud ramparts, a trait of ancient capitals," says Sharma. "Piprahwa does not have defence walls which a capital city must have. There is no housing at Piprahwa, only monasteries and a big stupa," adds Tara Nanda Misra.

Srivastava: wasted effort





Map by B.K. SHARMA

In spite of this Sharma admits that no "concrete evidence" has come up to substantiate Tilaurakot's claim. Such evidence does exist for Piprahwa. As far back as 1898 a stone coffer was excavated from a stupa at Piprahwa with an inscription that "this receptacle of relics of the blessed Buddha (is the pious gift) of the Sakyas". In 1972, K.M. Srivastava of the Archaeological Survey of India (ASI) dug deeper and came across a soapstone casket containing bones and ashes, which have since been accepted by scholars and historians as the corporal relics of the Buddha. It is obvious that the Buddha's clansmen would have brought his relics back to the capital, argues Srivastava. Excavations at Piprahwa after this momentous find yielded terracotta seals and the lid of a pot carrying the inscription "Kapilavastu Bhikshu Sangha" and as far as Srivastava is concerned "this conclusively clinched the long-standing controversy about the identification of Kapilavastu".

But much heartburn was in store for Srivastava. The Nepal Government protested to India about the claim and the ASI and the Central Government shied away from pronouncing officially on the subject. Unofficially both admit that they are convinced Piprahwa is Kapilavastu, but their silence intrigues and angers Srivastava. "I don't know why the Government is so weak. Nepal may be a neighbour, but can we ignore facts?" he asks. His colleagues say he should have been hailed and honoured for his find, but lack of official backing has soured his achievements. He took recourse to writing and published several accounts of his discovery which he says has become the victim of political boundaries. Abroad at least he is recognised but this is small comfort to Srivastava who was superceded and retired from the ASI last year, disillusioned and unsung.

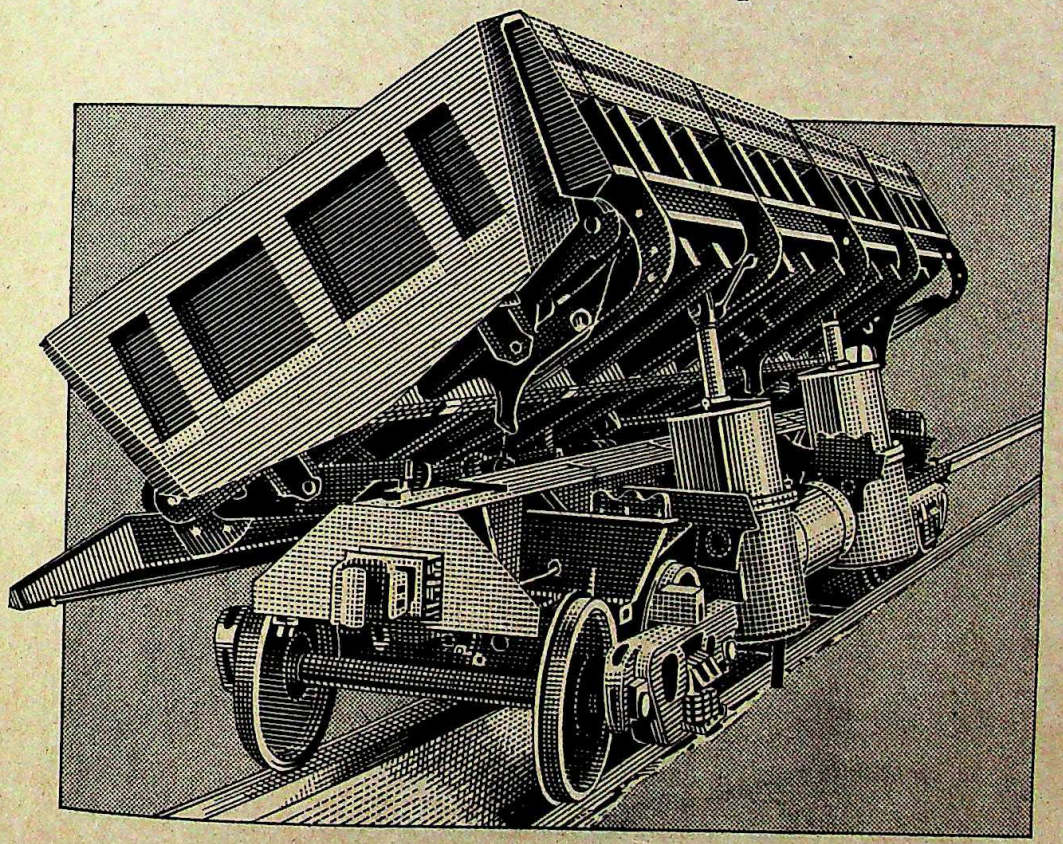
—RAMINDAR SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Tilting Towards Steel

Burn's Auto Dump Cars– Technological innovation for the service of steel plants



BSCL has always come forward to meet the latest demand in the Indian Industries. This time they are once again on the top with their Auto Dump Cars. Manufactured specifically to service the Modern Steel Plants. Auto Dump Cars are used in industires to speed-up transport of Ash/Slag and dumping at Ash Dump/Slag Dump.

This 80 Ton Auto Dump Car has a volume of 36 cu.m. and its Track gauge measures upto 1676 m.m. with its 50% unloading angle, the tilting is conducted by pneumatic mechanism. It has anti-friction bearings and is capable of moving at a maximum speed of 50 K.M. per hour when it is loaded.

Burn Standard is yet another successful manufacturer of such Auto Dump Cars in India, providing national alternatives.

We are indeed also proud to announce the opening of our new Steel Plant division for production of various modern equipment to meet the growing demand in technology.

Burn Standard Company Ltd.

(A Government of India Undertaking)

HOWRAH WORKS, HOWRAH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

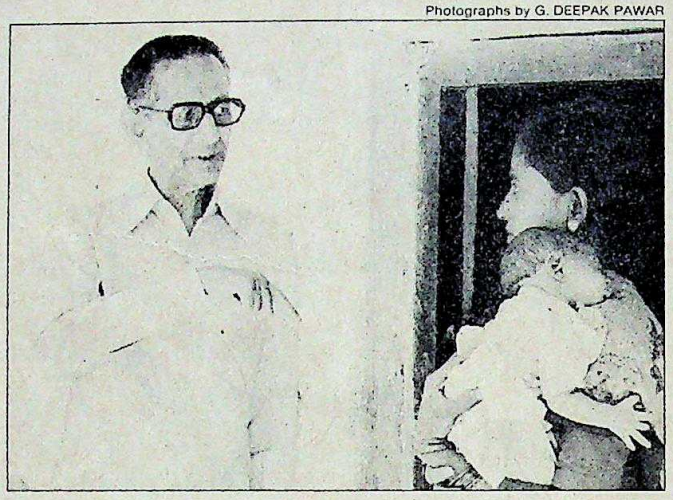
ABC/BS-1/86

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FAMILY PLANNING

Achieving the Impossible

Photographs by G. DEEPAK PAWAR



Project director Rao with villager

THE STATISTICS are dream-like. Of the 42 eligible couples in Gangasandra (pop: 330), 38 have adopted family planning of their own volition. Of the remaining four couples, three have one child each and plan to have another before they go in for family planning. The remaining couple have two daughters and are waiting for a son. The quiet revolution in this nondescript village offers India's harassed family planning experts a shining ray of hope.

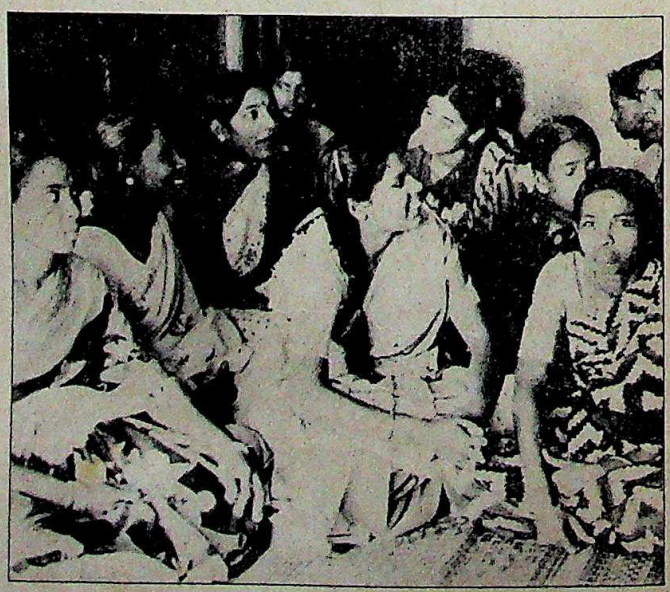
Gangasandra, a tiny village 60 km from Bangalore, is one of the 334 villages in the Malur taluk of Karnataka's Kolar district which were handed over by the Government to the Family Planning Association of India (FPAI) in 1976, as an experiment—the first of its kind. Never before had a single village been handed over to a non-government agency for promoting family planning and, as in this case, given carte blanche.

The arrangement officially ended in 1979 with district authorities satisfied with the "significant results". But the FPAI's job was far from over: it stayed on to follow up and consolidate the work it had done. Eventually satisfied with the long-term results, the FPAI is now planning to move out of Malur to other villages with the intention of achieving similar results.

The success story began when the Central Government's India Population Project (IPP) decided, as an experiment, to entrust the task of family planning promotion to an autonomous voluntary organisation because "they have a greater flexibility in management and supervision, a wider choice in the selection of personnel and deeper dedication to the cause". Said FPAI's K. Rama Rao, the director of the project: "It was an experiment which confirmed a hypothesis."

Initially, the FPAI was not sure how it should go about the job of convincing villagers to take to family planning. But it stumbled on the right approach: community participation. Since village folk would not open up to strangers on a subject as private as family planning, the FPAI realised that the volunteers and the motivators had to come from the villages. The next step was to organise youth clubs and mahila mandals (women's groups) and involve them in propaganda and motivation campaigns. The FPAI organised 188 such bodies with 6,125 members, besides 55 health and family planning committees.

Women at a mahila mandal meet



The going, however, was not all that easy. Says Rao: "It was initially tough bringing these men and women together under village-level organisations. The women especially were too shy." The volunteers also had to dispel the fear that a vasectomy or tubectomy leaves one bed-ridden for days. The change was gradual and took a lot of motivation and incentive. Condoms were distributed free, select villagers were given cows, sewing machines, agricultural implements and funds for setting up petty businesses as part of the "integration of family planning with developmental and income-generating activities".

In Huldenahalli, the village youth club chief Chandrashekhara Gowda promised couples green cards (issued by the state Government for the supply of subsidised rice) in return for practising family planning. In other villages, old-age pensions for the couple's parents are added to sweeten the incentive. The Janata MLA from Malur, H.B. Dyavarappa promised a community TV set to people in his native village of Hangenahalli if every eligible couple adopted family planning.

According to the FPAI survey, the project succeeded in taking the percentage of family planning acceptors among eligible couples from 11.75 to 55.54. By any yardstick, a remarkable achievement, considering the national average is only 32 per cent. The population centre of the state Government has undertaken a survey to assess the project's success.

The FPAI is positive that still more couples would take to family planning even after it leaves the village. The local volunteers would continue to motivate couples, and to ensure this, a taluk-level committee would be appointed soon, says Rao, and with justifiable pride. After all, it has been his baby.

—SRINIVASA PRASAD

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"...never been so embarrassed! Insisted on paying, then found I hadn't enough cash.
GOT MYSELF A DINERS CARD AFTER THAT!"

Being short of cash can be terribly embarrassing. And it can happen to anyone, anytime. Unless you carry a wallet bulging with wads of notes all the time. But that's unsafe—and so inconvenient. Of course, there's an alternative. The Diners Club Card. It's like carrying your bank in your wallet. You're always covered—in style.

Pays for itself many times over—more value-for-money than money!

- Buys air tickets. Gets you free flight insurance of Rs.1 lakh automatically
- Special discounts at hotels abroad
- Secure against loss or theft
- Gives you a Consolidated Statement of Account every month. And of course you get your charge slip and bill at the member establishment

DINERS CLUB INTERNATIONAL

Diners Club India Private Limited
Raheja Chambers, 213 Nariman Point
Bombay 400 021.
Tel: 244949

B 3/61 Safdarjang Enclave
New Delhi 110 029.
Tel: 602565

I would like to be a member of Diners Club and enclose my cheque for Rs.900 towards Entrance Fees and Annual Subscription

NAME

ADDRESS

PIN CODE TELEPHONE

DATE SIGNATURE

I understand that if Membership is not granted I will be refunded my payment of Rs.900 immediately

COUNDOT 8

THE DINERS CLUB CARD—YEARS AHEAD OF CASH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FOOT LIB

Available at select Bata & BSC stores

Digitized by

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Install a supermarket in your dining room

Think about it.
Because the Allwyn Double Door represents a singular improvement: Separate doors for the freezer and main cabinet.
With ample room in the freezer to preserve fish, meats and poultry for longer periods than usual. And a lot more space in the main cabinet for items consumed daily.
The Allwyn Double Door retains all the other special features that put the Allwyn in a class by itself.

- ★ HITACHI designed compressor.
- ★ Roll Bond Freezer.
- ★ Operating Range: 170–250 volts. No need for a voltage stabiliser.
- ★ Extensive service support network.
- ★ 7 year guarantee.
- ★ Convenient and efficient self defrosting system.

You'll agree, the Allwyn Double Door comes as a bonus for people who need a deep freezer and a refrigerator.
And, perhaps a supermarket.

Available in 165, 300 and 380 litre capacities.

H ALLWYN
2000 S L REFRIGERATORS

UNDER LICENCE FROM HITACHI

An Allwyn is for always

ALLWYN
DOUBLE DOOR
REFRIGERATORS

MAA(S) H ALN 23 85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PROGRESSIVE WRITERS' ASSOCIATION

Bleak House

FIFTY years ago, Lucknow was the venue for the first conference of the Progressive Writers' Association (PWA). Last month, Lucknow again played host to a gathering of progressive writers, this time in commemoration of the 1936 conference. As some 500 delegates descended on the historic city to take stock of the movement and chew the cud of reminiscences, it turned out that the 50 years had not been very kind to the PWA and the movement had lost much of its initial zeal and thunder.

For an association that spearheaded the whole progressive movement in Indian literature, the PWA stands a much weakened force today. There was a time when almost every senior writer was associated with it and the movement gave the subcontinent some of its most significant literature.

Today, however, the active participation of its senior members has dwindled to mere patronage, while most young writers are either members of the rival CPI(M)-aligned Janvadi Lekhak Sangh or of the CPI(M-L)-led Jan Sanskriti Manch. Says Hindi writer Rajendra Yadav, who was an active PWA member in his youth and is now vice-president of the Janvadi Lekhak Sangh: "It has become more and more aligned with the establishment. The progressives, on the pretext of infiltrating the system to fight it from within, have become a part of it."

Admitted Hindi writer Bhisham Sahni, the outgoing general secretary of the National Federation of Progressive Writers (NFPW)—the new name adopted by PWA in 1975: "Yes we have become weak organisationally. After Independence the PWA became a bit scattered and the initiative towards socially oriented writing became weak." PWA's only living founder-member Mulk Raj Anand, who formed the nucleus in 1935 in London along with Sajjad Zaheer and Muhammad Deen Taseer, added sadly: "It's not only the association that has become weak. The progressive movement itself has lost momentum, largely due to sectionalism and the dispersal of the intelligentsia." Pakistani critic Sibte Hassan, one of the oldest members (who ironically died in Delhi of a heart attack soon after the conference), felt that the PWA was frittering itself away on inconsequential issues like linguistic prejudices and ideological hair-splitting.

Hindi writer Asghar Wajahat says in his book Hindi-Urdu ki Pragatisheel Kavita (progressive poetry in Hindi and Urdu) that the PWA began as a broad-based group of nationalists, secularists and communists. With Independence, the nationalists became content that their goal had been achieved and left the PWA. On the other hand were those who felt that this freedom was not real and that imperialists of one kind had merely been replaced by another. Then, during the Telengana and Bengal movements, several writers were arrested and the movement started falling apart.

As a result the PWA came increasingly under the control of the Marxists, and its policies and stands became more and more left-oriented. The cracks in the PWA became deeper after the Communist Party split in 1964. The decline was precipitated in 1975 when the PWA decided to support the Emergency.

PWA meetings then and now: weakened force

"It was a mistake," admits Bhisham Sahni, "and we regretted it. We supported the Emergency because we thought that it would suppress the rightist reactionary forces like the Jan Sangh and JP's movement." Another negative factor was that it distanced itself from other literary movements, isolating itself in the process.

Urdu poet and Chairman of the NFPW Presidium Ghulam Rabbani Taban, however, insists that the movement is in fact going strong. "Contrary to what people say," he says, "the movement in fact is growing. Organisationally too, it's strong. Three units—Rajasthan, Madhya Pradesh and Bihar—are quite active while others are doing good work in their own limited spheres."

This is true but only in a small way. While some writers feel that the association should be made more broadbased, others believe that all it needs are catalystic circumstances. As Hindi critic Namvar Singh, an active NFPW executive committee member, says: "The movement began with a sense of crisis. This sense of crisis doesn't arise often. But now it's building up, what with the threat of nuclear warfare on the international front and the increasing regionalism, communalism and sectarianism on the national front. I guess this might give the movement fresh impetus and a new lease of life."

—MOHAMMED ASLAM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Chicago May 1, 1886. A workers' strike for an eight hour working day became history.

a revolution that created
A history written in the sweat of toiling men

A history of an

the world over.
international workers'

solidarity.
the Left Front

Today,
Government

salutes all persevering mortals.

Let us raise echo the

our voice and words of Karl Marx :

'Working men of all countries unite !'

Government of West Bengal

Progressive ICA-1/86

The Left Front Govt's tribute to a hundred years of struggle.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Dutch Connection. Non-stop to Amsterdam

Discover Amsterdam. The city of brightly coloured tulips and storybook windmills. Where the streets are paved with history and the air charged with the excitement of one of Europe's busiest commercial centres. Dykes and diamonds, Van Gogh and the vikings. Amsterdam is a city that has everything... specially surprises.

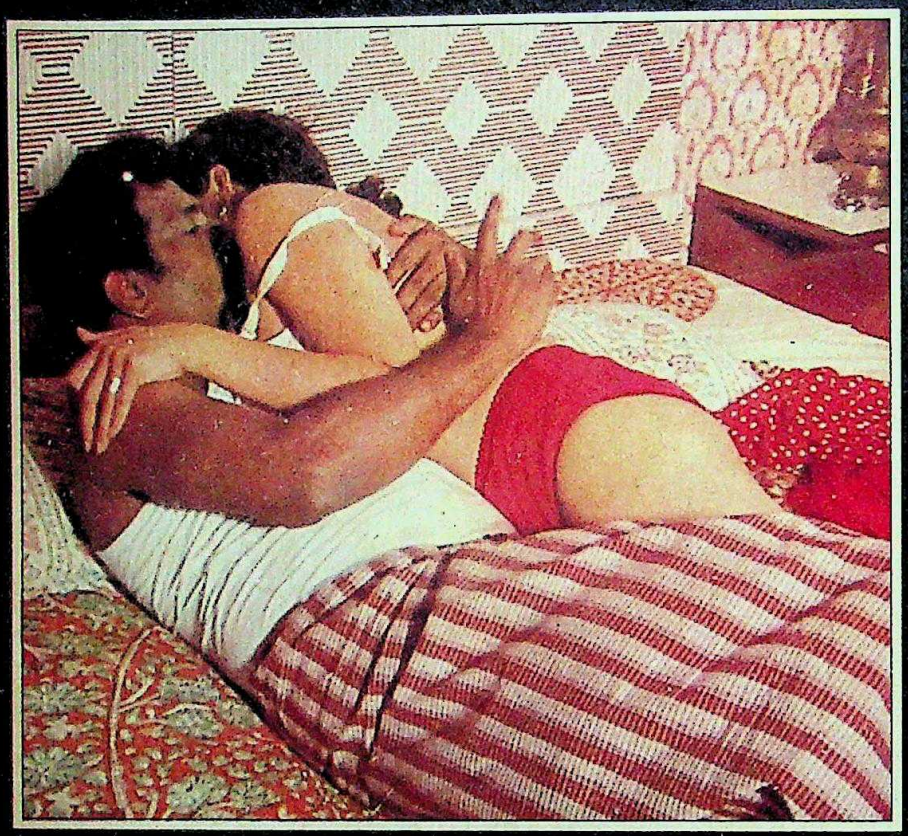
Take the silk route to Amsterdam on Thai.
Non-stop early morning on Mondays and Fridays.
The Royal Orchid Service is just part of the Dutch experience.

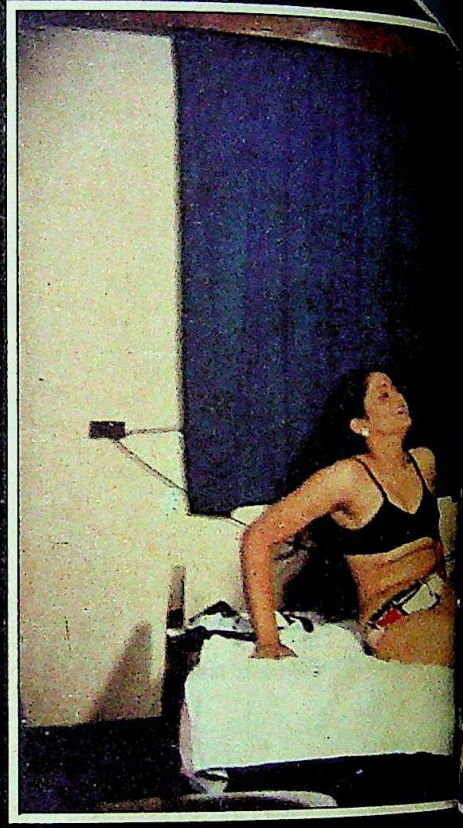
Thai
Smooth as silk.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Showing soft-porn films in mofussil areas and even in so





... Of the 32-odd films released this year, 14 have 'blue' scenes wh not sh

MALAYALAM FILMS

The Smut Glut

KERALA is steaming, and the reasons have nothing to do with the onset of summer. Bare breasts, hairy chests and various other parts of the human anatomy are erupting like a rash across the state's cinema screens and the audience is literally lapping it all up in lascivious delight, unmindful of censors and other sundry guardians of public morality. The soft porn plague is here and getting harder with every lustful scene.

The recipe is simple. Take one 'masala' Malayalam film. Interpolate it with uncensored 'blue' scenes. And Erotica! The cash register goes haywire. The floodgates opened last year following the stupendous success of Ottayan (lone tusker). Ottayan had a half a dozen interpolated rape and nude scenes which were subsequently spotted and banned by the censors for a period of six months. Now, suddenly, an avalanche of semi-pornographic movies churned out from Kodambakkam in Madras has flooded the mofussil areas of Kerala.

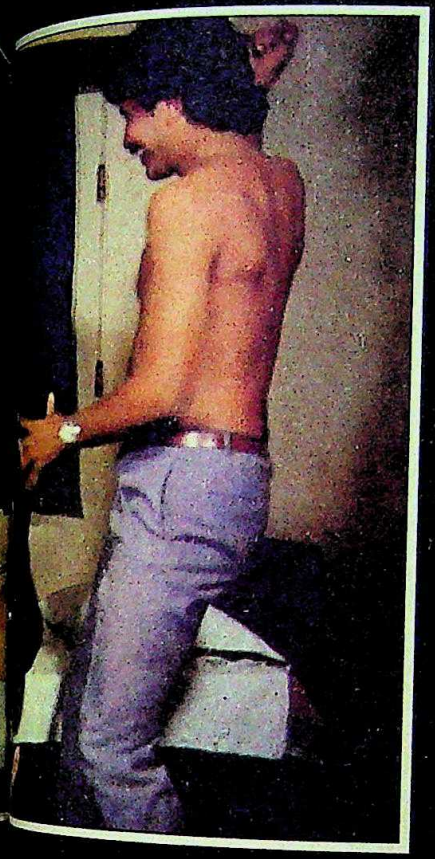
Directors like K.S. Gopalakrishnan, embolden by runaway successes, are getting bolder by making films like Pidikitapulli (wanted man) and Karinagam (king cobra) replete with steamy sex scenes which were never shown to the censors. When censors confiscated a print of Pidikitapulli, the sex scenes were missing, but two weeks later the same film was running to packed houses in a suburban Trivandrum theatre, with the scenes reinserted.

The soft-porn boom has hit the commercial cinema like a bolt from the blue. Recently, at Attingal, 40 km from Trivandrum, the year's biggest box-office hit, Vaartha was running to empty houses. As P.V. Gangadharan, president of the Kerala film chamber and also producer of Vaartha, says sorrowfully: "Super-hit family dramas in the cities are flopping in mofussil areas because the average mofussil cine-goer in these areas is lured by these soft-porn films with interpolated sex scenes." Gangadharan claims that the very existence of good clean commercial

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

...now become the biggest organised racket in Kerala...



...es wh...not shown to the censors but later interpolated into the picture.

...ema is threatened by the smut glut. Kerala cinema has had a long-time ...with soft-porn, but the trend had ...ed to show a downturn. Undaunted ...e setbacks, local producers then hit ...e idea of introducing uncensored ...polated scenes with the main picture. ...last year, Mani, a veteran director ...had fallen on hard times, made the ...Ottayan with a rape and revenge ...e, added interpolated scenes and ...ased it in all the main centres in ...ala. The six-minute rape scene show- ...e heroine's blouse ripped off and the ...n massaging her ponderous breasts. ...lm, made at a cost of Rs 10 lakh, ...ed Rs 12 lakh in two weeks before the ...rs caught on and banned it. ...er the ban, producers and distribu- ...f smut films shifted from the cities to ...llages. Car-loads of students from ...edrum make daily pilgrimages to ...vayoor or Attingal to see soft-porn. ...ree Krishna' theatre named after the deity at Guruvayoor and situated about 100 yards from the main temple entrance, regularly shows soft-porn. In Vattiyoorkavu, a suburb of Trivandrum, Pidikitapulli was shown under the noses of the censors, creating traffic jams as people flocked to the theatre.

SHOWING soft-porn in mofussil areas and even in some towns has now become the biggest organised racket in Kerala, with the obvious complicity of the police. Said an exasperated censor chief R. Ranganathan: "The soft-porn films with interpolated scenes are shown with police assistance. Even after confiscating a print of Pidikitapulli, by the time it reached us the prints were whitewashed and we could do nothing to stop the film."

Ranganathan finds it almost impossible to stop the soft-porn plague as he is the only censor officer in Kerala and gets absolutely no help from the police. He is further hampered by the fact that the censors have to pounce while the interpolated 'blue' scenes are being shown in the theatre and most of the shows are being held in the villages. In the case of Ottayan he himself saw the uncensored scenes in a Trivandrum theatre and due to immediate police help, was able to seize the print.

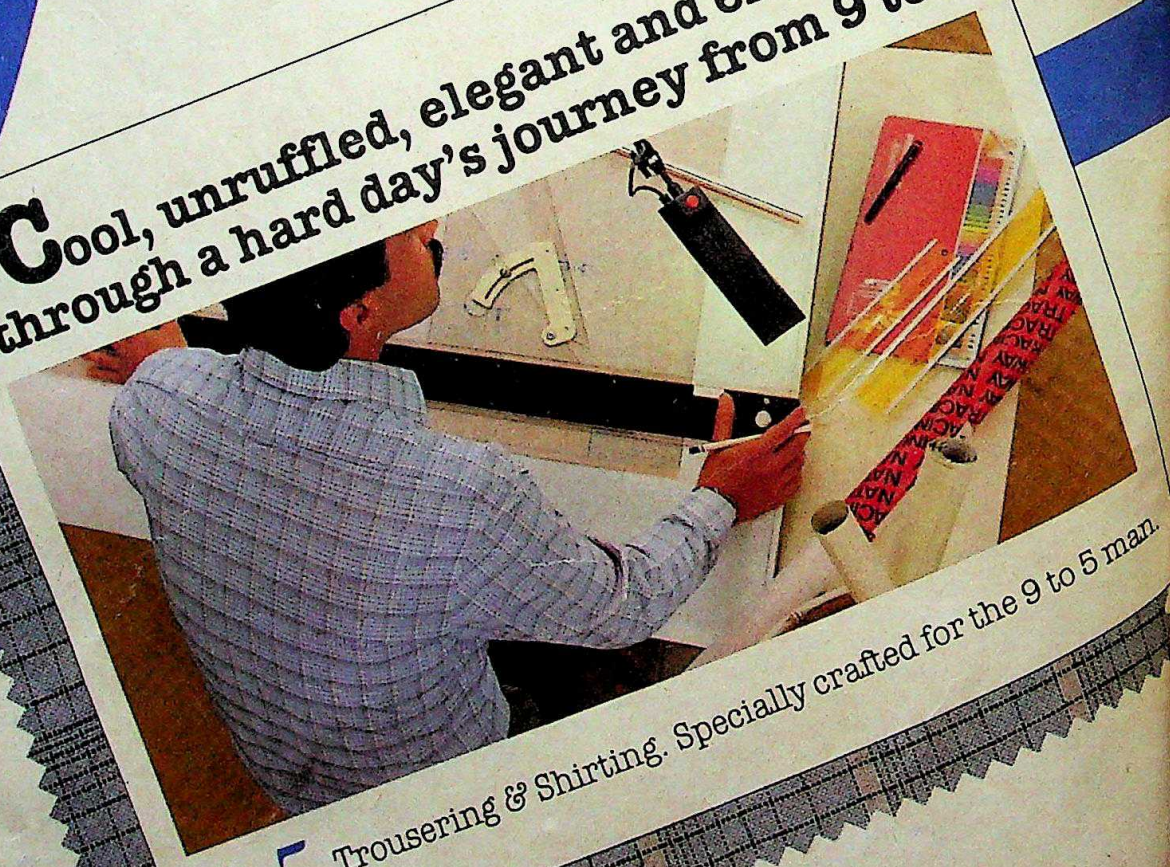
This year, out of the 32-odd films released so far, nearly 14 have 'blue' scenes which were shot separately and never shown to the censors but later interpolated into the picture for mofussil viewing. K.S. Gopalakrishnan's Gorilla tells the story of a maniac killer who rapes and kills different women. The film was passed by the revising committee of the censors in Trivandrum with several cuts, but when released not only were the censored scenes intact but additional scenes as well had been inserted. Gopalakrishnan repeated the same story with some minor changes in Pidikitapulli, which again grossed more than its pro-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

9 to 5

Cool, unruffled, elegant and enduring through a hard day's journey from 9 to 5



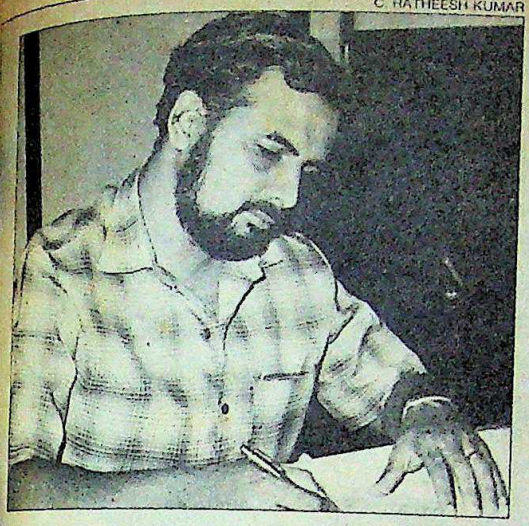
9to5 Trousering & Shirting. Specially crafted for the 9 to 5 man.

Madura Fabrics
A quality product from Madura Co

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

C. RATHEESH KUMAR



"Soft-porn films with interpolated scenes are shown with police assistance. A confiscated print, by the time it reached us, was white-washed and we could do nothing."

R. RANGANATHAN
Censor Chief

C. RATHEESH KUMAR

"If I don't strip, there are thousands of girls in Kodambakkam waiting to undress on the screen. If the story line demands it, I don't mind showing my body."

PRAMELA
veteran actress

...ction cost in the first few weeks. Encouraged by the success of these ..., hordes of amateurs have teamed ... with out-of-work stars and techni... and signed up amenable 'extras' to ...ture in the new soft-porn sequences. ...n established producers have been ...ed to jump onto the 'blue' band-...on. S. Kumar, maker of mythologi... films, has switched to soft-porn and is ...w known in the industry as 'Sex' ...ar. His film Evils of Wine and Woman ...labelled as an 'educational' film but ...ality it was soft-porn which titillated ...ewers and duped the censors since ...s even exempt from entertainment ...Kumar's latest, Cabaret Dancer, is the ...y of a girl raped by villains and forced ...p on the cabaret circuit.

Chandrasekharan Thampi is an... soft-porn pioneer who has hit the ... with the highly successful ...ram. The film started off as a black ... white art movie that got canned ...g to lack of finance. Later, he added ...e steamy bits including a scene of ...al intercourse shown in its entirety ...distributed the film through his own ...pany, though only in small towns ...villages, and without any publicity. ... boasts proudly: "It became a hit ...e of word-of-mouth publicity." ...gunathan, however, says that, ...ram is a film for which we have received the maximum complaints. It had been recalled once even by the chairman but they had sent us a clean print. One of our main objectives is to catch Dhumam red-handed." Or, in this case, blue-handed. Almost 18 months after its release, Dhumam is still to be shown in Trivandrum and Cochin since it fears the censors, but has covered almost 200 small stations.

THE PORN proliferation has come as a blessing in disguise to many ex-stars. Rathish was a leading star of Malayalam films two years ago before he went into decline. Mani fished him out from imminent obscurity by hiring him for soft-porn films, including Ottayan. In six months, Rathish has acted in about 30 films and even produced two of them with Mani as the director, and he is now the most sought-after 'blue' film star. Said Rathish: "I would have starved but for this soft-pron wave. There is nothing wrong with it because people love it and sex is a bigger star than anybody."

Pramela, a veteran actress, is another who has benefited from the boom, having acted in more than 100 soft-porn movies. As she unabashedly says: "If I don't strip, there are thousands of girls in Kodambakkam waiting to undress on the screen. If the story line demands it, I don't mind showing my body." There are other reasons as well. For a day's work, a female extra gets about Rs 2,000, compared to Rs 75 for an ordinary film.

The economics of soft-porn works in its favour. A Gopalakrishnan film can be made for less than Rs 7 lakh. For a three to six minute 'blue scene' for interpolation, the cost works out to around Rs 30,000. After shooting with the bare minimum of equipment—sometimes even a hand-held camera is used—the film is processed in a Madras studio laboratory. K.S. Gopalakrishnan charges Rs 75,000 per film while the rest of the artists and technicians put together would cost another Rs 75,000. There are no re-takes and dialogues are written on the sets.

Meanwhile, the state Government seems equally powerless to stem the tide. According to state Home Minister Vayalar Ravi: "Blue films are a cancer that has hit the commercial cinema in Kerala. We have cancelled the licence of a couple of theatres, but due to lack of manpower we are unable to stem the tide." Faced with this kind of an admission, Kerala's smut boom threatens to expand to proportions as uncontrollable as the actions of its purveyors on the screen.

—SREEDHAR PILLAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AUSTRALASIA CUP

Drama in the Desert

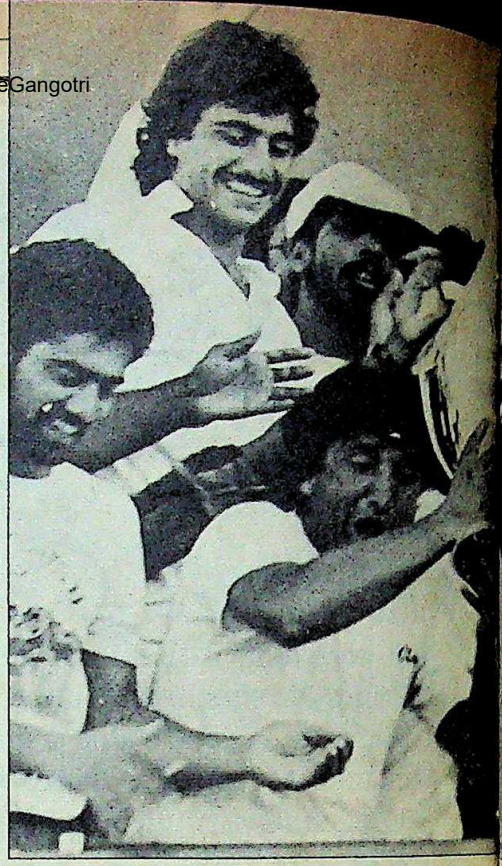
THE SETTING was right out of some book on the great moments in cricket history. One ball to go, four runs to get, one wicket in hand. As Chetan Sharma ran up to bowl the last ball in the final of the inaugural Australasia Cup in Sharjah, captain Kapil Dev and vice-captain Ravi Shastri walked up to counsel him. The advice: bowl a yorker. Facing him was one of the world's most competitive cricketers, Pakistan's Javed Miandad. Normally cocky, he was now fidgeting in his crease, his face betraying little emotion but his eyes gleaming in challenge. Back in the stands, the tension finally got too much for Indian manager Raj Singh Dungarpur, who left his seat in the players' enclosure to watch the match from a less conspicuous position. Rarely, even in one-day cricket, has one ball meant the difference between the heights of victory and the depths of defeat.

And for a long time after Miandad swung Sharma's full toss high over the mid-wicket fence, to give Pakistan its first major title in international one-day cricket, the finality of the result took time to register on the vanquished Indians. For a full 10 minutes not a man spoke in the Indian dressing-room. The door to the room stayed shut as alsatians and doberman pinschers of the Sharjah police, posted on guard outside, kept outsiders away. Chetan Sharma was almost disconsolate in grief, convinced that he had single-handedly lost the match. Even Raj Singh shed tears.

Emotion ran high among the Pakistanis also, for whom no victory in the field of sport is sweeter than one at the cost of India. Delirious Pakistani supporters in the full-to-20,000-capacity Sharjah Stadium waved flags and danced in abandon, chanting Ganpati Bappa So Gaya (in a response to the Indian supporters' earlier chant of Ganpati Bappa Morya when Sunil Gavaskar and Dilip Vengsarkar were on the rampage). Medium pacer Mohsin Kamal sobbed unashamedly, stopping only when the team was called for the prize-giving ceremony. In the fitness of things, Pakistani captain Imran Khan asked Miandad to receive the cup for the team. Pakistani supporters continued to crowd the streets outside the stadium, waiting to greet their heroes. By the evening, Sharjah's sweetmeat shops had run out of sweets as celebrating Pakistanis bought up every single item on the shelves.

Outplayed for most of the match, for Pakistan the victory was as unexpected as it was welcome. As former Indian spinner Dilip Doshi, who was present at Sharjah along with an amazingly high number of Indian board officials and former players, put it: "Pakistan are often too keen to do well against us, their arch-rivals. This builds up too much pressure on them which they cannot handle." As India built up a formidable total of 245 and Pakistan slid to 61 for three, Doshi's words were beginning to sound prophetic. Admitted Imran later: "At no stage did I think that we had a chance to win. When I and Manzoor (Elahi) got out, I gave up all hope."

There is an old Arab saying that



Pakistanis celebrating in Sharjah: suspenseful success

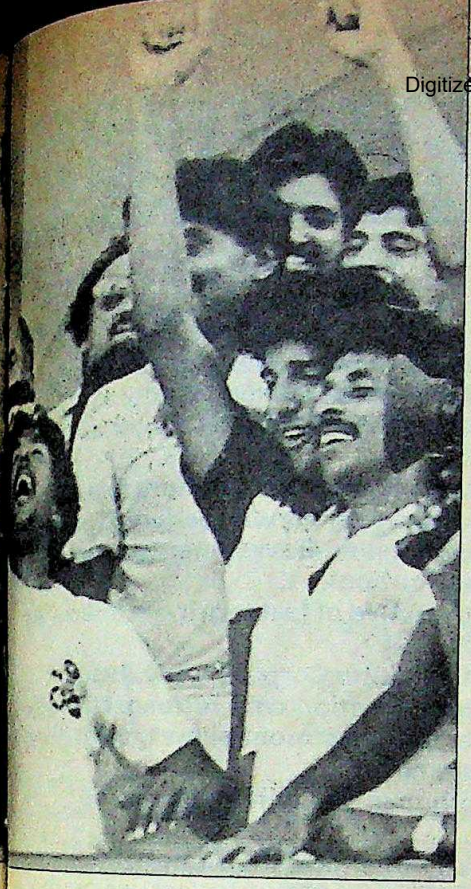
Gavaskar: satisfying series miracles occur only in the desert. The day, 29-year-old Miandad, a veteran of one-day internationals and the higher run-getter in this form of cricket in the Indian sub continent, decided to be miracle worker. Others have scored mo runs in one-day games—Vivian Richards holds the record for 18 against England—and Kapil Dev's 175 against Zimbabwe must rate the greatest with Indian fans. But, Imran said, Miandad's 116 off 11 balls seen, "in the context of the match, was one of the greatest knocks ever played". Said former England captain Tony Lewis "Miandad's innings was one of an mal intelligence and savage butch ery. Chetan Sharma just sort melted at the challenge."

Miandad not only single handedly won the match for Pak stan, but in doing so also proved th Pakistan can handle pressure. Th win is just the shot in the arm th Pakistan, a collection of brilliant individuals who have rarely play as a team, needed. Said Imran: "W have got over one of the bigge psychological barriers. It is the be thing that could have happened Pakistan cricket."

For India the match should ha

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



n Sharjah:
ess

e desert. Tha a veteran of d the highe cricket in t cided to be e scored mo ames—Vivia
ecord for 16
d Kapil Dev
e must rate
n fans. But,
's 116 off 11
ontext of th
the greate
. Said form
Tony Lew vas one of a savage butc just sort ge."
only sing
atch for Pa so proved th pressure. Th
the arm th
n of brilli
rarely play d Imran: "
f the bigge
s. It is the be e happened

h should ha

e as a welcome climax to an indifferson, a reaffirmation of its status as a champion; instead, India lost a it never should have. For Kapil, under a shadow for his inability to Test in the 20 he has captained, the h loss, which was preceded by the team's failure to win the Benson dges triangular series in Australia, engthened doubts about his s as a captain even in the cricket in which he led India top. Add to that several cable selection blunders, the l failure of the Indian bate-up till the final, and the of the bowlers to restrict the ion save on a pitch that offers nce, and the grim picture of cricket, post-Sharjah, is ee.

IA'S problems began in real-even before the team left the ores. In a split decision, the mber selection committee ded to reinstate Bombay's dashsman Sandeep Patil into the without quite realising that as been known to flourish n wickets where the ball s on to the bat while the pitch is known to be a low w turner. According to fordia captain 'Tiger' Pataudi:
y should never have taken
Patil for this tournament."

But having taken him into the 14-member squad, the three-member tour selection committee, which constituted of captain Kapil, team Manager Raj Singh and vice-captain Shastri, compounded their error by playing him in the first two matches at the cost of Dilip Vengsarkar, among the highest Indian run-getters in one-day cricket. Vengsarkar, ironically enough, was one of the two $50,000 beneficiaries of the tournament. Raj Singh, known to have been keen on Patil's inclusion in the squad, admitted on the eve of the first match against New Zealand: "Our problem is whom to drop." Patil, expectedly, flopped in the match but since he could not be dropped on the basis of only one poor performance was perforce also played against Sri Lanka, where again, he failed to make a mark for himself.

With Azharuddin also failing—former Pakistan captain Mushtaq Mohammed points out that one reason for Azharuddin's low scores is a tendency to play across the line too often—India's middle-order line-up, which let it down in the Benson and Hedges Cup, continued its slide. Set to score 133 to win against New Zealand, India was tottering at 25 for 4 against a side which did not have four of its main stars, including all rounder Richard Hadlee.

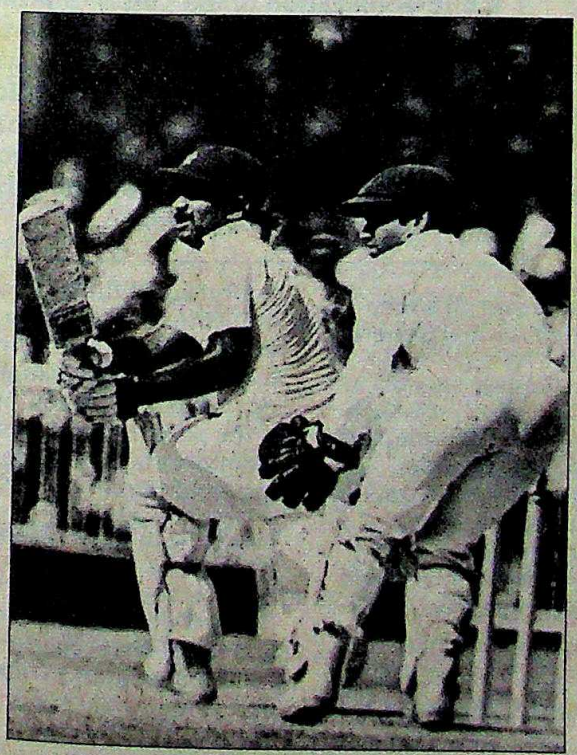
In the next match, against Sri Lanka, India were cruising to what seemed an easy victory till the team simply collapsed from 165 for one to 194 for 7. A certain win—and with it, India's chance of going into the final—now hung in the balance, and it was left to the cool-headed Ravi Shastri to get the runs for victory in the very last over. Admitted Chandu Borde, chairman of the selection committee, after the match: "Our middle-order batting has been pathetic." Even in the final, despite an exhilarating start by openers Krishnamachari Srikkanth and Sunil Gavaskar, the middle order failed to deliver in the final eight 'slog-overs', managing only 38 runs when another 20 might well have put more pressure on Pakistan than it could have handled.

Kapil's captaincy, right from the first match, was uninspired. Despite having three of his own overs in hand, he bowled Kirti Azad in the last two overs of the New Zealand innings. Azad gave away 26 runs in those 12 balls in a total of 132. Azad was similarly favoured in the batting order, being sent in as number five, ahead of better bats Shastri and Kapil himself. But Kapil's most glaring error, for which the legion of Indian cricket fans will never forgive him, was in not keeping the last over against Pakistan for himself. Says Mushtaq Mohammed: "The captain has to bring something out of his hat. Kapil lacks in positive thinking and imagination and his captaincy also lacks aggressiveness."

India's only gain from the tournament was a confirmation of the remarkable progress that Maninder Singh has made. Maninder has not been a regular in the one-day side but after his tight bowling at Sharjah, coupled with his brilliant fielding, he should be around for some time to come. Srikkant's welcome return to form and Gavaskar's 'Man of the Series' award were the other consolations for India. But that was a poor take from the richest-ever prize money tournament. Sharma's final ball alone cost the Indian team Rs 1.2 lakh, making it by far the costliest delivery in cricketing history.

—NAROTTAM PURI in Sharjah

Miandad: the lone ranger



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

modipon limited

COMPANY MEETING

SPEECH DELIVERED BY Shri K.N. Modi, Chairman, at the 20th Annual General Meeting of Modipon Ltd. on Monday the 31st March, 1986

HIGHLIGHTS

- Hon'ble Shri Rajiv Gandhi has made welcome thrusts towards modernising through advanced technology.
- Thrust of the industry should be on import substitution and larger exports.
- The Government has recognised need for more liberal legislations in various areas of economic activities as well as to have open dialogues between Government and Industry to evolve more progressive outlook.
- To achieve the above objective of faster growth, following measures are essential:
  - a. Continued tax rebate on Inter Corporate Dividend.
  - b. Review of interest capitalisation with retrospective effect.
  - c. Continued tax rebate for investment allowance to have growth of new Companies.
  - d. There should be one union in one unit for increased productivity.
- The business of Fibre and Chemical Divisions of the Company have shown growth of 17% and 25% over last year with improved profitability.
- Dividend of 20% on Equity Share Capital.
- With merger of Indofil Chemicals Ltd., Bombay, having been completed, Company has now a broad operational base.
- Company is in process of expanding its Nylon and Polyester capacity to 6000 and 3500 tonnes per annum respectively with latest technology of Spin Draw and Spun Dye from Snia Fibre, Italy.
- Implementation of the Letter of Intent to manufacture 4000 tonnes of Nylon Industrial Yarn/Tyre Cord as well as 3400 tonnes of Nylon Tyre/Industrial fabrics is underway. Company has entered into foreign collaboration with Unitika Japan.
- Industrial relations continue to remain harmonious and cordial. Continuous inter-action between managers and workforce. Workforce undergoing LENS programme on participative management.

Dear Shareholders,

I have great pleasure in extending to you all a very warm and cordial welcome to the 20th Annual General Meeting of your Company.

MODERN ERA

Our dynamic and young Prime Minister Hon'ble Shri Rajiv Gandhi has made welcome thrusts towards Modernizing through advanced technology and thus ushering in a Dynamic Era leading us to the 21st century. I take this opportunity to congratulate, on my own and on behalf of all of you, the Prime Minister and his Government on its dynamic and progressive policies and outlook.

EXPORT FRONT

One of the main thrusts of the industry should be import substitution and larger exports. The aim of industries should be to attain international standards in the quality of goods produced, its design and the technology used in manufacturing. This would enable our industry to enter the competitive global markets. It is the only solution for achieving favourable balance of payment status after repayment of IMF loan instalments.

LIBERAL LEGISLATION—OPEN GOVERNMENT—INDUSTRY DIALOGUE

It has been very heartening to note that Hon'ble Prime Minister, Finance Minister, Industry Minister and Labour Minister have in recent meetings with people from Industry and Trade consistently called for more liberal legislations in the various areas of economic

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ctivities as well as to have open dialogues between the overnment and the Industry to evolve more ogressive outlook.

MPORT OF TECHNOLOGY—STIMULUS TO LOCAL R & D

The Government has rightly been encouraging the port of technology for faster growth. However, lection of technology should be such that the local search and Development efforts are stimulated by e induction of new technology. Your Company with a od Research and Development base is in consent uch with the world leaders of technology for adoption d absorption of the best.

ERATIONS

I am happy to inform you that the turnover and ofits of the Company during the year have shown an cellent growth.

	This Year	Last Year
	(Rs. in Crores)
rnover	162.78	118.25
oss Profit	13.89	5.38
Profit after Tax	5.17	0.54

The business of the Fibre and the Chemical Divisions your Company have shown a growth of17% and 25% pectively over the last year with improved plant rformance and profitability.

IDEND

Your Directors are pleased to recommend for your proval a dividend of 20% on the Equity Share Capital against 12% last year.

ALGAMATION OF INDOFIL CHEMICALS LTD.

The merger of Indofil Chemicals Ltd., Bombay, with Company in terms to the Scheme of Amalgamation s been successfully completed during the year. The business of your Company shall now be sacted through two business divisions in the name Modipon Fibres Company' and 'Indofil Chemicals'. virtue of this merger, your Company has now a ed operational base.

ODIPON FIBRES COMPANY

This Division has two business, namely, Polyester ament Yarn and Nylon Filament Yarn. The business now divided into two business units:

Polyester Yarn Business

Polyester Filament Yarn has shown spectacular mpound rate of growth of 43% per annum during the five years and it is expected that its overall nsumption shall touch 1,15,000 tonnes by 1990. In dition to our endeavour to increase further the mpany's current market share of 5%, with market turing, our strategy calls for concentration on owing segment of speciality products which are far re remunerative and most of which are currently ng imported.

You will be happy to know that your Company has eady started manufacturing some of the varieties of eciality products which have been well accepted in market.

Company has entered into a long term technical collaboration agreement with Snia Fibre, Italy, for the transfer of most modern and latest technology in Spin Draw and Spun Dye for the manufacture of high quality speciality yarns with lower manufacturing costs as a result of reduction in multi-steps processes in conventional technology to a single/double step process, resulting in savings in energy, utilities and labour and increased production of quality yarns with lower waste. Many of such speciality yarns would be produced for the first time in India. Snia Fibre, Italy, are world leaders in development of technology and manufacture of wide range of synthetic fibre and are foremost in production of Spin Draw and Spun yarns. The Spun Dyed yarn would find a big market such as Luggage and Upholstery for Cars and Furniture.

Apart from manufacturing of Spun Dye and Spin Draw yarns, Company would continue to manufacture POY. The Company is further equipping itself for manufacture of various Lustures at the same time by installing several small reactors rather than having one large reactor which some of our competitors have.

(b) Nylon Yarn Business

The compound rate of growth of Nylon Filament Yarn business has been 13.5% during the last five years. The Company is the third largest producer of Nylon in the country and is further proposing to induct high technology by replacing many of its old conventional machines with high speed spinning machines so as to improve the quality. Like Polyester, in Nylon area also, the Spin Draw and the Spun Dye technology of Snia Fibre, Italy, will be extended thereby reaping the benefits of reduced manufacturing costs and improved product quality. Your company will be able to supply economically large sized packages to its consumers. Thus in Nylon business, the Company will become a leader in quality and cost efficiency.

INDOFIL CHEMICALS COMPANY

With the know-how from Rohm and Haas Co., U.S.A., the Company manufactures and markets wide range of Agricultural and Industrial Chemicals which are organised into two businesses.

(a) Agricultural Chemicals Business

Indofil is a leader in Fungicide marketed in India. Its brand name 'Dithane' is well known throughout India amongst the farmers. Dithane has experienced 15% compound growth per year during the last five years. The Dithane Plant is proposed to be completely modernised to adopt the latest and most modern production technology with excellent safety equipment. The first stage of modernisation of the Dithane Plant with this objective has already been completed during the year.

'Kelthane', the other successful product is also expected to have 15% growth in volume.

Company has applied for registration of some new chemicals of Rohm and Haas Co., U.S.A. for introduction in India.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

(b) Industrial Chemicals Business

In this area, a wide range of industrial chemicals are produced which are primarily used by Leather, Plastic, Textile, Paints, Paper and PVC industries. Your Company's Leather chemicals enjoy excellent brand loyalty amongst tanners for the finishing leather for export and home market. The other chemicals also command a major market share which will be further enhanced by introduction of new products, such as speciality binders and the Viscosity flow improver, currently under development at Company's R & D centre. The Company expects a growth of 10% in the Industrial chemicals field.

HEALTH AND ENVIRONMENT

The Company is conscious of ensuring safety and health of the employees and society in general as well as for protection of the environment. Both the Fibre and Chemical Divisions of the Company are constantly working towards achieving this objective by spending a substantial amount on equipment and training.

MODERNISATION, EXPANSION AND DIVERSIFICATION

Your Company is now in the process of expanding its Nylon and Polyester capacity to 6000 tonnes and 3500 tonnes per annum respectively, with the latest technology of Spin Draw and Spun Dye from Snia Fibre, Italy. The Company is also taking necessary action for modernisation of the utilities and existing Nylon and Polyester production facilities.

Company has taken concrete steps for the implementation of the Letter of Intent to manufacture 4000 tonnes of Nylon Industrial Yarn/Tyre Cord and 3400 tonnes of Nylon Tyre/Industrial fabrics. For this Company has entered into a foreign collaboration agreement with Unifika, Japan, for latest Spin Draw technology. The modified agreement is under the active consideration of the Government.

The total capital outlay of Modernisation-cum-Expansion and Diversification projects is estimated at Rs. 119 crores, which your Company proposes to meet through Debentures, Long Term Loans and through its Own Contributions. Applications for financial assistance are under active consideration of the All India Financial Institutions.

In accordance with the Government's liberalised licensing policy for synthetic yarn, representations are being made to the Government to grant permission for expansion of Nylon capacity to 12,000 TPA and of Polyester to 15,000 TPA. These expanded and diversified manufacturing facilities will enable the Company to take advantage of the broad-banding policy of the Government and will provide flexibility and manoeuvrability to respond to changing market trends and consumer preference for synthetic filament yarn.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

Industrial relations continue to remain harmonious and cordial. Fibre Division of the Company entered into a novel three years wage settlement with its workforce which would be valid upto June, 1988. Under the said settlement, rationalisation of man power has been achieved and the man power so saved shall be gainfully utilised in expansion and modernisation after proper reorientation.

In the Chemical Division also, relations with union were cordial.

HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT

People are most important resources we have in Modipon family. With a view to equip ourselves to meet the needs for high technology products, it is essential to train, retrain and redeploy our workforce. With that objective, intensive inter-action between Managers and workforce have taken place during the year. Young energetic Managers are getting ready with phased and intensive training imparted to them at prestigious institutions, like Indian Institute of Technology and Management Development Institute, in specifically developed programmes. During 1985, over 70% of our workforce had undergone specially designed time bound training and retraining programmes including Statistical ouality Control techniques to improve productivity and quality.

On participative management, more than 40% of the workforce has undergone the LENS (Leadership Effectiveness and New Strategies) training programme wherein the Managers and the workmen collectively identify their problems, analyse them and find solutions themselves and bring in all round improvement at the shop floor. Useful suggestions have been pouring in from all levels to improve the process and production methods.

Our Hon'ble Labour Minister has very recently pointed out that to bring in a more progressive and constructive work environment, it is very necessary to educate the workforce as well as to bring a legislation which will eliminate the current pattern of multiple unions. The education programmes in our company are aimed at creating greater awareness and sense of responsibility and belonging amongst the entire workforce.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

The success of your Company has indeed been the result of harmonious labour-management relations and the untiring efforts of staff and workers at all levels which I deeply acknowledge. My sincere thanks are due to my colleagues on the Board of Directors for their valuable guidance. I am also grateful to the Central and State Governments, Financial Institutions, Banks and our collaborators, Messrs Rohm and Haas Co., U.S.A. for their continued support and valuable assistance. Thanks are also due to our dealers and customers. It is our endeavour to always provide them the best products and services. Finally, I offer my heartfelt thanks to our esteemed shareholders and investors for the trust reposed in the management.

Thank you.

K.N. MODI
CHAIRMAN

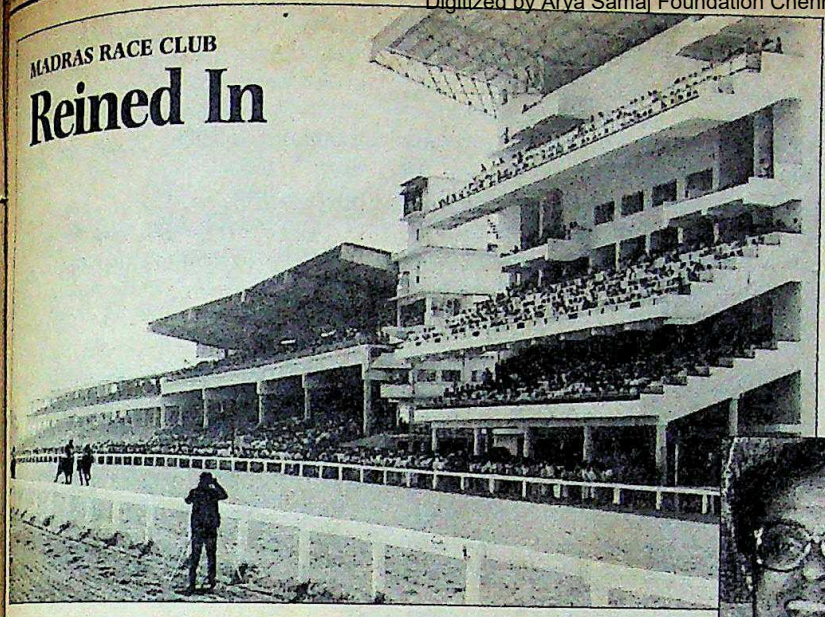
Note: This does not purport to be a record of the proceedings of the Annual General Meeting.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MADRAS RACE CLUB

Reined In



The Madras Race club and (inset) Shankar: takeover trauma

THE ANNUAL horse-racing season in Tamil Nadu opened with traditional fanfare in the hill resort of Ootacamund last fortnight, but all the action and the bedlam seemed to be concentrated in Madras. Or, more precisely, in the Madras Race Club (MRC), which finds itself hobbled following what amounts to virtual nationalisation by the state Government. The Tamil Nadu Government's unprecedented decision—this is the first time that a government has taken over the business of horse-racing in the country—was taken at a furious gallop. The bill proposing the take-over was introduced in the state assembly late last January and passed the following day. The requisite Presidential assent came last fortnight.

What urged the state Government to take the bit between its teeth were its allegations that "the committee of management of the MRC is ridden with factions and that the affairs of the said club are not conducted properly," and that there were "instances of irregularities and malpractices in the conduct of horse-racing...causing substantial loss of revenue to the Government." And though it is business as usual at the MRC, which is now a public limited company and the reins of the racing business (MRC's last profit was Rs 30 lakh in the 1985-86 season) are now in the hands of a new factory—P. Shankar, an IAS officer, formerly general manager of the Handicrafts and Handloom Export Corporation, who has been appointed for one year to the temporary post of custodian of the Department of Racing. The eventual plan is to set up a racing corporation to supervise the operations of the 208-year-old club, the oldest in the country.

But the Government's proposed plans will hardly be smooth running. Already, the move has sparked off serious objections from the powerful lobby of race horse owners and club members. Charged a prominent horse owner who has been a steward with the club for nearly 15 years: "This legislation has been rushed through. There was no proper debate in the Assembly and the reasons the Government has advanced for taking this step are not at all tenable." An incensed Dr K.R. Lakshmanan, a managing committee member of the club, promptly filed a writ petition before the Supreme Court challenging the take-over and seeking that it be declared null and void. The basic question his petition raised was whether it was proper for a state government to conduct gambling—after all, the DMK government of M. Karunanidhi had promulgated an ordinance abolishing racing, terming it one of the "five great sins" and Law Minister C.Ponnaiyan, who jockeyed the take-over bill in the assembly, told the House that the Government would abolish racing. The Supreme Court had issued a stay order but the AIADMK Government filed a petition in October 1985 asking for speedy disposal of the case.

The charge of factionalism that the managing committee of the MRC has been saddled with is refuted by critics who point out that the Government has not specified instances of mismanagement and irregularities nor does it show evidence of having conducted a proper inquiry into complaints. Lakshmanan has claimed that the club's own profits would have been affected if it had encouraged illegal betting. The state Government gets a fixed 20 per cent betting tax but the club gets a 5 per cent commission on the betting amounts.

The petition also makes the telling legal point that "the Government's power to acquire property cannot be used to raise revenue." Interestingly enough, officials of the Commercial Taxes Department, who are present during race meetings, have not made any complaints about illegal (coded) betting.

Strangely enough, neither of the four government nominees on the managing committee has ever voiced complaints. Even more oddly, none of them has ever been known to attend committee meetings except to vote in a new chairman. And this is perhaps where the rub lies. The 12 elected members of the committee are evenly divided into two camps—for and against the uncrowned racing czar of Tamil Nadu, M.A.M. Ramaswamy, owner of the largest stable of 150 horses and winner of 100 classics. Right from 1978, Chief Minister M.G.Ramachandran has consistently directed official nominees to vote against Ramaswamy, thus preventing him from being elected chairman since then. But the latter has used his enormous influence in the committee, which, in the absence of government nominees, has enabled him to get his way. Insiders believe MGR's move is a last ditch attempt at breaking Ramaswamy's hold.

If it is, consequently, a case of jockeying for power, the only loser will be the MRC. Shankar claims that "the race-going public are happy that we are conducting the races in a fair manner." G. Ganapathy, managing committee member, adds that: "It is true there were a lot of malpractices in the administration of the club earlier." But the main doubts revolve around the propriety of the Government's action and whether its officials, untrained in the complex world of the horse-racing business, will be able to effectively supervise the affairs of the club or, for that matter, put the brakes on malpractices. Racing's reins may have changed hands but nobody is betting on the eventual winner.

—S.H. VENKATRAMANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Last Roar

AATISH-E-CHINAR
by SHEIKH MOHAMMAD ABDULLAH
Ali Mohammed & Sons, Srinagar
Pages: 961; Price: Rs 125

NO OTHER Kashmiri leader so completely dominated the political scene in the state and for so long as did Sheikh Mohammad Abdullah. For nearly five decades, he was at the centre of some of the most significant developments in Kashmir. Even today—four years after his death—the very mention of his name inspires awe and reverence among Kashmiris.

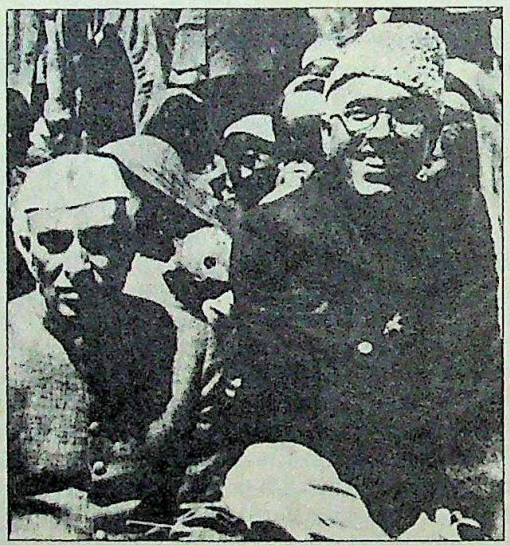
His fearlessness earned him the title of "Sher-e-Kashmir". He devoted his life to the preservation of the Kashmiri identity, and paid a heavy price for it, spending half his life in jail. It is one of the ironies of history that the man who was instrumental in mobilising Muslim opinion in the valley in favour of India after Partition was later accused of being anti-national and jailed, first by his friend and fellow Kashmiri Jawaharlal Nehru, and then by Indira Gandhi.

In his autobiography written in Urdu, Aatish-e-Chinar (The Fire of the Chinar), which he finished shortly before his death and which was published posthumously last month, he notes more in anguish than anger that when the Kashmir Assembly first met in 1951, it was he who strongly advocated that the people of Kashmir should cast their lot with India; yet he was later accused of anti-national activities. "Thirty years have passed since then and we have gone through hell. We have been subjected to all kinds of sufferings and humiliation, and yet I stand by what I said then: the solution that I offered then (union with India) is still valid."

He told the people that there were three options open to them: go over to Pakistan, remain an independent state, or become part of the Indian union. "I told them that they can choose any of the three options, but they must remember that the need of the moment was to get liberation from the oppressive Dogra rule and that could be more effectively achieved while maintaining the status quo...that is, remain with India."

A three-member delegation from Pakistan was sent to Kashmir to persuade him to cast his lot with Pakistan. Dr Mohammad Deen Taseer, was the most eloquent and aggressive member of the delegation, and when he suggested that Kashmir should opt for Pakistan, an indignant Sheikh told him: "It is none of your business to tell us what to do." During the heated argument, Taseer said that if the Sheikh did not agree, Pakistan would have to use "other means". Retorted the Sheikh: "Do whatever you like, but to enter Kashmir you will have to walk over our dead bodies."

It was the same Sheikh whom the Centre later accused of being in collusion with Pakistan and the US. The Sheikh describes how he was detained without being served a formal charge-sheet, and the embarrassment this caused to Nehru when the issue was repeatedly raised at international forums. Yet Sheikh Abdullah does not allow political differences to come in the way of his relations with Nehru, and in a moving chapter, he describes his last meeting with the man who had been his friend as well as his "persecutor". He writes: "From the (Delhi) airport I drove straight to Teen Murti House with Indiraji, and Panditji received me with great warmth. But he was not the same person. I was meeting him after 11 years. When I had met him 11 years ago, he was as fresh as a rose and now he looked like a withered flower. His back was bent, his face was wrinkled and the effects of the stroke he had suffered were all too evident. And he seemed to say: 'Koi dam ka mahman hoon, ai ahle mehfil, chiragh-ee sehar hoon bujah chahta hoon' (I am a guest here for a few moments, and like a candle I am about to burn myself as the morning approaches).



Sheikh Abdullah with Nehru

The Sheikh says that he regarded Nehru as his brother and what the latter did to him as part of the political game came to him as a shock. And he was convinced that had Mahatma Gandhi not been killed by Godse, "the Kashmiri people would have realised their dream of a really autonomous Kashmir".

He also talks about the Kashmir accord which he signed with the Indira Gandhi government. He points out that the way All India Radio reported the accord created doubts in his mind—doubts which would later prove true. The Sheikh does not mince words in condemning Congressmen for "betraying" the accord.

He also comes down heavily on Dr Karan Singh and his family, which he says ruled Kashmir with ruthlessness. About Dr Karan Singh's own appointment as Sadar-e-Riyasat, he says that this was done against his (Sheikh's) wishes. And Singh's performance vindicated the Sheikh.

If the Sheikh's tone throughout his autobiography sounds self-righteous, arrogant and often irreverent, one has to take into account that he, by far the tallest among Kashmiris in this century, felt betrayed by some of his closest friends, be it Nehru, Bakshi, Sadiq or his inquisitors Maulana Azad and Rafi Ahmed Kidwai, who resented him as a leader with a genuine mass base among Muslims. The only other nationalist Muslim leader with such a powerful base was Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan who, not surprisingly, comes out in a better light in the autobiography. All said and done, the Sheikh's autobiography is a fairly truthful account of a life spent in upholding the dignity of a long-oppressed people. If it is bitter, the blame lies not with the Sheikh, but the Sheikh-baiters who should have remembered that he was a proud, almost vain, individual.

One wishes though that an English version of the autobiography had been attempted simultaneously. The Sheikh's Master's in Science notwithstanding, was not much of a wordsmith and one has the feeling that even the Urdu version has been doctored.

—M.L. KOTRU

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Time can make you.. Or break you

Usually most crucial things in life need you to be awake when you're asleep.

Flight time, exam time, meeting time.... time.... time !!

But sleep doesn't understand all this.

NEWBEN Quartz does.

It doesn't chirp and beep, putting you to deeper sleep.

Its resounding Back Bell alarm rings loud and clear, whenever you want it—without giving up till you're awake.

NEWBEN's classic styling and affordable mix of features make it the perfect buy indeed.

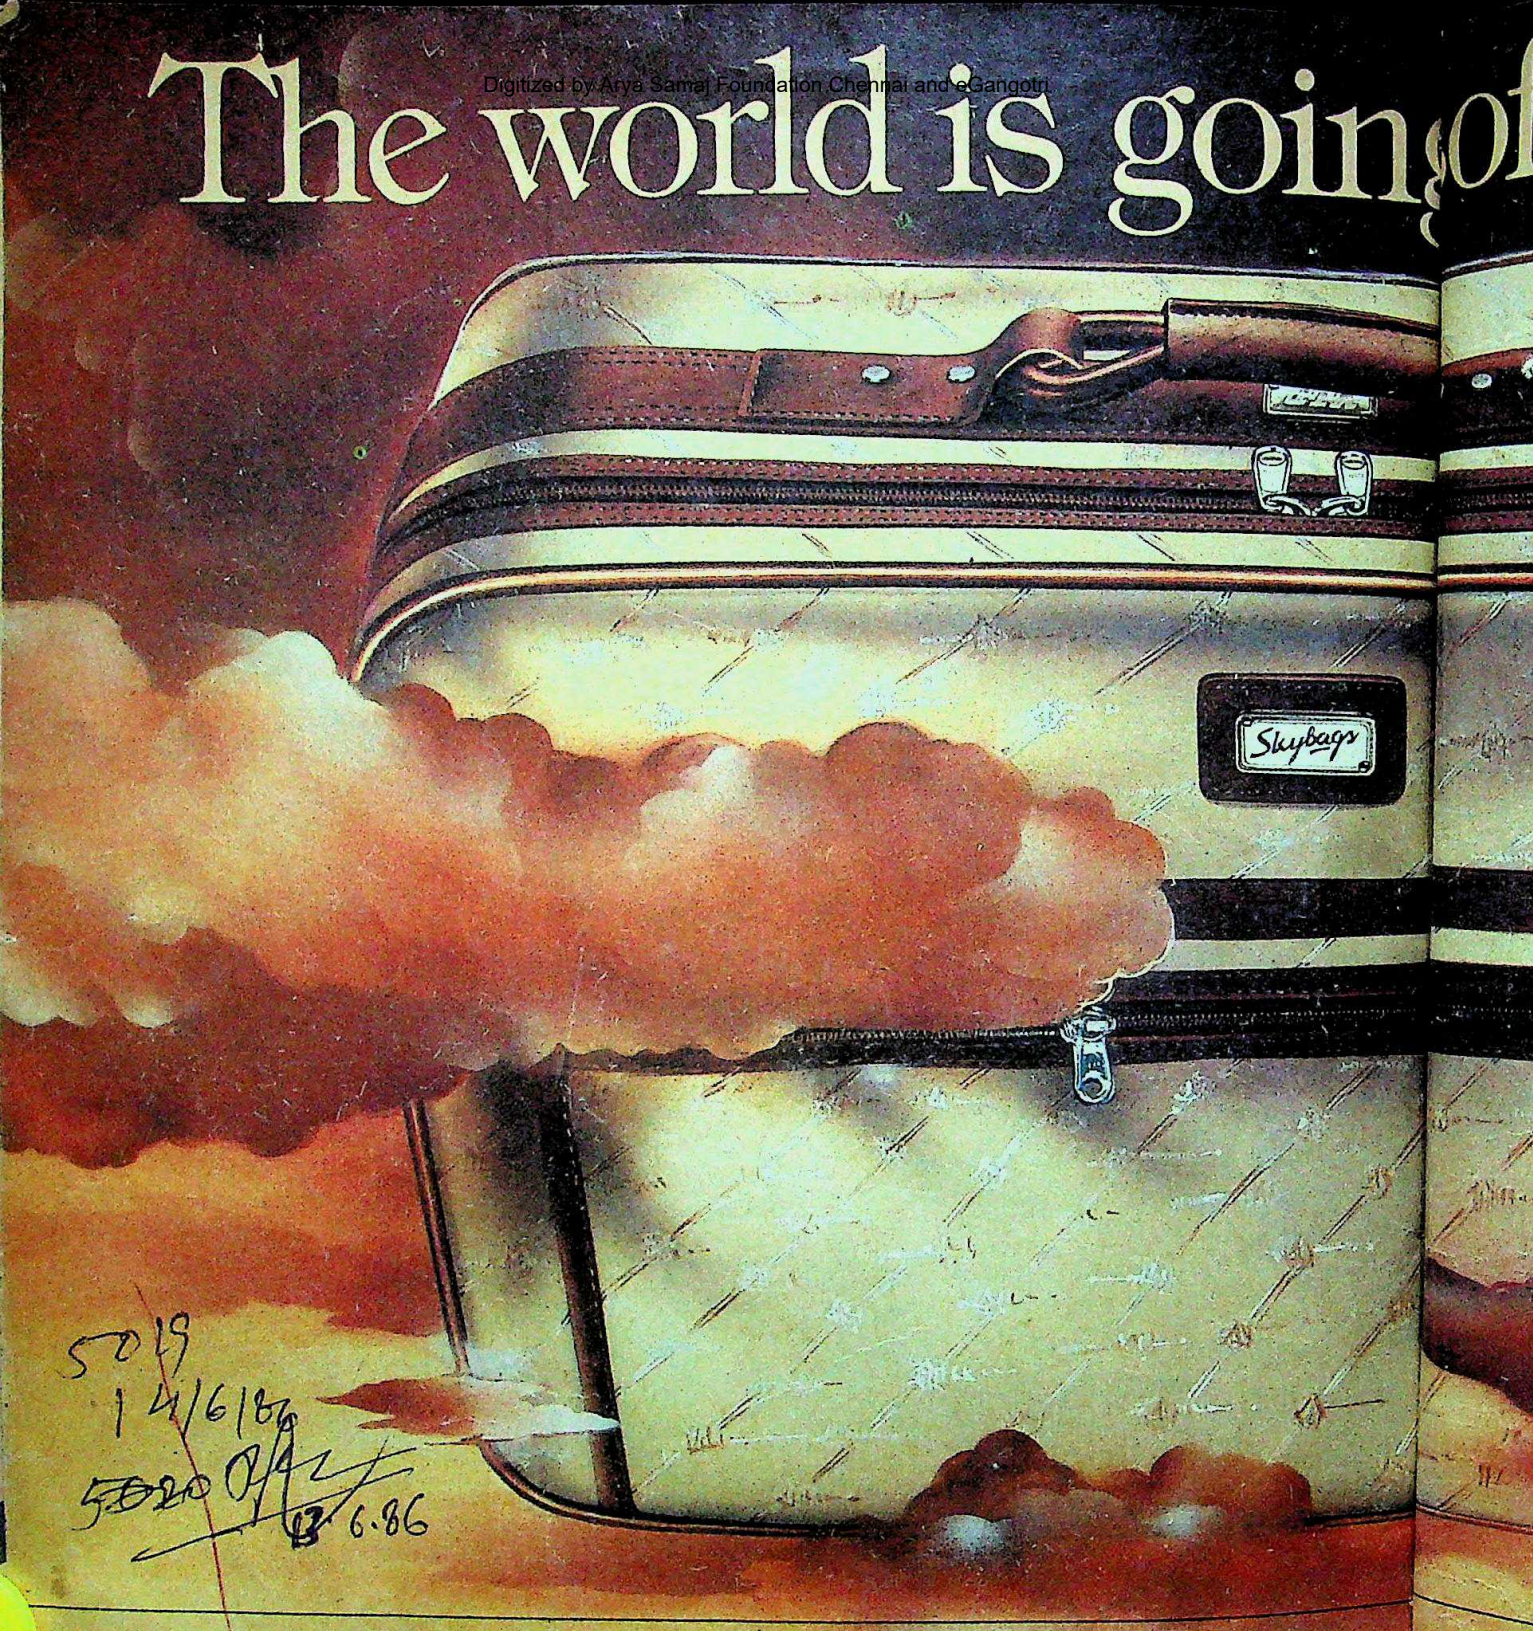
Take home a Newben today, and catch time before it makes you.... napping !!

NEWBEN can wake you

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The world is going o



Now Skybags brings the Soft Revolution to India. This exciting new range of nylon luggage from VIP is the ultimate in travelling style and comfort. Light-weight, really roomy, beautifully functional. And sensationally tough.

Fashioned from strong, tear resistant nylon, Skybags survive the torture of travel with remarkable ease. Only VIP's special care in manufacture and high quality standards could create such beauty with such toughness.

So before you pick your next destination, pick your Skybags from a dazzling selection of styles, colours and shapes. They're guaranteed to make you soft on them from the word Go!

SOFT. STRONG. STYLISH.

LINTAS VIP S 5 2741

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ng oft today

... and feeling lighter for it!

Skybags

ylon luggage from the leader V.I.P.

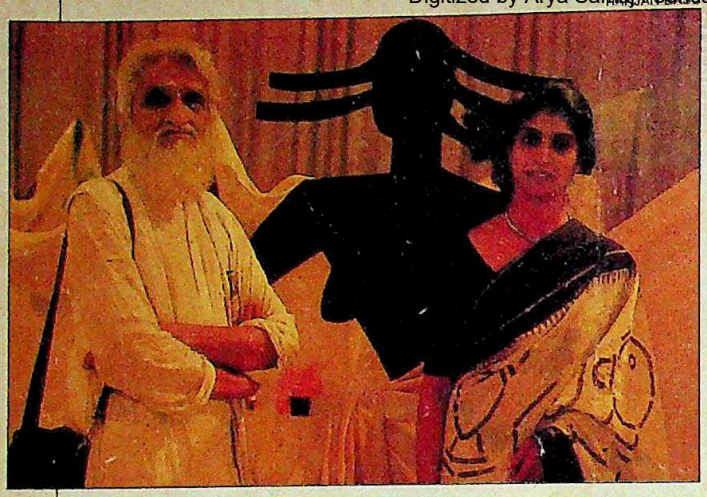
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

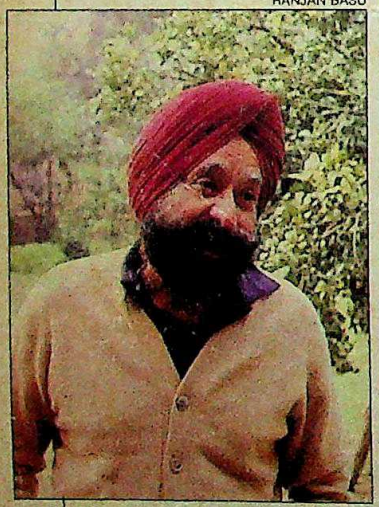
RAJU MUKHI



Husain with daughter Raeesa: a master stroke

◆ If there was a Pulitzer prize for bad taste, the current and former editors of The Hindustan Times would be leading contendors. The two have been involved in an unseemly slanging match which began when Khushwant Singh charged in a magazine interview that the HT staff was

RANJAN BASU



Khushwant: in bad taste

illiterate or semi-literate. Current editor N.C. Menon hit back in an editorial, accusing Singh of being "an over-ardent devotee of Bacchus who has...an obsession with buttocks and bosoms" and "cadged" free trips for himself and his family members. Menon's childish outburst brought the squabble home to lakhs of readers; the main casualty was the prestige of The Hindustan Times.

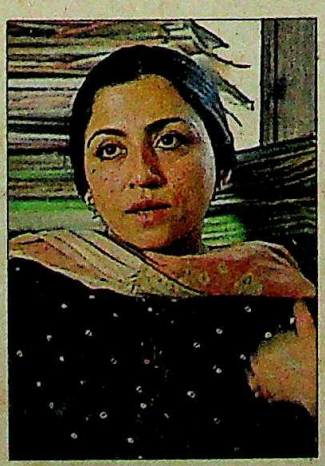
◆ The next time you see a woman wearing a sari like an M.F. Husain painting, don't be surprised: it is an M.F. Husain painting. Or, to be precise, Husain fabricated. By none other than petite and dusky daughter Raeesa Husain, 33. After dabbling in painting, poetry and garment export, she has now begun woodcut prints and hand-paints of her father's works. Last fortnight, she displayed her exorbitantly-priced saris, scarves and dupattas with the familiar horses and Durgas in Delhi. Said Raeesa: "He had never touched fabrics. So I thought I'd beat him to it." And the master added: "After being hung, it makes me feel nice to be worn. It gives movement to my figures. It also brings me closer to people." Close enough for commerce too.

◆ Her strength defies her frail 5 feet some inches. It's all too apparent: in her blunt statements, her wry humour and her inscrutable, almost opaque brown eyes. And if Madhu Kishwar, 35, is no usual bra-burning feminist, but women and their problems remain her prime concern. Her constant, nagging preoccupation is how to make Manushi, her Delhi-based women's group and magazine, grow without making any compromises. So when the Media Foundation announced her name for this year's Chameli Devi Jain award last fortnight for "editorial versatility of a high order", she accepted it after deliberation. Said Kishwar: "I see it as an extension of the love and care that so many people have poured into Manushi ev since it started in 1979."

◆ His dance extravaganzas still open to full houses. His lavish sets, loud costumes and theatrical characters still hold a quaint, old-world appeal for movie-goers. Last fortnight, V. Shantaram, 85, the grand old man of Indian cinema released his autobiography. A veritable tome in Marathi, it traces his eventful life, his three marriages, and career of 66 years. After directing 55 films and acting in 23, he is not finished with the medium yet. Says Shantaram: "I want to make a film on how man has developed in the 5,000 years since the Mahabharata was written and how he will develop in the next 100."

◆ He is better known for crafting successful films with partner James Ivory. But there is another deliciously secret side to Ismail Merchant, Bombay-born producer of films like Heat and Dust, The Bostonians and his latest, A Room with a View. Merchant is also a gourmet cook with a talent for turning out unique Indian

Kishwar: staunch feminist



PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Shantaram: omnipresent patriarch cuisine at legendary Sunday lunches where the guest list includes the like of Ingrid Bergman and Christopher Reeves. His epicurean efforts include such mouth-watering fantasies as "Ganga Jamuna

Merchant: secrets of the table sabzi', 'Ismail's stuffed turkey' and 'fasting day potatoes'. Says he: "The old concepts are dead. No longer do you have two boys to grind the masala, two to stir and a khansama to oversee. You're on your own and you better be good." After concerted urging from satisfied guests, Merchant has put his creations into a slickly-produced recipe book certain to increase his pan following.

—Compiled by MOHAMMED ASLAM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri present

Sunday
guest list
f Ingrid ristopher n efforts watering Jamuna

the table d turkey' potatoes' ncepts are you have e masala, nsama to your own od." After om satis-

t has put ckly-proertain to owing:
MED ASLAM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

12992
12991
12990
12989

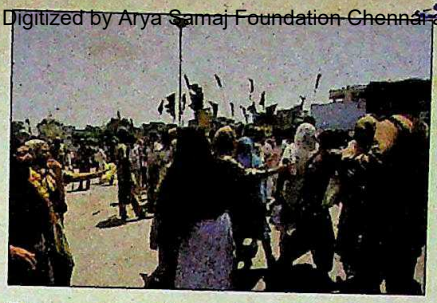
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Militant Revivalism

Slowly but surely, a resurgent and increasingly militant movement of Hindu revivalism is sweeping across the country. The message in the new militancy is that the minorities are being pampered while the majority has been restrained from asserting Hindu nationalism.

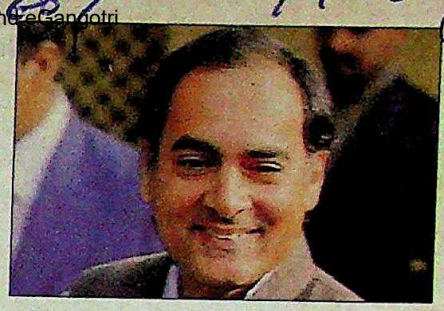
COVER STORY 76



Return to Uncertainty

Punjab edged closer to the brink of yet another crisis as the Surjit Singh Barnala Ministry was reduced to a minority following a split in the ruling Akali Dal Party. The power struggle within the party has dangerous implications for the troubled state.

SPECIAL REPORT 26



"We have to push harder"

In an exclusive interview to INDIA TODAY last fortnight, Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi revealed that there has been a significant shift in his thinking. He no longer speaks of the 21st century; instead, there is a repeated harking back to old values and principles.

INTERVIEW OF THE FORTNIGHT 68

A Tragic Farce

Last fortnight's parliamentary elections in Bangladesh seem to have ended up a farcical failure. The election was marred by violence and massive rigging and booth-capturing by General Ershad's Jatiya Party. An on-the-spot report.

NEIGHBOURS 114

The Great Thirst

Despite massive efforts by the Government, the acute water shortage all over the country has acquired catastrophic dimensions, specially in the vast rural belt where the endless struggle for water has become a poignant human tragedy.

SPECIAL FEATURE 126

Opus Magnum

Big is once again beautiful in the Indian cinema industry. A rash of recent movies has signalled a return to a bygone era where gigantic sets captured the sweeping grandeur of mythology and historical romance. The new trend makes a mockery of film budgets.

CINEMA 142

CONTENTS

COMMENT 9
CAPITALOOK 12
VOICES 18
INDIANOTES 23
SPECIAL REPORT
Punjab: Return to Uncertainty 26
CURRENT EVENTS
Cabinet Reshuffle: Playing it Safe 32
Congress(I): Dissident Dangers 38
The Prime Minister: Instant Drama 40
Andhra Pradesh: Prize Catch 41
Darjeeling: Separatist Shock 44
West Bengal: Urban Strategy 49
Bihar: Deadly Division 50
Maharashtra: Ill Winds 55
Belgaum: Saffron War 59
Janata Party: Hard Times 60
Haryana: Bhajan's Bind 65
Kerala: The Victor's Spoils 67
INTERVIEW OF THE FORTNIGHT
Rajiv Gandhi: "We have to push harder" 68
COVER STORY
Hindus: Militant Revivalism 76
STATENOTES 86
TRADE WINDS 89
BUSINESS
Television Advertising: Tapping Technology 90
Modvat: Compounding Confusion 97
BHEL: Thinking Big 101
Public Sector: Alien Proposal 102
The Economy Monitor 107
Markets: Sudden Slump 108
NEIGHBOURS
Afghanistan: Search for a Solution 113
Bangladesh Elections: A Tragic Farce 114
Sri Lanka: Ominous Portents 117
GLOBE-TROTTING
Lord Mountbatten: Lament for Louis 118
United States: Academic Stir 120
HEALTH
Tamil Nadu: The Aids Scare 125
SPECIAL FEATURE
Water: The Great Thirst 126
EDUCATION
Medical Colleges: Test Case 134
RELIGION
Banjaras: Embracing Sikhism 139
CINEMA
Films: Opus Magnum 142
LIVING
Gayatri Devi: The Royal Rift 148
SPORTS
Chess: Masterly Play 152
EYE-CATCHERS 156

Cover photograph by HARI OM GULATI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

CAN THE POWER OF THE MIND BEND A STRIP OF STEEL?

At TI Engineering, the mind indeed controls matter. Our fund of metallurgical and processing knowhow determines the forms we are able to achieve with a steel strip.

Our metallurgists and scientists are engaged in an on-going study of the very vitals of steel. How to alter the characteristics of the metal. Or upgrade its structure. Or improve its formability.

At our R & D Centre, recognised by the Department of Science and Technology, sophisticated equipment like the Atomic Absorption Spectrophotometer and the Scanning Electron Microscope are used to analyse the metallurgical structure and other critical properties of steel.

On the shopfloor, our engineers know the precise processing parameters that will extract quality from a steel strip. How to cold roll and improve metal hardness. How to bend and weld a tube to a high precision specification. How to form a section imparting a tensile strength.

With all make a st
As cold mponents precision ck absor ned meta struction
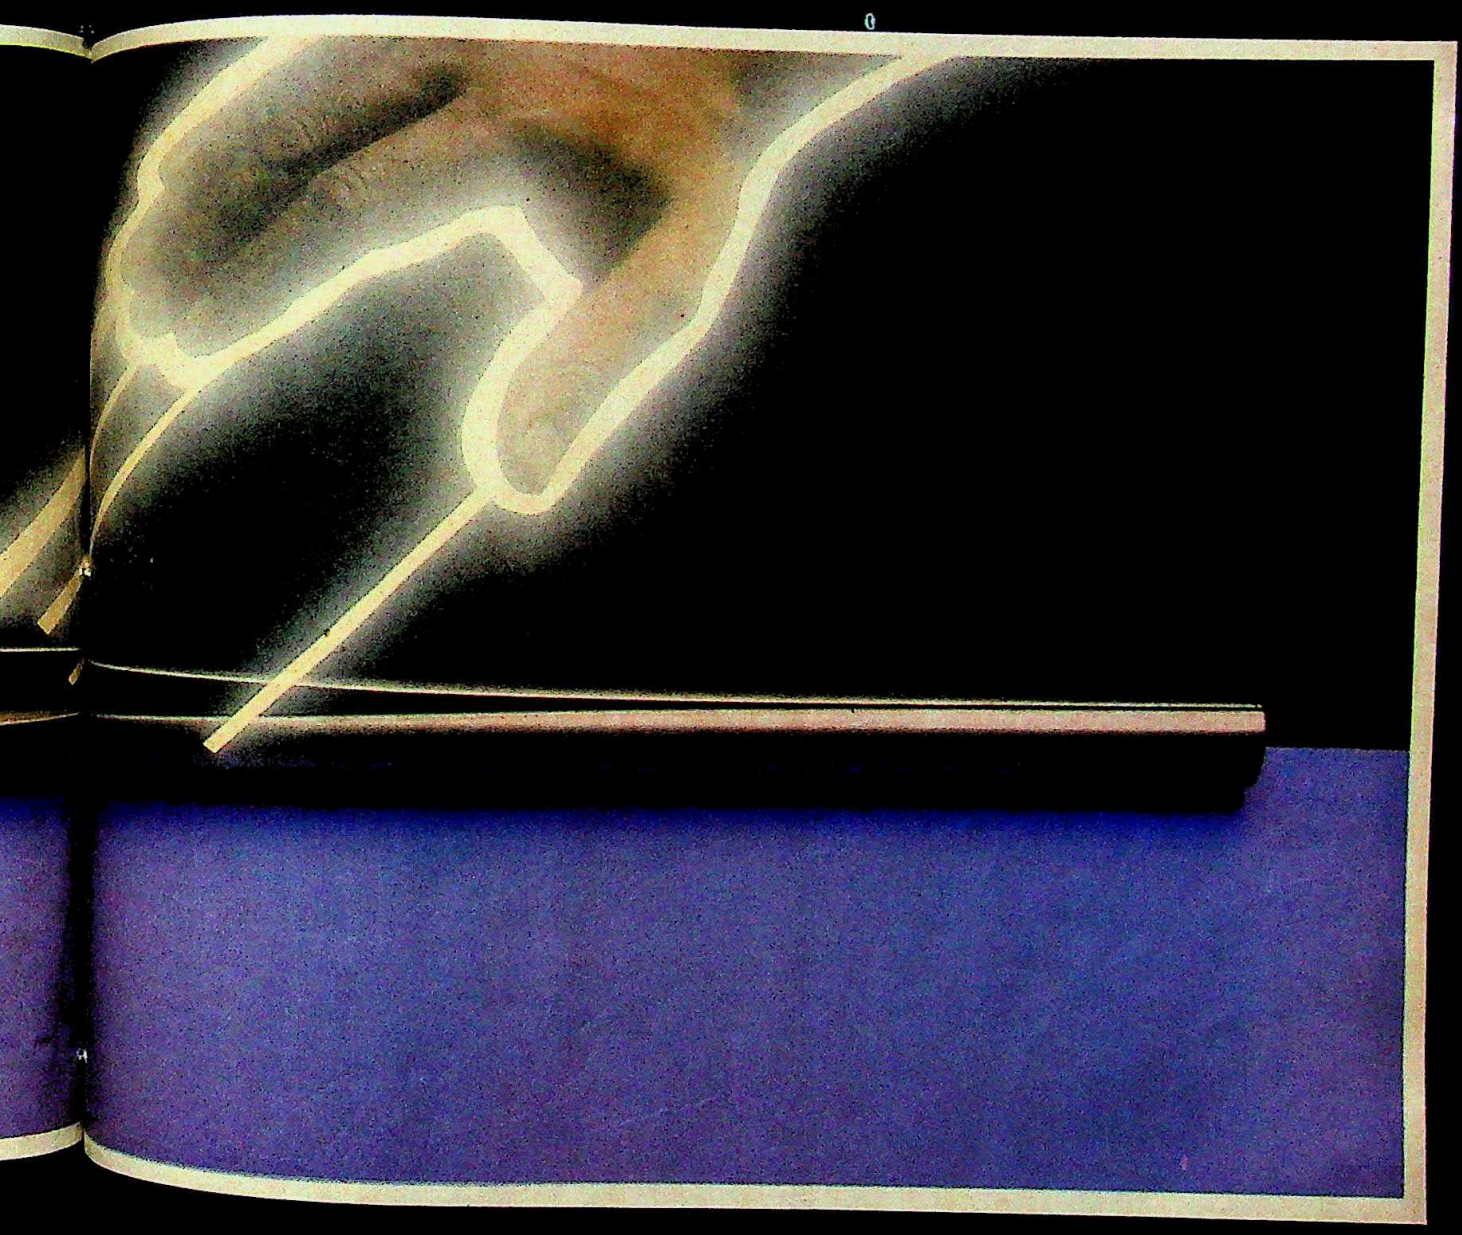
a few ex
TI Engin



With all this wealth of experience, we are able to make a steel strip live a myriad different lives. As cold rolled strips for automotive and cycle components, refrigerators and electrical products. Precision tubes for applications ranging from shock absorbers to high pressure boilers. As cold formed metal sections that induce economies in the construction and automotive industries. These are just a few examples.

TI Engineering, a division of Tube Investments of India Ltd., represents a synergy of strengths ... Metallurgical and process knowhow backed by the resources of TI of the U.K. Application engineering. Innovative design. Forward thinking. And a reputation for committed customer service.

That's why, whether it's strips, tubes or sections, you can rely on TI Engineering to provide the best value for your needs. Today ... and in the years to come.

TI ENGINEERING

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Colour by Weston!

Weston®

SERVICE CENTRE FOR HITACHI (JAPAN)

The electronics people

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

VOLUME XI NUMBER 10
FOR THE FORTNIGHT MAY 16-31, 1986

EDITOR
AROON PURIE

EXECUTIVE EDITOR T.N. NINAN
PICTURE EDITOR RAGHU RAI
FEATURES EDITOR INDERJIT BADHWAR
ASSOCIATE EDITOR DILIP BOBB
ASSISTANT EDITORS PRABHU CHAWLA
AJAY KUMAR

CORRESPONDENTS

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT RAMINDAR SINGH
NEW DELHI SHEKHAR GUPTA
PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI
RAJ CHENGAPPA
MADHU JAIN
AHMEDABAD RAMESH MENON
BANGALORE SRINIVASA PRASAD
BOMBAY M. RAHMAN
JAGANNATH DUBASHI
CALCUTTA INDRANIL BANERJIE
CHANDIGARH GOBIND THUKRAL
HYDERABAD AMARNATH K. MENON
JAIPUR SREEKANT KHANDEKAR
MADRAS S.H. VENKATRAMANI
PATNA FARZAND AHMED
TRIVANDRUM SREEDHAR PILLAI

NEW YORK MADHU TREHAN
LONDON RAMESH CHANDRAN

NEWS COORDINATOR RADHIKA ROY

CHIEF OF PRODUCTION SHIRLEY JOSHUA
ANURADHA KAPOOR

COPY DESK ANUPAMA GOPAL
SIMRAN BHARGAVA
ANN NINAN

CHIEF PHOTOGRAPHER BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHER PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CARTOONIST AJIT NINAN MATHEW

CARTOGRAPHER B.K. SHARMA

LAYOUT ARTISTS LOKESH BHARGAVA
ANUP GUPTA
PEALI DUTTA GUPTA

MARKETING DIRECTOR MOHINI BHULLAR

ADVERTISING MANAGERS

BOMBAY GEORGE SEBASTIAN
DELHI NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA MEERA PAUL
MADRAS R. ANAND
BANGALORE L. SRINIVASA RAGHAVAN

GENERAL MANAGER CHANDER RAI

● EDITORIAL OFFICE: LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. F-40 CONNAUGHT PLACE NEW DELHI 110001. PHONE: 3315801-4. TELEX: 31-4724 INTO IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI ● SUBSCRIPTIONS INTO INDIA TODAY SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT. POST BOX 69, FARIDABAD HARYANA ● TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA TODAY CIRCULATION MANAGER. F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE, MIDDLE CIRCLE, NEW DELHI. PHONE: 3313076-8. TELEX: 31-4724 INTO IN ● ADVERTISING OFFICES: 28 A&B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER II, NARIMAN POINT, BOMBAY-400021. PHONE: 2026152, 2029326, 2029301. TELEX: 11-5373 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BOMBAY ● 14 CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001. PHONE: 312070, 312097. TELEX: 31-66518 THOM IN. CABLES: LIVMEDIA, NEW DELHI ● FAGUN CHAMBERS, 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF AVENUE, MADRAS-600105. PHONE: 477188 477770. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, MADRAS ● 74/1ST MARKS ROAD, BANGALORE-560001. PHONE: 568448, 579037, 579089. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BANGALORE ● 12 CUEVEREST 46C CHOWRINGEE ROAD, CALCUTTA-700016. PHONE: 445398, 447726. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, CALCUTTA ● PRINTED AT THOMSON PRESS INDIA LTD. FARIDABAD HARYANA ● INDIA TODAY © 1986 LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. REPRODUCTION IN ANY MANNER IS PROHIBITED. PUBLISHED BY CHANDER RAI FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT THOMSON PRESS INDIA LTD. FARIDABAD HARYANA ● INDIA TODAY DOES NOT TAKE RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL ●

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

STORMY CRUSADER

The people of Pakistan ("Storming the Citadel", May 15) have ultimately found a crusader in Benazir Bhutto to resuscitate authentic democracy in their country. This was evident from the spectacular welcome and ovation they gave Miss Sahiba when she arrived in Lahore.

Bangalore — K. CHIDANAND KUMAR

■ General Zia would do well to remember that those who make peaceful revolution impossible will make violent revolution inevitable.

Amritsar — KAMAL JIT SINGH AHLUWALIA

■ For a leader who is still in the process of maturing into a world leader, to say that she will be able to do in Pakistan what Cory Aquino did in the Philippines shows how impetuous she can be. She is right in that people want change but to be able to offer the people something concrete she has to still do a lot of spadework.

Arrah — AYYAZ PARVEZ

BABU'S COURAGE

The manner in which Rajiv Gandhi expelled Pranab Mukherjee from the party suggests that he is losing control of himself ("Pre-emptive Strike", May 15). He thought that expulsion would kill dissidence but Pranab babu's is not the voice of dissent but the voice of courage.

Calcutta — PRAHLAD GHOSH

DESERVING WIN

The outcome of the Australasia Tournament ("Drama in the Desert", May 15) need not be seen as a defeat for India. Miandad deserved to win as his performance was simply superb.

Bhatkal — AFTAB HUSAIN KOLA

DEVIL'S BREW

The need of the hour ("A Growing Malaise", April 30) is to create awareness that addiction spoils the health slowly, spends the wealth rapidly, reduces life-span secretly and produces a national loss unknowingly.

Sonepat — K. GOPAKUMAR MENON

■ Alcoholism is sometimes a response to an intolerable situation which can be made more bearable by drinking. Hence the right cure would be to find the root of the problem instead of fighting it with drugs or aversion therapy.

Shimla — VIVEK MOHAN

■ I am a self-confessed alcoholic. Alcoholism is no respector of any human being. I took my first drink thinking it would bring me more pleasure, more friends, more status but this was only a pleasant delusion. The last five years of my sojourn with alcohol were terrible. I pawned and sold everything to buy more alcohol. I made countless resolutions, broke every one, was hospitalised thrice and underwent psychiatric treatment. Nothing made a difference. Only Alcoholics Anonymous did. Their one day at a time rule is indeed a golden rule.

Bombay — GANESH

■ Drinking has become a social necessity and man's social status seems to rise or fall with the quality and quantity of liquor he is able to hand out. A non-drinker finds himself isolated at any function and to be accepted as a civilised individual he begins to drink. Even more distressing is the fact that youngsters have taken to it in a big way simply because it is equated with manliness.

Chandrapur — PRAKASH PRABHARAT

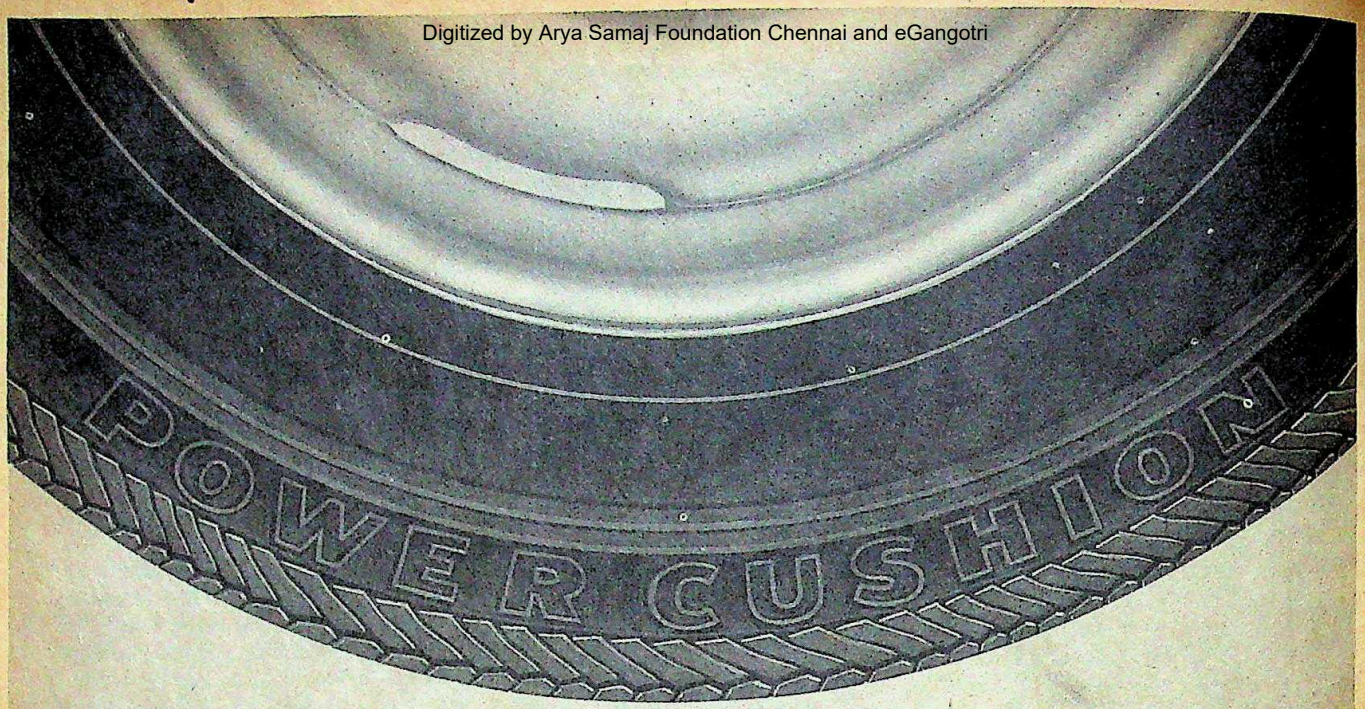
■ I believe that Hindi films contribute largely to the growing popular appeal of drinking in this country. Nearly every film has the hero guzzling booze (generally a bottle of Vat 69) and looking very pleased with himself. The same man is shown young and carefree, dancing with the heroine, fighting all manner of people in the most outrageous situations for his self-respect. And finally comes tragedy. The audience identifies with him and imitates him completely, even throwing back drinks like he did, not bothering to see the bottle for its evil.

Rajkot — D.P. BHATT

■ The cover story did not shock, it only surprised. It is only expected that

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



The strong grip of leadership

Goodyear demonstrate leadership worldwide. In technology and research, innovation and quality, in popularity amongst users and performance on world race-tracks.

The largest earthmover tyre, the tyre that landed on the moon, the largest-selling car tyre in the world — each one is a Goodyear!

Right here in India Goodyear lead with Power Cushion. The tyre you have made an unquestioned leader. Well, that's Goodyear. The finest, the world over. As Power Cushion is in India.

And with all reason.

Deeper and Wider Tread : More rubber on the tread than any other car tyre. (Consumers testify to over 50,000 Kms. of non-skid safety).

Computer chips in for more mileage, more safety :
Power Cushion's computer-perfected tread design ensures greater grip, more comfort, more safety as tread adjusts automatically to road profile.

Unique Arrow-Head Design :
For a quicker start-stop, lower rolling resistance, more fuel saving.

'3-T' Nylon Casing :
Resilient and abrasion-resistant casing that ensures more retreads.

That's Goodyear Power Cushion

GOODYEAR

LEADING THE WORLD IN TYRE TECHNOLOGY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Contract/GY-20/85

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

alcoholism will increase with population. This means that there is more frustration and deterioration of morals. Eradication is impossible.

Bombay — S.E. MEERZA

■ An alcoholic is not just the problem of his family but should also be the concern of the society in general. As he is a public nuisance, neighbours should join together to humiliate him. This method has been successful in Manipur, where the women have got together to deal with the problem.

Nagpur — MANOJ BIRE

■ Alcoholism is a socially accepted evil which has assumed insidious dimensions. Only a mass-based movement, which by its very nature enjoys wide popular backing, can help the people in their battle against the bottle.

Pathankot — RAVI KANT BHATIA

■ Your intention to educate people about alcoholism is well-timed. Arrack sale legalised a few years back in Tamil Nadu has unfortunately increased the number of its consumers. Alcoholics, many of them in a highly inebriated state, can now be seen drinking till the wee hours in arrack shops. The income generated is enormous and all this at the expense of the working class whose women and children suffer.

Nandanam — FRANKLYN STANLEY

■ Considering the climate in this country, alcohol is injurious to drinkers. But the state governments will not bring in total prohibition. The lobby of vested interests argues that prohibition will only be an incentive to illicit distilling and bootlegging, which is a loss to the Government. This is a fallacious argument for the brewing of raw drink is common and uncontrolled. Illicit distillation is mainly on economic grounds and has nothing to do with prohibition.

Bombay — D.P. BIRLA

■ In north-eastern India alcohol has become the root cause of all evil in society. Country liquor is cheaply and freely available and has devastating effects. Facilities for de-addiction should be provided in this part of the country too.

Shillong — J. GONDALIA

ABSURD READING

Reading your story "Communal Cauldron", April 30), one would imagine that the Hindus went on a rampage merely because they were working under the Muslims who controlled the business. That sounds absurd because the losses of the other community have not been considered a loss, and neither has the viewpoint of the oppressing community been taken. Had there been violence on the scale you write about there would have been a retaliatory strike.

Rishra, West Bengal — RAGHURAMAN C.

■ The communal violence in Verawal was impartially handled. But it took place on March 26 and not the day after as mentioned.

Verawal — ANWAR BALOOCH

JUST SOLUTION

Carried away by their ambitious plans to beautify Bombay ("Eviction Problems", April 30), the authorities have unfeelingly tread on the dreams of the slum dwellers. Shabana Azmi's timely intervention has helped in one case. Collectively all sympathetic people can see that justice is done.

Bangalore — ELIEZER S. AMBLER

■ The scientist Homi Sethna mentioned in your story was not the former chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission and now chairman of the Tata Oil Mills Company. Our chairman did not join the group led by Shabana Azmi protesting the eviction of slum dwellers in Bombay.

New Delhi — M.Z.A. BAIG

BLACK POLITICOS

One hoped that the CBI would move onto politicians after raiding the bureaucracy ("Exposing the Bureaucracy", April 30). Politics in India is the biggest black market business. Politicians with declared incomes of less than Rs 3,000 lead extravagant lives. They shout about black money in public but pocket their share in private.

Patna — MD. EHTESHAM A. USMANI

GIMMICKY RULE

Rama Rao's political style ("Governor Row", April 30) is only an extension of his filmi past. He should pay more attention to the declining law and order situation in the state instead of resorting to filmy gimmicks to divert people's attention from his inadequacies.

Sonepur — G. SUJATA

MONEY MAD

The problem plaguing the Congress(I) ("Conciliatory Moves", April 30) is that many of its leaders live only for power and money. If they don't get their share they begin to grumble.

Cuddalore — R.V. JAYARAMAN

LIVING TREASURE

It was sheer pleasure to watch a legend in multiple facets ("A Lonely Journey", April 30) through the eyes of a connoisseur. Each frame was an experience.

Roorkee — SEEMA ARORA

■ The new photo essay on the living legends of Indian arts and music is a welcome addition. I hope the stalwarts of Carnatic music will be adequately represented.

Madras — J.N. IYER

■ There cannot be a debate about the greatness of Pandit Ravi Shankar. He is a showman but that is what makes him popular and his experimentation is only an extension of his versatility.

Bombay — ANSHUMAN VORA

TIGER PROBLEMS

The problems confronting tigers, particularly those in the Dudhwa National Park ("Conflict in the Wild", April 30) have been highlighted well. But the incident of the burning of tiger carcass actually happened a year ago.

Lucknow — ZAFAR JORDAN

WOMAN'S GROUSE

With reference to your report "Syrian Christians: Women's Victory" (March 31), the Supreme Court struck down the Travancore Christian Succession Act of 1916. The Cochin Christian Succession Act still exists. There never was a Travancore-Cochin Christian succession act. I am not divorced. Twenty years ago I walked out on my alcoholic husband, but have not seriously considered divorce. And I was not thrown out of my father's bungalow. I stayed on and the bungalow now belongs to me.

Kottayam (Kerala) — MARY ROY

Ms Roy had told our correspondent that she had been thrown out of her property at Uthagamadalam. We regret the error in misnaming the relevant law and in describing Ms Roy as a divorcee. —Editor

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

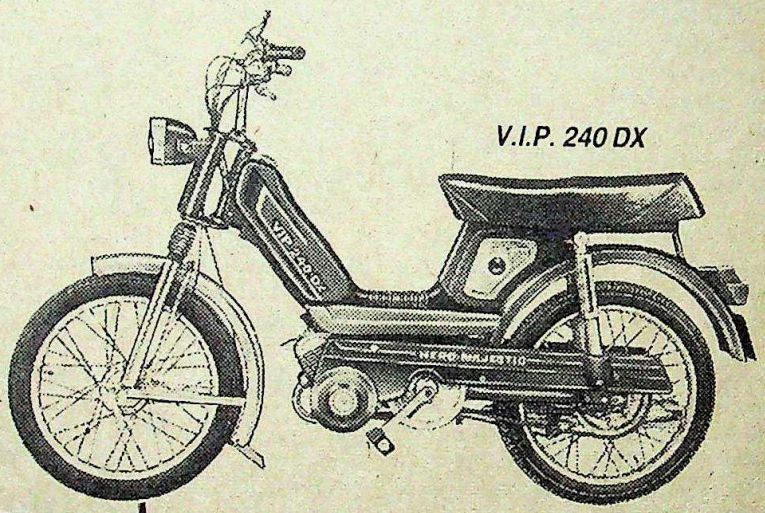
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DISTINCTLY DIFFERENT

HI-POWER 240 DX SERIES

WITH NEW 2.4 B.H.P. ENGINE

Compare our Quality.
Compare our Price.



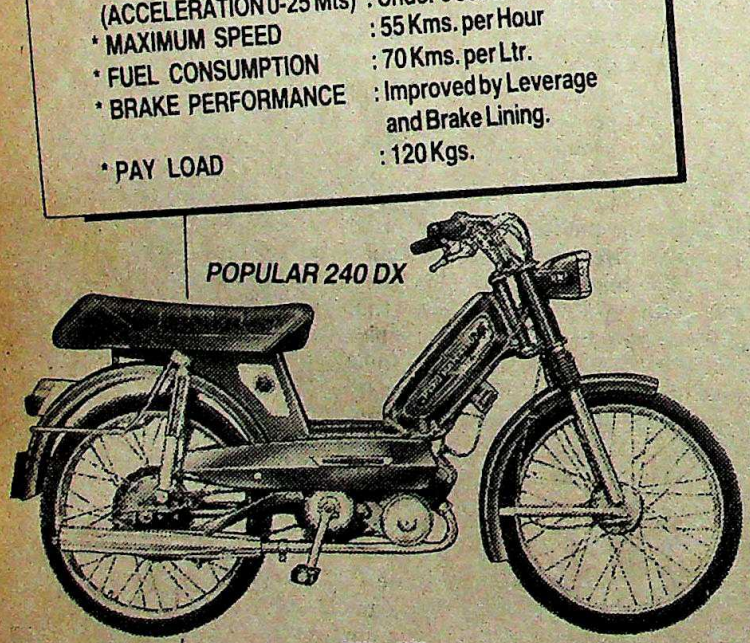
V.I.P. 240 DX

SPECIAL FEATURES :

* PICK-UP (ACCELERATION 0-25 Mts)	: Under 6 seconds
* MAXIMUM SPEED	: 55 Kms. per Hour
* FUEL CONSUMPTION	: 70 Kms. per Ltr.
* BRAKE PERFORMANCE	: Improved by Leverage and Brake Lining.
* PAY LOAD	: 120 Kgs.

Whichever way you look at it, the new hi-power 240 DX series distinctly stands out in all respects. The computer-aided designed 2.4 B.H.P. engines of V.I.P. 240 DX and POPULAR 240 DX are backed by the latest technological know-how obtained from one of the world's leading manufacturers of two-wheelers. The sophisticated looks in a spectrum of attractive colours will compliment your mood and lifestyle. Add to this, the special features and you have the mopeds which are incomparably supreme today. In style as well as in performance. You have to ride one to believe us!

POPULAR 240 DX



Hero-Majestic

Great in Style. Strong in Performance. Low in Price

MAJESTIC AUTO LIMITED, C-48, Focal Point, Ludhiana-141 010

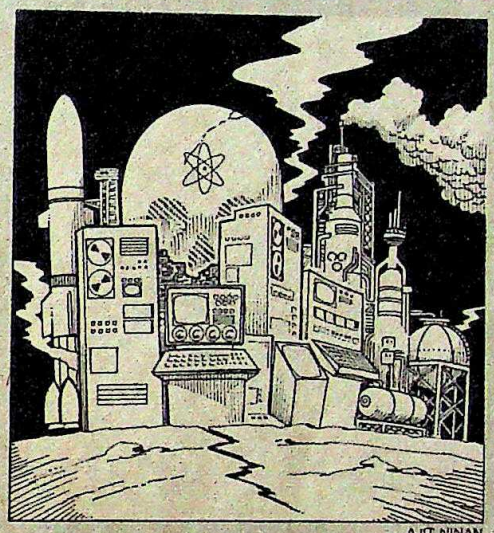
MAL-NP-198

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Chernobyl Lesson

CHERNOBYL in the Soviet Union, the Challenger tragedy in the US, followed by one Delta and two Titan rocket mishaps, on a smaller scale Talcher in India, and of course Bhopal: the perils of advanced technology are once again all too evident and cannot be wished away. These are only the latest incidents. At the Windscale plutonium production plant near Liverpool in England, a fire in the reactor spewed radioactive material over 500 square km, and officials had to ban the sale of milk from cows grazing in the area. Some 33 cancer deaths were expected to result. The Three Mile Island nuclear installation in Pennsylvania saw a partial meltdown in 1979 and a panicky exodus of the local residents. And both before and after Bhopal, people have continued to die and suffer in a variety of ways because of gas leaks and explosions in chemical plants, including one at the Vadodara heavy water unit.



AJIT NINAN

Chernobyl is of course far and away the worst of these, and the consequences are almost too frightening to contemplate. Apart from the immediate danger to thousands of residents for scores of kilometers around Chernobyl as well as in Scandinavia and other parts of Europe, there is the risk of radioactivity affecting the food grown in the Soviet Union's bread basket, of major rivers getting contaminated, and of victims being claimed in the most unlikely spots because of the inherent downstream dangers.

The reassurances from India's atomic energy establishment and from the prime minister have been quickly forthcoming: such a meltdown cannot occur in India because India's atomic power stations use not graphite but water to moderate the atomic reaction, so much radioactivity cannot escape into the environment because these stations have an extra containment structure, and the reactors in India use a technology that does not require the kind of high pressures normal at Chernobyl. These are reassuring, but it would be foolish to believe that any technology is completely failsafe, especially in a country where safety precautions are often observed in the breach. So questions must nag the minds of anyone anywhere in the vicinity of an atomic installation (the one coming up at Narora is barely 150 km from Delhi) or a space launch pad, or indeed any chemical plant. In fact, the peaceful use of atomic energy may be as potentially dangerous as the atom bomb: some experts say there is an even chance of another core meltdown in the next two decades.

It would be equally foolish, of course, to turn one's back on technology because of these tragedies and dangers. Thousands die in the country every year in traffic accidents but no one suggests the banning of motorised transport. And again thousands died last year in air accidents, but aviation remains beyond question. Even in the energy field, more people have died in coal mining accidents in India than from accidents in atomic power stations. Nevertheless, fundamental questions do need answers, questions concerning the uses to which technologies are put (for example, the rocket mishaps in the US have a clear lesson for the Star Wars programme), the arrangements for ensuring that secretive technocrats handling dangerous technologies are subject to independent scrutiny vis-a-vis safety systems and practices, and the effectiveness of laws stipulating safety regulations. Also, as Chernobyl has shown, the safety issues transcend national boundaries. Will the Soviet Union guarantee, for instance, that any food product supplied by that country does not come from near Chernobyl? After all, India has taken wheat from the Soviets in the past.

The questions concerning the technologies themselves are especially relevant to India because it is embarked on a process of development that calls increasingly for the use of potentially dangerous technologies in proliferating industrial units, and because not enough seems to have been done as yet in the aftermath of Bhopal to ensure that such catastrophes do not recur. Factory inspectors are overburdened while being under-paid and under-motivated, the laws themselves are antiquated and not adequate for the purpose in many cases, managements tend to be slipshod about safety practices, and workers are all too often plain ignorant or not made properly conscious of the need for safety. This combination of circumstances is tailor-made for the kind of tragedy that struck Bhopal, and given the series of mishaps that have occurred since then at Chembur, Kanpur and a host of other industrial centres, there is little to guarantee that things will not go wrong again somewhere else.

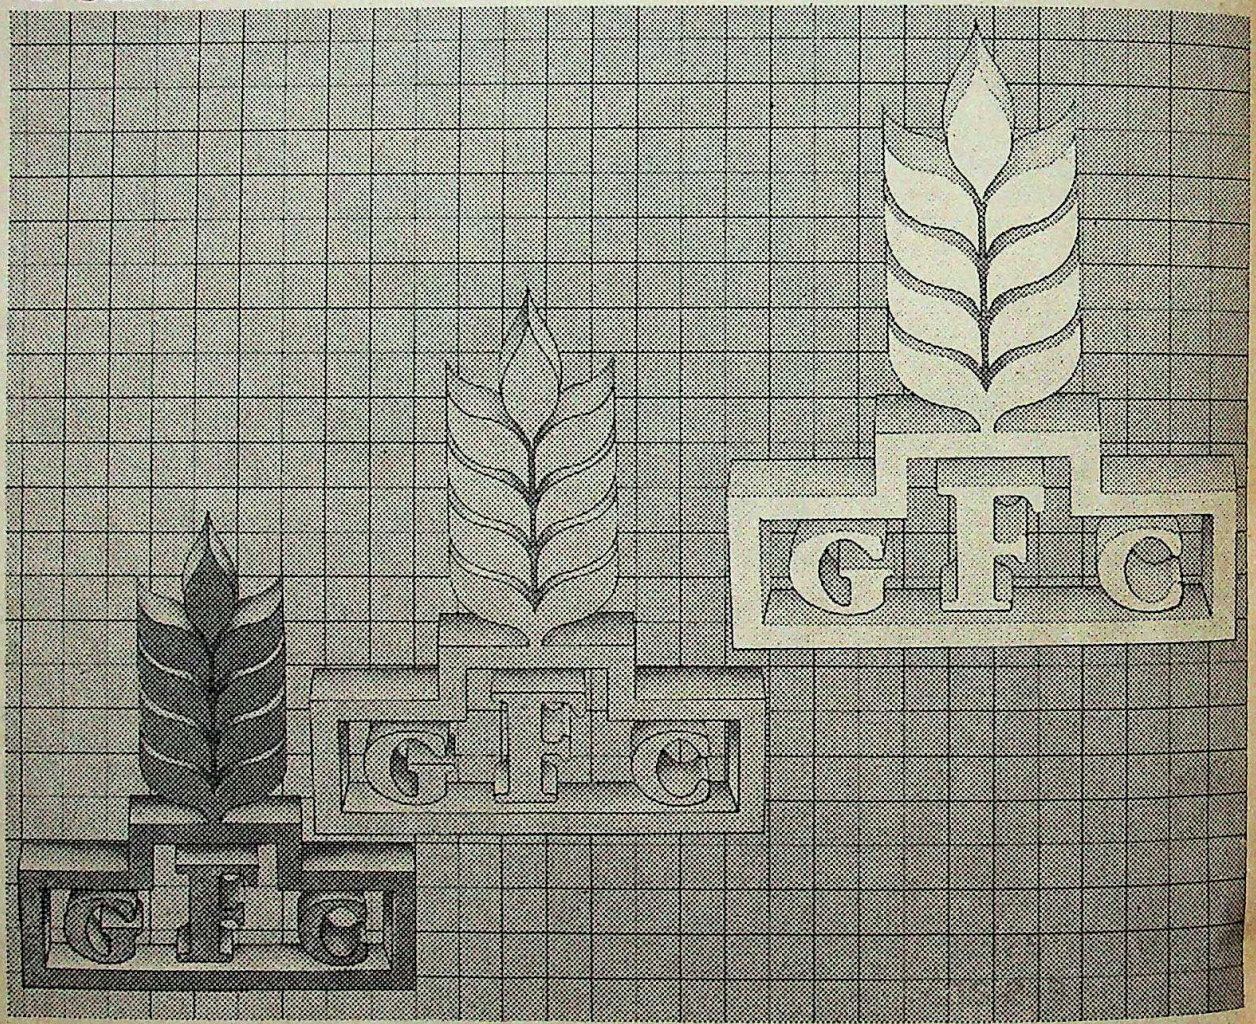
Advanced technology that is susceptible to glitches also brings with it a vulnerable dependence. The US rocket mishaps have forced on India an unexpected delay in the launching into space of the INSAT 1C satellite, meant to be a back-up to its twin that is already in space. With much of the national television network, vital meteorological data and some telecommunication channels now relying on just one satellite that does not have a stand-by, the consequences of a malfunction could be serious. Problems with heavy water plants, including the Vadodara explosion some years ago, have likewise delayed the country's atomic energy programme. Clearly, technologies need to be made failsafe for reasons other than basic human safety too.

In the final analysis, dangerous technologies are double-edged swords: they can be wielded to improve life immeasurably for people in developed and developing countries, but if they slice the wrong way they cut a wide swathe through much of the superstructure of twentieth century life.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Take a 'Growth' Share
Take a Godavari Share



Fertiliser Industry in Fine Fettle:
The Fertiliser Industry has registered a phenomenal growth in the last two years — among the highest in all sectors of industry. No wonder fertiliser shares have appreciated many times their face value. The trend is likely to continue.

Godavari Fertiliser shares offer you a secure investment, high return and continued growth — a share you will be proud to own.

Project — Promoters:
The Rs. 107.28 crore Di-Ammonium Phosphate project at Kakinada has been promoted by the Indian Farmers Fertiliser Co-operative Limited (IFFCO) the single largest manufacturer of fertilisers in India and the industrially progressive Govt. of Andhra Pradesh.

Located in the rich Godavari delta in Andhra Pradesh — the rice bowl of India — and the third largest fertiliser consuming state, it has the major advantage of a market at its doorstep. Apart from a 700 dealer efficient network already in position, Godavari has the advantage of a larger network of IFFCO outlets and that of co-operatives, institutional and public sector agencies.

Latest Technology — Reputed contractors:
GFCL employs the latest American TVA Slurry Process. The plant is under construction by Hindustan Dorr-Oliver, a by word for proven cost-efficient erection and commissioning of fertiliser plants ahead of schedule.

Toyo Engineering India Limited and Tata Projects are the other main contractors — both reputed companies with an enviable record of performance.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Management:
Godavari, a professionally managed company, with an eminent Board of Directors has an experienced team of professionals with an innovative approach. In addition, Godavari has in-house access to IFFCO's vast and proven technical, managerial and marketing expertise.

Excellent Prospects:
When the DAP plant goes into commercial production, Godavari's annual turnover will be over Rs. 150 crores. The recent discovery of vast reserves of crude oil and natural gas in the Godavari basin of Andhra Pradesh, easy availability of power and the climate of good industrial relations in Andhra Pradesh open up exciting avenues for continued growth, expansion and diversification of the company.

The Company's policies will ensure a high return to investors, prudent financial management, accumulation of reserves and continued growth in areas of national importance and high profitability. The confidence in the growth, profitability and bright prospects arise from the inherent managerial strengths of the Company, the support of its promoters and the liberalised policies of the Government.

Between the twin banks of progress and prosperity floats a growth share. A share that assures you steady appreciation and secure investment. Now,you too,can be a partner in its progress.

Issue Highlights

- ★ Promoted by the dynamic duo — IFFCO, India's single largest fertiliser manufacturer and the Government of Andhra Pradesh.
- ★ A Fertiliser giant in the making — patterned on the lines of successful joint sector fertiliser companies.
- ★ Boost to indigenous fertiliser capacity to help meet ever growing demand.
- ★ Market at doorstep in Andhra Pradesh, a power surplus state.
- ★ Latest American TVA slurry process technology from HINDUSTAN DORR-OLIVER.
- ★ Assured 24% pre-tax returns to the Company on networth under Govt. Retention Price Policy.
- ★ A fertiliser growth share for cash at par.
- ★ 80CC, 80L, 80M benefits under Income Tax Act and total exemption under Wealth Tax Act.
- ★ Easy liquidity — listing initially at Bombay, Ahmedabad, Delhi, Madras and Hyderabad Stock Exchanges.

Issue of 1,57,50,000 Equity Shares of Rs. 10/- each for cash at par.

Issue opens:

For Non-Resident Indians	:	3rd May '86
For Farmers and Co-operatives	:	12th May '86
For Indian Public	:	21st May '86

Managers to the Issue:

State Bank of India
Merchant Banking Division
Madame Cama Road, BOMBAY 400 021.

CHAMPAKLAL INVESTMENT & FINANCIAL CONSULTANCY LIMITED
Regent Chambers, Nariman Point, Bombay 400 021.

GFC

Godavari Fertilisers and Chemicals Limited
Vani Nilayam, 50 Sebastian Road,
Secunderabad 500 003.

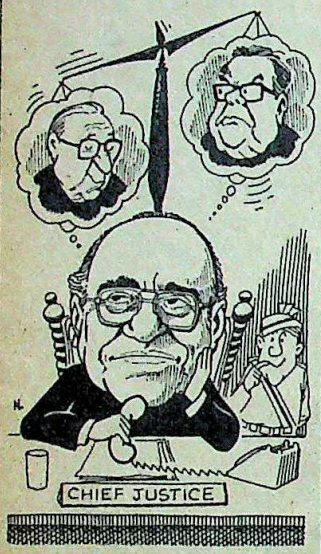
Godavari — Take a growing share in prosperity

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Supreme Choice

● With Supreme Court Chief Justice P.N. Bhagwati due to retire in another four months, the jockeying for succession to the country's highest judicial office has already begun. Normally Bhagwati should be succeeded by Justice R.S. Pathak, next in seniority. But Bhagwati is a judicial liberal who has encouraged public interest litigation, spoken out on behalf of bonded labour and admitted writ petitions to the court on the basis of even post cards mailed by ordinary citizens. Pathak in contrast is a conservative jurist who may reverse the directions set by Bhagwati, an eventuality that Bhagwati may not be very happy about.



The prime minister's office has been informed of this aspect of the succession and has suggested that Bhagwati be succeeded by Attorney-General K. Parasaran, who enjoys the status of a Supreme Court judge. But Parasaran himself is apparently unwilling to stir a hornet's nest by stepping into Bhagwati's shoes, especially in the light of past controversies over the supersession of Supreme Court judges in Mrs Gandhi's time. The choice of Bhagwati's successor is evidently not going to be an easy one.

Well Armed

● Former foreign secretary Romesh Bhandari's role since retirement has been a curious mix of being a Congressman and the prime minister's special envoy. He heads the foreign affairs cell and was part of the team that went recently to Sri Lanka. But he had to again take the oath of secrecy to be part of the delegation.

But whatever confusion may be caused by this unusual double role, there is little doubt that Bhandari has the prime minister's ear—and his arm. At a government bash during the non-aligned foreign ministers' conference in New Delhi, he was seen escorting the prime minister to a corner of the room to meet the Sri Lankan foreign minister. Eyebrows were raised—it is customary for diplomats to be taken to the head of Government, not the other way round—but what the incident firmly established was that the informal relationship between the prime minister and the former foreign secretary is still in evidence.

No Takers

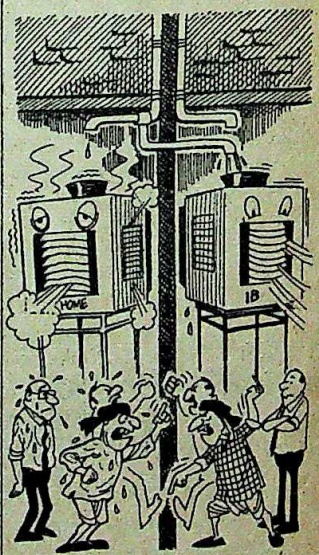
● Doing a job well can sometimes leads to unforeseen complications. Ask Union Minister of State for Personnel, Training and Pensions P. Chidambaram, one of the few ministers inducted last September who have made a mark. Chidambaram was almost an afterthought as an appointee to the ministry, but the Harvard-educated scion of the blue-blooded Sivaganga family has done well with his brief. Perhaps that is why the 40-year-old minister is now tipped as one of the two candidates for the crucial Pradesh Congress(I) chief slot in Tamil Nadu. With MGR's star on the wane, the Congress(I) fancies its chances of coming to power in the post-MGR era, the party chief will be on the inside track for the chief ministership. There is only one problem: Chidambaram does not want to be chief minister.

The other likely incumbent, Rangarajan Kumaramangalam, is also one of the "best and the brightest". Kumaramangalam, who is 10-odd years younger than Chidambaram, has emerged as a major trade unionist and threatens to become a challenge to the Indian National Trade Union Congress, the party's trade union wing. Returning to Tamil Nadu will be a wrench for him too; he and his wife, both lawyers, had come away barely a year ago, leaving behind a flourishing practice, and were just beginning to find their feet in the capital. It remains to be seen which one will get the unwelcome nod from Rajiv Gandhi.

Cold War

● When water is in short supply, temperatures rise. Not only in drought-hit areas but also in the supposedly calm environs of North Block in Delhi's Central Secretariat. Relations between officers of the Intelligence Bureau (IB) and other departments of the Home Ministry became very cool as ambient temperatures in offices rose following a disruption in the water supply to air coolers in the IB wing.

Gardeners responsible for the comforts of the IB men tapped pipes supplying water to the adjoining wing. This set the coolers of the IB purring, but those in neighbouring offices dried up. Hot words were exchanged between the gardeners and peons. How could the IB gardeners divert water to the sleuths' coolers and make other bureaucrats sweat? The war nearly led to blows. Finally, officers of the IB sued for peace and status quo ante was restored. The Home Ministry officials retained their cool while the IB men sweated. And the point had been driven home that the IB was only a subsidiary agency of the Home Ministry.



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Haiku.
In Japanese it's a poem.
On you it's a silky sensation.

Haiku from Bombay Dyeing.
An exquisite new silky collection in crepe de chine, jacquard and georgette. Soft flowing lines. Colour themes that rhyme with your good looks.

Inspired by the evocative Japanese art of Haiku verse. Haiku, from Bombay Dyeing. It's pure poetry!

SILKY POLYESTER SARIS FROM
BOMBAY DYEING

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CLARION C-IELVT-1

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Today homemakers no longer paint their walls. They create the atmosphere of a thousand pearls

Now for the first time a wall finish that helps you create the atmosphere of a thousand pearls. In the shades that you choose. In the mood that you want. But then Dulux Velvet Touch is not any wall finish. It combines the richness of velvet. And the inimitable glow of pearls.

Dulux

Velvet Touch

the feel of velvet, a glow of pearls

Come home to luxury with Dulux Velvet Touch

IEL

IEL Limited

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Time can make you.. Or break you

Usually most crucial things in life need you to be awake when you're asleep.

Flight time, exam time, meeting time.... time.... time !!

But sleep doesn't understand all this.

NEWBEN Quartz does.

It doesn't chirp and beep, putting you to deeper sleep.

Its resounding Back Bell alarm goes loud and clear, whenever you want it—without giving up till you're awake.

NEWBEN's classic styling and unbeatable mix of features make it the best buy indeed.

Take home a Newben today, and catch time before it catches you.... napping !!

NEWBEN can wake you

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Shems/NFL/5

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

To ride the long, rough roads you need a tyre that can take life's

RAIN'N SHINE

When a trucker leaves from North to South, he takes a few things for granted. That weather will change from scorching heat to torrential rain. That he can't make it without tough tyres to back him. Tyres like Vikrant.

VIKRANT + AVON

Joining hands with Avon .... for better and tougher tyres!

Today, Vikrant has joined hands with Avon, the leading British tyre manufacturer, whose tyres are orginial fitment on such celebrated names as Rolls-Royce, British Leyland and more.

A superior plant .... for superior tyres

Vikrant has one of the finest and the most modern tyre plants located in Mysore. This plant now has the capacity to produce a million tyres per annum. For Trucks and Buses, Cars, Jeeps, LCVs, Tractors, Trailers, Motor Cycles, Scooters, Autorickshaws and Animal Drawn Vehicles.

These high quality tyres have made their mark in sophisticated markets like the U.S.A., the U.K., the U.S.S.R. and Australia as well. Obviously, quality has a way of taking you far !

VIKRANT

THE RELIABLE TYRES

VIKRANT TYRES LIMITED
Administrative Office and Factory:
K. R. S. Road, Metagalli, Mysore 570 016

VIKRANT TYRES

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
INTERNATIONAL EDITION

GIFT INDIA TO SOMEONE YOU CARE FOR...

GIFT FOR _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ CODE _____

COUNTRY _____

Please send one year's subscription of INDIA TODAY, International Edition and my gift card to the person named above. Enclosed is my cheque/DD/M.O. for Rs_____ payable to Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.

MY NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ CODE _____

COUNTRY _____

Send this advertisement and payment to:
Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.
Subscription Department
P.B. No. 69, Delhi-Mathura Road
Faridabad 121007, Haryana, India

Annual Airmail Subscription Rates

Rs 185
BANGLADESH
BHUTAN
NEPAL

Rs 345
AFGHANISTAN
BURMA
MALDIVES
PAKISTAN
SRI LANKA

Rs 385
BAHRAIN
CHINA
HONG KONG
INDONESIA
IRAN
IRAQ
KUWAIT
MALAYSIA
OMAN
PHILIPPINES
QATAR
SAUDI ARABIA
SINGAPORE
TAIWAN
THAILAND
U.A.E.
YEMEN

Rs 485
AUSTRALIA
EGYPT
ETHIOPIA
FRANCE
W. GERMANY
GHANA
GIBRALTAR
IRELAND
JAPAN
KENYA
SOUTH KOREA
LEBANON
LIBYA
MALAWI
MALTA
MAURITIUS
SEYCHELLES
SIERRA LEONE
SOUTH AFRICA
SUDAN
SWITZERLAND
SYRIA
TANZANIA
U.K.
ZAMBIA
ZIMBABWE

Rs 585
BAHAMAS
BARBADOS
BRAZIL
CANADA
FIJI
GUYANA
HAWAII
JAMAICA
NEW ZEALAND
PANAMA
U.S.A.

NH 943

● Why should I want to split a party I hold so dear? The weakening of the Congress would be a disaster for the nation.... As a loyal Congressman, I hold this in great importance and would not like to jeopardise the future of the country.

■ PRANAB MUKHERJEE in The Illustrated Weekly of India

● The difference (between the Congress(I) working president and vice-president) is that when the working president goes to a state on a visit, he has to arrange his own transport, whereas in the case of the vice-president the entire cabinet has to be present at the airport to receive him.

■ KAMALAPATI TRIPATHI quoted in The Week

● The result of the so-called "conducted opinion poll" must have inflated his (Pranab Mukherjee's) greedy ego like a frog in the well, leading him to the stupid extent of believing that he is the alternative to Mr Rajiv Gandhi.

■ GHANI KHAN CHOWDHURY in The Telegraph

● A pittance is paid to poor divorced women and the mullahs say Islam is in danger.

■ HASHMIN ABDUL HALIM, speaker, West Bengal Assembly, quoted in The Statesman

● The Islamic Bill is inhuman, un-Islamic and will lead the Muslims to pre-Islamic era when they were considered to be animals, chattels and private property of men.

■ ARIF MOHAMMED KHAN in Patriot.

● You should have seen the FICCI elections to believe it. People used to come in truckloads with proxy forms and lists of people for whom they should vote.

■ RAMU PANDIT, secretary-general of the IMC, in Bombay

● It is a privilege to be a friend of the prime minister. But I don't think Rajiv or any member of his family would influence my business.

■ OTTAVIO QUATROCCHI, Italian businessman, in Onlooker

● Lady, we are playing cricket in Pakistan and all will be well if you follow the rules. But if you move to hockey, that is a rougher business and we shall have to change our game too.

■ ZIA-UL-HAQ, Pakistan President, in a message to Benazir Bhutto

● Losing the match at Sharjah has been the greatest disappointment of my career. Our boys played so well; we didn't go wrong anywhere. But I suppose someone has to lose.

■ KAPIL DEV in The Sunday Observer

● I will never do such revealing scenes (as in Ram Teri Ganga Maili*) for any producer or director again. Those scenes have given me enough trouble to last me a lifetime.*

■ MANDAKINI quoted in Sunday

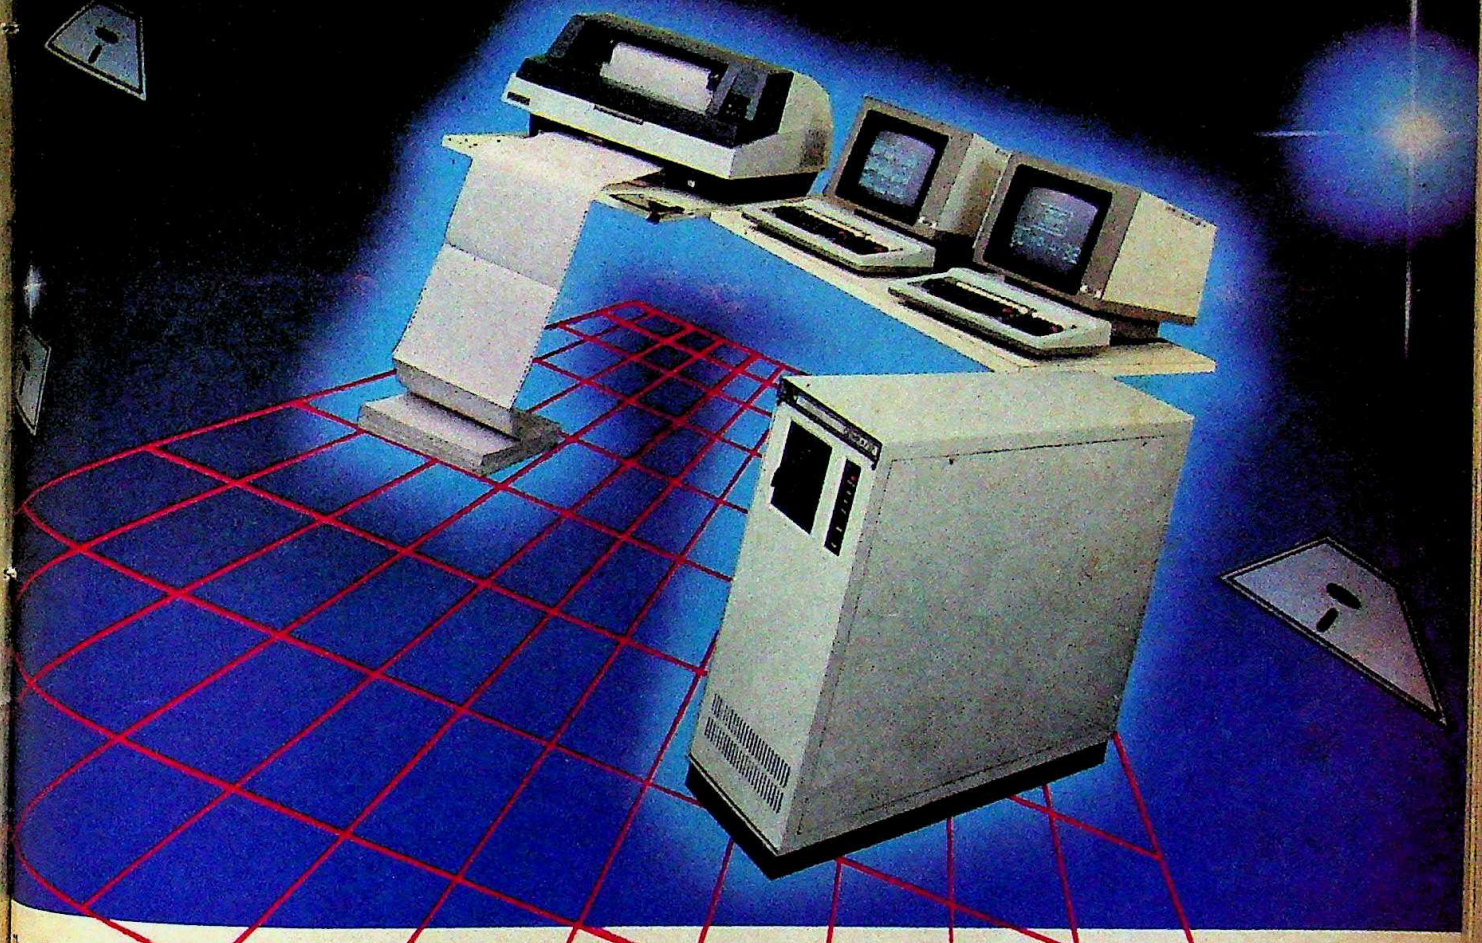
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The choice of over 40 Companies... within weeks of its introduction

OLYMPIA/32

Incredibly fast ★ Amazingly versatile ★ International Software



The minicomputer you always wanted

Take the power of Intel 80286 super microprocessor. And the versatility of XENIX state-of-the-art timesharing operating system. Add a range of optimised language compilers and UNIFY DBMS package, with performance capabilities unheard of in relational Database. Top it with the capability to communicate with other XENIX and MSDOS systems.

And you get Olympia/32—the minicomputer you always wanted.

We give you much more

A numeric coprocessor—the Intel 80287, 8 megabyte memory, 1200 megabyte on-line disk storage and two high speed printers. Offering exceptional response to upto 13 on-line users. What's more, the MULTOS operating system—proven in 200 Galaxy installations—is also supported on Olympia/32.

And very soon, a dual CPU architecture to give you performance unheard of in systems of this class.

Backed by DCM's trusted support and service

With support and service brought to you through a country-wide network of 35 offices. Proven on the largest minicomputer installation base in the country.

SPECIFICATIONS

HARDWARE:
CPU	: INTEL 80286, with 80287 math coprocessor
Memory	: 2MB, expandable to 8MB
Terminals	: Upto 13
Storage	: One 1MB DSDD, Floppy drive and a choice of upto 4 winchester drives of 86MB or 160MB capacity : Streamer tape drive
Backup	: A choice of upto two, 200CPS Dotmatrix or 300/600 lpm line printers
Printers
SOFTWARE:
Operating System	: XENIX 3.0
Languages	: BASIC, COBOL, FORTRAN, PASCAL, C
DBMS	: UNIFY relational Database with SQL
Communications	: With other XENIX and MSDOS based systems
Utilities	: Line/Screen/Stream Editor, SORT/MERGE, Backup, Text processor and many others

Olympia/32 —the fastest minicomputer in its class

For more details contact:
Ms Nita Lal
Product Manager (Large Systems)
DCM data products Vikrant Tower
4, Rajendra Place New Delhi 110 008
Tel: 5719967, 5715569 Cable: 'DECEMDEPE'
Telex: 031-61830

DCM data products

Technology supported by service

MSDOS, XENIX/TM Microsoft; 80286, 80287/TM Intel Corpn; UNIFY/TM Unify Corp.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"We started from scratch and we've come a long way. Budgeting. Planning. Thinking ahead."

Domain. Gurukul K

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

But then, have you thought of insurance? National Insurance.

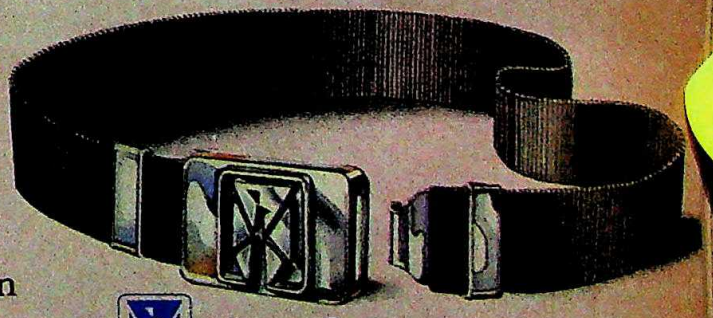
You did it the hard way. Keeping tight control over your purse and your impulses. Building up from scratch. Paying the instalments for your fridge and the TV. You planned everything to the last detail. And it paid. That's why we were wondering whether you've considered protecting your possessions. Against fire, burglary, riot, malicious damage and many other perils you read about everyday. Because National can give you a cover for just about everything.

National Insurance. With schemes just right for people like you. To protect you. Even in case of accidents or illness, National will take care of you, financially, within the limits of the policy.

You may call this overall protection— "Safety Belt". Your safety belt. For details on our following insurance schemes, you may contact our nearest office.

- Personal Accident Scheme
- Householders Insurance Policy
- All Risks Insurance
- Baggage Insurance
- Hospitalisation & Domiciliary Hospitalisation Insurance
- Public Liability
- TV Insurance
- Video Insurance
- Pedal Cycle Insurance
- Golfers' Insurance

Fasten your National Safety Belt



National Insurance Company Ltd

(A Subsidiary of General Insurance Corporation of India)

Keep your world safe

CC-0. In Public Domain. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection.

NIC-6204

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

9 to 5

Cool, unruffled, elegant and enduring through a hard day's journey from 9 to 5

9to5 Trousering & Shirting. Specially crafted for the 9 to 5 man.

Madura Fabrics
A quality product from Madura Coats.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Rediffusion/MF/4296

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

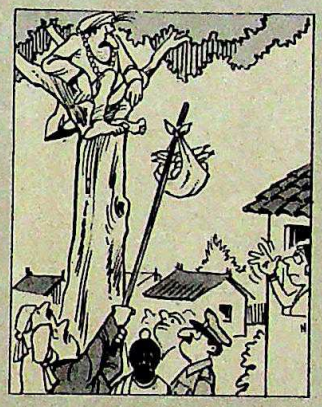
FALSE PREGNANCY

■ Modinagar, on the Delhi-Uttar Pradesh border, is a sleepy industrial township where the rare scandal usually revolves around the assembly lines in the cluster of factories belonging to the Modi group. Thus, it was hardly surprising when the township was rocked recently by what appeared to be a sensational scandal involving a 13-year-old schoolgirl. The girl had gone with her parents to a local doctor complaining of a severe pain in her abdomen. After examining her, the doctor made the shocking announcement that the girl was pregnant. The word spread like wildfire in a town where practically everybody knows each other, and the shocked citizenry immediately ostracised the girl's family. To add injury to insult, the resultant scandal forced the school authorities to expel the girl without a second thought.

The distraught parents, refusing to accept the diagnosis, then took the girl to nearby Meerut where they had her examined in a reputed nursing home. There she was operated upon for what turned out to be nothing more than a tumour in her tummy. Modinagar's medical practitioners are now the ones being ostracised.

BRANCHING OUT

■ When wedding bells pealed joyfully in Phalsabahal village, near Sambalpur in Orissa, the only person present who didn't join in the merry-making was the bridegroom, who was, quite literally, out on a limb. For, the unfortunate bridegroom had discovered his wife in what is politely referred to as 'a compromising position' with another man on the night of their wedding. The disillusioned husband promptly registered his protest by clambering up the nearest tree and refusing to come down despite promises by his two-timing bride that she would remain faithful.



But wounded pride obviously takes a long time to heal. When reports last came in, he had been up the tree for exactly one month, firmly spurning all efforts to induce him to return to terra firma. Instead, he has threatened to jump to his death from his perch if anybody attempted to climb up after him. He has been provided food and water attached to the end of a long bamboo pole and gives no sign of coming off his high horse, preferring to learn about the birds and the bees instead by observing them at close quarters.

POLICE PANDAL

■ Policemen are meant to be capturing outlaws and not in-laws. But that is precisely what happened recently at Podili police station in Andhra Pradesh. Ankamma Devi, a petite and pretty local belle, had been pledged by her father in marriage to a boy from a neighbouring village. But there was one hitch in the prospective hitch: namely Ankamma's handsome young lover whom she promptly eloped with to Hyderabad, some distance away from home.

The irate father and his prospective in-laws lodged a complaint with the local police alleging that she had been kidnapped. The police diligently tracked down the lovers to their nest in the bustling city and brought them back to Podili but found there was another hitch: both were majors and were obviously besotten with each other. Adopting the role of match-makers, the police party summoned the parents of the couple to the police station and finally managed to convince them of the suitability of the match. To crown it all, the marriage ceremony was held in the police station where the wedding knot was firmly—and finally—cemented, without even the need for filling out an FIR.

MUSICAL MOOD

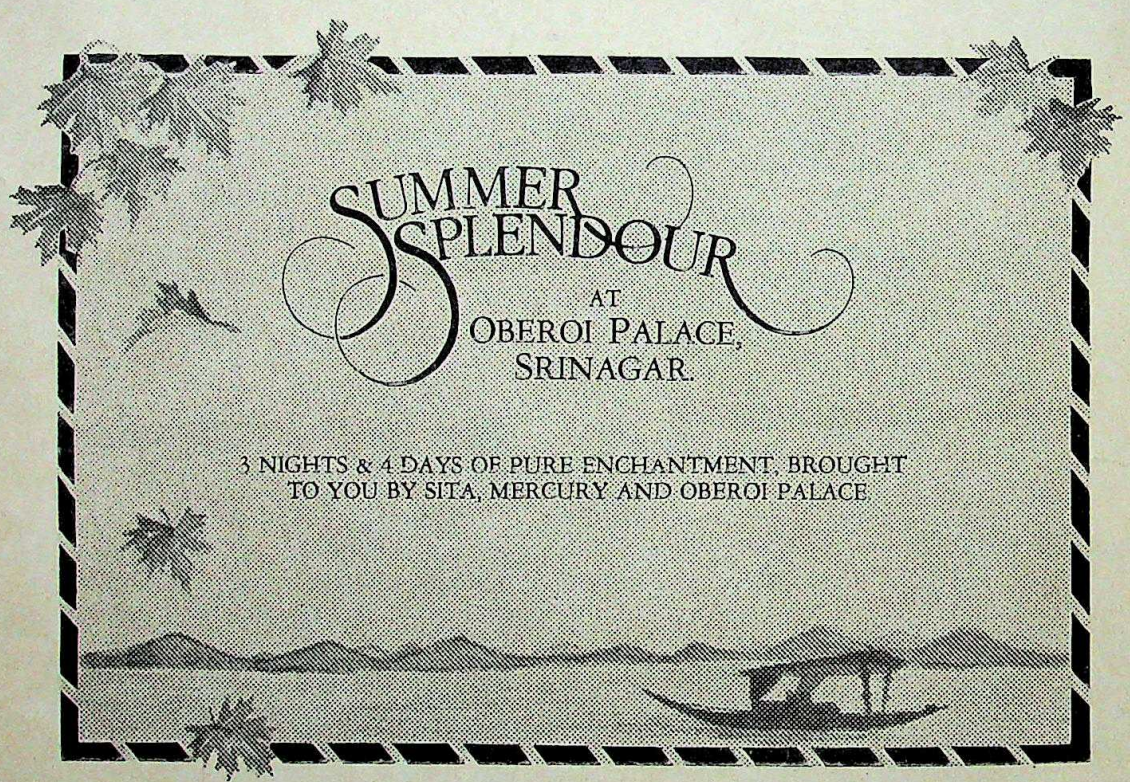
■ Gujarat is one state that is currently in the grip of a severe drought and one of the most badly affected communities is the state's large population of cows. Lack of adequate water and grass fodder has reduced them to skeletal proportions, but there is an oasis in the middle of this bovine desert—a gaushala on the outskirts of Jamnagar, where by some miracle, the 4,000 cows in residence are sleek and contented-looking.

The miracle is music. But not just any music will do. The cows may not be pedigreed but they are connoisseurs all the same and only respond to the distinctive sounds of maestro Bismillah Khan's shehnai which is played to them every morning at dawn through loudspeakers situated all over the gaushala. The people in charge of the establishment claim that a dose of Bismillah Khan every morning from their large collection of the mastro's records keeps the cows healthy and their milk output remains high. They also say that they have tried various other types of music and records of other well-known musicians and singers but the cows will respond to no udder.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THIS COUPON CAN TAKE YOU AWAY TO A PALACE BY A LAKE IN A LAND IN FULL BLOOM.



Oberoi Palace, Srinagar. Once, the Maharajas of Kashmir graced it. Now, it's an idyllic retreat on 20 acres of beautifully landscaped lawns.

The view from the palace is simply breathtaking — the glimmering Dal Lake and the valley beyond.

And Kashmir in summer is splendorous, like no place on earth. It's nature in full bloom.

Experience this combination. It could be the most enchanting holiday you've ever had.

THE OBEROI PALACE SUMMER SPLENDOUR PACKAGE

THE PERIOD: April 1 to October 30.

THE TARIFF: Per person, sharing a double room. Rs. 970/- for 3 nights and 4 days.

Single occupancy: Rs. 1,460/- for 3 nights and 4 days.

THE FACILITIES:

- Airport-hotel-airport transfers in private cars.
- Breakfast, every morning.
- 10% discount on food and beverages.
- Children under 12 years will be accommodated free (up to two children).
- Special budgeted meals for children.
- Sightseeing to Mughal Gardens and day trips to Gulmarg, Pahalgam and Sonmarg can be arranged at nominal extra costs.

Oberoi Palace
Srinagar, Kashmir

ULKA-D—OP-240

For bookings and details, contact your nearest Sita, Mercury or Oberoi Instant Reservations Office or a bonafide travel agent.

Phone Numbers: Bombay SITA 240666 MERCURY 2024343 OBEROI 2024343 Ahmedabad SITA 409105 OBEROI 464451 Delhi SITA 3311122, 3312764 MERCURY 312008 OBEROI 699571 Srinagar SITA 78891, 77186 MERCURY 78786 OBEROI 71241 Kanpur SITA 68171 Jaipur SITA 68226 Agra SITA 66181 Varanasi SITA 42945, 43121 MERCURY 62021 Calcutta SITA 297185 MERCURY 443555/59 OBEROI 292323 Madras SITA 478861 MERCURY 8112220 OBEROI 478156 Bangalore SITA 578091 MERCURY 577681 OBEROI 53444 Hyderabad SITA 233628 MERCURY 34411 Cochin SITA 33012, 31101.

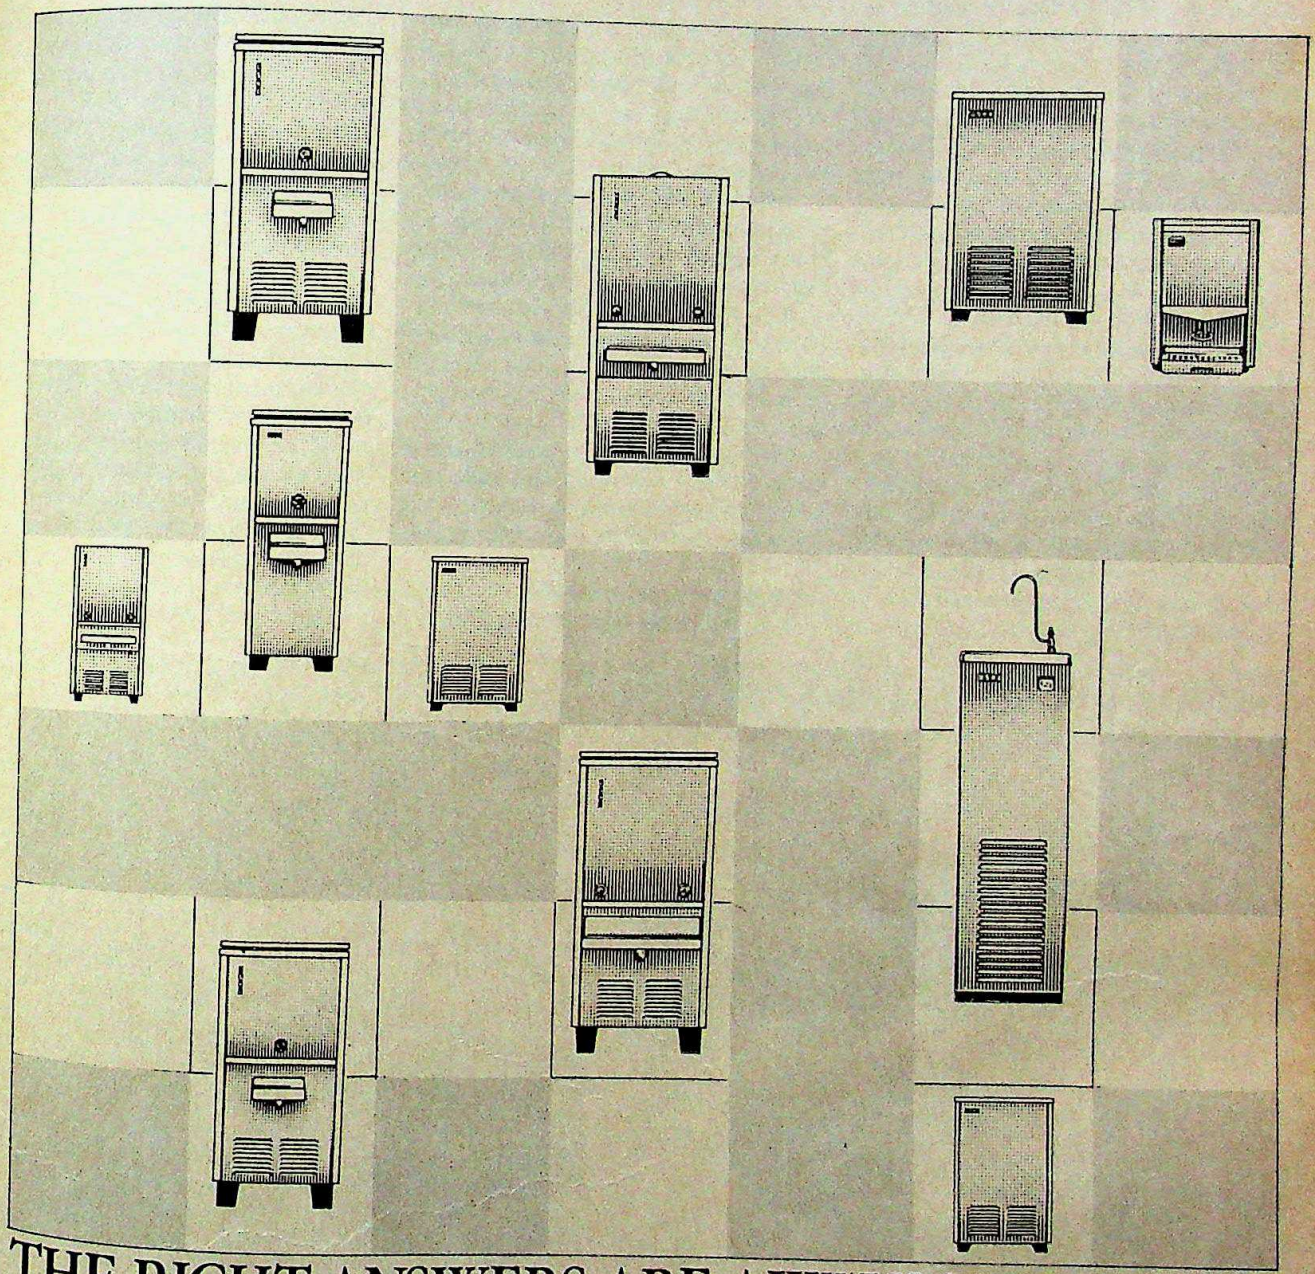
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

1. Which is the largest selling water cooler in India?
2. Who offers the largest range of water coolers?
3. Which water cooler do two out of three Indian offices use?
4. Which Indian water cooler is exported the world over?
5. Which is the only water cooler backed by Shriram's progressive R & D and technological improvisations?
6. Which water cooler is served by a nation-wide network of over 200 sales and service outlets?
7. Which water cooler offers best value for money?



THE RIGHT ANSWERS ARE ALWAYS FROM USHA.

also available on DGS&D rate contract

USHA
WATER COOLER

The largest selling name with the largest range.

A quality product from Shriram Refrigeration Industries Limited.

Head Office : 19, Kasturba Gandhi Marg, New Delhi-110 001. Tel : 3319010/11/12/13

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

everest/d86/SRI/60

ULKA-D—OP-240

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUNJAB

Return to U

PUNJAB'S affairs have seen many twists and turns in the last four years. But last week's sustained drama was something special even for that troubled state: desperadoes declaring the birth of Khalistan, yet another commando entry into the Golden Temple, a split in the ruling Akali Dal, MLA's going into hiding in neighbouring Himachal Pradesh, more than half the members of the Barnala faction ending up as ministers. There was all this and more in an action-packed fortnight, including yet another burst of murderous violence, party expulsions and moves for ousting the speaker, and the unique sight of an entire opposition declaring its support for a beleaguered government. But the underlying message was clear: a strife-torn state had been plunged once again into confusion and uncertainty as the Barnala Government's fate hung in the balance.

At one level, the Government's decision to go back into the Golden Temple was probably a mistake since it was well known that the men who made the farcical announcement of the birth of Khalistan had left the temple immediately afterwards. At another, it provided an opportunity to disgruntled politicians in a divided Akali Dal to get their own back on Barnala and make a bid for power themselves. Whatever the case, the political temperature in the state rose quickly to near explosion point.

Indeed, history seemed to be repeating itself in bizarre fashion: if it was amoral politicking by the Congress(I)'s Punjab stalwarts that led to the rise of Bhindranwale and then Operation Bluestar, this time the state's future seemed to have been mortgaged to the machinations of frustrated Akali politicians, in turn playing into extremist hands.

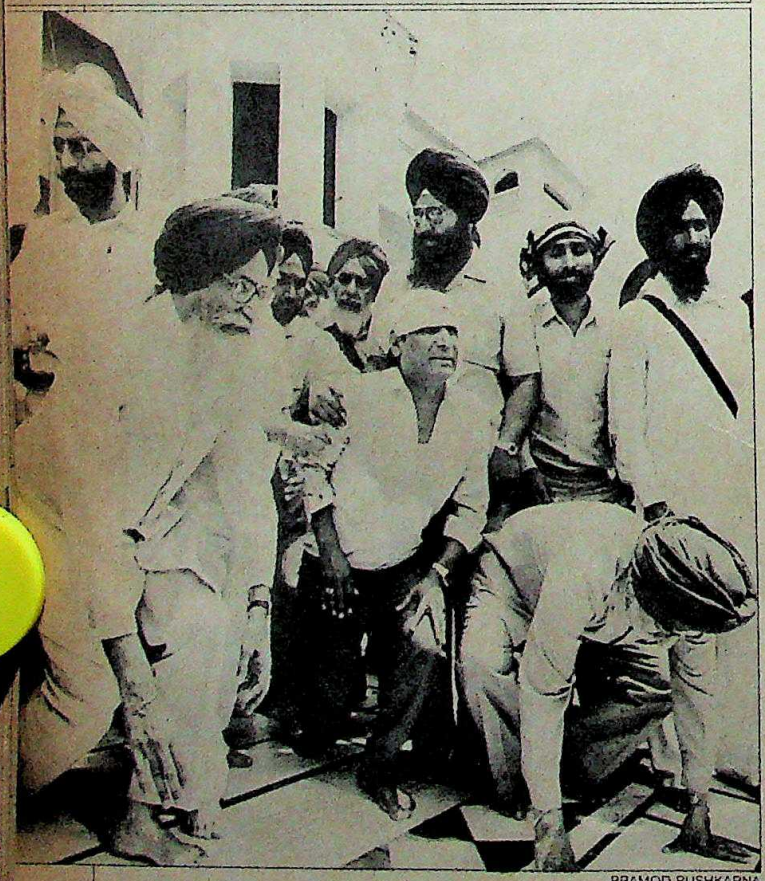
And once again the perceptions in and outside Punjab were sharply different. While the rest of the country welcomed the state Government's decision to go in after the Khalistanis, the mood in Punjab was more uncertain, and opinions still subject to change as political events flowed thick and fast.

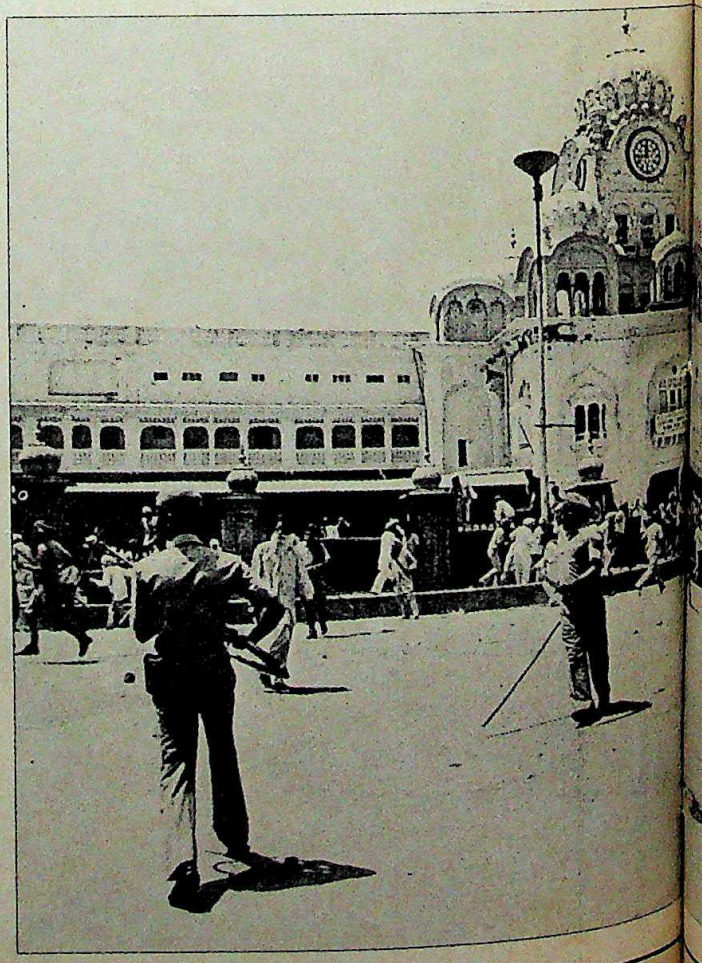
Certainly, no police entry into the Golden Temple is without repercussions. Barnala got a stormy reception at the Golden Temple the morning after the commando action. He was greeted by wailing women shouting "Hai Barnala, Hai Barnala", and an old woman going around the Harmander Sahib sanctum kept mumbling "Kar paapiyan da naas" (destroy the sinners). When Governor S.S. Ray visited the temple, he faced an even more hostile crowd. Protestors surrounded his car, shouting angry slogans.

Taking advantage of the confusion, sympathisers of the All-India Sikh Students Federation (AISSF) moved back in, broke open the locks on their office door and were back in business. Workers of the

Barnala in the Temple (below left); and Akalis clash outside: turbulent times

Barnala's fate hangs in the balance





PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Uncertainty

Damdami Taksal and United Akali Dal also trooped back and started the recitation of the Granth Sahib outside the demolished Akal Takht building. While the Shiromani Gurudwara Prabandhak Committee (SGPC), virtually ousted from the temple premises in January, had been able to move back in following the action, it became uncertain once again how long it could retain this control.

In the midst of this frenetic activity, Barnala repeatedly stressed he had only implemented the resolution adopted by the Sarbat Khalsa on February 16 at Anandpur Sahib. Denying that he had acted at the Centre's behest, he said: "I took this painful decision myself. Persuasion had failed and my leniency was misunderstood by the extremists. I had no choice." He lashed out at former SGPC chief G.S. Tohra for "running away after handing the complex over to extremists" and "not daring to visit the temple after that", and said in exasperation: "First they blame me for inaction; now they are blaming me for doing something."

None of this cut any ice with the dissidents. And the storm broke immediately after the temple entry. Some Cabinet ministers protested that they had not been taken into confidence on the decision, and agriculture minister Amarinder Singh suffered the embarrassment of hearing the news the next day from his tailor, who had come to measure him out for new clothes. "And I am supposed to be the No. 3 man in the Cabinet," he scoffed.

Barnala's rejoinder—he did not want word about the operation to leak out—was the most open admission any chief minister has made that some of his colleagues may be extremist sympathisers.

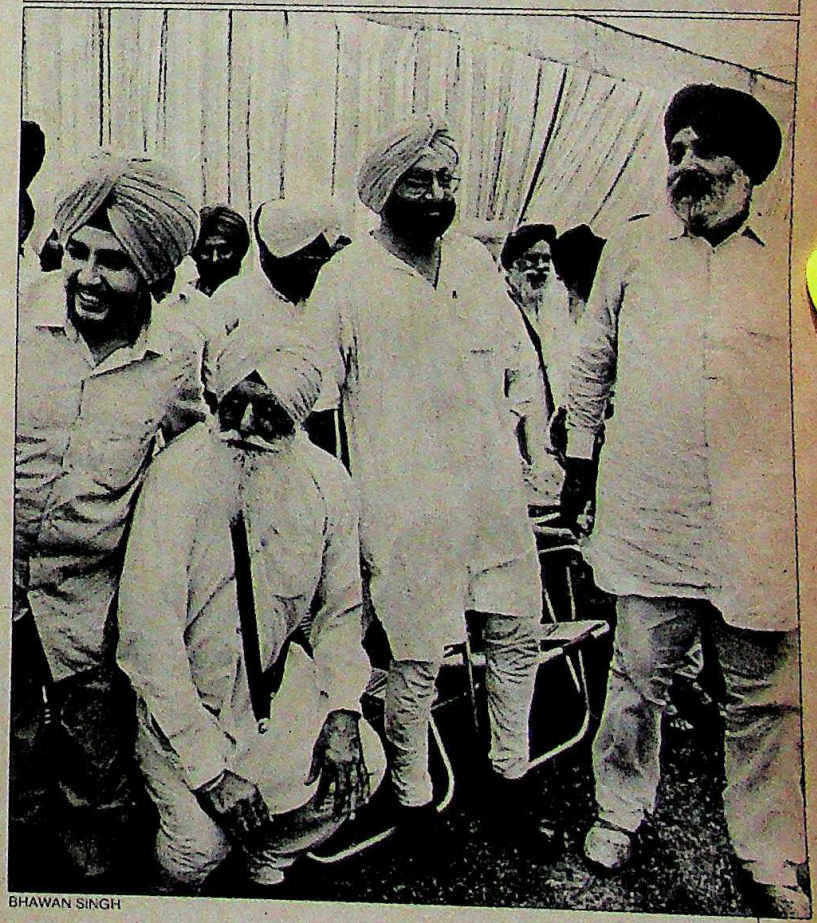
Nevertheless, Amarinder had soon joined the dissidents: the wily Tohra, the sulking former chief minister Parkash Singh Badal and the joker in the pack, Assembly speaker Ravi Inder Singh, at whose house they met. They boycotted the joint meeting of the Akali Dal Working Committee and party MLA's that had been called by Barnala, and the next day Amarinder and education minister Sukhjinder Singh resigned from the Cabinet. They were followed by state tourism minister Sucha Singh Chhotepur.

Badal and Tohra in turn resigned from the party's working committee, along with vice-president Surjan Singh Thekedar, who had held the Akali Dal together in the post-Bluestar period when recognised leaders were in jail. Ravi Inder played a key role in persuading Badal and Tohra to patch up their differences and unite against Barnala. And he took the vital decision to ignore Barnala's expulsion from the party of Amarinder, Sukhjinder and Chhotepur, and recognised the rebels as a separate group in the Assembly, reducing Barnala to a minority. Had he not ignored the expulsions, the 27 rebels

(Below right) Tohra, Ravi Inder Singh and Badal: grim prophecies

BHAWAN SINGH

The rebels were checkmated temporarily



BHAWAN SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DALMIA RESORTS INTERNATIONAL

It is hereby notified for the information of all applicants who applied for the purchase of property shares/holiday certificates in respect of the Dalmia Resorts International at Goa, Kodaikanal and Delhi and to GTC Industries Ltd, The Sree Meenakshi Mills Ltd and Dalmia Dairy Industries Ltd,that the arrangements and agreements concluded between American Express Bank Ltd and GTC Industries Ltd, The Sree Meenakshi Mills Ltd and Dalmia Dairy Industries Ltd for deposit on Escrow Account the purchase consideration received from such applicants with American Express Bank Ltd and for the deposit in safe custody with American Express Bank Ltd of the title deeds to the land and building relating to the Dalmia Resorts International at Goa, Kodaikanal, Delhi have been terminated by mutual consent.

It is further notified that similar Escrow and Trusteeship arrangement has been entered into by GTC Industries Ltd, The Sree Meenakshi Mills Ltd and Dalmia Dairy Industries Ltd with Canara Bank (hereinafter referred to as "the said nationalised Bank").

It is further notified that a sum of Rs. 1,38,08,094.79 (Rupees One crore thirty eight lakhs eight thousand ninety four and seventynine paise only), Rs. 55,45,178.21 (Rupees Fiftyfive lakhs forty five thousand one hundred seventy eight and paise twentyone only) and Rs. 20,43,975.12 (Rupees Twenty lakhs fortythree thousand nine hundred seventy five and paise twelve only) being the balance amount lying in the Escrow Account of the Bank to the credit of GTC Industries Ltd, The Sree Meenakshi Mills Ltd and Dalmia Dairy Industries Ltd respectively has been/will be transferred by American Express Bank Ltd to the said nationalised bank.

If any purchaser who has already subscribed to the property shares or holiday certificates in the Dalmia Resorts International, Goa, Kodaikanal and Delhi, does not approve of the revised Escrow and custody arrangements entered into with the said nationalised Bank, he is hereby notified that he shall have the right to obtain a refund of the amount paid by him provided that he makes and delivers an application in writing to any of the addresses mentioned hereinafter not later than May 31, 1986.

1. Dalmia Resorts International
   65, Mittal Chambers, Nariman Point,
   BOMBAY - 400 021.
2. Dalmia Resorts International
   206-207, BMC House, N Block,
   Connaught Circus,
   NEW DELHI - 110 001.
3. Dalmia Resorts International
   Hotel & Restaurants Consultants (P) Ltd,
   D-6/7, IInd Floor,
   Parsn Commercial Complex,
   121, Mount Road,
   MADRAS - 600 006.
4. Canara Bank
   Marshal House, Parliament Street,
   NEW DELHI - 110 001
5. GTC Industries Ltd
   Tobacco House, S.V. Road,
   Vile Parle (West),
   BOMBAY - 400 056
6. The Sree Meenakshi Mills Ltd
   Tirupparankundram Road,
   MADURAI - 625 003.
7. Dalmia Dairy Industries Ltd
   11 ABC Atmaram House,
   1, Tolstoy Marg,
   NEW DELHI - 110 001.

The application for refund must be signed by the same person or persons who have signed the original application for the purchase of the property shares or holiday certificates and such refund application must contain a reference to the date, name of the bank, the number of the cheque and the amount of the deposit. No claim for refund/losses will be entertained by American Express Bank Ltd.

For further details, please contact :

General Manager—Marketing
Dalmia Resorts International 206-207, BMC House,
N Block, Connaught Circus,
NEW DELHI - 110 001.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KHALISTAN DECLARATION

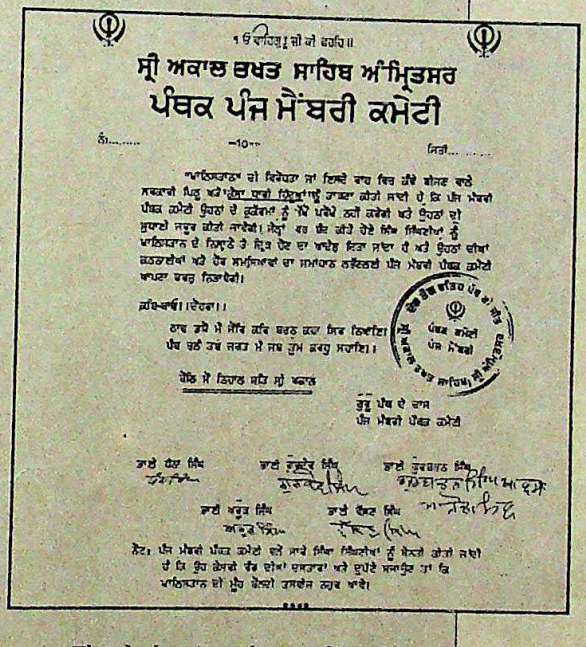
Last Straw

INITIALLY, the declaration of Khalistan by the five-member panthic committee was dismissed as the work of crackpots. Subsequently, it became increasingly obvious that the declaration had manifold objectives. One was to internationalise the Sikh issue and make it more difficult for western governments to extradite Sikh extremists as sought by the Government of India. With the formal declaration of a Sikh state from Sikhism's holiest shrine, it was felt that extremists facing extradition would find it easier to convince western nations that they were freedom fighters and secure political asylum.

Sources acquainted with the extremist leadership revealed that the panthic committee and the AISSF had originally planned to declare Khalistan on April 13, Baisakhi Day. But a faction fight split the AISSF and differences arose between the committee and the "acting jathedar" of the Akal Takht, Gurdev Singh. The announcement was then postponed to June 4, the second anniversary of Operation Bluestar. But the US-based World Sikh Organisation headed by Major General J.S. Bhullar and the International Sikh Youth Federation are believed to have put pressure on the panthic committee to announce Khalistan without further ado. A few days before April 29, the WSO's Chandigarh-based contact-man, a retired bureaucrat, spent some time with the committee members. His reasoning prevailed and the committee advanced the date to April 28. But Delhi newspapers were on strike that day, so the date was postponed to April 29.

By hastening the announcement, the committee also gained revenge on Gurdev Singh with whom it had recently been involved in a running battle. The committee had appointed Gurdev as the head priest of the Akal Takht, but he joined hands with Baba Joginder Singh and a rival faction of the AISSF and tried to overthrow AISSF convenor Harinder Singh Kahlon. Labelling Gurdev a government "agent", committee members alleged he had disappeared from the temple for four days in mid-April and on his return set up a presidium to take over the AISSF. Gurdev challenged the committee, summoned its member Wassan Singh and Kahlon and awarded them punishment.

Wassan Singh vowed to get even. He and the committee members, sources said, anticipated that some kind of police action would follow the declaration of Khalistan. They also



ੴ ਵਾਹਿਗੁਰੂ ਜੀ ਕੀ ਫਤਹਿ ॥

ਸ੍ਰੀ ਅਕਾਲ ਤਖਤ ਸਾਹਿਬ ਅੰਮ੍ਰਿਤਸਰ

ਪੰਥਕ ਪੰਜ ਮੈਂਬਰੀ ਕਮੇਟੀ

ਨੰ..... -10- ਮਿਤੀ.....

ਆਖਿਰਕਾਰ ਜੋ ਵਿਦੇਹਣਾ ਜਾਂ ਜਿਸਦੇ ਕਾਰ ਵਿਚ ਹੀਰੇ ਬੰਨਣ ਵਾਲੇ ਸਰਕਾਰੀ ਪਿਠੂ ਖਹੇੜਾ ਧਾਰੀ ਸਿੱਖਾਂ'ਚੋਂ ਹਮਾਰਾ ਕੌਮੀ ਜਥੇ ਦੇ ਕਿ ਪੰਜ ਮੈਂਬਰੀ ਪੰਥਕ ਕਮੇਟੀ ਉਹਨਾਂ ਦੇ ਕੁਕੈਲਾਸ ਨੂੰ ਖੋਹ ਪਾਏ ਨਹੀਂ ਕਰੇਗੀ ਅਤੇ ਉਹਨਾਂ ਦੀ ਸੁਰਾਣੀ ਜਰੂਰ ਕੌਮੀ ਜਾਏਗੀ। ਐਨ' ਵਰ ਪੰਜ ਕੌਮੀ ਹੋਏ ਸਿੱਖ ਸਿੱਖਿਆਵਾਂ ਨੂੰ ਆਖਿਰਕਾਰ ਦੇ ਨਿਸ਼ਾਨੇ ਤੇ ਸਿੱਧ ਹੋਣ ਦਾ ਮਾਣੇਹ ਕਿਤਾ ਜਾਦਾ ਹੈ ਅਤੇ ਉਹਨਾਂ ਦੀਆਂ ਕਰਤੂਤਾਂ ਅਤੇ ਹੋਰ ਸਾਜ਼ਿਸ਼ਾਂ ਦਾ ਸਮਾਜਕ ਕਲੰਕਤਤੀ ਪੰਜ ਮੈਂਬਰੀ ਪੰਥਕ ਕਮੇਟੀ ਆਪਣਾ ਫਰਜ਼ ਨਿਭਾਏਗੀ।

ਸ਼ੱਕ-ਵਾਦੀ। ਦੇਹਰਾ।।

ਠਾਰ ਤਮੇ ਮੈਂ ਜੋੜਿ ਕਰਿ ਬਰਨ ਕਰਾ ਜਿਮ ਲਿਖਾਇਆ।
ਪੰਥ ਚਲੈ ਤਬ ਜਗਤ ਮੈਂ ਜਸ ਹੁਮ ਕਰਯੁ ਸਹਾਇਆ।।

ਪੰਥਕ ਕਮੇਟੀ ਪੰਜ ਮੈਂਬਰੀ

ਬੋਲੋ ਸੋ ਨਿਹਾਲ ਸਤਿ ਸ੍ਰੀ ਅਕਾਲ

ਹੁਕਮੁ ਪੰਥ ਦੇ ਦਾਸ
ਪੰਜ ਮੈਂਬਰੀ ਪੰਥਕ ਕਮੇਟੀ

ਭਾਈ ਦੇਹਾ ਸਿੰਘ — ਭਾਈ ਰਾਜਦੇਵ ਸਿੰਘ — ਭਾਈ ਤੁਰਵਾਨ ਸਿੰਘ
ਭਾਈ ਅਰੂੜ ਸਿੰਘ — ਭਾਈ ਧੋਨਾ ਸਿੰਘ

ਨੋਟ:- ਪੰਜ ਮੈਂਬਰੀ ਪੰਥਕ ਕਮੇਟੀ ਵਲੋਂ ਜਾਰੀ ਕੀਤਾ ਲਿਖਿਆਰੀਆਂ ਨੂੰ ਕੋਲਾਂ ਕੀਤਾ ਜਾਵੇ ਤੇ ਕਿ ਉਹ ਕੌਮ ਦੇ ਦੋਖੀ ਦਲਤਾਰਾਂ ਅਤੇ ਦੁਹਾਏ ਸਮਾਜਿਕ ਤਾ ਕਿ ਆਖਿਰਕਾਰ ਦੀ ਮੁੱਖ ਕੋਲਾਂ ਹਮਦਰਦ ਲਹਰ ਆਵੇ।

The declaration: letter of intent knew that Gurdev Singh would not abandon the Takht he was supposed to be "jathedar" of. That is exactly what happened. The five members of the committee sneaked out of the temple and Gurdev Singh was arrested by the police on the morning of April 30.

In Chandigarh, meanwhile, there was information suggesting that pressure for the declaration of Khalistan had come from Pakistan; and interestingly enough the announcement said that the new state's capital would be not Lahore but Delhi. If this conjecture was true, Pakistan's motivation may well have been a desire to try and seize the initiative at a time when Benazir Bhutto was creating political problems for President Zia-ul-Haq.

—RAMINDAR SINGH

would have been less than a third of the Dal's 73-strong legislature party and been automatically unseated from the Assembly under the anti-defection law.

Earlier, when Amarinder and Badal released a list of MLA's who opposed the police entry into the Golden Temple, the ruling group took a leaf out of Andhra Pradesh Chief Minister N.T. Rama Rao's book and spirited some 40 legislators off to Chail and Shimla in Himachal Pradesh, to shield them from the allurements of the dissident group. "We have sent the MLA's to the maharaja's palace," joked Finance Minister Balwant Singh, referring to the fact that Chail at one time used to be the summer palace of Amarinder's father, the Maharaja of Patiala.

Fighting for political survival, Barnala had to take the somewhat ignominous step of adding 21 legislators to his council of ministers, including three dissidents, making more than half his MLA's members of the Government. Seeing its strength reduced, the Badal group then escalated the conflict and announced that Amarinder, Badal and Tohra would address gurudwara meetings all over the state from May 11 against the commando action in the temple. This drive would end at Amritsar on June 4, the second anniversary of Operation Bluestar.

BUT BARNALA struck back in a preemptive move by summoning the Assembly for a meeting in Chandigarh on June 2, to decide on the removal of Ravi Inder Singh from the speaker's post. This was almost certain to succeed, given the support extended to Barnala by the entire opposition. And despite Amarinder's declaration that "by July 31 Barnala's Government is going to collapse," there was little doubt that the rebels had been checkmated for the moment.

Interestingly enough, though Tohra joined hands with the dissidents, his two lieutenants—Health minister Basant Singh Khalsa and Revenue Minister Major Singh Uboke—decided to stay put in the Barnala Cabinet. Khalsa confessed that though he was unhappy about the police action, he would not be a party to toppling the Government as this would be pushing Barnala into the open arms of the Congress(I). "The Centre will then treat us like it did G.M. Shah in Jammu & Kashmir, discredit the Akali Dal and dismiss the Government whenever it wants. This is the game that Ravi Inder and his friends are playing," Khalsa charged.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

But Badal and Amarinder charged that Barnala had already played into the Central Government's hands by ordering Operation Search, in effect justifying the earlier Operation Bluestar. "We got votes on an anti-Bluestar plank. Now what will we say?" asked Badal. Amarinder added: "No Akali chief minister would be stupid enough to order such an action unless he was under tremendous pressure."

With both sides having taken diametrically opposite positions, it was inevitable that they would clash. That clash occurred as Badal, Tohra, Amarinder and Sukhjinder arrived at the Golden Temple on May 11 with their supporters. But Barnala's men were already there and a scuffle followed. Once again the area around the temple was put under curfew. Barnala made the telling point that the dissidents had been able to enter the temple for the first time in over three months only because the Government had cleared it of militants.

Responding to the dissident demand that he should apologise for the police action, Barnala said he had done nothing wrong. He was, however, willing to appear before the Akal Takht if Kirpal Singh, the SGPC-appointed jathedar, held him guilty of misconduct.

The politicians' headline-grabbing shenanigans distracted attention from one pressing issue: the escalating tempo of killings by terrorists, who brazenly peppered 44 people with bullets in the week following the police entry. In Tarn Taran alone, 11 people were killed in three

OPERATION SEARCH

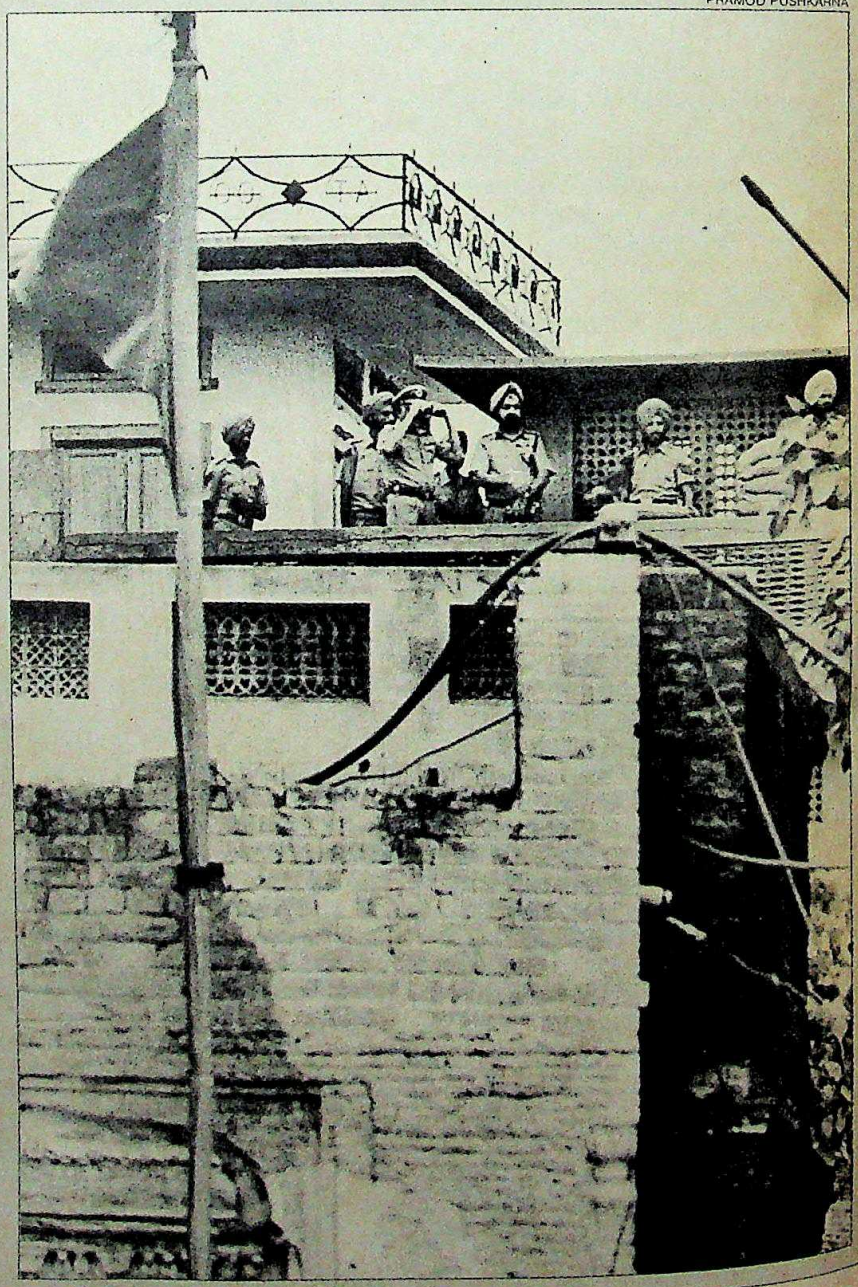
Poor Catch

THE FOUR newsmen had little inkling of what was in store when they received a cryptic phone call inviting them to a press conference on April 29 in room 46 in the Golden Temple. For the past few months, room 46 had been used by Wassan Singh, key member of the five-man panthic committee set up to "guide the affairs of the Sikhs" by Damdami Taksal militants who usurped control of the temple last January. Wassan Singh and his colleagues on the committee, Gurbachan Singh Manochahal, Aroor Singh, Gurdev Singh and Dhanna Singh, had gathered in room 46 to release a statement to the press. Khalistan had come into being, said the statement, later amended to "the fight for Khalistan had begun".

In a sense it had. In Delhi, Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi abruptly adjourned a meeting of the National Development Council and went into a huddle with cabinet colleagues and Punjab Chief Minister S.S. Barnala, who was in the capital. Within 24 hours, black-suited commandos of the National Security Guard (NSG), hurriedly flown to Amritsar aboard IAF AN-12s stormed the temple and arrested about 300 activists of the Taksal and its ally the All-India Sikh Students Federation (AISSF).

But the operation proved hardly worth the risk. The committee members, three of whom are proclaimed offenders, had escaped the net along with other wanted extremist leaders. According to an SGPC employee, minutes after their

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



Ribeiro scans the complex: a controversial move

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

separate incidents, and four passengers were pulled out of a bus and shot near Verowal. In almost all the cases the terrorists escaped, unchallenged by a dispirited police and a scared public. Half a dozen killings a day were now considered disturbingly commonplace.

The only redeeming feature was the splits in some of the killer gangs which, police sources say, led to the shooting of the dreaded terrorist, Sukhdev Singh Sakhira. Another terrorist was killed in a similar shoot-out in Amritsar.

But by far the most important question that arose out of the political developments in Chandigarh was whether Barnala would survive the withdrawal of support by over one third of his party's MLA's. He can stay on as chief minister if he accepts the support offered by the 43-strong Opposition. That prospect pleased Amarinder: "That will discredit Barnala even more," he said. Barnala of course wants to avoid being perceived as a creature of the Centre.

But in the ultimate analysis, Barnala's future will be determined by how opinion in Punjab crystallises during the coming weeks when the dissidents take their case to the people. Badal and his men draw parallels between the April 30 action and Operation Bluestar. While many Sikhs in the villages will undoubtedly agree with them, there are others who realise that the comparison with Bluestar is vastly overdrawn. The transparent ambition of the rebels also damages their cause. The moment the revolt acquired political dimensions, it shifted the focus of public attention from the original issue, the police entry into the Golden Temple. And by a strange coincidence, things will be coming to a head as the second anniversary of Operation Bluestar approaches.

—RAMINDAR SINGH and GOBIND THUKRAL press conference, the four of them tucked in their flowing beards, changed into safari suits, donned spectacles and differently-styled turbans and joined the throng of pilgrims leaving the temple complex. Only Aroor Singh is reported to have spent the night in the complex, and may be among the 300 persons taken into custody during the combing operation. The other most-wanted person, AISSF convenor Harinder Singh Kahlon, was seen moving around in the complex, but slipped out two hours before the operation began after being warned by sympathisers in the local police.

It was to prevent just such leaks that the preparations for the operation had been kept secret. The decision to send in the security forces was taken in Delhi on the night of April 29 after the Cabinet meeting and the consultations between Rajiv Gandhi and Barnala. Around midnight, Barnala left for Amritsar in an aircraft belonging to a wing of the spy agency, the Resarch and Analysis Wing. Accompanying Barnala was Minister of State for Defence Arun Singh, Congress (I) Vice-President Arjun Singh, a major-general of the National Security Guard and top officials of the Home Ministry.

The team from Delhi rendezvoused at Amritsar airport with the Director-General of Punjab police Julio Ribeiro and Amritsar Deputy Commissioner Ramesh Inder Singh. Plans were hurriedly drawn up to raid the temple. "This was the most difficult decision of my life," Barnala later admitted.

Initial plans for the Punjab police to go in accompanied by NSG men in plain clothes were scrapped in favour of an assault by three companies of the NSG to flush out any armed terrorists in the complex. At around 4 a.m. on April 30 plans were finalised and Barnala, Arun Singh and Arjun Singh flew back to Delhi. Barnala rested for a few hours before returning to Chandigarh for a state cabinet meeting. Within hours, AN-12 aircraft started ferrying NSG and CRPF commandos to Amritsar.

AT AROUND 4.30 p.m. on April 30, several truckloads of Punjab police and CRPF constables cordoned off the temple complex. The Guru Ram Dass Sarai and the Guru Nanak Niwas, hostelries for visiting pilgrims, were emptied and all the rooms checked. The commandos then entered the temple complex firing in the air. They first stormed the langar building from where they rounded up about 50 people, and then entered the parikrama after cutting off electricity supply and plunging the area into darkness. Eyewitnesses say that about 10 or 12 stun grenades were thrown in rooms housing suspected terrorists. The firing stopped at 2.15 a.m.

Contrary to expectations, there was no opposition or return fire. An unidentified young boy of 16 was shot dead as he panicked and ran. Another two were seriously injured and one of them died the next day. There were some tense moments when Gurdev Singh and about 150 followers took shelter in the upper story of Harmandir Sahib, the sanctum sanctorum of the complex. They told the DC and SSP that they did not trust the security forces and insisted that a list of their names be drawn up, signed by the DC and handed to Giani Puran Singh, granthi of the Harmandir Sahib. Puran Singh arrived at 5.30 a.m., and it was only after the list was drawn up and signed that Gurdev Singh and his followers surrendered.

But a last-minute snafu the previous night nearly caused the final phase of the operation to be called off. Ribeiro, Ramesh Inder Singh, the NSG general, the DIG of the BSF and other officers had gathered at their command post in the Brahm Buta Akhara adjacent to the temple. At about 10 p.m., when the NSG was waiting for the order to go in, a Punjab police DIG said he had received information that some extremists had wired the Harmandir Sahib with dynamite and threatened to blow it up. Hearing this, Ramesh Inder Singh said he could not allow the NSG to enter. After questioning the DIG as to the source of the information, Ribeiro decided the threat did not appear to be serious. But the news was conveyed to the chief minister in Chandigarh. Barnala said that if it was necessary to go in they should , but care should be taken to see that Harmandir Sahib was not damaged in any way.

Meanwhile, of the 378 persons initially rounded up from the temple complex, only 233 were detained, mainly those belonging to the Taksal and the AISSF. Cases of sedition have been registered against 57. But the end result was disappointing. "No one of note was caught," admitted Ribeiro and only a handful of weapons were recovered, two double-barrel guns, one 303 rifle, one 32 revolver and one pistol.

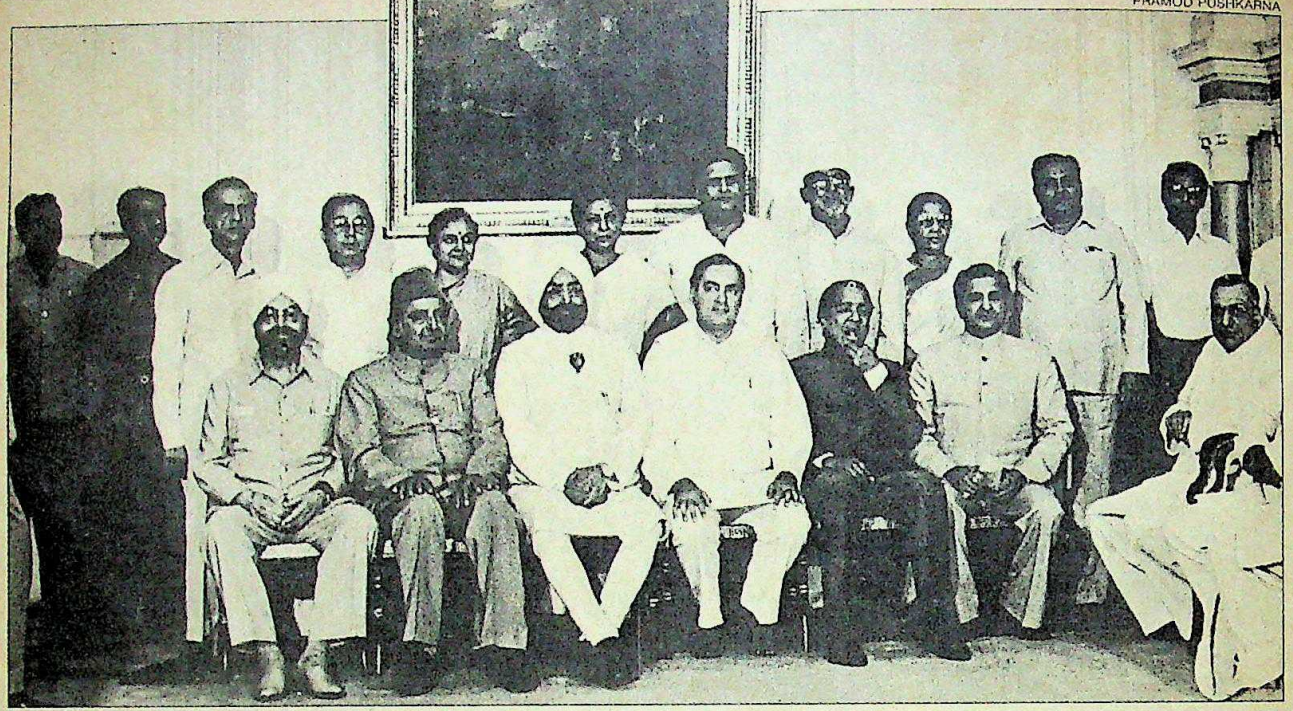
The most disappointing aspect was the escape of the five members of the panthic commitee who had declared the formation of Khalistan, and some key terrorists who were believed to be hiding in the complex. "Their escape leaves my work half done," said Ribeiro. But capturing the five committee members may not have been the main aim of the operation. Ribeiro says that "we knew they had left the temple". He also did not rule out the possibility of an extended police presence in the temple. "I may need to stay in here," he said.

—RAMINDAR SINGH in Amritsar

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



Newly sworn-in ministers after the ceremony: puerile exercise

CABINET RESHUFFLE

Playing it Safe

REPORTS of an impending cabinet reshuffle had been circulating in the capital's hypersensitive political circles for weeks. Nervous cabinet colleagues consulted one another on the possible permutations, insecure in the knowledge that major surgery would be carried out after the end of the Parliament session and before the prime minister left on his African tour. Yet, when Rajiv Gandhi finally ended the suspense last week and executed his second major reshuffle in 16 months, it hardly seemed worth all the waiting.

The exercise was a case of tweedledum and tweedledee, and far less significant than its predecessor in November. If the non-performers and those tainted by controversy were unaffected, the new incumbents were a motley, uninspiring bunch. Indeed, it turned out to be a limited political exercise apparently aimed at rewarding loyalists, striking a regional balance and wooing caste and community leaders.

Despite the expectations of a major purge, Rajiv dropped only one cabinet minister, Bali Ram Bhagat, whom he had inducted barely five months ago as the country's external affairs minister. He also inducted two new cabinet ministers, nine ministers of state and a deputy minister, raising his ministry's strength to 58.

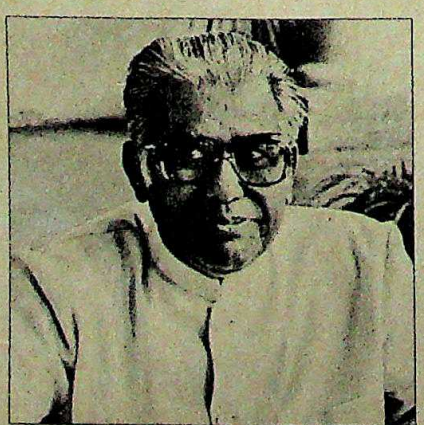
Party loyalists were quick to paint the reshuffle in rainbow colours. Said Nawal Kishore Sharma, AICC(I) general secretary: "Rajivji has selected a team which combines both experience and new blood." All that and loyalty too: most of the new appointees have played a leading role in attacking Congress(I) dissidents, or been effective in combating opposition assaults in Parliament.

Thus, the new cabinet ministers, Gurdayal Singh Dhillon and Mufti Mohammmed Sayed, have no leg to stand on without support from Rajiv, who ignored pressure from his own aides to induct Darbara Singh to represent Punjab in the Cabinet. In the case of the new ministers of state, people like K.K. Tiwari, Santosh Mohan Dev from Orissa, Saroj Khaparde from Maharashtra and Shiela Dixit from Uttar Pradesh have been in the forefront of the Ra-Ra-Rajiv campaign. Admitted a senior cabinet minister: "It is clear from the list that the prime minister has reposed confidence in those who remain loyal to him personally."

That would undoubtedly explain the elevation of Buta Singh as Union home minister, ignoring the damage this would do to Akali sentiment in Punjab. Buta Singh had not only been declared a tankhaiya after Operation Bluestar, he is also naturally anathema to the Akali Government in Punjab. Although Buta Singh has faithfully carried out Rajiv's instructions to try and influence the Sikh community in the country, his appointment as home minister adds a new complication to Punjab's affairs. In fact, Buta Singh was not in the country at the time of the reshuffle. He had left for London three days earlier.

Political observers, meanwhile, feel that Buta Singh's elevation has another, more subtle logic. They conjecture that his shift from Krishi Bhavan to North

B.R. Bhagat: solitary dismissal



PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

We'll deliver. Wherever on earth. SKYPAK The worldwide couriers.

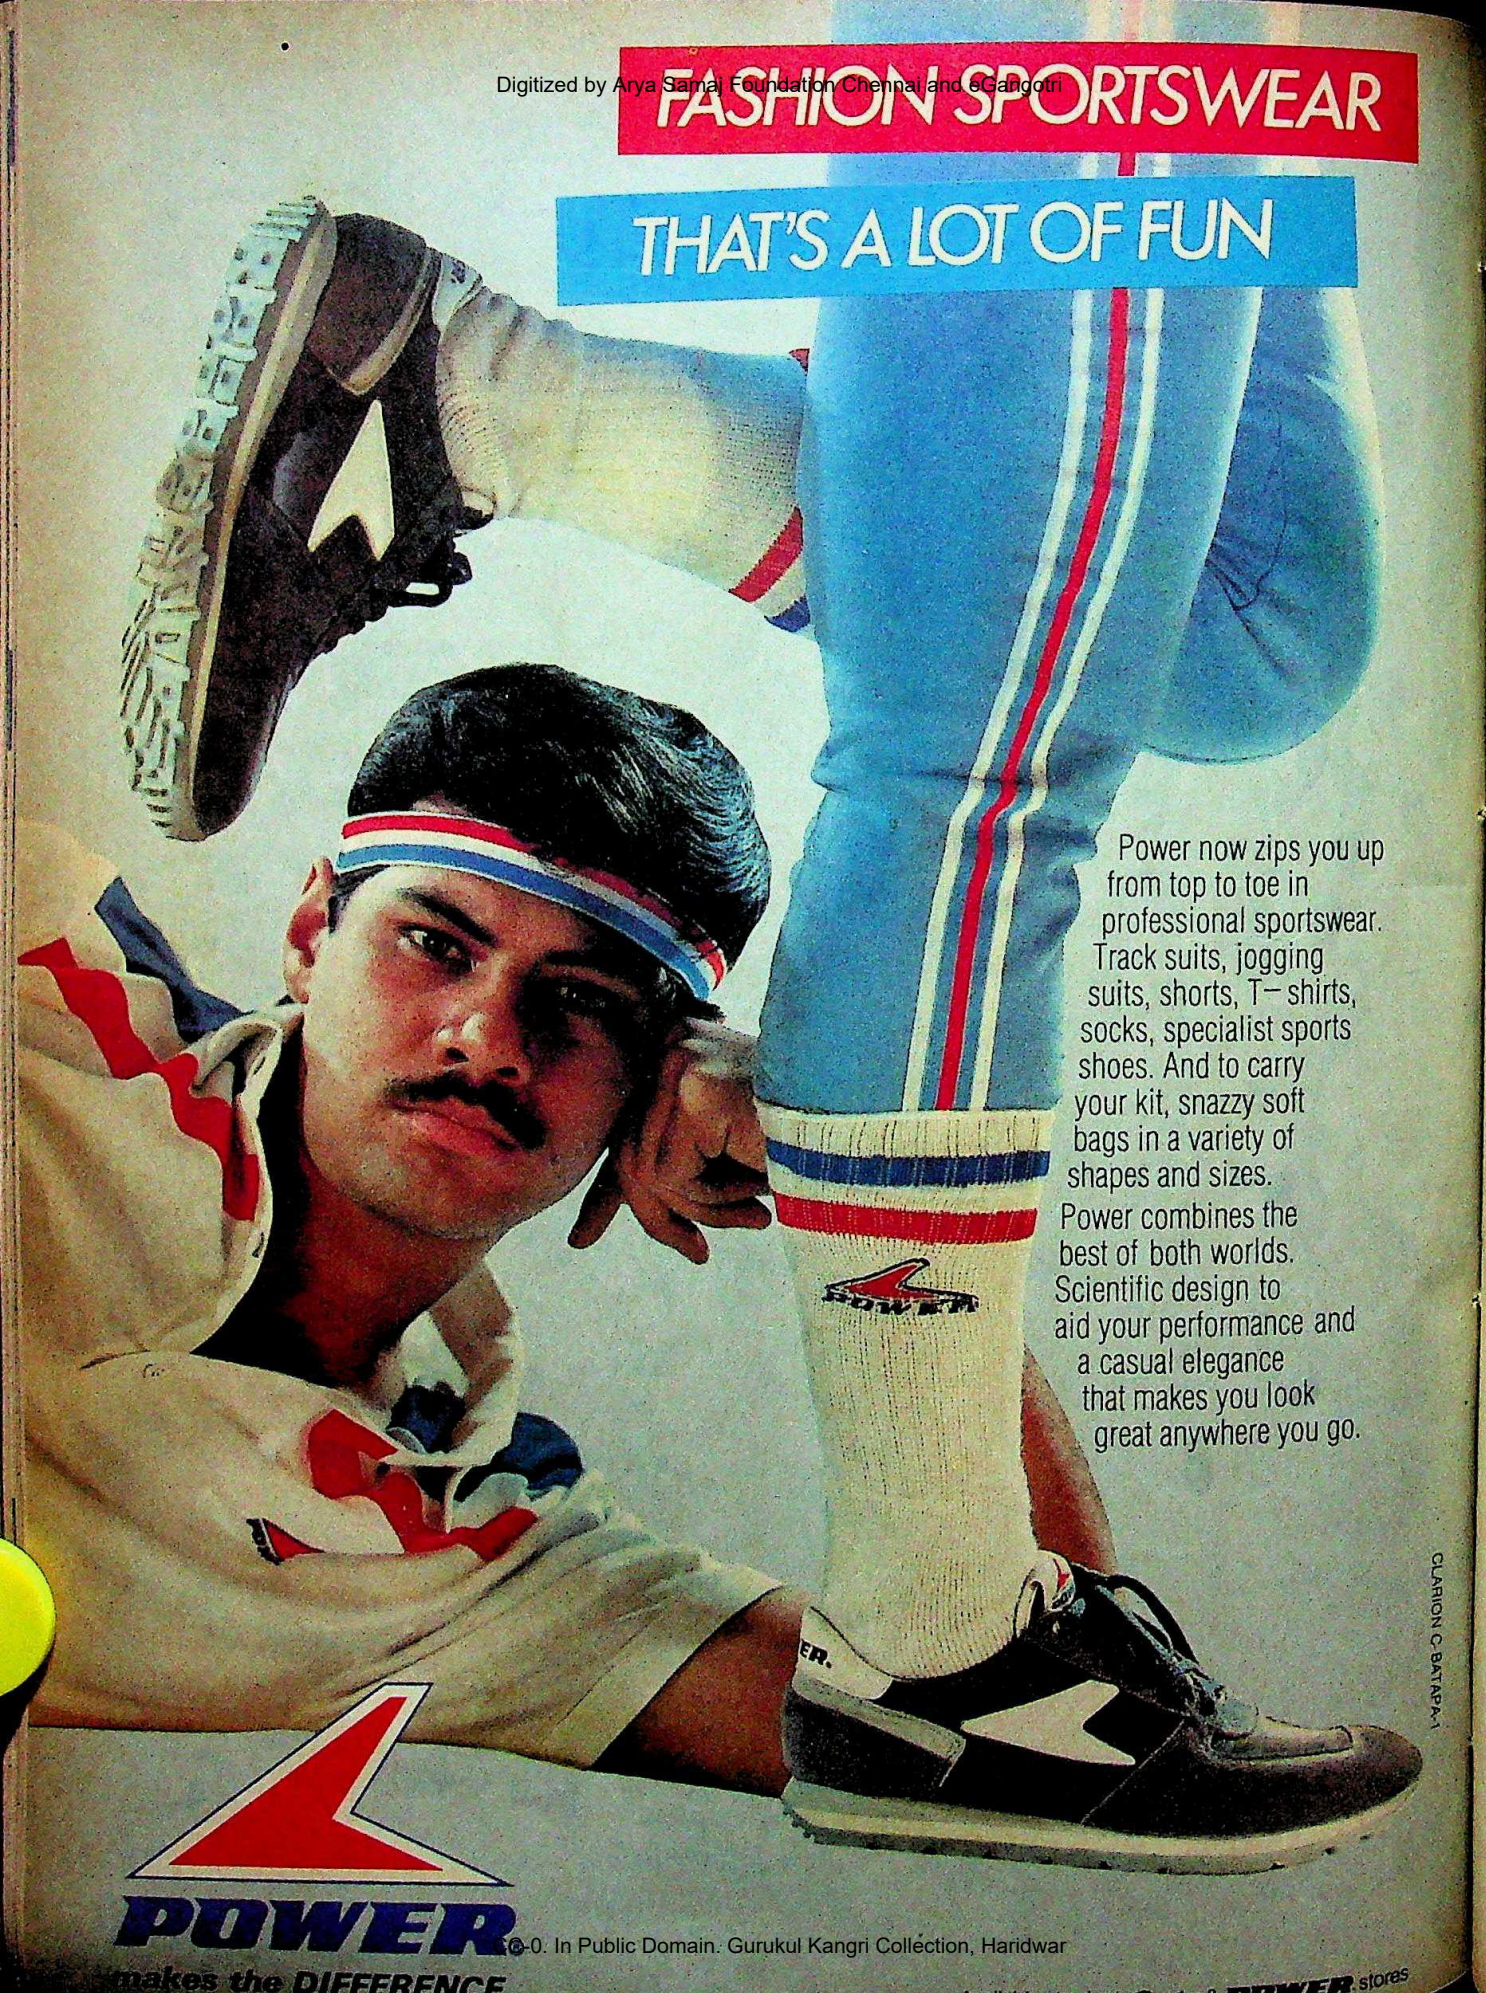
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FASHION SPORTSWEAR

THAT'S A LOT OF FUN



Power now zips you up from top to toe in professional sportswear. Track suits, jogging suits, shorts, T– shirts, socks, specialist sports shoes. And to carry your kit, snazzy soft bags in a variety of shapes and sizes.

Power combines the best of both worlds. Scientific design to aid your performance and a casual elegance that makes you look great anywhere you go.

CLARION C-BATAPA-1

POWER makes the DIFFERENCE...

Available at select Bata & POWER stores

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

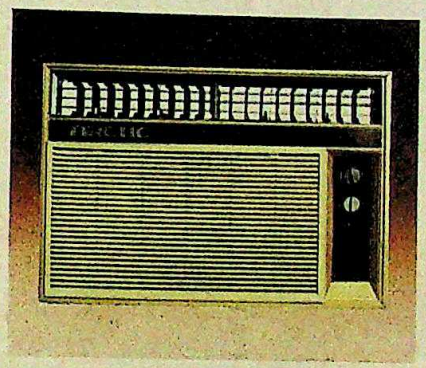
ARCTIC

THE PROVEN PERFORMER

For 100% efficiency and total comfort - Arctic, the time-tested airconditioners have been going strong for the last 40 years.

Keeping pace with the latest international technology Arctic Airconditioners bring a cool world of difference to your place – Faster cooling. Balanced temperature. Humidity control. Silent operation. And sleek looks that go well with any decor.

Arctic Airconditioners even today are the cool and calculated choice of all discerning buyers – business executives, administrators, doctors, govt. departments, labs, computer rooms and the family man too.



Available in 1.0, 1.5 & 2.0 Ton Capacity.

Also Split Type 1.5 Ton & 2.0 Ton Capacity

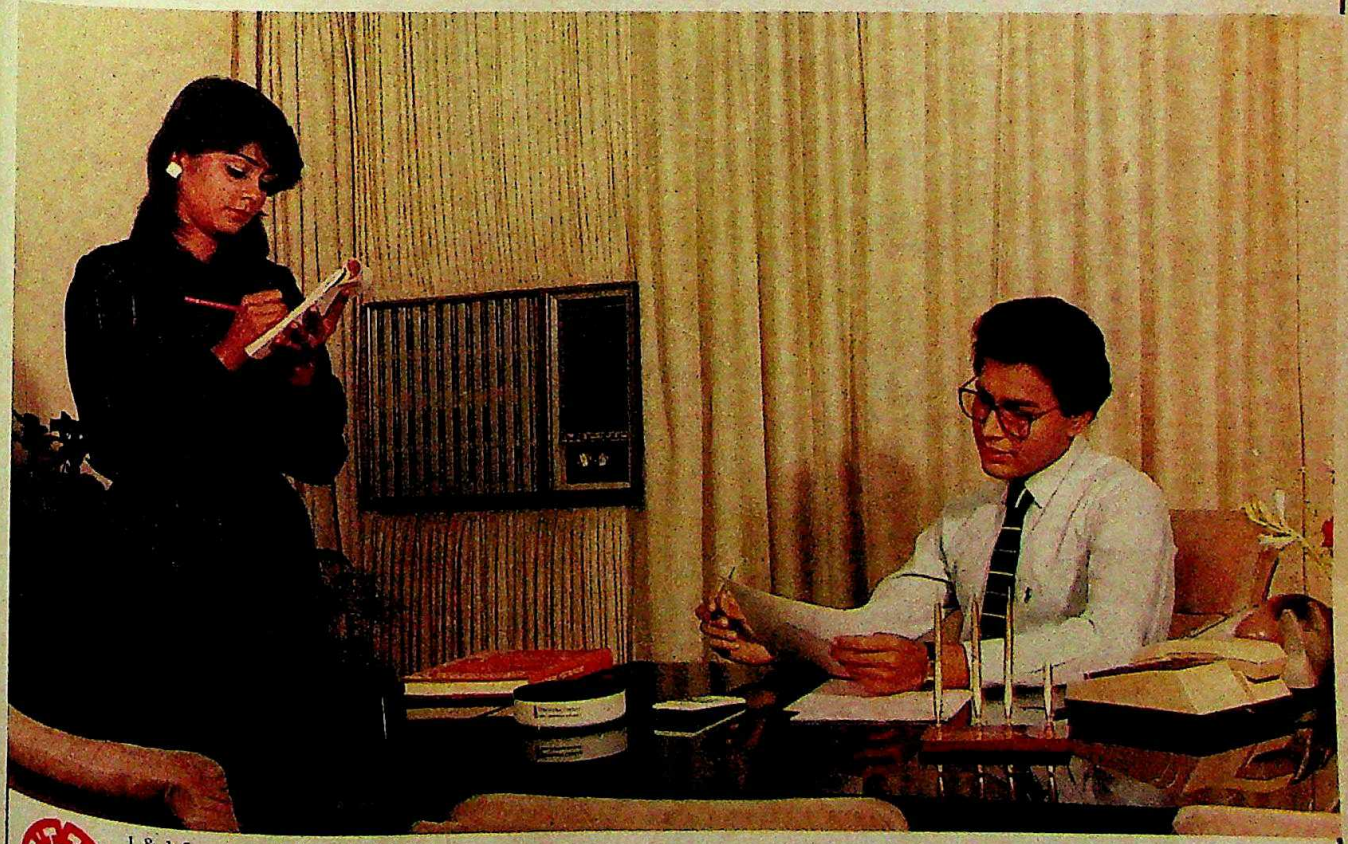
Mfg. by :-

Electronics Limited

METICULOUS ENGINEERING DOESN'T COST YOU. IT PAYS YOU

Regd. Office/Sales H.O.

Atma Ram House, 1, Tolstoy Marg, New Delhi-110001.
Ph-3315008-009-010 Cable-ARCTIC Telex-031-2670



1 & 1.5 ton models on D.G.S&D. Rate Contract Through

APS Electro Stampings (India) Pvt. Ltd.

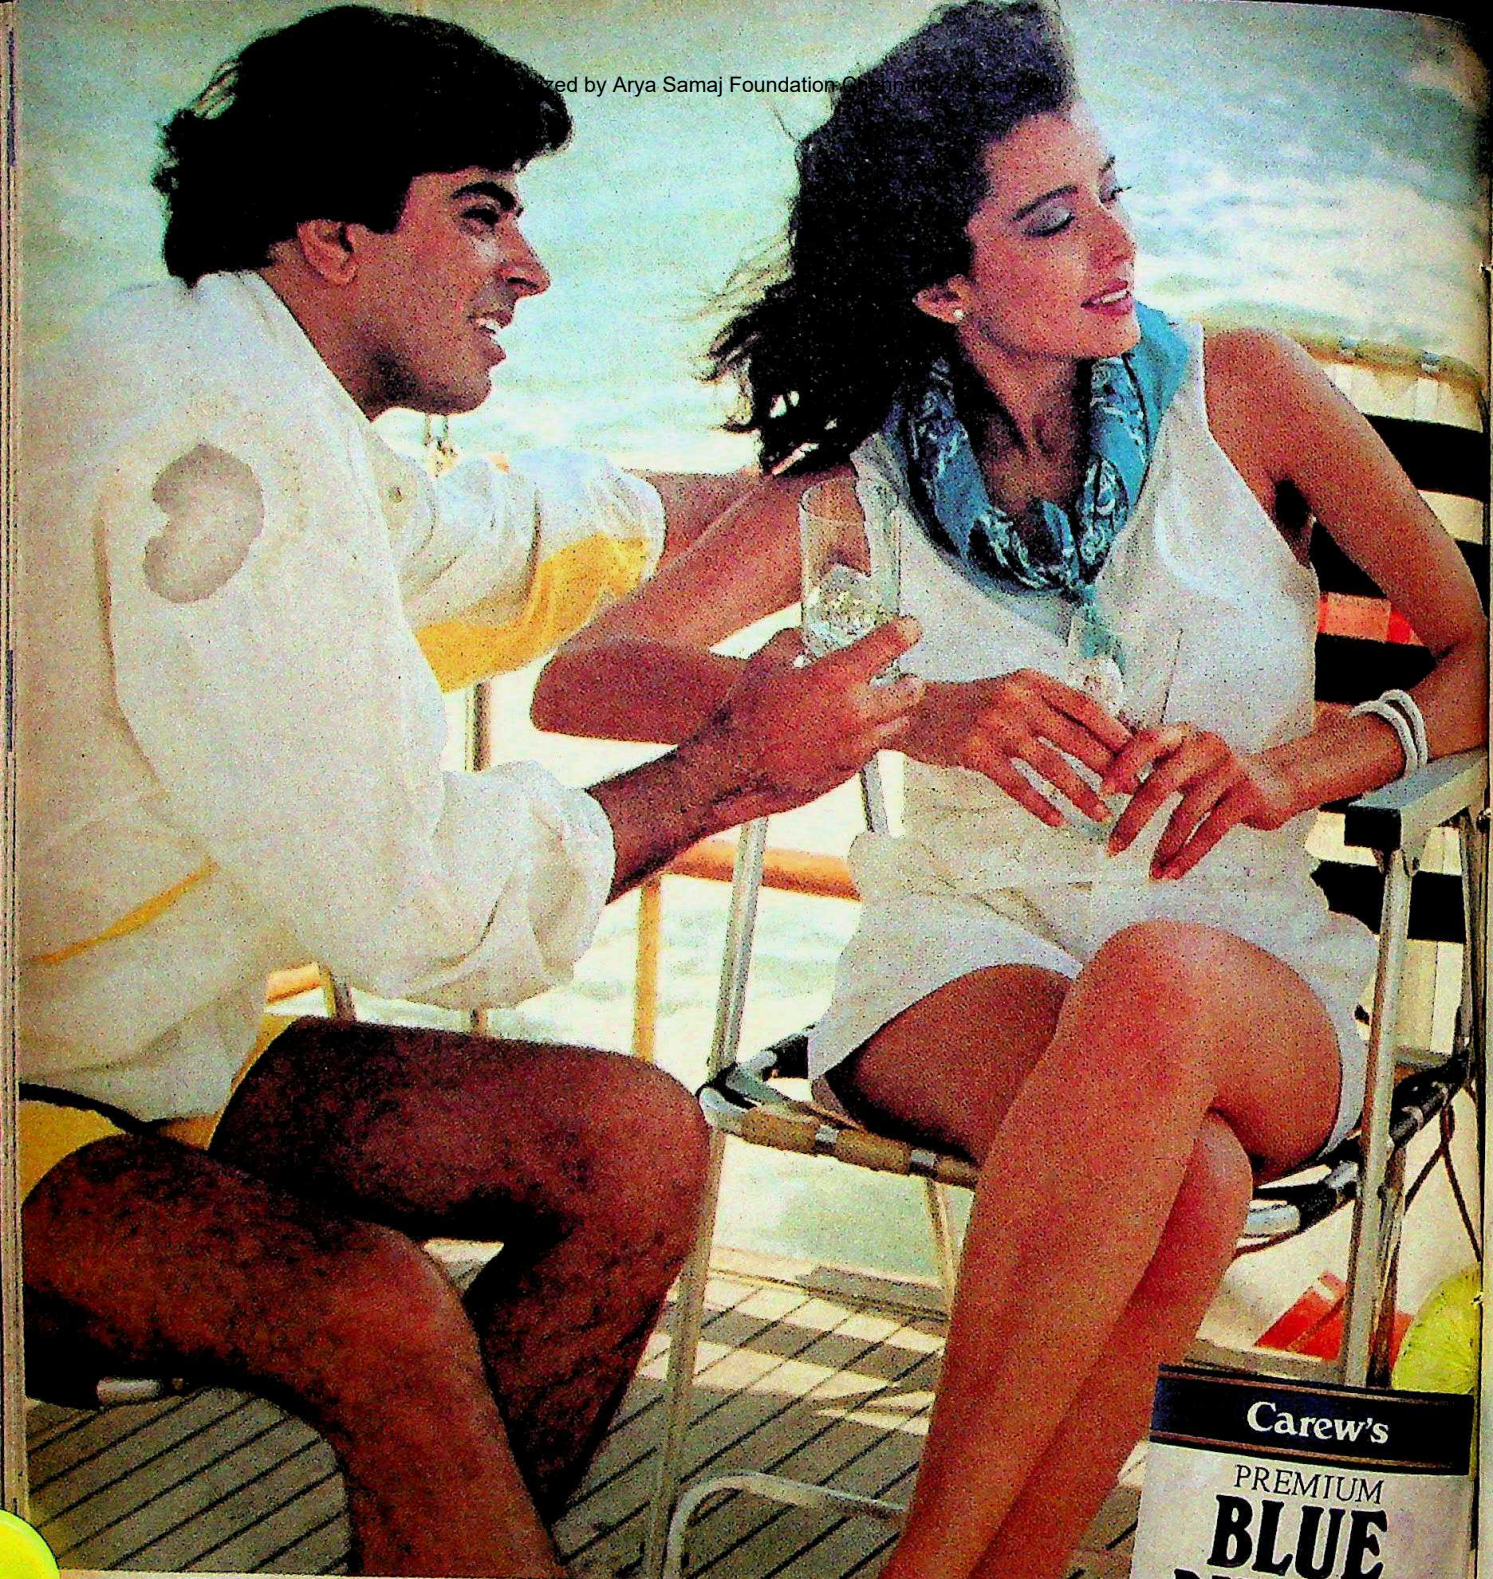
16/5, Mile Stone, Mathura Road ,Faridabad-121 002
Phone: 81-24771, 81-24878 Grams: APSELECTRO

Branches (Phone Nos) :
Bombay (250187), Calcutta (447654), Chandigarh (32456), Faridabad (812-3647), Ghaziabad, Indore (31859), Jaipur (75671), Lucknow (32264), Madras (812352), New Delhi (353311), Patna (24845), Secunderabad

3M 560

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



BLUE RIBAND. A CUT ABOVE.

Blue Riband Lime Juice Cordial: superior, cool

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Block is to give Minister of State for Internal Security Arun Nehru a freer hand in running the home department. Buta Singh is known to treat Nehru with respect, and with the moving of Minister of State Ghulam Nabi Azad—also a Nehru protege—from parliamentary affairs to the home ministry, Nehru will virtually have the run of North Block.

The elevation of P. Shiv Shanker as minister for external affairs will eventually take him away from the financially sensitive Commerce Ministry, of which he keeps additional charge on a temporary basis. As chairman of the AICC(I) foreign affairs cell for over a year, he has been visiting a number of countries as Rajiv's emissary.

The reshuffle also seems to have been influenced by last month's minor revolt in the party led by Kamalapati Tripathi. Tripathi's angry outburst that Indira loyalists were being ignored seems to have had the desired effect. The new inductees, with the possible exception of Brahm Dutt, who had a brief flirtation with the Lok Dal, are all people with strong Indira loyalties. Rajiv even abandoned his plans to offer ministerial berths to a few MP's, like Priya Ranjan Das Munshi, after Tripathi's tirade.

According to Congress(I) sources, Tripathi had also influenced the decision to drop external affairs minister Bhagat. In his letter to Rajiv at the height of the dissident drama, Tripathi had named Bhagat as one of those who had criticised Mrs Gandhi in the past.

That Rajiv was wary of dropping any prominent Indira loyalists was also evidenced by the fact that lacklustre ministers like H.K.L. Bhagat, Mohsina Kidwai, A.B.A. Ghani Khan Chowdhury and B. Shankaranand, who were rumoured to be on the chopping block, were given a fresh lease of political life. Bhagat was actually rewarded with the important additional portfolio of food and civil supplies.

Meanwhile, other ministers in the thick of controversy remained untouched because of their good ministerial performance. Madhav Rao Scindia, minister of state for railways, has been the subject of an official investigation, but remained unaffected by the reshuffle, obviously because the railways have done exceptionally well under his tutelage. Said his senior colleague, Transport Minister Bansi Lal: "The prime minister has been monitoring the performance of all of us very closely."

The cabinet changes have demonstrated that Rajiv, like his mother, has acquired the habit of grooming a coterie of ministers whom he can depend on for advice on vital issues. A core group comprising Human Resources Minister P.V. Narasimha Rao, Finance Minister V.P. Singh, Industry Minister N.D. Tiwari and Shiv Shanker has emerged as the coterie at the Centre which regularly advises the prime minister on political and government matters. This is probably why none of them has been affected adversely by the reshuffle. Buta Singh now joins this select quartet by virtue of the office that he now holds.

On the minus side, the reshuffle also proved that Rajiv has paid little heed to the question of stability in key ministries. The commerce and the external affairs ministries have seen at least four changes in the last 14 months while there have been three changes in the agriculture and home ministries over the same period. The Industry Ministry has witnessed a regular parade of junior level ministers who have been shifted to other departments.

And, even after two major and three minor cabinet reshuffles, the prime minister is still to acquire a complete cabinet. Two cabinet ministers, Bhagat and Shiv Shanker, hold additional charges of ministries, while there is as yet no full-time defence minister. Indeed, the prime minister told newsmen after the swearing in that yet another reshuffle of ministers would be done following the party elections in August. There may be valid reasons for this schedule, but stability in the various ministries has become a casualty.

While the cabinet reshuffle has seen the induction of a number of Brahmins as ministers—scotching talk of a Thakur mafia being on the ascendant in the party—it added to the regional imbalance in the council of ministers. Important southern states like Kerala and Tamil Nadu are still without any cabinet-level representation, while Karnataka has only one cabinet minister. The two Andhra politicians in the Cabinet in fact represent Maharashtra and Gujarat. In contrast, Rajiv's home state of Uttar Pradesh tops the list with four cabinet ministers and nine ministers of state while Madhya Pradesh, with 39 party MP's, does not have any minister of cabinet rank.

All in all, the reshuffle has been a disappointing exercise in ambiguity, considering the high hopes it had raised that, after 16 months in the saddle, Rajiv was going to separate the wheat from the chaff. What he has succeeded in doing is mixing both to such an extent that it is impossible to decipher exactly what his menu for the country is likely to be in the future.

—PRABHU CHAWLA

RAJIV'S POWER HOUSE

Narasimha Rao

N.D. Tiwari

Buta Singh

P. Shiv Shanker

V.P. Singh

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CONGRESS(I)

Dissident Dangers

A DECEPTIVE calm has draped the Congress(I) after the Pranab Mukherjee expulsion drama. The dissidents claim that the slowdown in their activities is a tactical retreat while party bosses insist that the decisive action against Mukherjee and others has burst the dissidence bubble. The truth lies somewhere in between—the dissidents are certainly demoralised, but dissidence is far from over, as the cross-voting on the Muslim Women's Bill clearly showed.

But the impact of the crackdown on the few carefully selected dissidents has certainly pre-empted any further overt dissident rumblings, at least for the moment. The fence-sitters in the main centres of dissidence—Bihar, Haryana, Madhya Pradesh, Gujarat and Karnataka—hastily backed off and began sending reconciliatory messages to the central leadership. Both A.P.Sharma and Sripati Mishra, two of the three suspended members, pleaded in the reply to their show-cause notices that they had never been party to any dissident activity, and both of them voted for the Goverment in Parliament on the Muslim Bill.

But the party can hardly afford to be complacent. Leaders like Madhavsinh Solanki, Gundu Rao, Vidya Charan Shukla and Jagannath Mishra are continuing their extensive but covert contacts with their followers in the countryside in their endeavour to reform the party and regain their lost prestige. Former AICC(I) general secretary S.S Mahapatra and his ilk, who were sidelined shortly after Rajiv's ascendancy, soon joined in and Pranab Mukherjee launched his public contact programme with a warning to all Congressmen that the party was not safe in the hands of the present leadership.

The party's central leadership is striving to give the impression that dissidence has been buried. Boasted Sitaram Kesri, AICC(I)treasurer: "Dissidence existed only in newspapers and the lawns of a few disgruntled, powergreedy and baseless nonentities in the Congress(I). The massive vote in favour of the Muslim Women's Bill in both the Houses of Parliament has proved beyond doubt that Rajiv Gandhi continues to be the undisputed leader of the party and the nation." Added J.K. Jain, secretary of the Congress(I) Parliamentary Party: "Any attack on the prime minister is like spitting at the sky. It recoils on you."

But the outward show of confidence and unity is more like wishful thinking. Despite a three-line whip, issued a good five days before the bill debate, directing all members to cancel outstation engagements and be present in the House, as many as 48 party MP's were absent from the Lok Sabha. These included Vidya Charan Shukla, who chose to stay out of the capital despite the party's refusal to concede his request for absence from the Lok Sabha. Further, more than 30 others pressed the 'no' button while voting on the bill (they claimed later that this was done by mistake), taking the prime minister, who was present in the House, by visible surprise.

The dissidents are certainly demoralised, but dissidence is far from over, as the cross-voting on the Muslim Women's Bill showed.

Those who 'accidentally' voted against the bill included Union Minister for Urban Development Abdul Ghafoor and Sheela Dixit, daughter-in-law of West Bengal Governor Uma Shanker Dixit. Both of them immediately sent a slip to the speaker soon after the red light flashed against their names, pointing out their 'mistake'.

According to senior parliamentarians, such mass mistakes have hardly ever been committed in the Lok Sabha. Chuckled a senior dissident Congress(I) leader from Karnataka: "It was just a way of expressing our solidarity. If we were enough in numbers we could have pressed the issue, but there was no intention of defying the party whip at this stage."

The absence of a large number of MP's forced the high command to revise its earlier assessment that the dissidence had been contained. Union Parliamentary Affairs Minister H.K.L. Bhagat was the first to receive a copy of the voting record with the names of those who were either absent or had pressed the 'no' button. But with the confusion over the "mistakes", even Bhagat was not sure of the extent of defiance. Said Bhagat: "We are collecting the relevent information. One can't say anything till we have heard the other side too."

But the resultant embarrassment has convinced the high command to pursue a tough line. Following specific instructions from Rajiv Gandhi, party Vice-President Arjun Singh sought detailed information from Bhagat. Said Singh: "No party can afford to be ignorant about the goings-on within its own organisation. We are vigilant and have decided to look into every aspect of the voting on the bill. But I don't see any crisis in this. We think everything went our way."

But not for long. Dissident ranks were elated when party Working President Kamalapati Tripathi wrote yet another letter to Rajiv, disapproving of the action against Pranab Mukherjee and others. Significantly, Tripathi sat next to Mukherjee during the Rajya Sabha session on the bill. The dissidents were also quick to point out that there had been no significant response to the attempts of a few aides of the prime minister to extract adulatory statements in favour of the disciplinary actions.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

They scored another minor victory last fortnight when Rajiv gave in to demands for a major scrutiny of the electoral rolls. The dissidents had charged that because of bogus membership, the 'Indira-loyalists' were facing the threat of getting deleted from organisational posts in states like Uttar Pradesh and Madhya Pradesh. As a major concession to Tripathi, all returning officers and observers for the forthcoming party elections were driven down to Tripathi's house to listen to his complaints and take corrective action.

But the dissidents are clearly in no mood to settle for minor concessions—they are demanding a major share in ministerial posts at the Centre, in state governments and in the ranks of the party leadership structure and have chalked out a long-term strategy to achieve their ends. In meetings held separately in Patna, Bangalore, Ahmedabad, Bombay and Delhi last fortnight, dissident groups decided to organise party workers and convince them that they (the Indira-loyalists) were being made victims of a systematic campaign to get rid of the old guard who were identified closely with Mrs Gandhi.

THE DISSIDENTS also plan to give an ideological underpinning to their campaign. One of the notes prepared for party workers says that the prime minister has been influenced by his "non-political" advisers to adopt elitist economic policies which will be used by the Opposition to label the Government as anti-poor. The note goes on to list the concessions given to the multinational corporations, a few industrial houses in the country and the liberalisation in the import of luxurious items in the name of modernisation. Says the note sarcastically: "Is the import of spares for Marutis more important than providing a drinking water pump in a village, or sewage facility in an urban slum?"

Another issue which they plan to take up seriously is the acid attacks on Congressmen by Rajiv himself. Rajiv, in his capacity as AICC(I) president, has used every public platform to condemn Congressmen as corrupt and power brokers. The dissident leaders feel that Rajiv is doing this on the advice of his coterie who believe it will enhance his image. The dissident theory is that this will finally boomerang on Rajiv when he asks people to vote for a party, which, according to his own admission, is full of corrupt elements.

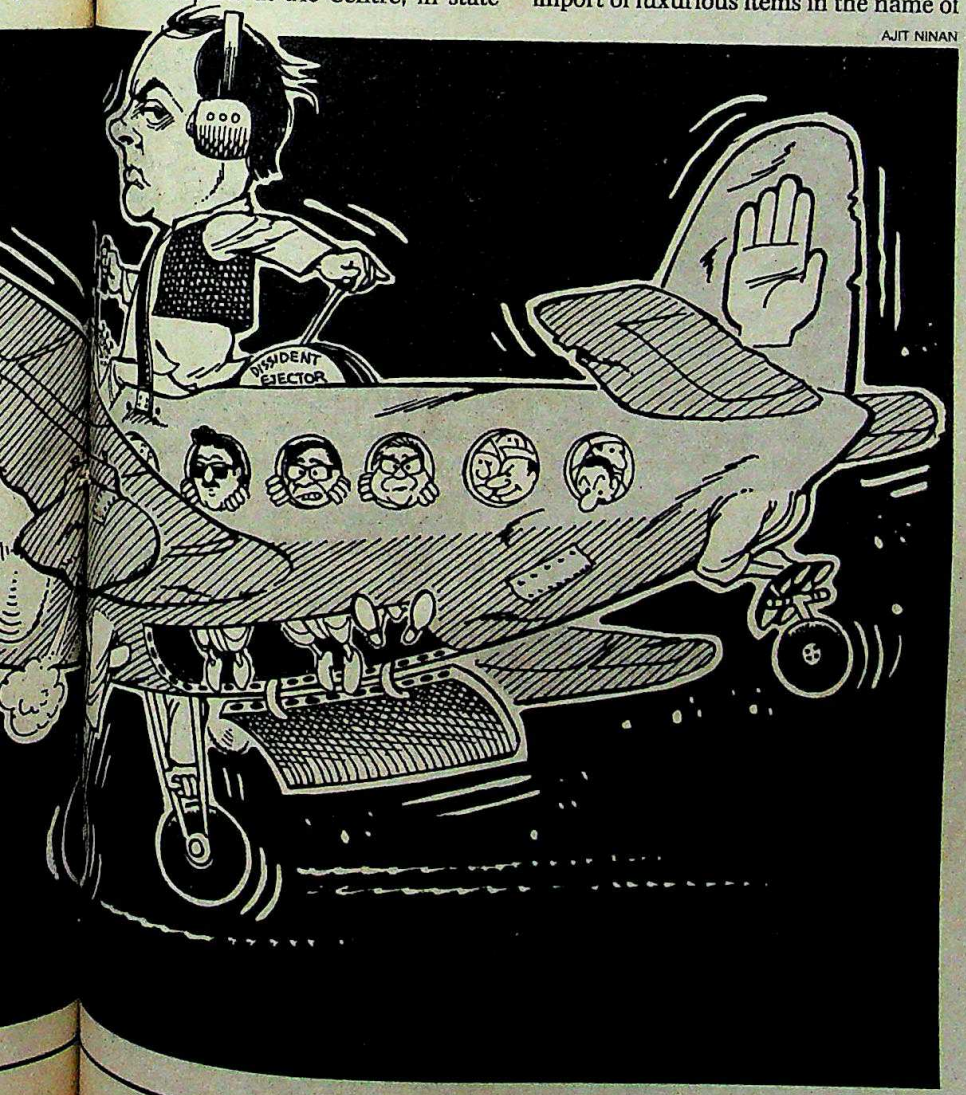
In order to retain their hold over the party, the dissidents have also drawn up a coordinated plan to win the maximun number of party elections. In a normal situation, these groups would also have contested against each other but now they have decided to put up common candidates for the posts in the DCC(I) and the PCC(I). In Uttar Pradesh, the anti-Bir Bahadur Singh forces led by Health Minister Lokpati Tripathi have decided to contest the elections as one group. In Madhya Pradesh, anti-Arjun Singh elements, in which Chief Minister Moti Lal Vora's supporters are playing an active part, have taken a vow to jointly defeat the nominees of Arjun Singh.

The dissidents are also planning to raise the question of the declining vote banks of the party, which they believe is a direct reflection on Rajiv. They point out that he has not won a single election on his own name so far. While the 1984 parliamentary election was fought and won on purely emotional issues, the assembly elections 10 weeks later saw a sharp decline in the Congress(I) vote. The party has also done very poorly in all subsequent by-elections and the assembly elections in Punjab and Assam.

As the power struggle within the party hots up, the assembly elections to be held in the next few months in West Bengal, Tripura, Haryana and Kerala has acquired a crucial significance for the party—and the future of the dissidents. But the immediate test will undoubtedly be the party elections scheduled for August. But whatever the outcome of the party poll, it certainly promises to be a hot and decisive summer for the two camps rapidly forming in the Congress (I)—the Indira loyalists consisting of the old guard against the largely untested strength of Rajiv's men.

—PRABHU CHAWLA

AJIT NINAN



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

P.K. KAPOOR

THE PRIME MINISTER

Instant Drama

Rajiv Gandhi on the road to Pincholi

THERE is instant drama. The MI-8 helicopters have just landed in the wasteland of Tangri block in Nasik district, and Rajiv Gandhi—on the first leg of his visit to Maharashtra's drought-prone tracts—is not interested in the scheduled visit to the work-site of a percolation tank. Instead, he gives an official a copy of that morning's newspaper, which has a report of a village nearby where workers under the Employment Guarantee Scheme (EGS) have not been paid for weeks. "Let's go there," the prime minister says as he quickly climbs into a jeep. The cavalcade is off in search of official wrong-doing.

At the village, the newspaper report seems like hyped-up journalism and the scandal seems to be missing. So Rajiv is soon back on the official tour schedule, visiting the percolation tank, then another in a second district, and then yet another in a third district. Through the blistering day, from one helicopter hop to the next, the prime minister wends his way past officials brandishing charts and figures, seeks out the workers and asks them questions: what are their problems, do they get paid on time, is the bajra that they get of good quality?

If the answers seem schooled, or there isn't very much surfacing that is of interest, he is quickly back in the jeep after instructing the officials to head for some unsuspecting village. "You very quickly get an idea of whether the administration is handling drought relief well or badly," he told INDIA TODAY. Rajiv Gandhi is not another Haroon al Rashid, he is the Inspector Zende of Indian politics.

But as the prime minister traverses the barren land, there are many close encounters of the unexpected kind. Ramdas comes round the bend on the dirt road from his village Pincholi and sees the prime minister approaching in a jeep. He falls off his bicycle in surprise, quickly turns round and follows, eating the dust thrown up from the tyre tracks.

Off the highway into Bhadji village, an old woman stands and stares. A dog barks, the dust rises in puffs from the prime minister's Bata shoes, and an official says keenly: "We've discovered a lovely village, sir." Round a corner, there is another uncomprehending stare from three women and a child. Rajiv turns into a gali and accosts five old women and they speak up readily. It is constantly amazing how, while officials cringe, there is so often a complete absence of awe among the ordinary people.

Talking to women of Gole village

P.K. KAPOOR

Their constant refrain: Give us water. Or the wages are not paid in time ("Can we pay them daily, instead of weekly?" Rajiv asks state Chief Minister S.B. Chavan). In Pincholi, a woman says she gets no more than Rs 2 at the project where she works in Kaoli, 8 km away. Rajiv is quickly off to the site to check this out.

His inquisitioning is gentle, probing. There is a creche at the work site, and he wants to know how old it is. Two months, says the bai. But the cradle's gleaming aluminium frame and unsoiled, brightly coloured nylon rope give the lie to the answer. He next asks about the survival rate for the saplings that are planted. "Forty per cent," an official begins to mumble. "Fifty per cent," his senior butts in. "Then you couldn't be having a water problem," Rajiv quips and moves on in search of the truth.

Back in the helicopter, en route to the next halt, he pats his face with a wet towellete, orders a tall lime juice, asks if there is dessert after lunch, and when told there isn't, says formally: "I then surrender my plate." The prime minister is enjoying himself. A short snooze, a quick peep through the window to assess the crowd at the next helipad, and he is out of the craft, waving enthusiastically.

At the public meetings, organised by the Government but decked with party flags, he talks of deforestation, the technology mission that the Government has set up for drinking water, of various other steps that the Government will take to tackle the drought, of the new education policy and the stress he is going to lay on girls' education. Always, the stress is on the women; he seeks out their section of the crowd, throws them garlands as he drives past. The old women are embarrassed, the young ones grab what bit of the garland they can.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The problems are serious, of course. This is the third consecutive drought in Maharashtra, one-third of the state is affected, a quarter of the 85,000 borewells in the state have gone dry. The land is parched, frighteningly devoid of virtually all tree cover. But from the air the Government's handiwork can be seen everywhere: a series of percolation tanks, trenches cut into hillsides for planting saplings as soon as there is rain. The nss created 180 million man-days of work state last year. So the people have work and the money with which to buy food.

What the people don't have is water. There is always poverty, of course, and the accompanying privation. But for all the severity of the drought, there is not a hint of starvation anywhere.

This truth would have met the prime minister's eyes anyway; but officialdom is anxious to impress. And the state Government has used the 10-day notice of the prime minister's visit to try and make an impression. Not satisfied, officials try to butt in and answer questions that the prime minister asks of the workers. They get a flea in the ear for their pains.

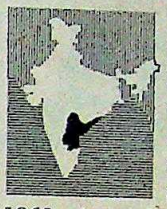
In the end, what has the exercise accomplished? The answers are not always fully convincing, but there is merit in them: The visits give the prime minister a first hand feel of the situation, the occasional wrinkles in the programmes are spotted and ironed out, and a prime minister's display of personal interest in tackling the drought sends its message down the hierarchy. In any case, as an official argues, is it right for such a large part of the country to be going through a problem phase and the prime minister show no interest?

Finally, there is what neither the prime minister nor his officials will tell you: that after journeying through vast stretches of arid land, Rajiv Gandhi's speeches and comments focus not on computers but on deforestation, not on the 21st century but on the fodder problem.

—T.N. NINAN in Maharashtra

ANDHRA PRADESH

Prize Catch



IT WAS a stunning blow for the Naxalites in Andhra Pradesh—easily the worst since the bloody suppression of their uprising in the north coastal district of Srikakulam in 1969. A crack team of police officers, acting on a tip-off, raided four apartments in thickly populated suburbs of Hyderabad as part of Operation Red Rose and busted the clandestine state headquarters of the militant People's War Group (PWG), arrested Nalla Adi Reddy, secretary of the PWG along with six of his associates and seized an incredible cache of firearms and incriminating documents. Exulted the Director-General of Police, Clifford Saldanha: "It is the single, biggest catch in our anti-Naxalite operations."

His excitement was understandable. The mass of secret correspondence, documents, cyclostyled leaflets and tapes seized from the hideout should enable the police to establish, for the first time, the entire scale of operations of any Naxalite group. Investigators with considerable experience of tackling the Naxalite problem in the state have been drafted to sift through the papers and work out a strategy to break the back of the PWG.

Also seized in the raids were wads of currency notes totalling over Rs 4 lakh and an impressive quantity of arms and ammunition—22 revolvers, 28 rifles, 54 country-made weapons, .355 calibre cartridges and 61 grenades—with both Indian and American markings.

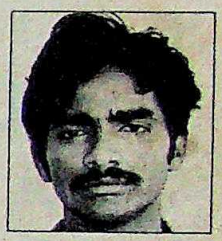
The tip-off came after sustained interrogation of a PWG activist. Three police parties raided apartments in New Nallakunta, Bholakpur and Warsiguda before finally zeroing in on the first floor apartment in the working class Ramnagar area which turned out to be the PWG's headquarters. Seven plain-clothesmen, armed only with service revolvers, tip-toed their way up the stairs and stormed into the flat. The catch included Daggula Shankar, who had served as the courier to the provincial committee headquarters where Reddy had been hiding for the last 18 months.

The documents revealed that:

► PWG collections from beedi leaf contractors, arrack contractors and others amount to roughly Rs 3 crore a year.

► Rifts in PWG factions have deepened after the expulsion of Ramamurthy, an ex-serviceman who was in charge of the arms training camps in Rayalaseema, and the removal of K.G. Satyamurthy from the central committee.

► There is definitely a link between the PWG, which works clandestinely, and organisations like the Radical Youth League andthe Andhra Pradesh Civil Liberties Committee (APCLC) among others. These organisations use public forums, denied to the PWG, to carry on a campaign against the state Government and build up public opinion in its favour.



Reddy and Shankar (top); and (above) Saldanha inspecting cache: lucky break

However, the APCLC President K.G. Kannabiran has angrily refuted the police's findings. Said Kannabiran, a leading lawyer: "The charge that the committee is a frontal organisation of Naxalite groups is an old one. The police and the Government hurl it at us time and again to cover up their own human rights violations."

The truth in the police claims will be known only after the seized documents are thoroughly gone over and the police file their charge-sheet. But with more arrests likely in the coming weeks, it is certain that Naxalites will continue to make headlines in Andhra Pradesh.

—AMARNATH K. MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NOW FROM INDAL

An excellent investment opportunity

Rs. 20 crores of 15% Rights Debentures

ISSUE OPEN FROM
5 May to 7 June 1986

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Secured Redeemable Non-Convertible

This is what your money earns

15% interest per annum. From the day your application money is realised. Even on application money which may be ultimately refunded for reasons of over-subscription.

Thereafter, the interest on your allotted Debentures will reach you every six months. Automatically.

INDAL will review the rate of interest if the Government announces higher interest rates or any other benefits for Non-Convertible Debentures.

Complete security with guaranteed liquidity

These are fully secured Debentures. Which means that the interest, the principal and the redemption premia are fully secured by a first charge on INDAL's assets.

After earning 15% each year for 7 years, you receive your entire investment back. Plus a redemption premium of Rs. 5 per Debenture of Rs. 100.

To provide for redemption, INDAL will create a Debenture Redemption Reserve.

During these 7 years the Debentures can be freely bought and sold on the Calcutta and Bombay Stock Exchanges.

Also, INDAL offers a guaranteed Buy-back scheme: For those who have invested up to Rs. 40,000 and have held the Debentures for a continuous period of at least one year. And the buy-back is at par. Which is like keeping your money in a Current Account and also earning 15% on it.

Backed by INDAL's proven strengths

INDAL has access to state-of-the-art technology in aluminium—through its principal shareholder, ALCAN—the world's largest aluminium company.

INDAL has an impeccable record of uninterrupted dividends for 41 years.

INDAL Shareholders' fund of Rs. 69.8 crores includes bonus shares for Rs. 15.8 crores and reserves of Rs. 37.3 crores.

And now, a look at INDAL's 1985 Financial Highlights

Gross Block	Rs. 157.5 crores
Turnover	Rs. 236.8 crores
Value Added	Rs. 62.6 crores
Profit before Depreciation, Interest, Tax	Rs. 27.0 crores
Interest cover	3.8 times
Profit after Tax	Rs. 11.4 crores
Equity and Reserves	Rs. 69.8 crores

*Which is 3.6 times of Secured Term Debts

The Company has not revalued its fixed assets or capitalised future interest costs into assets.

INDAL

Indian Aluminium Company, Limited
1 Middleton Street
Calcutta 700 071

CONTAD/I/86/4

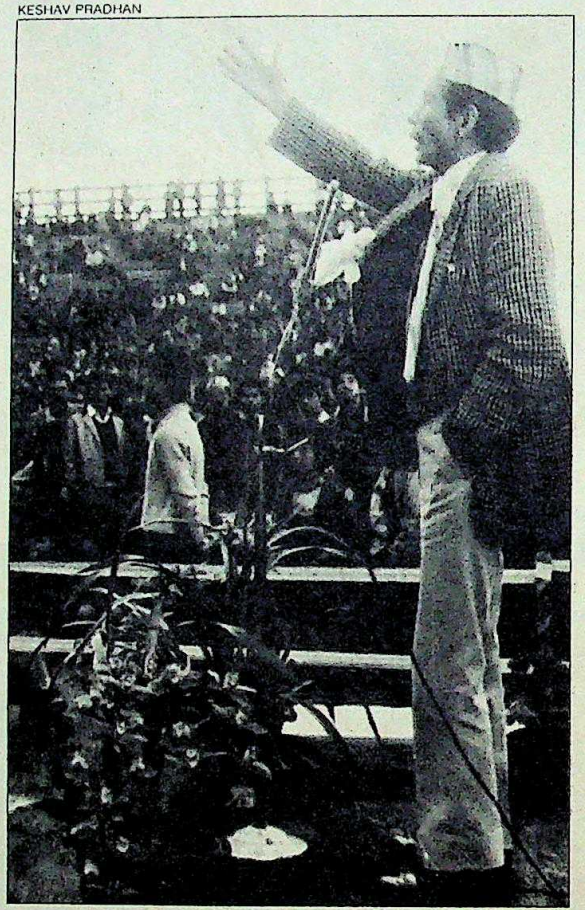
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DARJEELING

Separatist Shock

KESHAV PRADHAN



Ghising addressing GNLF rally

DARJEELING is normally a holiday-makers paradise at this time of the year but last fortnight it clouded over with presentiment of a violent separatist agitation. Its walls filled up with posters and graffiti demanding "Gorkhaland"—a separate state for Darjeeling district—and the police moved into the streets. The Gorkha National Liberation Front (GNLF), which is spearheading the separatist movement, organised meetings and processions throughout the district, startling tourists with cries of "Jai Gorkha" and "Gorkhaland Zindabad."

Chief Minister Jyoti Basu raged in Calcutta: "They (the GNLF) are out to destroy the country. We will oppose them politically and administratively." Minister for Hill Development Tamang Dawa Lama was despatched to Darjeeling to campaign against the movement, backed by contingents of the Eastern Frontier Rifles. The CPI(M) believes the Gorkhaland demand is "against the sovereignty and unity of the country". Declared Lama: "We think there is a deep conspiracy behind this agitation."

But the unyielding separatists gave a call for a 72-hour bandh. "Jyoti Basu has no legal right to interfere with our demand. If the CPI(M) tries to crush our movement with violence our cause will only become more popular," says GNLF chief Subash Ghising. A former corporal, Ghising has been agitating for a separate state since 1979 when the-then prime minister Morarji Desai pronounced that Nepali is a language of foreigners.

The GNLF's agitation on its 11-point programme began with a black flag protest against the "genocide" of Nepalis on April 13, the Nepali new year day, when over 15,000 Nepalis from all over the district assembled in Darjeeling despite the imposition of Section 144 and road blockades by the police. The programme envisages timber blockades, election boycott, social ostracisation of pro-Bengal leaders, boycott of national celebrations, refusal to pay taxes, and ritual burning of the 1950 Indo-Nepal treaty. If the Centre still does not respond, the GNLF has resolved to launch a "do or die" struggle, though the enigmatic Ghising refuses to clarify whether this implies a recourse to arms.

Ghising had only a miniscule following till recently. But the eviction of Nepalis from Meghalaya in March made him into a hero overnight. "We were shocked to hear that nearly 6,000 Nepalis had been picked up like chattel by the Meghalaya police and dumped in Guwahati from where the Assamese packed them off in trucks to North Bengal," says All-India Nepali Bhasha Samiti President Prem Allay. A Bhasha Samiti team sent to Assam and Meghalaya found that the evictions were summary and illegal.

The West Bengal Government's decision to send the evicted Nepalis on to the Indo-Nepal border at Kakarvita added to the Nepalis' gall. Pointing out the Basu Government's double standards, Allay said: "When Bengali refugees came from Assam three years ago, Jyoti Basu's Government had escorted them to refugee camps." However, Darjeeling District Magistrate G. Balagopal denies the charge. "They did not ask for help and went on their own to Kakarvita. Our police merely kept a watch on them," he says. The CPI(M) contends that the evicted persons were all Nepalese citizens. But Bhasha Samiti inquiries confirmed that at least 400 bona fide Darjeeling residents were also pushed back.

The GNLF charge that Nepalis were treated as second class citizens has struck an emotional chord, convincing even educated Nepalis of the need for a separate state. "We are not secessionists or anti-Indian. We want Gorkhaland because we want an Indian identity," explains Ghising. Once Gorkhaland is formed, he believes, Indian Nepalis will no longer be lumped together with the citizens of Nepal. Even the Darjeeling district Congress(I) unit has lent qualified support. Said a Congress(I) leader: "We have decided to press for Union territory status for Darjeeling."

The CPI(M) has hit back by highlighting the contradictions in some of the GNLF's pronouncements. Asked Lama: "If you (the GNLF) respect India's unity and integrity, then why have you announced that you will not sing the national anthem?" Replied Ghising: "We have not got anything from the country for the last 37 years. All our pleas have fallen on deaf ears and in our frustration we have to protest."

The CPI(M)'s warning that the agitation will be disastrous for Darjeeling's tourist-based economy has left the Nepalis unmoved. Says a Darjeeling restauranteer Uttam Gurung: "We are suffering because of this agitation but I still feel it must go on. Our future depends on it." The only fear is if any Bengali is assaulted in Darjeeling, it will be the vulnerable Nepalis living in Calcutta and Siliguri who will be affected.

So far the GNLF is on a non-confrontational path but this will obviously not continue given the intransigence of the state and Central Government. Ghising hints ominously that there are about 40,000 retired soldiers in the district. Indication enough that it could well be a while before the dark clouds over Darjeeling are dissipated.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE in Darjeeling

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Recreating poetry in silks — a monumental rhapsody

LEPAKSHI

From time immemorial, inborn aspirations of the creator-artisan finds expression in beauty evocative of his confidence-of-touch and grace. Amidst the mural backdrop of artistic efflorescence, frieze themes reflect a pleasing harmony .... And rhythm of life throbs in the contours of historic representations.

Weaving idyllic surrealism into a fusion of thought, colour and design is the mastercraftsman who presents a carnival of human life in the 'woven winds' of Pochampalli sarees.

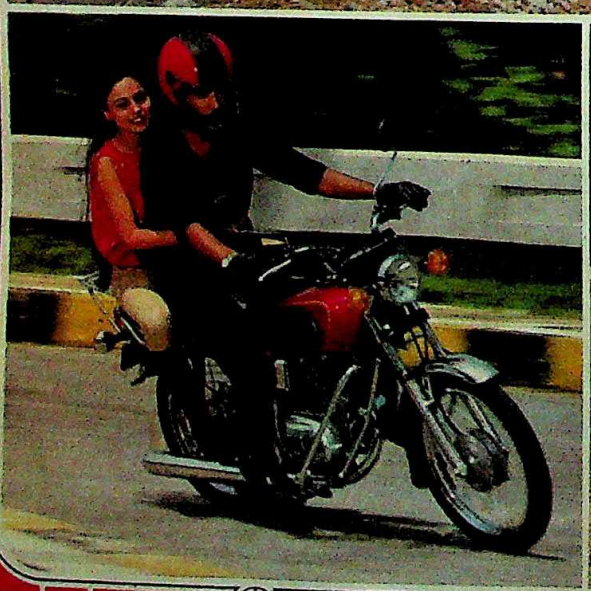
apco

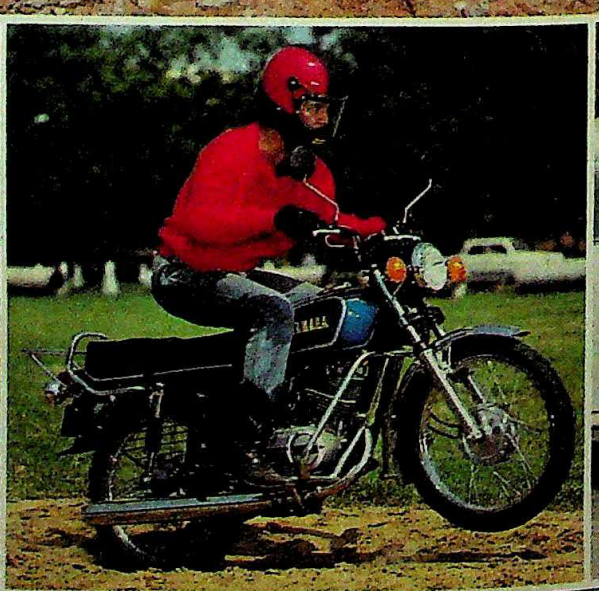
fabrics

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE YAMAHA RX 100





YAMAHA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

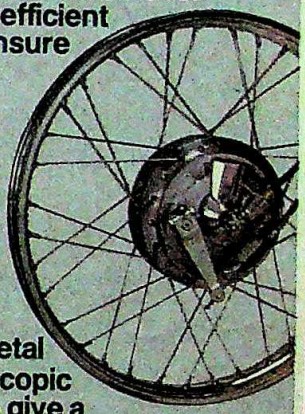
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ESCORTS

Incredible pick-up. Smooth riding. Superb handling. That's the class of Yamaha.

* Powerful 2-stroke, 11 bhp engine that's unmatched in its class.

* Extra large brake drums for surer, more efficient braking, to ensure total safety.



* Unique all-metal Ceriani telescopic front fork, to give a new dimension to riding comfort and superior bike control.

* Longest wheel-base amongst 100cc bikes for superb handling on city roads and sharp curves.
* Exclusive double-cradle frame to ensure durability and complete engine protection.

RX100 AUTHENTIC YAMAHA

By far, the leader in its class.

On the roads today, the leader shows its class.
And a new era in Indian motorcycling has begun.

YAMAHA

ESC-8035

YAMAHA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

More action fashions!

CLASS OF '86

'RSITY

Latest Yankee styles in T-shirts.
224 designs. From Rs. 39 upwards

Smash T-shirts

Trade mark of Aceego Marketing Private Ltd.

116 Maker Chambers III, Nariman Point, Bombay 400 021. Tel: 232345, 231302

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WEST BENGAL

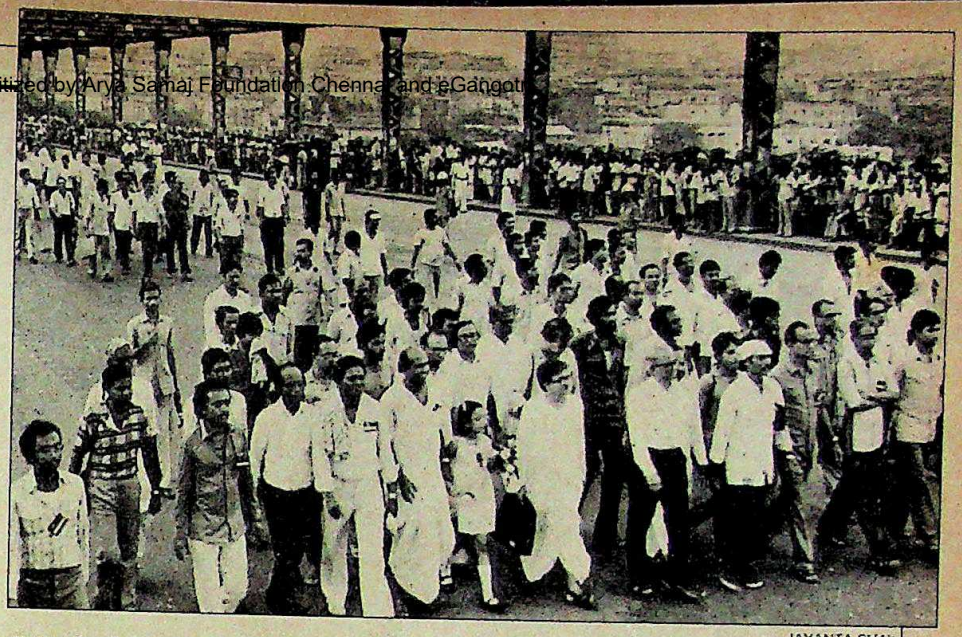
Urban Strategy

WEST BENGAL'S Marxist rulers are preparing to rise like the proverbial phoenix from the state's urban areas where they were reduced to ashes in the last Lok Sabha elections. At a series of marathon state committee meetings last fortnight, the state CPI(M) top brass decided on a multi-faceted strategy designed to re-establish their appeal among the state's urban voters by reaffirming their commitment to the underprivileged and by tugging at regional heartstrings.

The first test of their refurbished programmes will be the state-wide municipal elections scheduled for June 15. "The municipal polls will be a mini-election for the state and its results are bound to have a bearing on the subsequent assembly elections," said Biman Bose, the CPI(M) state committee member who has been in charge of gearing up the party's numerous local units since last December's party congress.

The most spectacular—and instantly popular—pre-municipal election promise announced last fortnight was that slum dwellers and low-income families constituting the bulk of West Bengal's urban populace would no longer have to pay municipal taxes. The state Government has also promised free drinking water connections to basti households, released ad hoc grants to municipalities for last minute cosmetic improvements, and announced a number of other civic schemes. Urban Affairs Minister Prasanta Sur, deaf until now to the squatters' travails, even declared that all squatters evicted by the ring railway project would now be paid compensation.

"This is cheap populism, not socialism," rages state Congress(I) leader Subrata Mukherjee, who had tried unsuccessfully to stymie the municipal tax changes when it was first proposed at the Calcutta Municipal Corporation. In Calcutta, corporation officials estimate, the tax changes will hit the upper 30 per cent of citizens whose enhanced property tax and newly imposed water tax will, in effect, subsidise the running of the entire city. "The Left Front's decision will help people like the deputy speaker of the West Bengal Assembly, who lives in the middle of a slum, and will penalise impoverished property owners who cannot even repair their houses because of low rents," charges Mukherjee. But the majority of Congress(I) leaders have kept mum on the issue for obvious reasons.



JAYANTA SHAW

CPI(M) leaders on a padyatra in Calcutta: back to the people

But the Left Front has not forgotten the state's urban middle classes. They are sought to be mollified by the decision to honour Rabindranath Tagore by holding a year-long programme to celebrate his 125th birth anniversary. This seemingly innocuous move is perhaps the most significant aspect of the Marxist strategy. It not only marks the end of the Left Front's estrangement from mainstream Bengali culture but simultaneously projects a pro-Bengali image for it too.

The Left Front has also promised self-employment schemes to the unemployed, jobs for women in slum health care and development and is explaining that the Congress(I) can never provide jobs since the Centre is doing nothing to open or help the 9,000-odd closed or sick factories in the state. "Youth who have become disillusioned with the Congress(I)'s false promises about jobs are now coming to our Democratic Youth Federation of India (DYFI)," claimed Biman Bose.

The state Congress(I) is still on the defensive in the wake of these measures, but things are getting better for the party in other ways. Factionalism among the state Congress(I)'s big guns—A.B.A.Ghani Khan Chowdhury, Priya Ranjan Das Munshi, Subrata Mukherjee, Somen Mitra, Ajit Panja and Asoke Sen—appears to have gone underground. Pranab Mukherjee's abrupt ouster has not precipitated any crisis—only three Congress(I) MLA's have sided with him. On the other hand, the selection of candidates for 1,240 municipal slots went off relatively smoothly. Said Mukherjee: "This is the first time we have been able to put up candidates for a significant election with so little trouble."

Preparations for next year's assembly elections have already started. The Bombay-based advertising agency, Rediffusion, is reported to have been contacted for preparing an exclusive poll campaign for West Bengal well in advance, and a small team of the agency's psephologists are studying election data and the results of "secret" public opinion polls. But an analysis of urban voting patterns in West Bengal suggests that the Left Front has little to be complacent about: the overwhelming majority of the 85 "urban" assembly seats (29 per cent of the total seats) in the state had been over-run by the Congress(I) in the last Lok Sabha elections.

The Left Front's unprecedented decision to enter into local alliances with its two implacable foes on the "extreme" left—the CPI(M-L) in Bolpur and the Socialist Unity Centre of India (SUCI) in Joynagar—is an indication that it is worried. Congressmen charge that elections are being held in only 74 out of about 100 municipalities in the state because the Marxists are in no position to win in the others. But election analysis also shows that the Front usually retains its marginal seats even if it loses in constituencies where it had traditionally been strong. Should this curious factor come to play in the impending municipal polls, the Congress(I) could well lose its urban bastions to the Marxist phoenix.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KRISHNA MURARI KISHAN

Armed MKSS workers in Patna

ARWAL MASSACRE

Deadly Division

DAYS after the Arwal massacre of April 19, the reverberations of the tragedy still course through Bihar, their echoes reaching as far as the corridors of power in distant Delhi. The massacre—in which at least 21 people owing allegiance to the left-wing Mazdoor Kisan Sangharsh Samiti (MKSS) were killed by the police—was the culmination of the running battle between the landless peasants' organisations and powerful landlords in the Jehanabad sub-division in which the police have been openly siding with the latter. The Arwal massacre has been followed by an equally violent chain of events which have left seven more dead.

While Chief Minister Bindeshwari Dubey continues to publicly defend and justify the police action, the outrage has shaken him. Civil rights activists have described the firing as part of a concerted plan to systematically eliminate those mobilising the poor by branding them "Naxalites" and killing them in stage-managed "encounters". Lok Dal leader Karpoori Thakur and Congress(I) dissidents led by the former chief minister Jagannath Mishra have complicated matters by coming out with their own version of the events and calling it another "Jallianwalla Bagh" massacre.

While Dubey is still publicly justifying the Arwal massacre, the issue is rapidly proving a focus for dissident activity.

That the incident was being coloured by vested interests had become evident almost immediately after the massacre. The same evening, Home Commissioner B.K. Singh and Director-General of Police S.B. Sahay rushed to the spot allegedly to shield Jehanabad Superintendent of Police C.R. Kaswan, who had led the police party responsible for the outrage. The two officers are said to have "dictated" the first information report while the state administration reportedly advised Jehanabad Collector Ashok Singh not to file his own report, in spite of the fact that he was the first top official to reach the spot. Singh had sent a wireless message after his visit calling the firing "unwarranted, unorganised and uncontrolled".

The police claim they were compelled to fire when a 1,000-strong mob of MKSS activists and sympathisers threatened to attack the police station. But villagers, citing concrete evidence to back their claims, say that the police had

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

...dation Chennai and eGangotri

REACH FOR THE TOP.

Top quality movies come easily with Sony's new Video 8. You don't even have to focus — a sophisticated Auto Focus system does it for you. While a highly advanced CCD Image Sensor gives you better picture resolution and improved sensitivity in low light.

Video 8 is so light and compact you can use it to make movies virtually anywhere. Up to 3 hours worth on a single cassette. And immediately review what you've shot through the unit's viewfinder. Or simply hook it up to any TV for instant playback.

And best of all, Video 8's 8mm cassette delivers a picture as impressive as that of a larger cassette.

So if it's top quality movies you're after, better start with the top video camera recorder — Sony's Video 8.

CCD-V8AF

CCD-V8AF Video 8

...main. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Join the Fashion Movement and Create History!

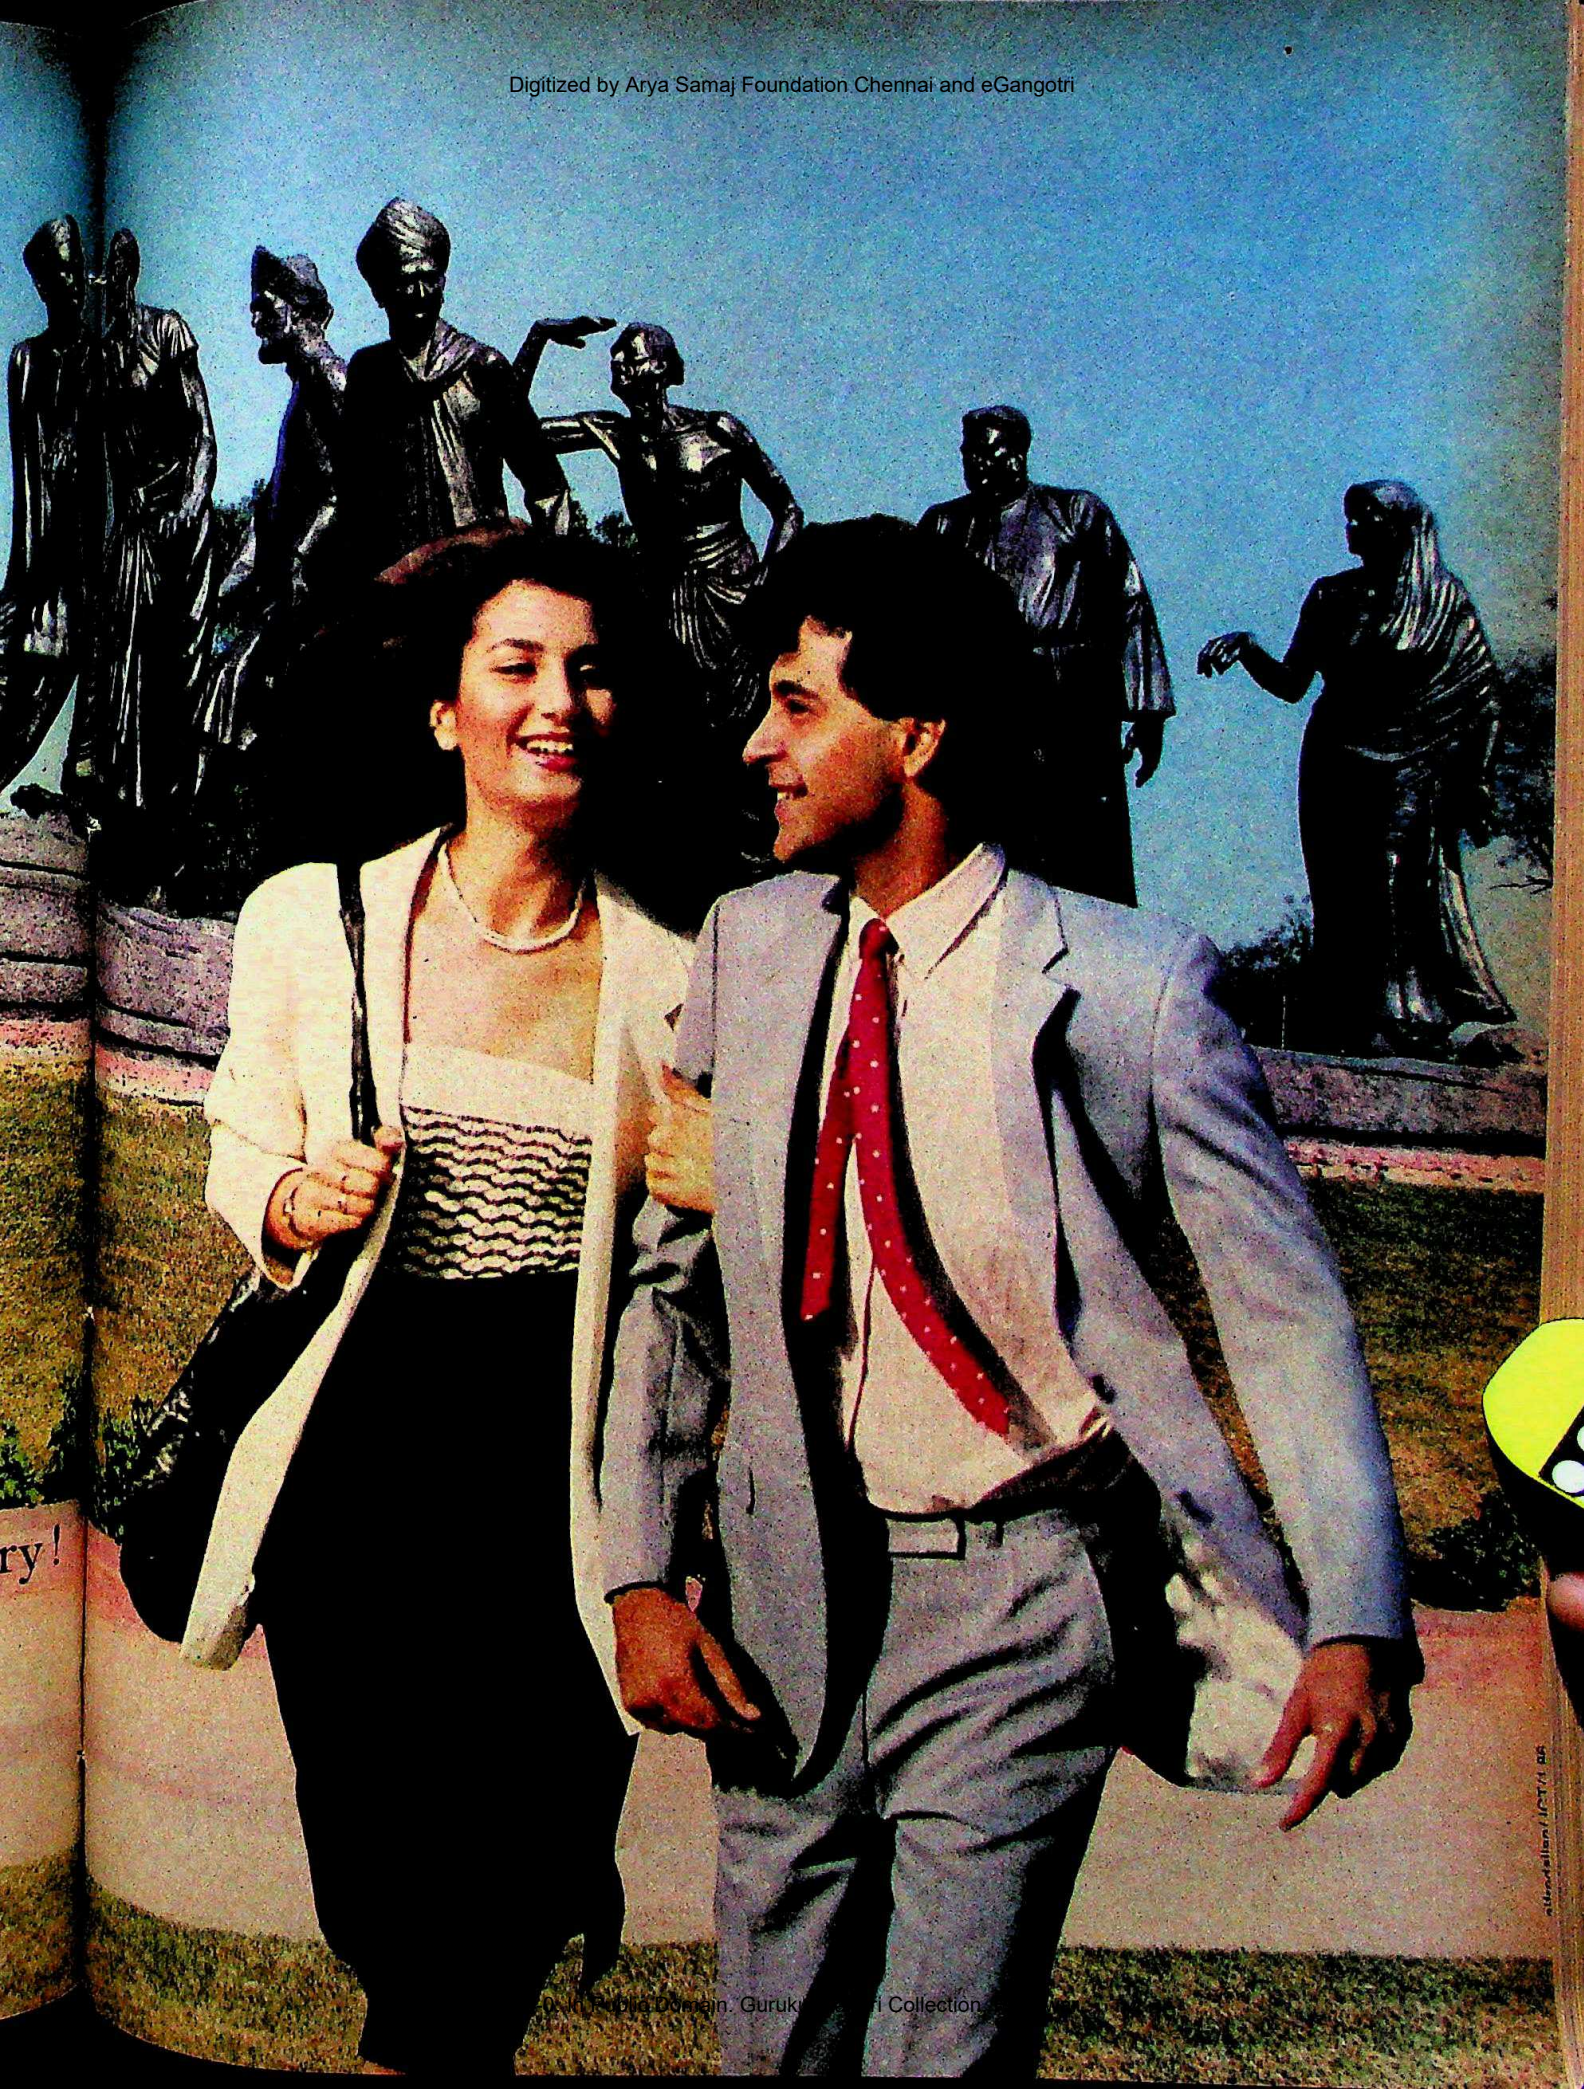
JG

Phagwara

FABRICS

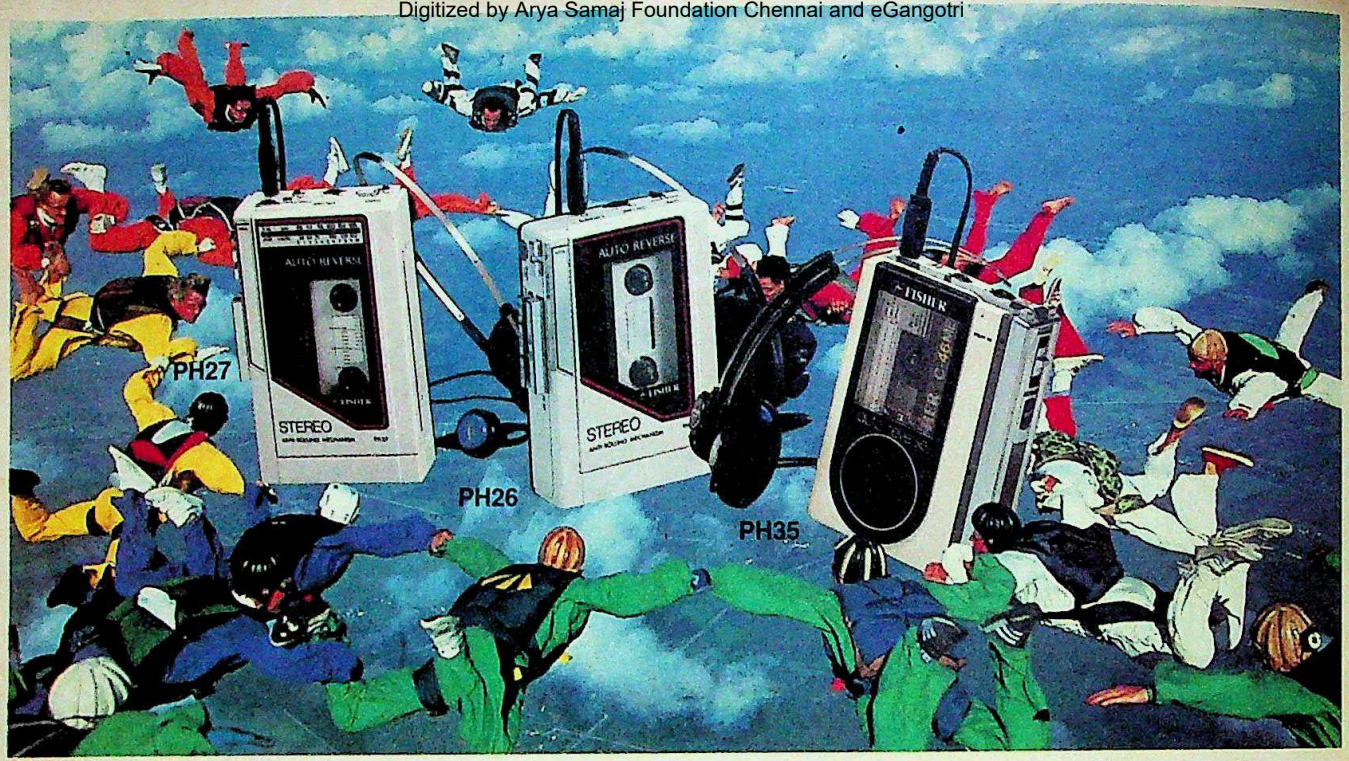
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Fisher – It's a Great New World.

For Fisher even the sky isn't the limit. Since inventing the very first high-fidelity system in 1937 they've been making audio products better and better and better. Take portable stereo cassette players—compact yet loaded with features, the PH27 with an AM/FM stereo radio or the PH26 are the perfect companion for the music lover who's always on the go. Giving you a choice of manual or auto reverse with LED tape direction indicators, all you need to do is relax and let the music play on. And when you want to share the fun with a friend, the PH35 is also equipped with a full-range speaker. So, no matter how you like your music, with Fisher, it really is a Great New World.

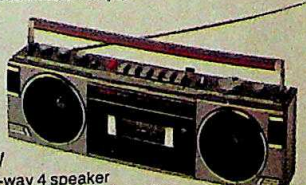
Fisher portable audio—compact and versatile companions for the music lover who's always on the go.

PH405K 22W
Spread out the 2-way speakers for full stereo separation and let the music play. Auto Search finds your musical selection in seconds.

PH463K 50W
High-speed dubbing virtually eliminates the wait of custom tape making.

PH520K 12W
Start dubbing with the push of a single button. "Continuous Playback" provides continuous musical enjoyment.

PH770AF/AH 1.2W
Small and compact, this portable has a built-in LCD quartz clock with radio or buzzer alarm so that you'll always be on top of things.



PH845K 8.8W
Auto Search, a 2-way 4 speaker system and AC or battery operation offer outstanding versatility that you can enjoy anywhere.

PH214K 14W
ALC, variable monitoring system and mechanical pause guarantee proper recording levels and blur-free editing at all times.

FISHER
The first name in high fidelity

BPL-INDIA

Fisher products can be serviced at these local authorised service centres:
- Bangalore: Phone 220266 Telex: 0845-511
- Calcutta: Phone: 431916 Telex: 021-2390
- Bombay: Phone: 4940384 Telex: 011-73789
- Cochin: Phone: 39422
- New Delhi: Phone: 6411037 Telex: 031-2692
- Madras: Phone: 74810 Telex: 041-6507
- Palghat: Phone: 3241 Telex: 0852-213

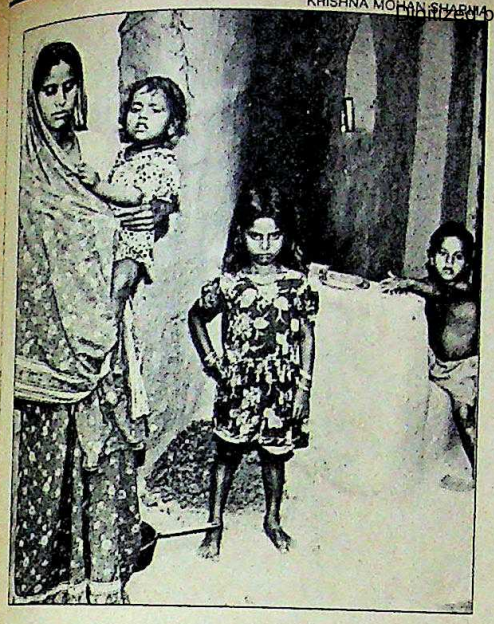
Fisher products are available wherever you go:
Saudi Arabia: Al-Ourni Trading Centre, P.O. Box 2211, Al-Khobar TEL 8646801
Kuwait: Radio House Co., P.O. Box 1001, Safat Kuwait TEL 419123
U.A.E.: Paragon International Co., Dubai, P.O. Box 8771 TEL 231566, Abu Dhabi, P.O. Box 555 TEL 213577
Bahrain: Zayani Electronics, P.O. Box 1395, Manama TEL 259672
Qatar: Hamad & Mohamed Al-Futtaim, P.O. Box 1427, Doha TEL 416147
Sultanate of Oman: Oman Marketing & Services Co., P.O. Box 5734, Ruwi TEL 701180
Lebanon: Hiba Trading Co., P.O. Box 7859, Beirut TEL 353539
Egypt: Fatainas Trading Co., S.A.E., P.O. Box 59 5 Zaki St., Cairo TEL 748488
Yemen Arab Republic: Salem Mohamed Shamlakan, P.O. Box 3342, Hodeida TEL 76173
Sri Lanka: St. Anthony's Consolidated Ltd., 516, Sri Sangaraja Mawatha, P.O. Box 951, Colombo 10 TEL 24261
Singapore: Fisher Electronics (Singapore) Pte. Ltd., Inchcape House, Singapore 0511 TEL 4751894
Hong Kong: Fisher Electric (Hong Kong) Ltd., Wing On House, Central, Hong Kong TEL 5-266565
U.S.A.: Fisher Corporation, Chatsworth, Calif. TEL 213-873-4204
Canada: Fisher Canada, Toronto, Ontario TEL 416-421-8344
U.K.: Fisher Sales (U.K.), Watford Hertfordshire TEL (0923) 31974
West Germany: "Fisher Hi-Fi" Europa Vertriebs-GmbH, München TEL (089) 4145-0

CC-0. In Public Domain. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



KRISHNA MOHAN SHARMA

Family of one of the victims fired indiscriminately on a peaceful meeting of villagers protesting the forcible takeover of nine kathas of government land by a rich Harijan with police connivance.

The outrage gave the Congress(I) dissidents a ready-made axe to grind. Jagannath Mishra, incensed by the fact that Dubey did not even bother to visit Arwal, promptly dashed off a cable to the prime minister inviting him to Arwal and pointing out that when the Parasbigha massacre had taken place in the same Jehanabad sub-division in 1980, the then prime minister Indira Gandhi had not only visited the area but had immediately placed the state under President's rule.

To drive home their point, the dissidents set up their own 15-member fact-finding team to investigate the matter. Three prominent rebels—Jaikumar Palit, Brajmohan Singh and Shyam Sunder Singh—rushed to Delhi last fortnight and submitted its 14-page report to the prime minister, requesting him to visit the area and verify the facts for himself. Though they did not make their report public, sources said that the report categorically condemned the firing as "uncalled for and unjustified".

When the state Government submitted its preliminary report to the Centre on the carnage, Minister of State for Internal Security Arun Nehru, according to informed sources in the state secretariat, rejected it and Rajiv deputed a trusted aide, Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes Commissioner V.D. Sharma, to tour the area and give in to the Government his own report.

Sharma spent three days in the area, refusing state government facilities and help, and reportedly went back convinced that landless peasants were being done away with under the pretext of crushing Naxalites.

Meanwhile, Karpoori Thakur, leader of the Opposition in the state Assembly, prepared his own report, saying that the countryside in Bihar was passing through a reign of terror and lawlessness. Citing examples of "oppressive and coercive acts" of the police and landlords, Thakur listed five cases in March and April in which families of Harijans, Muslims and backward castes were looted, tortured and terrorised by landlords with the active help of the police.

The state unit of the People's Union for Civil Liberties (PUCL) followed with its own report of the situation. It traced the cause of the clashes in central Bihar to the emergence of various landlords' senas in the region which, it said, are oppressing and crushing the poor in their fight for equality. "This repression," the report said, "has also given rise to resistance by the underdogs. This presents a dreary picture."

That the police have been working on a plan to liquidate the "extremists" who have been challenging the private armies of the powerful landlords and creating awareness among landless serfs (INDIA TODAY January 15, 1986) is evident. A ten-page confidential note prepared by DGP Sahay admits that the police are helping the private armies (called "defence groups") in the "Naxalite-infested" areas. The note outlines a six-point plan to deal with the Naxalite menace, including raids on extremists' hide-outs by special commando groups of the Bihar Military Police (BMP) and identification of the areas believed to be strong-holds for effective policing.

Informed sources say, however, that at the root of the recent spate of violent incidents is a group of Congress(I) leaders forming what is known as the "Jehanabad lobby", reportedly headed by Rajya Sabha MP Mahendra Prasad Singh. Taking advantage of the factionalism within the party, this lobby is said to have influenced the chief minister to crack down not only on the Naxalites but also on government officials sympathetic to the peasants.

All appointments and transfers in the region are said to be controlled by this group and any official who does not fit into their scheme to eliminate the "Naxalites" is removed forthwith. It is reportedly at the instance of this lobby that a new police district of Jehanabad was created on April 1 and Kaswan posted there a fortnight later. The Arwal massacre interestingly took place just three days later.

While the state government continues to turn a blind eye, the wheel of violence rolls on, reaping a deadly harvest. According to one estimate, more than 350 poor and landless peasants have been killed in clashes between the two senas in the five districts of Patna, Nalanda, Gaya (which includes the Jehanabad sub-division), Bhojpur and Aurangabad, in the last six years. That the Government has not heard the last of it yet was proved when the MKSS announced last fortnight that it would not rest in peace until it avenged the Arwal massacre. The state Government seems to have forgotten that violence only begets more violence.

—FARZAND AHMED

MAHARASHTRA

Ill Winds

DOCTORS seem to have a peculiar talent for getting into trouble in Bombay. After the recent furore involving the controversial attempt by former Maharashtra chief minister Shivajirao Patil-Nilangekar to get his daughter a post-graduate medical degree, medical circles are agog with yet another scandal. This time it concerns the selection of a surgeon—known for his high political connections—for the prestigious B.C. Roy Award. The nomination of the surgeon has propelled city doctors to challenge what they see as the sordid state of affairs in the Medical Council of India (MCI), the premier medical organisation in the country.

"The award was the last straw on the camel's back," said a visibly upset Dr N.S. Laud, convenor of the Moral Re-armament cell of the Bombay University Senior Medical Teachers' Association. He was in New Delhi last fortnight to meet L.K. Jha, who was the ex-officio chairman of the selection committee for the Rs 50,000 award, to convey the reaction of Bombay doctors to the nomination of Dr R.K. Menda of Maharashtra and Dr M.M.S. Siddhu of Lucknow. The third recipient is Professor V. Ramalingaswami, director-general of the Indian Council of Medical Research (ICMR), who is the only one considered deserving of the honour.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

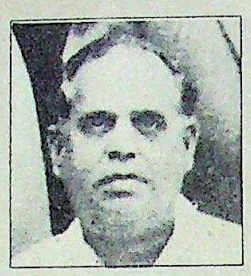
Anomalies abound about this year's selection. To start with, the same committee had rejected Menda's nomination last year. Both Menda and Siddhu are members on the management committee of the B.C. Roy National Award Fund. To top it all, Menda was on the selection committee this year which chose him as one of the recipients.

Instituted in 1972 in memory of Bengal's doctor-statesman who was also the first president of the MCI, the award confers recognition and several cash prizes of Rs 5,000 for outstanding work in various medical disciplines. The award has been conferred only on seven persons in the last 13 years. Critics allege that such requirements have been given the go by and Menda and Siddhu have been chosen for their political connections and their support of MCI President Dr A.K.N. Sinha.



Dr R.K. Menda was on the selection committee which chose him as one of the recipients of the B.C. Roy award despite having rejected his nomination last year.

Siddhu holds an ordinary MBBS degree but is a prominent member of the Janata Party while Menda has had a controversial association with successive governments in Maharashtra. For the last 11 years, he has been the state Government's nominee in the MCI besides being a member of the state medical council and other bodies. As an MCI executive member pointed out: "All state governments except Maharashtra send their director-general of health services to the MCI but Menda is so powerful he keeps getting renominated.

Menda's role as a member of Bombay University's Executive Council came in for criticism during the Nilangekar scandal. More recently, he was alleged to have got his nephew admitted to Grant Medical College in violation of rules but with the "special permission" of the MCI, and his gynaecologist daughter posted to a municipal hospital ahead of more senior doctors. Both decisions were reversed following the Nilangekar scandal. However, Menda refused to comment, beyond suggesting that personal rivalries were behind the controversy.

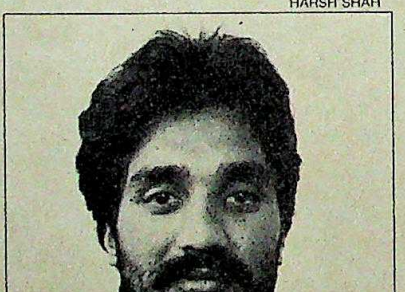
With murky politics threatening to besmirch the nation's highest medical award, the controversy has cast a long shadow on a prestigious national award which hardly redounds to the credit of the medical fraternity.

—M. RAHMAN

CRIME

Escape Scandal

HARSH SHAH



Jinda: most-wanted terrorist

MORE than a month after Harjinder Singh, alias Jinda, literally walked away from police custody in Ahmedabad, the escapades of the Pakistani-trained Sikh terrorist continue to embarrass the governments, and in particular the police forces, of Gujarat and Rajasthan, as well as the CBI. Jinda was arrested in February after a massive nation-wide hunt. The police suspect his hand behind several bank robberies, with much of the loot financing Sikh terrorism.

To start with, the circumstances leading to his escape became the cause for a bitter feud between the Gujarat police and jail officials till Chief Minister Amarsinh Chaudhary handed over the case to the CBI. Within days of his escape, Jinda surfaced in Udaipur at the head of a band of terrorists who shot two police officers dead inside a police station.

Jinda gave the slip for the third consecutive time to the police on May 7 at Bombay. He was spotted with two others in a flat in Antop Hill but the police officers hoping they might be unarmed posted a constable to keep watch. However, Jinda and his two accomplices overpowered the constable, and locked him in a bathroom before escaping.

Gujarat's police and jail authorities must share the blame equally for his escape. Returning from the sessions court in Narol, the three policemen escorting him decided not to wait for the police van and instead took an auto rickshaw. They then decided to stop for lunch, reportedly on Jinda's suggestion. After a while, Jinda told the cops he was going to buy some fruits and walked out. He naturally never came back.

In tacit admission of their guilt, Ahmedabad Police Commissioner P.K. Jha promptly ordered the arrest of the three policemen but there is no doubt that the jail authorities must share part of the blame for the escape. Jailor Balwant Vaghela did not specify in his memo to the police that Jinda was a dreaded terrorist who ought to be taken to court under heavy police escort. This had been done on the three previous occasions but Vaghela, who was promoted from a constable's post three months ago, merely lumped Jinda along with two other prisoners, without even mentioning his name.

There is again a nation-wide alert out for Jinda, with a strict watch being kept on the border. The police do not know what Jinda will do next: slip across to Pakistan, strike in Delhi—he can choose his hour and place.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai

CONFESSIONS

of a Traveller

"I agree with my biwi on everything... well, almost. And when she asked me to go and buy an Eagle Hylo... I jumped at the idea.

For I realised with holidays and travel round the corner, the Hylo would be ekdum invaluable.

Who wants those hazaar journey hassles? Who wants a repeat performance of last year's fiasco of a journey?

With the Eagle Hylo and its store of enough cold water on tap - I knew I'd be kissing all my travelling worries good-bye. No more cranky kids demanding cold drink after cold drink (not healthy for the kids nor my pocket!) No more depending on water that was far from drinkable - the only kind available while travelling.

And yes, the Hylo is going to be an asli investment and even come in everyday use around the house. Why, the biwi's already thought of how easy it would be for the kids to get hold of cold water without even nearing the fridge - besides lining up a hundred and one other uses for the Hylo.

The Hy-lo is going to be a real blessing - inside or outside home. Don't you agree?"

Part of the virtually unbreakable Eagle Thermoware range, Eagle Hylo coolers come in a variety of shapes, sizes and colours with sturdy 'kunststoff' bodies and easy-flow taps. Some with a choice of inners - aluminium, stainless steel or plastic; and some with foldable legs. Perfect for keeping anything hot - from coffee to tea, anything cold - from juices to lassis.

Location courtesy : Akbarallys

Note: Only Eagle Thermoware is insulated with patented polyurethane polyinsulux hence these products may be imitated but can never be duplicated.

For best temperature retention fill to capacity.

EAGLE FLASK
PRIVATE LIMITED

Talegaon 410 507.
Dist. Pune (Maharashtra)
Grams: 'EAGLEFLASK', Pune 410 50
Tel. 321-5, Tlx: 0145-296 EGLE-IN Bombay Tel: 322096/97,
Tlx: 011-73297 EGLE-IN Depots: Delhi 3315066/263561 *
Calcutta 267350 * Bangalore 223299
Madras 24270 * Hyderabad 67088 *
Ahmedabad 399028 * Ranchi 22446
Indore 64356 * Chandigarh * Kanpur

There's a lot you can do with Eagle!

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Non-stop to Europe.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Only Lufthansa can bring you 4 weekly flights from Delhi. And 4 weekly flights from Bombay. All bound for Frankfurt. All non-stop and all with arrival times designed to bring you the most convenient connections to Europe and North America.

Lufthansa
German Airlines

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Book your flight through an appointed IATA agent.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BELGAUM

Saffron War

MUNICIPAL corporation buildings usually have the tricolour fluttering at the top. Given the sad state that most of them are in, some of them don't have even that. But the two-storied building of the Belgaum Municipal Corporation (BMC) not only has the tricolur but a saffron flag as well fluttering at the top. This saffron piece of cloth, denoting "Marathi might", is a symbol of the war that the corporation has declared on Karnataka.

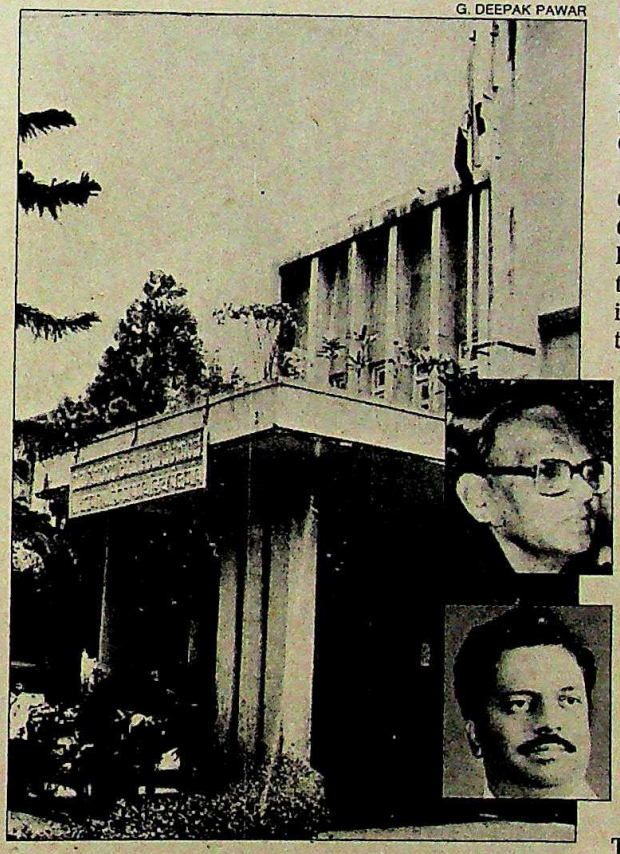
The Maharashtra Ekikaran Samiti (MES), which wants Belgaum to be merged into Maharashtra, is leading the forces opposed to the state Government. It all started in 1983 when the MES won the municipal elections by galvanising the 44 per cent Marathi vote in the city's population of 2.25 lakh. This gave it a winning 33 of the 51 seats. The MES soon made it clear that it was going to use the corporation for political purposes: the very first resolution passed was to seek Belgaum's merger with Maharashtra.

Several similarly defiant actions soon followed. In 1984, the BMC passed a resolution "introducing" Marathi as the third official language. By another resolution last year, the corporation lamented the state Government's policy of teaching Kannada compulsorily to all primary students. Annulling these resolutions, a piqued government warned that the MES's business was to look after Belgaum's civic affairs only.

But matters came to a head last month when Belgaum Mayor Sharad Joshi and other MES corporators hooted out Patil Puttappa, a cabinet-rank representative of the state Government who had come to exhort the BMC to use Kannada as the official language. Given the personalities involved, the flare-up was expected. Puttappa, a Kannada zealot and chairman of the Kannada Watchdog and Border Advisory Committee, had given two days' notice of his visit. Joshi held a strategy session to ensure a noisy reception for Puttappa, and the latter, fearing physical attack, came with a police escort.

Puttappa walked into the mayor's chamber and started addressing the corporators gathered there in Kannada, telling them to use it as the sole official language. Almost immediately, the indignant corporators were on their feet, booing and heckling him and demanding to know who he was to tell them all this. Before matters could get out of hand, the police escorted a fuming Puttappa out of the room. Joshi claimed later that Puttappa had behaved in an "arrogant manner". "He doesn't know how to behave. How can he come to our house and ask us to get out? We asked him to speak at least in English. But he insisted on speaking only in Kannada. How can people who don't know Kannada understand him?"

G. DEEPAK PAWAR



Belgaum corporation office; and (inset) Puttappa (top); and Joshi

Barely a week later, a group of Kannadiga students disrupted a meeting of the corporation by throwing some handbills from the visitors' gallery, protesting against the members' "ill-treatment" of Puttappa. Enraged MES members leapt out of their chairs, climbed up to the visitors' gallery and started grappling with the students. Said B.O.Thippeswamy, one of the protestors: "While two corporators pinned me to the floor with their feet, two others beat me up." Joshi, however, denied this. "The demonstrators not only shouted slogans against us while the meeting was in progress, but persisted in abusing even the women corporators in filthy language," he said and added: "The police also did not help us in restoring order and we had to take steps to evict the members from the hall."

Government spokesmen have not hidden their ire. While Puttappa said menacingly that the corporators had "no idea of the consequences", state Law Minister A. Lakshmisagar warned: "If they think they can get away with all this, they are mistaken." But Joshi dismissed these warnings, saying: "The Government can do nothing."

The crisis is partly of the state Government's own making. Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde has set September 1986 as the deadline for 100 per cent implementation of Kannada as the sole official language. The fracas has only served to push the decades-old border dispute between the two states to the foreground. Just days after the flare-up, Joshi and his corporators trooped to Kolhapur in Maharashtra, 110 km from Belgaum, to attend a conference on the border issue. Karnataka demands the implementation of the 1967 Mahajan Commission award which, following no yardsticks, said Belgaum should stay with Karnataka. Maharashtra, however, has rejected the award.

The Centre's guidelines to the Mathew Commission to follow the principle of linguistic and geographical contiguity, the MES argues, should also apply to this case. Says Kiran D. Thakur, MES general secretary and editor of the Marathi lobby mouthpiece, Tarun Bharat: "If the Centre doesn't review the Maharashtra-Karnataka border with the same principles, it would amount to adopting double standards."

The MES later described the Kolhapur meeting as "the final war". That may be overstating the case, but another round is sure to start if the Karnataka Government makes good its threat to supersede the corporation.

—SRINIVASA PRASAD in Belgaum

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

JANATA PARTY

Hard Times

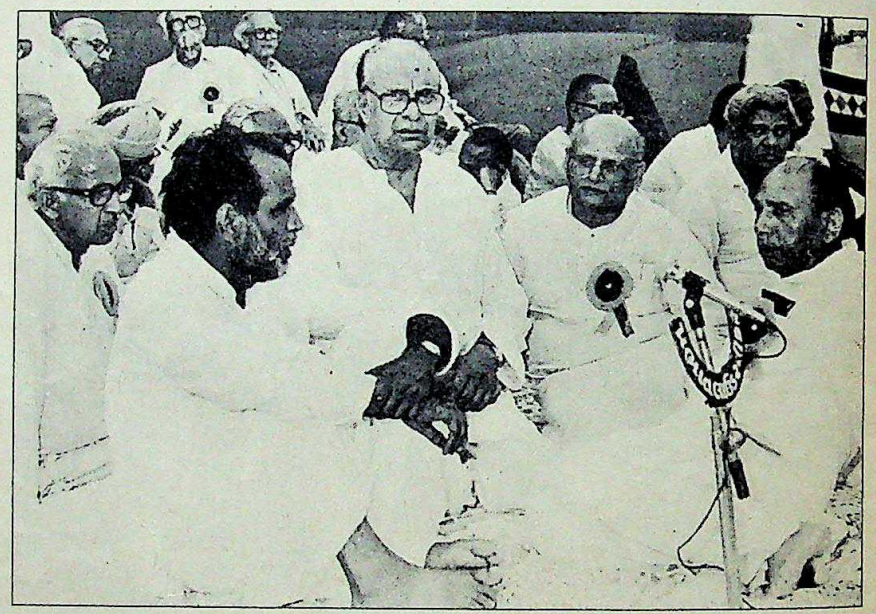
THE JANATA party seems to have as much trouble finding a president as in locating a place to hold its national conventions. In barely three weeks, a barren, 25-acre plot at Parandwadi, 35 km from Pune, was developed and renamed Jayaprakash Pattan to provide the last minute site for its fourth national convention. This spot in the wilderness—which some might say is symbolic of the party's political fortunes—was the only option left when the Karnataka unit of the party backed out of playing host because of drought in the state. Other state units, including Maharashtra, refused to take on the responsibility for the same reason. Chandra Shekhar finally overruled suggestions to postpone the convention and personally supervised the arrangements at Parandwadi, one of the 10 villages in the country where he was gifted land for the creation of a Bharat Kendra during his long march from Kanyakumari to New Delhi two years ago.

If the timing and location of the convention were decided by Chandra Shekhar, he eventually dominated its proceedings too. Isolated, rocky, ringed by the Chaurai hills of the Sahayadri range, and with the temperature varying dramatically between 17 and 37 degrees centigrade, Parandwadi demonstrated yet again that factional rivalries leave Chandra Shekhar as the only Janata leader acceptable to the majority as president. He has led the party since its inception, and though he has often expressed a desire to step-down, he remains indispensable.

But the re-election was spiced with controversy. Swami Agnivesh—the maverick spokesman for bonded labour from Haryana—to the astonishment of a majority of the members of the national council, took the stage minutes after Chandra Shekhar's unanimous re-election was announced and complained that the election was void as his nomination had been ignored. After a nervous re-examination of the nomination papers, party General Secretary Bapu Kaldate upheld the protest and announced elections for the next day.

"I am just throwing a pebble and creating a wave," the saffron-clad Agnivesh said, as he moved from one state enclosure to another canvassing for votes. "If Chandra Shekhar had given the slightest hint that he wanted to continue as president all this would not have happened. I am standing against him with a heavy heart, but I am contesting only to save democracy in the party." The Morarji Desai faction led by former Union labour minister Ravindra Varma lined up behind Agnivesh.

The incumbent president was embarassed but won easily. Of the 623 votes cast by national council members, 525 were for Chandra Shekhar and 83 for Swami Agnivesh, with 15 votes declared invalid. "Without all this drama Agnivesh would not have got more than 10 votes," Chandra Shekhar said later.



Chandra Shekhar with party leaders at the convention

The first candidate when nominations opened on April 12 was the Gujarat Janata leader Indubhai Patel, party treasurer and president of the National Federation of Cooperative Sugar Factories. In response to Patel's nomination Janata parliamentary leader Madhu Dandavate entered the fray and when nominations closed on April 24, George Fernandes, Ravindra Varma, Biju Patnaik and, of course, Agnivesh, had also thrown in their hats, though Patel and Dandavate were the only two serious contenders. A closely-fought contest seemed inevitable but unexpectedly, all five candidates withdrew their nominations and Chandra Shekhar now continues as party president.

Was the entire leadership drama stage-managed by Chandra Shekhar's men? Was Patel the party president's front man so that he remained in control? There are no clear answers. Explaining his turnabout and decision to stay on as president, Chandra Shekhar said: "Seven months ago I suggested Dandavate should be president. I pressed his case with many friends (in the party) who remained stubborn. Then I asked Biju to look for a consensus candidate and he said Indubhai had the widest acceptability. His nomination had its chain reaction. But I made it clear that I had never sponsored Indubhai's name."

While Chandra Shekhar's aides maintain that Karnataka Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde had agreed at a meeting with him in Bangalore to leave the choice of a successor to the president, Dandavate's supporters insist that it was on Hegde's suggestion that he offered himself for election. A Patel-Dandavate contest was fraught with the danger that the factions within the Janata Party would polarise. But what finally persuaded senior Janata leaders to agree on Chandra Shekhar was the growing dissidence within the Congress(I). "We expect a vertical split to take place in the Congress(I) within 12 to 18 months," confided a Janata MP. "When that happens, Chandra Shekhar is the best bet for attracting dissident Congressmen to the party."

So, as both the Janata Party and Chandra Shekhar's presidency entered the 10th year, senior leaders looked to the future in the hope that a realignment of political forces in the country would bring back some of the party's lost power and glory.

—M. RAHMAN in Parandwadi

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

'Even my wife is pleased with my latest involvement!'

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

'Can you imagine a mature man like me falling head over heels in love like a raw teenager? That's just what happened when I saw Gwalior Suiting's Dornfab range. Love at first sight, that's what it was! One look..... and I knew that Gwalior Suiting and I were going to be great blends.

Finally, I had to confess to my wife. She gave me a cynical look and marched off to examine the Dornfab range. And returned with a bagful of fabrics, raving over Dornfab's super weaves, soft colours and latest designs. I was so thrilled with her approval that I immediately endorsed the Dornfab range.'

M. A. K. PATAUDI

GWALIOR SUITING

IN A CLASS OF ITS OWN

DORNFAB

CC-0. Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Texla®

Take one...today

Texla®

COLOUR!
SOUND!
CONTRAST!
ACTION!

Texla Colour TV.
A screen-test that holds good for years.

25

Texla®

of commitment
the consumer

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Texla® The right choice

naa/ND/TX-86

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In health care what you don't see matters most!

Over 4000 high-technology medical instruments and systems in more than 200 hospitals and clinics nationwide.

There is probably no major hospital in India today, which does not depend on these systems from Blue Star.

For diagnostic investigation and biochemical analysis. In intensive, emergency, maternity and child care.

Behind the scene, Blue Star Electronics is at work where it matters most.

Total Electronics Capability

Blue Star in association with Hewlett-Packard, Hitachi, Scientific Atlanta, Technicon, Yokogawa Hokushin, Johnson Controls and Jeumont-Schneider—each a leader in its own field—has been in the forefront of Electronics for over 30 years.

Among the products it markets and increasingly manufactures in India are : State-of-the-art Computer Systems and Business Machines, Analytical Instruments, Medical Instruments, Test and Measuring Instruments, Process Control Instrumentation, EPABX Systems and Professional Electronic Components.

These are backed by over 1000 man years of specialised experience of over 200 professionals.

Blue Star also exports Computer Software to technologically advanced countries.

State-of-the-art Solutions

Business, Industry and Government. Defence, Space and Telecommunications. Medicine, Research and Education. Increasingly, they will need Electronics.

And that's where they will find Blue Star.

In the vanguard of technology. With a total package of state-of-the-art solutions to their complex problems.

THE BLUE STAR PACKAGE

- State-of-the-art, high technology products from world leaders.
- Prestigious manufacturing collaborations : Hewlett-Packard, Jeumont-Schneider, Yokogawa Hokushin.
- Systems-engineering capability of foreign-trained Blue Star scientists and engineers, for solutions to customer needs.
- Customer support services : technology update seminars; demonstrations and training programmes; ever-expanding technology applications library; electronics R & D centre; countrywide network of service centres; calibration and workshop facilities; ample stocks of spare parts.

★ BLUE STAR

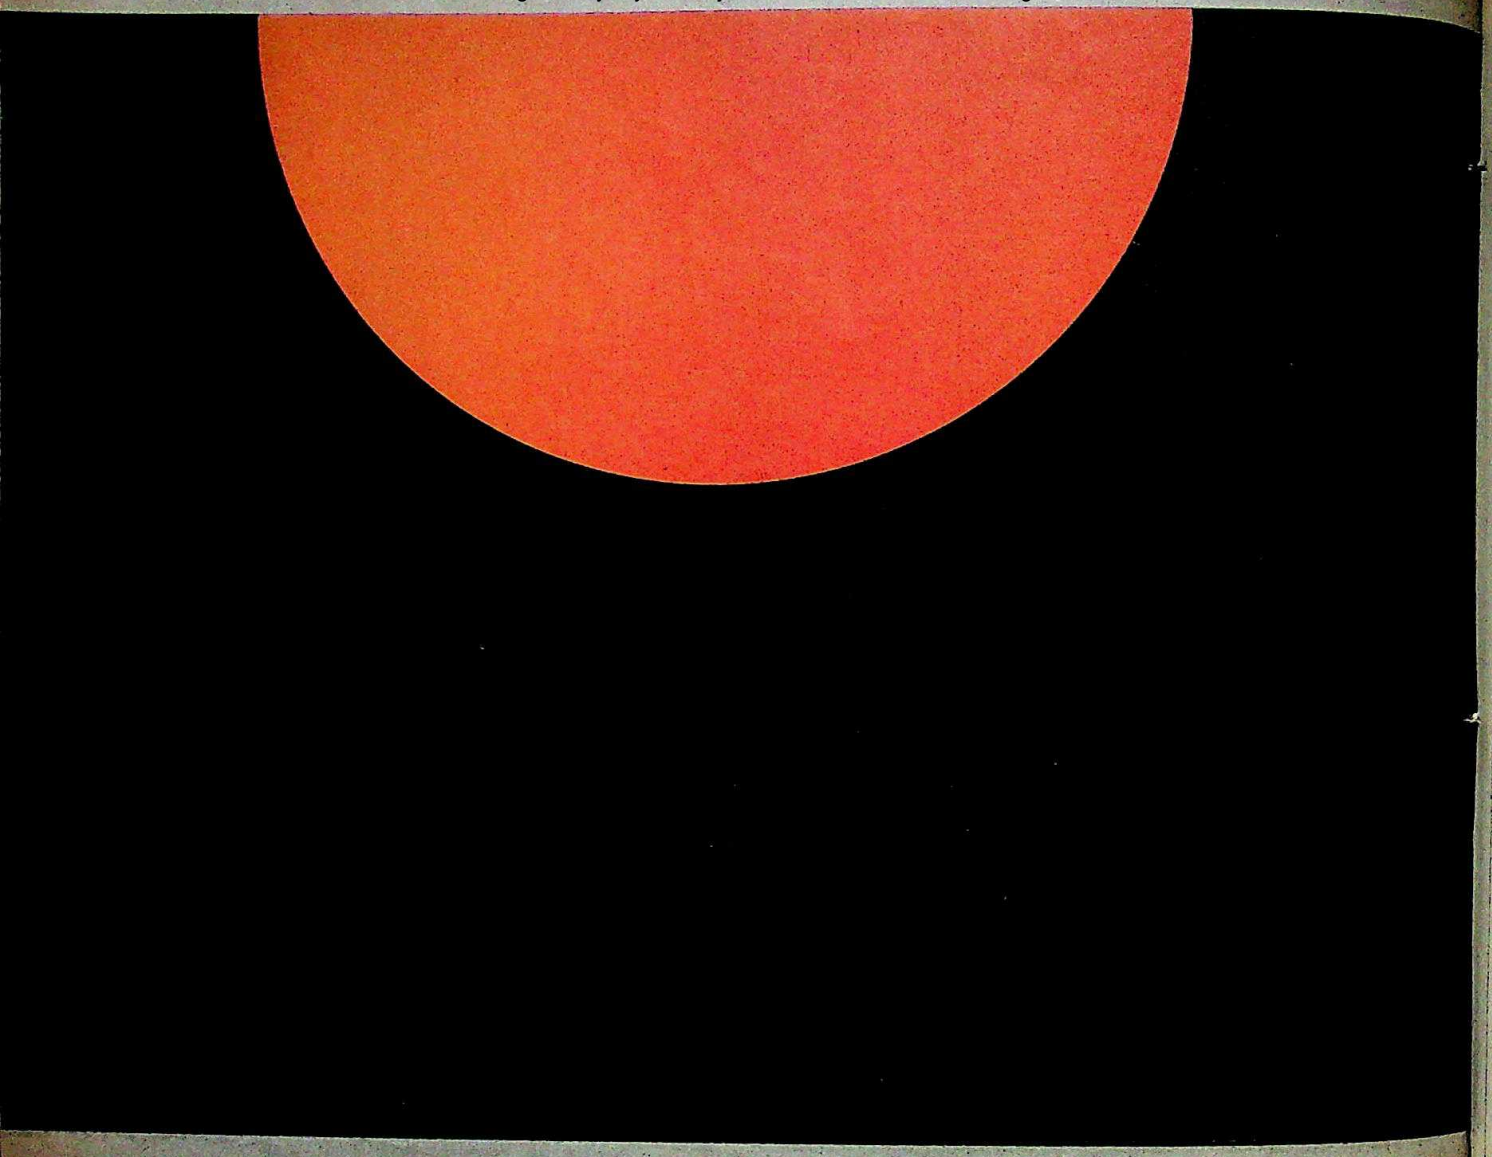
the hi-technology Company

JAISONS BS 13085

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

The greatest cooling power under the sun.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Most air conditioners work well when it isn't too hot.

But when the mercury climbs over 40°C, they start to wilt from heat exhaustion.

And by 46°C, there's just one machine in India still going strong.

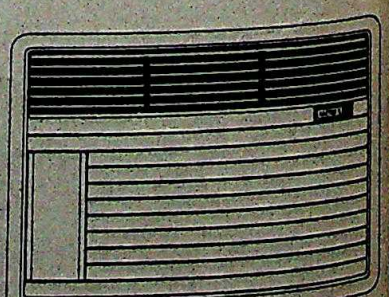
Amtrex.

The only one specially engineered to handle extreme heat.

Amtrex has already found its way into some of India's best addresses: Reliance. Gwalior Rayon. Hoechst. Bank of India. Escorts. Bank of Baroda. Canara Bank. Diners.

If you'd like to add your name to this distinguished list, get in touch with:

Amtrex Ambience Pvt. Ltd. (An enterprise of Lalbhai Industries Consolidated) Rachana. Opp. Bombay Garage, Shahibaug Rd, Ahmedabad 380 004. Tel: 383035.
Branches / offices at: Bombay: 233909. Calcutta: 443988. Delhi: 5718634. Madras: 474535. Hyderabad: 236104.



AMTREX

Air conditioners

0.5, 1.0, 1.5 & 2.0 tonnes

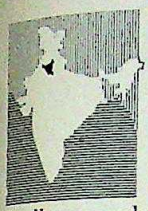
Also: reversible and split units

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

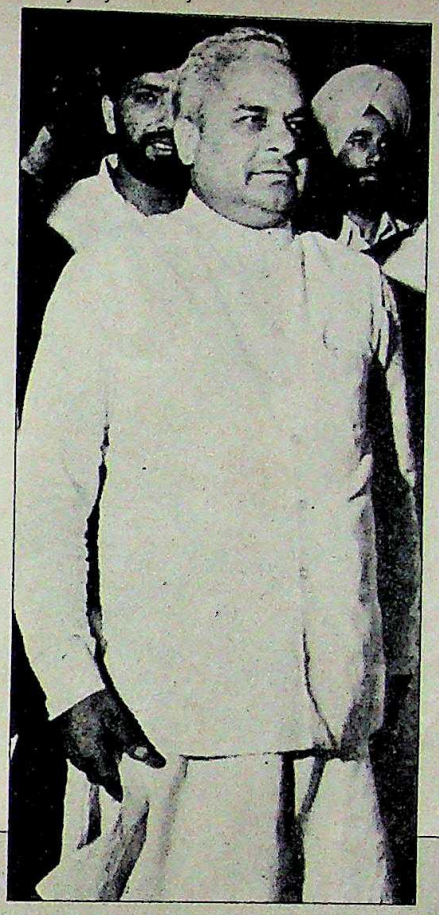
HARYANA

Bhajan's Bind



IN HIS long and not-so-illustrious career, Haryana Chief Minister Bhajan Lal has mostly had his way. His powers of persuasion are legendary, but the courts have finally succeeded in putting him in a no-win situation. Lal has long dodged holding municipal elections in the state, but the Punjab and Haryana High Court has finally got him in a bind from which even he may find it difficult to wriggle out. With the state assembly elections barely a year away, and some doubt about Lal's political support in the state, the dilemma he faces is acute.

In what constitutes a blunt warning, a division bench of the Punjab and Haryana High Court late last month reiterated its earlier directive to the state Government to hold elections to 72 of 81 municipal committees by July 31, or face the ire of the court. Ruled Justices Devinder Singh Tewatia and Harmvir Sehgal: "If the elections are not held, it would expose the state Government and the concerned authorities to a charge of flagrant disregard of the directions of the high court and insensitivity to the democratic aspirations of the people."



Bhajan Lal has long dodged holding municipal elections but the high court has finally got him in a bind.

There is little doubt that the Government is shy of holding municipal elections. Of the 81 municipalities in the state, 25 have been administered by executive magistrates since 1962, elections to 41 municipal committees were last held in 1968-69, and the other 15 had their last elections in 1973. The law has been systematically amended to prevent fresh elections. Initially, only six months could elapse between the expiry of the term of one municipal committee and the formation of a new one. This was first amended to three years, then four, then five and later six, and now there is no time limit at all. Says opposition leader Devi Lal: "Haryana has created history by denying people the right to manage their own civic affairs. Bhajan Lal and his cohorts have ruled the municipalities through the back door."

Lal's problems began nine months ago when a public-spirited lawyer, Satya Narayan Singla, after having successfully fought against corrupt practices in the Haryana Public Service Commission, urged the high court to direct the Haryana Government to hold elections to the municipal committees. Singla took this step after the Government was unmoved by Lachman Singh Kamboj, Lok Dal MLA, repeatedly raising the issue in the Assembly. Says Singla: "I was irked by the utter disregard of civic affairs by the state Government."

A writ of mandamus was filed seeking the court's intervention, and in November 1985, Justices Tewatia and Surinder Singh directed the state to complete the election process before the end of April. The Government assured the court that polls would be held in compliance with its directive, but earlier last month it suddenly filed a special leave petition before the Supreme Court, requesting an extension of the time limit till 1986-end for holding elections, although the electoral rolls for 70 municipalities were ready. But the Supreme Court rejected the plea and directed it to follow the instructions of the high court.

With the case back in the high court, Kamboj and Singla argued that the state Government was trying to hoodwink the court. Their argument gained credibility when the Government counsel argued that "law and order in Punjab is deteriorating and this has had its natural impact in Haryana" as reason enough for putting off the elections. Interestingly enough, Haryana had elections to the state Assembly and Parliament during the height of the turmoil in Punjab. Since 1968, when the bulk of the committees last saw elections, the state has gone through five assembly elections.

The other argument the state gave in support of its contention was that electoral rolls were not ready for all the committees. Not surprisingly, the court rejected the plea. Said the judges: "Neither of the reasons are germane. It is not the case of the state that under the existing act there is any bar to the holding of elections on the basis of the existing rolls prepared with the qualifying date as January 1, 1985. As regards the law and order problem in Punjab, it has nothing to do with the local bodies elections in Haryana. These are only lame excuses and expose the lack of earnestness on their part."

Lal's real reasons for prevaricating are strictly political, and based on his finely-honed instinct for self-preservation. He knows that the blistering campaign launched by the Lok Dal and the BJP against the Punjab accord and government misrule has cut a lot of ground from under his feet. And with assembly elections due next May, the ruling party just cannot afford to lose control over the town administration. Observed former state Congress(I) chief Birender Singh, MP: "If we lose at the municipal elections, our chances in the assembly polls get seriously affected."

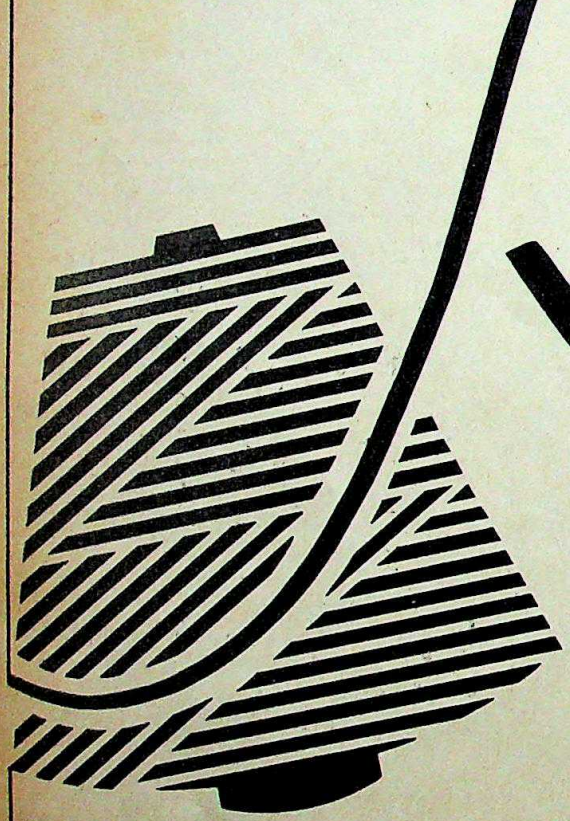
The courts have not left Lal with much room to manoeuvre, but only the politically naive would argue that he faces a fait accompli. Kamboj admits that he does not know if any follow-up action has been initiated to implement the court's directive. But, he says, if Lal manages to wriggle out of the tight spot he has been placed in, "we shall fight, knock at the door of the high court yet again and finally go to the people, our ultimate masters".

—GOBIND THUKRAL

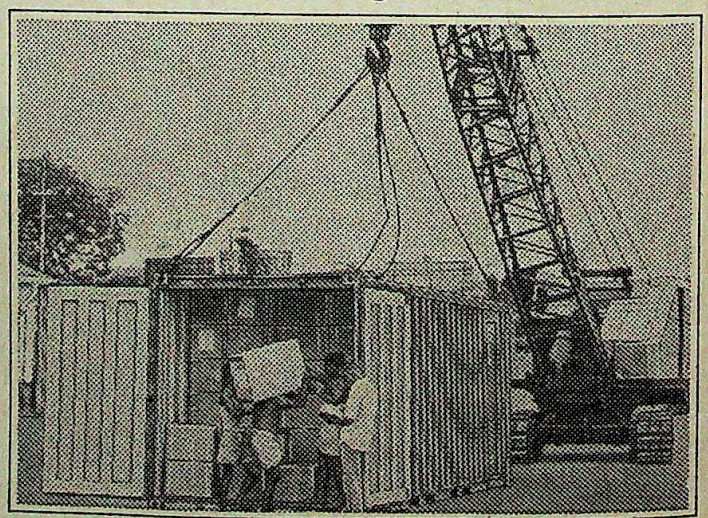
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BONN VOYAGE!



South India Viscose sends out its first consignment of rayon filament yarn to West Germany.



The rayon yarn is produced by South India Viscose using its own wood pulp.

The first shipment of 67.5 tonnes of rayon filament, worth Rs. 33 lakhs, will be converted into high quality finished rayon goods in West Germany.

Enquiries from other countries are being received.

Yes, for South India Viscose it's a proud moment indeed. And for the nation ... yet another achievement.

South India Viscose Limited

'Rosebed', 334, Avanashi Road, Coimbatore 641 018.

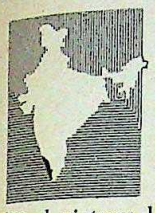
MAA (S) SIV 1 86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KERALA

The Victor's Spoils

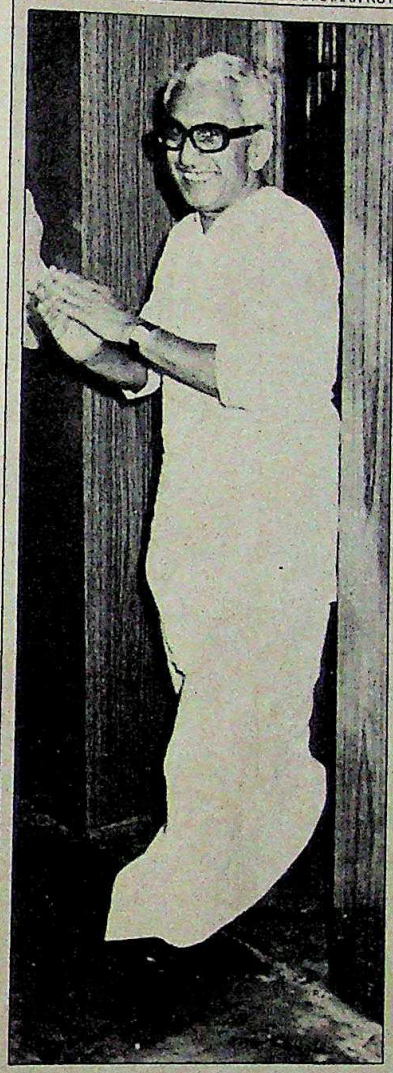


DEFYING all the prophets of doom who have been predicting the eclipse of K. Karunakaran, the Kerala chief minister was on the verge of yet another political victory last fortnight when he seemed to have finally persuaded a recalcitrant Kerala Congress to agree to a ministerial reshuffle. Karunakaran had dashed to Delhi to secure the Centre's permission and was expected to get down to the nitty-gritty of the reshuffle on his return, to finally put the seal on his "image building exercise" initiated last October. His unexpected success in this battle of nerves, which seemed unlikley at one stage, marks not only a tactical victory, but will be a signal to dissidents in the party that the high command is backing him to the hilt. Said a relieved Karunakaran: "I was going through a bad phase but by god's grace it is over."

After his humiliating surrender to the Kerala Congress before the budget session in March (INDIA TODAY March 31), Karunakaran has been trying to give a badly needed face-lift to the ruling United Democratic Front (UDF). As part of the deal then struck between the Kerala Congress and the Congress(I), a cabinet reshuffle was agreed to in which K.M. Mani of the Kerala Congress would give up his finance portfolio. Soon after the budget session, Karunakaran resumed talks to break the stalemate over the portfolio reallocation issue.

However, this time Karunakaran made sure that he had the support of the 18-member Muslim League group, the second largest constituent of the ruling front, by promising the League yet another berth in the ministry. That would raise its strength in the ministry to four, the same as the Kerala Congress which has two MLA's less. The Muslim League, under pressure after the sordid "Kuwaitis scandal" (INDIA TODAY April 15) readily agreed to support any move made by the chief minister. Said E. Ahmed, industry minister and Muslim League leader: "We have always supported Karunakaran through thick and thin and at this crucial hour we will back him to the hilt." Added to that was the fact the Muslim League was obligated to the Congress(I) for having the Muslim Women's Bill passed by Parliament.

SHANKARAN KUTTU



Karunakaran's success in the battle of nerves marks a tactical victory for him and a signal to dissidents that the high command is backing him to the hilt.

With the League behind him, the battle-scarred Karunakaran then pulled the carpet from under Mani's feet when his economic adviser and member of the state planning board Dr P.K. Gopalakrishnan exposed Mani's claim that the budget he had presented in March had a massive surplus. Gopalakrishnan was able to prove that the finance minister was wrong and had committed "a fraud on the people of the state". Dr K.N. Raj, member of the Economic Advisory Council to the prime minister, added to Mani's embarrassment by backing Gopalakrishnan's findings.

Predictably, Mani protested vehemently, maintaining that his was indeed a surplus budget, but the wind was knocked out of his sails when Union Minister of State for Finance Janardhan Poojary stated in Parliament that Kerala's current budget showed a deficit of nearly Rs 59.40 crore. Congress(I) supporters were overjoyed that Mani's "financial mismanagement" had been exposed. And Karunakaran, who has been itching for months to get the finance portfolio from the Kerala Congress, now had a valid reason for a reshuffle.

Under tremendous pressure now, Mani decided to come out with his trump card—the Pillai issue. R. Balakrishna Pillai, who resigned from the cabinet last July over his alleged call for a Punjab-model agitation to get justice for the state, has been waiting in the wings for the past few months. But Karunakaran has been dragging his feet, saying that the Pillai issue is a separate matter and will depend on legal opinion. Mani, who had almost forgotten Pillai, agreed to give up the finance portfolio on the condition that Pillai be sworn in as a minister the same day. Summing up the party's condition, a Kerala Congress MLA said: "The Kerala Congress was trapped between the devil and deep sea."

But Karunakaran dug his feet and refused to give in, saying: "There can be no guarantee at this stage that Pillai will be reinstated because it is a legal issue." The Kerala Congress retaliated with the threat of withdrawal from the front but Karunakaran was unmoved, knowing that it had nowhere to go since the CPI(M) had made it clear that it would have nothing to do with communal parties.

According to informed sources, a new team will be sworn in by May 24, the fourth anniversary of the ruling coalition. Said Karunakaran: "The present political stalemate has been amicably settled. We will sit together and decide with an open mind about portfolio allocations." But a prominent Congress(I) MLA summed up the events of the last two months more aptly: "The answer to the stability of the UDF will be in the gospel according to Karunakaran."

—SREEDHAR PILLAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

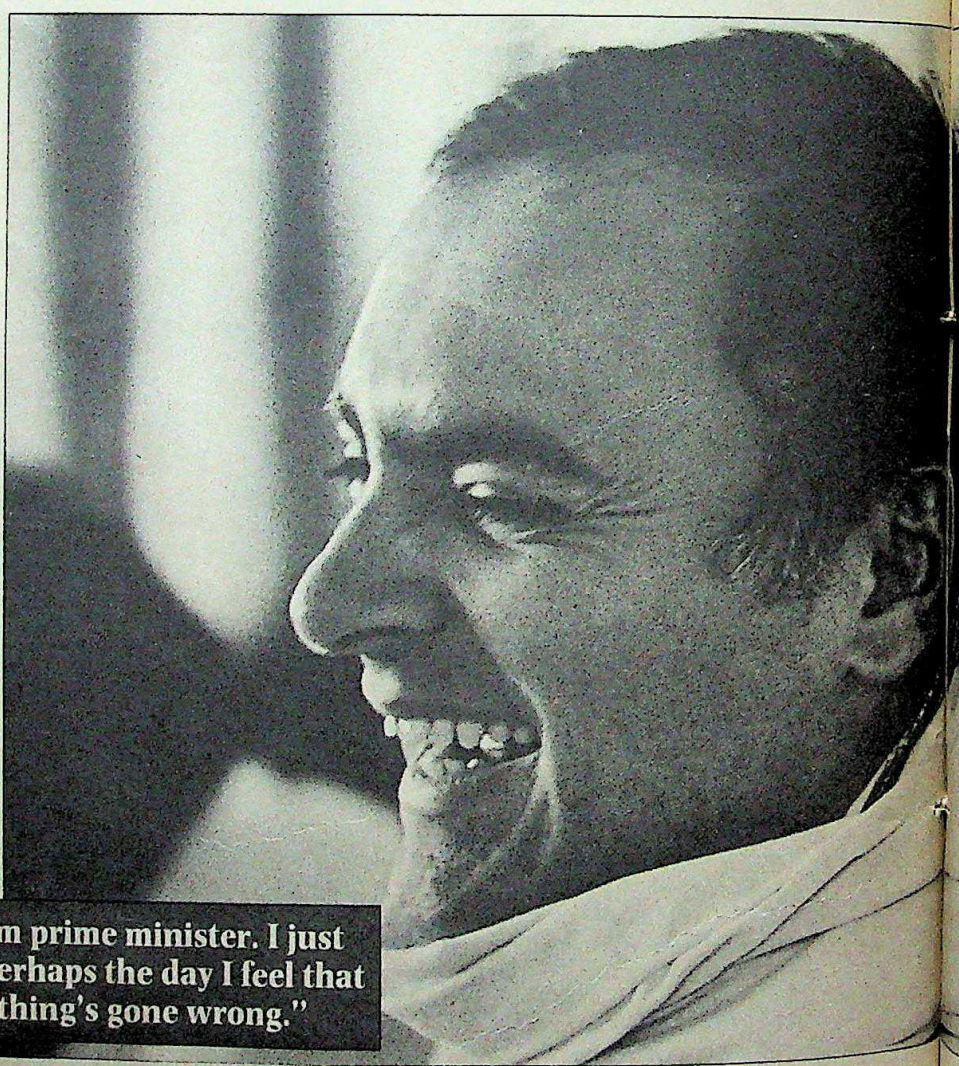
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAJIV GANDHI

"We have to push a little ha

HE IS relaxed, casual and clearly far from weighed down by the cares of office. Interviewed by Executive Editor T.N. NINAN on an hour-long and noisy helicopter hop from Pimpalgaon Kolte in Jalna district to Songir in Dhule district (part of Rajiv Gandhi's tour of the drought-affected districts of Maharashtra), the prime minister talked at length on a wide variety of subjects: the Congress(I) dissidents, the latest developments in Punjab, the controversial Mulsim Women Bill, and on his own experience in office.

After a year-and-a-half as prime minister, Rajiv Gandhi remains friendly and informal, retaining his easy ability



"Oddly, I still don't feel as if I'm prime minister. I just feel that I am me, like I was. Perhaps the day I feel that I'm prime minister something's gone wrong."

Q. What was your understanding of what the dissidents in the Congress(I) were up to?

A. I thought a few people were going beyond the limits of normal...what should I say...freedom of action within the democratic processes of the party, especially when elections in the party are due so that all the feelings could be vented in the election process. So we took some action.

Q. What exactly did they do? Was it just the interview that Pranab Mukherjee gave to the Illustrated Weekly of India?

A. Well a series of things.

Q. What specifically?

A. I have told them specifically.

Q. Did you think that interview went beyond the limits of party discipline?

A. Certain words in it, yes. And some other actions also.

Q. Has the dissidence been nipped in the mud, sorry bud?

A. (laughs at the slip) Perhaps you're right.

Q. Why did you pick on Pranab Mukherjee? There were others who wrote you letters.

A. He didn't write me a letter.

Q. He said he'd written to you on the Muslim Bill.

A. I haven't got that letter. I don't know where it is.

Q. Do you think they were roping in Menaka Gandhi, Ramakrishna Hegde and others, as has been reported?

A. I read the newspapers. Should one disbelieve the newspapers? (laughs)

Q. What is the basic problem with the dissidents?

A. Well, one basic problem is that party elections are coming and it's going to expose all the paper tigers. We have not had elections for 13 years; so we have people who've lost their base, who don't have any standing. That will all get exposed.

Now what we've got to do is to see that the elections are fair, because if it's not fair then the pressures in the party will be much more, and instead of the elections letting off steam they will create much greater pressures.

Q. Is there anything to the charge of bogus members?

A. I don't think so, not at this stage anyway. Because you can only say there is bogus membership after the scrutiny stage is over. And that has not started yet.

Q. When will it finish?

A. We've just postponed it by seven or eight days to give people time to bring in

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri harder on what we started" to laugh. Despite the occasional parrying of questions, his inherent sincerity still came through. But as was evident in the speeches he made on the Maharashtra tour and from the interview, there is a subtle but significant shift in the emphasis and tone of some of his comments: he decried 'crude consumerism', there was no mention at all of the 21st century, instead there was a repeated harking back to old values and principles, and apparently a greater consciousness of the hard facts of life for the majority of Indians, plus an almost over-riding concern for human resource development, both in the Government and outside. Excerpts from the interview:

"It's only when you're in the position of a prime minister, meaning where the buck stops, that you realise the type of forces that are working against, well, not you as a person, but against the direction that the country is taking."

BHAWAN SINGH

their complaints. I think it's now, what...the fifth of May or June, I think...

Q. Was Kamalapati Tripathi satisfied with what you told him when you met?

A. Well we had a very long talk. You'll have to talk to him and ask him.

Q. But he continued to do what he was doing earlier, even after you met him.

A. Well I've read some of the statements that he has made, and they seem well within the...sort of...he operated within the party.

Q. There seems to be some confusion as to whether you informed or consulted him before deciding on the expulsion and suspensions.

A. Well he was consulted...It was discussed with him.

Q. That means he didn't agree with the action?

A. No, he didn't agree.

Q. Will a split in the Congress(I) be a good thing?

A. There won't be a split in the Congress(I).

Q. People might feel they'll get a chance to strike later. If that does happen, will it be a good thing for you?

A. I don't think it's going to happen, so the question doesn't really arise.

Q. The question keeps coming up whether Pranab Mukherjee really did stake a claim to the prime ministership in October 1984. What is the truth?

A. I don't know. I was in the hospital.

Q. No, in the aeroplane from Calcutta.

A. We didn't really talk about it. I don't know what he talked with the others. I didn't discuss it with any of them.

Q. Did Pranab overestimate his real strength and therefore become a fall guy, because he is prominent and he doesn't really have a following? So if you pick on him you get the message across?

A. We picked the four or five people who we thought were making...trying to destabilise the party...who were going beyond the limits of democratic freedom in the party. And we took action. There is no...sort...of...further motivation than that.

Q. Coming to the Punjab situation, how do you see the latest developments?

A. I think we really have to look at all these things on a national level. What is necessary for us is to isolate all the forces which are in any way assisting anti-national forces.

Q. I was talking of the Akali Dal, and what happened yesterday with people deserting Barnala.

A. Well, I don't know what has happened. I've been trying to find out.

Q. Do you think Barnala is getting isolated?

A. I'm sure the people in Punjab want peace, they don't want this terrorism.

Q. But if major leaders in the party go against Barnala, what real power does he have?

A. The people of Punjab made their position very clear in the elections. In spite of heavy odds, in spite of many senior Punjab leaders not coming out for elections, they voted...they voted against terrorism. So the people of Punjab I am sure will stand very solidly for any action against the terrorists.

Q. Has the Punjab Government been firm enough against terrorism?

A. That's a very difficult question to answer unless you're the Punjab Government. Like I said at the National Integration Council, the job that was given to Barnala was an extremely delicate job. He has got to draw the line between the extremists and the misguided. If he draws it too much on either side, we have problems. And I don't think we should try and interpret his actions. We should back him fully; and if he makes mistakes, of course we should tell him. But basically we should not try to sort of nitpick in his actions, because then he loses his elbow room and won't be able to do the very delicate task that the people of Punjab have assigned him.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Q. But for many weeks you had people with a price on their heads and known terrorists making speeches, addressing meetings, and nothing was being done.

A. That's slowly now finishing.

Q. Do you think the process of implementing the Punjab accord can be revived in such an uncertain situation?

A. We intend to complete the accord.

Q. But with everything so uncertain within the Akali Dal, the extremists, the violence, Haryana...Where do you start?

In Britain, people came on television, offered money for the assassination of our prime minister. Not once, twice. Now does that mean we should send out bombers and knock them out? What are we talking about?

A. I think the people of Punjab are very clear about what they want. And our promise as well as the Akali Dal promise during the last election was the accord. And we must complete that.

Q. On the Muslim Bill, do you think that whichever way it goes you lose? Because if it goes through you lose support with the liberals or a lot of that section of opinion; and if you bury the bill, then you lose among the Muslims.

A. We're not interested in support. The politics of it is not relevant at all. The elections are very far away, and the Bill will be long forgotten as a political issue. What is important is that with the Supreme Court judgement, a very large proportion of our Muslims—I would say close to 90 per cent—felt that their mazhab was in danger. They felt that way because certain political parties made it an issue, and they made it a religious issue rather than a women's issue. I'm not talking of the Muslim fanatics; I'm talking of some of the more liberal parties. That is what has really caused the problem, rather than the actual Bill itself.

I think there are...We have got very strong reasons for moving the Bill. I think we're absolutely right. We are not selling the rights of women in any way. The rights of women will remain protected in this Bill. We have already accepted Muslim Personal Law as part of our personal law. This is only putting that same thing down on paper. Up to now it was not.

Q. Does this mean that you accept the Shariat as the basis for law?

A. We accepted it long ago. The question is, do you want to delete it now?

Q. Do you think Muslim divorce law needs to be changed?

A. Well, what is required is for the Muslims themselves to look at their laws. The more modern, westernised Muslims have one point of view, the traditional Muslims have another point of view. It is not for us to be arbiters between them. They've got to do that.

Q. But shouldn't the Government...

A. What we want to do is to introduce a uniform code of some sort, and open it for discussion, something like the education policy. Perhaps next year we'll be able to bring it in.

Q. So in other words you're going beyond all this current controversy?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you see a rise of fundamentalism in the country?

A. (Thinks for a moment) I see a drop in good leadership in the country.

Q. Can you explain that?

A. That means people are resorting to fundamentalism to build their leadership, which would not be necessary if that leadership quality is available.

Q. Why is this happening?

A. Very difficult to say. Perhaps it's a lack of ideology...I mean among the people in general.

Q. Organisations like the Vishwa Hindu Parishad are becoming big and important, and they are increasing their activities. Do you see this as a problem?

A. Yes, but by and large I think the Hindus will remain under control. I mean they will not become fanatics.

Q. This seems to have become a major issue and a major development, and changes the normally accepted concept of secularism.

A. My view of secularism is very much Sarv Dharm Sambhaav (respect for all religions), which is slightly different from the dictionary meaning.

Q. When you made that speech at the Anjuman-i-Islam (in Bombay, two days earlier), and you mentioned this, you didn't point out that secularism also means separating religion from politics.

A. I entirely agree with that. We have to do two or three things. We've got to get national or state politics out of temples, mosques, gurudwaras.

Q. But everything seems to be going the other way: Muslims, Sikhs, Hindus, the reaction to the Pope's visit.

A. You must differentiate between the politicians and the people. The people are not going the other way. Certain politicians, yes.

Q. But they seem to be getting support and a response from the people.

A. When you look at the votes, they don't get it. Ultimately that's the crux, what counts.

Q. You don't interpret the 1984 vote as a Hindu backlash of some sort?

A. No, I don't. Not at all.

Q. The Punjab problem had gone on, Indira Gandhi was assassinated, and this was widely considered a backlash.

A. Well, more than just the Hindus voted, in the same sort of percentages.

Q. The promises your government made were basically two things: one was a clean government, and the second was a government which works faster. Now how far have you got on these two?

A. I think we've done well on both counts.

Q. Do you see the response to that, or do people see it differently?

A. If you see the number of administrative decisions, major policy decisions, major programmes that have gone through in this year, perhaps we've never had so many before.

On the corruption side, we've taken steps at the top. Whenever anything has come to our notice, we've been very severe. At the bottom level, of course, it's much harder. But we're trying to do it through various forums. We've been at the ministries, some ministries have built them up, they've come about in varying degrees. We're not fully satisfied with the system yet. But we haven't really given a full chance to what we have started doing. We have to push a little harder on that.

Q. Do you think all the ministers in your government are clean?

A. Well, to give a 100 per cent good chit may be difficult, but nothing has come to my notice. If anything comes to my notice I will be very severe on them.

Q. Well, at least some by reputation don't pass the mark.

A. Well, it's very difficult to act just on reputation, unless there is something a little more specific. You know, your newspapers make reputations one day, destroy them the next.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Q. That's not true. It's not so easy for the press. But coming back to the point, what difference do you think you've really been able to make to government?

A. Differences don't come about in a government in a year, or a year-and-a-half, unless you want flashes in the pan. If you have to make a difference, you really have to build institutions, you have to give direction to the old institutions, strengthen the system. Which is what we have started doing.

Q. Do you get frustrated sometimes, at how slowly things move?

A. Sometimes I get a little irritated. That is really where the system comes in. Our basic tool for development is the administration, and we've not sharpened the tool for 38 years or may be even longer than that. We've not moulded the tool for our needs. I don't mean that we must mould it in a party picture or something.

One of the examples is that the minute I came in I asked what is the training process and all that. Now coming from an airline, where you're checked out seven or eight times a year on everything, otherwise you're out, I found that being checked out once in 34 years was a little bit on the low side.

Nobody has bothered to look at the...What is the basic strength of a country? I think it depends very much on the level of training of our people. Training not just meaning that you teach him how to make a basket or a rope and tell him you're a great guy. It's a question of training the person because our biggest investment for the future is the stability that we can build into our people. If we're going to make them what is called 'pragmatic', then they will sell us out. We will no more be independent. We're only independent because we had a certain ideology. We stood for certain things. The people who were pragmatic at that time were working for the British.

Q. What is 'pragmatism' today?

A. Pragmatism today really is translated into a very crude form of consumerism or materialism. Again, in our state of affairs that will weaken the nation.

Q. How's that?

A. That will produce a run for all the wrong things. In the wrong places. We will not be able to strengthen the basic foundations of our nation. And it's not only us. Even if you look at the advanced countries that are being pragmatic, sometimes we feel they take us to the brink.

Q. Why did you identify yourself so closely with Libya, which is not an ideal country to identify yourself with under its present leadership?

A. We didn't identify ourselves with Libya at all. If you see our position it's very very clear. We feel that no matter what the logic, you can't just go and bomb another country, unless you want a war. And I don't understand the logic at all. There have been Sikh terrorists in the US, in England, even in Canada. We've been talking to them to send them back here, where we can deal with them.

Q. But there has been no official connivance in these countries.

A. No there is no official connivance...

Q. But in Libya?

A. No, let me finish. We know that people there have made a noise about it. In Britain, people came on television, offered money for the assassination of our prime minister. Not once, twice. Now does that mean we should send our bombers and knock them out? When they have the St Patrick's Day parade in New York and

BHAWAN SINGH

"The politics of the Muslim bill is not relevant. The elections are very far away and the bill will be long forgotten as a political issue."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

collect money for the IRA, does it mean Britain should send bombers to the US? What are we talking about? And I just hope that the way they are expelling and sending Libyans out of Europe and America and other countries, I hope they will send Sikh terrorists out in the same way.

Q. On foreign policy, you started by trying to take a good neighbourly stance around the country's borders. But do you find...

A. We haven't changed that at all.

Q. Are you taking a tougher stand because people may be thinking that this good neighbourliness is a sign of weakness?

A. I don't think they thought that. Some of them have had their own problems. Pakistan has had elections. Bangladesh is going through the process. So it's difficult to start an opening up when they're going through such complicated internal processes. Sri Lanka has got its own problems. What it means is that with these internal problems...internal developments, really, not problems...the processes that we started off have had to be slowed down much more than we originally wanted it to.

Q. Again, you started out by trying to mend fences with the US, in a way. Now, has this slowed down too?

A. Well, perhaps I shouldn't answer that at this stage.

Q. Are you satisfied with the business and industry response to the policy changes you have made?

A. By and large, yes.

Q. But all they seem to do is to cry about this, that and the other.

A. Well, they've been in a very sheltered environment. When they come out of this, there are going to be some changes. By and large the response has been good. The real response will be seen three years from now when the returns should be coming. It's too soon to say.

Q. How do you see the foreign exchange situation? Is it very serious?

A. It's serious, not very serious.

Q. Do you have to do anything about it?

A. No, we're all right.

Q. There's no question of going for fresh borrowings?

A. We've not looked at anything like that yet.

Q. But the trade deficit is huge, it's almost doubled.

A. It's high, but we'll have substantial savings this year on oil imports and certain other things.

Q. But oil is now a small part of your import bill. It's barely 20 per cent.

A. It still makes a lot of difference. Our major imports are still the bulk items that the Government imports.

Q. You don't see wasteful imports going on?

A. They're very few. As a percentage they're very small.

Q. You seem to have become slightly defensive about computerisation.

A. Well, because it takes time to...In Parliament I said very clearly that computerisation even at the rural level is a big gift, as we've seen in Anand, where it's helping the farmer with his cattle feed, and it's saving him almost 40 to 50 per cent of the cost of cattle feed. So we're not defensive at all on that.

But what has started to happen is that everybody thinks a computer solves all the problems; of course it doesn't. It's only a tool, just like a typewriter was a tool when you changed from a scribe to a faster method. So it's a tool to do your work, and it must be understood as such.

Q. When you talk of technology today, as different from a year ago, you talk more and more specifically of basics. Now does this represent a change in your own perception?

A. What do you mean by basics?

Q. Well, drinking water, oilseeds.

A. Drinking water is going to involve the most advanced technology that we will be using anywhere. Things like reverse osmosis processes, purification of other waters. The drinking water mission is going to be the most scientifically intensive mission that we've got. Much more than even things like lasers and all.

Q. Have you prioritised your tasks for the next six months or year?

A. Well they're already prioritised. It's difficult to categorise unless you go to what sort of level...

Q. What is uppermost in your mind?

A. Uppermost are two things. Because these are what I feel long-term are going to give us the answers. Perhaps one thing: human resource development. In government, in government agencies, public sector and everywhere else. Because without that I don't see how we can really cope, and the word is cope. We're in a very sort of precarious situation.

Let me put it in flying terms. You have a point on your lift curve and you always have to fly beyond that point. If you come below that point, then the drag increases proportionately with the speed dropping, instead of the other way round. And you need more and more thrust to keep flying. So you're in a sort of losing situation. You know, we're very close to that. Any developing country is like that. During the past 38-odd years, we've managed to keep on the positive side. But just barely. Now the question really is the world is moving ahead very fast. So you need a lot of thrust. And if we're really to be able to get out of this, then we need to mobilise every resource that is under our control. And our biggest resource is our people. Let's not treat them as a liability, let's treat them as an asset.

Q. How much do you really expect to change with this new policy on education?

A. It'll take time. Five years, 10 years, may be 15 years. But I think it'll make some very basic changes in the way of thinking of our people.

Q. It would seem that the basic problem with any of this is nothing more than just pure implementation. The money is given, but there are no blackboards...

A. That's not quite right. The money has not been given. Not enough.

Q. Do you see more being given now?

A. Well we've changed that already. And we're trying to now educate the Planning Commission (laughs).

Q. What is the worst bit about being prime minister?

A. Time. There's not enough time to do everything that you want to do. And there's no time to be with the family.

Q. Do you get enough sleep?

A. I think so.

Q. What's the best bit about being prime minister?

A. Well, you can actually do things instead of just talking about them. Or writing about them (laughs).

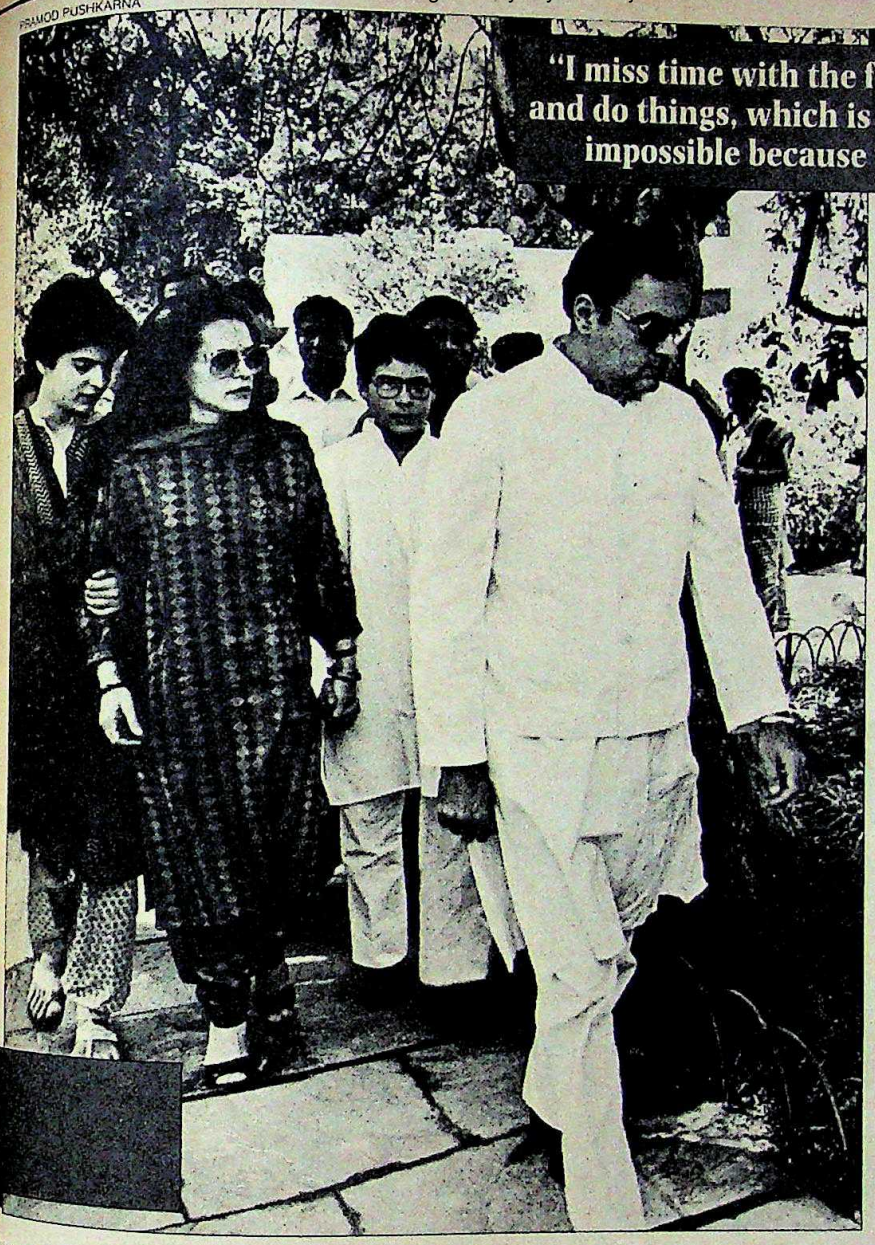
Q. What do you miss about your old

"What has started to happen is that everybody thinks a computer solves all the problems. Of course it doesn't. It's only a tool like a typewriter was when you changed from a scribe to a faster method and it must be understood as such."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



"I miss time with the family, being able to get out and do things, which is very difficult now. It's almost impossible because there is so much tamasha."

life, before you entered politics and the Government?

A. Time with the family. Being able to do things that you really...I mean get out and do things, which is very difficult now. I mean if I want to go to a place, it's almost impossible. Because there is so much tamasha, and everything goes...

Q. Do you find that you've changed in any way?

A. I hope not. I don't think so.

Q. Not at all? Do you see yourself differently?

A. No, I see myself exactly the same. And oddly enough, I still don't feel as if I am prime minister, if you understand what I mean.

Q. Meaning what, you think the prime minister is somebody else?

A. No, it's not like that. I just feel that I am me, like I was. Perhaps the day I feel that I am prime minister, something's gone wrong.

Q. Have you gone more grey?

A. I don't know. I must check with my barber whether I've lost more (hair) or greyed more.

Q. Do you find that you've developed faculties or abilities that you did not have to call upon earlier?

A. In terms of physical...

Q. Well, in relating to situations, and people.

A. Well, that's very difficult to say. Because these things grow. I mean you don't...You learn from each situation, each experience. That means you're developing areas which you had not developed earlier. It happens with everyone, no matter what you're doing.

Q. What's the single most important thing you've learnt?

A. Eh, I don't know.

(Mani Shanker Aiyar: Patience with us?)

A. Perhaps.

Q. Do you enjoy the exercise of power?

A. Well I try not to exercise it. I try to do things by involving the maximum number of people; and wherever we have a very major step to take, I try and involve the Opposition also.

Q. Having been in government for a year-and-a-half, do you find that you've reassessed the role that Mrs Gandhi played, and Pandit Nehru played?

A. Oh I think they played a tremendous role, and Mrs Gandhi especially because the period that she was in power was an extremely difficult period. It's only when you're in power, and I would say only when you're in the position of a prime minister, meaning where the buck stops, that you realise that the type of forces that are working against...well, not you as a person...but against the direction that the country is taking.

Q. Do you find that you have to compromise more than you probably expected you would have to?

A. No. Because the day I have to do that I might as well pack up and go home. I see the vote that was given to me as a vote not to compromise on the basic things that I have stood for. And if I compromise on those, then it's no use sitting here.

Q. Well, you could lose a battle to win a war?

A. Within certain limits. But on basic issues you can't compromise.

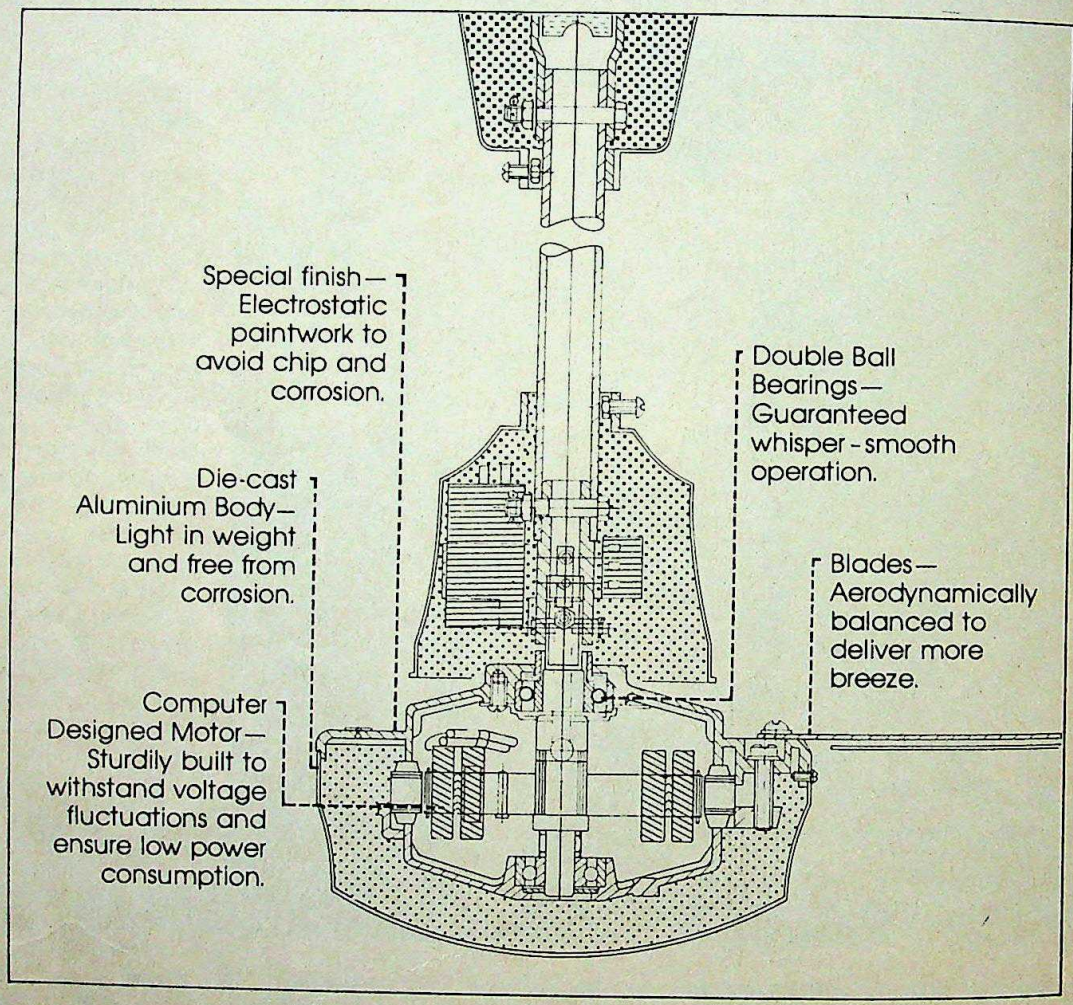
Q. Do you find you've had to adapt your style? There is an interesting story of when you started meeting these MP*'s on a regular basis in the middle of the day. And initially you would get them to sit down and say 'OK shoot'. And they didn't understand this. What did you mean: 'shoot'? And then you had to change that.*

A. (laughs) Well, not quite like that. The problem is not with the language, because I wouldn't use the word 'shoot' with them anyway. But in the substance of what you say, yes. People are reluctant to talk, but they're slowly opening up. And perhaps I am also learning to understand what has been said when it has not been said.

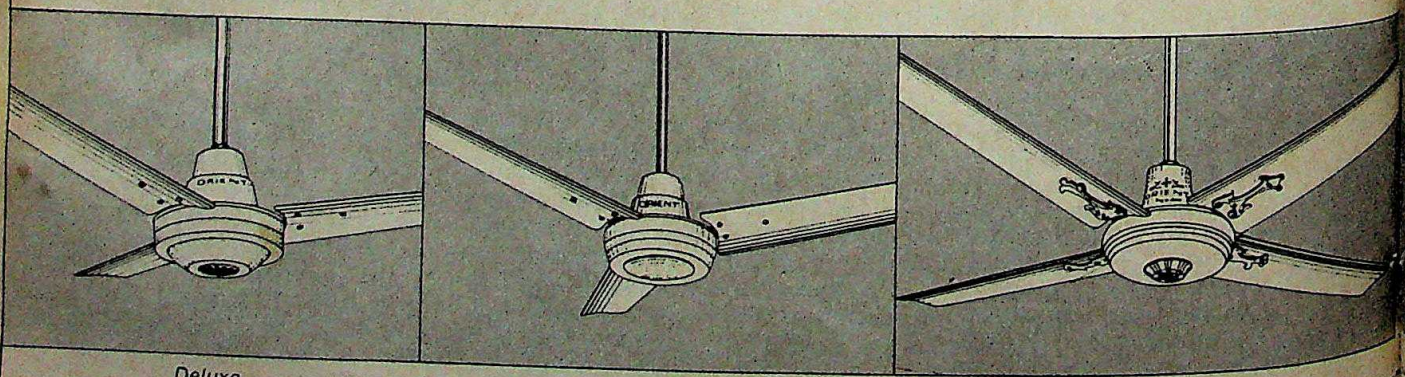
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Orient is only five decades old.

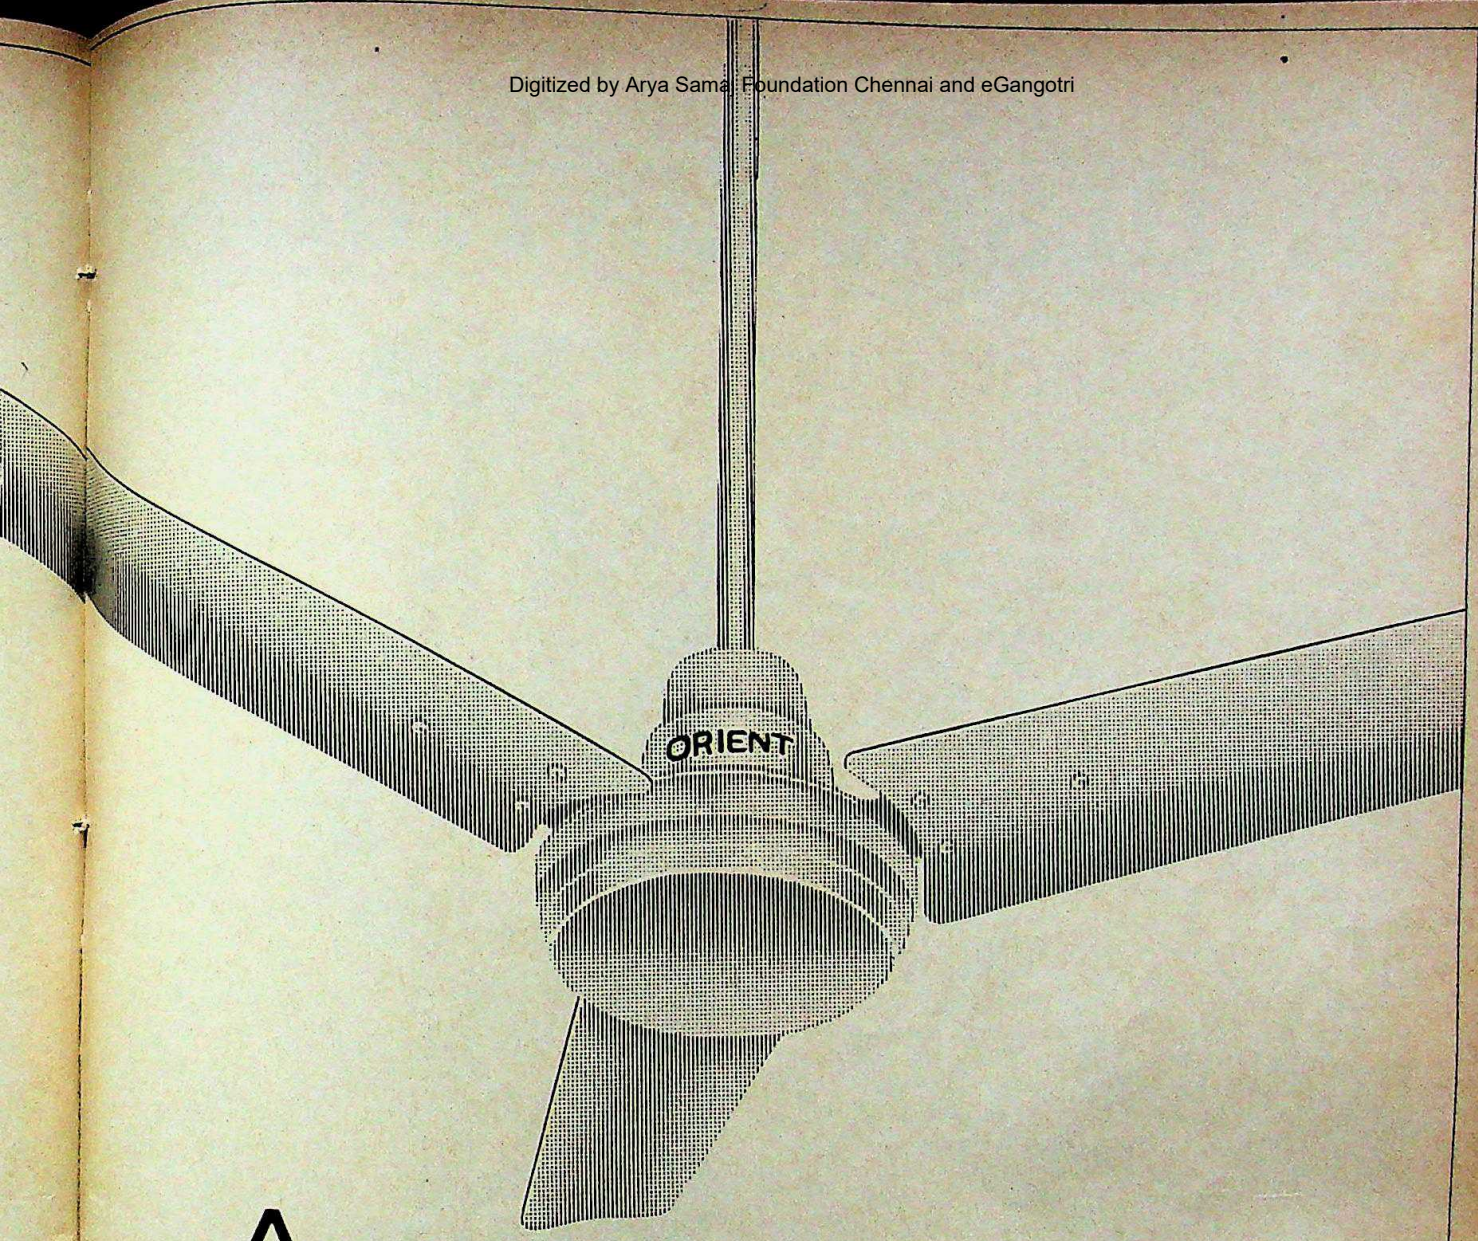


These are only a few of the wide range of Orient Fans.
Available in a variety of sweeps and shades. To suit your budget and match any decor.



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

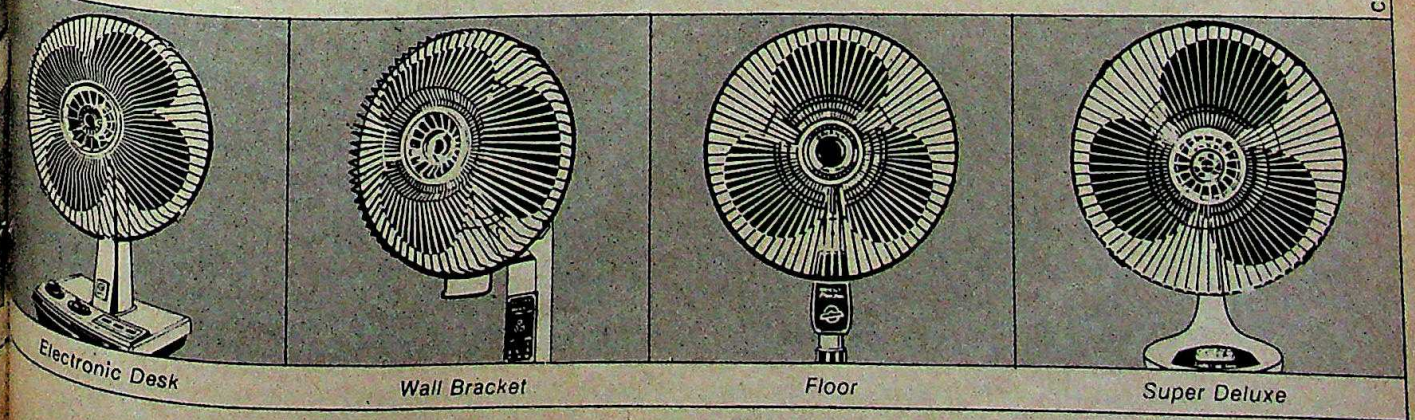


And it's already a legend.

ORIENT

The only fan built perfect inside out.

CC/OGI-7/86



Electronic Desk | Wall Bracket | Floor | Super Deluxe

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Hindus

Militant Revivalism

THE SYMBOL is stark, simple, and effective: Lord Rama imprisoned in a padlocked cage. For more than two years now, the incarcerated deity has been criss-crossing the land aboard garishly caparisoned raths, pounding out a messianic message: Hinduism is in danger.

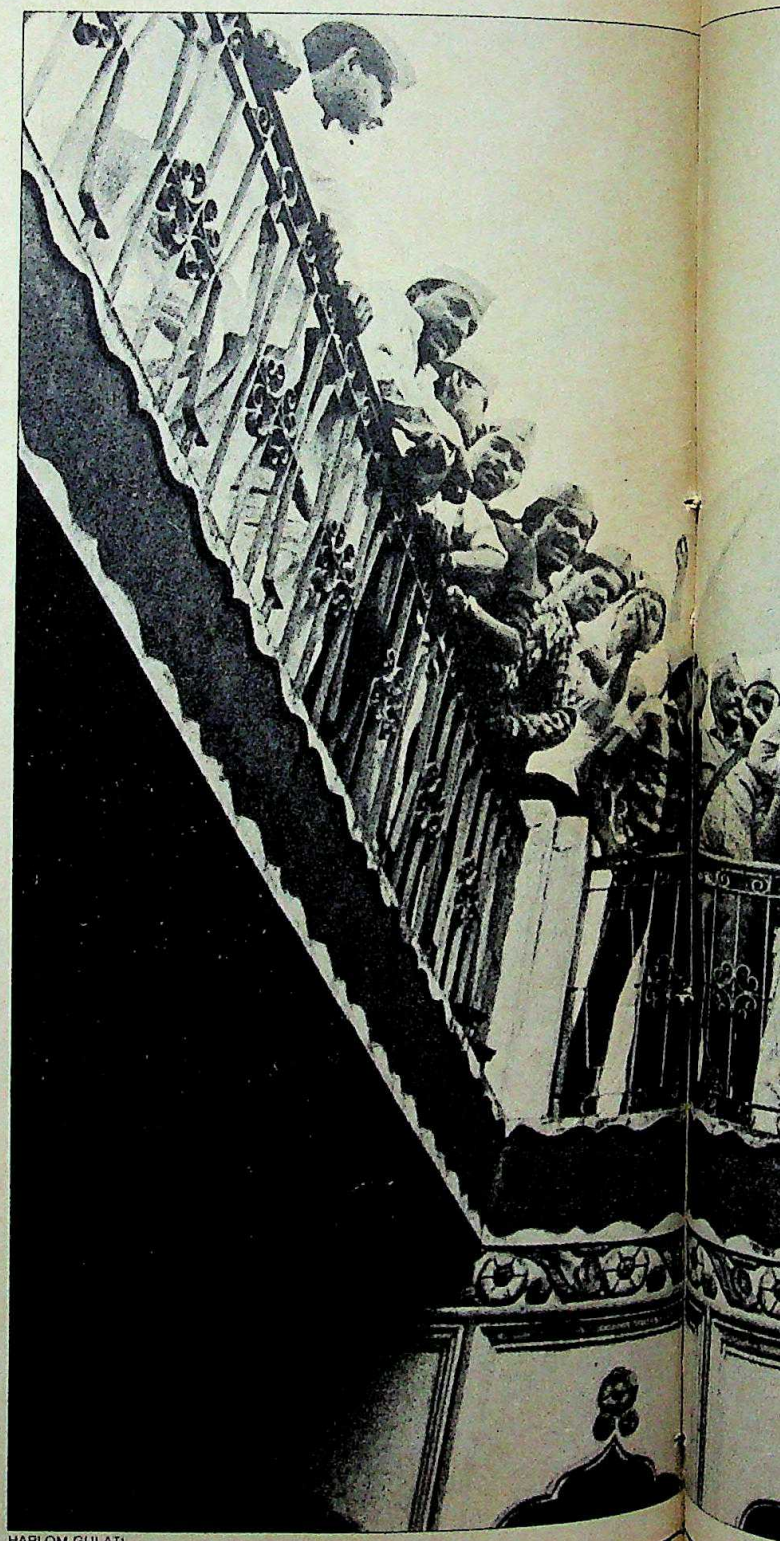
That message has struck a high-strung emotional chord. Slowly but surely, like a juggernaut gaining angry momentum, a palpable, resurgent, united and increasingly militant movement of Hindu revivalism—Hindu Jagaran—is sweeping across the land. Frenzied in pace, frenetic in character, the religious and communal combat vehicle is freewheeling across the collective Hindu consciousness, dragging in its slip-stream a divergent following—shopkeepers, sadhus, social activists, professionals, businessmen—and threatening to trigger off transformations of unfathomable dimensions in the country's tightly-stretched political and social fabric.

In Punjab, sharpened trishuls have become standard wear for militant Hindu youths, united under the new battle cry of 'Om'. In Kerala, angry demonstrations and mailed fists greeted Pope John Paul's visit. Elsewhere, issues like the Shah Bano affair and the Muslim Women's Bill have evoked militant responses from Hindu organisations, which see these as provocative symbols of minority pressure being applied to wrest concessions from the Government. Ayodhya has been dragged out of relative obscurity to be transformed into a communal cauldron. The Meenakshipuram and other conversions have led to impassioned rhetoric about a resurgent Islam riding in on the strength of petro-dollars.

The new militancy is menacing, and growing in intensity. And the message being hammered home is the same: for too long, the minorities have been appeased and pampered while the majority has been restrained from asserting what it holds to be the only basis for unifying the country—Hindu nationalism.

The new mood and the forces taking shape manifest themselves in dozens of ways: in the sharply increased attendance at temples, the growing strength of the once discredited Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh (RSS), which has seen a sudden and unprecedented increase in attendance at its drills and enjoyed the growing popularity of its numerous front organisations, the drive to reconvert people from Islam and Christianity to Hinduism and the effort to end Christian or Muslim proselytisation, the palpable increase in communal tensions across the country's northern belt, the programme aimed at "liberating" more than two dozen Hindu temples converted into mosques by the Mughal rulers, the growing popularity of all-night jagarans, even perhaps in the character of the vote in the 1984 general elections, described by a variety of political pundits as a Hindu backlash.

The clarion call to Hindu nationhood, sounded from the pulpits of rath yatras, dharnas, morchas, andolans, padyatras and kirtans organised by socio-cultural-religious groups like the RSS, the Vishwa Hindu Parishad (VHP), the Virat Hindu Sammelan, Hindu Samajotsav and others like the Bajrang Dal



Members of the Akhil Bharatiya Shiv Shakti Dal in Meerut

HARI OM GULATI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

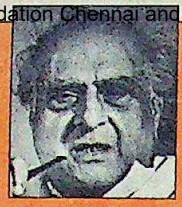
"Beyond caste, beyond parties, o Hindus, awake, arise and unite."

Swami Satyanarayana Saraswaty, Ramdasa Mission Universal Society

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"What is happening among Hindus is like an incarnation. It is as if God is going among the people beseeching them to free him."
ASHOK SINGHAL, VHP Mahamantri



"Revivalist fanaticism cannot produce a united India. We are reaping now a poisonous brew concocted through past follies."
P.N. HAKSAR

and Youth Volunteer Corps, has found credence and acceptability among the unlikeliest of people; people who are banding together, for the first time, under one saffron banner. Observes K.C. Kulish, publisher of the Rajasthan Patrika: "There has been a spurt of religious activity in all areas. But I have never seen the kind of religious fervour that exists today. It is the response of a people who are not at peace."

In Kerala, one of the most important centres for the jagaran, Marxists have in some cases given up their traditional clashes with RSS activists, and many notable CPI(M) members have been attending VHP meetings in order to court the Hindu vote against the Karunakaran Government. In Trivandrum, Leela Thampy, a social worker, now supports the VHP and talks about "the raw deal Hindus have been getting from the Government and media". In Tamil Nadu's Ramanathapuram district, former hardcore Dravida Kazhagam activist and artist N. Balasubramaniam—once given to iconoclasm and opposition to organised Hinduism—celebrates his new habit of temple-going and excoriates the "carelessness of Hindus about their religious rites and ignoring their own religion".

THERE can be no doubt that the Hindu juggernaut has arrived, its wheels propelled by surprisingly large numbers of Hindus from every corner of the nation who have begun to articulate—as if with one voice—a feeling of persecution. The majority appears to have developed a minority complex. And within the confines of this mass psyche, it is embarked upon a zealous unification—a zeal marked by religious purgation, Harijan and tribal uplift aimed at persuading lower caste Hindus who have strayed into Christianity or Islam to re-enter Hinduhood, xenophobia, the formation of multifarious Shiv Senas with trishul-wielding acolytes banded into self-defence groups, public works and educational projects, and militant demands for ending what are seen as the special privileges enjoyed by the religious minorities.

During a recent Ram Navmi Mahotsav organised by the VHP in Ayodhya in April, to celebrate and plan further for the liberation of the Ramjanmabhoomi site—attended by about a few million people and hundreds of mahants and mandaleshwars representing different Hindu sects—a swami offered a new twist to the well-known pacifist couplet: Jo toke kanta bove tahi bove too phool (shower flowers on the enemy who pricks you with a thorn). The swami's version: Jo toke kanta bove tahi bove too bhala. Voh bhi humko kya samjhega, para kisee se paala (he who pricks you with a thorn, pierce him in return with a spear and teach him a lesson he won't forget).

Small towns across Uttar Pradesh echo with resounding Shiv Sena cries of Jo hum se takrayega choor choor ho jayega (He who takes us on will be crushed into smithereens), and Hindu ki pahchaan, Trishul ka nishan (recognise Hindus by the sign of the trident). Even liberal, reformist Hindu organisations like the Arya Samaj have been swept along by the currents of the militant resurgence. At a recent centenary celebration in Delhi, the first speaker, Ramgopal Shalwale, a former Jan Sangh MP, said that one of the most recent and significant achievements of

K.M. KISHAN

The prisoner Rama: symbol of Hinduism in danger the Samaj was its having prevented a masjid from being erected inside Rashtrapati Bhavan when a Muslim was the President of the country. His call to "free" Bharat Mata from outside influences was greeted with resounding cheers and shouts of Jo Bole so abhaya, Vedic Dharma ki jaya (speak out fearlessly, long live the Vedic religion). The meeting was attended, among other important personages, by K.C. Pant, cabinet minister.

The cooler heads in the community are aware of the inherent dangers in the new mood of militancy and have been trying, unsuccessfully, to counsel restraint. Says Vayalar Ravi, Kerala's home minister who has been fighting an unsuccessful battle to ban the sale of public lands to religious organisations: "Will it solve any problems if everybody tries to live like a Hindu or as a Christian or as a Muslim and not as an Indian in this country? It will not." Adds Tariq Anwar, chief coordinator of the Congress

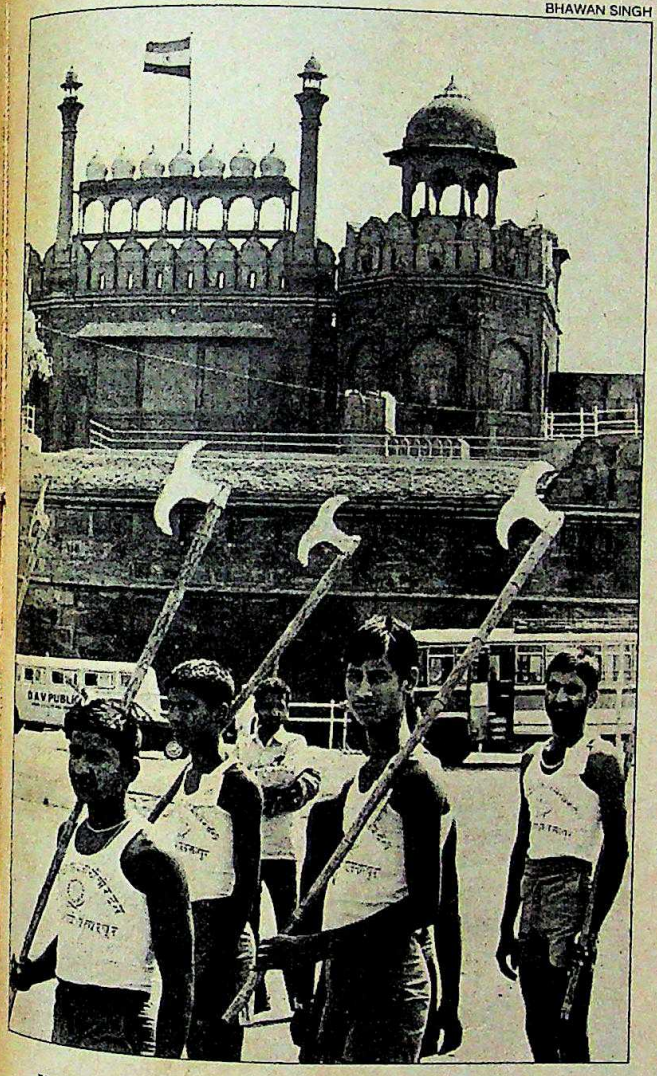
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Today it is the turn of the Hindus to fall into the trap of communalists. Tomorrow it will be the Muslims. We should all think like Indians."
BIR BAHADUR SINGH, U.P. Chief Minister

"A Hindu nation that accepts all diverse religions but does not give special treatment. That is our goal. Our society should be homogeneous."
RAJENDRA SINGH, RSS General Secretary

BHAWAN SINGH



Youths of the Arya Vir Dal outside Delhi's Red Fort

Sewa Dal: "No one seems to be thinking where we are heading by adopting this aggressive communal posture. While it is the duty of the majority community to ensure that the minorities feel safe and part of the nation's mainstream, minorities are dutybound to prove that they want to respond to friendly accommodation."

The Hindu cause has found a redoubtable champion in Orissa's coastal town of Puri, the spiritual capital of India in the east. He is Niranjana Dev Tirtha, 81, the 144th Jagadguru Shankaracharya, one of the most venerated personages of Hinduism. He perceives the Government as the greatest enemy of Hinduism because of what he calls its policy of "appeasing" the minorities. He accuses the Government of having bowed to minority sentiments in passing the Muslim Women's Bill because the Government saw the Supreme Court verdict in the Shah Bano case as an intrusion into the community's internal affairs. "But in Hindu social affairs," he fumes, "there is daily interference." The Shankaracharya is particularly irked by the minimum marriage age law and the Hindu Religious Endowment Act which allows the Government to take over temple land. "The Government has taken away 550 acres of our land in Orissa," he says. "But can you imagine the Government touching even an inch of mosque or church property?" And he argues that by making Hindus vulnerable and insecure, the Government has "negated secularism. There must be a common law for all inhabitants of this country".

Hindu stalwarts like him are convinced—however ludicrous it might sound—that a conspiracy of sociology and demography will soon render the Hindus a minority within their own country, bereft of economic and political power. The Shankaracharya has now taken to travelling around the country to drum up support for his crusade against the Government. "Everywhere I go I sense a feeling of helplessness among the Hindus," he says, and charges that the current "weakness of Hindu society and morals" is the Government's fault. In the cause of Hindu awakening and unity, he brought a procession of more than 1 lakh Hindus to the Kumbh mela, led by 72 Hindu organisations from all over India, and united them on a three-point pledge: Stop the slaughter of Hindus in Punjab, ban cow slaughter, and pass uniform laws for all religions.

THE JAGADGURU'S views are a distillation of the essence of the reasons behind the Hindu restiveness and call to revivalism. The irony that 600 million Hindus, comprising 80 per cent of the population, should feel threatened by a handful of disparate minorities has somehow been buried under the rising tide of Hindu revivalism and truculence embodied in the Shankaracharya's remarks. And the deadly seriousness of the crusade leaves no passage for pondering over paradoxes. The symbolic Ram Ratha represents, in apotheosis, the crisis that many Hindus see as having overcome their community. Intones Ashok Singhal, 58, mahamantri of the VHP, the 22-year-old organisation which is in the forefront of the resurgence: "It is as if God himself is going to the people and beseeching them to unshackle him. What is happening among the Hindus today is like an incarnation. It is like God himself in action."

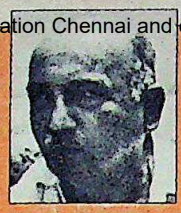
The current Hindu mood started with a slow burn in 1981, after the mass religious conversions at Meenakshipuram. And it was soon after this that the VHP came into prominence. But the slogans of Hinduism in danger, periodically mouthed by the RSS and VHP, gained momentum with the disturbances in Punjab and Kashmir where, it was perceived, Hindus were at the receiving end because of the connivance of an appeasement-minded government. There was more grist for the mill with the Shah Bano and the Muslim Women's Bill controversy, and the call to action issued by Syed Shahabuddin, Janata MP over the unlocking of the Ramjanmabhoomi temple.

The Muslims saw black. The Hindus saw red. And what was an amorphous feeling of Hindu malaise exploded last winter into a palpable, energetic movement, a movement that was revanchist and which began to smell the political power that comes with

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Will it solve any problem if everybody tries to live as a Hindu, or a Christian or as a Muslim and not as an Indian? It will not."
VAYALAR RAVI, Kerala Home Minister



"Hindus are no longer shy of calling themselves Hindus."
YADAVRAO JOSHI,
RSS Joint General Secretary.

unity. Ekatma yagyas and celebrators of the Ramjanmabhoomi "liberation" clashed with protesters fired by the influence of the Babri Masjid Action Committee. Communal violence flared. And the killings still continue.

Whether based on reality or imaginary fears, the feeling of being de-Hinduised in a predominantly Hindu country is nonetheless sincere and deeply ingrained in large numbers of Hindus, though one cannot say what percentage of the majority community has been caught up in the new mood. One of the revivalist movement's unique and most significant recent manifestations is the creation of the Dharma Sansad, which now guides the actions of the VHP. The sansad consists of representatives of just about every Hindu sect and order of sanyasis and sadhus—some 900 of them—who took a vow at a Mahatma sammelan last year, before a gathering of more than 5 lakh people at Udipi in Karnataka, to eschew sectarian differences, give up turf battles and intra-religious litigation, and to fight for the purification of Hinduism and the propagation of Hindu nationalism. "This is the first time in 600 years that such an event has occurred," says VHP's Singhal. "In fact, during the meeting at Ayodhya, mahatmas and sadhus have pledged to leave their ashrams and go among the people to spread these beliefs. This is nothing short of a Hindu renaissance."

The sheer size of the effort—organised largely by the RSS and VHP—and its geographical spread are staggering. In Kerala, now gripped by Hindu insecurity because of the perception that Muslims and Christians are rising in numbers, more than 1 lakh RSS activists turned out in uniform recently to listen to Balasaheb Deoras. Nearly all the 5,000 villages in Kerala now have RSS shakhas. And communities like the Nairs, Ezhavas and Namboodiris have begun to unite on single platforms to fight for what they call "the Hindu cause". RSS shakhas have in fact doubled in number during the last three years, and are now attended by more than a million people daily. This means that every fifteenth Hindu now living in Kerala, regardless of party affiliation, attends an RSS drill. Aggressive Hinduism is also evident in the attendance at Hindu temples and other religious gatherings. Some 16,000 coconuts are broken daily at the famous Ganesha temple in the heart of Trivandrum, compared to 9,000 three years ago. The Sabarimala Hindu shrine, located in the heart of the Muslim-dominated Idukki district, attracted 5 million devotees last year, double the number two years back. Money collected at Sabarimala has shot up fivefold. And every day, some five million worshippers visit Kerala's 6,000 Hindu temples, donating an estimated Rs 20 lakh in hard cash.

A ratham carrying an idol of Agatsya rishi is slowly moving towards a temple in the ancient Agatsya Hill in Kerala. Earlier attempts to install the murti had been foiled by the Government in response to minority sentiments. "But this time we are determined to restore the temple to its Hindu glory," says Kerala VHP President K.V. Eradi. The VHP has also banded 36 Hindu organisations in Kerala into a temple protection committee with branches in every taluka and district. Said S. Parameshwaran, a member of the committee: "We cannot allow the temples to be run by non-believers who are in the Government. For many years there was no nexus between the temples and the Hindu community. Now we are organising Smarka Ardhanas in these temples to discuss our problems. There is a new awakening."

Mahants take vow of unity at Dharma Sansad in Udipi

And there has now arisen in Kerala the Young Men's Hindu Association (YMHA) attached to the Ramadasa Mission. Its members are mostly college-going students. Says R. Ravi, 28, an economics student who heads the YMHA: "We have failed to channelise the dynamism of Hindu society, which has been lying dormant. Once we are able to awaken this sleeping giant all our ills will evaporate."

IN KARNATAKA, the site of the Dharma Sansad, 700 VHP committees run schools, temples, hostels and medical centres. In order to spread Hinduism among children, VHP now organises an annual Bharatiya Sanskrit Parichaya Pariksha in which students are tested for their knowledge of the Mahabharata and Ramayana, and awarded gold and silver medals for excellence. This year 39,000 students from 750 schools participated, as against 17,000 last year. Among the cardinal tenets of the new Hindu resurgence is the reinduction of low caste Hindus into the religious fold. Swamy Sathyananda Saraswaty of the Ramadasa Mission Universal Society now preaches the slogan Jathikalkatheetharai partikalkatheerai Haidavare Unaruka Unaruka (Beyond caste, beyond parties, O Hindus, awake, arise, and unite). VHP workers have also begun to intercede in violent quarrels between upper caste Lingayats and Harijans in an attempt to bring them together. RSS Joint General Secretary Yadavrao Joshi boasts: "Hindus are no longer shy of calling themselves Hindus."

The same pattern prevails in Tamil Nadu. Rathams run by the VHP have begun to symbolise Hindu unity, drawing in

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"The Hindus have been getting a very raw deal from both the Government and the media."
LEELA THAMPY, social worker in Kerala

"We have enough money to buy arms and defend ourselves. We Hindus have been at the receiving end for too long."
RAMAKANT JALOTA, Shiv Sena organiser

RANJAN BASU

Karan Singh at Hindu sammelan in Patna

Brahmins and the Scheduled Castes, and even the supposedly godless cadres of the Dravida Munnetra Kazhagam and the All-India Anna Dravida Munnetra Kazhagam. Three rathams named Shakti, Gyanam and Deep, starting from villages in Tamil Nadu, criss-cross the south each day carrying Hindu deities and swamis from various muths through villages and Harijan bastis, offering the lower castes the opportunity to perform Abhishekas which they are not allowed to do in the temples.

The sleepy village of Kalancheri in Papanasam taluk on the Thanjavur-Kumbakonam route, with a population of 1,000, now boasts of six Hindu temples. Two months ago, more than 20,000 devotees turned out at the inauguration of the Kumbabhishekam temple built by the VHP. Now the VHP has begun to construct a temple at Vennputhur, a Harijan village near Thanjavur where there was no place of worship. Christian missionaries had been trying to acquire land for a church. But the VHP pre-empted that effort by moving swiftly to construct a Bhagvati Amman temple there. "We wanted our own place of worship and there is now no inducement for us to change our religion," says Ponnusamy, a villager.

Gujarat has not been immune to the spread of the Hindu Rashtra sentiment which, voiced in the wilderness by the RSS a decade ago, now finds almost eager acceptance in large parts of the state. The sentiment has now acquired a new legitimacy, a new belligerency. Within three short years, RSS shakhas in the state have mushroomed to more than 1,000 from a previous low of 300. State RSS workers have just completed a house-to-house visiting programme, meeting 5.5 million people in 9,000 villages. Exults Narendra Modi, RSS chief of Ahmedabad: "We cannot cope with the work people want us to do now. There is so much of public involvement and demands made on us."

During the Ekatma Yatra, the VHP organised 53 "Upayatras" carrying Ganga water which would meet the main procession. Hindu consciousness in the state has spurred devotees to celebrate any Hindu festival with eclat and aplomb. During Ram Navmi recently, small towns all over Gujarat were brightly lit and long processions passed through every town. And last year, a record nine million Hindus from various parts of the state visited Ahmedabad to participate in the Swaminarayana mela, during the course of which thousands of youngsters were inducted into the Swaminarayana cult as swamis.

The Ratha Yatra, an annual feature in Ahmedabad, caused violence and bloodshed this time after it was first prevented and then allowed to pass through Muslim-dominated areas, with Hindus dancing jubilantly to the tune of religious fervour. Frayed tempers on both sides produced the inevitable clashes, and within minutes seven people lay dead: victims of gunfire. The incident has re-created a surge of communalism in which Hindus, who live in Muslim-dominated areas are selling their houses and moving out. Muslims are doing the same.

Hindu rancour has played a large part in increasing the influence of the VHP. The organisation, to bolster Hindu unity, has started a scheme of Harijan uplift. When Harijan houses were looted and burned in Ambedkarnagar last year, sadhus and sanyasins went around distributing money and high caste Hindus joined the activity. When Dalit leaders in Gujarat threatened last year that they would convert to Islam if the anti-reservation riots continued, RSS and VHP members held long parleys with them. And the RSS has used this to political advantage. Recent elections to the Prantij Cooperative Bank and the Nagar Panchayat in Himmatnagar witnessed Hindus announcing that they did not want Muslim votes.

In VHP and RSS parlance the movement to reconvert Harijans and tribals is called "Prawartan", literally meaning "return to

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"I have to stand up for what I believe is right. India is my motherland and I cannot see it destroyed."
SYED SHAHABUDIN, M.P.

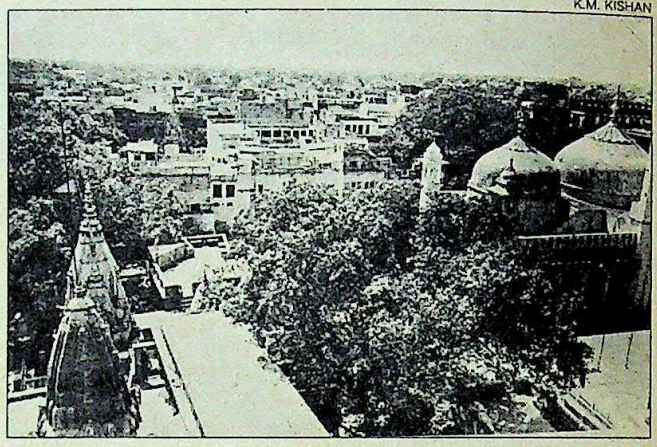
"I helped bring the whole movement together and it will be my dying wish that we Hindus succeed."
D. KHANNA, Dharmik Raksha Samiti

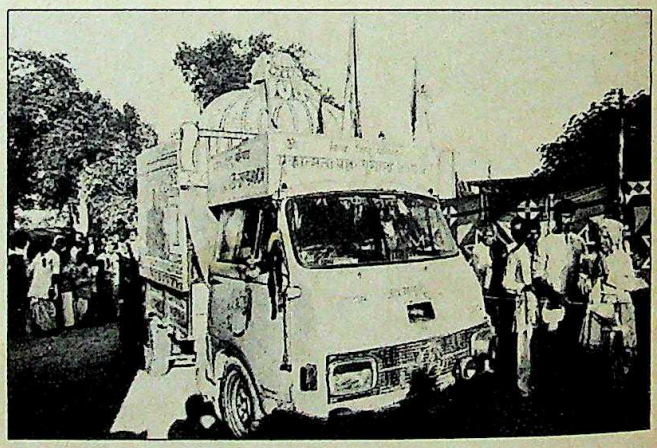
original position". In a 400-km stretch from Simdega to Palamau in Bihar, the Sri Banbasi Vikas Samiti works assiduously to prevent people from being converted to Christianity. So far, the Samiti, with the help of the VHP, has constructed 42 schools, five hospitals and four hostels in the region. And on April 18, Ram Navmi Day, the Samiti inaugurated a large Hanuman temple at Anjan in Guhla district, the "birthplace" of Hanuman. 200 km away, near Simdega, Brahmachari Jayram Parpanna Maharaj has devised a novel method to stop Hindu conversions. For the past three years he has been organising a Malviya Jayanti on Christmas Day to dissuade tribals from going to church. The Banbasi Kalyan Kendra—an offshoot of the RSS—was specially set up to wean tribals back to Hinduism. Headquartered at Lohardagga, near Ranchi, the kendra has established hospitals and temples for tribals and mounted a "mass awareness" campaign during the Pope's visit to prevent conversions. VHP activists claim that nearly 75,000 Hindus have returned to the Hindu fold during the last few years.

WHILE Hindu organisations engage in public construction and social welfare programmes in several states, they encourage the formation of Hindu self-defence groups in others. The trishul—Shiva's trident—has emerged as the militant symbol for these loosely-formed militias of unemployed youth and small shopkeepers in Punjab and Uttar Pradesh. In Punjab, the Shiv Sena is a motley crowd, divided into two distinct groups, one led by goldsmith-turned-organiser Ramakant Jalota and dominating Jalandhar, Kapurthala and Amritsar, and the other led by Jagdish Tangri, a Ludhiana businessman operating in Patiala and Hoshiarpur. Jalota claims that 80,000 youths have been "baptised". These groups now control major Hindu temples, like the Durgiana mandir in Amritsar, Devi Talab in Jalandhar and the Shiv temple in Ludhiana. "We have enough money to buy arms and defend ourselves," says Jalota, who can match even Bhindranwale's rhetoric. "We Hindus have been at the receiving end for too long, we cannot tolerate it any more."

In Uttar Pradesh, towns like Meerut, Khatauli, Sambhal and Moradabad, the Muslim heartland of northern India, units of the Akhil Bharatiya Shiv Shakti Dal are being formed. The initiation ceremonies for Hindu recruits are similar to the ones in Punjab, except that they take place after puja and havan ceremonies in small ashrams. Activists wear saffron caps and sashes, and in addition to wearing plastic-covered trishuls along their waists, they also sport embroidered trishuls on their clothes. They claim anywhere from 30,000 to 50,000 adherents. During meetings their leaders chant Jo bole so randhir, and the followers answer in refrain, Jai Bharat, jai Hinduvir. One of their local leaders in Meerut, Ravi Kumar, son of a local halwai, expressed an intense nationalism at a recent meeting. "Shiv Shakti ka jap karenge, apni raksha aap karenge," he intoned. (This is a time of our testing, we must be ready to sacrifice ourslves for Akhand Bharat). We are not political but we will create a movement that will help elect only Hindu-minded MLA's and MP's." Their Delhi-based leader, businessman Virendra Sharma, said at a baptism ceremony that

K.M. KISHAN





Kashi temple (above) and Ekatma yagya in Uttar Pradesh

Mrs Gandhi had "become a symbol for Hindu martyrdom. The country that was bequeathed to us by our ancestors is being splintered. We must foster a spirit of nationalism and emulate Germany and Japan in the way they built themselves up."

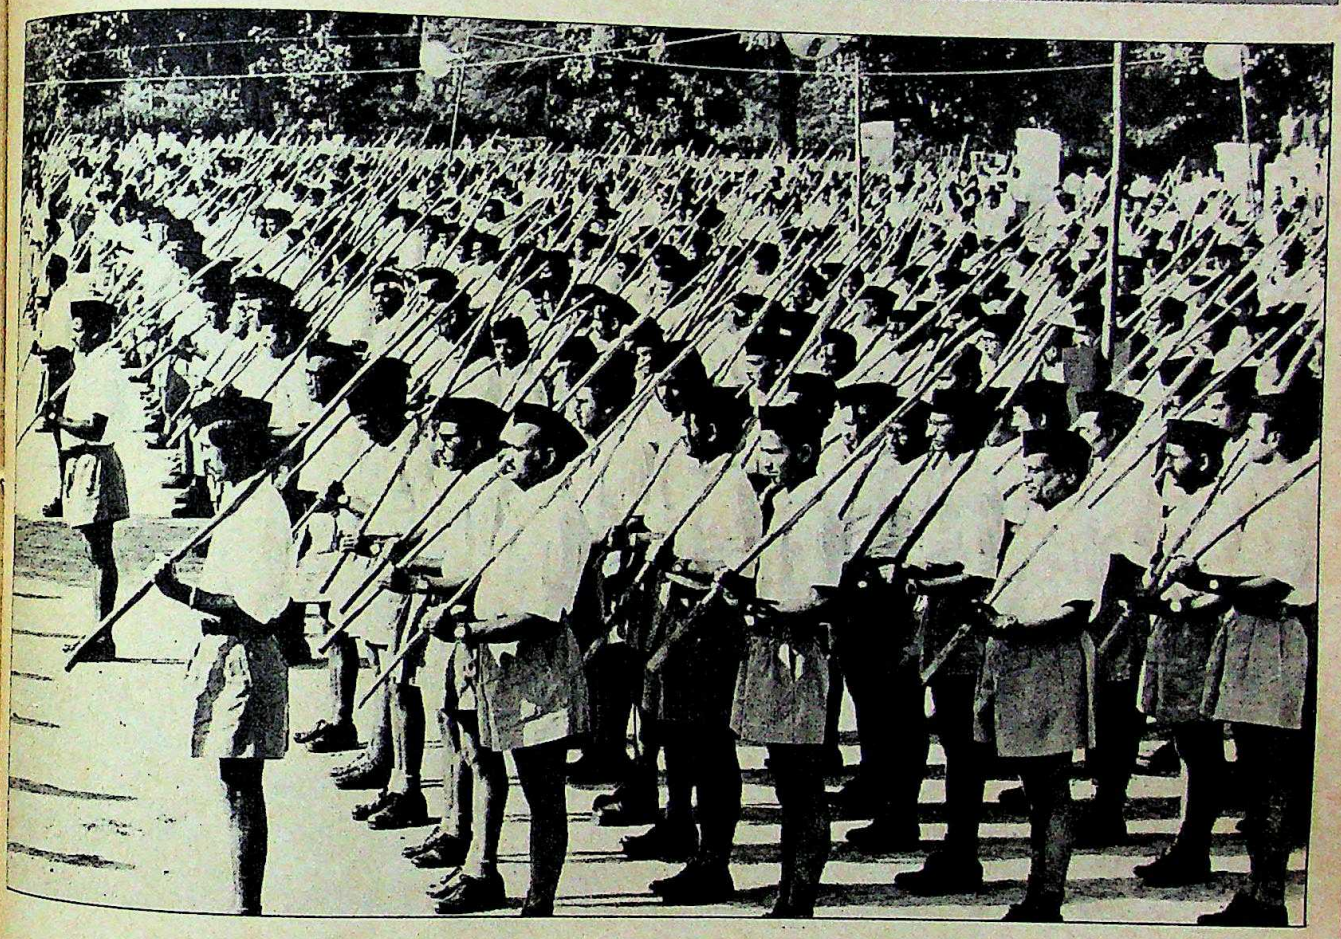
According to senior government officials, numerous towns in western Uttar Pradesh have become flashpoints for more communal violence. Meerut is peaceful now after the killings in February, resulting from clashes over the Ramjanmabhoomi issue. But an official warned that "people are in a fighting mood". Moradabad, after a respite following the 1980 riots, is tense once again. "There's a lull here," said one official in the 6-lakh strong brass capital of north India that has a 45 per cent Muslim population. "Any local issue ignites a spark." Nearby Sambhal, an ancient town of 80,000, the majority of them Muslim, is tense under an undeclared curfew following a handful of stabbings and killings. RSS activist O.P. Garg claims that Hindus are fighting on two fronts—against the Government as well as the local majority community "which is pampered by the local administration". Barabanki is still recovering from a spate of communal violence in which 14

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"It is the duty of the majority community to ensure that minorities feel safe and part of the nation's mainstream."
TARIQ ANWAR, Congress Sewa Dal

"We are not political but we will create a movement that will help elect only Hindu-minded MLA's and MP's."
RAVI KUMAR, Shiv Shakti Dal, Meerut



An RSS shakha in Delhi: disturbing militancy people were killed and 61 injured.

And more holy wars loom ahead. During the next phase of its battleplan, starting this summer, the VHP will move towards Kashi (Varanasi) and Mathura to re-annex the Vishwanath temple and the Sri Krishna Janmabhoomi which, they claim, were captured and converted into mosques and idgahs by Mughal emperors. Though VHP and RSS leaders openly assert that their targets are just these two temples, they are also working on a list of 25 other Muslim shrines which they say were ancient Hindu temples. This long-range plan is already creating panic. Lok Dal Varanasi Vice-President Sharan Yadav describes the VHP plan to launch a drive toward the Kashi Vishwanath temple as "dangerous and disastrous".

That the VHP—the intellectual arm of the RSS—has become so strong is hardly surprising. It has benefited not only from the challenge of Shahabuddin, who claims that "I have to stand up for what I believe to be right because India is my motherland and I cannot see it being destroyed by this mania for absorption", but also from the politics of communalism and casteism to which every political party has pandered. "We are reaping now the poisonous brew concocted through those follies," says elder statesman P.N. Haksar.

Organised, ideologically fired, and armed with a million dedicated workers in 3,500 branches all over India, the VHP now reaps the benefits of communal politics played in recent years by none other than the Congress(I). "You will soon see within this country," warns Singhal "a vertical divide within each political party—those who accept Hindu nationalism and those who don't." VHP, he said, has already completed a mass contact programme in the country which included lobbying 250 legislators at the state and Central levels. "We find a lot of support for our cause. In fact we have managed to raise about Rs 2.5 crore for our projects, but the Government has imposed a lien on our funds. The Government doesn't question money raised by other religions from foreign sources, but it tries to persecute us."

That the communal chicken has come home to roost is not lost on politicians. Taking note of this development, Uttar Pradesh Chief Minister Bir Bahadur Singh said: "Today it is the turn of the Hindus to fall into the trap of communalists and raise dangerous questions, tomorrow it will be the turn of the Muslims. We should all think like Indians and not like Muslims,

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"The country of our ancestors is being splintered. We must foster nationalism of the German or Japanese variety."
VIRENDRA SHARMA, Bhartiya Shiv Shakti Dal

"We have failed to channelise the dynamism of Hindu society. Once we are able to awake this sleeping giant all our ills will evaporate."
R. RAVI, Young Men's Hindu Association

Hindus and Christians." But the communal divide—now almost out of the control of the mainstream political parties—began with the patronage of Singh's own party. It took an emotional turn in 1983, during the Kashmir polls, when hardcore RSS elements in Jammu forgot their Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) candidates and joined hands with the Congress(I) in a bid to end Farooq Abdullah's regime. Mrs Gandhi had herself openly exhorted Hindus in the Jammu region to vote for her party.

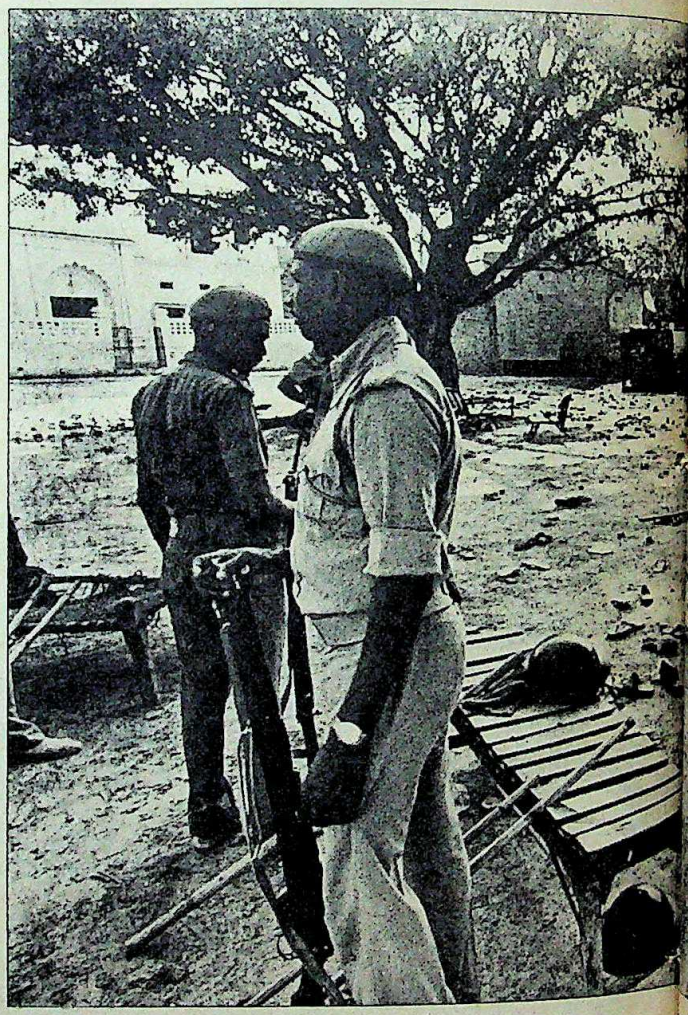
After 1980, Mrs Gandhi began to refrain from attacking the RSS or BJP on communal issues. And in 1984, the Congress(I) joined hands with the Shiv Sena's Bal Thackeray in Maharashtra to fight the panchayat poll. Following the Bhiwandi riots, the-then chief minister Vasantrao Patil in fact struck a deal with the Shiv Sena to get a Congress(I) candidate elected to the post of deputy chairman of the council. VHP leaders claim that Mrs Gandhi had several contacts with them and urged them to launch programmes for Hindu unity.

THE PARISHAD, in existence since 1964, came into the limelight in 1982, soon after the Meenakshipuram conversions, when it launched a drive that culminated in the reconversion of thousands of Muslims back to Hinduism in Ajmer. That same year, VHP trustee Moropant Pingle conceived of the Ekatma Yagya. The Congress(I) quietly backed the idea with an eye to political gain. And Mrs Gandhi even rushed to Hardwar to participate in the "Asthapana" function at the Bharat Mata mandir on May 15, 1983. It was during this period that Daudayal Khanna, a former Congress minister of Uttar Pradesh, "guided by some divine powers", wrote a letter to Mrs Gandhi arguing that Hindu holy places in Ayodhya, Mathura, and Varanasi should be "liberated" and given back to the Hindus. Following several rath yatras and mass pledges taken by lakhs of people all over India, the Dharmik Asthan Raksha Samiti was created with Khanna as convenor. "I persuaded the Dharma Sansad to accept this pledge and dedicate it to the VHP cause," says Khanna. "I helped bring the whole movement together and it will be my dying wish that we Hindus succeed."

Ultimately, according to RSS General Secretary Rajendra Singh, a former lecturer in nuclear physics at Allahabad University, "a Hindu nation which accepts all diverse religions as sects, but which does not give any special treatment to any sect, is our goal. We want a consolidated Hindu society, based on our national heroes, and it should be homogeneous." Singhal added that what is now occurring in India as part of the Hindu jagaran is the RSS and VHP's four-point plan of action. This consists of bringing all the different Hindu sects under one manch to fight for Hindu causes, uplift Harijans and tribals, ban proselytisation, promote Sanskrit as a uniform language, and back political candidates who support Hindu interests.

Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi, when asked last fortnight about the new revivalism and the activities of organisations like the VHP, conceded that there might be a problem but argued that "by and large the Hindus will remain under control....They will not become fanatics." (see interview on page 68).

But the movement is not to be dismissed lightly, and if it succeeds, says Haksar, "it cannot create a Hindu India of anybody's dreams. If we organise ourselves as Hindus the inevitable reaction will be to organise others in serried ranks of Muslims, Sikhs, tribals, Christians", and, as he points out, a country besieged by revivalist fanaticism cannot produce a united India. If the country, he argues, is divided along religion, will not only have to contend with 100 million Muslims in India but also in Bangladesh, Pakistan, and the Arab world. "The East India Company," he says, "peeled our country like an onion. And now my fellow countrymen after 100 years of struggle have learned no lesson from this."



Barabanki after the riots: communal flashpoint

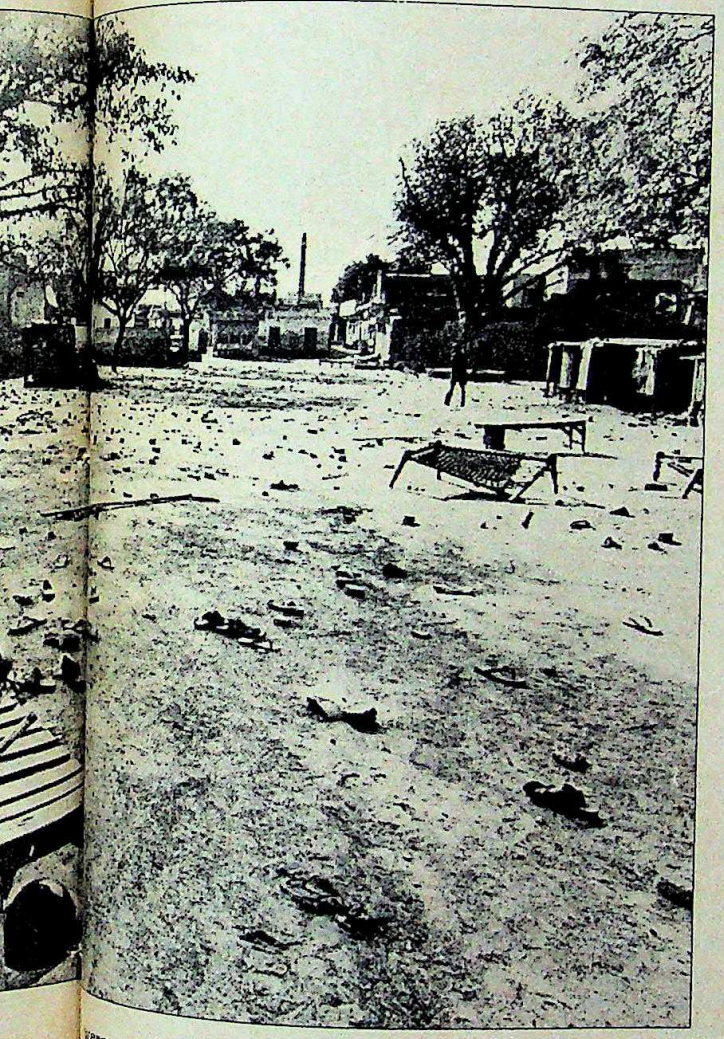
But easily persuaded into ascribing all their woes to creeping Christianity or insidious Islam, increasing numbers of Hindus are in no mood to listen to blandishments of old-time secular sanity. They are in no mood to listen to arguments that given the 1941 census base—and not the 1951 census in which Muslims

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

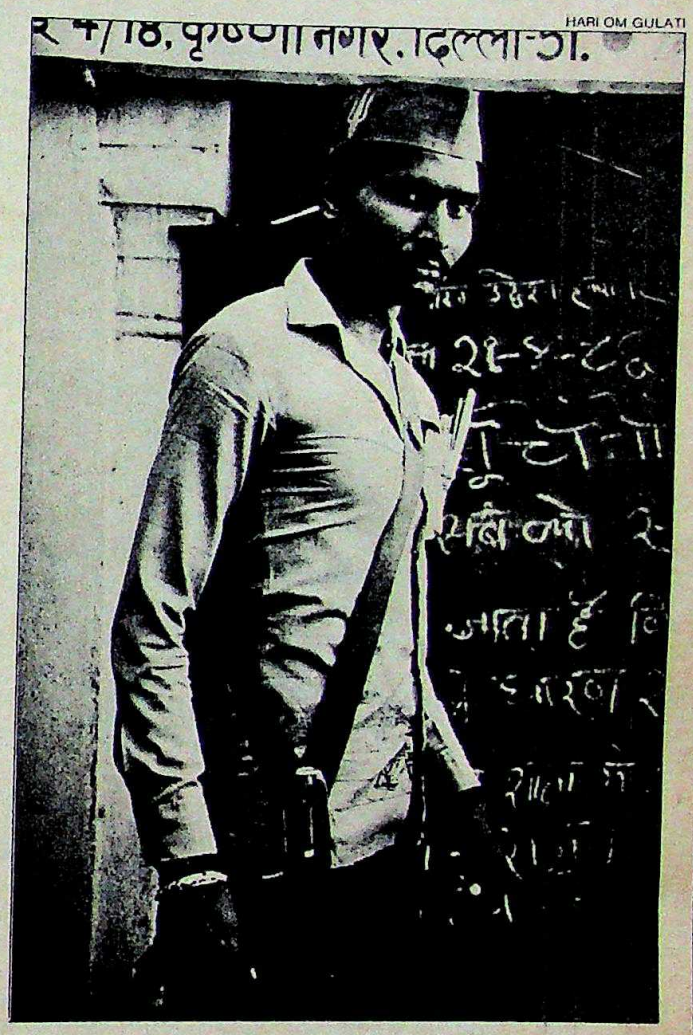
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Speak out fearlessly Hindu Braves, Glory to India, Glory to Hindus."

Battlecry of the Akhil Bharatiya Hindu Shiv Shakti Dal



HARI OM GULATI



A member of the Shiv Shakti Dal: belligerent mood were undercounted—the rate of growth in the Hindu and Muslim population has been about the same; that increasing the Muslim population on the basis of polygamy is an impractical exercise and is squarely restricted by the availability of women for each man; that Health Ministry statistics show that within given spheres of socio-economic strata the acceptance of birth control is roughly the same for both communities; that the rate of religious conversions now favours Hindus; that the VHP and Arya Samaj together run more minority-style institutions than other communities; that more than 60 per cent of Muslims live below the poverty line, are miserably under-represented in government jobs in relation to their population, and lag seriously behind in education.

But shibboleths die hard in a time of religious and emotional catharsis. Whether or not communalists and revivalists of all persuasions are propagating false dreams of Indian unity while actually promoting the death of secularism, one thing is certain: the country stands once again before the bar of history. On trial is nothing less than the appropriateness of the vision of India's founding fathers, who had dared to dream of uniting a country of diverse peoples and faiths along the precepts of Nehruvian secularism, not only because they believed it was the right and just path but also because it appeared to provide the only historical and practical answer to the problem of weaving a diverse people into the fabric of a nation state.

Now, almost 40 years later, India is once again to be judged on its ability to cope with the forces of irrationality and to sustain its vision of manavadharma and unity. And among all the slogans of hate and unity now being sounded across the country, the one that is conspicuous by its absence is the ancient and appropriate Vedic credo: Atmavata Sarvabhuteshu—He who looks upon all creation and living things as he looks upon himself, he truly is a great person.

—INDERJIT BADHWAR with PRABHU CHAWLA, FARZAND AHMED and bureau reports

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Betting Ban

LAST month the Tamil Nadu Government, in a surprising move, took over the reins of the horse-racing business in the state from the Madras Race Club with the avowed objective of running races in a fair and proper manner. But whether the Government's move itself was fair or proper, came into controversial question with the club management challenging the coup in court. But last fortnight, the state took the bull squarely by the horns by announcing in the Assembly that horse-racing was banned in the state with immediate effect.

What prompted the Government to take such a drastic step was not immediately clear. The state has been threatening to clean the Augean stables of the racing world, alleging mismanagement and illegalities. But even after taking over management, racing in Ootacamund continued under the government-appointed custodian and the sudden announcement came as a rude shock. What is at crucial stake is the fate of the 600 permanent employees amd over 1,000 seasonal workers hired by the club, not to mention the fate of the 600 thoroughbreds stabled at Madras. To rub additional salt into the wound, state Finance Minister V.R. Nedunchezhiyan announced that the Government was considering putting up a new legislature complex on the 450-acre racecourse.

Closed Madras Race Club: rude shock

Party Bash

THE FACTIONAL infighting in the West Bengal unit of the Congress(I) has taken a deadly turn. Last fortnight, Calcutta's normally-deserted Airport Hotel became a bloody arena for a Chicago-type gangwar as two groups of Congress(I) musclemen, alleged to be supporters of two rival Congress dons, exchanged gunfire and hurled bombs at each other in the hotel lobby. The clash was the alleged result of an altercation between the two rival leaders

What made matters worse was that at the time of the shoot-out, AICC(I) Vice-President Arjun Singh was closeted in one of the hotel rooms discussing party affairs with state PCC(I) chief Priya Ranjan Das Munshi. Singh had to be 'rescued' by the police who escorted him out through the debris of the hotel lobby. Congress leaders have dropped a veil of silence over the sordid issue but party insiders disclosed that the state units leaders have abandoned their war for the time being. But bringing their goons to heel is a different matter and Calcutta could be the venue for an extended screening of Gang Wars.

Disappearing Daughter

Indra: mystery

OVER three months ago, Rajasthan's minister of state for animal husbandry, Ram Singh Vishnoi, was sacked from the ministry after his daughter, Indra Vishnoi, 20, had declared in a press interview that her father had tortured her for refusing to accept as her husband a boy she had been married off to when she was seven years old. Last fortnight, the Vishnoi saga resurfaced when Bhagiram Vishnoi, 27, a state electricity board employee at Ajmer, was stabbed by half-a-dozen attackers and greviously wounded. He is known to be emotionally involved with Indra and claims his attackers wanted to know where she was hiding out and that he recognised them, three of whom are relatives of R.S. Vishnoi.

The mystery deepened when, two days later, Indra's husband Mohanlal complained to the Jodhpur police that on April 25, four days before the attack on Bhagiram, some men persuaded Indra to leave with him, allegedly to meet Bhagiram. He named seven suspects against whom the police have registered a case of kidnapping, including Sanjay Sandaich, a reporter involved in the original story that led to R.S. Vishnoi's ouster. Even more intriguing is the question of Indra's whereabouts and the fact that Mohanlal only filed a complaint six days after she disappeared.

In-Law's Intent

IN-LAWS have always played a major—if dubious—role in India's political history. Now it is the turn of Orissa's beleagured Chief Minister J.B. Patnaik, whose ambitious son-in-law Soumya Ranjan Patnaik is making controversial waves. A university lecturer-turned-newspaper-owner, Ranjan, in his excessive zeal to help his father-in-law, has succeeded in doing quite the opposite. His latest crusade is an attack on Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi for "ridiculing the state's poverty". His outburst against Rajiv and party MP's at Rourkela recently elicited an angry reaction from loyalists.

Patnaik: tight spot

But Ranjan seems undeterred. He then circulated a questionnaire to the state's 32 MP's asking who they thought responsible for Orissa's poverty. Patnaik now finds himself in a tight spot after the Pranab Mukherjee expulsion. He is close to the former finance minister and had frequent meetings with him. Now, with his son-in-law adding fuel to the fire, Patnaik, say sources, has been expressing fears for his political future.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The festival of India and beyond...

India. The land and its people. Faces, places, fairs and festivals. Religion and culture. Cities and villages. A panoramic view of an entire sub-continent. Brought to you in vivid, breathtaking colour. Through four fascinating volumes. Including the official volume of The Festival of India.

Festival of India
The official book, with a foreword by Pupul Jayakar. Covers the entire Festival of India in the U.S.A.

223 illustrations, including 204 colour plates.

A complete and exciting visual record of a once-in-a-lifetime event! Price: Rs. 325.00

Village India
A new and exciting book that explores the many facets of India's villages — the sounds, colours, sights and textures of rural communities across the country.

Written by Stephen P. Huyler — Indophile and expert on Indian history, art and culture.

294 illustrations, including 127 colour plates. Price: Rs. 325.00

India
All the complex diversity, religious consciousness, cultural heritage, art and architecture of the world's second most populous country; all the vigour and abundance of an age-old society, influenced by modern trends.
With brillant colour photography by Antonio Martinelli and Roberto Meazza and text by Antonio Monroy. Price: Rs 325.00

India — the Insight Guide
Yet another in the famed APA series of 'Insight Guides'. The perfect guide for foreign and domestic tourists and an extra-ordinarily useful reference work. 359 pages, including scores of exciting colour photographs.

Price: Rs. 200.00

Order all four of these stimulating, educative books and save Rs. 175.00 for all four volumes.

All 4 books at a saving of Rs. 175.00!

India Book Distributors 107/108, Arcadia, 195, Nariman Point, Bombay 400 021

Please send me all the 4 books above. Enclosed is a Bank Draft/M.O. for Rs.1,000.00 (postage free)

Please send me _____

_____ (name (s) of book)

Enclosed is Rs. _____ by Bank Draft/M.O. (I understand postage is free)

NAME: _____

ADDRESS: _____

All payments should be payable to "India Book Distributors, Bombay" only.

Incentive/IBD/3936

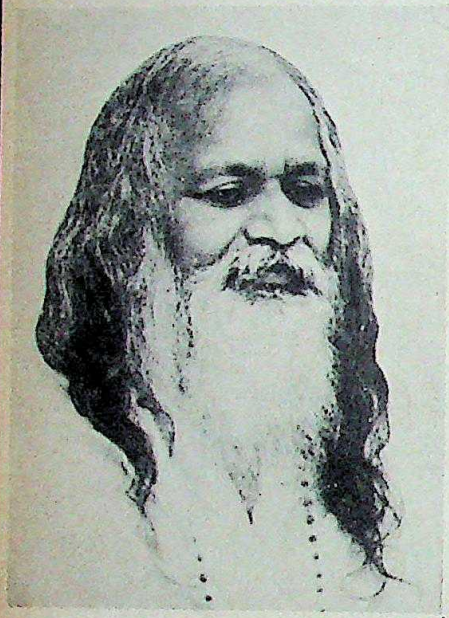
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MAHARISHI WORLD PEACE FUND

Rs. 120 CRORES TO ENSURE WORLD PEACE

MAHARISHI'S WORLD PLAN TO ROOT OUT TERRORISM AND RIVALRY OF SUPERPOWERS WITHOUT LOSS OF LIFE



His Holiness
Maharishi Mahesh Yogi

It is obvious to everyone that all means employed by man so far to achieve world peace have failed. Since one thousand B.C. there have been over 8,000 peace treaties, and each one lasted on average no more than nine years. The League of Nations was founded in 1920 to ensure that World War I 'was the war to end all wars'. Twenty years later World War II erupted. The United Nations was established in 1945 to end wars and conflicts between nations once and for all. Since then there have been eighty major wars. It is clear that political negotiations, treaties and organisations have never and can never create a lasting state of world peace.

- With the complete knowledge of natural law available in Maharishi's Vedic Science, world peace now is only a matter of money.

- 10,000 Vedic Pandits can be trained in Maharishi's Vedic Science and modestly maintained permanently with Rs. 12 crores per year. This will generate and maintain a strong influence of sattva (positivity) in world consciousness and eliminate the very basis of terrorism and dangerous rivalry of superpowers.

- Only a strong indomitable influence of sattva in world consciousness can prevent the bubbles of stress rising in the world. This alone can root out terrorism without loss of life. This alone can eliminate crime, negative tendencies, and fear prevailing in the world family due to rivalry of superpowers.

- This appeal is addressed to the top industrialists of India and other countries whose existence and success primarily depends upon harmony in the national and international fields.

- This appeal is also addressed to the government leaders in the world, whose responsibility is to provide law and order, peace and harmony to all the people.

- Maharishi World Peace Fund will be exclusively used to train and maintain 10,000 Vedic Pandits.

- Those who will contribute to Maharishi World Peace Fund will naturally be the first beneficiaries of the evolutionary support of natural law generated by the daily performance of 10,000 Vedic Pandits in Maharishi Nagar, which is rising to be the World Capital of the Age of Enlightenment to create and maintain world peace generation after generation.

- As every wealthy man in the world has his own charitable trust, it is urgent and imperative that Maharishi World Peace Fund immediately forms a part of their trust fund on a permanent basis.

- With Maharishi World Peace Fund, now every head of state will ring the bell of invincibility for his nation.

Please contact:
Director, Maharishi World Peace Fund
Dr. C. Anna Rao, D.Litt.,
Former Executive Officer & Chairman,
Tirumala Tirupati Devasthanams
Maharishi Nagar (near Delhi)
Noida, Ghaziabad, U.P., 201307 India

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GOING PUBLIC

ATOMIC energy will soon come under a corporate banner. The Government proposes to set up a public sector company that will run all the nuclear power stations in the country, taking them away from the Atomic Energy Commission. Two advantages will result: the nuclear power stations, which currently sell the energy that they generate at cost, will be able to charge commercial rates that are at least 50 per cent higher. Also, the atomic energy establishment hopes to see the investment of a mammoth Rs 45,000 crore in this sector before the turn of the century. But the Government is seriously short of funds, and the only way out is to approach the public with bond issues, as some public sector companies did recently. The forming of an atomic energy corporation, the Government believes, will help this process as well.

FIRE BRAND

SMOKE and fire are visible on the cigarette front. US tobacco giant Phillip Morris has hauled GTC Industries to court, charging that the Indian firm had violated trade mark laws by using the brand name Visa, which the US company had registered in India. The American giant has got an interim injunction against GTC, preventing it from using the brand name.

This has been followed by yet another American cigarette firm, R.J. Reynolds, which has filed a suit against ITC. Reynolds had registered the trade mark Now in India, but early this year ITC launched a fast-selling cigarette under the same brand name. When the case comes up for hearing in mid-July at the Delhi High Court, the Indian cigarette firm will adopt the defence that Reynolds did not use the trade mark in the country.

PUNCTURED HOPES

THE ESCORTS bid to get into the car market has been stymied, with the Industry Ministry deciding that the broadbanding of industrial licences did not permit tractor manufacturers to diversify into cars. The company had wanted to manufacture a small Citroen that would have been cheaper than the Maruti, and had argued its case by saying that the Citroen would function on rough roads and in rural areas unsuited for the Maruti. Earlier, the company had considered manufacturing a small Japanese car, but had been asked informally to stay off by ministry officials who wanted to give Maruti a clear field in the small car market. The same arguments may have applied now, apart from the limitations of the broadbanding policy decision. But the company has still not quite given up hope on a project that it has nursed for more than three years.

BACKING OUT

ORKAY Silk Mills has failed in its bid for the detergent unit of Ambalal Sarabhai Enterprises, which has been losing money in a competitive market. Orkay, which currently deals in polyester, has been looking for diversification opportunities and was willing to pay Rs 9 crore for the detergent unit. This, however, seems to have been unacceptably high and Orkay has backed out. A rival bid, however, has been made by detergent colossus Hindustan Lever, and this may well prove successful.

DEVALUATION DIP

THE RUPEE continues to be steadily devalued vis-a-vis a number of international currencies, and most significantly against the currency created by the International Monetary Fund, called Special Drawing Rights (SDRs). According to figures compiled by the Fund, in June-end last year, Rs 12.41 could buy one SDR; by September the SDR's value had risen to Rs 12.70, by November to Rs 13.12, by January to Rs 13.66 and by March-end to Rs 14.13. The rupee's devaluation in nine months works out to 13.86 per cent. This is of course in addition to the devaluation that has taken place in the previous couple of years. In June 1983, Rs 10.79 could buy an SDR. The total devaluation of the rupee since then works out to 30.95 per cent.

WHARTON WAYS

IF AMERICA is increasingly interested in doing business with India, the surest proof is the Wharton School's decision to introduce a special India-oriented management programme from this month. Wharton ranks among the top business schools in the US and India will be the new area of specialisation at its Joseph H. Lauder Institute. The objective: get management students familiar with a country's business environment. India's complicated tax laws, for instance, are supposed to be scaring away American business. TELCO and TISCO have agreed to support Wharton students in India. The India-oriented course will include two sojourns in India: the first a three-week cultural orientation programme and the second a three-month summer internship with an Indian company. The hitch is that Indian companies who want to support the programme need Reserve Bank clearance, and this has so far not been forthcoming.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TELEVISION ADVERTISING

Tapping Technology

WHERE would you like to be? Kashmir, Hawaii, or on the cover of this glossy magazine?" Shyam Ramanna, 27, sits like Prospero in front of his machines in his darkened studio, presses a few buttons, turns a few knobs and presto, there you are on the cover of the magazine. A few more light-fingered exercises on his machines and the faces break into mosaic, fly from one corner of the screen to another, change colour, change form. Reality never seemed so ephemeral, truth so malleable, illusion so much at the command of a button.

Image Video, of which Ramanna (son of Raja Ramanna, Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission) is a partner with Sanjay Seksaria, is only one of the video studios mushrooming—as if there were no tomorrow—in Bombay to feed the insatiable appetite of the advertising agencies for television advertisements. At last count there were 89 studios and since 35 of them were raided this March, business must really be booming.

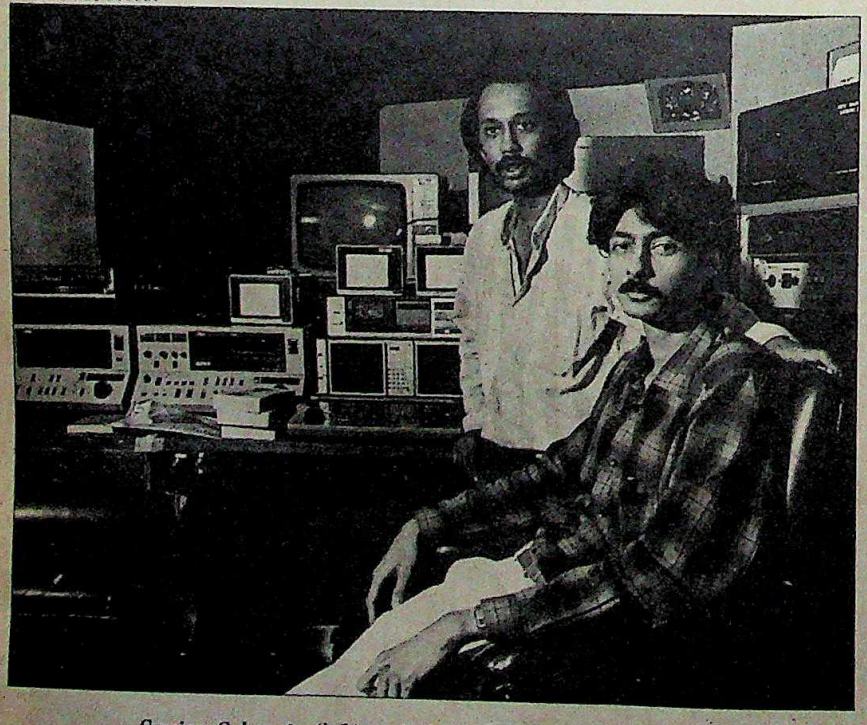
The post-Asiad age of colour television coupled with the onslaught of the sponsored programme and the installation of 183 TV transmitters have sent hundreds of people running after the video bandwagon. Instant ad films equal instant money. A journey through video ad land in Bombay can lead to a crumbling old building on the outskirts of Andheri, up rickety stairs, down smelly corridors and through a door into the electronic age. It can also lead to pokey one-room flats, transmogrified into sound-proof studios that are found all the way from the heart of the city to the distant suburbs. An hour in any of these can bring in Rs 700 to Rs 1,000; so the cash registers are busy ringing.

Video studios are mushrooming in Bombay to feed the insatiable appetite for TV advertisements. At last count, there were 89 studios and since 36 were raided this March, business must be booming.

Editing suites are even being found in bedrooms. In some cases there is no longer any room left for the bed, and sometimes there is no need for one because the young video freaks are too busy raking in the shekels to sleep: dark circles under the eyes are a common enough feature. The demand for television ads is so pressing that despite the number of television advertisement makers growing exponentially in the last two years, there is enough work and more for all of them. Some of the large advertisers are beginning to spend as much as 50 per cent of their advertisement budgets on TV ads or on sponsoring programmes. Both Richardson Hindustan and Tata Oil Mills spend 40 per cent of their budgets on television, and by '88 Hindustan Lever will spend half its total advertising outlay on the small screen. Says Pralad Kakkar, 35, of Genesis, one of the prima donnas of the ad scene: "A few years ago we were just about six or seven good production houses; and were we competitive! Today there are so many and we are still swamped with work."

The trendsetters of the late 1970's and 1980's, men like Kakkar, Kailash Surindranath, Zafar Hai, Suraj Rai and others, prefer to use 35mm film for their ads and then do post-production work in video film. They are not overly enamoured of

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



Sanjay Seksaria (left) and Shyam Ramanna: a grand entry

NAMAS BHOJANI

Kailash Surindranath makes eggs

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the high-tech possibilities opened up by video, and they are still going strong. But the new breed of trend setters consists of those who think video and do video, such as Ravi Khote of Lintas and Shyam Ramanna. Waiting in the wings for the right moment and machines is yet another species—the computer men.

Kakkar, in fact, has another company called Computer Graffiti for which Ashish Khosla, fresh out of the Indian Institute of Technology (IIT) in Bombay, is working on computer graphics. "Eventually the camera itself might be eliminated and computer-generated images will go directly on to tape," says the ebullient Khosla. The combination of computer animation, computer graphics and video art is luring technology-oriented whizkids straight out of the IIT's and colleges to the glitzy world of advertising. Rahul Mehta, who graduated from Bombay IIT last year, already has a production company that produced Live-Aid for Bhopal this year, and he is now busy producing ads for television.

The rush into the world of video by these young men of science and management is easily explained by the pot of gold at the end of the video rainbow. And the arithmetic is quite simple: while an episode of a TV serial is generally made for about Rs 1.5 lakh, a 30 second ad can cost as much as Rs 3 lakh. The profit margin, of course, depends on the ingenuity of the ad-makers. Electronic wizardry can do away with sets and locations altogether; everything is flexible. And the advertising agencies are more than willing to spend larger sums because the intense competition can render ads effete if they are not good enough, or do not have staying power. The ad must shine and take root in the memory of the consumer, and for this it has to be better than the rest of the pack.

RAMANNA is a late entrant into this world, but it's been a grand entry. He and his school friend Sanjay Seksaria (from the family that runs Seth and Natraj Studios and Spectra Video) started Image Video less than a year ago, and they have already made or edited 197 advertisements. Ramanna puts in at least five ads a week. He has also done the titles and in many cases the editing and special effects for numerous TV programmes, the most recent being Shyam Benegal's Kathasagar, and the most memorable, the slick titles of Karamchand.

But Ramanna's magnum opus so far and his favourite piece of work is Live-Aid for Bhopal, for which he squeezed a mammoth 60 hours of tape into two: "I put in everything I knew." Live-Aid had dancing feet without torsos or heads, glowing bodies contorting, splitting into mirror images, bodies dancing in mid-air, bodies metamorphosing into bewildering mosaics. Many of those dancing feet actually did their numbers on the roof of the Nariman Point building in which Ramanna's studio is situated. Avanti Garelli mopeds and Bajaj scooters have also been taken all the way up the 17 floors, and after their brief sojourn at Image Video, revved full-throated across TV screens or roller-coasted along graphic streets.

Ramanna believes that although India might be years behind the West in video technology and special effects, a little ingenuity and common sense can go a long way. "With a combination of various machines and the computer we can get 80 per cent of the effects which are being done abroad using sophisticated machines." One of the major disadvantages in India is that most of the work being done is on low band tape, which is qualitatively poorer and slow motion and reverse are technologically impossible. Ramanna had to circumvent this for a soft drink TV ad in which bottle caps had to fly off and then float leisurely in slow motion. Ramanna just flung a few caps in a tank of water and filmed them gliding upwards. "Fish tank technology", as he describes his experiments.

Tinkering with his machine, which he literally took apart as a tailor does a blouse, he found a way of achieving multiple feedback: objects, arms, blades, any of which can be made to leave a trail or streaks behind. "It is a bit like the Nataraj effect: look at this man dancing. His arms move and yet the previous movements also remain on the screen." Ramanna has also made his machines do computer-generated wipes, curl pages (for which producers send their films abroad), multiple frames and digital keying. "I have fixed the machines so that I can get an individual portion of a mosaic to move, such as an eyeball."

Reflecting a similar excitement is Ravi Khote, 26 ads and as many years old, who as a director of Lintas has worked quite closely with Ramanna. "People are soon going to visualise what does not exist. The role of the camera will diminish. In a way we could, with the use of computer-generated images, go straight from mind to matter. Unfortunately, there will be no more trips to the Bahamas or to Mauritius; sets and locations can be shelved." In other words, all one has to do is choose an object, select the locations and sets from existing footage and then let the camera do the rest.

The bubbling young ingenues apart, it is the large companies with their mega-budgets which will finally bring high-tech to ad-making. Mudra, Prasad Labs (who dance for a shoe ad: trick technology

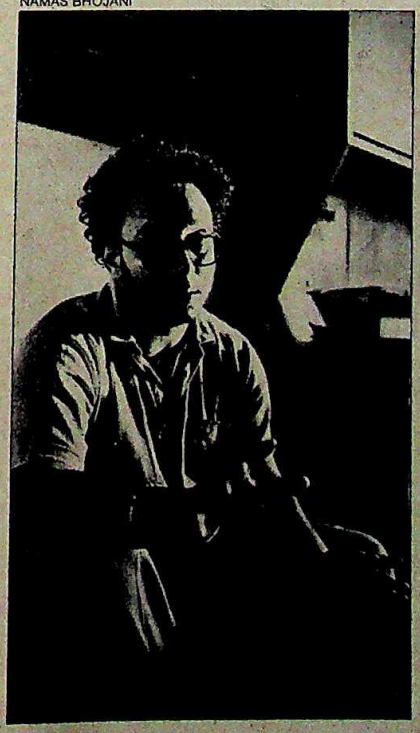
NAMAS BHOJANI



Ravi Khote: helping illusion along

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

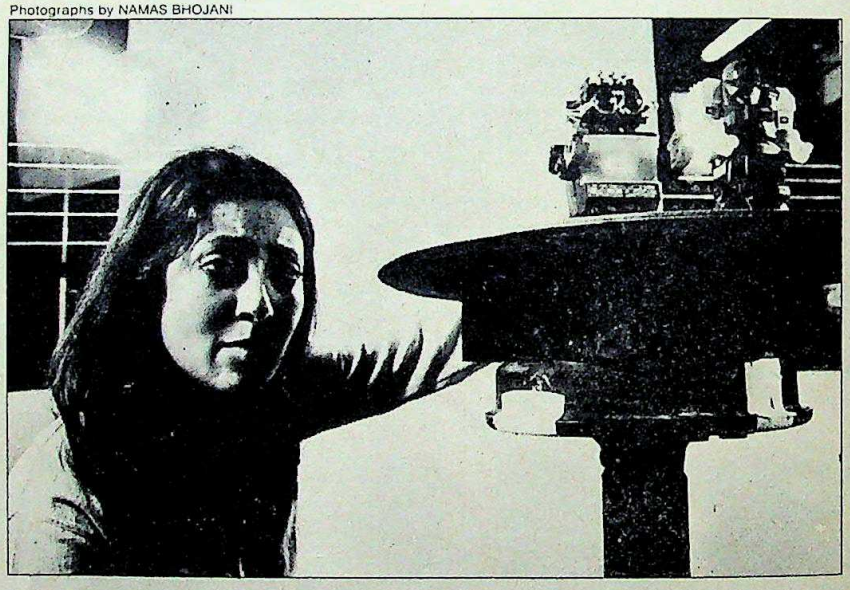
according to Ramesh Prasad want to do for video what they have done for film), BR Ads. and a few other companies are poised to cross the threshold into high-tech. Mudra, in fact, was the first to import high-tech with its Vimal ads, in which glittering models swooped into cubes that spun around or, even while moving, ended up on pages being turned: digital warping of images, done abroad. Mudra and a few other companies might stop this passage to the West for the added on special effects by importing the equipment. Plans also include a Rs 12-crore studio at Santa Cruz. Says Sashi Kumar, general manager of Mudra Video Tech: "With the one-inch C format we will have broadcast grade. We can close the gap with video technology abroad with our paint box, telecine, on-and-off line editing suites, outdoor recording vans with built-in-production consoles, as well as standards converters—in short almost state-of-the-art technology." Video graphics, digital effects, animation are all part of the package.

MEANWHILE, the young-old guard continues in celluloid, classical celluloid. Haimark's Zafar Hai, 42, continues to remain in quest of elegance and style. Mood, romance and feeling, as he says, are not for video: "Special effects are fine but should not be over-used. You cannot ignore getting to a person on emotion." Dimple Kapadia certainly emotes sensuously in Hai's latest ad, Crowning Glory. Special effects, in fact, leave Hai quite cold. "I put in all the elements of film: mood, the feeling level. The ultimate effect of the ad is to move people to buy...this is what is called rehearsal for purchase." The RFP factor, in other words.

For Kailash Surindranath too, with many block-buster ads behind him (including the evergreen Liril), film remains the real thing. "I would say that all the video work at present is amateurish stuff. It is not high-tech enough. It cannot be unless we have high band." But special effects are an important part of his work, including such tricks as making eggs dance. He shoots on 35mm, and does post-production on video. "I prefer the texture of film." With four or five ads a month, which is double the number he was doing two years ago, Surindranath seldom strays from his cameras. "We can do the special effects on film as well. I did them much earlier. Six years ago in the Thril ad I had a kind of star wars raging."

Pralad Kakkar in his studio: tactile experiences

Photographs by NAMAS BHOJANI



Ayesha Sayani directing a toys ad: gimmicks are afterthoughts

Like Surindranath and Hai, Pralad Kakkar too is heavily influenced by cinema. Kakkar is in fact ambidextrous, for he is at home with video as well. But he says: "Video leaves me cold; it is sterile. These pyrotechnics are super self-indulgent stuff." He believes in "tactile experiences" and says: "When I make a golden brown omlette I want to get the feel of it; it is the same with making ads. I can't touch video; it is a bunch of electronic signals. I would get a shock."

Siraj Ayesha Sayani is yet another ad-maker who is not overly fond of video gimmicks, as she calls them. "These are mostly an afterthought, slapped on at the end. Somebody says let's have this flipping; and so every other film flips." But she does use video often, especially to test her stars.

And so the video games continue at a furious pace, with both the celluloid aficionados and those with electronic palettes getting more work than they can handle. The effervescence might soon die down, when content catches up with form, according to Alyque Padamsee of Lintas. "I would say that the next phase of TV ads is the fusion of form and content. At the moment, videotronics is a new toy to play with, but fatigue might set in....At present of course we are still zapped by the high-tech aura of digital effects." Paper moons are now good enough, but when the magic of video wears off, will the consumer begin to ask for the real moon again?

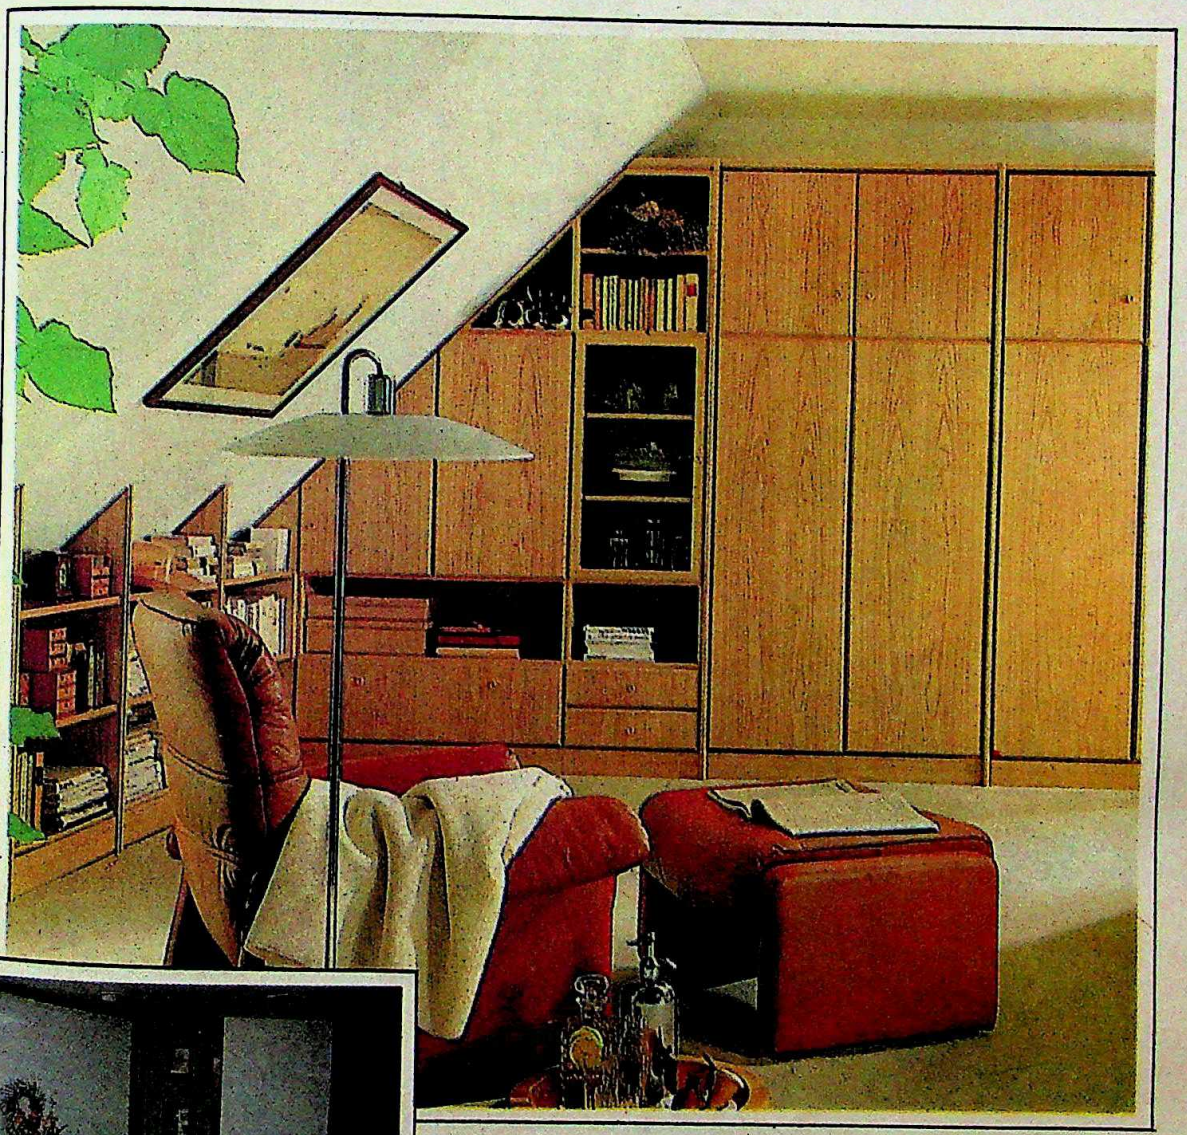
—MADHU JAIN in Bombay

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

merino . . .

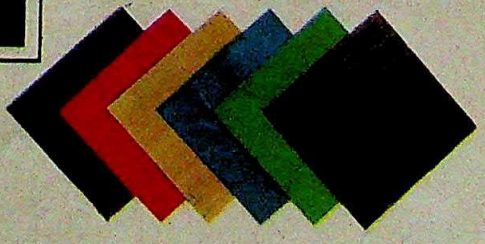
Plywood, Laminates, Flush Doors & Block Boards



Merino..... presents a design concept so simple and compelling that it refuses to age.

It is a style of dedicated craftsmanship. The exquisite beauty of nature captured for homes, offices, kitchen & lobbies.....Made with the latest technology, Merino Plywood & Laminates ensure perfect finish, beauty & durability.

Choose Merino and ensure distinctive decor.



Mfd. by :: Century Laminating Co. (P) Ltd., Hapur-245101 (U.P.)

Merinoply & Chemicals Ltd.,
Makum Jn-786170 (Assam).

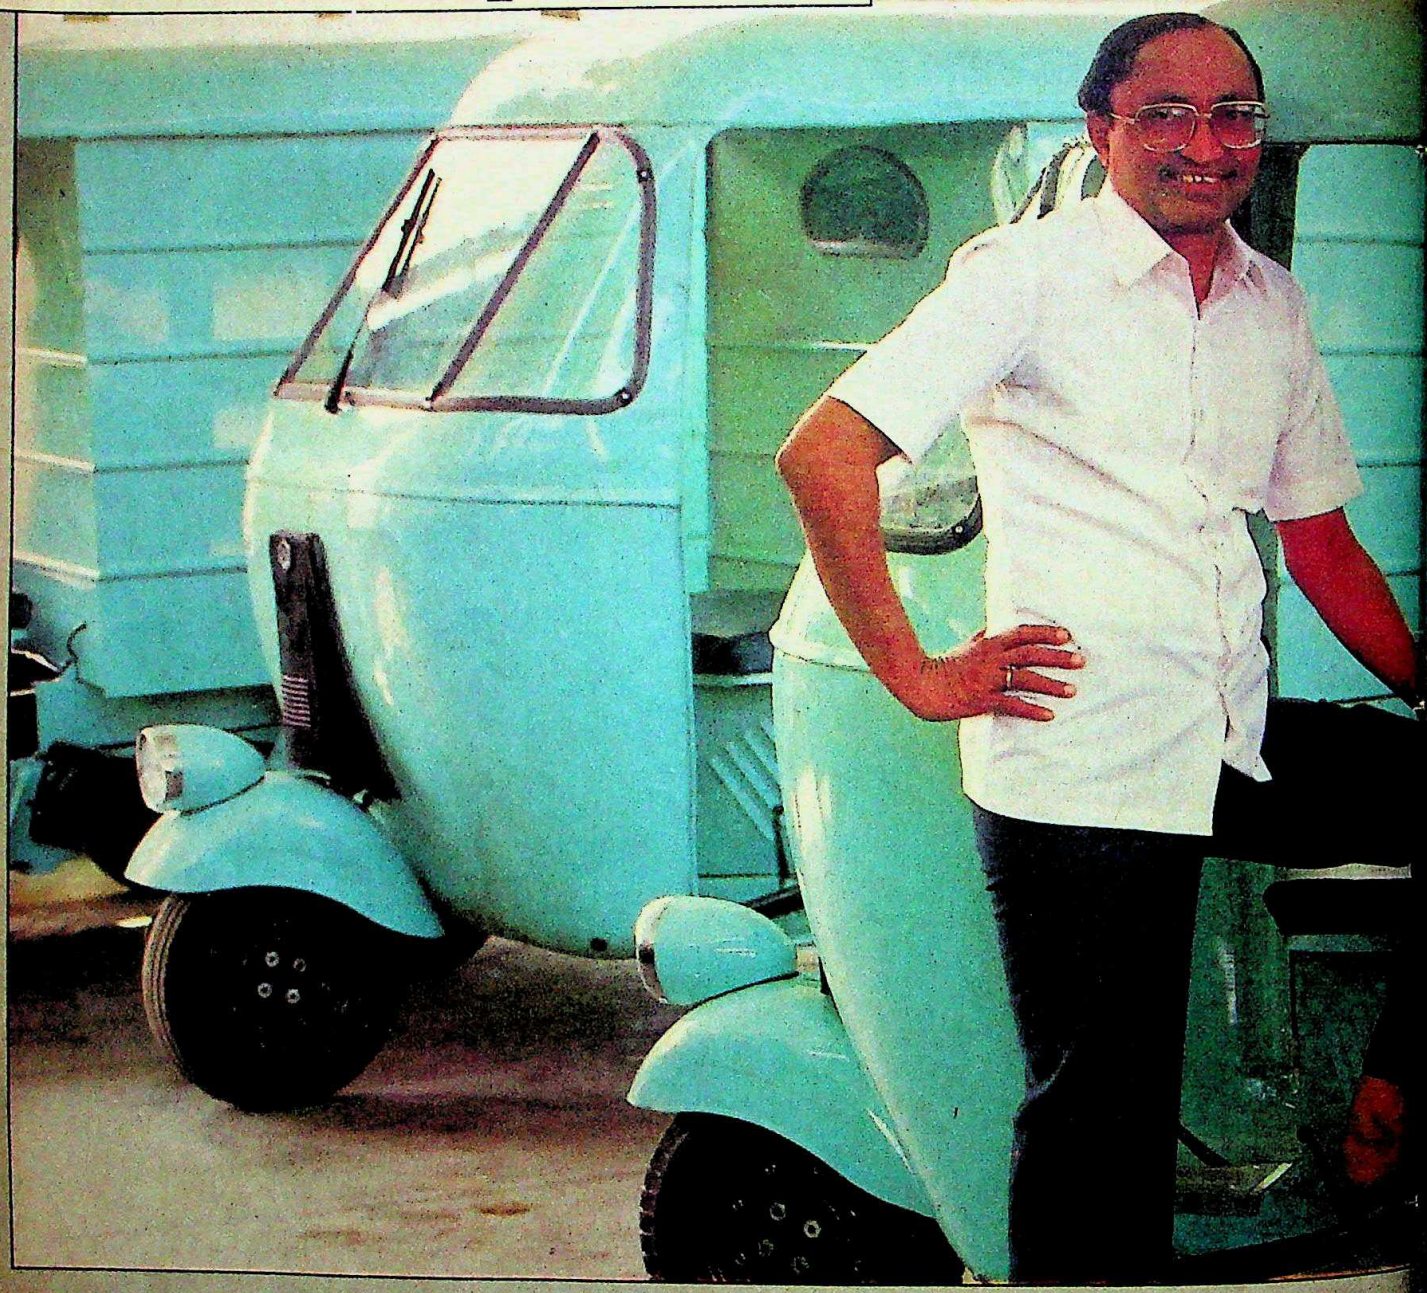
merino®

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

ADMAN / MP&L

Our non-stop service.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



SKF and Bajaj have a great deal in common. Both are the foremost names in their respective industries – SKF in the manufacture of bearings, Bajaj in scooters, mini-motorcycles and three-wheelers. And both pride themselves on the exceptional reliability of their products.

Bajaj's annual ball-bearing requirement is over 3 million units. SKF supplies over half, so our Segment Manager Ashok Garg and his customer, R.A. Jain, always have a lot to discuss.

'Indian roads are often hot and dusty' says R.A. 'They destroy the performance of all but the most durable bearings. We come to SKF because their products are built to last.' 'But every bit as important is they're always there when you need them. Help with installation, new applications, fast back-up – SKF service is literally non-stop.'

With so much to talk about, it's hardly surprising the two men have become firm friends.

'Which is pretty fortunate', jokes Ashok Garg 'given the amount of time we spend together.'

Right down to the details

SKF in India are backed by the vast resources of the SKF Group, the world's leading manufacturer of rolling bearings.

But it's the efforts of our local people that have

Associated Bearing Company Ltd., Hoechst House, Nariman Point, Bombay 400 021

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SKF HELPS BAJAJ STAY STREETS AHEAD.

de us India's largest bearing manufacturer; making
y contribution to the economy for well over 60 years.
Producing an annual output of some 16 million ball
d taper bearings, as well as supplying steel, housings d technical equipment – all to the standards that have n us such worldwide acclaim.
And offering a service to match – from the moment
contact us through sales, technical support, manufac-
, distribution and aftercare.
For Ashok Garg and everyone at SKF, it's more
a job to serve you well.
It's a real question of pride. That's why you can
us. Right down to the details.

How do SKF achieve such high standards of quality and service?
I'd like to find out more.
☐ Please arrange for an SKF representative to visit me.
☐ Please arrange for me to receive your brochure.

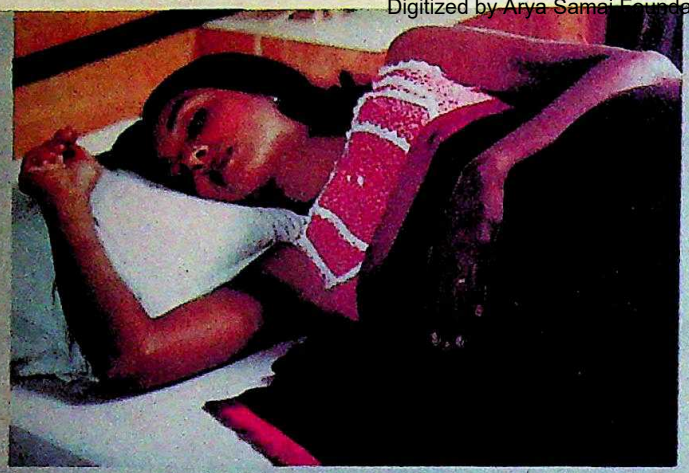
Name
Company
Job Title
Address
Telephone
Postcode

: 23 22 44. Telegram: PENBALL. Telex: 011-2657.

SKF

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



BEYOND COMPARE

Mattresses that are too soft can cause backaches. Those that are too hard, result in discomfort.

Young or old, only KURLON gives you complete relaxation. Comfort as you like it, support where you need it, elegance to match your lifestyle.

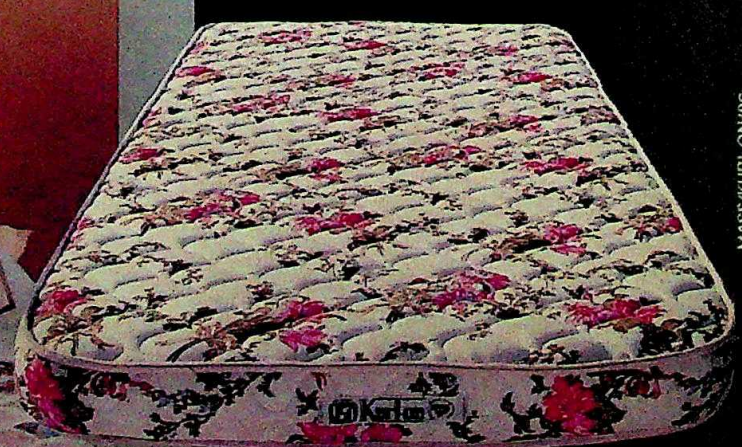
Kurl-on®

India's No. 1 Mattress
For comfort. Support. Elegance.

Karnataka Consumer Products Ltd.,
Industry House, 45 Fair Field Road,
Bangalore-560 001. Phone: 76746.

Company's Showrooms and Offices

- Bangalore: 220314 & 224676;
- Cochin: 366744; • Madras: 810710;
- Hyderabad: 234560; • Bombay: 354385;
- New Delhi: 772019; • Calcutta: 232089.



MASS/KURL-ON/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kang

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MODVAT

Compounding Confusion

AN AUTOMOBILE components company in Himachal Pradesh may have to stock its raw materials at its factory instead of at its godown down the road, and find extra space in the factory premises. The reason: MODVAT.

An alarm clock manufacturer in the capital has stopped farming out orders for components to suppliers in West Bengal and Gujarat. The reason: MODVAT again.

Some 10 weeks after the Government kicked off its innovative scheme to reform the tax structure, reduce manufacturers' costs and curb corruption by bringing more transactions into the books, MODVAT—or the modified value added tax, meant to be a substitute for excise duties—remains a corporate bugaboo. Costs and prices have soared and confusion reigns in corporate boardrooms as companies struggle to come to terms with the new law. Perhaps the only people happy with the new tax regime are the lawyers, one of whom chortled in the capital: "We are assured of business for the next few years."

The Government launched the new regime in March to provide relief to companies whose inputs were taxed and then taxed again when the final product rolled out of factories. MODVAT would provide set-offs for the taxes on inputs, avoiding tax on tax. This also meant that less money would be required to finance inventories, thus saving on working capital costs. And so, in the final analysis, the end-product prices would drop.

But businessmen, who had been clamouring for just this kind of a package for close to a decade, and had found support for their case in the L.K. Jha committee report on indirect taxes in the mid-'70s, are now a suddenly disillusioned and befuddled lot. And the key question they wrestle with is whether the headaches are no more than teething problems, or whether there is a more basic problem at the root.

"As a concept, MODVAT is good. But its impact has been perverse because of the way it has been implemented. Everyone's gone MADVAT," complained a senior automobile company executive. Added K.N. Shenoy, president of the Association of Indian Engineering Industry (AIEI): "MODVAT has created procedural problems. The paperwork has increased but the government's attitude is encouraging. It has consulted industry and made a number of changes, which is a very positive sign." Hindustan Brown Boveri, the electrical equipment company that Shenoy heads, has deployed 40 per cent more staff to tackle the additional work-load. Chairman of the Delhi-based Trading Engineers International O.P. Raheja said his generator set and water pumping plant company would now send accountants to be educated in the intricacies of the new tax regime. DCM Executive Director D.C. Mittal pointed out that the chemicals and textiles firm has to issue separate excise documents to customers at its depots across the country for them to claim tax credits.

HARI OM GULATI

"MODVAT has created procedural problems. But the government's attitude is encouraging."

K.N. SHENOY
president, Association of Indian Engineering Industry

RANJAN BASU

"Many companies haven't yet passed on the benefits of MODVAT to customers."

ARJUN BATRA
vice-president, Gem India Limited

The chaos has been compounded by changes in the tariff structure that were introduced along with MODVAT. And while businessmen continue to be puzzled by the MODVAT rules, tax functionaries have been interpreting the regulations in contradictory fashion. Reports speak of an excise official in Lucknow passing a verdict on small units that was diametrically opposed to that handed down by a senior official at the Centre. And Subodh Bhargava, chief executive of the tractor company Eicher Goodearth, pointed out that Eicher was unsure of how much it would benefit from MODVAT because the Excise Department had not stipulated which weight—the gross weight of raw materials or of the final product—would be taken into account while assessing the MODVAT claims of ancillary suppliers. There is also some evidence that MODVAT's goals are not being fully met. Prices in many cases have not dropped, and more than one manufacturer complains that small-scale suppliers prefer evading taxes even though MODVAT would benefit them, simply because they want to avoid the additional paperwork.

The reason for the price rigidity is clear enough. To neutralise

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

any overall revenue loss, the Government jacked up the excise duty rates on products like scooters, cars and generator sets. The higher tax brought on additional costs, often offsetting the gains from MODVAT. This also set off a downstream tax reaction. A Maruti Udyog spokesman said that while vehicle manufacturers used to get a drawback on the excise earlier, components have now been brought into the excise net. So the company has now to pay sales tax on the excise too, and therefore faces a higher tax burden. Maruti will have to shell out Rs 35 lakh a year more on tyres alone.

That of course is only half the story. Some observers believe that companies, quick to seize the opportunity to make fatter profits, have not passed on MODVAT gains down the line. Argues Arjun Batra, vice-president of the refrigerator and typewriter marketing firm Gem India Ltd: "Many companies haven't yet passed on the benefits of MODVAT to customers." Officialdom may well have bungled on this count. In presenting the case for MODVAT, the Government assumed that manufacturers aim at profit as a fixed percentage of sales. But when costs falls, companies tend to retain the windfall. And this is what has happened in many instances, often for perfectly valid reasons. Y.K. Kapoor, who is a partner in Northland Industries, the food processing company, parades figures suggesting that the higher excise on cans is more than offset by the MODVAT gains. Yet can-makers have so far retained these benefits, possibly because prices of imported inputs have soared in line with the surge in the yen.

Some of the turbulence in business circles is clearly because of unfamiliarity with a new tax system, but the scheme's several lacunae have also played no small role. Examples:

► When putting in MODVAT claims, manufacturers and traders have to produce bills to show that duty has been paid. This is not always feasible for small purchases from markets where regular accounting systems do not rule. Then, documentary proof ("gate passes") that the duty has been paid is issued for goods cleared at factory gates. But subsidiary documents can be handed out only a couple of times under the excise rules, creating daunting problems for middlemen. Surendra N. Parikh, president of the Bombay Metal Exchange, rightly says that "only 10 or 15 of the big non-ferrous metal wholesale traders will benefit from MODVAT since the actual user will want to buy from them".

► Inputs have to be ferried to factories where excise registers are maintained, to enable manufacturers to claim credits for the taxes paid on the inputs. This can lead to absurd situations. Purolator India, the automobile component firm, has a godown less than a kilometre from its plant at Parwanoo in Himachal Pradesh. Raw materials used to be stocked at the godown but may now have to be shipped to the factory to meet MODVAT rules, and the space will have to be found for them. The company can appeal to the excise authorities for special permission to maintain a separate register at the godown, but a Purolator executive said that the rules do not clearly state whether this is permissible.

► For companies to take advantage of MODVAT, excise has to be levied on both components and the finished product. But alarm clocks are exempt from duty, while their components are charged a 15 per cent tax if a clock manufacturer buys them. In other words, time piece companies are not refunded the tax they pay on parts bought from suppliers. The upshot: several of them have accelerated the process of manufacturing components in-house. Jaya Times Industries, for one, used to buy 10 per cent of its parts from small units in West Bengal and Gujarat, but stopped placing orders on them once MODVAT came into force. Said the company's Managing Director K.C. Jain: "We cannot buy components from outside sources because we are subject to taxes that are not refundable."

This gloomy picture has a bright side too. The Government has moved swiftly to rectify several anomalies and has lent a receptive ear to businessmen. Jyotirmay Datta, chairman of the Central Board of Excise and Customs (CBEC), said that the Government is trying to cut the paperwork, that the chambers of commerce have been asked for suggestions on helping traders so that vouchers will be acceptable in place of conventional excise documents, that many of the tax exemptions which have broken the MODVAT cycle (the alarm clock case is a classic example) will be withdrawn. Finally, the CBEC will issue a printed booklet clarifying the rules, and businessmen can cite this to dissenting taxmen.

Clearly, some of this could have been done earlier. Even MODVAT's staunch supporters chide the Government for not having explained the procedures and held workshops before launching MODVAT. Datta however retorted that this would have constituted a breach of parliamentary privilege. He also argued that businessmen and tax officials are in a tizzy because MODVAT has squeezed illegal incomes by spurring more on-the-book transactions, and that the uproar over MODVAT is overblown. Said Datta: "Our excise collection in March is the highest in the year. If there's such a panic and a widespread (business) strike, where's the money coming from?"

He may have a point, but the initial days after MODVAT's introduction did see several companies closing shop. Hindustan Brown Boveri, for example, shut its shopfloors for a week. Nevertheless, last fortnight it looked as if businessmen were resigned to coming to terms with MODVAT. As Shenoy put it: "Industry has been pleading for an end to cascading taxes. MODVAT has to succeed." It will—if the Government finally irons out the wrinkles in its new tax programme. But at the moment, it has proved a rocky road to tax reform.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI
with bureau reports

BHAWAN SINGH

"Our excise collection in March is the highest in the year. If there's a panic and a widespread strike, where's the money coming from?"

JYOTIRMAY DUTTA
chairman, Central Board of Excise and Customs

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Whatever the product, Tinplate has got it covered!

Vanaspati, cooking oils, fish, meat, mushrooms, fruit, milk products and cereals are all packed in tinplated containers which conform to vital standards of safety.

Tinplated food containers protect their contents from contamination and toxicity.

Their opacity is proof against chemical reactions through exposure to heat.

Tinplated containers have a long shelf-life, and are easy to display and stack in any storeroom or kitchen. They are also impervious to rodents and pests.

In fact, Tinplate is still the safest, most versatile packaging material known.

The container is as important as the contents.

Issued in the public interest by:

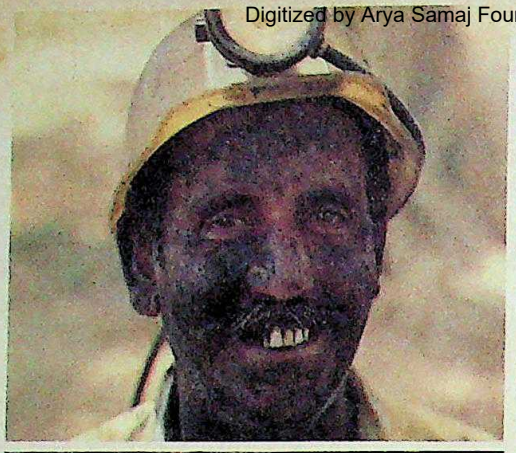
TINPLATE

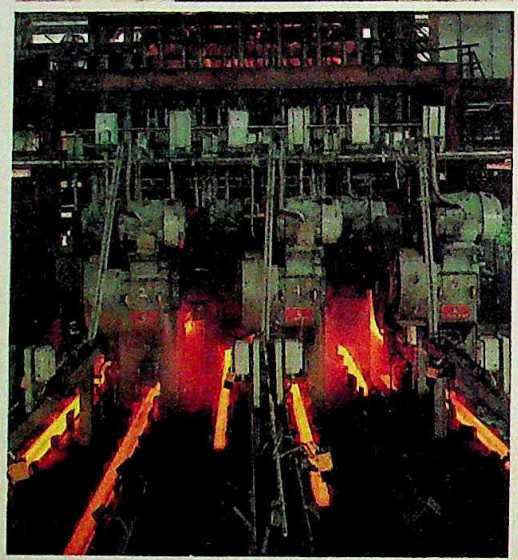
The Tinplate Company of India Limited
Registered Office:
4 Bankshall Street Calcutta-700 001

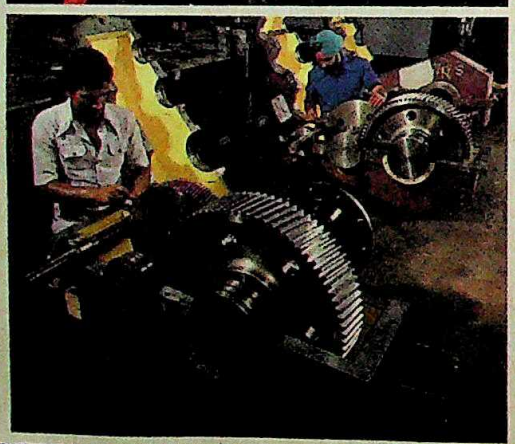
ACIL/TCIL/P-1/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri







Link up with a leader

A company that speaks the same language as overseas business associates—the language of quality, of reliability, of discipline. An integrated steel plant that speaks the language of quality control from the raw material to the finished stage.

An innovative company which lays emphasis on research and development, where a spirit of self-sufficiency led to the establishment of the Growth Shop—a unique facility with the most up-to-date technology to produce machinery comparable to any in the world.

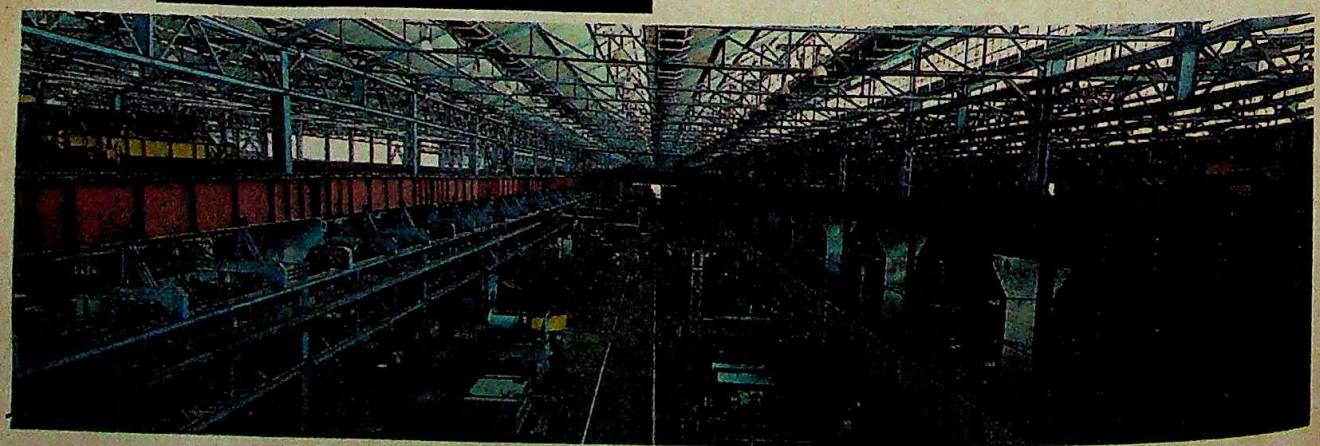
A company backed by a talented pool of engineers and skilled technicians, with the expertise to handle any project—feasibility planning to mineral exploration, designing steel plant equipment to developing mines.

A company where closer association of employees with management has created a sense of belonging and pride—resulting in over 50 years of industrial harmony. A company that has given the lead in action and in ideas.

TATA STEEL

The first and still the foremost

TIS 6217



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BHEL

Thinking Big

WHY WOULD a power equipment giant stray into locomotives, leasing, programmable washing machines, solar-powered pressure cookers and domestic heaters? The answer: when the voltage is low on power equipment orders, wisdom demands that corporate eggs be put in many baskets. Last month, public sector heavyweight Bharat Heavy Electricals Ltd (BHEL) announced that it would invest Rs 300 crore in many new baskets. The firm also declared that it would restructure its management and its business operations, offer financial packages to customers, and look for a hefty slice of the action abroad.

The plans to enter the electric dumper, washing machine and other consumer durable arenas are yet to be formally unveiled, but the profit-making company is clearly readying to become a widely diversified mega-corporation. It is shooting for annual sales of Rs 3,000 crore in three years, almost 80 per cent more than last year's figure of Rs 1,700 crore. Said recently appointed Chairman B.S. Samat: "I would like BHEL to be a company of international standing."

High on the company's agenda is an ambitious plan to hawk 20 per cent of its production in foreign markets three years from now. At home, it will dip into its Rs 285 crore cash kitty to bankroll credit packages for clients, hoping to match its foreign competitors in the power arena who offer soft loans. Also, BHEL plans to lease out equipment such as oil rigs, roll out 200 electric locomotives from its Jhansi plant over the next three years (production will begin this year), and is hungrily eyeing other opportunities in the transport field: electric dumpers for coal mines, for instance.

Before venturing into the new territory, however, BHEL has partly revamped its managerial structure. Over 20 senior managers have been told that each will be held accountable for one product, right from the manufacturing to the marketing stage. Explained M.K. Sridhar, BHEL's director (technical): "We have five major units and this is meant to decentralise them and further break up operations productwise."

The leap into new products clearly makes business sense. The company has spare production capacities at plants like the ones at Bhopal and Jhansi. Then, the power sector buys 64 per cent of BHEL's output and senior managers would like to see this dependency pared to 50 per cent by 1988-89. Says Samat: "The diversification is partly due to our lean order books and partly because we don't want to be overdependent on power."

Samat's strategy is understandable. The company's orders are only enough to keep it busy for another two years. And it needs orders worth another Rs 5,000 crore in the remaining three years of the plan, if production capacities are to hum along at the current 75 per cent rate of efficiency. "If the orders do not materialise, profits will be squeezed," says one executive. Officials reckon that by peddling thermal power equipment and industrial wares, the firm will be able to rake in around Rs 4,000 crore. The new businesses are meant to take care of the shortfall of Rs 1,000 crore.

Some company watchers are critical of this explanation for diversifying, charging that high costs and overheads have undercut BHEL's ability to compete with foreign power equipment suppliers. Says a senior executive of a power company who once worked for BHEL: "Last year, BHEL's Trichy unit farmed out fabrication work worth over Rs 80 crore to ancillary units in the region. Naturally, sub-contractors' profits add to BHEL's costs." BHEL officials contest the charge, but critics are rightly sceptical about its ability to meet its export target for the future. Power equipment markets abroad are sluggish and BHEL's export record is nothing to write home about. It exported products worth Rs 35 crore last year, and to expect this to balloon to Rs 350 crore or more in three years is rather optimistic. Samat and Sridhar counter that they will try for orders in several countries, including China, and can pull off the trick if a few big contracts are won. BHEL will also strive to get its 20-odd foreign collaborators to buy from it products they do not manufacture. Nevertheless, even senior executives admit that meeting the target will be a stupendous task.

The programme to offer loans to customers could also run into trouble. The state electricity boards owe BHEL about Rs 400 crore, many of them are deeply in the red, and loans to them could become bad debts. BHEL's solution is to offer loans selectively. Still, it remains to be seen whether its Rs 285 crore kitty will be enough to win orders away from foreign rivals who offer soft loans.

Company officials concede that the outlook on the power front is daunting, and stress the urgency of branching out. Senior executives like Sridhar are bullish on the washing machines venture. At around Rs 4,000 a machine, BHEL is aiming at the low end of the market and hopes to snare a 10 per cent share, which would amount to a neat Rs 90 crore.

So, in the final analysis, washing machines and locomotives may be the wave of the future for BHEL if it wants to stay in the big league. Even so, it will remain dependent on the power sector for half its business. As one analyst put it last fortnight, BHEL will have to keep its fingers crossed and hope its radical new business strategy pays dividends.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI

"The diversification is due to our lean order books and also partly because we don't want to be overdependent on power."

B.S. SAMAT
chairman, BHEL

"We have five major units and this revamping is meant to decentralise them and further break up operations productwise."

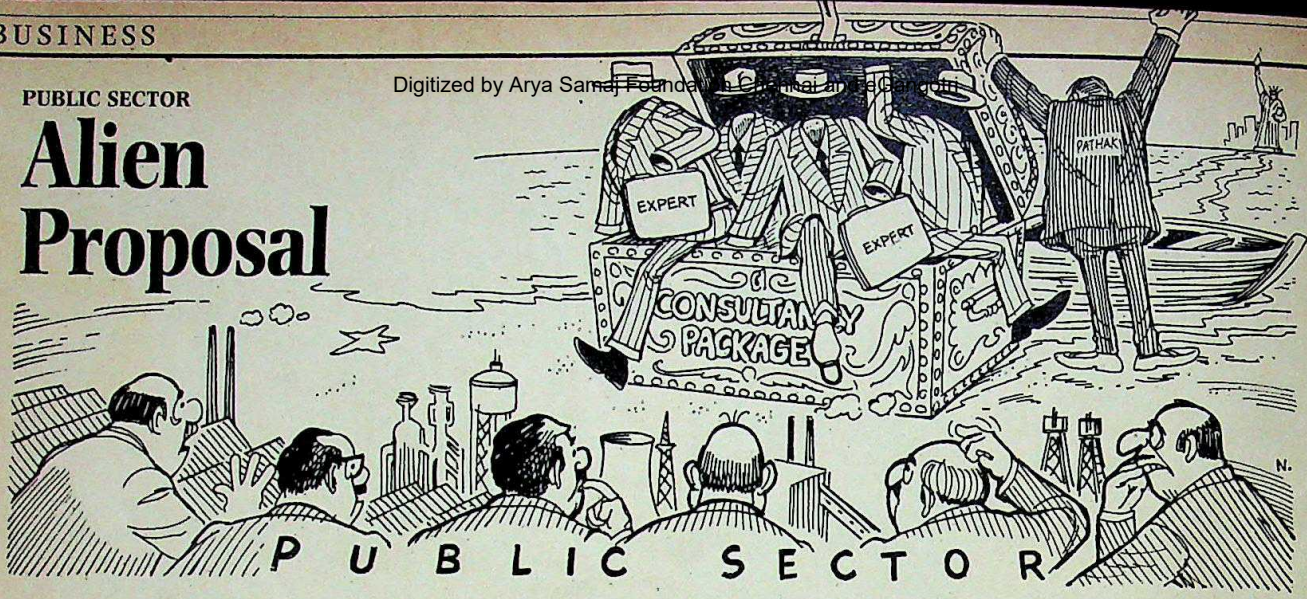
M.K. SRIDHAR
director (technical), BHEL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUBLIC SECTOR

Alien Proposal



BUYING a pig in a poke is normally an expensive proposition. But the Government is at the moment tying up for not just one prime porker but a whole litter. The litter on offer is courtesy M.S.Pathak, former chairman of Engineers India and once a member of the Planning Commission. The issue in dispute is Pathak's efforts to wish upon the public sector the consultancy services of a yet unknown group of individuals in the US, and the belated attempts by the heads of public sector companies to scupper the very expensive deal.

Pathak, son of the former vice-president of India, left the country rather abruptly in the late '70s for medical treatment in the US, where he took up a middle-management job with Bechtel Corporation. Pathak resurfaced early last year with his proposal: many a public sector company was in urgent need of consultancy services. A group of patriotic non-resident Indians in the US, with no intentions of returning to this country, could provide just this.

In its basic form, the scheme involved the formation of a company in the US which would get together with selected public sector companies such as the Steel Authority of India, Bharat Heavy Electricals, the Oil and Natural Gas Commission and Coal India to set up a joint sector venture in which the non-residents would have a 51 per cent equity stake and management control.

The proposal found favour at the highest levels. The committee of secretaries nodded approval and set up an expert group under D.V. Kapoor, secretary, Department of Chemicals and Petro-Chemicals, to vet it. Early this year the Cabinet gave the green signal and in March, public sector enterprises were asked to take early action to identify projects suitable for consultancy.

As a paper plan it may not have raised many hackles: in fact, one of the surprising features is how it managed to clear establishment hurdles with nary a check. But now that the time for action has come, public sector bosses are busy consulting one another on how exactly to cope with the Pathak package. Their doubts are justified: nobody is quite sure of what exactly is on offer. None of the other non-residents, apart from Pathak, has been identified. But, explains Kapoor: "One can hardly expect them to risk their jobs and declare themselves until projects are actually tied up".

Kapoor says that some sort of foreign consultancy help is urgently needed (on which almost everyone agrees) and that Pathak is the best conduit (on which very few others do). "How can a group of stray individuals who are yet to reveal themselves set up a consultancy?" asks a public sector chief of long standing. "This will only shore up the impression that a consultant is just a lucky individual who has found a cushy niche. If the plan goes through, we will be killing consultancy in the country."

Moreover, once the new venture comes into being it is inevitable that all public sector projects will be channelled through it. And the amounts involved are revealing. The initial suggestion was that the non-residents be paid a yearly retainer of $3 million. This was later abandoned. Now, as the Government notification states, the advance fees and other payments will be settled on a case-by-case basis in consultation with Pathak. He himself is waiting for six or seven big projects, running into thousands of crores, to be identified before roping in his associates.

Pathak claims that his plan has two major advantages. First, the manhour rate of consultancy will be lower than its foreign equivalent. Secondly, because of constant interaction, much of the expertise will rub off on resident Indians. Contacted telephonically in the US, he was unwilling to comment on controversial aspects of the project. As proof of his own keenness, he cited the fact that he had already set up his US company: Management and Technologies International. Details were not forthcoming. The refrain was: "It is too premature."

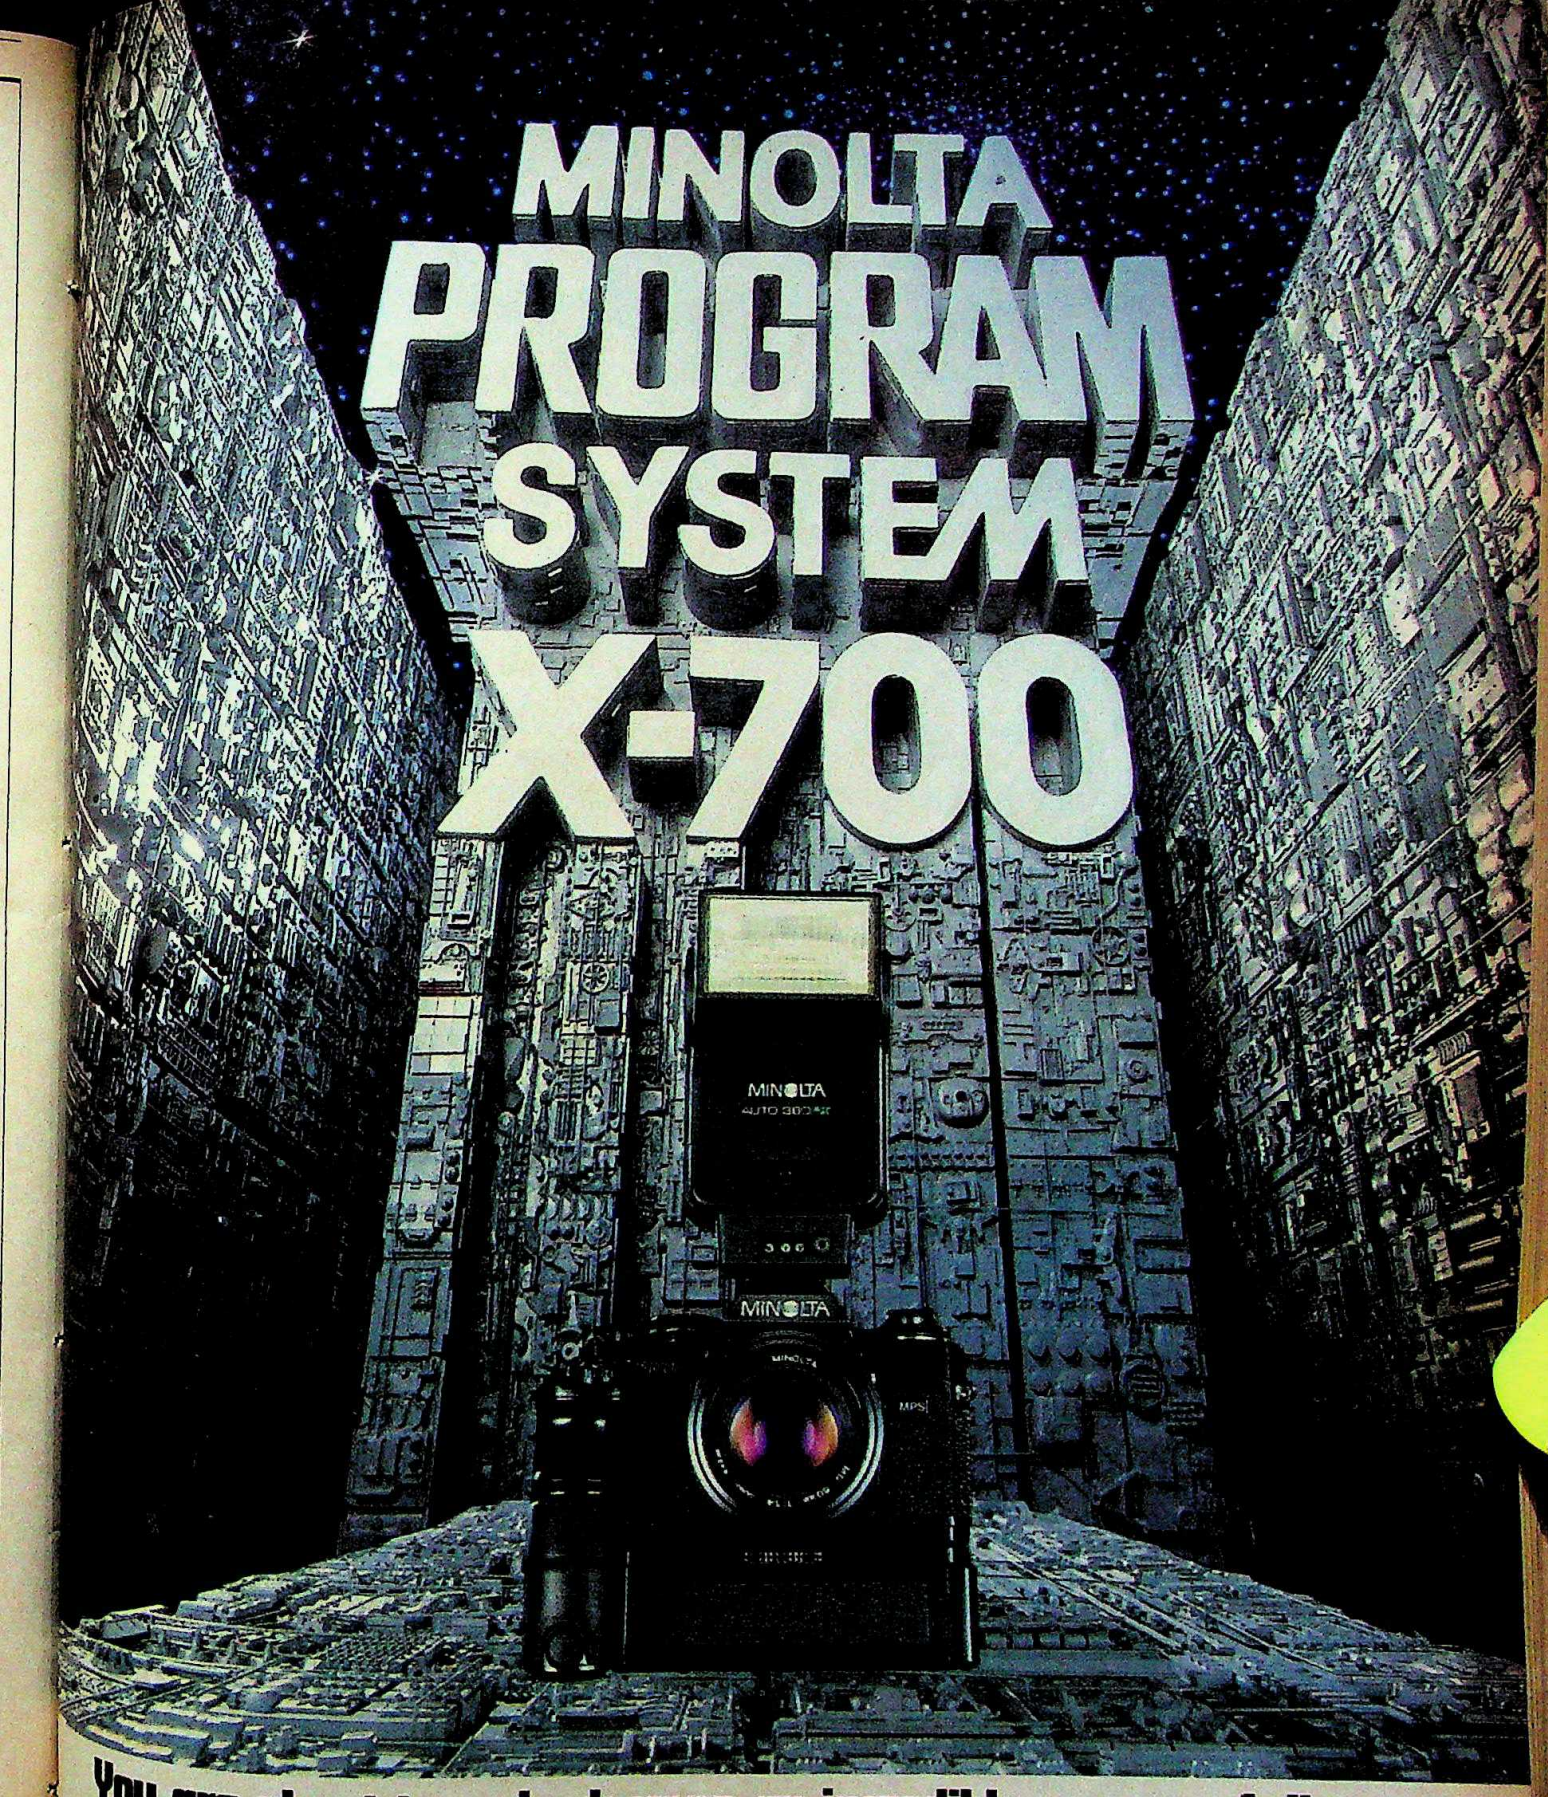
But for the public sector, it may be a wee bit too late. Detractors were unwilling to speak in the early stages because of the project's political backing. Even now, opposition is being orchestrated mainly through leaks to the press.

Pathak's claims, say his ever-increasing critics, are still unsubstantiated. True, the manhour rates may be lower, but that is only because the joint sector organisation will employ Indians who do not have to be paid the same fat salaries as the non-residents. In fact, the shareholding pattern has been so adjusted to permit the payment of higher emoluments than allowable under public sector norms. "This business of transfer of consultancy expertise makes no sense either. For somebody to teach you anything, he must first have a modicum of knowledge. The Pathak brigade is very much an unknown quantity," says a top consultant who has worked in the public sector. "Couldn't they have been tried out first?"

That is a moot question. At the moment, however, the Government is going ahead with the business and going the whole hog too. When you do decide to buy a pig in a poke, that may well be the only way to do it.

—PARTHASARATHI SWAMI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar



You are about to embark upon an incredible voyage of discovery.

The Minolta X-700 and its Minolta Program System represent a quantum leap into the new dimension of photography. For this incredibly advanced 35mm SLR and its sophisticated, interrelated Minolta Program System accessories and capabilities will usher you into a completely new realm of photographic simplicity, consistency and excellence.

MINOLTA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Information Only.

Minolta Camera Co., Ltd. 30, 2-Chome, Azu...

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BRITISH INDIA STEELS LTD.

Pioneering Powder Metallurgy for High Speed Steel in India with the perfection of POWDREX LTD, UK, the global pioneers

BRITISH INDIA STEELS LTD.
Hasubhai Chambers, Sheth Manuildas Road
Ahmedabad 380006

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

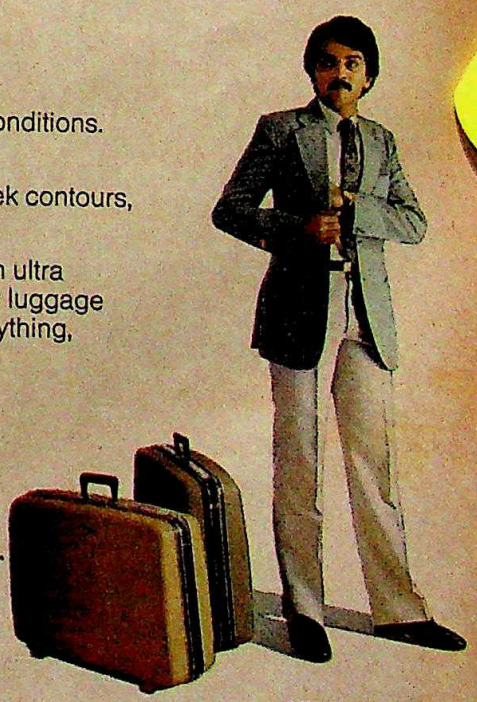
Let's face it.
Safari is not a showpiece.
It's the luggage that roughs it out. Anywhere.

No matter how you travel, where and how often, Safari endures the worst conditions. That's the honest truth.

That's why we put so much into this luggage. The streamlined look, the sleek contours, the smooth finish are routine for our fanatical craftsmen.

Now consider the raw stamina of Safari. Made of the toughest material in an ultra modern plant, Safari endures shocks, rough handling, the pressure of other luggage on top of it, jerky take offs and turbulent landings. It never gets rattled by anything, anywhere.

Safari. It survives.



safari

The luggage that knows its business.

ULKA-SL-800-86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The real facts behind the "zero-cholesterol" story...

We put SAFFOLA, corn oil and refined groundnut oil into a freezer for 4 hours. And this is what we found:

Corn oil froze.

Groundnut oil froze solid.

But SAFFOLA remained liquid. Even after 24 hours!

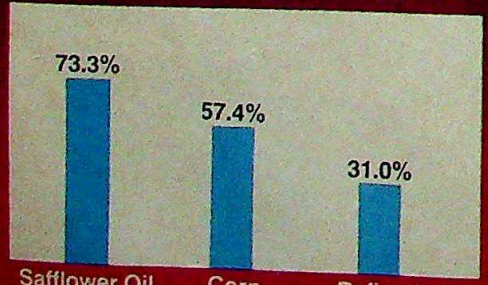
Why not try this test yourself?

This clearly proves that of the three cooking mediums, SAFFOLA is highest in polyunsaturated fat – a substance that actually helps to lower cholesterol.

Yes, all vegetable oils are "zero-cholesterol". But only SAFFOLA, with the highest content of polyunsaturated fat actually brings down the cholesterol level in the blood. And that's what really counts!

Major research studies confirm that heart disease is directly linked to the level of cholesterol in the blood. "Lowering cholesterol levels markedly reduces the incidence of fatal heart attacks". So when you cook, fry or bake with SAFFOLA, you're doing what's best for the whole family.

The cholesterol lowering factor (polyunsaturated fat) content in various oils.



Saffola

Good for your heart. Good for your health.

FSA/BOIL/7/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

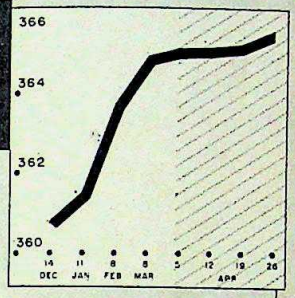
INFLATION HAS slowed down and industrial production seems to have picked up. While there is a marginal tightening of money supply, bank credit has increased. The stock exchange showed a dip in share prices, power generation is better than before and gold prices are again snaking up.

All data are seasonally adjusted. Current trends are computed on the basis of the last six months data to which a regression is fitted.

Wholesale Price Index

1970-71 = 100

Current Trend
4.8% p.a.

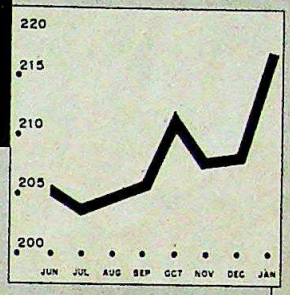


Wholesale prices showed remarkable stability in April and dampened the inflationary trend Inflation under 5% is nothing to worry about.

Industrial Production Index

1970 = 100

Current Trend
8.0% p.a.

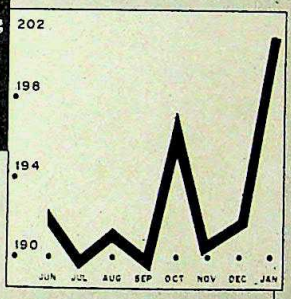


Industrial production shot up by 4.5% between November and January. This lifted the long-term trend to a respectable 7.98% per year.

Manufacturing Output Index

1970-100

Current Trend
5.5% p.a.

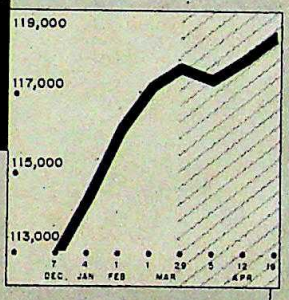


The growth of manufactures remains sluggish though the index rose by 5.2%. The long-term trend is uncomfortably modest.

Money Supply

Rs Crore

Current Trend
15.0% p.a.

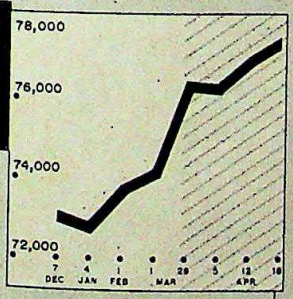


Growth in money supply has slowed down. Increased commercial bank credit has neutralised lower government borrowings.

Commercial Bank Credit

Rs Crore

Current Trend
13.6% p.a.

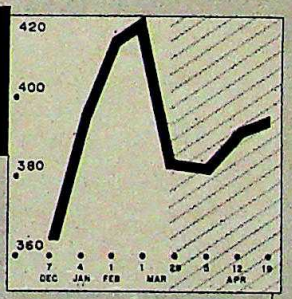


Between February and April, commercial bank credit has expanded by 5%. The long-term growth rate has therefore accelerated.

Share Price Index

1970-71 = 100

Current Trend
31.4% p.a.

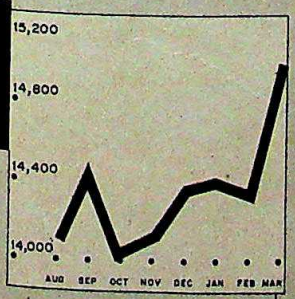


Share prices recovered somewhat in April, after the slump in March, only to be followed by another slump.

Power Generation

Million KWH

Current Trend
6.8% p.a.

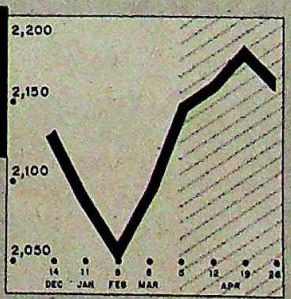


A jump of 4.26% between December and March has led to healthier growth in power generation but still below official targets

Closing Gold Price

Rs per 10 gm.

Current Trend
-.89% p.a.



A 6% jump in gold prices between February and mid-April further checked the declining trend. The signs of an upswing are visible.

INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION

Growth of Items in March, 1986

	% Growth
Coffee Curing Works	80.05
Dairy Products	36.5
Internal Combustion Engines	33.92
Ferro-Alloys	32.61
Railway Locomotives	31.25
Dye-Stuffs	28.86
Salt	26.33
Electrical Machinery	25.03
Sugar Industry	24.56
Tea	20.94
Pens and Pencils	18.23
Railway Rolling Stock	18.14
Electrical Fans	15.96
Cement Machinery	15.02
Explosives	9.86
Drugs and Pharmaceuticals	9.51
Boilers Steam Generating Plants	8.55
Mining Machinery	8.53
Fertilisers	8.4
Tobacco Manufacture	7.85
Footwear	7.39
Linolium and Similar Products	7.37
Handtools and Small Tools	6.53
Paper Board and Straw Board	4.22
Hurricane Lanterns	3.53
Electrical Motors	3.47
Cement (Hydraulic)	3.24
Dry Cells	3.2
Synthetic Resins and Plastics	3.14
Iron and Steel (Metal)	1.9
Electric Light and Power	1.69
Telecommunications	1.66
Grain Mill Products	1.19
Motor Cars	1.14
Petroleum and Coal Products	1.03
Inorganic Chemicals	0.59
Mining and Quarrying	0.55
Typewriters & Duplicators	0.32
Paper	-.07
Generation and Transmission Equipment	-.39
Man-made Fibres	-.43
Met Prod Excl Machinery TPT Equipment	-.7
Construction Machinery	-.78
Agricultural Machinery	-1.15
Soaps and Glycerine	-1.39
Jute Textiles	-1.64

Of the 86 series considered, 40 of them with a total weight of 51.356 had a positive growth and 46 of them with a total weight of .619 had a negative growth.

SELECTED INDICATORS

	1986	1985
Crude Petroleum
Thousand Tonnes, March	2893	2805
Petroleum Refinery Products
Thousand Tonnes, March	4090	3591
Call Money Rate
Percent, March	10.0	10.0
Revenue Earnings Goods Traffic
Million Tonnes Originating, February	22.07	19.75
Rail Movement
Net Tonne Kilometres, February	16502	14291

Compiled by THE POLICY GROUP/ICIM

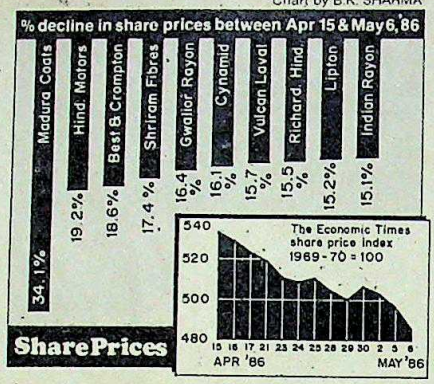
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

Sudden Slump

Chart by B.K. SHARMA



AFTER more than a month of sustained gains on the charts, the stock-markets nose-dived again last fortnight. Losses were recorded on virtually every counter, and the bulls were nowhere to be seen. The extent of the bearish rampage was evident in the drop recorded by the Sensitive Index of Equity Prices of the Bombay Stock Exchange: this fell from 626.05 in mid-April to 584.53 by the end of the month, and then searched for lower levels in the first few days of May. The index was still above the post-budget low of 525.02, recorded in March, but if this trend continues the market could plumb new depths in the coming weeks.

Several prominent scrips lost heavily, including textile companies like Madura Coats (34.1 per cent) and Indian Rayon (15.1 per cent), drug companies like Cyanamid (16.1 per cent) and Richardson Hindustan (15.5 per cent), engineering outfits like Hindustan Motors (19.2 per cent), Vulcan Laval (15.7 per cent) and Best and Crompton (18.6 per cent), and diversified corporate giants like Gwalior Rayon (16.4 per cent). Even Century Mills, among the bluest of chips on the market, took a beating when buyers liquidated their purchases after Chairman S.K. Birla warned shareholders at the company's annual general meeting that the inadequacy of levy cement prices might result in shrunken profits during the current year.

The big question, of course, is whether the market has now firmly entered a bearish phase, or whether the mood of pessimism will pass and optimism bound right back. Opinion among the experts is divided, as always. But the majority clearly feels that there is little room left for cheer. Indeed, even during the brief recovery that followed the post-budgetary slump, cash shares had continued to fall, signalling a lack of investor confidence in scrips that had been caught up in the general upswing that persisted through 1985. If this indicated that the brief upswing was without too much substance, the present slide in share prices only reinforces this reading of the market.

In many senses, the market is now at a critical juncture. So far there have been both ups and downs in the last four months. But a continued drop will establish that 1986 is vastly different from 1985. And that the bears are going to have it their way for some time to come. There could be a number of factors responsible for this: the dissensions in the Congress(I), the fresh uncertainty in Punjab, the straws in the wind which indicate that the Government might be reconsidering some of its policy liberalisations and the near certainty that, whatever happens, no fresh liberalisations of any substance are likely to be forthcoming.

ACTIVE STOCK

	1986 HIGH	LOW	CLOSE 7.4.86	Change on Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	45.00	26.00	28.00	2.50 -
Associated Cement	389.00	236.00	238.00	13.00 -
Atlas Copco	92.50	65.00	65.00	8.00 -
Associated Bearings	990.00	720.00	725.00	25.00 -
Avery India	146.00	103.00	112.50	6.50 -
Bajaj Auto	2775.00	1950.00	2510.00	65.00 -
Baroda Rayon	490.00	316.00	362.50	17.50 -
Bata India	82.50	56.00	58.00	6.50 -
Bayer	680.00	445.00	510.00	15.00 -
Bharat Forge	86.00	48.00	59.00	6.00 -
Birla Jute	97.00	42.90	47.50	0.50 -
Blow Plast	160.00	98.00	108.00	5.50 -
Blue Star	110.00	75.00	82.50	12.50 -
Bombay Dyeing	120.00	77.00	102.00	5.00 +
Brooke Bond	96.75	74.00	83.75	7.25 -
Ceat Tyres	520.00	240.00	400.00	10.00 -
Century Spinning	1690.00	1220.00	1250.00	135.00 -
Chloride India	122.00	88.00	89.00	8.00 -
Citurgia	65.00	42.00	49.00	4.00 -
Colgate	262.00	200.00	205.00	12.50 -
Cyanamid	100.00	65.00	65.00	10.00 -
DCM	58.50	36.00	38.00	0.50 -
Dunlop	74.50	49.75	64.00	3.50 -
Elecon	117.50	80.00	88.00	3.00 -
Escorts	105.00	69.00	91.00	4.50 -
Food Specialities	300.00	215.00	268.75	1.25 -
Garware Nylon	61.50	36.00	41.00	1.00 -
Glaxo	87.00	62.00	69.00	2.00 +
G.E. Shipping	36.00	22.50	23.00	0.50 -
Gujarat St. Fertilisers	1700.00	925.00	1410.00	127.50 -
Gwalior Rayon	88.00	59.00	69.00	11.50 -
Hind. Cocoa	125.00	97.50	110.00	nil
Hindustan Lever	183.00	127.00	144.00	nil
Hindustan Motors	128.50	46.30	46.30	9.70 -
Hind. Dorr	505.00	380.00	440.00	20.00 -
IEL	84.50	64.50	65.25	7.25 -
Indian Hotels	157.00	115.00	135.00	nil
Indian Organic	90.00	63.00	68.00	6.50 -
Indian Rayon	151.00	100.00	118.00	17.00 -
Indrol	390.00	200.00	265.00	45.00 -
Ingersoll-Rand	480.00	360.00	420.00	15.00 -
ITC	76.50	53.00	68.50	5.75 -
J.K. Synthetics	132.00	90.00	105.00	13.00 -
Kinetic Engineering	325.00	220.00	265.00	25.00 -
Lakme	195.00	120.00	130.00	2.50 -
Larson & Toubro	204.00	157.00	175.00	10.50 -
Lipton	69.00	46.50	54.25	8.45 -
Lohia Machines	70.00	42.00	53.00	7.00 +
Madura Coats	92.00	55.00	58.00	30.00 -
Mahindra & Mahindra	86.00	52.00	59.50	4.50 -
Motor Industries	910.00	605.00	750.00	60.00 -
National Organic	777.50	530.00	615.00	15.00 -
Nirlon	77.00	47.00	49.00	4.00 -
Orkay Silk Mills	186.00	111.00	124.50	6.50 +
Peico Electronics	104.50	49.00	49.00	7.00 -
Pfizer	125.00	78.00	90.00	1.00 -
Premier Auto	840.00	555.00	715.00	90.00 -
Ranbaxy	160.00	105.00	121.00	1.00 -
Raymond	97.00	72.00	81.00	5.00 -
Reliance Industries	367.00	226.00	335.00	8.00 -
Shriram Fibres	88.00	49.00	53.25	7.75 -
SPIC	184.00	129.50	144.50	9.50 -
Tata Steel	1442.50	1090.00	1340.00	72.50 -
Telco	910.00	575.00	635.00	50.00 -
Vulcan Laval	162.50	85.00	107.50	17.50 -
Wimco	98.00	54.00	59.00	5.00 -

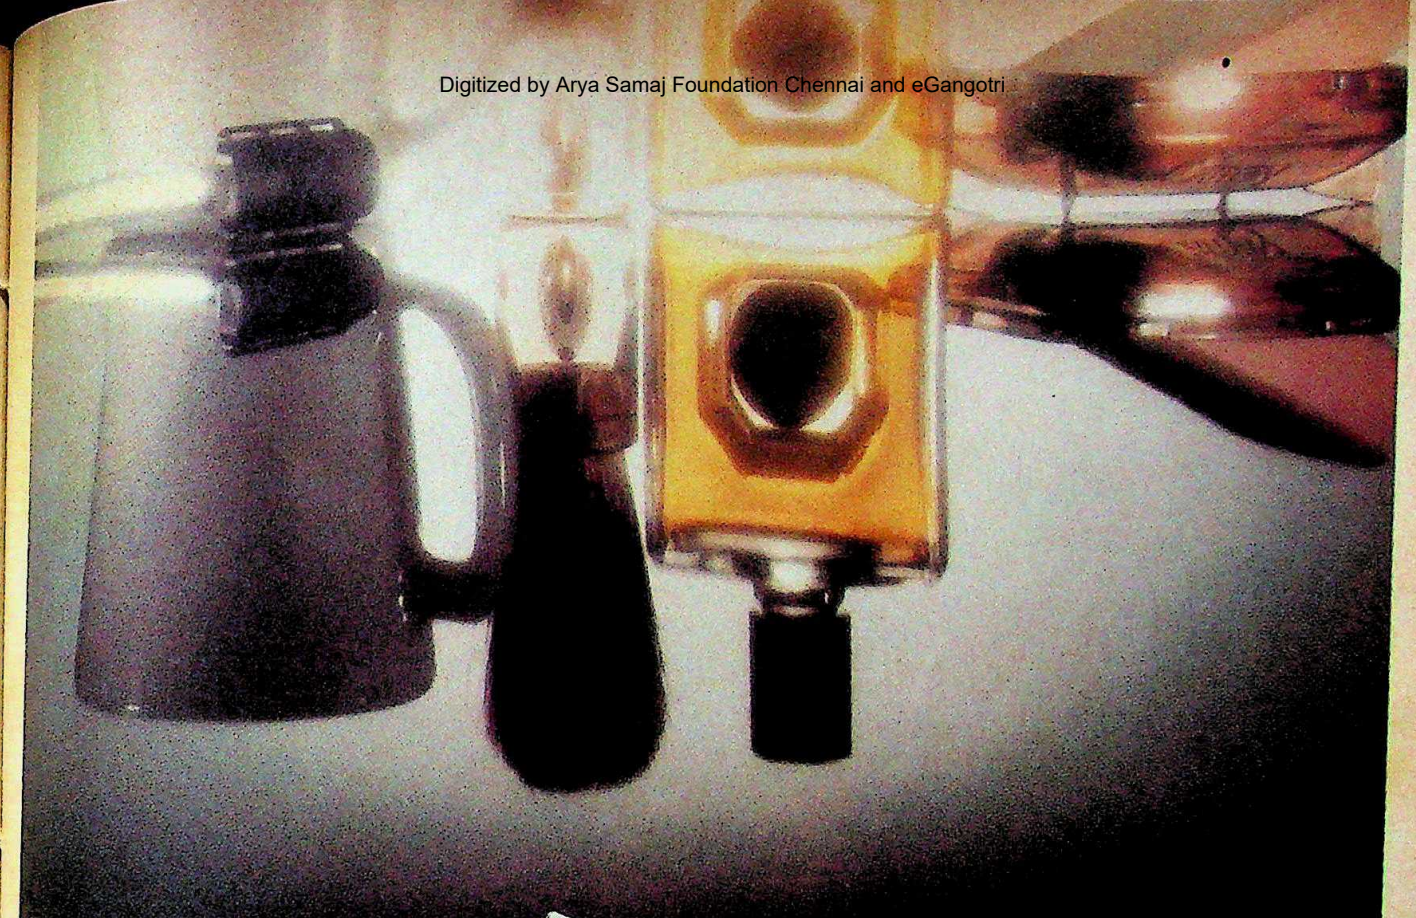
WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	9.1958	9.1124
Austria	Schilling	100	80.8630	80.0029
Bahrain	Dinar	1	33.2530	33.1915
Bangladesh	Taka	100	42.0831	42.0610
Canada	Dollar	1	9.0763	9.0019
Denmark	Kroner	1	1.5340	1.5203
Egypt	Pound	1	15.1332	15.0181
France	Franc	1	1.7889	1.7857
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	1.6071	1.5947
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	1.1120	1.0911
Iran	Rial	100	15.9910	15.6331
Italy	Lira	100	0.8210	0.8200
Japan	Yen	100	7.5365	7.3329
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.7891	0.7780
Kuwait	Dinar	1	43.7610	43.5331
Malaysia	Dollar	1	4.8903	4.8371
Mauritius	Rupee	1	0.9300	0.8919
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.6030	0.5910
Netherlands	Guilder	1	5.0336	4.9893
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7693	0.7510
Singapore	Dollar	1	5.6960	5.6475
Spain	Peseta	1	0.0810	0.0800
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4499	0.4303
Sweden	Kroner	1	1.7667	1.7506
Switzerland	Franc	1	6.7855	6.7251
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.6693	0.6500
Thailand	Baht	100	48.0000	47.9910
UK	Pound	1	19.0675	18.9447
USA	Dollar	1	12.4075	12.2925
UAE	Dirham	1	3.4130	3.3910
USSR	Rouble	1	17.6510	17.3220
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	5.7537	5.6116

These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo Limited, New Delhi and quoted between the banks on 6.5.1986.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Are you ready for the best in life?

There's only one thing that stands between a man and the best things in life. A decision. A sharp-edged decision in favour of excellence. Even in the choice of a blade.

Savage. A classic of Wilkinson technology. A blade like no other. The only one with the unique Gothic Arch edge. Specially triple coated with polytetrafluoroethylene and chromium and ceramic. For the smoothest, most pleasurable shaves. Day after day after day.

Get the Savage experience.
It's ready. When you are.

Wilkinson India Ltd.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

11199R

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Hero Honda CD 100 It keeps the promise.

PERFOR-MANCE

High performance
On the road all over India, the Hero Honda CD 100 is fulfilling the promise it made. A motorcycle that combines power with elegance, total comfort and safety, trouble-free performance and unbelievable economy.

4

4 Stroke engine
The Hero Honda CD 100's 4 stroke engine gives maximum fuel efficiency. No carbon on plugs and no decarbonising required. Virtually no engine oil consumption. No need to mix oil with petrol. And no smoke.

Phenomenal fuel efficiency
We promised you higher fuel efficiency. The Hero Honda CD 100 gives 80 km/litre (at 40 km/hr with a load of 130 kgs.), which is even less than 9 paise per km.

HONDA R&D

nology from
's No. 1
da's highly sticated R&D made it a ho
s in 150 cour world leader
eeler techno
Honda CD 1
duct of the la
a technolog

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Sam and eGangotri

HONDA R&D

nology from the d's No. 1 da's highly sticated R&D efforts
made it a household in 150 countries and orld leader in eler technology. The Honda CD 100 is a
duct of the latest in a technology.

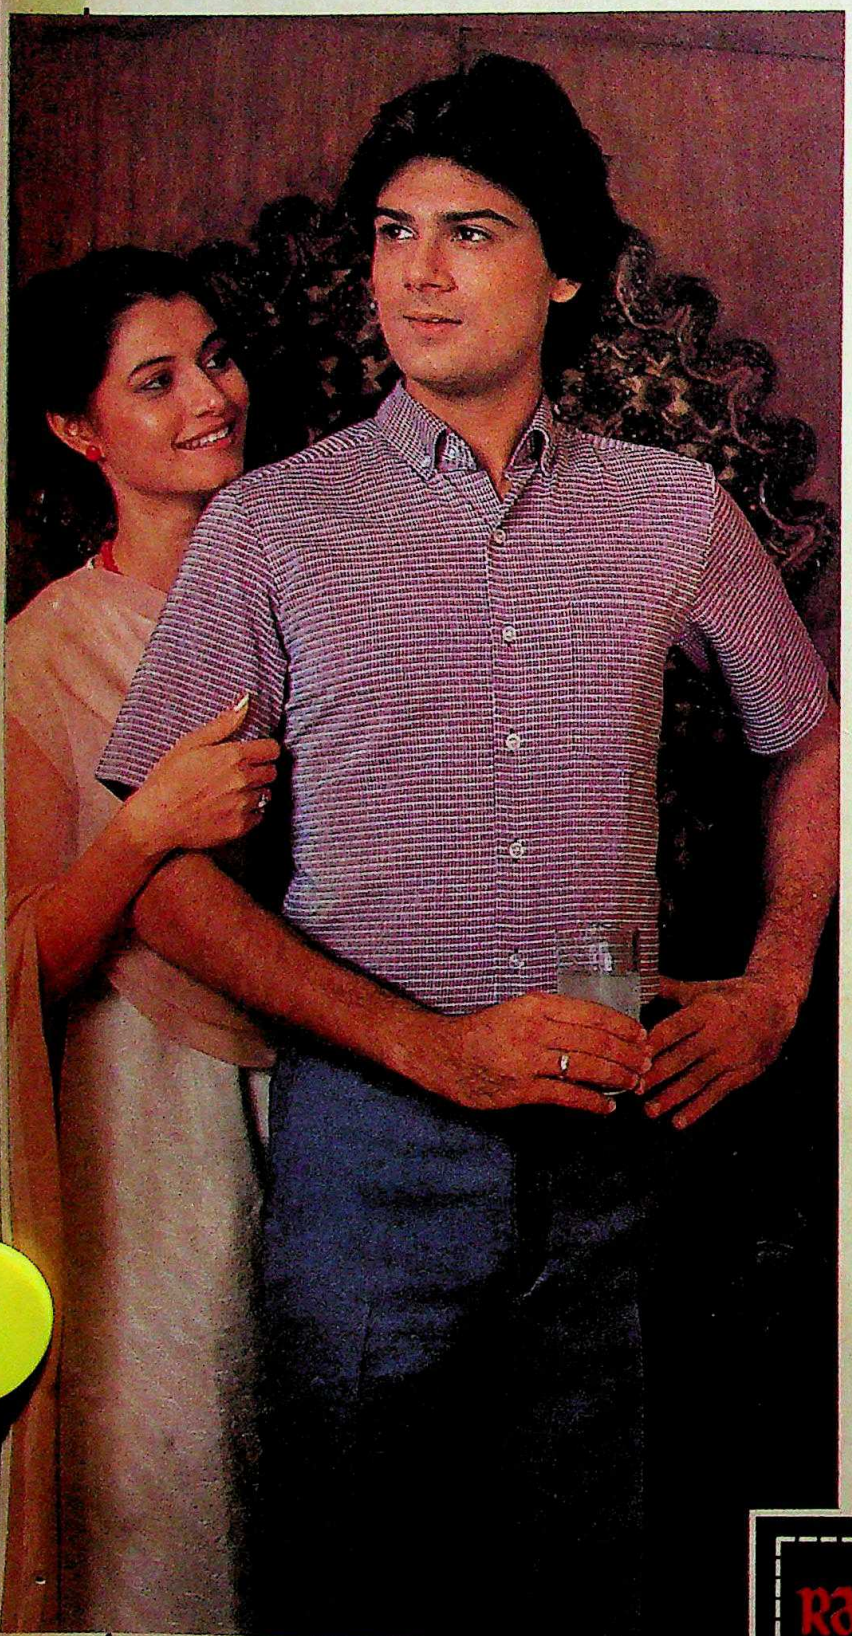
Honda service standards
At Hero Honda authorised service centres in India, you get what Honda motorcycle drivers all over the world experience. Prompt, efficient and courteous service, from technicians specially trained by Hero Honda.

HERO HONDA

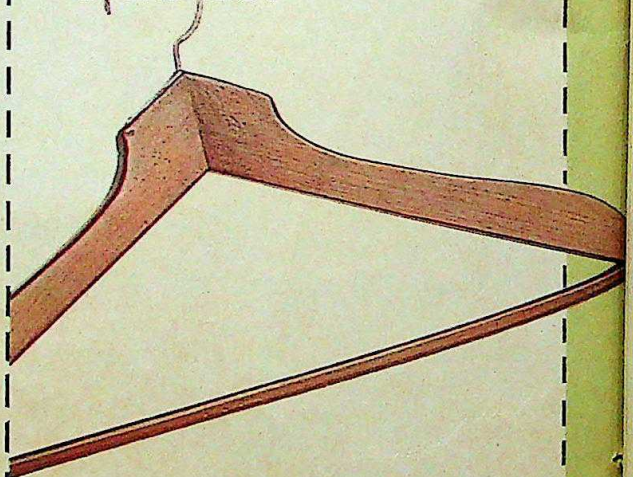
Committed to total customer satisfaction.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection. Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



EVER SINCE I DISCOVERED RAYMOND'S READYMADES, IT'S GOODBYE TO STEREO-TYPES.



Trousers
•
Safaris
•
Shirts
•
Suits
•
Blazers

Raymond's Mens Wear

Location courtesy: The Taj Mahal Hotel, Bombay.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AFGHANISTAN

Search for a Solution

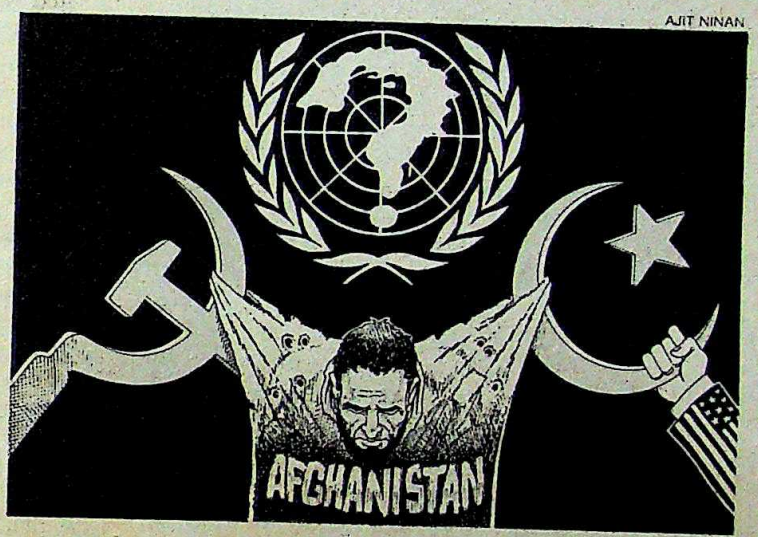
THE AFGHANISTAN problem may be finally approaching a solution, judging by the optimism on the eve of the UN-sponsored talks in Geneva on the possible pull-out of Soviet troops from Afghanistan. Already, the seventh round of the Geneva talks which commenced last fortnight is being spoken of as being the last.

It is now six years since the night in December 1979 when the Russian army crossed the undefended borders of Afghanistan and toppled the Government that purportedly invited it in. Since then, the Afghan crisis has become one of the most unsavoury episodes in international affairs. Nearly four-and-a-half million refugees, constituting some one-fourth of Afghanistan's population, have sought shelter in neighbouring Pakistan and Iran, whilst, according to at least one estimate, perhaps as many as 500,000 have died within the beleaguered country's borders. Afghanistan itself is divided by civil war, its major cities controlled by the Soviet-backed 'People's Democratic' regime whilst the vast majority of the countryside is in the equally unsettling grip of a fractured and unrepresentative Mujahideen, themselves influenced by outside agencies.

Periodically, efforts have been made by the indefatigable Diego Cordovez of the United Nations to find a solution that will facilitate the return of the Soviet Army and the restoration of peace and stability in Afghanistan. To this end he has coordinated indirect talks between the Afghan Government, who also represents the Soviet Union's interests, and that of Pakistan, which speaks for both the Mujahideen and their supporters, most particularly the United States.

From its outset, the United Nations' peace process set itself the task of securing a package deal comprising four separate but inter-related agreements. Two of these, between the governments of Afghanistan and Pakistan, focus on the voluntary return of the Afghan refugees and the cessation of all interference or intervention in the internal affairs of Afghanistan from Pakistani territory. The third is a set of guarantees from the two super powers, while the fourth will be the interlinking document determining the date and timetable of the proposed Soviet withdrawal as well as the manner and timing of the implementation of the other three documents.

By the end of 1985 most of this package had been agreed to. Both super powers were also willing to act as guarantors. All that was left was agreement on the fourth instrument. So the issue was reduced to whether the Afghans would table an acceptable date and timetable for the withdrawal of Soviet troops and if this would be adhered to.



AJIT NINAN

It was at this juncture that Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev publicly declared his commitment to a Soviet withdrawal "in the nearest possible time". He then went a step further and rescinded his stand on direct talks. Instead Cordovez was given a draft of the Soviet withdrawal plan and allowed to show it to the Pakistanis. As a result, the technical deadlock was broken.

Thus far the complex facts suggest a breakthrough, and one of significant proportions. Both sides have agreed to negotiate the crucial withdrawal instrument on conditions initially stipulated by the Pakistanis and since accepted by the Russians. But now the question really is: will the talks produce a mutually acceptable Soviet withdrawal and will it be sufficient for a solution?

Even if Gorbachev does offer a credible and mutually acceptable schedule of withdrawal, the present Afghan regime will still be there even without Karmal and the question of its acceptability to the Pakistanis and the US will remain—until either the Russians agree to get rid of the regime (which they won't) or until the Americans accept they have to live with it (which they show no signs of). At this more fundamental level, all that Cordovez's latest efforts can hope to achieve is to strip the issue of its diplomatic wrapping down to its essential conundrum, which is: Has the time come for the Americans to let the Russians off the Afghan hook?

As yet there are precious few indications that Washington has realised that the Afghan ball could soon be in its court. When it is, the American refusal to countenance the peace terms on offer could seem considerably less moral and righteous than it presently does. For a refusal to accept a Soviet withdrawal then would suggest a determination to inflict further suffering on the Afghans themselves simply because the deal does not accord with the Reagan Administration's new muscular view of the world.

The Soviets, meanwhile, have begun a process of modification of the Afghan regime to advance its chances of independent survival once they withdraw, thus increasing its prospects of future acceptability. They have sought to broaden the regime's base by inducting non-communist party members, increasing the involvement of the clergy and adopting softer policies, particularly towards the alienated border tribes. The removal of Babrak Karmal is part of this pattern. Should this process be pursued to the extent of involving some of the less fundamentalist Mujahideen factions, it might not only provide an Afghan government that will survive a Russian withdrawal, but one that could also prove tempting to the Pakistanis. But will the US accept it? No doubt such a government will not be to their liking—as it won't be to the Soviet Union's full satisfaction—but that could be the cost they both have to pay for a lasting solution. And it could prove acceptable to the Afghan people themselves. Maybe that is what ought to really count.

—KARAN THAPAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BANGLADESH ELECTIONS

A Tragic Farce

BANGLADESH'S hesitant experiment with democracy seems to have been a farcical failure. Last fortnight's parliamentary elections were marred by violent clashes and accusations of massive rigging and booth-capturing by President Ershad's Jatiya Party. TAVLEEN SINGH was in Bangladesh to cover the electoral fiasco. Her report:

The house in road number 32 Dhanmandi, where Sheikh Mujibur Rahman lived and died, has become a symbol of everything that has gone wrong with Bangladesh. It is a house filled with dreams and death, frozen in time at the exact moment of Mujib's murder in a dawn coup on August 15, 1975. Hasina Wajed, his daughter, uses the ground floor as an office but has left the upper two floors exactly as they were when the soldiers burst in and murdered her parents, three brothers and two sisters-in-law. The floors are covered with dark patches of dried blood.

The house is a macabre mausoleum not just for Mujib and his family but, in a sense, for democracy in Bangladesh. For with Mujib's death, came the demise of all hopes of democracy in a country that sacrificed more than a million lives in the name of freedom.

The past 11 years have been a period of military regimes and coups, counter-coups and assassinations. In such an atmosphere, it was easy for the President, Lieutenant-General Hussein Mohammed Ershad, to hammer one more nail in the coffin of democracy by turning Bangladesh's first parliamentary election in seven years into a shameless farce.

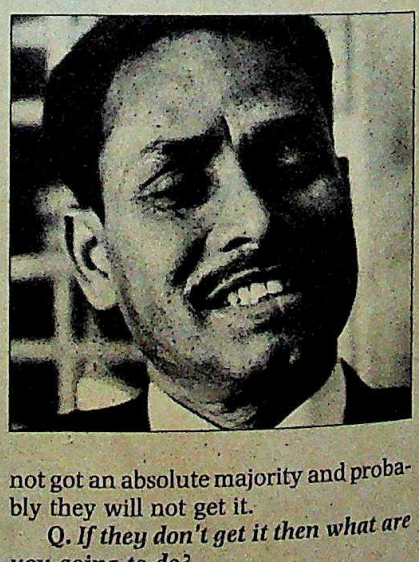
Ershad himself had raised hopes that the elections would be relatively fair. He had permitted political parties to contest as parties and during the election campaign gave them complete freedom. He threw open his country to droves of foreign correspondents. In addition, he permitted the People's Commission for Free Elections to invite a team of British MP's as independent observers.

But just when everyone was beginning to be lulled into a false sense of democracy, Ershad reverted to form. First came the arrest of Begum Khaleda Zia and the entire leadership of the Bangladesh Nationalist Party which had consistently opposed what they described as 'Blueprint elections'. Then, two days before polling, reports of sporadic acts of violence by members of Ershad's Jatiya Party began to trickle into Dhaka. The most ominous sign, however, was the appearance in the streets of goon squads who drove around in vehicles plastered with posters of Ershad. They tore down Awami League posters and smashed up election symbols. In some cases they even attacked candidates and threw Molotov cocktails into opposition party election offices.

Some opposition candidates, like former foreign minister, Kamal Hossain, saw the writing on the wall. Said Hossain: "We are receiving some very alarming reports. Jatiya Party thugs appear to be bent on terrorising voters to make them stay away from voting. Ershad didn't expect this election to go the way it has (in our favour) and he is now panicking and

GENERAL ERSHAD

"There was no rigging"



TO SAY that General Ershad fiddled while Dhaka burned would perhaps be unkind but it would be no exaggeration to say that the sound of bombs and shouts of 'We do not accept this farcical election' could not be heard even faintly in the rarefied atmosphere of the Dhaka Cantonment in which the President resides.

The day after the elections, the President appeared completely oblivious to what had happened beyond the whitewashed walls of the cantonment. He greeted reporters with the news that he had just completed a poem in praise of the elections and laughed off charges of rigging. Excerpts:

Q. What would you like to say about the results?

A. I am very satisfied, most of the parties have got seats and this is the first time it has happened in history. The Awami League has done very well, they never got more than 40 seats, Muslim League got seats so all the parties have their representation now in Parliament.

Q. The delegation of British MP's said that they were so shocked by what they saw that they do not consider what happened yesterday an election?

A. We are not bothered what they say. This is an independent country and they have no business to pass any remarks about an independent nation's elections. They are doubting the integrity of the Election Commission, which is an independent body, the whole thing is disgusting.

Q. Would you say there was no rigging then?

A. No, that's besides the point. You asked me something I have replied.

Q. Yesterday we got the impression there was rigging by the Jatiya Party?

A. Then they would have got more than 200 seats and how come the Awami League has got so many seats when they never got more than 40 seats ever, except in 1973. Even the people are surprised that they have got so many seats this time. And the Jatiya Party have not got an absolute majority and probably they will not get it.

Q. If they don't get it then what are you going to do?

A. The Jatiya Party will probably get 150 seats. There are independent candidates and women. We will make up.

Q. What will you do if Hasina rejects the poll verdict?

A. On what grounds?

Q. On the grounds that it was heavily rigged.

A. It is the Jatiya Party who should be saying that.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

sing terror tactics."

Hossain, an Oxford-educated lawyer who was responsible for drafting the Bangladesh Constitution, was tragically right. At about 10.30 on polling day, the whole of Dhaka seemed to explode simultaneously. After that it became virtually impossible to find a single polling station in the city where polling was continuing normally. The tactic used by Jatiya Party workers was simple and uniform.

In the Jatrabari Primary School polling station in Kamal Hossain's constituency, a Jatiya Party goon squad suddenly appeared and attacked an Awami League election booth that had been set up outside. Said Noor Hasan who was manning the booth: "There were about 25 of them. They came with sticks and ramdaos (axes) and smashed the table, then they pulled the voters lists from my hands and tore them to shreds, then they told me to get out and threw a 'cocktail'. They were armed so we did nothing even when they threw our polling agents out and started stamping ballot- papers."

A truckload of riot policemen arrived on the spot shortly after but did nothing to stop the Jatiya Party toughs. All they did

Sheikh Hasina: "elections were hijacked"

DOUGLAS E. CURRAN/AFP

Q. Will you have fresh elections?

A. That will have to be decided. I don't think any MP's who have been elected would want that. Elections are costly.

Q. Don't you need a two-thirds majority to legalise all the martial law ordinances?

A. You need a simple majority to ratify them but there is a very simple answer. Elections were held under martial law so if they don't regularise them then they don't remain MP's. So they have to vote for regularisation of whatever I did in the last four years and that includes elections, otherwise the whole election stands null and void.

Q. You said before the elections that you would remain neutral and yet your picture is on the Jatiya Party posters.

A. I gave it to the Awami League to put on theirs but they didn't use it.

Q. No, but you keep talking about the Jatiya Party as our party.

A. The Jatiya Party supports my policies, naturally I support them.

Q. Hasina has been saying that you said you would remain neutral and yet you have been campaigning everywhere for the Jatiya Party.

A. She is not telling the truth. I never said anywhere that I would remain neutral or that I wouldn't take part in the elections. My only comment was that my administration would remain neutral and they remained neutral. I never said that I would remain neutral. I have my policies, my programmes, my ideology which I have to sell to the people, as the head of government, the highest political office. I have to advise my people what to do.

Q. So you blatantly misused your offices for the benefit of this party?

A. I am not a caretaker President. I am an elected President of the Government. I am not worried. There is no rigging.

Q. But do you believe there was any rigging?

A. That you will have to ask the election commissioner. He conducts the elections. I don't.

Q. When will you lift martial law?

A. That will be decided after the presidential elections.

Q. What would you say will be the major changes for Bangladesh that will result from this election?

A. We will have an elected government. That's all. The policies of the Government would continue.

Q. That would mean no real change?

A. What is the aim of the Government? To give a better life to the people. So we have an elected government so the people's representatives will decide how to implement all these policies. In our Constitution the whole power is in the hands of the President. Parliament will have to decide if they want a major change in the 1973 Constitution. You know seats are not chocolates that I keep in my pocket to distribute to individuals, they have to be earned through elections.

Q. Are you aware that people don't like military rule?

A. I also don't like it. That is why I have had elections otherwise I could have continued like Zia-ul-Haq for 10 years, these people don't have the strength to remove me.

Q. Would you say it was a very successful election?

A. The result shows it to be so. All the parties fighting neck and neck and everyone getting some seats. It shows that the people have really got the chance to vote for the person they wanted to.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

was to prevent reporters going into the polling station on the grounds that it was not permitted. When reporters managed to enter an hour later, Maudodd Hassan, the presiding officer, a deputy manager in the Bangladesh Agricultural Development Corporation (BADC), said blandly: "Everything is normal".

Everything was also "normal" in another polling station where Jatiya Party workers were attacking Awami League workers with hockey sticks and brickbats.

AHMED/AFP

Police announce closing of polling booth an hour after voting started

Or in a polling station in which the ballot-boxes had been removed and voting ended an hour after it began. There was the occasional presiding officer who admitted that thugs had taken over the polling station and stamped ballot-papers forcibly. Said Mahfuzur Rahman: "I appealed to the police to fire in the air or do anything to get the thugs out of here but they wouldn't do anything at all, so I was helpless".

THERE was an additional method to the madness. In Bangladesh, polling stations (approximately 25,000 in number) double as counting centres. Counting begins immediately after polling ends and technically cannot take place unless all the parties have their polling agents in the centre. But by 5 p.m. on polling day, there were hundreds of polling stations all over the country in which there were no opposition party polling agents present.

Well before counting began, Ershad's extraordinary exercise in democracy had lost all credibility and it was clear that the results had been tailored to look as fair as possible with the Awami League and the Jatiya Party running neck and neck at one point. Before the counting started, Sheikh Hasina called a press conference and accused the President of piracy. "I will not call it rigging," she said. "Rigging is a very small word, what happened here was hijacking."

The next morning the British MP's who had been invited as observers, Lord Ennals and Brendan Bravo and David Lay of the BBC, expressed their opinion in equally strong terms. "We have listed specific events which led us to the conclusion that though the parties whose representatives we met put up candidates and fought the election in the hope that it would be free and fair, these hopes were cynically frustrated. From what we saw, the principle offenders in rigging the elections were the Jatiya Party. They were responsible for turning what could and should have been a historic return to democracy in Bangladesh into a tragedy for democracy."

Then suddenly the Government appeared to have switched strategy. The announcement of results which had been going on non-stop on radio and television was suddenly halted and the Election Commission announced that although they had received 293 results out of a total of 300, they were withholding them on account of complaints of rigging.

The Government's stand had by this time lost all credibility and few believed that the results were being withheld in the genuine interests of fairness. Then the Election Commission announced that they would be ordering a repoll in 99 constituencies, which was changed to a repoll in "only a few constituencies".

According to political observers, the main reason for the confusion was the bargaining that was clearly going on between Ershad and the Awami League. Sheikh Hasina had demanded a repoll in 100 constituencies. At first the Government showed all the signs of giving in to her demand and then quite abruptly, changed its mind.

The crucial factor appeared to be whether Hasina would agree to sit in Parliament or not. A total repudiation of the election would have seriously embarrassed Ershad but there was enough pressure on Hasina not to do this from her own party, and also due to the fact that if she decided not to take the seats her party won, she would have strengthened Khaleda Zia's position. And that is a highly unwelcome prospect.

The wrangling and confusion continued but Ershad was saved by two factors, the first and most important one being a cynical and apathetic electorate who have learned to expect the worst and secondly by Ramadan—the Muslim month of prayer and fasting—which began while the elections results were still being announced.

In the end, the elections have changed nothing in Bangladesh. Ershad will continue to be omnipotent and Parliament will exist merely as a sort of debating club which will begin by ratifying the martial law decrees that Ershad has issued in the past four years.

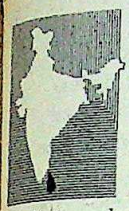
If the May election has achieved anything at all, it is the fact that it has proved to the Opposition that the only way to get rid of Ershad will be through another military coup. Said Hasina: "The army could get rid of him tomorrow if they wanted to. It is easier for them than for us." Obviously, as last fortnight's elections revealed, democracy in Bangladesh is still a very distant not to mention dangerous dream.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SRI LANKA

Ominous Portents



SRI LANKA'S ethnic crisis is rapidly starting to resemble a rugby scrum with the ball being passed from hand to hand with the objective of not letting the opposition know which player has possession. The trouble now is trying to decipher who the players really are. In the Jaffna peninsula, the two main militant Tamil groups have suddenly been pitched into a bloody fratricidal war, destroying each other's camps, killing key leaders and generally doing the job of the Sri Lankan army.

In New Delhi, Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi has introduced a new player into the protracted poker game between New Delhi and Colombo, P. Chidambaram, minister of state for personnel, who headed the latest Indian negotiating team to Sri Lanka in the hitherto-futile search for a mutually acceptable solution. And in Colombo, the political posture hardened considerably following a series of extremist bomb attacks in the capital that left 26 people dead, including 15 tourists.

With the situation starting to acquire the contours of a Shakespearean tragedy, the prospect of a solution has once again receded into a bleak background. The introduction of Chidambaram, 40, an MBA from Harvard, was a calculated gamble. Re-introducing a Tamil as head of the Indian negotiating team was New Delhi's way of semaphoring that it was determined to adopt a tougher stand in its dealings with Colombo. The original chief Indian negotiator, G. Parthasarathy, had been hastily removed from the firing line following objections by Sri Lanka to his Tamil antecedents.

Chidambaram, who replaced former foreign secretary Romesh Bhandari as delegation head, is a highly intelligent man not given to the kind of infectious optimism that forms part of Bhandari's extroverted character. In the event, he had little to be optimistic about. High-level sources say that "limited progress" was achieved in the Indian objective of pinning down the Sri Lankans to specifics on the key issues contained in the main demands of the Tamils, namely devolution of power, the law and order problem and the land settlement issue.

There were adequate indications that Colombo is still in no mood to make major concessions, thus giving the Chidambaram delegation little room for manoeuvre. Unlike previous parleys, this time there was no joint statement issued at the end of the talks. Further, the Indian side is still talking of "formulations" given by Colombo, and not "proposals", which implies that Colombo has still left its options wide open.

HARI OM GULATI

Chidambaram (top); and slain militant leader Srisabaratnam

Unfortunately for the Indian negotiators, the focus of the ethnic problem in Sri Lanka has suddenly, and dramatically, shifted—to the gleeful advantage of Colombo. Till now, it has largely been a guerrilla war between an indisciplined Sri Lankan army and the Tamil militants who had largely unified under the banner of the Eelam National Liberation Front (ENLF). But even that wafer-thin veneer of unity was brutally stripped off last fortnight as the cadres of the two main groups in the ENLF, the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE) and the Tamil Eelam Liberation Organisation (TELO) flung themselves at each others' throats in the Jaffna area.

What triggered off the fratricidal war is difficult to establish, but the LTTE, after a three-day offensive, claimed that it had wiped out TELO forces and destroyed their camps. TELO leader Srisabaratnam was among those killed in the encounters that wiped out an estimated 105 militants, a majority from TELO. Said A.S. Balasingham of the LTTE: "We are very sorry that Srisabaratnam had to die but then he wouldn't have been killed if he and his boys had surrendered instead of resisting our attack. When we take on a strong military force like TELO we cannot stop at anything short of a total offensive." Balasingham claims that the provocation for the battle between the two was the kidnapping of three senior LTTE commanders in Jaffna by TELO forces.

Spokesmen for TELO, however, deny charges that they started the conflict but whatever the truth, it has put India in an embarrassing position and given a moral advantage to Colombo. Sri Lanka can now afford to sit back and allow the two rival groups to wipe each other out without having to risk the lives of its own security personnel. Colombo has also used the opportunity to lay the blame on the bomb blasts in Colombo at the doorstep of the Tamil militants and claim that they are no longer interested in a peaceful settlement of the problem. Observes Charles Antonydas of TELO: "Our military struggle for Tamil Eelam is now in jeopardy." Added V. Balakumar of the Eelam Revolutionary Organisers: "Unless we can resolve our differences through discussions, there is no future for our struggle."

More important, the fratricidal fracas has put a serious spoke in the wheel of the Indian initiative. Any dialogue initiated from the Indian side is doomed without the active participation or association of the Tamil militant groups, specially LTTE and TELO, being the most powerful. Sri Lanka's National Security Minister Lalith Athulathmudali has already sounded the ominous warning that if the current negotiations failed, Colombo would "have to take the other path". Colombo has also resurrected the bogey of official Indian aid to the Tamil separatists, as evidenced by Sri Lankan President J.R. Jayewardene's May Day tirade against the Eelam lobby's "Indian links". All this suggests that Sri Lanka's ethnic tragedy is rapidly and inexorably slipping out of the hands of those who could have controlled its impetus. It is now in the hands of an unknown fate. The consequences of that could be a prelude to disaster.

—DILIP BOBB with S.H. VENKATARAMANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MOUNTBATTEN

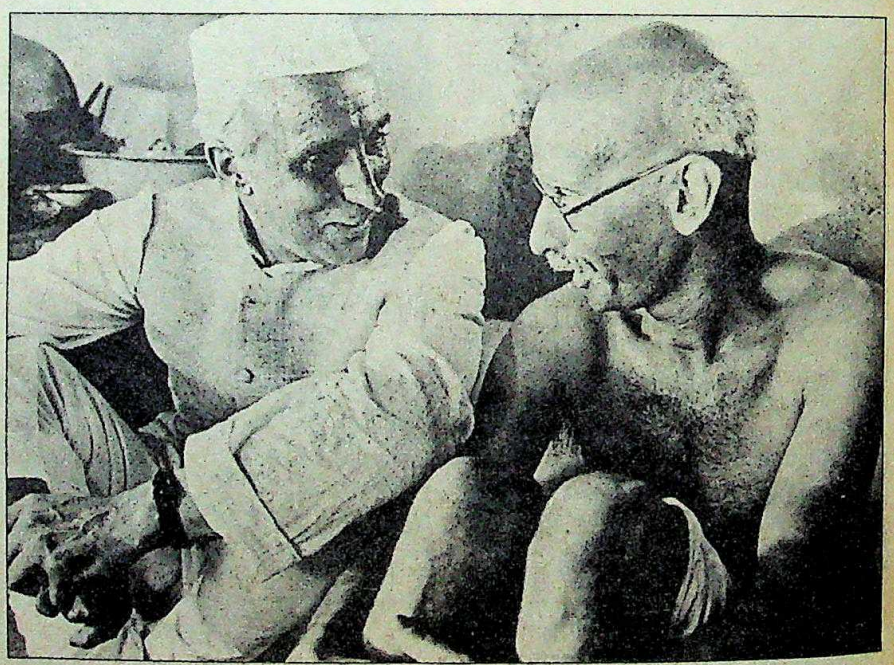
Lament for Lord Louis

THE ALMOST mystical hold of fabulous television and big screen epics about the twilight of the British Raj on audiences in Britain seemingly came to an ungracious end when Lord Mountbatten: The Last Viceroy, aired last fortnight, ran into a fusillade of scorching criticism. After interminable delays and tortuous negotiations for three successive nights, Britain's ITV channel unveiled on prime time, the long-awaited £ 9 million epic.

And for three nights, the screens were full of homicidal rioters, gruesome massacres, pole-axed corpses and streams of refugees trying to re-enact the enormous tragedy of the partition of India as make-believe Hindu-Sikh mobs battled Muslims. With exceptional unanimity, the British media across the spectrum dubbed the six-hour mini-series a "disaster". A reviewer in The Times wrote: "It was hard not to notice that it lacked the dignity of Gandhi, the scope of A Passage to India, the gusty vulgarity of The Far Pavilions or the humanity of A Jewel in the Crown. It also lacked a viable dramatic structure so that piles of blood-stained corpses and rioting mobs were called for so often that the sights became wearisome."

The series—already steeped in controversy—raked up more polemic. It triggered off an unseemly slanging match between rival channels, the BBC and ITV. The much-discussed romantic links between Pandit Nehru and Edwina, Mountbatten's glamorous wife—shown on the screen for the first time—inevitably raised fresh questions. However, the pivotal flaw of the series was the choice of Scottish-born actor Nicol Williamson to portray the charismatic, autocratic but much-loved Lord Louis. A woeful piece of miscasting, his performance was deservedly savaged by most critics. Williamson insisted that it is only the reaction of Britain's Royal family which would mean most to him. "If they can say, 'that's uncle Dickie', then I will have succeeded".

So far it is not known what the country's Royals think about the cosmetic Lord Mountbatten especially Prince Charles who was mortified when his "great uncle Dickie" was killed by an IRA bomb in August 1979. With a voice resembling a jammed foghorn and adopting a brooding, lugubrious manner, Williamson's portrayal of Mountbatten is a disaster, especially since Clement Attlee and Stafford Cripps between them make him out to be a remarkable man endowed with remarkable good looks. Says Attlee: "I suppose Mountbatten is the man for the viceroy's job? Many people in England are worried about his film star profile, his dash, the playboy image". "Surely," responds Cripps soothingly, "his success as supreme commander would settle all that. The man who accepted the Japanese surrender at Singapore". "Yes," says Attlee, brightening up a bit. "And for all that he's an aristocrat, he does have the common touch".



Williamson (Mountbatten) and Suzman (Edwina) and (below) Richardson and Dastor as Nehru and Gandhi

Right on cue walks in Nicol Williamson looking like an upwardly mobile bank manager who has been subverted by a financial trip-wire rather than a dazzling plenipotentiary. From then on the series is stymied by a dismal script and a gormless, impercipient dialogue ("when you started your speech you could have heard a popadum drop") which insinuates what should be made plain and spells out what is perfectly obvious. In his review titled 'A Viceregal Yawn', Byron Rogers of The Sunday Times complained that nobody talked in the series, they explained. "In 1946 nobody in England or India did anything but explain... When they weren't explaining they were introducing people to each other, at airports and council chambers."

With such tremendous potential about the momentous events of the transfer of power in 1947 at their command, the screenplay by David Butler based on Alan Campbell Johnson's book gives the impression of having been assembled from undigested fragments of history tomes. Any emotional dimension the drama could have achieved was nullified by the unimaginative, stilted and pedestrian techinques. Director Tom Clegg's plodding direction hardly recaptures the splendour and passion of August 1947. The Indian atmosphere is seen through

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

accuracy. The two chief protagonists of the film are played by local actors— Ian Richardson as Nehru and Vladek Sheybal as Jinnah. Julian Barnes, a critic for The Observer wrote: "A more serious ground for irritation is how in these subcontinental soaps, a tenacious imperialism haunts the casting...promotions for real Indian stops at the rank of second-in-command: though they can, of course, play as many poor, unruly, violent and superstitious natives as they like."

With his burnt-cork blackened face, Ian Richardson endows his Panditji with a lilting accent that takes on a myriad nuances. He even succeeds in making a shambling mess of Nehru's moving 'tryst with destiny' speech on the eve of Indetarian mayhem with scenes of horrific lence when Hindu or Sikh throats are shed or Muslim entrails disembowell- Invariably, as a ravaged village smoul- rs and a baby wails in bewilderment, dy Edwina chugs to the scene in a jeep der military escort to perform an act of mpassion on some dying soul.

Vladak Sheybal as a baleful Jinnah (below): a grotesque caricature

With the exception of Shakespearean tress Janet Suzman's spirited portrayal Edwina and Zia Mohyeddin's effective erpretation of V.K. Menon, none of the her principal characters in the series— ehru, Jinnah, Gandhi, Patel, Lord ay, Winston Churchill, Sir Claude chinleck, all of them reciting vacuous logue—come across as real, believable racters barring for waxwork, facial pendence. All this, however, pales into insignificance before the grotesque caricature that Sheybal attributes to Jinnah. In scene after scene, nursing a Scotch or belching cigarette smoke, Jinnah is seen with a baleful gleam in his eye, a hissing, slithery and malefic wrecker of plans in what is a thoroughly unfair interpretation.

After Ben Kingsley's finely-etched performance, Sam Dastor's Gandhi comes across as a wimpish, devitalised and powerless Mahatma, caught up in the inexorable tide of events. In a comment, The Daily Telegraph wrote: "Indian-born Sam Dastor contrives to make Gandhi seem like a refugee from dad's army."

The Nehru-Edwina romance as shown in the series elicited different reactions from English critics. Some found it 'touching' and felt it ought to have been the main focus of the film. A few found it difficult to believe that it ever happened. Mountbatten's executive producer George Walker told The Daily Express that the romance was never proven. Offered Walker " I have never met anyone who was under the bed at the time." Whilst Ian Richardson who plays Nehru had this gem of an explanation: "The whole thing was handled with extreme delicacy. Men and women never embrace publicly in India. Though they get up to all sorts of things in private as all those erotic statues show".

Flaunting their ignorance of Pandit Nehru's character, the Daily Express reporters wrote: "Actor Ian Richardson as the known womaniser Nehru shows the full force of his feelings only through his eyes and a most seductive sight it makes too." The Indian High Commission promptly dashed off a letter of protest to the paper at the slur on the late prime minister. The mini-series reveals nothing more explicit than Nehru cradling a shocked Edwina in his arms after she had witnessed a massacre or the exchange of long lingering glances between the two.

Mountbatten was initially offered to the BBC and it failed at its quality control. The channel's argument was, "It had dull performances" and requested "Too much money". ITV's chief buyer Leslie Halliwell reacted by arguing that the BBC's reaction was an "insult to Lord Louis". Halliwell said: "The critics may have been antipathic to the series. But if we had nine to 10 million viewers who tuned in, I would consider it a success. I grant that the principal character's role was flawed or that the riot scenes were gory. But Butler's script is realistic and effectively tells an important story of our times".

The executive producer, George Walker is an East-End boxer-turned-tycoon hitherto renowned for making Joan Collins sex epics like The Stud and The Bitch. The chief producer is a brash American Judith De Paul who tells interviewers, "You must want to win. You must. You must be fearless. And you must have an unstoppable drive to close the deal." Her current project is the story of Nazi hunter Beate Klarsfeld. She apparently admires Indira Gandhi. So the next Judith De Paul epic is on Indira Gandhi. It will be interesting to observe if her 'unstoppable drive' can overcome any objections that New Delhi's power-brokers might raise about her credentials or the project.

—RAMESH CHANDRAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UNITED STATES

Academic Stir

THE CASE has dragged on for nine months. The defendant, looking visibly haggard and tormented, leans back over his chair and with a red pen scribbles "Om" on his wife's hand, then on his own. When the time comes to defend himself, he searches the faces of those who sit in judgement and says hoarsely, like a troubled hero portrayed by Amitabh Bachchan: "Ask me for what I am guilty? Will somebody please ask what I am guilty of?"

What he is accused of is "gross neglect of duty". But the defendant, Pawan Kumar Sawhney, associate economics professor at Boston's Northeastern University, claims he is a victim of discrimination. The episode has created a stir in the academic circles of Boston, long regarded as a Mecca of higher learning in the United States.

Clinging to coveted tenure rights in the face of dismissal proceedings, the 44-year-old educator is claiming victimsation by "racists" at Northeastern, the largest private university in the country, with 38,000 students and 2,500 faculty members. "They think they are God!" he told INDIA TODAY in a telephone interview: "They must be proved wrong...I have dedicated my life to this profession. I shall die defending it!"

Sawhney, a graduate of Agra and Delhi Universities demanded—and got—open hearings which landed him on the front page of the state's largest newspaper, the Boston Globe. He has vowed to fight dismissal with all his physical and financial resources, borrowing money and selling a side business to pay his attorney.

Dismissal actions against professors with tenure, are extremely rare at American universities except in cases of sexual harassment. It is the first case of its kind at Northeastern since the university's founding 89 years ago and the most sensational in Boston since Harvard expelled psychology researcher Timothy Leary in the '60s for espousing use of LSD to attain self-awareness and shortcuts to Nirvana.

Embarrassed Northeastern officials flatly deny the racism charge. They maintain the economics department is one of the most racially mixed on campus. (Aside from Sawhney, there is one black and one Korean out of 19 professors). But several witnesses—all students—testified to hearing department members say they wanted to get rid of "that god-damned Indian". Some said they had been asked to spy on Sawhney, who has taught full-time at Northeastern since 1971 and was tenured three years ago, to learn his political leanings and treatment of women students.

This raised the ethical question of how far a university should pry in order to investigate allegations against a faculty member. Northeastern said it resorted to monitoring his behaviour because he failed to attend meetings called to redress complaints. (Sawhney claims his students found the administration spies so obtrusive that they plastered classroom windows over with paper.)

Sawhney: defiant stand

Charges against Sawhney include unwarranted absence from class, repeated tardiness, misuse of graduate assistants as lecturers and exam proctors and bribing students with high grades to forestall criticism. The charge of sexual harassment of two female students—was tossed out because the complaints were lodged after a two-year statute of limitations. Sawhney claims that the allegations are "pretexts" to remove him.

University Provost Arthur Smith insisted the action was not "frivolous", maintaining that Sawhney had created a situation where one professor was responsible for repeated instances of misconduct. Northeastern sought to rid itself of him because of the "totality" of these transgressions, he added.

Sawhney's ability to lecture and research was never called into question. In fact, Dean of Northeastern's Arts and Sciences College Richard Astro wrote to the university president that Sawhney "is an effective teacher, apparently well liked by most of his students".

But the dean went on to attack Sawhney's "persistent and apparently unremorseful gross neglect of duty (and) unremitting lack of cooperation with his department colleagues." And he called Sawhney's presence in the economics department "distinctly disruptive."

"The entire economics department could be populated with angels or devils and it wouldn't make a difference," said the university's attorney Jerome Medalie. "No amount of departmental hostility is responsible for his being consistently late." One semester, he was a no-show for the first week of classes for an important course on economic principles, keeping 82 first-year students sitting idle. He said he was busy helping a Ph.D. candidate and that the teaching assistant he dispatched to the class was late. His lawyer, a feisty man named George Deptula, argued that university regulations permit the use of graduate assistants to teach and nothing in the rules says a faculty member is responsible for his assistants' tardiness.

But are tardiness, asking special tasks of teaching assistants and easy grading, grounds for sacking a tenured professor? To determine this, a six-member faculty senate committee has sat through 37 hearings and taken testimony from 52 witnesses. During the emotion-packed hearings, charges of improprieties were flung back and forth.

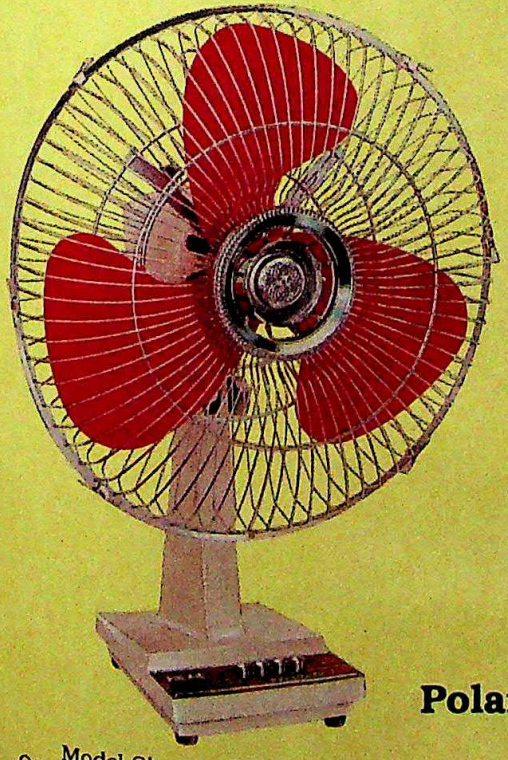
Last fortnight, the six-member faculty panel unanimously voted that "severe disciplinary action other than dismissal" be imposed on Sawhney. They also recommended that he be placed on a two-year probationary period during which his attendance could be officially monitored. But the final decision on dismissal—which is expected around mid-May—rests with the university's board of trustees which may sack Sawhney even if the faculty panel recommends no such action.

In the end, as one faculty member who has attended most of the hearings put it, Sawhney's saga is "very sad—from every point of view". And unlike Bombay's escapist fantasies with their invariably rosy finales, no one in this drama is likely to emerge unscarred.

—AMRITA CHATTERJEE in Boston

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

An old Polar Table Fan oscillates just as smoothly as a new Polar.



Model Shown : President
Other POLAR models Premier and Hi-Breeze in a range of beautiful colours.

And vice versa.
In fact age makes no difference to the way a Polar Table Fan works.
This is because Polar has a uniquely rugged gearbox. It makes the fan oscillate smoothly year after year, blowing breeze from end to end and side to side of any room.
Whereas ordinary table fans compromise with ordinary gearboxes that tend to stick after a few years.
So why get stuck with an ordinary table fan when you could get a Polar?

Polar's heavy-duty gearbox oscillates non-stick, non-squeak, non-stop.

Polar builds every little part to last.

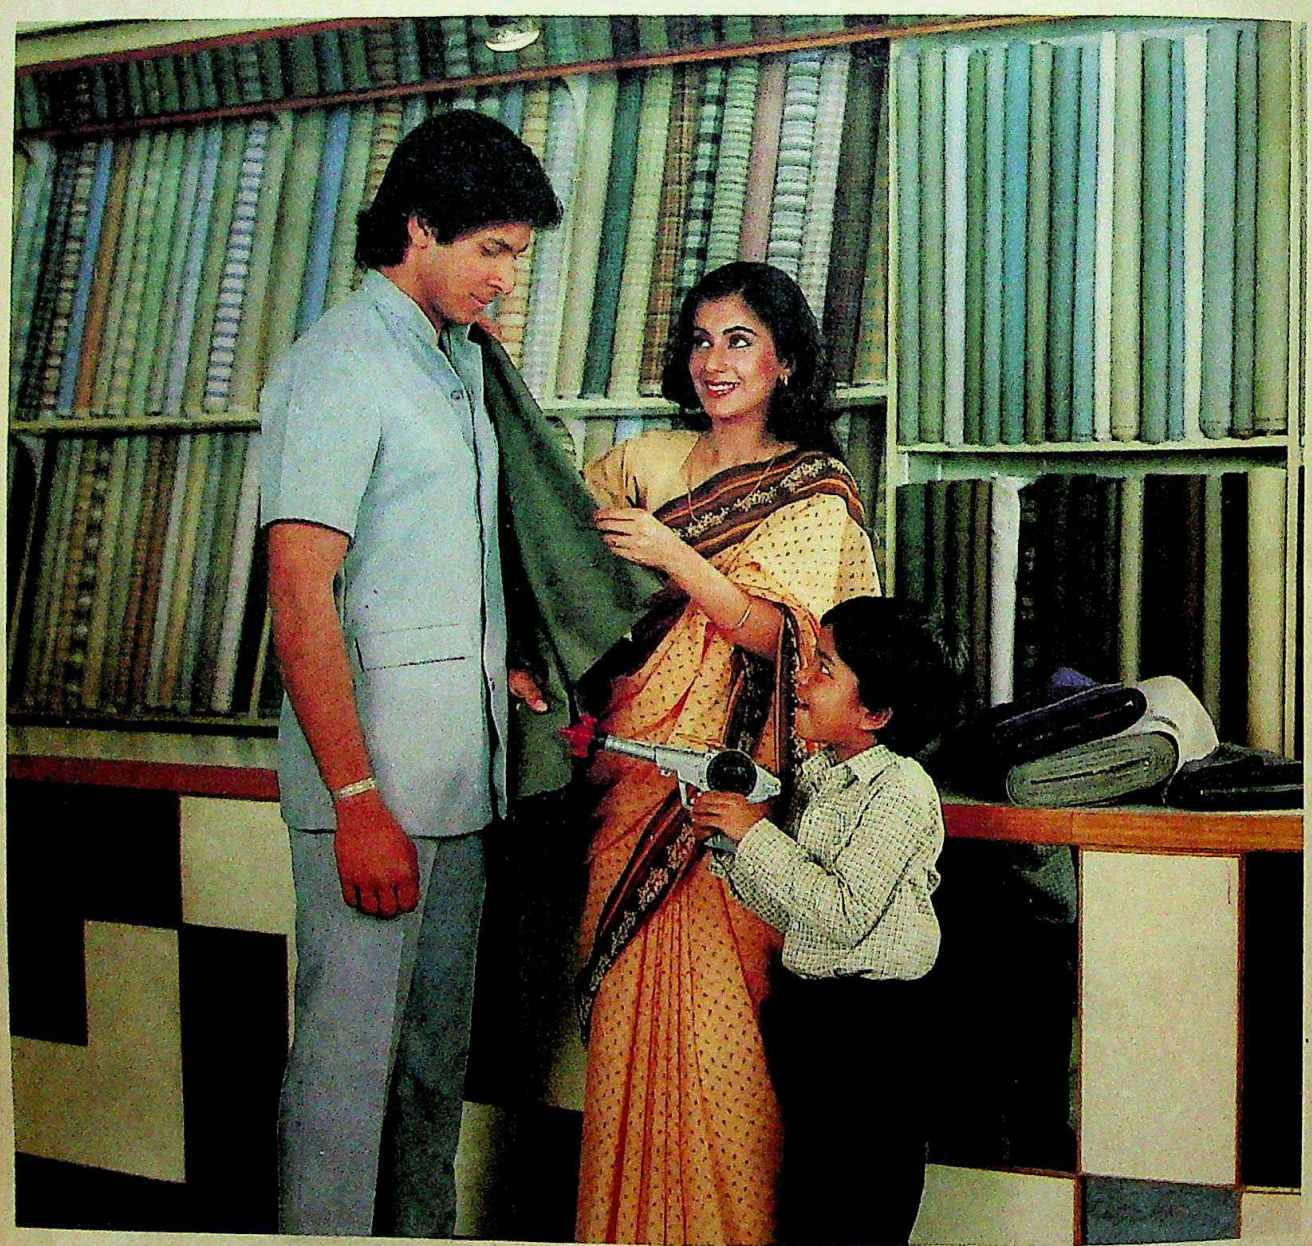
POLAR
the SUPER fan

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The one-stop textileshop

DCM



Step right into our wonderful world of textiles. Summercool safaris, suitings, shirtings, in checks, patterns, stripes and solids. Also sarees, dress materials, bed linen and towels.

The finest in polyester, blends and cotton. All the pick of the season — available at DCM.

DCM
RETAIL STORE
90 years of consumer confidence

Available at over 590 DCM Retail Stores around the country. There is one close to you.

AKSHARA/DCM-28

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

The most envied colour TV within a stone's throw!

Now who'd want to hurl a stone at such a beautiful TV! Mentally, though, many might.

Some of your neighbours for instance. Who may have seen your new ONIDA. And envied its classy, futuristic looks, the most astounding true-to-life colour, and the sharpest picture they've ever seen on a TV screen! And have been deeply regretting the fact that they're stuck with colour TVs that are obviously a generation behind!

You may of course argue, your neighbours are the nicest lot. Hardly the type to stoop to violence no matter how much they envy your ONIDA TV. Well... thank heavens!

ONIDA With cordless remote.

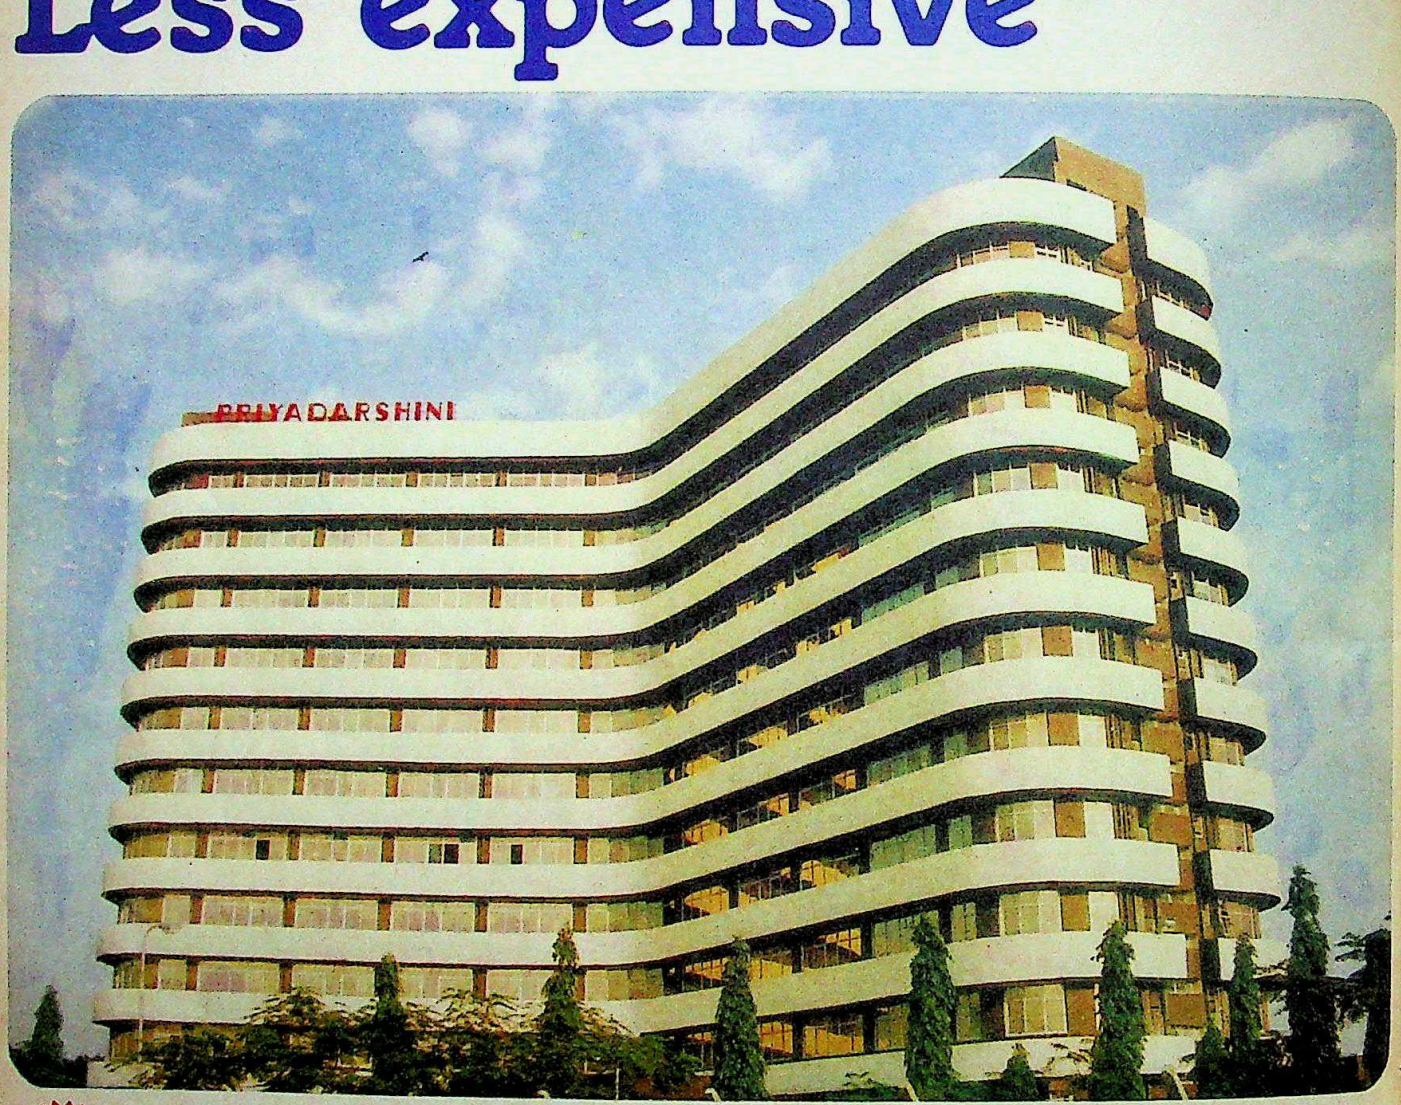
Neighbours' envy. Owners' pride.

In case you want more details rush to the nearest Dealer

AKSHARA/DCM-28

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

More effective
Less expensive



SUN CONTROL
Garware Polyester Film

Here are just a few of the hundreds of companies who have opted for Sun Control Garware Polyester Film:

- Air India
- Airport Complexes (Bombay, Delhi, Madras)
- Bank of India
- Bhabha Atomic Research Centre
- Bharat Heavy Electricals
- Bharat Petroleum Corpn.
- Breach Candy Hospital
- Centaur Hotel
- Taj Mahal Hotel
- Hindustan Aeronautics
- HMT
- MSRTC (Luxury Buses)
- ONGC
- Ordnance Factories
- President Hotel
- Rashtriya Chemicals & Fertilizers
- State Bank
- Tata Group

Timely decision taken by these Corporates have helped substantial saving in investments and recurring energy costs. Not to speak of a number of other benefits. Why not you too decide today and enjoy the benefits! Dealer Network Service available all over India.

GARWARE गरवारे

GARWARE PLASTICS & POLYESTER LTD.
50-A, Swami Nityanand Marg, Western Express Highway, Vile Parle (East), Bombay 400 057.
Phone: 6046381/4, Telex: 011-71525/72358 GPPL IN, Telegram: "GARWARECAR".

JAISONS GP 2386

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TAMIL NADU

The Aids Scare

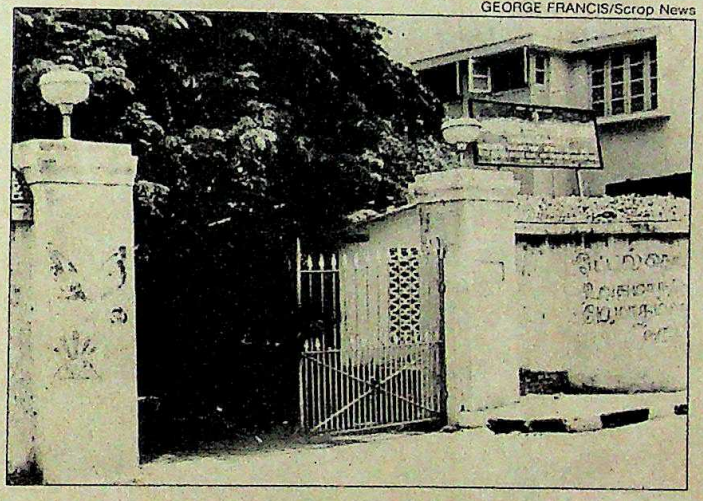
LIKE THE dreaded disease itself, it struck suddenly and without warning. Last fortnight, the news that six cases of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) had been detected in Tamil Nadu sent siesmic waves through the country. But the truth was somewhat less dramatic: blood sample analysis by the state medical establishment and the Indian Council of Medical Research (ICMR) had confirmed the presence of AIDS antibodies, and not the virus—which is the real killer—in the six patients, all of whom happen to be prostitutes. What added to the panic and raised nightmares of an AIDS outbreak in the rest of the country was the fact that Tamil Nadu is perhaps the only state which has an active AIDS-detection programme.

Union Health Minister Mohsina Kidwai's devastating revelation in Parliament last fortnight destroyed the myth that AIDS is confined to the western hemisphere. First reported in 1981, AIDS (or more particularly the Human T-Lymphotropic Virus III (HTLV) and related viruses) destroys the body's natural defence system. A cure has yet to be found for the disease which has afflicted 22,000 people the world over.

In the Indian context, there was some comfort in the fact that only antibodies were present in the blood samples of the patients. Said Dr S. Arumugam, dean of the Madras Medical College (MMC): "What we have so far sighted is the shadow of the thief and not the thief himself. The presence of the antibodies only indicates that these women had been exposed to the virus at some time in their lives. It does not prove that they have been infected by the virus."

Credit for detecting the cases goes largely to the state Government, which in mid-1985 constituted a five-member committee headed by Dr C.P. Lakshminarayanan, director of the Institute of Microbiology attached to the MMC, to collect blood samples from high-risk sections of the state population and analyse them for AIDS. Even before the Central Government's circular to the same effect was sent to the state governments late last year, the committee collected over 200 samples from prostitutes, suspected homosexuals, drug addicts and patients who had undergone multiple blood transfusion.

GEORGE FRANCIS/Scrop News



The vigilance home in Madras (above); and (top) Hande and Ramalingaswamy

After preliminary screening, 126 of these were sent to the special AIDS reference laboratory at the Christian Medical College (CMC) in Vellore. Antibodies were detected in 11 samples. The findings were reported to the ICMR. The ICMR conducted a few more tests and passed them on to the National Institute of Health in Bethesda in the US, which confirmed the presence of antibodies in six samples taken from prostitutes now remanded to Tamil Nadu's vigilance home for women in Madras

The institute is trying to culture the virus to prove that it exists in the blood samples. It will take six weeks to confirm the presence of the virus in the women. Fortunately for the women, doctors attending on them have not found any of the common symptoms of AIDS—weight loss, fever, cough, skin lesions and overwhelming lethargy. Assured a doctor: "They are leading very normal and healthy lives in the home." He, however, admitted that the virus takes between one to five years to manifest itself. But it may well be that the HTLV-III is not present in them, or that it is a related virus which has gone into their systems.

But what has soured the AIDS drama and upset the Tamil Nadu Government is the seeming attempt by the ICMR and its Director-General, Dr V. Ramalingaswami, to take the credit for the efforts they had put in. State Health Minister Dr H.V.Hande was also piqued with Dr Ramalingaswami for having broken the news in Delhi after expressly requesting the state Government not to make the matter public because final confirmation was awaited from Bethesda. Charged Hande: "It was the ICMR director-general who asked me not to publicise the preliminary findings at Bethesda but to await the final results of the attempt to isolate and culture the virus. And then he returns to Delhi and makes the announcement himself without having the courtesy to inform me." Ramalingaswami, however, maintained that he kept Hande informed of developments right through.

The sense of injury deepened when Ramalingaswami told a news agency that two of the women had escaped from the remand home. The state Government promptly denied this and investigations confirmed that the women were still in quarantine.

Whether the six women are really harbouring the AIDS virus or not, the scare it has created has prompted the Central and state governments to tighten safety measures. As a first step, a high-level committee under the cabinet secretary has been set up to decide whether foreigners entering India should produce an "AIDS-free certificate" or face tests in this country. Blood banks have already been advised to screen all professional donors with special AIDS detection kits which are likely to be imported. If all this smacks of overkill, the heavy toll in AIDS-related deaths abroad is a pointer to the fact that India, having partly joined the dubious club, can no longer afford any complacency on the issue.

—S.H. VENKATRAMANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WATER SCARCITY

The Great Th

DESPITE massive efforts to develop rural India, hardly any effort has been made till recently to provide India's teeming millions with a basic necessity—drinking water. A devastating drought and a blistering summer have only aggravated their miseries. To assess the magnitude of the crisis, Principal Correspondent RAJ CHENGAPPA and photographer PRASHANT PANJIAR toured several districts in Madhya Pradesh, Maharashtra and Karnataka while bureau reports from Jaipur, Madras, Ahmedabad and Hyderabad added a national perspective. The report:

AT DAWN the tabled plateaus of central Maharashtra, stripped bare of tree cover, look like windblown sphinxes. A flock of parrots wings its way into the distance. A frisky pup teases a buffalo but is discouraged by the shake of its horns. Outside the thatched huts in the hamlet of Peth, 50 km from Pune, men sleep sprawled on the ground, their faces covered with torn sheets in an attempt to shut out the sun. But even as they snore, the women are up, the bronze matkas on their heads glinting in the sun as they trudge across barren fields. The jingle of their anklets is soon joined by the harsh rhythmic clang of a nearby handpump.

Silhouetted against the early morning sun, Savithri Bai Sabajikala grips the handle of the pump and begins her macabre dance. She uses her body weight to push the handle down, her feet dangle in the air momentarily, then settle on the ground for the next heave. Up. Down. Up. Down. The clang of the handpump keeps beat with her gasping breath. After 20 such heaves, one brass pot is full. Another 20 pushes and the next matka is full. Savithri Bai has to make eight such trips daily to collect enough water for her family of three and their four bulls, two cows, two hens and a dog.

At noon, about 500 km north from Savithri Bai's hut, the sun is like a fireball over Razia, a tribal village perched on a series of hillocks in Madhya Pradesh. Balancing two pots on her head and sweating profusely, Shobli Bai wends her way to a 50-ft-deep well, 2 km from her home. She walks down roughly-hewn steps to the bottom of the well where a small puddle of dirty green water is all that is left. It takes 15 minutes for her to fill her two pots, then she makes her way up the precarious steps. Shobli Bai makes this trip three or four times a day. She washes clothes only once in a fortnight and a bath is a distant monthly luxury. Because of the constant trips down to the well she cannot work, and this denies her needy family the nine rupees a day that she would otherwise have earned.

By evening, 1,000 km from Razia, the setting sun, still uncomfortably hot, tinges the giant boulders in Avani with a reddish hue, making it look like a Martian landscape rather than a hamlet in Karnataka's Kolar district. Chennamma, Lakshmi, Shantamma and Kalpana, all daughters of Lingamma Seshappa, walk up a steep slope to a small pond in the crevice of two giant boulders. They cover their pots with a strip of torn saree that acts as a crude filter and scoop the water with a plastic bowl to fill the pots. Then they wend their way slowly down.

For millions of women in the country, from the rocky mountains of the Himalayas to the barren table lands of Central India and the denuded forests of the Western ghats, the day begins and ends with the endless struggle for water. Dried up by a devastating drought that has laid bare half the country's parched land area and by a remorseless summer, water has become a precious and increasingly scarce commodity.

As the summer advances, the misery rises with the mercury. In villages and towns, almost every vessel—from jerricans to kerosene tins and drums—is used to store water. In Manchal near Indore, Chain Singh uses his bullock-cart to bring two drums of water every day from a pump house 4 km from his home because all the borewells in the village have dried up. In Kutheri village in Karnataka's Kolar district, Lakshmiamma Gopalappa has to stay awake for most of the night to get water from the village well, because there is an endless queue waiting to get at the small puddle which is all that is left. In Konri Ki Dhaani, a desert town in Rajasthan, Kalla Ram buys a tanker-load of water for Rs 80 to provide water for his family of 10 every fortnight. And half the Women drawing water from the depths in Madhya Pradesh

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

at thirst

Dried up by a devastating drought, water has become a precious and increasingly scarce commodity.

ple in Narayangao, in Maharashtra's district, are digging holes in a river to fill their pots with the trickle of er that seeps through.

As the problem has worsened, state rnments have resorted to desperate asures to provide water for the thirsty ons. For the badly-hit Rajkot town, Gujarat Government has commis- ed special water trains at an annual of Rs 7.5 crores to supply 6.5 lakh ns a day. In the dry deserts of Raja- an, tankers cart water to 650 villages y day. In Maharashtra, 200 tankers been hired to pump water into dried in 950 villages. And in many dis- of Madhya Pradesh bullock-carts, primarily used to transport grain, been hired by the Government to water.

The search for water is feverish. Every droves of geologists in jeeps move into ges surveying potential sites for sink- borewells. Trucks equipped with borewell equipment have become almost as ubiquitous as bullock-carts. The steady thud of borewells being sunk mingles with more familiar rustic sounds. In the past six years, more than six lakh borewells have been sunk by various state governments at a staggering cost of over Rs 2,500 crore in what has been the most massive attempt ever in the country's history to provide essential water to India's 600 million-strong rural population.

And yet, in what seems to be one of the biggest paradoxes, the great thirst for water only increases. Despite such massive investments, almost half the total rural population still does not have adequate and safe drinking water facilities. Even for the other half that does, the supply is a measly 10 to 20 litres per head per day. That is only half the national standard of 40 and way, way below the World Health Organisation's recommendation of 70 litres. In more usual terms, every time someone in a city pulls the flush he uses up the amount of water that a villager gets for his entire day's needs.

Only last year the Union Government boasted that it had provided 2.91 lakh villages with drinking water, out of the 3.01 lakh villages that had been declared 'problem villages' in 1980. But even as state public health engineers patted themselves on the back, the Planning Commission came up with the astounding discovery that one lakh more villages had become waterless: because of the dropping water table, the drought and the drying up of traditional wells.

Last fortnight it was not just Bombay's humidity that was making Maharashtra's Rural Development Secretary P. Subrahmanyam uncomfortable. Before him lay the results of a survey of villages in the state suffering from acute water scarcity: the number was a staggering 22,639. Only last year, Maharashtra had reported that it had provided water at a cost of Rs 350 crore to 12,016 of the 12,935 villages that had been declared problem villages. Shaking his head in sheer despair, Subrahmanyam said: "It looks as if we are back to square one." The worst irony of the situation is that even as central and state governments pour more money than ever before into water supply schemes, new developments render waterless even those villages that never had a water problem.

It is a situation that has cropped up repeatedly in state after state. Madhya Pradesh, for instance, said it had provided drinking water to 23,845 (or 95 per cent) of its 24,944 problem villages. But early this year, the state Government admitted that the number had again ballooned to 19,723 villages. Uttar Pradesh, which had provided 27,143 villages with drinking water facilities and has not been hit by drought, found to its dismay that 19,023 new villages had turned problem ones.

As the number of villages suffering from an acute water scarcity has mounted

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

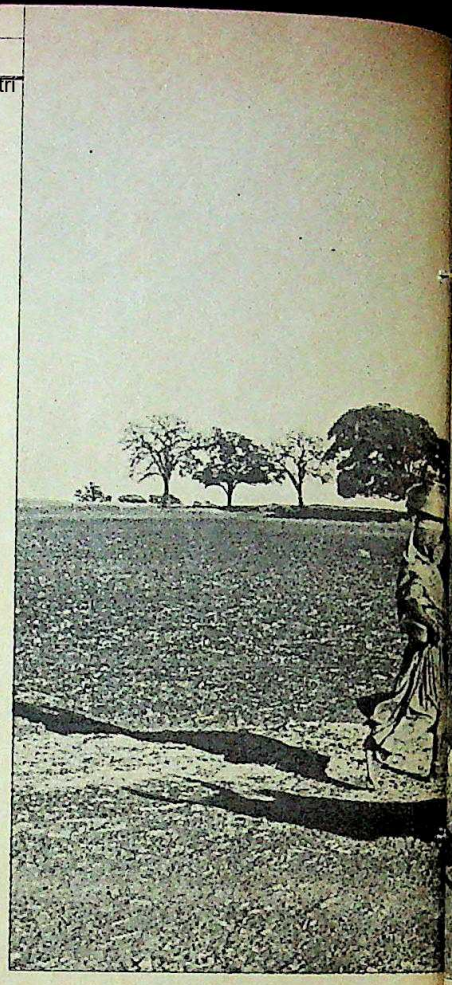
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

with alarming rapidity, the country's goal of providing safe drinking water facilities for the entire rural population by 1991 is turning out to be a hopeless mirage. Early this year the Government was forced to concede that it could cover no more than 85 per cent of the rural population by the end of the decade. And even then the water supply provided would "just meet the bare necessities", as N.K. Seth, Planning Commission adviser, admits.

Probably no official feels the heat of the water supply problem as much as Rural Development Secretary D. Bandyopadhyay, who said frankly: "It isn't as if we are not doing anything about the water problem. We are. But to say that we have solved it is all hogwash. The problem is so huge and resources so scarce that it seems only to grow." While his department pressed for Rs 7,500 crore to be allocated in the seventh plan to provide water in all the villages, the Government sanctioned only Rs 3,500 crore. Naturally only half the target will be met.

It is not as if the Government's massive efforts in the past six years have gone waste. In fact, the handpump programme has been the single most successful method for providing villages with at least one safe water supply source. Since groundwater is usually uncontaminated, it saves engineers the trouble of installing a purification pump and also ensures perennial supply. Thousands of villages across the country are already benefiting from this, and in many drought-hit districts where all the traditional water sources have dried up the handpump is the village's most precious asset.

A rural woman trudges miles for water in Maharashtra



A typical example of how the handpump has brought a quiet revolution into the lives of many women is at Madhurghatta, in Kolar district. Before the Government installed two handpumps a couple of years ago the women had to trudge two km to fetch water from a distant well. But now Yellamma, a mother of two, said: "It now takes me only five minutes to get water from the handpump and I find time to cut grass, feed the cattle and work in the fields."

So in some ways the situation is getting better. After all, half the rural population does have drinking water today, against barely 31 per cent six years ago: the reason for India's performance being rated as outstanding midway through the United Nations' International Drinking Water and Sanitation

WATER-BORNE DISEASES

Heavy Toll

WHAT happens when there is no safe drinking water? Every year, nearly 1.5 million children die in India from diarrhoeal diseases. The World Health Organisation points out that water-borne diseases like diarrhoea, cholera and guinea worm result in the loss of three million mandays every year, while the cost of medical treatment and the production losses due to these estimated at a staggering Rs 450 crore.

That's not all. Eighty per cent of the communicable diseases in the country are spread by contaminated water supply. Some 13 million people in 11,736 villages spread over seven states run the risk of contracting guinea worm, an obnoxious parasite that lodges itself in the skin and then erupts painfully after six weeks. In addition, a large number of villages in 10 states have a high fluoride content in their water, causing malformed bones and broken teeth.

An old woman struck by fluorosis

BHAWAN SINGH

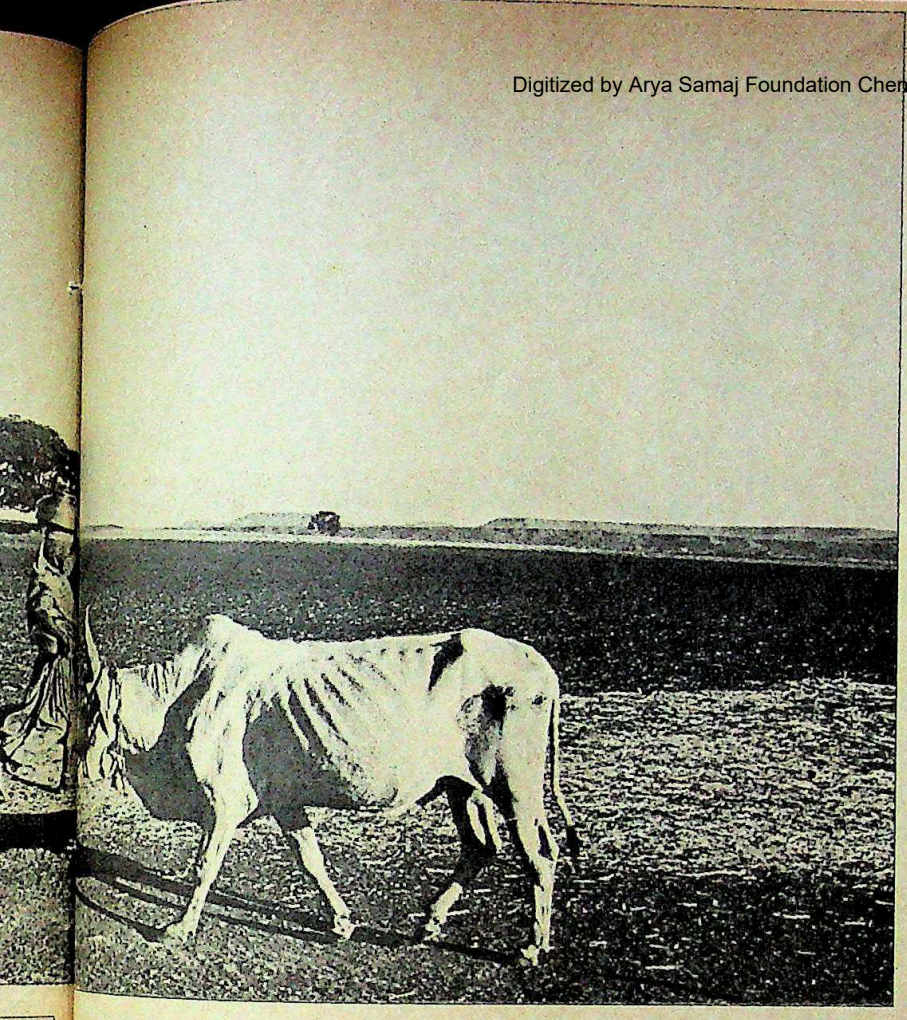
Nowhere is the threat of fluorosis greater than in what is known as the "Banka Patti"(bent strips) belt, spanning eight districts in Gujarat and Rajasthan. Roughly 3.5 lakh inhabitants have already been crippled and the only way to prevent the malady from claiming more victims is to sink borewells in freshwater sites. But that is easier said than done.

On the guinea worm front, the news is more heartening. In the seven affected states—Andhra Pradesh, Gujarat, Karnataka, Madhya Pradesh, Rajasthan and Tamil Nadu—measures are being taken to convert the large number of step wells responsible for the spread of the disease into pulley wells. But the task is stupendous, because there are 11,736 villages in the country affected by guinea worm, and the water scarcity has hampered efforts.

—RAMESH MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Despite massive investments, almost half the total rural population still does not have adequate and safe drinking water facilities.

ale. But the statistics can be misleading what use is one well in a village of a thousands and an area that could be ad over as much as 14 sq km as is metimes the case in Rajasthan? In any the statistics mask the fact that gh there is water, it is only five or 10 s per head per day. Finally, of course, ces that were once wet are going dry. Reclassifying the statistics often gives a r indication of the ground-level truth. es of water supply, collected on the of not villages but hamlets, showed in Karnataka (which has the most ssful borewell programme in the ntry) 6,458 hamlets had no water ply. In Maharashtra the figure was 16 hamlets, and in Tamil Nadu 00. And if there was only one dpump in the village in many inses Harijans were not allowed to use it. Government is now trying to provide a dpump for every 150 people in a ge, and to try and ensure that no one walk more than half a kilometre (the r goal was water within 1.6 km). tics compiled on the basis of these criteria will almost certainly show r less than half the rural population proper access to water.

The handpump scheme itself, meane, has run into problems because of the severe drought, which has resulted in the water table falling in most states. In Rajasthan, the water level in borewells has dropped by more than 20 metres, in Karnataka it averages five and in Madhya Pradesh it is as much as 10 to 15 metres. Now, in a development that would be funny if it wasn't so tragic, the Government's engineers are busy painting the words Paani Kam (little water) on many of the handpumps. In Maharashtra, where the water table has dropped by eight metres, engineers estimate that 25 per cent of the borewells have gone dry, while still others yield very little water. In Tamil Nadu 10 to 15 per cent of the handpumps yield no water.

EACH handpump costs Rs 25,000. In Maharashtra alone, with 20,000 borewells dry, that amounts to a colossal investment of Rs 50 crore gone completely waste. And with drought almost becoming the rule rather the exception (there have been seven droughts in 20 years), the implications for the future of millions of villagers who now have water and soon won't are frightening.

For villages that have come to depend on handpumps, the effects of the great dry are devastating. Water queues have become a common sight, with people waiting for hours for their turn. At Rasta Jakkasandra in Karnataka only one of the two borewells works and water is pumped from it round the clock. Fights among the women over water have become so frequent that the panchayat arbitrates on these disputes and levies fines up to Rs 25 on those who jump the queues. At Amzera in Madhya Pradesh, water is now rationed and each person is allowed to fill only a meagre two pots. Kashiram, who is in charge of maintaining a numbering system said: "We get five litres of kerosene and five litres of water."

The queues and limited availability at each well mean that in most villages people are forced to go to three or four sources to meet their water needs. They use the handpump to get water for drinking and cooking, while for bathing they go to a distant well. For washing clothes the women go to still another well.

Planners have also realised that the problem of providing water for domestic needs is far, far more complex than just ramming borewells all over the country. Although engineers argue that the drinking water schemes will tap barely 5 per cent of the country's total ground-water resources, already there are worrying reports from several districts that irrigation tubewells have made several handpumps go dry.

Last fortnight Sunil Kumar, the bearded collector of Dhar, was roused at 5 a.m. by a caller who complained that he could not use his toilet because there was no water. Kumar, retaining his sense of humour in a situation where most collectors would have called for the superintendent of police, told him: "Hang on, I'm bringing you a bucketful." Kumar could have done little else because the four deep tubewells sunk years ago to supply the town its water have gone dry after farmers sank irrigation tubewells near these.

With the villages being electrified in a big way, many of the rich farmers now sink irrigation wells regularly. In Gujarat's coastal districts, over-exploitation of ground-water resources for irrigation has led to almost half the handpumps yielding saline water because of an ingress of sea water. In all, 1.2 million hectares of land have turned saline, affecting 1.3 million people in 779 villages. In Maharashtra's Ahmednagar district, which saw 8,000 irrigation pump-sets energised last year, officials simply could not strike water in Hingangaon town, where a large number of irrigation tubewells exist. The town now spends Rs 9 lakh a year to bring water by tankers.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

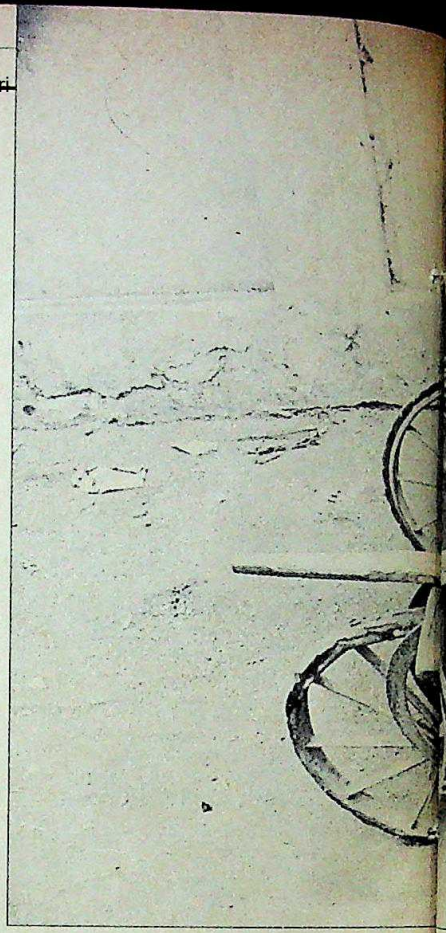
The conflict between irrigation and drinking water is certain to grow. Ground-water is the most widely tapped source for irrigation, accounting for half the country's total irrigated area. In the past six years, 1.25 million irrigation tubewells have been sunk all over the country. Already farmers have tapped 25 per cent of the total groundwater resources available, and in the next five years the Central Groundwater Board plans to tap another 15 per cent.

Several officials are now pressing for a law that regulates the digging of tubewells. Says Bandyopadhyay: "The time has come to treat water as a mined commodity. We can't afford to have a laissez faire policy for water." But getting the states to pass laws is going to be difficult when big farmers form a powerful lobby. And although Gujarat and Tamil Nadu have passed laws to regulate the digging of tubewells, neither state has enforced the law.

Two major problems negate the efforts to provide drinking water. One is the burgeoning population that adds more thirsty mouths every year than the Government can quench. The other is the massive deforestation all over the country, which has resulted in a frightening 1.3 million hectares of forest being mowed down every year. Nowhere is the devastation of forests so visible as in the villages, where the swathes of bare land stretch endlessly. So heavy has been the tree cutting in places that there is no shade for either man or beast for miles on end, and stretches of Madhya Pradesh and Maharashtra that were lush with tree cover now look like the deserts of Rajasthan. With the foliage gone, the rainwater runoff is high and the recharging of both borewells and old dug wells has dropped considerably. Most of the rivers go dry in summer and are now used as public latrines. And the wells get steadily deeper: 100 feet, 200 feet, 300 feet, even 600 feet. At Machar near Pune, the levels have dropped so low and the rope used to draw water so long that people have to run 70 feet with the rope to pull the bucket out.

With the traditional sources of water, like rivers and wells, drying up six months after the monsoon, most villages face a shortage of water for the rest of the year on a recurring annual basis, and as a permanent feature of their changing lives. Indeed, while many villages have lights in



Father and son collecting water in Rajasthan

HYDERABAD

Bucket Battle

HOUSEWIFE Shobha Rao calls it the battle of the buckets. Ali Pasha, an ageing cycle mechanic in the old city, describes it as the "the curse of the Gods". Hyderabad is going through the worst water crisis in its history, and the city's 2.5 million residents get water for two hours every second day. For a while, it was even as bad as once in three days. The authorities had said that a rotation system would ensure sufficient pressure in the water lines, but what has been going up is the Hyderabadis' blood pressure.

An overwhelming majority of Hyderabadis now depend on 4,000 public taps for their water, while 170 tankers ply the city supplying water. All manner of touts have surfaced, charging 50 paise for a bucket. "Water rickshaws" sell a barrel of water for Rs 3. The enterprising have mounted tanks on lorries and are doing brisk business by selling a full load for anything between Rs 100 and Rs 250.

The repeated failure of the monsoons has resulted in a sharp drop in the water level in the the Osmanagar and Himayatsagar reservoirs and in the Manjira river barrage. But the waterworks authorities are to blame too. They made no move to improve their services in the past decade. Manjira was intended to be the main source from 1983. But heavy silting and erratic flow have made it an undependable source and another dam has to be built upstream. The flow of funds for it, however, has been extremely slow. Now they have to spend Rs 130 crores to improve the water supply by 1991. But that is still five years away and till then there is no relief.

—AMARNATH K. MENON

Crowds at a water tanker

RAJASTHAN

Deser

A VILLAGE has its o over s ng the official each villag fficials may c ave "covere ius, but this to the families ant hamlets.

In Agolai, adhpur, the sible from th obviously a v een "covered milies have to on one way ori ki dhaa m the villag s a water pip

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

One reason for this acute situation has been the failure of planners to recognise the problem and tackle it early enough.

r homes and even television sets in e cases, most of them do not have per water supply.

One reason for this acute situation has n the failure of planners to recognise problem and tackle it early enough. Drinking water got virtually no money through the first few five-year plans—less than 1 per cent of the total outlay, in some cases—and even when the money was provided, most of it went to the cities. The disparities are shocking. Madras, which has only 10 per cent of Tamil Nadu's population, has spent Rs 50 crore on water supply since 1980. Per head, those living in the state's villages have got barely a tenth of that in the form of investment in drinking water supply. And the water used by city dwellers is heavily subsidised. While it costs the Bombay Municipal Corporation Rs 8 to supply 10,000 litres of water, Bombayites have to pay only Rs 3. In the next five years Bombay, Delhi, Calcutta, Bangalore and Madras are going to spend Rs 2,000 crore to augment their water supply needs. That is half the total amount set aside in the seventh plan for rural water supply for the whole country.

The irony of it all is that despite these massive investments in the cities, places like Hyderabad face unprecedented water

RAJASTHAN

Desert Mirage

A VILLAGE in the Thar desert often has its dhaanis or hamlets spread over several kilometres, mak- ng the official goal of one water source n each village a mockery. fficials may claim that they ave "covered" a village hus, but this brings no relief o the families living in dis- ant hamlets.

In Agolai, 47 km west of adhpur, the water tank is isible from the main road. It obviously a village that has been "covered", yet half its mmunities have to go seven to 14 m one way to get water. Konri ki dhaani, is 10 km om the village proper and as a water pipe from Agolai. But the pipes have been dry since they were installed a decade ago. In Manmoron ki dhaani, the government-constructed underground tank is bone dry. So half of Agolai's population has had to buy water for most of the year ever since they can remember. The village even has three privately-owned tractor tankers. Kalla Ram of Konri says he pays Rs 70 to Rs 80 every fortnight for a tanker-load of water to meet the needs of his family of 10.

The Government is supposed to provide tankers, but supply is erratic. Of 39 tankers, 12 are perennially out of action. Handpumps invariably fail and piped water is at least 30 times costlier. In many areas tube-wells have to be sunk to a depth of 600 feet, double that of other districts. A common sight in the region is people putting their mouths to leaking pipelines for a little water. Relief for Rajasthan's woes may come with the seven lift schemes of the Indira Gandhi canal, but this vision of abundant water is several years, perhaps decades, away.

—SREEKANT KHANDEKAR

Transporting water in the Thar desert

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

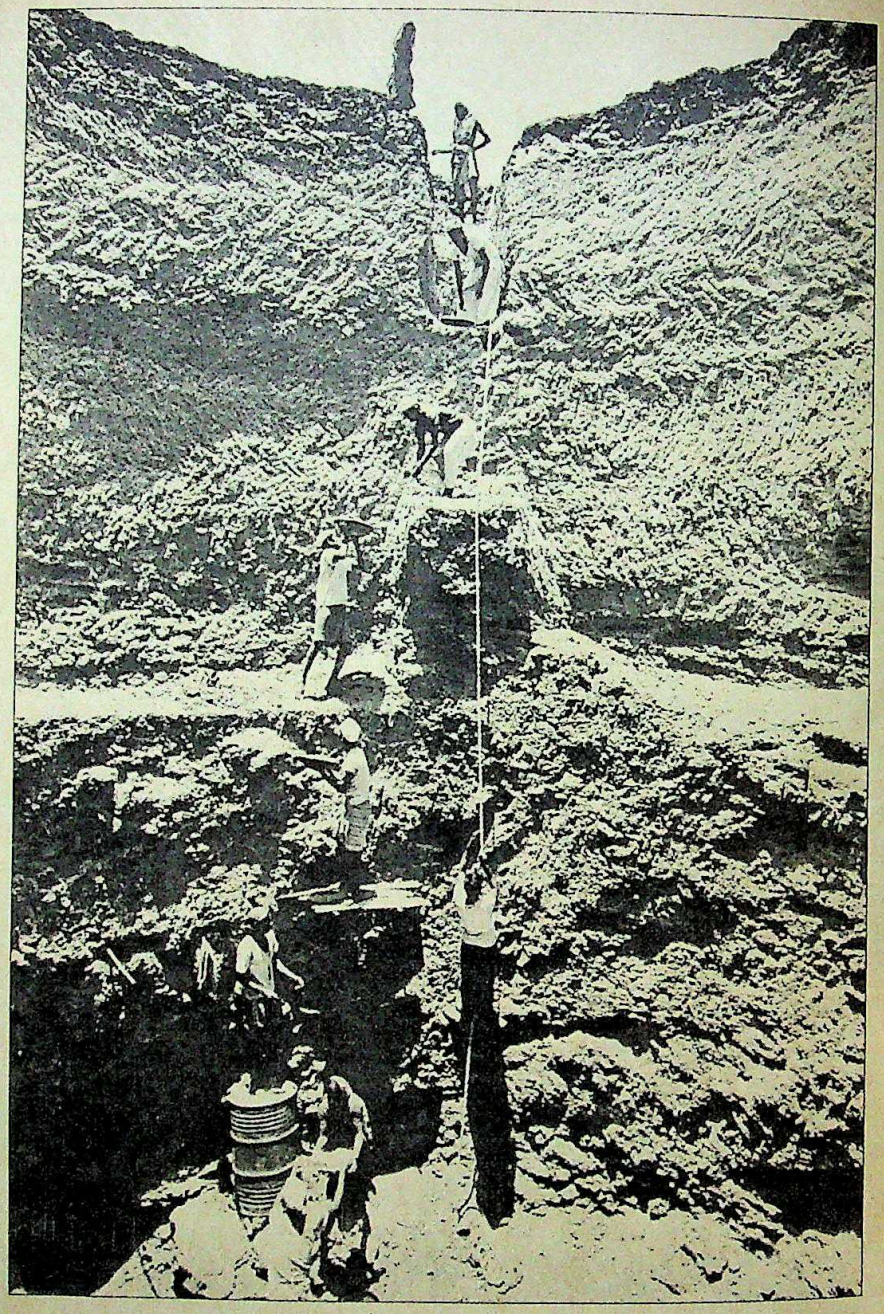
If the drought keeps recurring with the present frequency, the water table in the country will continue to drop and more villages may, in fact, be waterless than is the case today.

shortages (see box). And the smaller towns are in many cases even worse off. In Rajasthan, for instance, a survey done in June 1985 showed that out of its 192 towns only two were providing 40 litres of water per capita daily. In Karnataka, two-thirds of the 243 towns fail to meet the minimum supply standards.

But even the habitations that are supposedly well off in relation to water, according to official statistics, face problems that few governments can handle. In Kishangarh in Rajashthan's Ajmer district, for instance, water was piped five years ago from tubewells bored 16 km away. But this year the source has dried up and the pipeline had to be extended by another 17 km to another source.

Realising that the problem is getting out of hand in both villages and towns, the Government recently launched a "Technology Mission" comprising 22 agencies that includes planners, engineers, environmentalists and scientists to work out low-cost methods for providing water supply. Among their plans is to revive the vast number of traditional sources that have gone dry, apart from devising cheaper ways of providing water as well as purifying it. Said Bandyopadhyay, whose department is the nodal agency for the mission: "It's a bid to stretch the rupee a little longer."

Meanwhile, measures to conserve water are already under way in several states. In Madhya Pradesh, officials have realised that the only way to increase water supply is to have the land afforested and to build small tanks that will catch the water when it rains. In Karnataka, engineers are now devising mini-piped water schemes in which deep tubewells with a discharge equivalent to four handpumps are being sunk, and the water is supplied to villages at the same cost as handpumps. And in Andhra Pradesh, officials have got down to one of the most crucial aspects of the borewell programme: maintenance. Women and youth in villages are given postage-paid green cards to inform engineers when a borewell breaks down; a mobile mechanic team is supposed to reach the village in a couple of days. Engineers now boast that 90 per cent of their borewells are in reasonable working condition.



Digging deep in Maharashtra: falling water level

But even the most optimistic planner is unwilling to paint a rosy picture. Projections into the very popular 21st century suggest that villages may finally get the stipulated per capita supply of 40 litres a day, but will still stay well short of the WHO standard of 70 litres. And they will still be using handpumps. In other words, each villager will have to fill four pots of water and carry it home every day. Sanitation facilities will remain minimal. And, of course, if the current rate of deforestation continues, and the droughts keep recurring with their present frequency, the water table in the country will continue to drop, and more villages may in fact be waterless than is the case today.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Symbol of Growing Indian Confidence

Late forties.
A great civilisation took rebirth as a modern, vibrant nation. It was only during those days, GEEP (then Great Eastern Electroplaters Ltd.), under the pioneering leadership of Late Mr. M.R. Shervani, dedicated itself to the Indian people.

Inspired by the national will of self reliance, GEEP produced the first Indian torch with a total indigenous effort. Later, it added dry cells and miniature bulbs to its product line.

GEEP. Now a vast manufacturing and marketing conglomerate. A product of totally Indian effort. Driven by a philosophy of reliability and care. Care for its shareholders, employees, customers and the society in which it exists.

GEEP
(A Shervani Enterprise)

Geep Industrial Syndicate Limited
A national pride

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Plane Pack/GIS/385

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

S.V. ANJAN BABU

Students at the closed college gates: "financial misadventure"

MEDICAL COLLEGES

Test Case

WHEN medical students at the Central Christian Institute of Medical Sciences in Hyderabad showed up for classes last fortnight, they found the gates shut and armed police standing by. In a swift and sudden move the previous day, the Andhra Pradesh police had 'sealed' the college after the Supreme Court, in a damning verdict, described it as a "financial adventure" for its sponsors, the Andhra Pradesh Christian Medical Education Society (APCMES), and a "financial misadventure" for its 177 students.

In their ruling, the three-judge bench comprising Justices O. Chinnappa Reddy, G.L. Oza and N.K. Singh, summed up the attempt to run the college as a "brazen and bizarre exploitation of the naive and the foolish ready-to-be-duped aspirants for admission to professional collegiate courses, behind the smokescreen of the right of minorities to establish and administer educational institutions of their choice". The judges said the state Government had done right in refusing permission to start the college or grant it university affiliation.

But an incensed APCMES Chairman C.A. Adams charged that "the Government and the police have no right to interfere as the college represents the wishes of the 45 lakh Christians in the state. While respecting the courts, we will appeal to the president and the prime minister to show how we are being deprived of the rights of the minorities." Trapped in the middle were the students. As one student, Rahmatullah, protested: "We have paid huge donations ranging between Rs 1 lakh and Rs 2 lakh to learn medicine. Our hope is that Chief Minister N.T. Rama Rao will show some mercy."

The appeals were eloquent enough but failed to address the fact that APCMES is a classic example of a college being launched without official sanction, and with no affiliation to any university. More important, there was no recognition from the Indian Medical Council—which alone can certify that the college has the requisite facilities. APCMES had claimed recognition on the grounds that it was a minority institution.

The dubious nature of its claims was set out in blunt prose by the judges, who noted in their judgement: "Every letter written by the society, whether to the Central or state Government or the university contained false and misleading statements."

Unfortunately, the unscruplous sponsors can only be charged with taking capitation fees—which are banned in the state—and cheating. Police said that "advance deposits" collected from students were never refunded and an officer observed: "Parents knowing fully well that the college lacks recognition or affiliation, pay the money and get their child admitted. They should be booked for abetting this crime."

In fact, the capitation fee was banned in 1983 by the Telugu Desam ministry which made it mandatory to admit students from the merit list of a common state-wide examination. Said state Health Minister Dr M.S.S. Koteswara Rao: "Our interest is to produce good doctors and not costly quacks. This is possible only by improving medical education and that is why all nine colleges which we took over in April, are part of the University of Health Sciences."

The Deccan Medical College, started in August 1984 by the Darus Salaam Education trust of the Majlis-e-Ittehadul Muslimeen (MIM), also took hefty fees. MIM President Sultan Salahuddin Owaisi got permission for starting the college from the short-lived Bhaskara Rao ministry and Osmania University. Subsequently, university officials found the facilities offered by the college inadequate and compelled them to cut the student intake from 100 to 50. Results improved but the fee was also hiked from Rs 1 lakh to Rs 1.5 lakh.

Later however, investigations by the crime branch revealed a transfer of funds from the college accounts to the MIM. Said a police officer: "Although the transfers are on record, some of them were apparently done to siphon funds out of the college accounts. Even admissions were not wholly on merit or confined to those from minority communities for whom the college was started."

The Government is dead set against any addition to the nine private colleges. Said Koteswara Rao: "There are 2.3 seats for every 100,000 persons in the state as against the national average of 1.75. Among those who have passed out, about 5,000 are jobless. We have no great demand for doctors to increase the number of seats." So if all goes well, the two private managements will not be let off the hook unless, of course, the chief minister's fear of alienating the state's Christian and Muslim communities takes precedence over other factors.

—AMARNATH K. MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Asian Paints: flying regularly across the Pacific Ocean

Asian Paints has set up paint factories abroad. At Fiji, Tonga, Solomon Islands and neighbouring Nepal. The same technology that wins in the international market place also goes into every can of our paint you buy in India.

Asian Paints has been the largest paint company in India since 1967. Achieving leadership was a proud moment for us; but it was only a moment in our quest for excellence.

asian paints

Leadership through excellence

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

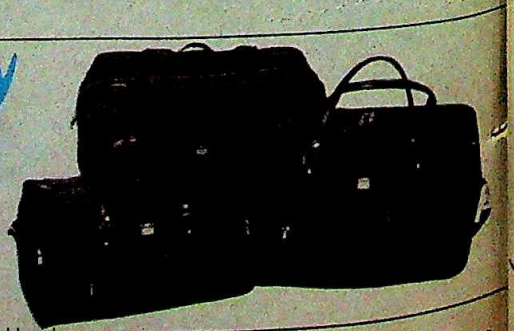
Courtesy Panjab Digital Library

The world is going soft today

... and feeling lighter for it!

Now Skybags brings the Soft Revolution to India. VIP's exciting new range of nylon luggage is the ultimate in travelling style and comfort. Fashioned from strong, tear-resistant nylon, Skybags are light-weight, roomy, beautifully functional and sensationally tough. So before you pick your next destination, pick your Skybags ... and you'll be off to a flying start!

Skybags



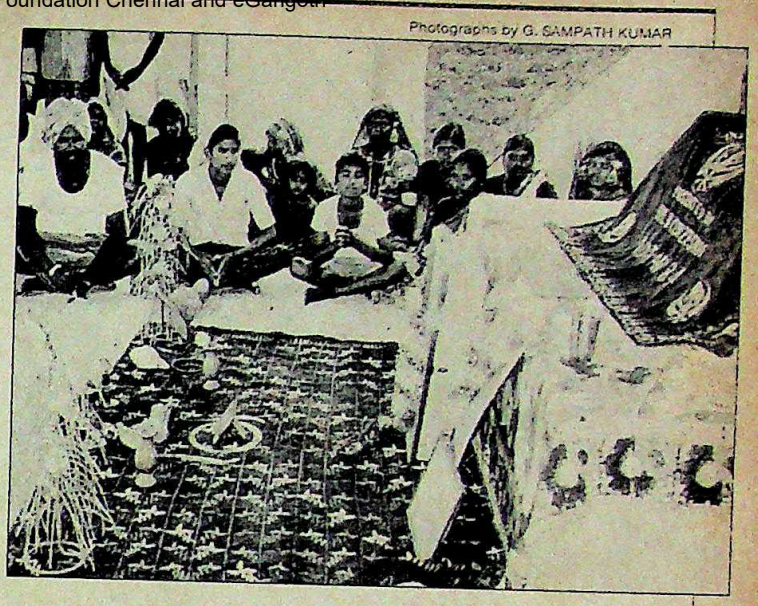
SOFT • STRONG • STYLISH

Nylon luggage from the leader VIP

LINTAS VIP S 8 2720

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Photographs by G. SAMPATH KUMAR

Banjara Sikhs (left); and Pritam Singh's family at prayer: social stirring

BANJARAS

Embracing Sikhism

LINGAYA Naik, 14, religiously attends the local gurudwara though, as he admits: "I do not know what Sikhism means." His ignorance is understandable. Naik is a young banjara boy, one of a growing number that Sikhism is slowly but surely drawing into its fold from the three million banjaras of Andhra Pradesh.

The predominantly pastoral banjaras have kept a low profile for centuries, despite isolated cases moving to towns for a living as cheap construction labour. And life has remained unchanged even for them—just above or below the poverty line. Now, however, they seem to be in search of a new identity, and increasingly turning to Sikhism.

Surprisingly, the phenomenon is not sudden or catalysed by any social happenstance. According to Pritam Singh, the illiterate banjara-Sikh strongman of Raja Naik Tanda (Tanda being the normal Banjara habitat distinct from a village): "We have been told that the ninth and tenth Sikh gurus, Tegh Bahadurji and Gobind Singhji, are our own gurus and that is why we have adopted Sikhism." Ravindra Naik, a former Congress(I) minister and a banjara, agrees, but maintains that "nothing substantive has been found in historical records" to support this.

At the same time, the banjaras-turned-Sikhs continue to offer prayers to the silver figure of Maramma, a malevolent deity who may or may not ravage the Tandas by spreading epidemics at will. However, Bahadur Singh, a college drop-out of Somal Naik Tanda in Warangal district, is more positive about conversion. Says he: "Sikhism teaches us to be disciplined and we banjaras have a lot to learn from it."

Sociologists investigating the unusual phenomenon of a community adopting a religion quite alien to its culture, suspect a social rather than political or religious stirring. According to Ravindra Naik, the real cause is the banjaras' poverty-stricken condition. Since they live isolated lives in Tandas, making themselves relatively less accessible to government developmental agencies, Tandas like Raja Naik have begun to boast of a new gurudwara while residents are yet to get ration cards.

That the phenomenon is entirely self-induced can be judged by the fact that there is no distinct upswing in the geographical spread of the process of conversion. According to the General Secretary of the Hyderabad Sriguru Singh Sabha, Surjit Singh Bagga: "It has been a trickle for the last 10 to 15 years." Neither he nor the banjara Sikhs nor even tribal welfare officials have any estimates of the number of converts. In fact, several officials were unaware of this development until asked about it.

Most converts, however, do seem concentrated in Nalgonda and Warangal districts. And Sikh organisations in Hyderabad are now taking notice of the latest recruits to their religion. Last January, in a whirlwind tour of the two districts, Baba Joginder Singh of Nanded's Huzur Sahib Gurudwara promised any help that might be needed. And says Bagga: "The belief that there is no social inequality has attracted them to Sikhism and it is in our religion to make sure that no Sikh begs in the streets. So, we help them in many ways for better education, religious training and gurudwara management."

All this is very well, but the conversion seems to be robbing the colourful banjaras of their cultural identity. Their women have started discarding their hallmark three-piece cotton skirts embroidered with tiny round mirrors, as also their traditional ornaments, including the cord of cowries and beads that hang from the waist and the chodus or horn bangles that completely cover their arms. Instead, they have switched to cotton or cheap polyester sarees and glass bangles. And the men have added the turban and the kara to their dress.

Some of the banjaras have even changed their names—Hamja is Rattan Singh and Khimma is Khadak Singh. As primary schoolteacher Somi Reddy of Raja Naik Tanda says: "These banjaras do not want to be ignored. After all, they were denotified as tribals in the Northern Telengana region in 1956 and recognised officially as tribals only since 1976." With a slow but distinct increase in the number of converts, the question of whether the outward changes in looks and names are a lasting socio-religious phenomenon is merely academic. The banjaras are a community in search of itself and the growing ranks of converts suggest that their search has ended at the doors of the gurudwara.

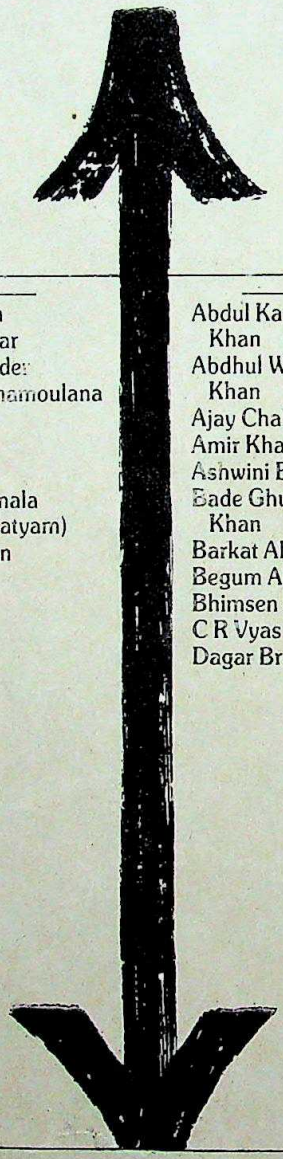
—AMARNATH K. MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It's hard deciding which part of HMV's Indian Classical Music offer is more attractive. The part you pay for. Or the part that comes free.

Listed below are 80 of the greatest artistes whose music is indispensable to a connoisseur's collection. You can now complete your collection because we've made sure their work is freely available. And in doing so, you can take home a unique, collector's piece with the compliments of HMV.



Instrumental

Abdul Halim Jaffar Khan
Ali Ahmed Hussain
Ali Akbar Khan
Alla Rakha/Zakir Hussain
Allauddin Khan
Amjad Ali Khan
Arjun Shejwal
Bhajan Sopari
Birju Maharaj (Kathak)
Bismillah Khan
Brij Bhushan Kabra
Buddhadev Dasgupta
Budhaditya Mukherjee
Chitti Babu
Hafiz Ali Khan
Hariprasad Chaurasia
Imrat Khan
Jnan Prakash Ghosh/V Balsara
Kunnakudi R Vaidyanathan
Lalgudi G Jayaraman
Manohar Chimote
M S Gopalakrishnan
Nikhil Banerjee
Dr N Rajam
Pannalal Ghosh
Ram Narain
Ravi Shankar
S Balachander
Sheik Chinnamoulana
Shivkumar Sharma
V G Jog
Vyjayanthimala (Bharat Natyam)
Vilayat Khan

Vocal

Abdul Karim Khan
Abdhul Waheed Khan
Ajay Chakraborty
Amir Khan
Ashwini Bhide
Bade Ghulam Ali Khan
Barkat Ali Khan
Begum Akhtar
Bhimsen Joshi
C R Vyas
Dagar Brothers
Dinkar Kaikini
D V Paluskar
Faiyyaz Khan
Girija Devi
Hirabai Barodekar
Pt Jasraj
Jitendra Abhisheki
Kesarbai Kerkar
K G Ginde
Kishori Amonkar
Kumar Gandharva
Lalith Rao
Madurai Mani Iyer
Malini Rajurkar
Mallikarjun Mansoor
Manas Chakraborty
Dr M Balamurali Krishna
M S Subbulakshmi
Mughubai Kurdikar
Nazakat Ali/ Salamat Ali
Nirmala Devi/ Laxmi Shankar
Omkarnath Thakur
Parween Sultana
Prabha Atre
Rajan/Sajan Misra
Sankaran Nambudiri
Shobha Gurtu
Sulamangalam Sisters
Master U Srinivas

By Aug. 10, 1986 buy seven LPs or cassettes or any combination of these. On each, you will find a special coupon, like the one shown here.

HMV

ENTITLEMENT TOKEN
HMV's INDIAN CLASSICAL MUSIC FESTIVAL
1986
CLASSICAL MUSIC OF INDIA

Just mail seven of these (with your name and address, indicating your preference of LP or cassette for the special gift) to HMV, P O Box 699, Calcutta 700 001. And we will send you, absolutely free, a collection of the rarest classical recordings that have never been available.

Join HMV's Indian Classical Music Club. We'll keep you informed about the glorious Indian Classical movement — with the compliments of HMV.

Name _____

Address _____

Mail to HMV's Indian Classical Music Club, P O Box 699, Calcutta 700 001.

HMV

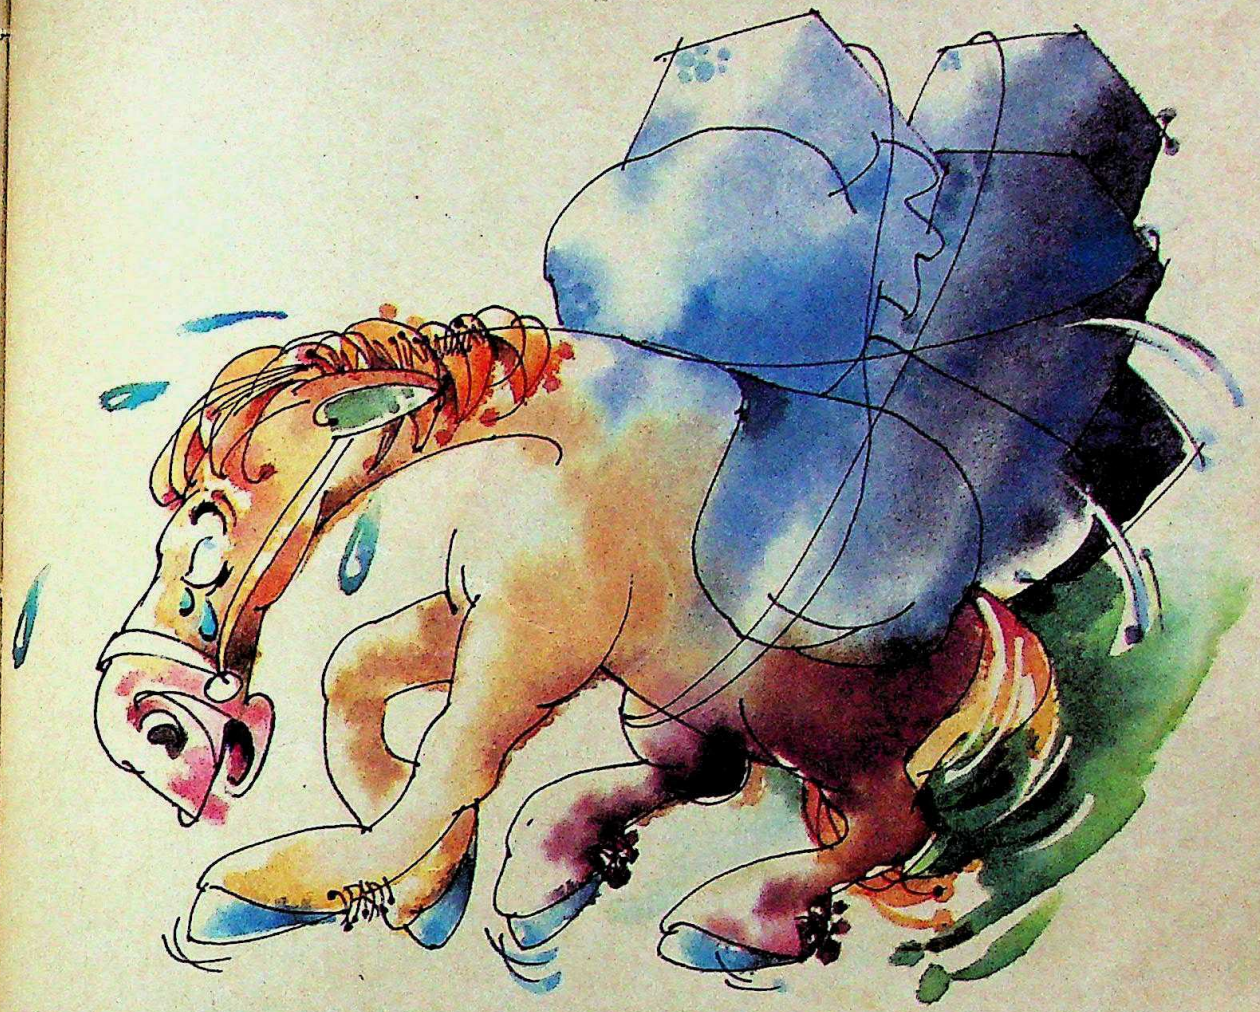
YOUR GUIDE TO GOOD MUSIC

Nexus/GCI/73a

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Buying a micro?



Make sure you don't get a Pony Computer

Business computing is serious business. Hardware is important – you want to make sure you don't get stuck with a Pony Computer. Real-life applications need real processing power. Power that is usable. Power that is available where your work needs it. Power that grows as your needs grow. To paraphrase a famous quotation, "No manager ever made a mistake by overestimating the computing needs of an organisation". You want real growth – about ten times where you start, for computers grow on an organisation as their benefits start to flow. You want modular growth – so you pay only for what you need, as your needs grow. You want to see growth with compatibility – not disruptive replacement of computers because they've run out of pony-power. You'll get real power from the B-25 – lots of it and plenty of room to grow!

So, when you buy a computer, make sure you don't get stuck with a Pony.

Tata Burroughs Limited

We provide total solutions

Shilpi TBL 7/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FILMS

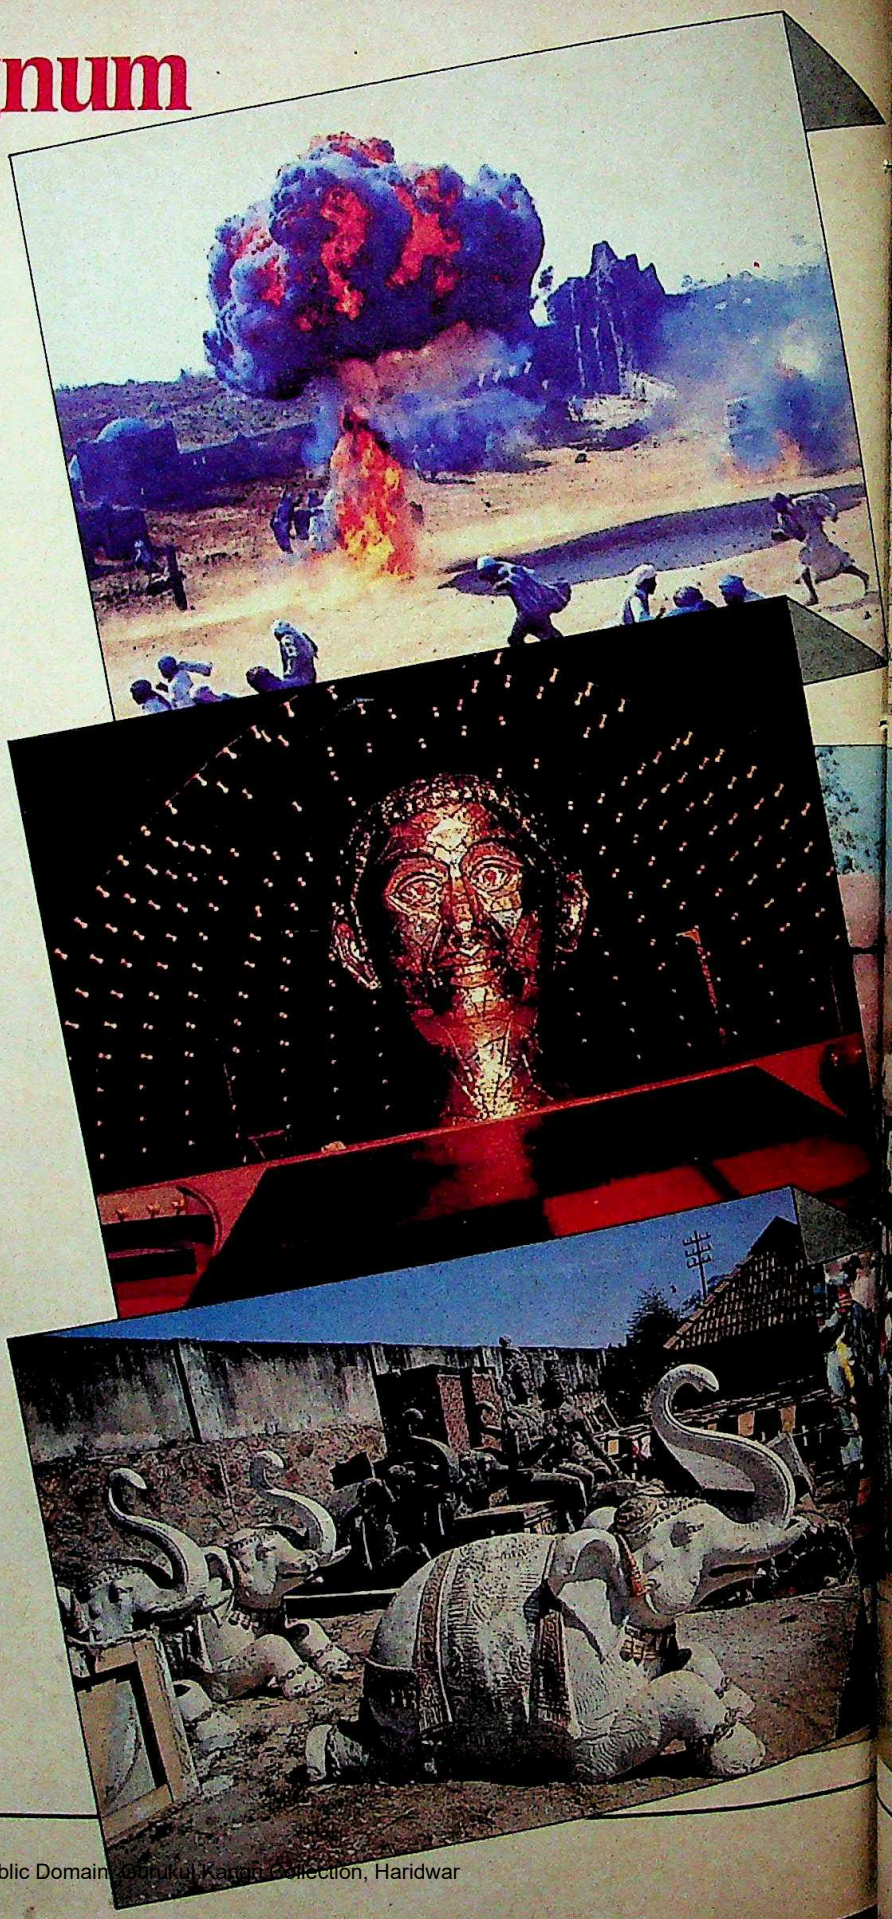
Opus Magnum

BEJEWELLED kings and queens quick-stepping their way through gargantuan palaces and arenas. Camels galloping across endless deserts, and horses pounding across rocky Afghan landscapes. Caves and caverns, domes and pleasure gardens. India's film producers have transported themselves into a Brobdingnagian world—albeit of plaster of paris—where the ghost of Cecil B. De Mille smiles benignly down as the sweep of a director's wand commands megasets to instantly appear.

Big is now beautiful, and the bigger the better. In the studios of Bombay, Madras, and now Hyderabad, it is magnum opus time. Prodded awake by the myriad television soap operas and the raiders from the video world, movie moghuls are hitting back through studio-generated, sheer outsize fantasy. In Sultanat, acres of sand has been trucked in from Juhu beach to transform the studio into a vast desert. A huge arena resembling the Colosseum in Rome dominates the sets of Singhasan. Domes and minarets and rocky crags tower over the cast of Paley Khan. And in the Hyderabad-made block-buster Pataal Bhairavi, a series of huge caves forms the main backdrop for the film's story-line.

Construction work never ceases at Bombay's Film City Studio to create new worlds. For Sultanat, producer Arjun Hingorani hired two bulldozers to clear about 16 acres in Film City, after which 400 truckloads of sand were brought in to create a desert in the middle of Bombay. Ramesh Sippy carved out a slice of Lahore life with his huge magnificent sets for his TV serial Buniyad, the solid wood for which came from the huge bridge from his film Saagar. The 'Lahore ki gali' will dominate the studio for quite a while: Buniyad has 104 episodes.

Other Amazonian-minded artists, who have also been quick to cash in on the new trend, are concentrating on more permanent structures. The hauntingly-beautiful, salmon pink palace made for Nagina dominates the entrance to Film City Studio in Bombay. A massive, but ancient-looking bridge is being built a few hundred yards away. Astride a small hill, a 40-foot plaster of paris and wood temple is under furious construction. The universe is now for hire. As is religion. The carved temple dominates the undulating



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

...scape of Film City; it would not be at ...surprising if people begin to flock to this ...le and worship for real, so complete is ...llusion. Bits of the universe are also ...portable. Film City Studio has just ...ght a complete courtroom set from ...i Narang for Rs 1 lakh and is in the ...ess of transporting it from Delhi—...re the film for which it was con...ted was shot—to Bombay. Courts, ...les, exteriors of jails and hospitals—...e are all necessary ingredients for ...ma.

...But big is also mammothly expensive, ...the new urge for megasets is making a ...kery out of film budgets. Sultanat cost ...n Hingorani nearly Rs 3 crore—the ...alone added Rs 25 lakh to the final ...ng. G. Hanumanth Rao's Singhasan ...a Rs 3 crore indulgence and the sets, ...a permanent fixture in his Padmalya ...ios in Hyderabad, set him back by nearly Rs 50 lakh. Shakti Samanta spent over Rs 10 lakh to erect his Afghan village in Bombay's Film City Studio. And just the palace for Nagina cost a mind-boggling Rs 4 lakh. The bridge will eat away Rs 25 lakh; the contractors of illusion in Bombay have begun to build more permanent assets for the dream machine that Film City Studio has become.

...mes from the new blockbusters ...vealing the new trend in indoor ...ing on gigantic sets; big is beautiful

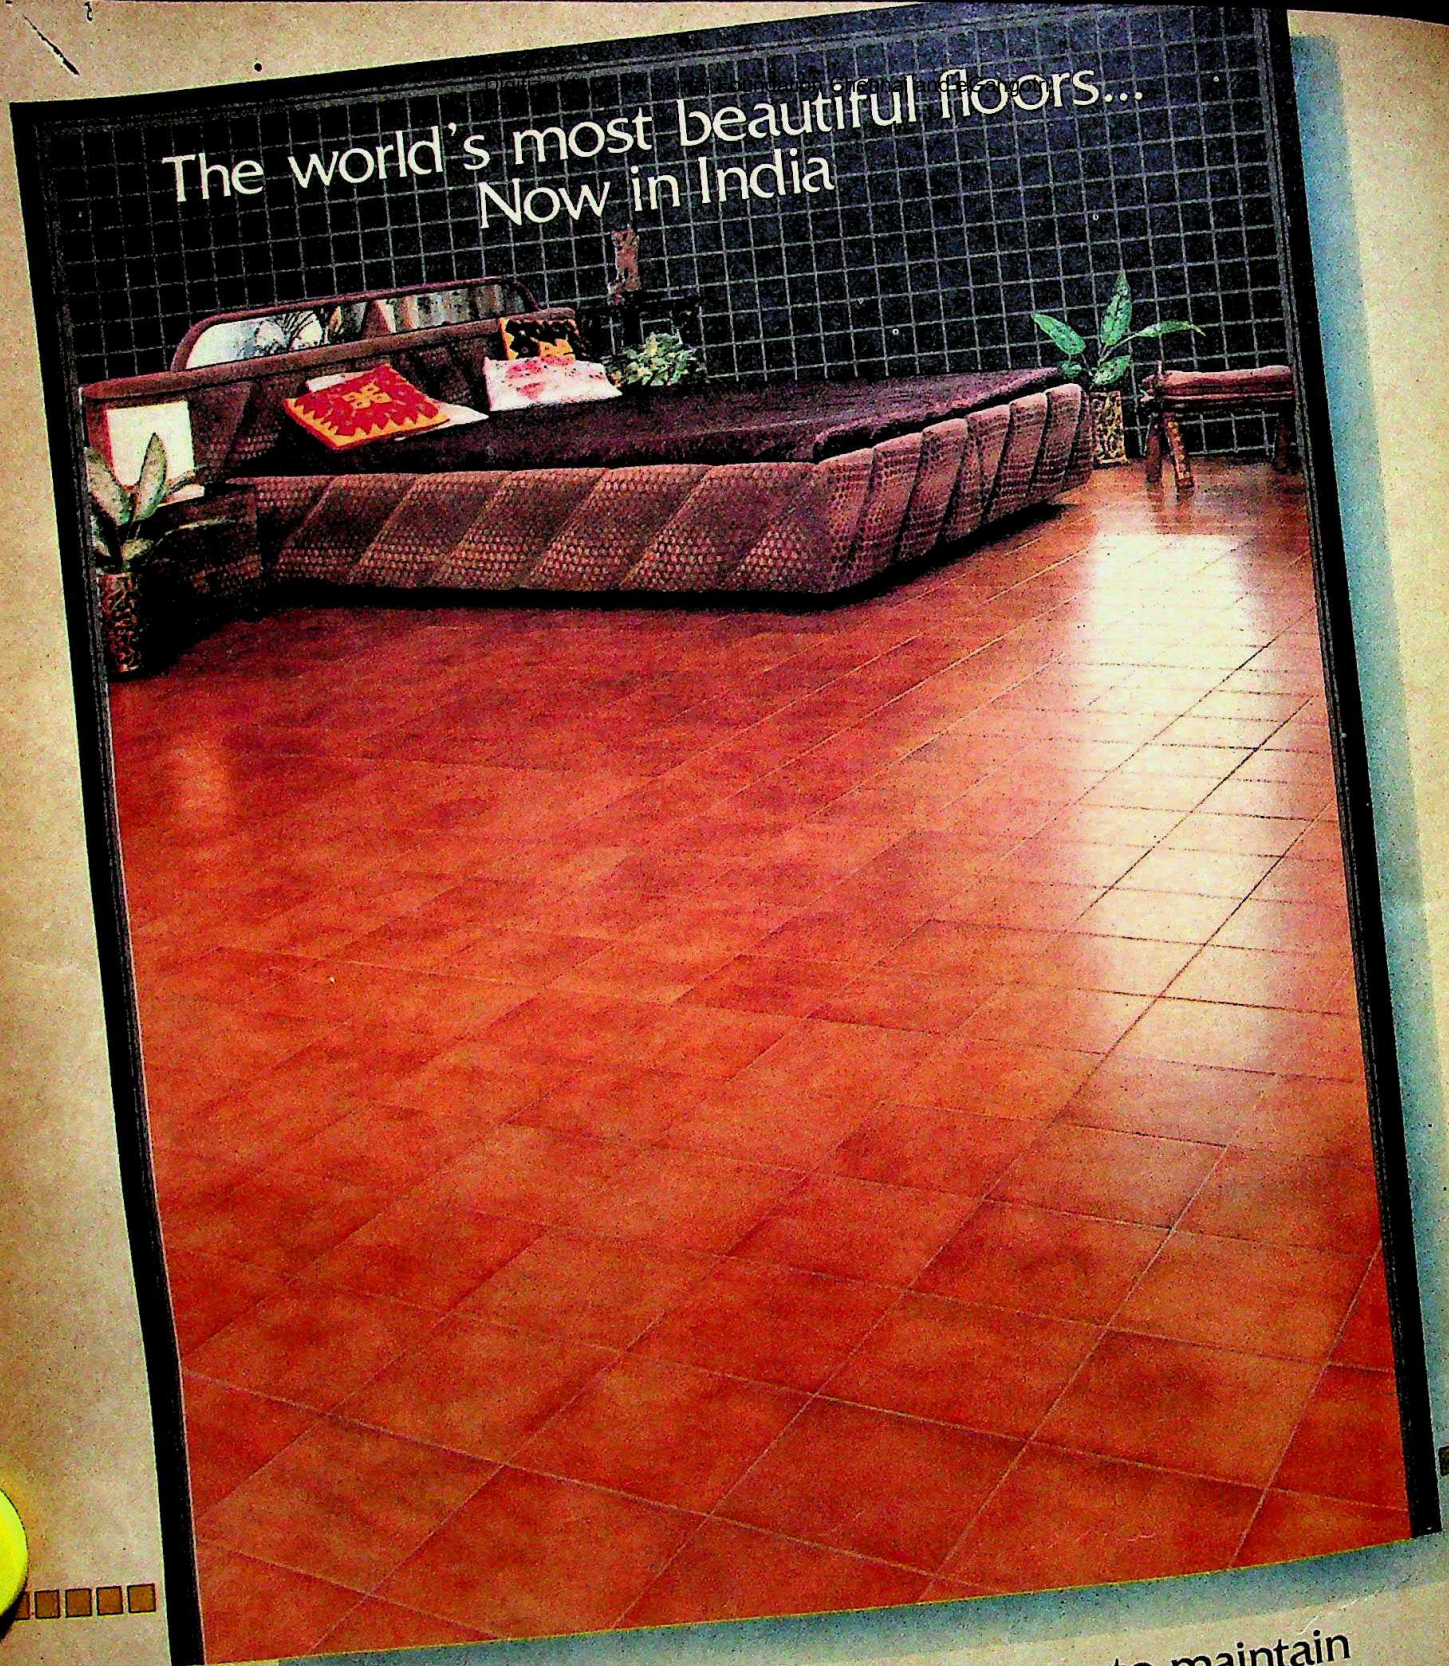
BUT THE moghuls seem oblivious to the expense in the belief that what the audience wants, and the way to beat the video invasion, is to return to the '50s, the once forgotten era of gigantic sets and the sweeping grandeur of mythology and romantic history, as best illustrated by block-busters like Mughal-e-azam and Pakeezah. Says Hanumantha Rao: "We think that costume dramas and historical films are the next popular phase." His next film, about the Vijayanagar empire, is estimated to cost Rs 2 crore.

In Madras, the budgeting is more systematic with the concept of time-sharing having been worked out down to the last detail. In Kodambakkam, where gargantuan studios like Vijay-Vahini, AVM and Prasad studios are lined up end to end, myriad films revolve around one community set. On one morning last fortnight, the sets originally made for Dwarka Chitra had already since been used for three Telugu films and one Tamil film. The Rs 50 lakh sets of Singhasan in Hyderabad's Padmalaya Studios are now being used for the Kannada film Luv and Kush. South Indian producers can thus afford to be lavish with their sets, complete with winding staircases, genuine antique chandeliers, and lavishly-decorated rooms. There is more of studio props and less of the painted backdrops which Bombay often tries to get away with. The wood and chintz are for real.

Madras also offers outsize and expensive fantasy in its sets. Those gigantic, almost blinding sequined billboards with shimmering mermaids in bottles, the twinkling earrings of Sridevi which can make you miss a turn, tears so large a person can drown in them are only mirror

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



SPARTEK FLOORS: Elegant, tough, easy to maintain

SPARTEK FLOOR TILES are now made in India, in collaboration with CeramicUS of USA...leaders in ultra-modern Ceramic technology. Technology that offers you unlimited decor options - in terms of colours, designs, textures, sizes and shapes - in a flooring material that has the most advanced physical anti-wear properties till date. Including the incredible advantage of being so easy to lay that it's ready for live-in use in a matter of 48 hours.

For more details write to:
SPARTEK CERAMICS INDIA LIMIT
52 CHAMIERS ROAD,
MADRAS 600 028.

SPARTE
Now made in India in collabora with Ceramic

LINTAS M SCL 7 2720

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The sets for Singhasan (top) Paley Khan (centre) and Nagina: back in business images of the sets. Most irresistibly outlandish is AVM's 12-ft-high silver head around which the nimble-footed Kamalhaasan dances for a Telugu film; before him another hero pranced under it for a Tamil film. The head, made out of aluminium foil that is wrapped around mud and plaster of paris, looks like a cross between a Buddha and a Martian. The jigsaw puzzle face with its luminous red eyes and outsize ears with the Greek god curls at the back stands under twinkling green lights, a hallucinating vision in which Greco-Buddhist kitsch has become mixed up with creatures from science fiction films.

But the big question is whether big will prove bountiful as far as the box-office is concerned. Sultanat and Paley Khan were made on the same site with different sets. Hanumantha Rao's Singhasan in Hindi as well as Sultanat have fared poorly. Says Ramgopal: "Since we needed to make an Arabia we needed big sets and grandeur. We had to have a desert, a fort...I have spent so much on this film, it will either break or make me."

Whether that happens or not, the magnum opus syndrome has breathed new life back into the Bombay film studio industry. Until a few months ago, these studios wore a rather desolate look with the film industry in a period of crisis. With a host of Bombay directors switching to the more lucrative television serials, the studios received a much-needed transfusion just in time and are now back in business, dividing their time between serials and the big screen. With the new trend towards megasets, more and more directors now prefer indoor to outdoor shooting. Or at least re-creating the needed bits of the universe outdoors, within the confines of well equipped Film City. After all, why go to Arabia when it can be brought to the studio floor? The Indian film industry, despite the hiccoughs induced by the small screen and video, seems all set to quite literally hit the big time.

—MADHU JAIN in Bombay

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Don't be left out in the dark!

Book your Little Genie® generator now. Right now!

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

...e was a time when the "power problem" meant those ...ting 'cuts' during your favourite TV programme. But that ...n became a regular feature. So did spending a long, hot ...mmer without a fan. Or seeing your children struggle with ...r homework by candlelight.

...some people, the price of power failure is much ...ier. Many a shop owner has to face the fact that no ...er most often means no business. In some unfortunate ...s the cost can be as dear as life itself. In a hospital or ...ing home, for instance.

...One look around you could make you feel you're back ...e Dark Ages. So how do you light things up again?

...e magic answer

...e Little Genie from Birla Yamaha.

...mpact, portable, fuel-efficient generator, that puts ...er at your command, when you want it... where you ...t it.

...ke sure you get your Little Genie generator when you ...t it, book right away.

...re are four models to choose from. All products of ...rational quality, backed by an efficient service network. ...Genie generators come with a 1 year guarantee. ...n assurance of prompt after-sales service.

...l, initially, be introducing two models. The Little ...e 900. And the Little Genie 2000. Later this year, we will ...you the Little Genie 600 and the Little Genie 2800.

...e generators, with outputs ranging from 0.5 KVA to ...VA, can make light of a power problem anywhere. At ...e. In shops, clinics, petrol pumps, banks, offices, video ...urs. And even outdoors. In film/video shooting units, ...ce camps or mobile vans.

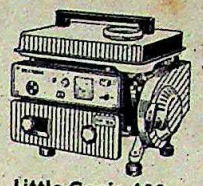
...s more, each of these models also provides a DC ...t. to facilitate charging of batteries, wireless sets, etc.

...wait until dark!

...se days of power shortage and failure, the demand ...rtable generators is indeed tremendous. So, if you ...a generator, book now. Leaving it for later may leave ...e in the dark. And that's something you don't want, ...u?

...ng for Little Genie generators is now open. So book ...own Little Genie now. If you book before May 31, ...you don't even have to pay an advance! Just a ...al registration fee of Rs.100/-.

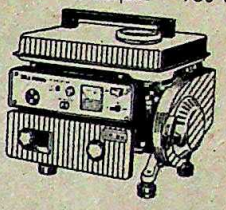
...e to us. We'll mail you the product literature and ...egistration form too. After that, it won't be long ...e the Little Genie brings its magic into your life!

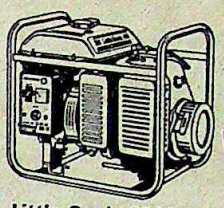


Little Genie 600
Max. AC output — 500 VA

1 2 3 4

Little Genie 900
Max. AC output — 780 VA





Little Genie 2000
Max. AC output — 1700 VA

Little Genie 2800
Max. AC output — 2600 VA

Special Introductory Offer!
No advance required on orders booked before 31st May, 1986.

BIRLA YAMAHA LTD.
...ial Sales Manager, A-7, Ring Road, South Extension Part-I, ...i 110 049.
...693183/694097/617861. Telex: 31 66872 TCL IN.

...w! Bring the Little Genie into your life!

Sista's-BY-37/86 C

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HOUSE OF JAIPUR

The Royal Rift

ANOTHER royal rift is in the making—this time in the legendary house of Jaipur. Gayatri Devi, the erstwhile queen mother and 'Bubbles'—Lt-Colonel Bhawani Singh—appear to have parted ways. A recent suit filed in the Delhi High Court by Jagat Singh, Bhawani's stepbrother and Gayatri Devi's son, for partition and rendition of accounts, signals the beginning of a right royal battle that will effectively split one of India's best known former ruling families.

The battle lines are already drawn. On one side, Bhawani, recognised as ruler of Jaipur by the President of India in 1970 before the abolition of royal privileges, and his wife Padmini Devi. Ranged against them are Gayatri Devi, the queen mother and a former parliamentarian, and Bhawani's stepbrothers Jagat Singh, Jai Singh and Prithvi Raj. The bone of contention is a property whose value simply defies imagination.

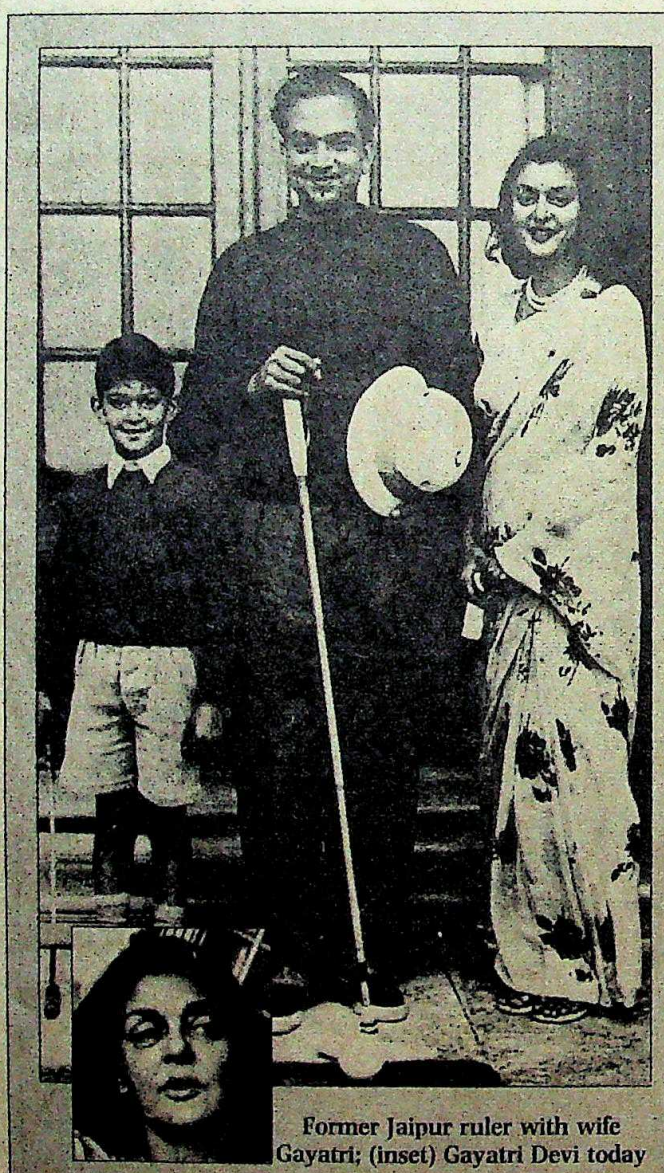
The 121-page long list of moveable properties accompanying the petition makes fascinating reading because it gives some indication of the wealth accumulated over the centuries. Some of the more priceless assets are:

- Thirty-six diamond, gold, emerald and ruby objects, categorised as dynastic jewellery.
- Ten items for which exemption has been sought under the Wealth Tax Act. Among these is a pair of emerald drops (74.75 carats); two carved emerald beads (732 carats); two pieces of gold and enamel pendants studded with 18 pieces of emeralds, 16 flat diamonds and "some very cheap pearls and rubies" (gross weight 82.200 gm).
- The tally of objects for which exemption has been claimed under the Estate Duty Act includes more than 175 daggers, expensive walking sticks, mirrors, pendants and even a back scratcher.
- The sum of disputed cash and bank balances amounts to about Rs 83 lakh.
- Shares in about a dozen firms plus Rs 62.20 lakh as capital balance in the Jaipur Land Development Corporation.

Also under dispute are Jaipur House in New Delhi, Jaipur House in Mt Abu, Viman Bhavan in Sawai Madhopur and a portion of the enormous City Palace in Jaipur. However, of considerably more value are vast chunks of land scattered in prime locations within Jaipur, which are disputed but cannot be touched because nearly all of the plots are locked in land ceiling disputes with the state Government. The Urban Land Ceiling Regulation Act barred the holding of more than 1,500 sq metres by anyone in Jaipur. To get around this clause Bhawani showed almost all the property as owned by the Hindu Undivided Family (HUF) with himself as the karta. But with intra-family disputes sharply escalating over the last few months, he was forced to write to the urban land ceiling authorities claiming that all the lands were owned by him personally and not by the HUF.

Quite predictably, the authorities asked the former maharajah to explain why he was claiming a change of ownership 10 years after filing the initial returns. They have also demanded a reply to whether there has been any concealment or wrong provision of information about ownership in the past. The authorities claim that Bhawani's land holding within the city amounts to an incredible 4.33 million sq metres. Bhawani, however, insists that it is much less.

The immovable property under litigation also includes a centrally-located 10-acre plot gifted by Bhawani Singh to the state Government during the Janata years to build a conference hall for the 250th



Former Jaipur ruler with wife Gayatri; (inset) Gayatri Devi today

A recent suit filed in the Delhi High Court by Jagat Singh, Gayatri Devi's son, signals the beginning of a right royal battle that will split one of India's best known former ruling families.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

niversary celebrations of the Pink City. t as it transpired, the Government ed out the plot to the Birlas at an surdly low rental to construct a plane- rium and research centre. The matter of e allotment is also in court.

Though the family feud has become blic only over the last nine months, the gins go back to three years ago when dmini Devi moved to Jaipur from Delhi. e grapevine has it that relations be- een the mother-in-law and ughter-in-law, the former ncess of the ruling family Sirmur in Himachal Pra- h, have been strained for a g time, and trouble was ected when they became ighbours.

Soon after, Padmini i's brothers Amarendra ingh Pal and Prabhu Jyoti gh also arrived in Jaipur. arendra became Bhawa- controller of properties, a ion of enormous clout, rally resented by other y members. Matters e to a head in late August when the former maha- gave Padmini Devi a ral power of attorney regard to all properties. months later, on Octo- 1, Padmini Devi wrote to dministrator of the Jai- Municipal Council com- ing that bogus pattas issued by "unauthoris- ersons" for land owned r husband.

ile none of the family ers were available for ent, according to Ja- plaint, Bhawani has naged and misused operties, and as a result financial liabilities accrued.... The deman- the Income Tax and Tax Departments vis the suit properties have p over the years to the crores of rupees."

senting the power of ney given to Padmini Jagat has expressed at "the suit properties be frittered away and . He has also made ther plaints: one for a sale of any property has been granted by elhi High Court and another for the appointment of a court receiver to manage the properties.

According to insiders, attempts were made before the suit was filed, to negotiate a compromise. Gayatri Devi and the other complainants wanted Bhawani to fulfil three conditions. They demanded a say in the management of the assets, revocation of the power of attorney to Padmini Devi and the literary banishment of Amarendra and his brother from court.

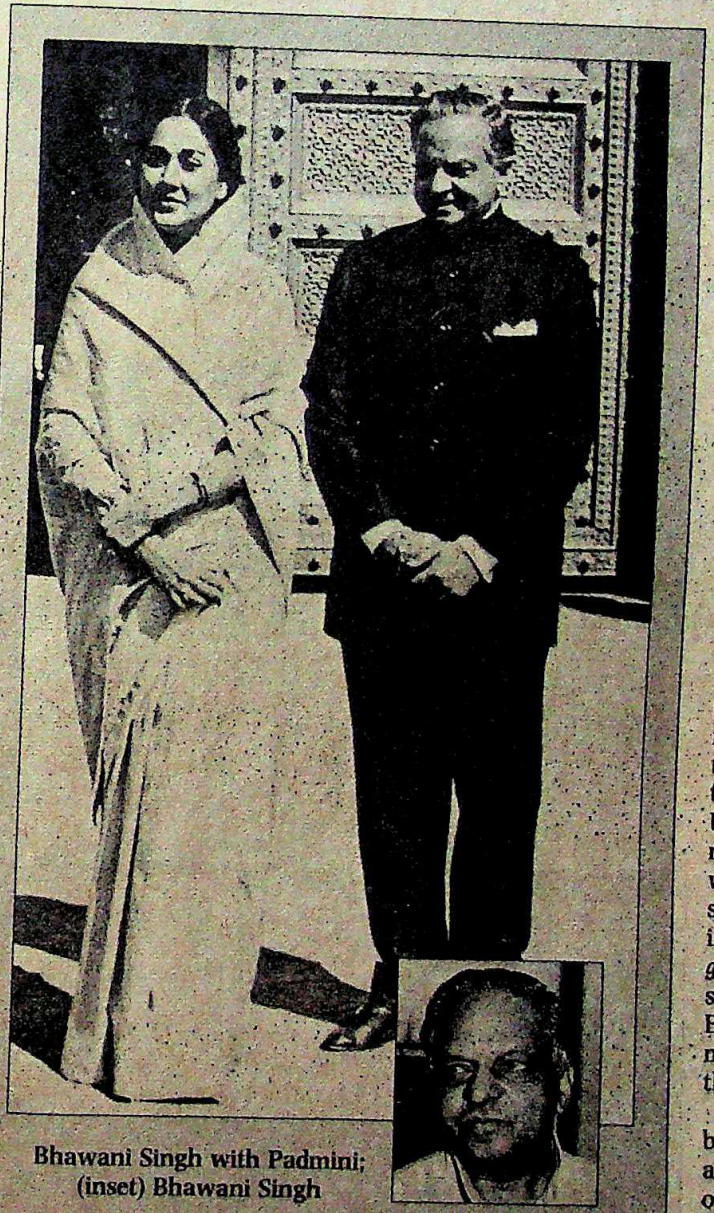
But negotiations broke down as Bhawani was unwilling to concede to the demands. Contributing to the deadlock the former maharajah's adversaries attempted while the negotiation process was on to partition shares in five companies—shares which they said were held by the HUF. To stall proceedings Bhawani was forced to take the decison of the board of directors to court. Amarendra claimed that in spite of the court order, the board meeting (a council of all family members) was held and a resolution for the transfer of shares passed. "This amounts to contempt of court," he charged, adding "action may have to be taken accordingly."

The whole point of the dispute is whether or not the property worth millions of rupees belongs solely to an individual or the family. Jagat argues that when their father, Sawai Man Singh died in 1970, Bhawani took possession of the assets on behalf of all members as the karta. The property he says has been assessed on the basis of this claim.

However, Bhawani's supporters dispute this pointing out that their candidate was recognised as Jaipur's ruler in mid-1970. They reimpose their claim by quoting from the white paper issued by the Union Government on the merger of princely states which specifies that succession will take place "according to law and custom, to the gaddi of each covenanting state". Going by custom, Bhawani, recognised formally as Jaipur's ruler, has the right to all properties.

The struggle is bound to be protracted and debilitating as is customary in anything of this magnitude. Old timers who have been close to the family are appalled and saddened at the turn of events, torn as they are between their loyalties. Says one, reflecting perhaps the feelings of others: "They have embarked on the path of self destruction. At the end of it there will be no winners."

—SREEKANT KHANDEKAR



Bhawani Singh with Padmini; (inset) Bhawani Singh

Bhawani Singh and his wife Padmini Devi are ranged against Gayatri Devi, the queen mother. The bone of contention is a property whose value simply defies imagination.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IF WE HADN'T SPENT SO MUCH MONEY ON PRODUCT RESEARCH, DEVELOPMENT, INNOVATON, WE COULD HAVE SPARED A FEW MILLIONS FOR ADVERTISING.

Mudra-D-HRL-2592

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

But probably wouldn't have had much to tell, though.

Except, we're in Industrial Belts. Because without all that R&D we wouldn't have been the first in India to make Polyester Cord reinforced V—Belts.

Or, the first to make Synthetic Fabric reinforced Conveyor Belts.

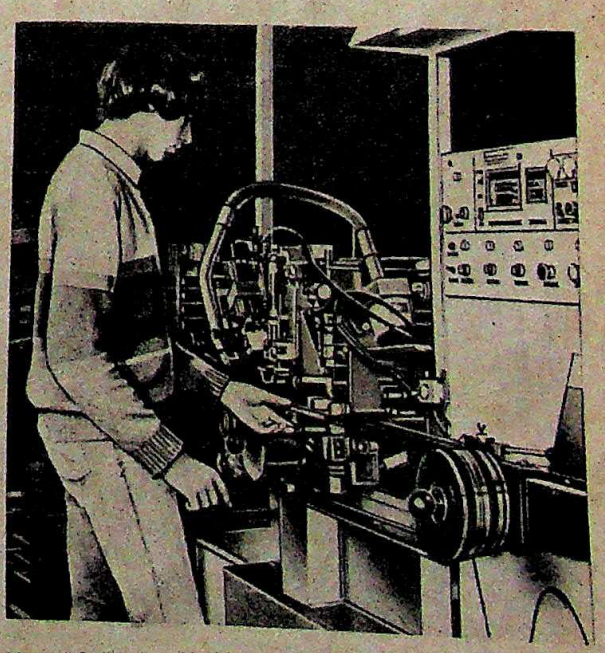
Or, the first to make Heat Resistant Special Belts for Steel and Cement industries.

Or, the first to export to USSR.

Or, the first to bring in the State-of-the-art knowhow in raw-edge V—Belt manufacture.

To offer you a moped belt that's guaranteed for 12000 km.*

At Hilton Rubbers, we do it first. And then talk. Or advertise.



HILTON Industrial Belts.

We do it first.

*45,000 Km to 50,000 Km for Auto-Belt.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

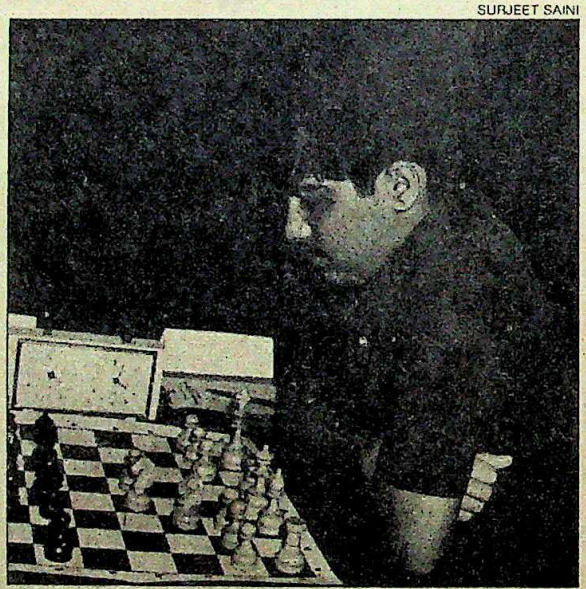
CHESS

Masterly Play

CHESS prodigies are a rarity in this country but of late the crop has been exceptionally good. First it was Dibyendu Barua and now it is Vishwanathan Anand. Barua, all of 19, shot to fame four years ago when he worsted Victor Korchnoi, and Anand became at 16, the youngest ever national champion. Going by their performance in the third Bhilwara International Grandmasters Chess Tournament, held in New Delhi last fortnight, the future of Indian chess seems exceptionally bright, major handicaps notwithstanding.

PRASHANT PANJIYAR

SURJEET SAINI



Barua (top) and Anand: race for the Grandmaster norm

Neither, of course, won the tourney; with Soviet Grandmaster Vladimir Tukmakov, member of the gold-medal winning USSR team to the 1984 Chess Olympiad in the fray, there was never any doubt about the winner. But Barua finished second and had he got half a point more, he would have become the first Indian to get the Holy Grail of all chess players—the Grandmaster (GM) norm. And Anand confirmed that he was the new Indian sensation when he worsted Tukmakov. He finished a poor fifth but his brilliant, if mercurial, play left nobody in doubt that the race for the first Indian grandmaster will be between him and Barua.

Anand's win over the phlegmatic Tukmakov, who once finished half-a-point behind Anatoly Karpov at the 1973 Madrid tournament, was a fantastic performance by the little maestro who took less than half-an-hour for each of his moves. Showing superb control of his pawns, the schoolboy blocked Tukmakov's queenside pawns. Some flashy kingside play by Anand which threatened the Russian's king and a slight slip by Tukmakov enabled Anand to shut his bishop out of play. The finale saw Anand grab the vital queenside pawns and win. Acknowledged the grandmaster later: "He is young and impulsive, but is very good. He may well be the first Indian grandmaster."

Anand's problem was a bad start; he got only two points from the first six rounds. He lost a winning game against Grandmaster Sergei Makarychev—who is presently coaching Karpov—and frittered away his early advantage against Bulgarian Grandmaster Dimiter Donchev by playing too fast. In the process, Anand, already an international master, lost out in the race for the grandmaster norm which requires 8.5 points from 11 rounds.

His speed came in for some criticism. Said Tukmakov: "He is too quick. He must be patient and think out his moves more deeply." Anand shrugged off such criticism, saying: "That is the way I play." But it highlighted the Indian chess player's obvious weakness. Anand, by his own admission, has "no regular coaching". "I practice for one hour every day with books," he says. Adds Barua: "I get no help. Worse still, there is no good player one can play against on a regular basis."

The appeal underlying that statement was graphically evident in Barua's struggle for second place—bitterly contested by Makarychev and Semen Palatnik. Ultimately, Barua moved decisively into the second slot with a resounding win over Palatnik but nemesis in the form of Anand cost him the Grandmaster norm. In a fast-paced ninth-round game spread over 42 moves, Anand rocked Barua with a series of shrewd positional moves and a killing of rooks and queens forcing a draw.

Barring Barua and Anand, none of the other Indian International Masters—Pravin Thipsay, R. Ravi Shekhar and D.V. Prasad—were ever in the race for the GM norm. Evidently, the lack of well-equipped chess clubs is a serious handicap. The few that exist offer limited facilities. The Botwinnik Chess Academy in New Delhi which hosted the tournament, and the Alekhine Club in Calcutta are the only active ones. In the circumstances, the triumphs of Indian chess players have been largely due to personal effort.

The tournament emphasised another factor which has acquired frightening dimensions—the psychological pressures which can make or break a player. Good chess players require a high degree of intellectual development and extraordinarily strong nerves. Lanka Ravi, who stood first in the International Rating Tournament at Mount Abu last year, attributed his poor showing largely to nervousness. A.B Meteei, who represented India at the Asian Chess Championships in Dubai recently, finished at the bottom.

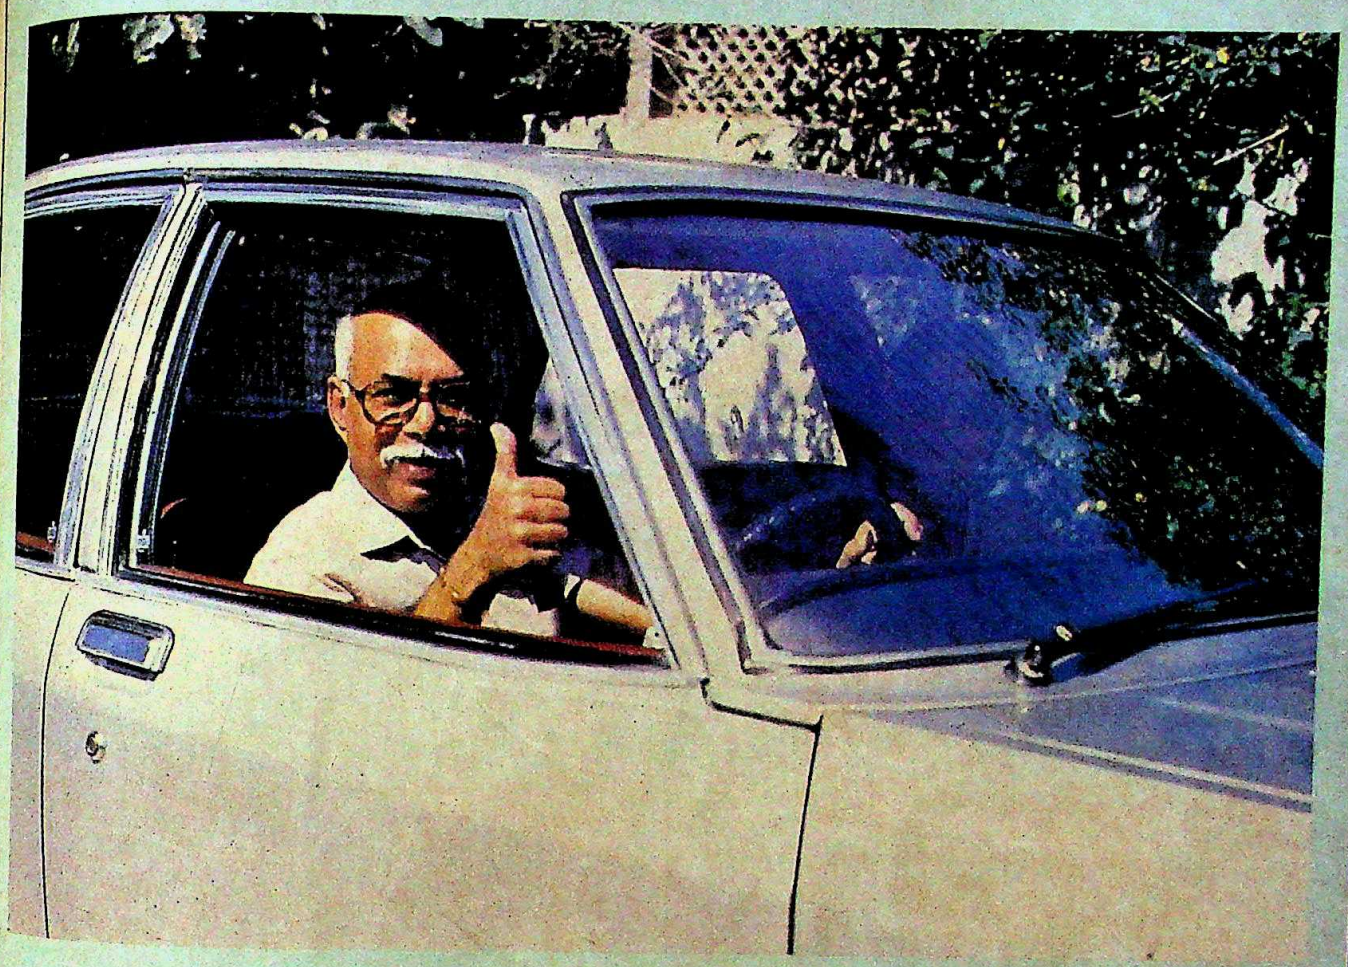
Barua wants Indian players to be sent to Europe where a large number of tournaments are held. "The current practice of despatching players to the USSR for three weeks of intensive practice is not good enough," he says. While that is a matter for the Indian Chess Federation to decide, Anand and Barua have set their sights firmly on the World Junior Chess Championships in Norway this August, to be followed by the Lloyds Bank Invitation Chess Championship in London in their quest for the Holy Grail.

—SURYA GANGADHARAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Decision Only Experience Can Provide

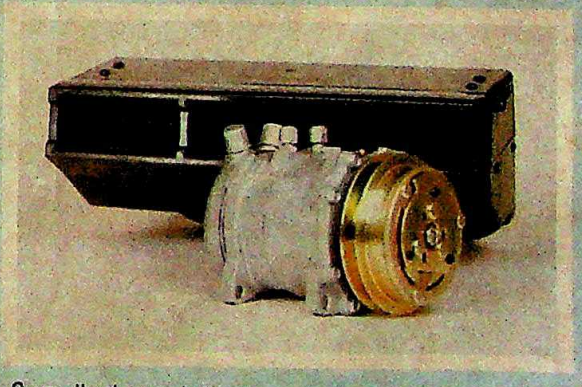


SANDEN VIKAS

Auto Air Conditioning Systems

Dadaji, a man of many Summers, is aware of the advantages of an auto airconditioning system. For him the choice is clear—it's SANDEN VIKAS, a system guaranteed for economy, reliability and performance. Now he can brave the Summers in cool comfort. No wonder Dada Dadi are never at home!

—WITH A FLAIR FOR COOL AIR



Supplied as original equipment for MARUTI 800, MARUTI VAN, CONTESSA and ROVER

Manufactured under licence and with technical collaboration of SANDEN CORPORATION, Japan.

SANDEN VIKAS

SANDEN VIKAS (INDIA) LTD.

HEAD OFFICE: 12-A Shivaji Marg, New Delhi-110 015 Phones: 533881, 534258 Telex: 031-61478 SSN IN WORKS: Plot No. 65, Sector 27A, Faridabad-121 003 Phone: 8125943 Telex: 343 309 SVL IN
BRANCH OFFICE: B-2, No. 2, Ramachandra Road, T. Nagar, Madras-600 017 Phone: 447021 Telex: 041-8044 SVIK IN SANDEN SERVICE CENTRE: A-199, Okhla Industrial Area, Phase-I, New Delhi-110 020 Phone: 632889.

Bhumeeka 104

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The climate is always 'just right' in Bangalore. For both business and leisure.

Besides having a cooling influence right through the year, Bangalore's altitude keeps the atmosphere light and dust-free. Which is conducive to the growth of industry. Electronics in particular. Today, Bangalore accounts for a third of the total production of electronics in the country. 80% of the professional equipment with the 'made in India' stamp is made here.

What set the foundation for the breath-taking growth in electronics was the setting up of the public sector giants: BEL, BEML, BHEL, HAL, HMT, ITI, NGEF and more recently, the flood of manufacturers such as BPL and Nippon Electronics.

And what gave Bangalore its prime status in electronics were institutions such as the Indian Institute of Science, the Electronics and Radar Development Establishment, the Indian Space Research Organisation and the Aeronautical Development Establishment.

So, who's been part of this growth story?

In the growth story of any city, its newspaper institutions play a highly critical role. Not just in news reporting. Or in the reflection of views. Importantly, it's in giving talent and enterprise the wide audience it deserves. For public interaction. And support. Also to give readers a fair and accurate picture of developments.

It's a responsibility The Deccan Herald Group has lived up to in more ways than one. The Group, Bangalore's oldest publishing house, brings out four No. 1 publications. Deccan Herald, the mainline English daily. Prajavani, the most popular Kannada daily. Sudha, the complete Kannada family weekly. And Mayura the most widely read Kannada monthly.

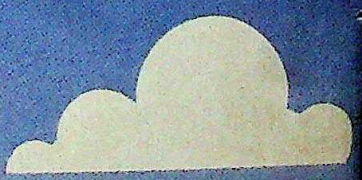
The 'listening post' — world-wide

The Deccan Herald Group tunes in to the world through a network of strategically based correspondents covering the US, the UK, Europe, the Middle East, Bangladesh, South East Asia and the UN.

It also widens its canvas with news and feature arrangements, with the Washington Post, the Financial Times, the Los Angeles Times, Asia Features and Gemini.

THE CLIMATE IS JUST RIGHT IN THE AIR-CONDITIONED CITY



THAT'S WHY BANGALORE IS THE FASTEST GROWING CITY IN INDIA

Graph indicates the Reach of THE DECCAN HERALD GROUP of publications in Karnataka in their respective categories. (Deccan Herald reaches 76.3% of all adults reachable through English dailies.) Source: NRS III

PML-1879-A

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

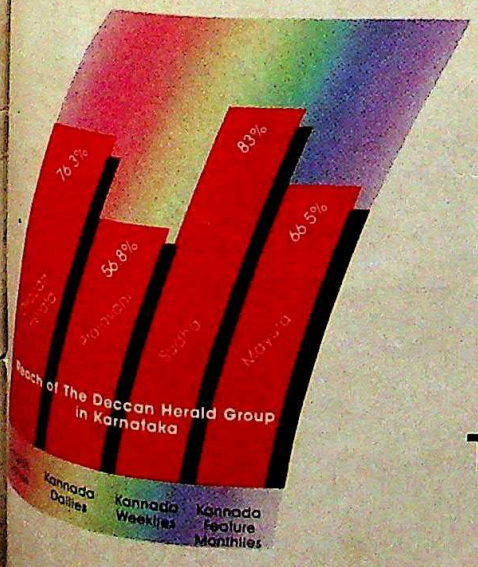
The nerve centre links up with the national network

The Group's Head Quarters in Bangalore is a hive of activity. Buzzing with news stories from all over. Right from up-to-the-minute despatches sent in by its fully staffed news bureau in Delhi, reports from correspondents in Bombay, Calcutta, Madras and other state capitals, to news in the pipeline from the national news agencies. All this, co-ordinated by a large bureau of staff reporters in Bangalore.

When a newspaper becomes an 'institution'

What started off as a small newspaper in 1948, is the largest, most modern publishing house in Karnataka... among the foremost newspaper houses in the country. With sophisticated facilities in design, layout, photosetting and offset colour printing.

All of which means unparalleled state-wide influence. 'EXCELLENT COVERAGE' in other words. To readers it means news. And to advertisers, it means readers.

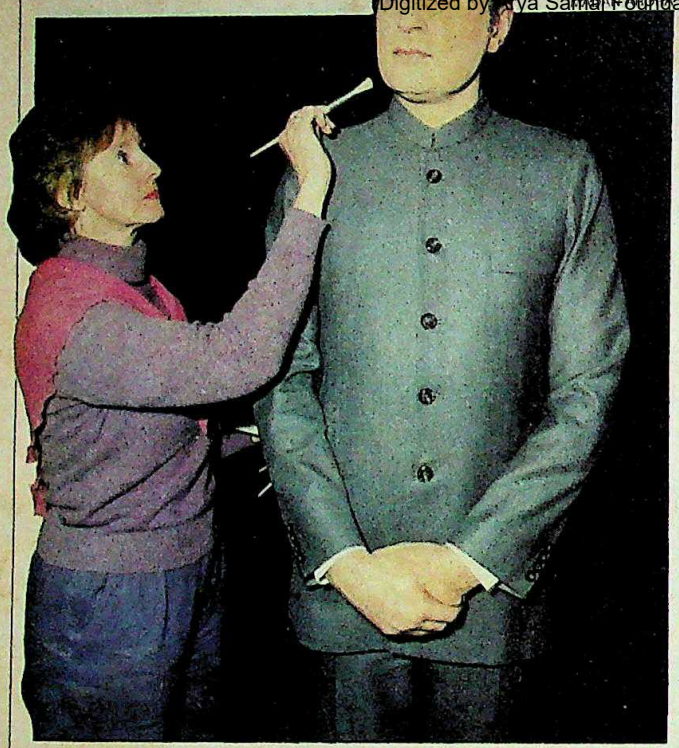


THE DECCAN HERALD GROUP

75 Mahatma Gandhi Road Bangalore 560 001

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Rajiv at Tussaud's: waxing

◆ Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi is a doll. Well, sort of. The life-sized wax figure, bearing a startling likeness to the prime minister, was unveiled at the famed Madame Tussaud's in London last fortnight, with a beaming High Commissioner P.C. Alexander accepting the compliments on the prime minister's behalf. Crafted by sculptor Judith Craig after a meticulous sitting at New Delhi last August and draped in a grey Nehru suit donated by Rajiv, the figure now stands in the gallery of greats rubbing shoulders with two other Gandhis—his mother and the Mahatma. As a museum official remarked: "It shows the impact he's made on the international scene." An impact that waxes, but doesn't wane. So far.

◆ With a pedigree like hers, Anuradha Mafatlal, 25, was destined to end up in garments, one way or the other. So when the pert and soft-spoken daughter of textile baron Rasesh Mafatlal put up some 400 designs on show in Bombay last month, it didn't take long for the city's socialites to cotton on, despite the price-tags ranging from Rs 300 to Rs 2,500. "I sold 98 per cent of my stocks in 10 days," gloated Anuradha, who has done a three-month course under the famous designer Benny Ong. She is now planning her own retail outlet in Bombay, which will sell her ready-to-wear gear under the snappy label of Anu M. Says the designer: "My designs are going to be practical. Otherwise, who'll buy them?"

Mafatlal: new designs

◆ He was never known for his acting ability. If anything, he was known for his crooked teeth, carefree gait and unruly mop of hair. But eventually the Kapoor genes come up trumps. Last fortnight, Shashi Kapoor walked away with the best actor's national award for his performance in New Delhi Times— the first major acting award the star has won in his protracted career. Not surprisingly, the actor himself was the most taken aback. Said he: "It should have gone to Jennifer the year it went to Rekha."

Kapoor: belated award

◆ If it were left to him, Zail Singh would have preferred to treat it as just another day. But being a head of state—and on the 70th birthday—it is a bit difficult to avoid the bouquets that start streaming in from morning, as they did this year on May 5. The birthday callers just kept coming—from the prime minister to the vice-president to lesser-known well-wishers—until Rashtrapati

Zail on birthday: rosy

Bhavan began to resemble a flower show. "It's nice to be 70," said the President, even as he made light of all the pomp and circumstance.

SIGNPOST

◆ Thirty-three years ago, as he stood literally with the world at his feet, Tenzing Norgay bowed down to his God—characteristic of the simple sherpa who became, along with Sir Edmund Hillary, the first man to conquer the world's highest peak. Last fortnight, when death came at the grand old age of 72, the man had become as much of a legend as the mountain he had conquered. Said his grieving friend Sir Edmund: "Tenzing had a great life. From simple beginnings, he achieved great things."

—Compiled by MOHAMMED ASLAM

Tenzing: great life

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

12996

12995

12994

12993

Governme
Here, you'
the effecti initiatives governmer

Business: I be ranking of eight top managers.

Sports: Wh
to put Indi internation issue at sta

Culture: Th rankings he who, in you eligible for Vibhushan.

ow to tak

Starting fro
y 1986, IND ature these s nsecutive iss

All you have ues, voice yo ry form and DAY.

n case you c ues, you can
DIA TODAY
ms.

Once all the y'll be run th mputer. Tha t time, India jective tional l be ed itoria

DIA TODAY.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

OPINIONS TODAY

Your chance to speak out

- Government performance: Here, you'll be asked to rank the effectiveness of the major initiatives taken by the new government.
- Business: In this poll, you will be ranking the contribution of eight top industrialists and managers.
- Sports: Who's done the most to put Indian sports on the international map? That's the issue at stake here.
- Culture: The purpose of the rankings here is to decide who, in your opinion, is most eligible for the Padma Vibhushan.

ow to take part.

Starting from the first issue of y 1986, INDIA TODAY will ature these six polls in nsecutive issues.

All you have to do is get these ues, voice your opinion in the ry form and send it to INDIA DAY.

n case you can't get the ues, you can always write to DIA TODAY for free entry ns.

Once all the opinions are in, 'll be run through a nputer. That's when, for the t time, India will know ...jective, unbiased point

...tional point of view l be ed itorially covered by DIA TODAY.

The big surprise.

You can even pick up handsome awards in these opinion polls.

How this will be decided is simple. The computer will give the national average, the 1 to 8 rankings in each poll.

If your individual rankings tie in with the national average, you qualify for the awards.

A consolation award you'll definitely get. But for the bigger awards, you have to do a bit more. Which is to explain your number one ranking in each poll. For instance, if you think person X is most suited to be the next President, you also have to say why you think he is most suited.

A panel of judges will then decide on the basis of this tie-breaker.

Original and perceptive explanations can also get quoted in INDIA TODAY.

But what happens if nobody's opinion ties in with the national average? In that case nobody gets the consolation awards. But the big first three awards will still be given, to individuals whose opinion is closest to the national average.

There are separate awards for the polls. And really handsome awards if you can gauge the mood of the country across all the six polls.

So make sure you take part in all the six opinion polls. Because only then can you pick up the really big awards.

The awards.

Across six polls.

First :	Return First Class air tickets for 2 to Los Angeles, courtesy PAN AM.
Second:	A specially commissioned painting (30" × 40") by M.F. HUSAIN.
Third :	PC Junior computer with printer, courtesy EIKO.
Conso-lation :	The World and its People –a 27 volume set.

For each of the 6 polls.

First :	Weston Colour TV and VCR, courtesy WESTON ELECTRONIKS.
Second:	Encyclopedia Brittanica.
Third :	Weston 2-in-1, courtesy WESTON ELECTRONIKS.
Conso-lation :	Annual subscriptions to INDIA TODAY.

The first of the Opinions Today polls begins next issue of INDIA TODAY. Look out for it. And make sure you speak out. Such chances don't come too often.

INDIA TODAY

The pulse of change.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

VOLUME XI NUMBER 12
FOR THE FORTNIGHT JUNE 16-30, 1986

EDITOR
AROON PURIE

EXECUTIVE EDITOR T.N. NINAN
PICTURE EDITOR RAGHU RAI
FEATURES EDITOR INDERJIT BADHWAR
ASSOCIATE EDITOR DILIP BOBB
ASSISTANT EDITORS PRABHU CHAWLA
AJAY KUMAR

CORRESPONDENTS

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT RAMINDAR SINGH
NEW DELHI SHEKHAR GUPTA
PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI
RAJ CHENGAPPA
MADHU JAIN
JAGANNATH DUBASHI
TANIA MIDHA
AHMEDABAD RAMESH MENON
BANGALORE SRINIVASA PRASAD
BOMBAY M. RAHMAN
PARTHASARATHI SWAMI
CALCUTTA INDRANIL BANERJIE
CHANDIGARH GOBIND THUKRAL
HYDERABAD AMARNATH K. MENON
JAIPUR SREEKANT KHANDEKAR
MADRAS S.H. VENKATRAMANI
PATNA FARZAND AHMED
TRIVANDRUM SREEDHAR PILLAI

NEW YORK MADHU TREHAN
LONDON RAMESH CHANDRAN

NEWS COORDINATOR RADHIKA ROY

CHIEF OF PRODUCTION SHIRLEY JOSHUA
ANURADHA KAPOOR

COPY DESK SIMRAN BHARGAVA
ANN NINAN

CHIEF PHOTOGRAPHER BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHERS PRAMOD PUSHKARNA
PRASHANT PANJIAR
HARI OM GULATI

CARTOONIST AJIT NINAN MATHEW

CARTOGRAPHER B.K. SHARMA

LAYOUT ARTISTS LOKESH BHARGAVA
ANUP GUPTA
PEALI DUTTA GUPTA

MARKETING DIRECTOR MOHINI BHULLAR

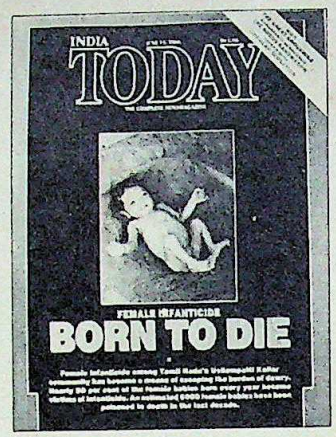
ADVERTISING MANAGERS

BOMBAY GEORGE SEBASTIAN
DELHI NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA MEERA PAUL
MADRAS R. ANAND
BANGALORE L. SRINIVASA RAGHAVAN

GENERAL MANAGER CHANDER RAI

• EDITORIAL OFFICE LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. F-40 CONNAUGHT PLACE NEW DELHI 110001. PHONE: 3315801-4. TELEX: 31-61245 INTO IN CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI • SUBSCRIPTIONS: INDIA TODAY SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT. POST BOX 69, FARIDABAD HARYANA • TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA TODAY CIRCULATION MANAGER. F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE. MIDDLE CIRCLE. NEW DELHI. PHONE: 3313076-8. TELEX: 31-4724 INTO IN • ADVERTISING OFFICES: 28 A&B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER II, NARIMAN POINT, BOMBAY-400021. PHONE: 2026152, 2029326, 2029435. TELEX: 11-5373 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BOMBAY • 13-K CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001. PHONE: 312070, 312093, 312097, TELEX: 31-66518 THOM IN. CABLES: LIVMEDIA, NEW DELHI • FAGUN CHAMBERS, 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF ROAD, MADRAS-600105. PHONE: 477188,477770 CABLE: LIVMEDIA MADRAS • 74/1ST. MARKS ROAD, BANGALORE-560001. PHONE: 568448, 579037, 579089. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BANGALORE • 12C EVEREST 46C CHOWRINGEE ROAD, CALCUTTA-700016. PHONE: 445398, 447726. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, CALCUTTA •
COPYRIGHT 1984 LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. REPRODUCTION IN ANY MANNER IS PROHIBITED. PUBLISHED BY CHANDER RAI FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD, NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT THOMSON PRESS INDIA LTD, FARIDABAD HARYANA • INDIA TODAY DOES NOT TAKE RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL •

LETTERS



SHOCKING CUSTOMS

I was shocked to read the horror-story of mothers killing their own female infants. ("Born To Die", June 15). The innocent baby on the cover still haunts me. Any person with some sense of humanity would feel highly distressed at these inhuman acts. Let the conscience of society be awakened at all levels. Let there be a relentless crusade and a mass movement against this practice and its underlying cause—the dowry system, by the lawkeepers and social organisations.

Kottayam — V.K. SATHYAVAN NAIR

■ The alarming story of female infanticide reported from Usilampatti in Tamil Nadu, speaks volumes of the Government's failure to touch on real issues. The Government tries to perpetuate ignorance so that it can thrive on it. Dowry, which is the sole cause of this great evil, can be rooted out through well-planned economic measures aimed at the poorest of the poor. The alarming gap between the rich and the poor, and the educated and illiterate should be brought down to make evils like this disappear.

Madras — S. RETNASWAMY

■ We have been aware of incidents of female infanticide in some parts of the country through the media. The stark facts that look us in the face make us lose hope of evolving a modern Indian society in the near future and the 21st century seems too far away.

Unless the curse of dowry is fought on a war-footing and with as much zeal and attention as the family planning drive and unless the social workers try earnestly to motivate women to develop some human dignity, Indian society will continue to wallow in this chauvinistic muck. The real culprit is the dowry problem.

Guwahati — RANJITA BISWAS

CULTURE SHOCK

While we in India have a great and ancient culture to live up to, many aspects of this have to be lived down. Your June 15 issue was a veritable jeremiad of Indian culture. Female infanticide ("Born To Die"), religious persecution ("Migrants Of Fear"), communalism ("The Barabanki Bomb"), child marriage ("Wedding Of The Dolls") and bonded labour ("Inhuman Bondage") are all a regrettable part of our much-vaunted culture. These and other problems have to be tackled at the grass-roots levels. Literacy alone is not enough. A humanistic, rational outlook has to be instilled into our masses along with a national spirit. Only mass-oriented, public awareness programmes can eradicate our myriad social problems.

Bangalore — VINOD KUMAR B.

CHRONIC PROBLEM

Your photo feature on child marriage ("Wedding Of The Dolls", June 15) is a timely eye-opener. You deserve praise for your expose on child marriage. You have tried hard to bring the malaise into focus, but whether it will cut any ice or not remains to be seen. It is regrettable to note that in some cases the parents who are behind these marriages are educated, yet seem to be astonishingly oblivious of their future. Stricter measures are urgently required to solve this chronic problem.

Bangalore — JAYAPRAKASH

■ It is not true that child marriages do not come to the knowledge of the outside world. The problem really is that the people who are aware of this evil do not want to get involved in legal proceedings. I have come across politicians who were a party to such marriages. The village youth should also be forthcoming and force their elders not to indulge in such activities. If such illegal activities are going on, they should be reported to the police.

Faridabad — RAJIV GUGNANI

ODD TAX

I sincerely hope that the Government reconsiders the rules pertaining to the recent introduction of Modvat, the modified value added tax ("Compounding Confusion", May 31). If the Government had envisaged the after-effects of the scheme, as well as the unnecessary increase in paperwork by this so-called simplification of the pricing process, it would not have made the procedure so complicated. I hope that the powers-that-be soon realise their mistake and simplify Modvat before it becomes "Odd-vat".

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Madras — FRANKLIN STANLEY

DEPLORABLE TACTICS

Your article on the Janata Party ("Hard Times", May 31) confirms its bankruptcy and its tall claims of being an alternative to the Congress(I). The "election" of the reluctant Chandra Shekhar can at best be described as a farce; the heavens would not have fallen down if there were proper elections among the five contenders. The deplorable state of affairs in the party and its lack of principles are clear from its attitude of welcoming dissidents from the Congress (I). What an unscrupulous way of strengthening one's party!

Pune — D.B.N. MURTHY

SISTER WRITER

With reference to your article on Mountbatten, the movie ("Lament for Lord Louis", May 31), in the last paragraph, Ramesh Chandran mentions "Joan Collins epics like The Stud and The Bitch". To put the record straight, the writer in question is actually Jackie Collins. Joan Collins is her sister.

Jaipur — DIBEYENDU GANGULY

MASTER TROUBLE

Perhaps your writer did not know that Pravin Thipsay has got one Grandmaster Norm when you mentioned ("Masterly Play", May 31) that the race for the first Indian Grandmaster will be between Vishwanathan Anand and Dibyendu Barua. He thus obviously has a better chance of becoming the first Indian Grandmaster even though he seems to have fared badly in the recently-held Bhilwara Tournament.

Trivandrum — K.V.B. MENON

RARE OCCURRENCE

With reference to your editorial on the nuclear meltdown at Chernobyl ("Comment", May 31), I would like to point out that a study for the Atomic Energy Commission conducted by Professor Norman Rossman summed up in its report that nuclear accidents have a much lower probability than man-made and natural risks; fires, aeroplane crashes, explosions, toxic chemical releases, dam failures, earthquakes, hurricanes and tornados are more likely to occur and can have consequences comparable to or greater than nuclear accidents.

Shimla — VIVEK MOHAN

■ You have rightly maintained, in your editorial, that "dangerous technologies are double-edged swords". But I disagree with your conclusion that one ought not turn aginst them simply because they are dangerous. In fact, one should be extra cautious in accepting technologies from developed countries; they could result in serious loss of life, and innocent lives at that. Man-made accidents like crashes and natural ones like flood affect only those who are directly involved. Nuclear dangers, like the accident which hit the chernobyl atomic plant in the USSR, affect vast areas nowhere near the source of the disaster.

One wonders if, perhaps, having a country with a good old agricultural base is all that bad after all. Such an economy may not be all that modern or technologically advanced, but it probably has the best chance of survival.

New Delhi — V. SAGAR

UP IN ARMS

In your little vignette on the award presented to Madhu Kishwar ("Eye-catchers", May 15) of Manushi, you have observed that she is "no bra-burning feminist". How many bra-burning feminists are there anyway? It is unfortunate that a magazine of your standing is giving further currency, not to mention publicity, to this empty, meaningless term that originated years ago in the US, when a few sensation-seeking women decided to resort to a cheap gimmick to get some media attention.

Hyderabad — M. RAMDAS

SHORT-SHRIFT

I agree with his senior officers, that my brother, Dharam Singh Rawat ("Unusual Crusade", Statenotes, May 15) is a crank. Otherwise, why should he be peeping into creaky cupboards cluttered with the skeletons of bungling bureaucracy? Again, why should he raise the dust of doubtful decisions and corrupt practices in his directorate when these have been safely and very conveniently swept under the carpet? In the era of 'Mr. Clean', small fries like Dharam Singh should not dream of cleaning the Augean stables. Logically, only big, influential and ambitious people can achieve big things.

Bangalore — A.S.RAWAT

TUITION TROUBLE

I read with great interest your observations on the educational system ("Learning Reform", May 15). I agree with your examination of the ills plagung the educational system. That some teachers of Andhra University were caught red-handed while coaching classes at home stinks. But the evil of private tuition is widely prevalent in all states. What seems to be required is a change of heart—on the part of both students and teachers. This is only possible by introducing spiritual training in schools and colleges. Teachers should undergo a refresher course so that they can inspire their students to pursue Truth, Beauty and Goodness.

Ahmedabad — K.S. VISWANATHAN

UNSUNG LIGHT

In your article on the Progressive Writers Association ("Bleak House", May 15) you have omitted to mention at all one of the most important members of the group—Professor Ahmed Ali, who works in Karachi. Ali's novel Twilight in Delhi is one of the best novels written by an Indian writer in English and it would have been very pleasant if the rancour of nationalism and ideology had permitted acknowledgement of this great writer's achievements, not only in this work but also in his superb short stories. A collection of these has recently been republished, and they are of a quality that indicates why his work has received so much praise and critical acclaim in the English-speaking world.

New York — A.T. EMBREE

LANDMARK STORY

As a former Harvey Award judge for medical journalism and as a concerned clinician, I hope you will permit me to say that your article on the problem of Alcoholism ("A Growing Malaise", April 30,) is a landmark contribution to literature. INDIA TODAY needs to be congratulated for its bold confrontation of a growing and increasingly serious social problem. Your article has done much to peel away the naive myths and misconceived notions surrounding alcohol; you have presented the stark realities of this disorder with clinical candour. Unfortunately, the absence of durable cures compounds the tragedy; in most unbiased studies, five-year cure rates for alcohol addiction are less than 10 per cent. Even some cancers have better therapeutic outcomes.

Minnesota, USA — IQBAL KRISHAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Our stamp collection is different philately.

Trust in our experience.

At the time of its formation in 1963, Simon-Carves India Limited inherited the rich experience of many decades of project engineering in India from its parent Company. Since then, SCIL has vastly widened its involvement in various major industries to serve the urgent needs of the nation. Take, for example, the first Low Temperature Coal Carbonisation Complex at Dankuni for Coal India Limited or the tallest Coke Oven Batteries assigned to us by MECON for Rashtriya Ispat Nigam, Visakhapatnam.

Everywhere the Company's expertise for immaculate planning, execution and access to the latest worldwide technologies have been successfully proven.

Indeed, whether it's the first sulphuric acid plant, set up on turnkey basis in Bahrain or conversion of the conventional sulphuric acid plant for Coromandel Fertilisers Ltd., SCIL has earned a name for itself in the world of project development and construction, rendering comprehensive service to international standards—from concept to commissioning.

Yes, for SCIL stamp collecting is a commitment—Commitment to growth through tomorrow's projects.

SIMON-CARVES INDIA LIMITED

'Simon House', Transport Depot Road
Calcutta 700 027

Bombay Office: "Nirlon House"
254-B, Dr. Annie Besant Road, Worli, Bombay 400 025

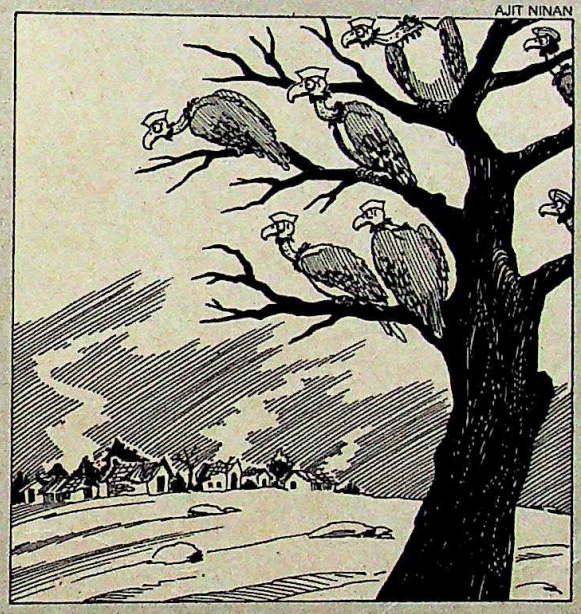
CLARION C-SCIL/

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

These Damn Politicians

THAT exasperated phrase can be heard with increasing frequency across the country as short-sighted politicians with an eye on what they think is the main chance, swoop, like vultures who have spotted carrion, on to every trouble-spot in the country. A language problem near Karnataka's border with Maharashtra is used to provoke a violent agitation that leads to riots, killings, the destruction of civic property and the threat by one senior politician of creating a Punjab-like situation. Another language dispute in north Bengal leads to a call for statehood, and once again politicians fan the flames. More dead bodies. A third language problem in Goa, concerning Konkani, leads to police firing.



AJIT NINAN

A sensitive issue concerning a community's personal law is used by ambitious politicians to fan communal passions. In Punjab, some of the districts on or near the border with Pakistan reach an unprecedented state of lawlessness, so that ordinary citizens have to flee for their lives. But there are politicians ready to pander to the extremists. And in Haryana, a Devi Lal tries to raise the state's political temperature to match that in Punjab, even as a Bhajan Lal refuses to accept geographical realities and insists on getting nothing other than Fazilka and Abohar in return for Chandigarh going to Punjab, until he is asked to resign.

People may get the Government they deserve, but India deserves a better breed of politicians than it has got. Punjab, once the country's most prosperous state, is now a troubled land. The state's politicians must ask themselves what they have achieved for Punjab through five years of morchas, sustained agitation, and the assiduous nurturing of a sense of grievance. Instead of solutions being found, intractable problems have been created of a kind and degree that did not exist before. What have the politicians achieved, apart from replacing lassi with blood, and bringing extremists and terrorists into the mainstream of national life? Would the Punjab problem have got out of hand if politicians had behaved more responsibly?

There is a lesson in the fate of Punjab for politicians everywhere who seek to exploit dormant grievances, to play on divisive emotions and to heighten tensions. Do the leaders of the Nepali agitation genuinely believe that they can achieve a separate Gorkha homeland, or that they can spur development by frightening away tourists? Can inter-state border questions be solved by cutting off water supply to Belgaum? Can the body politic remain healthy when it has pointed at its vitals the kirpan, kukri, trishul and the scimitar?

The perception all too often seems to be that seizing on communal issues and on regional and linguistic aspirations is a sure fire method of garnering votes. But this is quite simply untrue. The people have repeatedly said through one election after another that they are not interested in being divided and ruled. They said so in Punjab, where they voted for peace, rejected calls to boycott the polls and endorsed only those who stood for a settlement of the outstanding issues along agreed lines. They have said so in Karnataka, where a misguided film actor who sought to build a political base by using the issue of the Kannada language has been consigned to the political periphery. And repeatedly, those who stood for a Hindu vote, or a Muslim vote, have met with little success compared to those who sought a national consensus. Yet the message seems to have been lost on purblind politicians, one of whom urged last fortnight that Maharashtra should retaliate against Karnataka by banning Udipi restaurants!

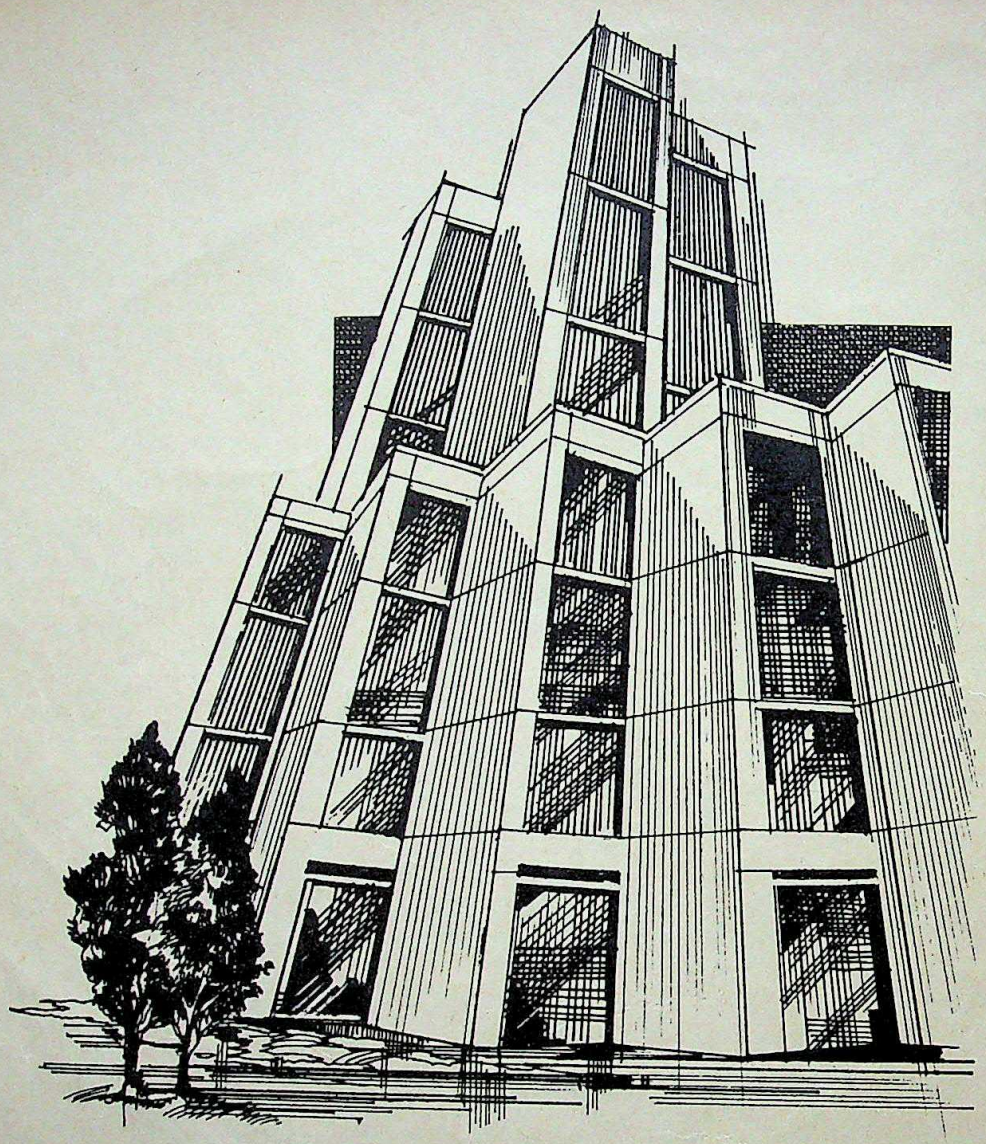
The politicians who stand tall today are the ones who have tried to solve problems rather than create them. Both Ramakrishna Hegde and S.B. Chavan have emerged with greater credit from Belgaum than Sharad Pawar and S.M. Joshi, who should ponder over their fate in being bracketed with the likes of Chhagan Bhujbal of the Shiv Sena. Does a Prakash Singh Badal or an Amarinder Singh believe that the country looks to him with hope? And what good did Bhajan Lal do for the country or for Haryana by creating a situation last January in which the first step could not be taken towards implementing the Punjab accord?

The task of nation-building is far from complete in India. There are differences and tensions of various sorts, and divisions along caste, community and language lines. But no nation can be built if its politicians emphasise its diversity rather than its unity. To the extent that regionalism is now an accepted part of the political landscape, the "national" parties have failed to voice the aspirations of people in these states. There is in this a lesson for the more responsible politicians, to be more responsive to genuine aspirations and problems.

But that said, the fact remains that today's flash-points are more the product of politicians' unprincipled search for political opportunity in trouble-spots. Inevitably, agitational methods are used in preference to more constitutional forms of making a point. So hundreds have died as Indian has fought Indian over the years. But it is never the politicians who are killed. The cannon fodder in their campaigns is ordinary people who, inflamed by their leaders' rhetoric, step right into the firing line and pay for their folly with their lives. The politicians might mouth their sympathies, but in reality it is their objective which has been served. Vultures do need the dead, but the country can do without them.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



INDAL.
Rising on the skyline.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDAL. India's first name in aluminium is the force behind some of the most far-reaching breakthroughs in the country. Take for example, the building and construction industry.

Tough, durable and aesthetic door and window systems, false ceilings, exterior claddings for high rise buildings and commercial complexes, light weight, high strength roofing systems for stadia, industrial structures, housing estates—and more.

Aluminium is on its way up, and INDAL, for five decades the pioneer in India's aluminium industry, is as ever the pathfinder in today's high-tech applications of aluminium.

Effective Research and Development is the key to this progress. Consistently improving production processes and dovetailing product development with market needs, INDAL R&D provides a whole back-up system through application engineering designed to make aluminium go further into high-tech uses and bring the Indian aluminium industry up at par with world standards.

No less important is INDAL's immense technology resource in ALCAN of Canada—the world's largest aluminium company and INDAL's principal shareholder.

Thus, aligning today's breakthroughs with tomorrow's priorities, INDAL stands poised to take off into greater heights than ever before.

Indian Aluminium is Indian aluminium

INDAL

Indian Aluminium Company, Limited

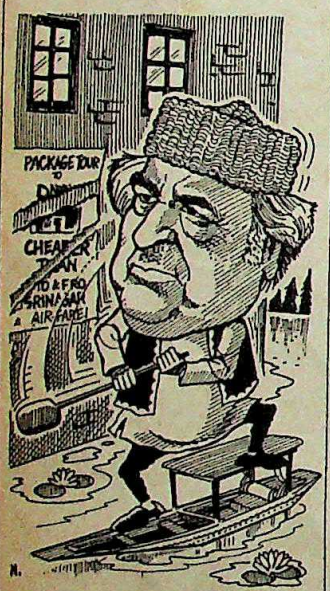
CONTAD/INDAL/2-86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

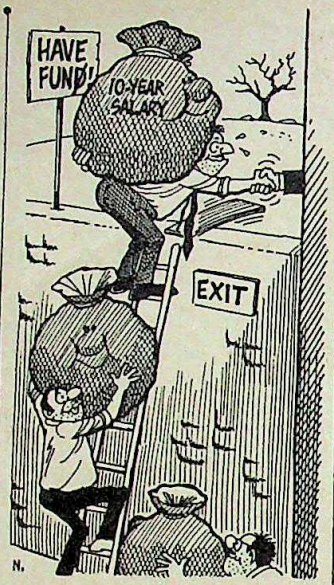
Tourist Stop

● Mufti Mohammed Syed may have moved to the Central Cabinet in New Delhi as minister of tourism, but his heart is still very much in the vales of Srinagar, as one leading private hotel chain recently discovered to its discomfiture. The chain had been bringing out a series of advertisements to lure tourists to its five-star hotel in a popular destination during the off-season. The advertisements offered prospective clients a discount package tour and other accompanying inducements.



But what caught the eagle eye of the tourism minister was the catchline, which stated that the entire package would cost "less than the air fare to Srinagar and back".

His chauvinistic instincts aroused, the minister ordered his officials to get the offending advertisements stopped post-haste as, in his view, it would affect tourism to Kashmir. A senior mandarin in the ministry promptly called up the hotel management and demanded that the advertising campaign be withdrawn. Knowing the kind of pitfalls involved if the "request" were turned down, the hotel chain meekly complied. Who says the Centre is ignoring the states?



Paying Proposal

● Time-servers and disillusioned bureaucrats in the Indian administrative and Central services will receive some welcome relief from the Pay Commission which is expected to issue its recommendations shortly. In a move aimed at encouraging jaded officials to quit the service as well as establishing incentive-oriented career ladders within the services, the Pay Commission is expected to make a unique proposal: Officers will be allowed to take "early retirement" after 15 years of service. But that is not all. They will be able to depart with a hefty golden handshake taking with them—as an advance—10 years of salary.

"This will be a positive step," said one senior official close to the commission. "It will make room for new blood while at the same time encourage those who are leaving to invest in savings bonds or start entrepreneurial schemes on their own."

Last Resort

● Charges of favouritism, bias and corruption abound when it comes to film censorship: why was such and such film given an 'A' certificate and a more torrid product permitted universal viewing, or a third film slashed heavily? But when it comes to Amitabh Bachchan, the ball game is in a different league altogether.

The film star-turned-MP has often bulldozed his way through the establishment to get his films cleared. But criticism for this has not prevented Bachchan from surpassing Bachchan for his latest film, Aakhree Raasta. Human Resources Development Minister P.V. Narasimha Rao was asked to try and get the film a 'U' certificate. And there were more requests. For one thing, he wanted one of the censors certifying the film to be from Kerala, known for its liberal views on what is acceptable by way of steaminess. For another, he wanted some specific sequences to be spared the censor's scissors.

Ad Campaign

● With recurrent shenanigans in Doordarshan hogging all the headlines the other significant changes in the Information and Broadcasting Ministry, meant to polish up the fast fading image of the Government, have gone more or less unnoticed. But these have caused a veritable scramble in the cut-throat world of advertising agencies that suddenly find the prospect of lucrative pickings provided they get the nod from the mandarins in Shastri Bhawan.

After a detailed study of the functioning of the Information and Broadcasting Ministry and particularly of the wings supposed to be looking after the Government's image, the Centre has decided on drastic changes. While the old Song and Drama Division is being merged with the Department of Field Publicity, the Directorate of Advertising and Visual Publicity (DAVP), which has customarily handled government advertising, is being dismantled altogether. The reason: an internal study has found it inefficient, unproductive and inadequate to the needs the Government has from such an organisation.

Instead, the Government has now decided to go the Congress(I) way of using private, professional advertisement agencies to handle the massive government ad budget. This has obviously led to the mad scramble and, if insiders are to be believed, the high-pressure lobbying officials are finding it difficult to draw a short-list of agencies among which the accounts are to be divided. The ad-world is abuzz with the rumours that the first short-list contains as many as 42 agencies which only promises a bitterly-contested battle.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Non-stop to Europe.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Only Lufthansa can bring you 4 weekly flights from Delhi. And 4 weekly flights from Bombay. All bound for Frankfurt. All non-stop and all with arrival times designed to bring you the most convenient connections to Europe and North America.

Lufthansa
German Airlines

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Book your flight through an appointed IATA agent.

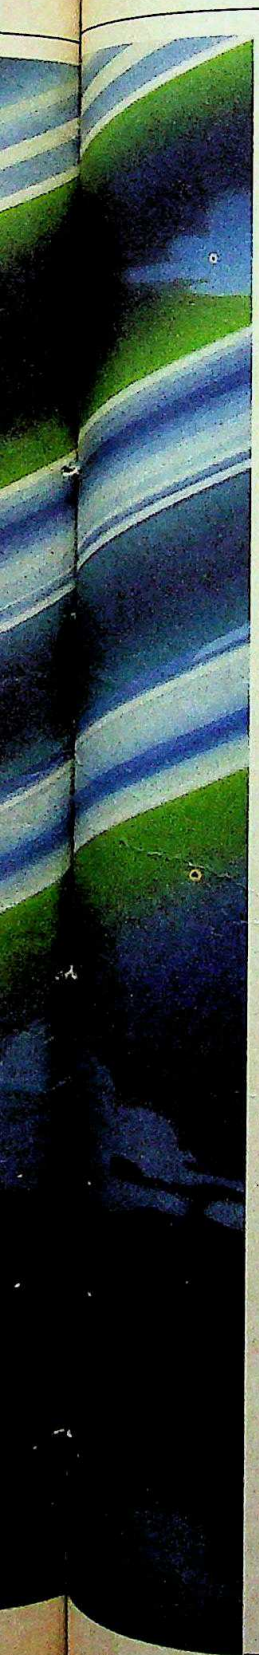
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Confidence—M

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Made in India



ESPL has invested over Rs. 3 crores in advanced manufacturing, quality control & in-house R&D infrastructure. Making indigenisation a reality.

With an investment of over Rs. 3 crores ESPL has installed advanced machinery for R&D, Production, Testing and Quality Control.

Result: A production line that's comparable to the best in USA or Japan.

Interationally matched... made here

The ESPL products are comparable to the latest, worldwide. Consider the total configuration of (DAS) Data Acquisition & Control Systems package made by ESPL or the ESPL Super Micro 32V, based around the 32 bit VME Bus the latest even internationally. Yes! That's how fast computer technology is on the move with ESPL.

Computerised Testing & Quality Control

At ESPL the most trying computerised testing and q.c. system is at work. With sophisticated computer based machinery ensuring quality.

For instance the Static & Dynamic Burn-in System or the FS333 Fairchild Fault Finder, all types of Peripheral Exercises/Testers, etc.—machines installed for the first time in the country.

Backed by our talented, trained manpower you must agree there couldn't be a better guarantee of quality!

Surety of software that works for you

Software creation is a developed strength at ESPL. We have the following packages:

Commercial: Financial Accounting, Inventory Control, Integrated PPC, Office Automation, Project Monitoring, Billing for Electricity Boards, Engineering, Share Accounting, Local & Long Haul Network, Banking, Hotel, Diagnostic & Medical Management etc.

Besides our engineers are trained to create customer specific programmes.

So you're assured customised software relevance!

Total Support Service for maximum utilization:

We offer an unique total support service from hands-on application guidance to 'Preventive Maintenance'. Ensuring almost 100% up-time! With a back-up service network strategically placed countrywide.

At ESPL we're recording growth at the rate of nano seconds—over 300% in just one year. Yes! Confidence does pay off!

Our Product Range:

Data Acquisition & Control System, Super Micro 32V, Super Micro 32, Super ED, Super PC, Super Chip IBM PC-AT/XT Compatible, Agro Dairy Instruments.

Please let me have further information on your product line/ software/service

Send your Sales Engineers ☐

Send me literature ☐

Name : _____

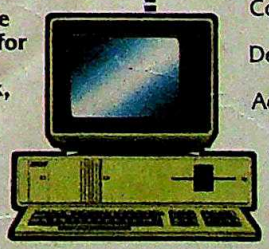
Company : _____

Designation : _____

Address : _____

_____ Pin : _____

Thank you for your enquiry!



ESPL

Keeping pace with tomorrow...Today

Electronic Systems Punjab Limited
(A State Govt. Enterprise)

B-81, Phase VII, Industrial Area S.A.S. Nagar (Mohali)-160051 Grams: 'SYSTEM' MOHALI Telex: 0395-391 Phone : 87392, 87492

• Delhi • Bombay • Lucknow • Bangalore • Ahmedabad • Bhopal

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Featuring Ms. Persis Khambatta in Vareli Royal Crepe

Garden*

The new passion...

VARELI
FABRICS

Product of the Vareli Group of Industries in association with Garden Silk Mills Pvt. Ltd. Surat

CC/SPM-1/86

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MICR–from Sirpur yet another winning move

MICR—in other words Magnetic Ink Character Recognition paper is a new concept in 21st century banking.

Made with the ultimate in quality raw materials, MICR is replacing ordinary security paper in use today e.g. Cheques, Dividend Warrants, Debentures and Bonds Interest Warrants etc. MICR has many advantages:

- Quick computerised cheque clearance
- The first step towards fulfilling the major objective of cheque clearance on a national level
- Better surface ensuring clearer printing
- Greater durability and longer life

And now Sirpur, the leaders in paper technology have through their expertise and modern know-how started manufacture of top grade MICR. With a nod of approval from the Reserve Bank of India.

The Sirpur Paper Mills Limited.

Sirpur—Kaghaznagar 504296 (A.P.)

CC/SPM-1/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

INDIA TODAY
INTERNATIONAL EDITION

GIFT INDIA TO SOMEONE YOU CARE FOR...

GIFT FOR
ADDRESS
CITY CODE
COUNTRY

Please send one year's subscription of INDIA TODAY, International Edition and my gift card to the person named above. Enclosed is my cheque/DD/M.O. for Rs_____ payable to Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.

MY NAME
ADDRESS
CITY CODE
COUNTRY

Send this advertisement and payment to:
Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.
Subscription Department
P.B. No. 69, Delhi-Mathura Road
Faridabad 121007, Haryana, India

Annual Airmail Subscription Rates

Rs 585
ABU DHABI, AFGHANISTHAN, ANTIGUA, AUSTRALIA, BAHRAIN, BAHAMAS, BARBADOS, BELGIUM, BRAZIL, BULGARIA, BURMA, CANADA, CHINA, CHILE, COLOMBIA, DENMARK, EGYPT, ETHIOPIA, FIJI, FRANCE, W. GERMANY, GHANA, GIBRALTAR, GREECE, GUYANA, HAWAI, HONG KONG, HUNGARY, INDONESIA, IRAN, IRAQ, IRELAND, ITALY, JAMAICA, JAPAN, JORDON, KAMPUCHEA, KENYA, KUWAIT, S. KOREA, LAOS, LEBANON, MALAYSIA, MALAWI, MALDIVES, MEXICO, MORROCO, NETHERLANDS, NEW ZEALAND, NORWAY, OMAN, PAKISTAN, PANAMA, PHILIPPINES, POLAND, QATAR, ROMANIA, SAUDI ARABIA, SEYCHELLES, SHARJAH, SIERRA LEONE, SINGAPORE, SOUTH AFRICA, SPAIN, SRI LANKA, SUDAN, SWITZERLAND, SYRIA, TAIWAN, TANZANIA, THAILAND, UAE, UGANDA, UK, USA, VENEZUELA, YUGOSLAVIA, YEMEN, ZAMBIA, ZIMBABWE

Rs 185
BANGLADESH, BHUTAN, NEPAL

NH 943

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

● I have resigned to strengthen the Congress party. I am grateful to the prime minister and to Indira Gandhi. I put myself at the disposal of the prime minister to use my services in any way he deems fit.

■ BHAJAN LAL, Haryana chief minister, after his resignation

● Punjab is getting Chandigarh. Haryana has got Bansi Lal. One puppet has gone and another has taken its place.

■ DEVI LAL, Lok Dal leader, after Bansi Lal's appointment as chief minister

● It (his letter to Rajiv Gandhi) is a piece of literature. I am very grateful to the press for publishing it.

■ KAMLAPATI TRIPATHI, Congress(I) working president in the Sunday Observer

● He (Rajiv) told me there was great pressure on him to drop me. When I asked him where the pressures were coming from he said that pro-American lobbies are at it.

■ BALIRAM BHAGAT, former foreign minister in Current

● It has been reported that either American or Russian pressure was behind my ouster. Nothing can be farther from the truth. It is sheer blasphemy to assume that the Prime Minister of India will ever act under pressure of any country, howsoever powerful.

■ BALIRAM BHAGAT in a press statement

● All that I can say is that our party has no Vajpayee men and no Advani men. All are BJP men.

■ L.K. ADVANI, BJP president in Sunday

● What is the political base of Rajiv Gandhi? He inherited an electoral constituency nursed by his dead brother. Arun Nehru inherited the Rai Bareli constituency just by the grace of his family title. Gandhi got Fotedar elected to the Rajya Sabha.... Should the charge that I am 'baseless' be hurled against me?

■ PRANAB MUKHERJEE in The Illustrated Weekly of India

● If anyone has a base it is there only so long as he is connected with the Congress party. The moment he is out of the Congress that base seems to evaporate.

■ ARJUN SINGH, Congress(I) vice-president in Blitz

● The Mahajan Commission has gone into the gamut of the (Belgaum) problem and has submitted its report to the Government. How can we reopen the issue now? There has to be some sanctity to the institutions we set up.

■ RAJIV GANDHI to newsmen in Delhi

● When I voted for Jayewardene in 1977, there were only 20 or 30 militants. Now there are thousands. This Government is the recruiting agent for the militants.

■ A Tamil lawyer in Sri Lanka quoted in Time magazine

● When you are the captain, you have to take the good with the bad. My shoulders are broad and my chin is strong. Nobody can question my will to win—for India or myself.

■ KAPIL DEV in his autobiography, By God's Decree

● Avoid promiscuity. Add that extra ingredient of philosophy to your life.

■ H.V. HANDE, Tamil Nadu health minister, on AIDS precautions in The Illustrated Weekly of India

● The other day I was at dinner at a friend's house and Buniyad was on. All sorts of emotional things were happening to me on the screen and these people were saying 'pass the chapattis.' I got so upset.... I've been offered very good serials but have turned them down only because of this.

■ ANITA KANWAR, Buniyad actress in Sunday Observer

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FASHION SPORTSWEAR

THAT'S A LOT OF FUN

Power now zips you up from top to toe in professional sportswear. Track suits, jogging suits, shorts, T-shirts, socks, specialist sports shoes. And to carry your kit, snazzy soft bags in a variety of shapes and sizes. Power combines the best of both worlds. Scientific design to aid your performance and a casual elegance that makes you look great anywhere you go.

POWER®

makes the DIFFERENCE...

CC-0. Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Available at select Bata & POWER stores.

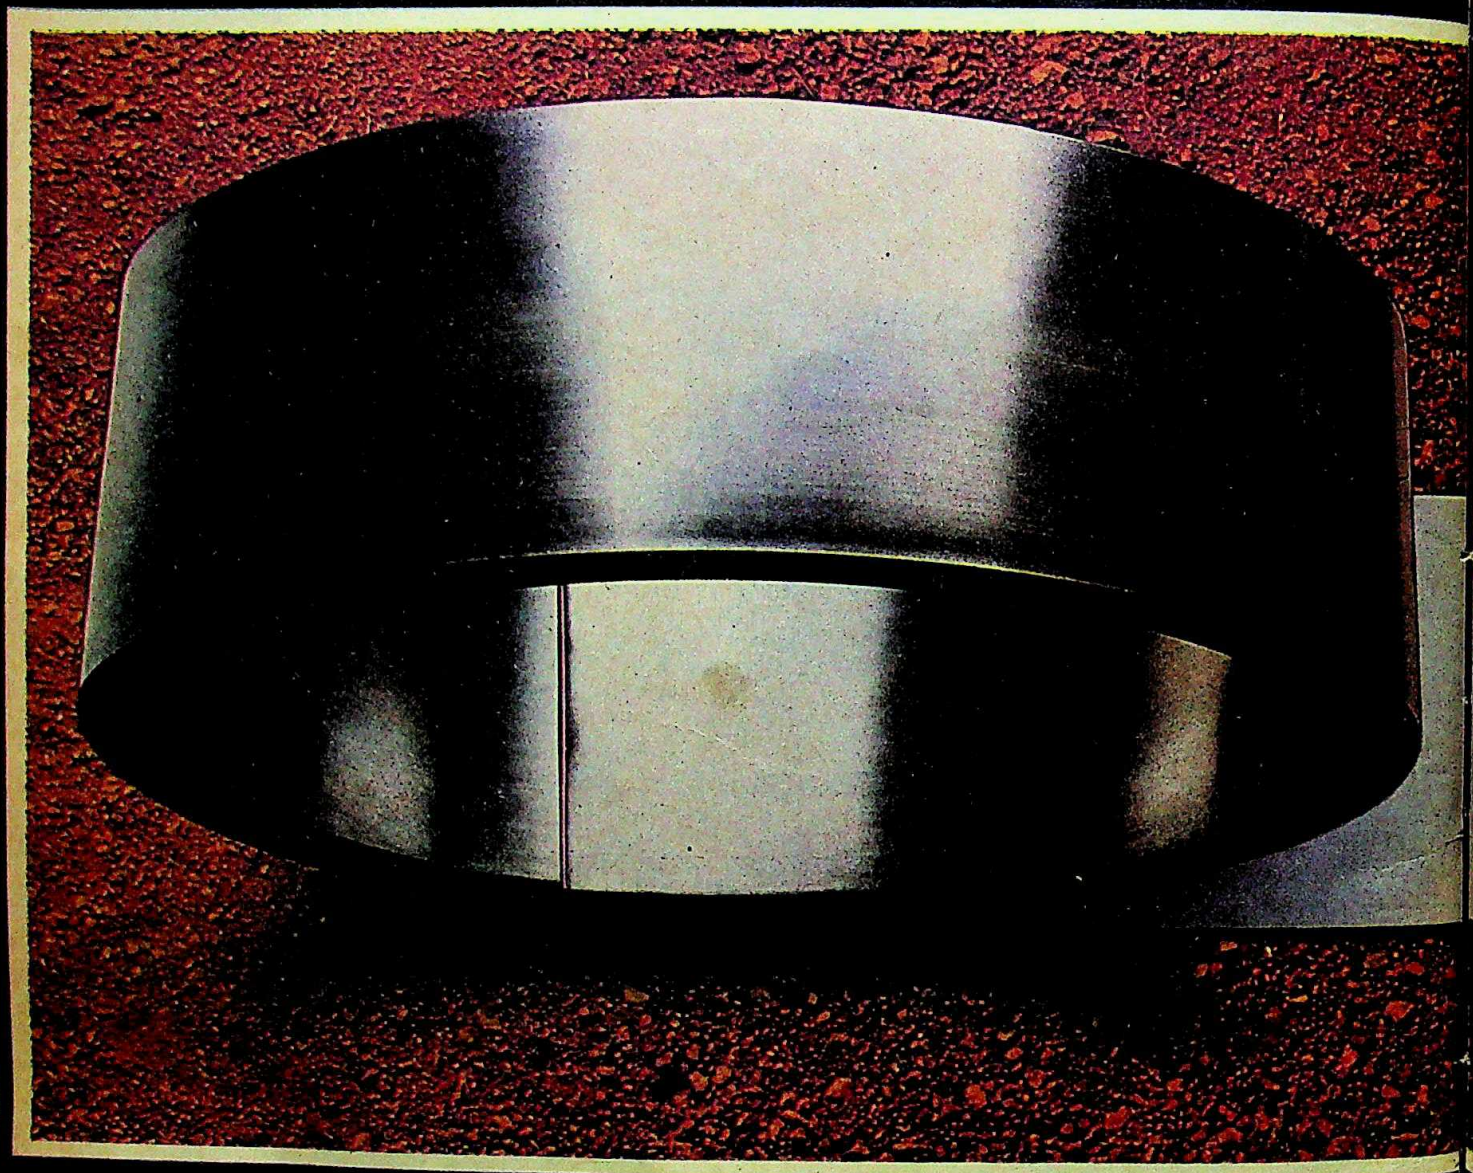
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DO MEN OF STEEL LET GRASS GROW UNDER THEIR FEET?



Not when they successfully blend workaday imperatives like achieving customer delivery targets and specifications with such far-sighted concerns as ecological balance, pollution control and the conservation of natural resources.

At TI Engineering, the future is now. That's why we are as concerned with the quality of life as with the quality of products.

In substantial measure we have devoted our metallurgical and processing knowhow, our application engineering skills and our design capability to those technologies that also reap environmental gains.

We have created precision tubes, strips and metal sections that are lighter, without degradation in tensile strength. The resultant saving in steel has also made possible lighter vehicles that are fuel efficient.

We were the first to develop indigenously collecting electrode profiles, vital components in electrostatic precipitators which control industrial air pollution.

Our innovative designs in metal sections are constantly unveiling new applications. Often involving the substitution of wood as raw material. To help conserve a valuable forest resource. These are but a few examples of how we blend technology with vision.

TI Engineering, a division of Tube Investments of India Ltd., represents a synergy of strengths ... Metallurgical and process knowhow backed by the resources of TI of the U.K. Application engineering. Innovative design. Forward thinking. And a reputation for committed customer service.

That's why, whether it's strips, tubes or sections, you can rely on TI Engineering to provide the best value for your needs. Today ... and in the years to come.

TI ENGINEERING

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Now you can stay in a deluxe Singapore hotel for 4 days and 3 nights at a price you normally pay for 1 day.

At the Oberoi, you can ask for the Oberoi Special which gives you 4 days and 3 nights at a price you can afford.

Standard Rooms	Executive Suites
US$155 for single occupancy	US$275 for single occupancy
US$85* for twin-sharing	US$145* for twin-sharing
US$75* for 3 to a room	* per person rate

Such savings mean you have more money to shop around in Singapore.

That's not all. You can choose between a free continental, western or Indian vegetarian breakfast.

There are also special 6 o'clock checkout privileges (subject to early confirmation). Not to mention the many recreational and social opportunities the hotel provides.

The daily shuttle bus service to Orchard Road gives you a real look at Singapore's exciting shopping facilities.

So if you're planning on a trip to Singapore, here's a chance to stay in a deluxe hotel at a price you thought was never possible. And you'll go home with more than just memories.

For immediate reservation and confirmation, please contact the Oberoi Hotels Instant Reservation Offices or your local travel agent.

OBEROI Imperial SINGAPORE

1, Jalan Rumbia/Oxley Rise, Singapore 0923. Tel: 7371666. Cable: Imperhotel. Telex: OBHOTEL RS 21654. Facsimile: 7374761. Owning company Hind Hotels Int Ltd.

Corporate Sales & Marketing
7 Sham Nath Marg Delhi 110054
Phone: 2525464 Telex: 66303, 66461 OMDL Cable: AHI

NEW DELHI
Phone: 699571 Telex: 31-2372 & 3829 OBDL IN

AHMEDABAD
Phone: 464451 Telex: 0121-692 OBAD IN

BANGALORE
Phone: 573444 Telex: 0845-725 MERC IN

BOMBAY
Phone: 202443 Telex: 011-4153 & 4154 OBBY IN

CALCUTTA
Phone: 292323 Telex: 021-7248 & 7854 OBCL IN

MADRAS
Phone: 478156 & 473430 Telex: 6281 OBMA IN

COLOMBO
Phone: 20001/21171 Telex: 21201 OBHOTEL CE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

AD 08

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LATE PROMOTION

■ What does it take to get a promotion in a government department? In some cases bribery does the trick, in others, clout counts. But the National Dairy Research Institute (NDRI) in New Delhi seems to have set new and bizarre standards. Take the tragic tale of R.R. Patro, one of the institute's research scientists who, frustrated by lengthy delays in his promotion and the withdrawal of an incentive granted to him by the institute, suffered severe depression last May which eventually led to his committing suicide. Patro left behind a note in which he said he was driven to taking his own life because of "official harassment and long delay in getting my due promotion".

The sad story did not end there. Exactly a fortnight after his widely-reported suicide, the powers-that-be in the NDRI decided to grant Patro his long-overdue promotion—posthumously. Patro's wife received a letter from the institute addressed to her dead husband in which the institute was pleased to grant him a promotion to a higher salary scale. The tragic irony lay more in the footnote to the letter which read: "In case of any difficulty, it would be our pleasure to render necessary assistance."

MOONLIGHT SONATA

■ When times are hard, a little moonlighting on the side can hardly be considered objectionable. But the Rehman family of Hyderabad seem to have taken it to absurd—though mutually beneficial—extremes. Rehman is an officer in the state Government's Industries Department. And his good wife just happens to be chairperson of the Standing Committee of the Municipal Corporation of Hyderabad city. And how the twain combined is currently the subject of a heated controversy. Rehman, officially meant to be relaxing on his annual leave, was unofficially moonlighting as secretary to his own wife in her official capacity.

But there was more to his extra-curricular activities than usual husbandly solicitude. In his double role, he was busy drafting letters pertaining to the awarding of lucrative contracts by the corporation for the purchase of steel for its construction projects. The rivals for the contracts were two public sector companies and his wife, as chairperson, had a major say in the decision, helped by her secretary no doubt. Marital harmony does have beneficial side-effects.

RICH PICKINGS

■ Once a thief, always a thief, or so the old saying goes. The Mawana police in Meerut district would beg to concur, specially after their recent experience. Baffled by a series of successes chalked up by a local pickpocket, the Mawana police rounded up all the known light-fingered gentry in the area. But the pickpocketing wave continued unabated. This went on for some months while the red-faced policemen continued their futile efforts to apprehend the elusive culprit under pressure from an irate—and poorer—public.

Finally, the big break came. A local citizen, Rakesh Kumar, was caught literally red-handed last fortnight while in the process of dipping his fingers into the pocket of an unsuspecting victim. Hauled off to jail, he pleaded that he was a poor amateur and his desperation for money had led him to take desperate measures. But the truth proved otherwise. Delving into his own pockets, the police discovered to their amazement that Kumar was in possession of two passbooks for different banks and the joint account showed that he had a working capital of over Rs 10 lakh, making him one of the richest individuals in the district. Who says crime doesn't pay?

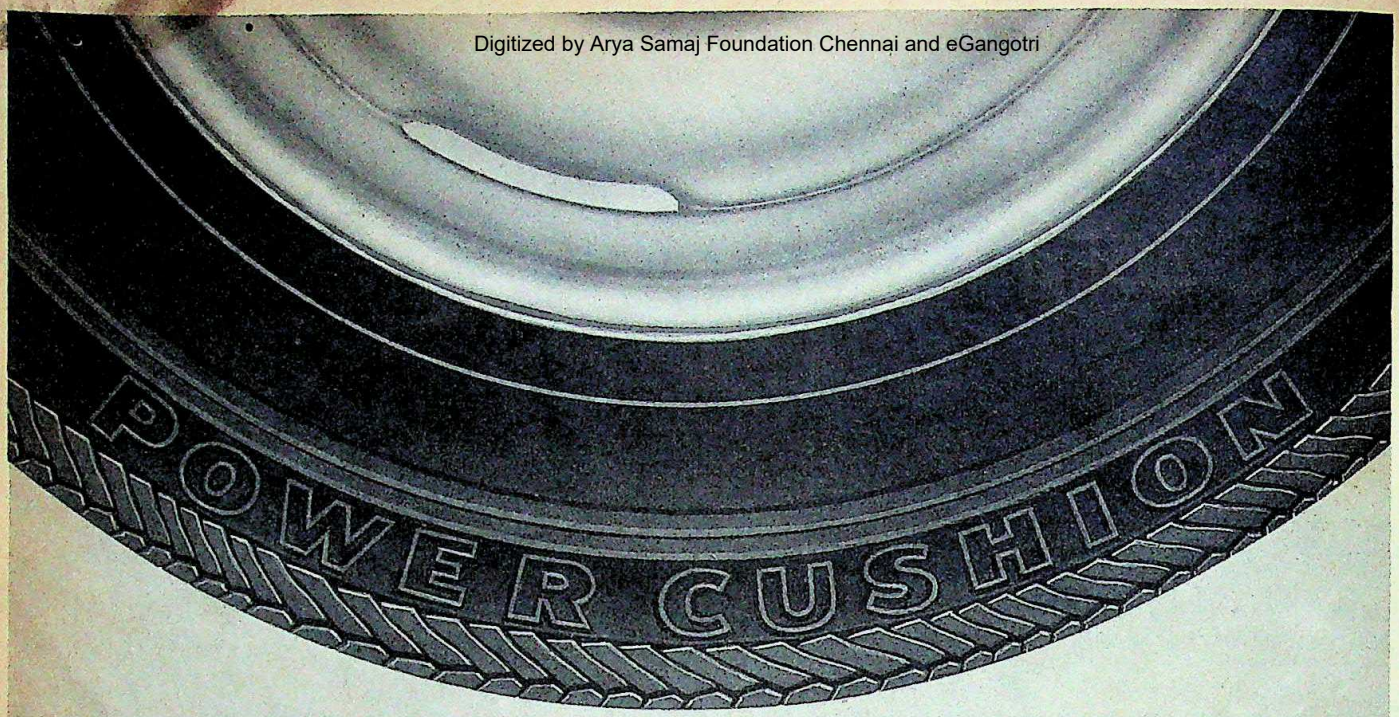
MEDICAL BUNGLE

■ Mix-ups in the medical wards of government hospitals are legion, with regular reports of doctors operating on the wrong limb or carelessly leaving behind their instruments in unsuspecting stomachs. But one of the doctors in the Thanjavur Government Hospital must surely find pride of place in the medical equivalent of the Book of Bungles. Due to perform a delicate operation on a young patient called Suresh, who had a urinary infection for which the doctor had recommended circumcision, the doctor unfortunately mistook a six-year-old boy called Ramesh whose only complaint was a boil on his foot, for the circumcision candidate. In what must rank as the cruellest cut of all, the boy with the boil woke up from anaesthesia to find that he was missing vital inches from an equally vital part of his anatomy. Now, poor Ramesh is out on a limb with the prospect of having to undergo another operation for the unattended boil. There is cold comfort for him in the fact that the bungling doctor has been suspended since this is hardly one operation scar he would like to show off.

—Compiled by DILIP BOBB

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



The strong grip of leadership

Goodyear demonstrate leadership worldwide. In technology and research, innovation and quality, in popularity amongst users and performance on world race-tracks.

The largest earthmover tyre, the tyre that landed on the moon, the largest-selling car tyre in the world — each one is a Goodyear!

Right here in India Goodyear lead with Power Cushion. The tyre you have made an unquestioned leader. Well, that's Goodyear. The finest, the world over. As Power Cushion is in India.

And with all reason.

Deeper and Wider Tread : More rubber on the tread than any other car tyre. (Consumers testify to over 50,000 Kms. of non-skid safety).

Computer chips in for more mileage, more safety :
Power Cushion's computer-perfected tread design ensures greater grip, more comfort, more safety as tread adjusts automatically to road profile.

Unique Arrow-Head Design :
For a quicker start-stop, lower rolling resistance, more fuel saving.

'3-T' Nylon Casing :
Resilient and abrasion-resistant casing that ensures more retreads.

That's Goodyear Power Cushion

GOODYEAR

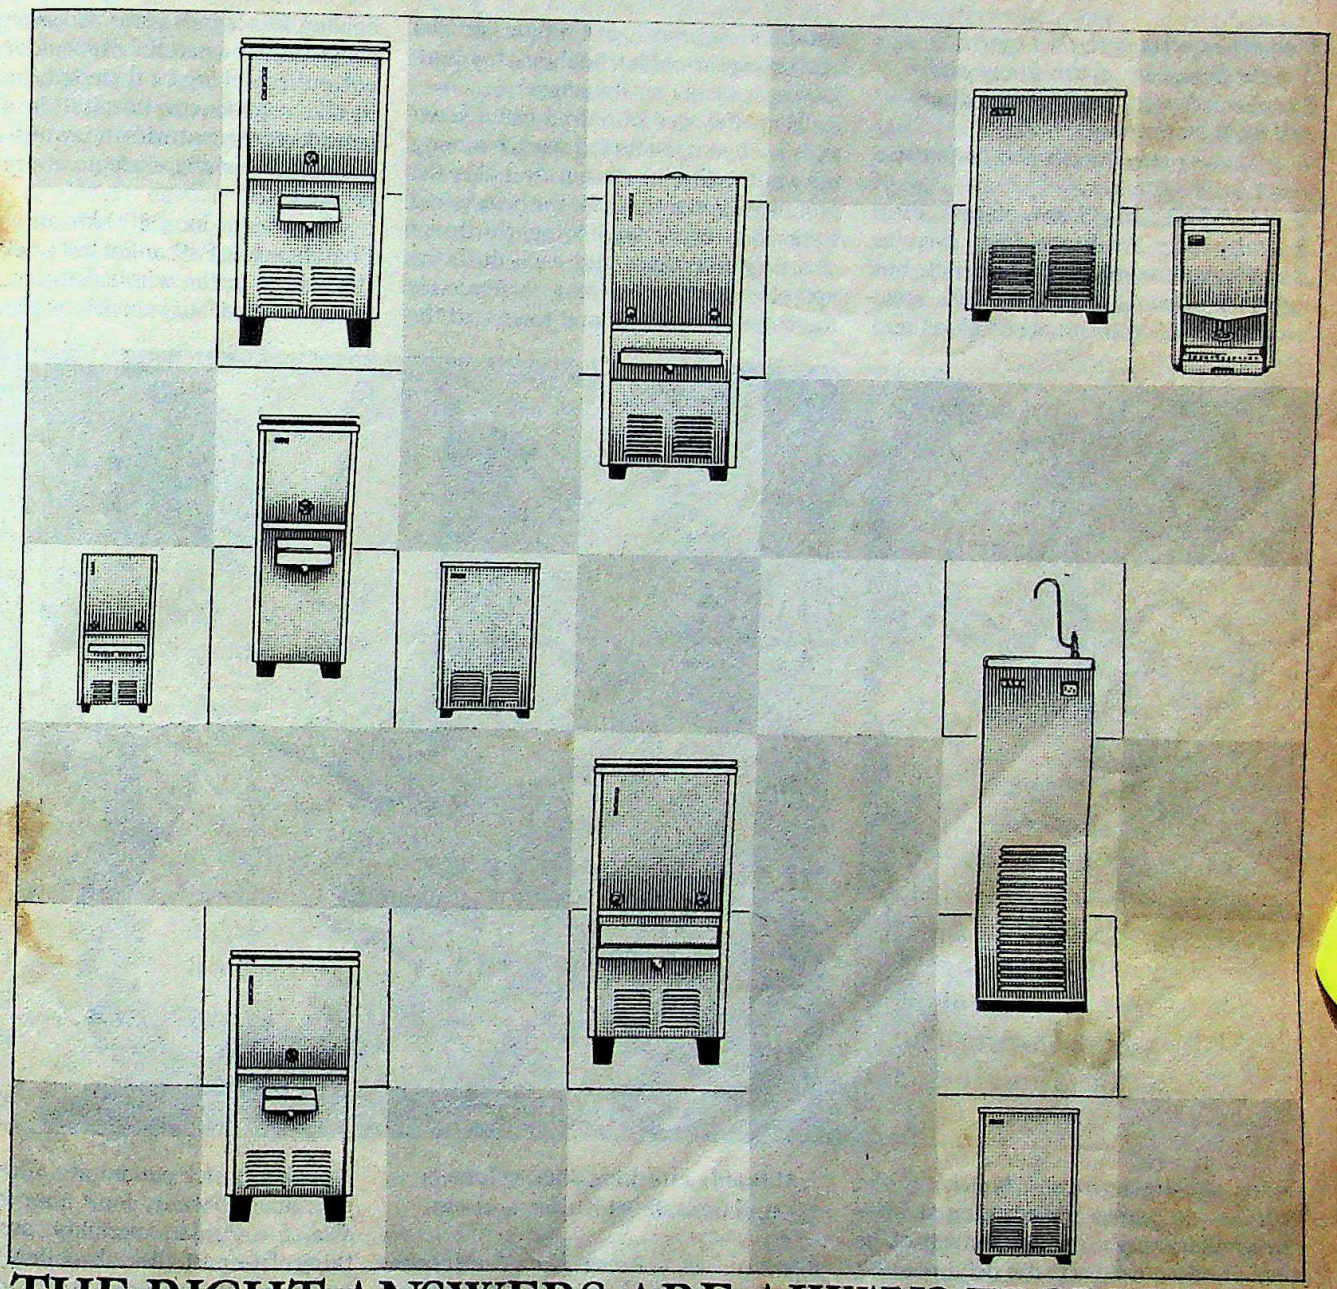
LEADING THE WORLD IN TYRE TECHNOLOGY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Contract/GY-20/85

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

1. Which is the largest selling water cooler in India?
2. Who offers the largest range of water coolers?
3. Which water cooler do two out of three Indian offices use?
4. Which Indian water cooler is exported the world over?
5. Which is the only water cooler backed by Shriram's progressive R & D and technological improvisations?
6. Which water cooler is served by a nation-wide network of over 200 sales and service outlets?
7. Which water cooler offers best value for money?



THE RIGHT ANSWERS ARE ALWAYS FROM USHA.

also available on DGS&D rate contract

USHA
WATER COOLER

The largest selling name with the largest range.

A quality product from Shriram Refrigeration Industries Limited.

Head Office : 19, Kasturba Gandhi Marg, New Delhi-110 001. Tel : 3319010/11/12/13

everest/d86/SRI/50

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUNJAB

The Grip of Fear

Punjab has fallen to the evil eye
And the flames lap up this lovely garden
Please, someone fetch red chillies and a broom
And hit it on the head.

—Young Punjabi poet Surjit Patar

IN PUNJAB today, fear is all-pervading and people are losing faith even in divine intervention. The once rich, but tightly-knit social tapestry of the state now lies stained in innocent blood and riven by the terrorists' bullets. If the Hindus are scared and running away—from villages to the relative security of the cities and from cities to the neighbouring states—the right-thinking Sikh feels increasingly insecure, unable to raise his voice in protest even against the blatant desecration of his gurudwaras by those professing to be the guardians of his own faith. There was hardly a murmur of protest on June 5 as sword and club-wielding militants lynched Avtar Singh, a member of the Shiromani Gurudwara Prabandhak Committee (SGPC) volunteer force, within half-an-hour of the meeting in the temple complex where dissident Akali leaders spewed extremist venom and Bimal Kaur Khalsa, the widow of Mrs Gandhi's assassin Beant Singh paraded her three-year-old son holding a toy-gun, his finger firmly on the trigger.

With the seed of hatred being sown with such single-minded resolve among the youth, the future hardly holds the promise of better times for the beleagured state where every dawn brings the threat of a new massacre, and each dusk the apprehension that one may not live to see the dawn. In villages and towns, in the districts of Amritsar, Gurdaspur, Kapurthala and partly Jalandhar, Hoshiarpur and Faridkot, life is circumscribed by the sickening shadow of terror. "It seems as if someone has poisoned my Punjab," laments famous Amritsar playwright and actor Gursharan Singh. Adds a youngster in Batala with a laboured attempt at wry humour: "We have an undeclared Janata curfew every day."

Highways that once saw maddeningly fast traffic, bustling bazaars where liquor shops remained open till midnight defying government orders with typical Punjabi nonchalance, and the once-over-flowing bus-stands—are all empty, unpeopled. Only a handful of people venture out, either looking for their daily bread or to take a patient to hospital. In a state considered for centuries the sword-arm of India, it seems there are no courageous people left.

On a night-long 300-km drive from Chandigarh to Pathankot last week, once the busiest in the whole country, INDIA TODAY saw just four vehicles: one carrying a perilously sick patient and three full of policemen. Twenty-four hour roadside dhabas, a Punjab speciality, are now a thing of the past. "We absolutely wind up our business by nine p.m." says Ram Singh, a dhaba owner near Mukerian, wistfully remembering the long-lost "normal" times when business went on merrily into the early hours of the morning. Similarly, between Rajpura and Amritsar—another 300 km—and on the Ludhiana-Ferozpur national highway, it is largely Punjab police patrols or Central Reserve Police Force (CRPF) pickets which greet the rare daring traveller.

In the crowded, old bazaars of Amritsar, Jalandhar, Ludhiana and elsewhere, shopkeepers draw their shutters much Fear is all-pervading and even the right-thinking Sikh's voice is drowned in the crackle of gunshots.

Militants attacking SGPC volunteer; and (left) Bimal Khalsa and son

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

before the normal closing time and flee to the relative security of their houses. "If I don't reach home by seven p.m., my wife and children go mad with fear," says Amrit Aggarwal of Katra Ahluwalia in Amritsar, struggling to keep a semblance of his textile business going at a time when many others have chosen to call it quits.

The police and security forces, who begin their intensive patrolling once dusk descends, also prefer to see people back home by then, leaving them with fewer targets to defend against the hidden, elusive terrorist monster. "Don't create problems for us. Go back to your rooms. We have enough problems as such," shouted men of a CRPF patrol, shoving and beating a bunch of rickshaw-pullers with rifle-butts in Ghantaghar Chowk, the eternal Ludhiana landmark. Their tension and anger showed in the abuse which laced their orders. Morale, obviously, is not at its best.

In the past, people used to prefer travelling by night in the summer; today, most buses reach their destinations by seven in the evening. In smaller towns buses are parked near the police stations to save them from militant pyromania. At the railway stations—particularly in Amritsar, Pathankot and Jalandhar—passengers arriving late in the evening are escorted home by police patrols, if they are lucky. Or they stay back at the platform to spend the night in collective safety. Railwaymen do the same. "Our employees who finish duty by midnight, just stay put in their work-places till the morning", says Pritam Singh, Amritsar's assistant station-master.

MOST trains have been withdrawn as a safety measure and the few that survive, including Shan-e-Punjab, once the pride of the Indian Railways' express fleet, crawl at 20 kilometres an hour. Against five trains from Amritsar to Pathankot in normal times, there is only one now, mostly carrying railway employees. On the main lines, where practically each train compartment has a posse of policemen, traffic has thinned by 30 per cent. The smaller lines barely see one-fifth the normal complement of passengers.

The mercury of life, business, social amity and communal peace, drops a few notches with the news of each killing, inflated and spiced generously with rumour. But there is a section of people, albeit miniscule, that must be laughing up its sleeve. The terrorists have now begun to see a hope of their diabolical designs coming to fruition, and their systematic campaign of murder to trigger an exchange of population as beginning to show results.

"We will first force Hindus out of the rural and semi-urban areas to major cities. In this, Sikhs will have to support us. And then we will encircle the cities. We know it is a prolonged war but we will surely win." This is how Didar Singh of the Khalistan Commando Force sums up the terrorist game-plan in identical letters sent to several prominent Hindus in the state. Adds Tarsem Singh Kohar, a well-known terrorist leader: "We want a separate constitution, a flag and a president."

Unfortunately, this madness is backed by method, ruthless, cold-blooded and utterly bereft of compassion. Locally important and well-known commission agents, teachers and doctors have been the main targets. "The extremists know what they are doing. They know that killing influential people will cause more scare and migration," says Amritsar police chief S.S. Virk. Already, as state police Director-General Julio Ribeiro concedes, some terrorist sanctuaries are beginning to take shape close to the India-Pakistan border. And as he says with a hint of helplessness: "It is disgusting to see teachers, commission agents, bus passengers and farmers getting killed like ducks."

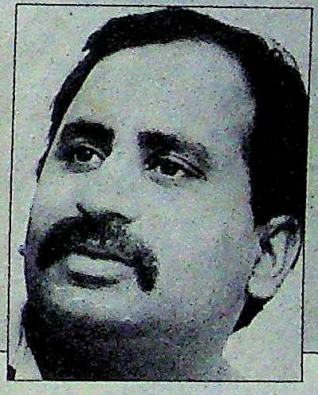
The few Sikhs who oppose the terror campaign are being systematically annihilated. The small minority of middleground leaders in the Damdami Taksal or the All-India Sikh Students Federation, such as Harinder Singh Kahlon, who oppose the cult of killing are getting isolated, their increasingly feeble voice drowned in the crashing din of gunshots. The law of the gun is all pervasive and seemingly unchallenged.

The same sense of panic that engulfs

"The extremists know what they are doing. They know that killing influential people will cause more scare and migration."
S.S. VIRK
Amritsar police chief

"I sometimes feel like jumping down the roof. If we publish we are damned by the terrorists and if we don't, our readers call us cowards."
VIJAY KUMAR CHOPRA
Jalandhar editor

"Seventy per cent of our business is gone. We dare not go to the villages."
NARESH SETHI
Amritsar carpet manufacturer



"You will see workers rampaging in the streets and hungry mouths laying hands on whatever is available."
AMRIK SINGH AMAN
Ludhiana industrialist

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the common man is palpable even in the heavily stockaded police stations. Most of the time these are locked from inside and policemen are extremely hesitant to open the doors. The terrorists have made a special target of the police. A Ludhiana Deputy Superintendent of Police, R.K. Bedi, who arrested known terrorist Gursewak Singh Babla lost his son at the hands of the terrorists. "The police is more demoralised than the people," laments Congress(I) state unit President Beant Singh.

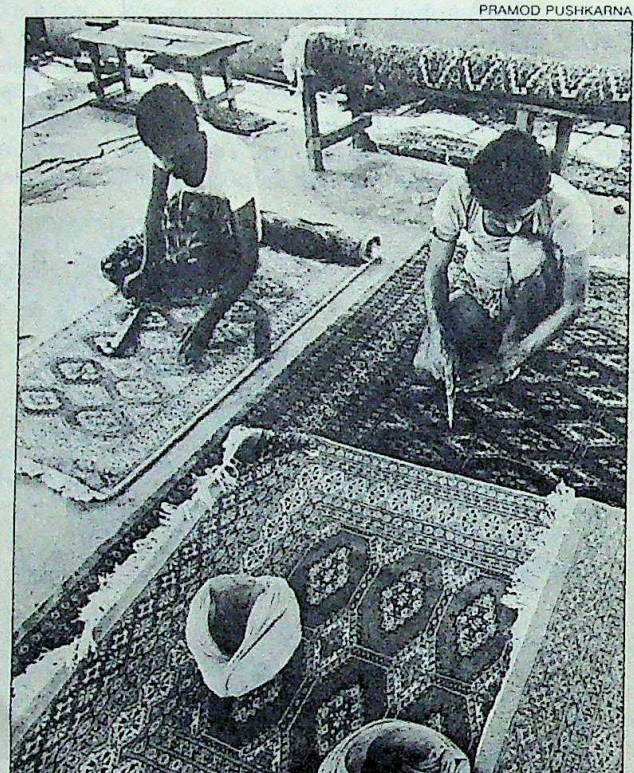
In the rural areas, the centre of systematic annihilation of Hindus and the Sikhs opposed to terrorism, fear has immobilised the bravest of people. In Chola Sahib in Amritsar district, when over two dozen terrorists struck last fortnight, killing four and injuring seven, no one gathered the wits or the courage to go and inform the police. At Warpal, barely 10 km from Amritsar, four terrorists nonchalantly entered the house of Sohan Lal, killed him and his daughter and instructed his dazed family to stay put if they wanted to remain alive. The village, incredibly enough, learnt of the killings a good four hours after they had been carried out.

In Fatehgarh Churian, a town of 20,000, when the terrorists struck and killed the courageous BJP leader Ram Lubhaya, they had the cheek to tell people not to move without their permission as it was a "liberated area of the Khalistan Commando Force". "We have no words. We can tell our tale only in tears," says Lubhaya's daughter. The scars of the Hindu-Sikh clash that took place after the killing are too deep to be forgotten. Hindus agree that most Sikhs shelter terrorists out of fear, but feel that some also do so out of sympathy. "Sikhs are helpless. We are scared. We are bound to die one by one," says Narinder Kundra, who recently resigned from the Congress (I).

Terrorists have already declared two sub-divisions, Tarn Taran in Amritsar district and Batala in Gurdaspur district, as their liberated areas. "The terrorists rule here while the police looks the other way. Nobody dares to oppose them and we are not in a position to defend ourselves," says Rajpal, a panchayat member of Fatehabad in Tarn Taran from where 30 Hindu families have already migrated. Adds Dr Beant Singh, a CPI member: "People have lost faith in the police and the rulers. Either we have to get organised and fight back or we are finished."

Scores of Hindus have fled from a large number of villages and from small towns like Patti, Khadoor Sahib, Goindwal, Chatiwind, Majitha, Jhabal, Chola Sahib and Tumbi (INDIA TODAY, June 15). Those who have stayed back are only biding their time. "I am here only to sell away my shop. The rest of my family is already in Haryana," says Ramesh Kumar, a small shopkeeper in Warpal. Although the police denies it vehemently, many people allege that the police tell them to go away till they can control terrorism.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



More than half the business houses are getting carpets woven in Kashmir and in the few units that survive, their mainly Muslim workers have grown beards and wear turbans.

The extremists' penchant for pulling the trigger is matched only by their flair for letter-writing. The police receive about a score every day forwarded by scared citizens. V.K. Chopra, editor of the Jalandhar-based Hind Samachar group of newspapers gets at least three every day as his publications have championed the Hindu cause. Chopra functions from a heavily guarded office, approaches to which are out of bounds. He moves with an escort of half a dozen armed policemen, but is still mortally scared. "I sometimes feel like jumping down the roof. If we publish we are damned by the terrorists and if we don't, our readers call us cowards," says Chopra, whose father and brother were killed by terrorists.

BATALA, once the prosperous industrial hub of Gurdaspur, is now the nucleus from which the violent campaign radiates into the state. Half of the foundry units in the city are already closed, some 45 of them shifting to Samalkha near Panipat in Haryana in the last two months. As many as 750 business houses have surrendered their sales tax allotments. "Banks give no credit. All trade is in cash. We are here because we cannot face hunger," says Anil Sareen, a foundry owner. Adds a Sikh who prefers the discretion of anonymity: "We are threatened if we buy Hindu property. Terrorists tell us that all the property belongs to the Sikhs."

The industrial scene is just as dismal in Amritsar, Jalandhar or Ludhiana. There are 10,000 powerlooms scattered in Amritsar and the villages around, but business in the once-flourishing textile trade is down by 40 per cent. In worsted weaving, blankets, staple yarn and shawls, Amritsar is losing its prime position to Surat, Ahmedabad and Bombay. More than half the business houses are getting their carpets woven in Kashmir and in the units that survive, workers, mostly Muslim craftsmen from Uttar Pradesh, have grown beards and wear turbans. "Seventy per cent of our business is gone. We dare not go to the villages," says Naresh Seth of Moghul Carpets with a Rs one-crore plus annual turnover. The two-shift factory routine is a thing of the past and Amritsar's volume of annual trade is down to a bare Rs 200 crore, one third of what it used to be in better times. Economically, Punjab is in the doldrums.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The flight of industry and capital has also begun from these cities. Blanket-makers are moving to Panipat. Some are going to Kashmir, Ahmedabad—even Bombay. Migrant workers from Bihar and Uttar Pradesh are leaving. Banks are chary of giving advances and transport is hamstrung. If terrorism keeps its pace, the ranks of the unemployed will swell and add to the tension. "You will see workers rampaging in the streets and hungry mouths laying hands at whatever is available. The crime graph will shoot up," says industrialist Amrik Singh Aman, whose cycle parts unit has halved its production.

What is worse, the pattern of panic is conforming to terrorist designs. There is a rapidly widening cleavage between Hindus and Sikhs. In rural Punjab, Hindus get scared if a strange Sikh appears in the village and in the Hindu-dominated localities of Amritsar, Jalandhar and Ludhiana, Sikhs are moving out to safer, Sikh-populated areas. After each terrorist attack, Shiv Sena workers make Sikh homes and shops their target. Laments Gurdaspur Police Chief J.P. Birdi, an energetic officer who spends a physically exhausting 16 hours a day dashing about from village to village: "In Fatehgarh Churian innocent Sikhs became the target after terrorists killed the BJP leader. This aggravates the problem."

This is particularly tragic because in Punjab there is no dearth of families with both Hindus and Sikhs in their fold. "With each breath I only say waheguru," says an old Hindu woman of Fatehabad who has sought shelter in Amritsar. From this village a Chawla family has split, with two brothers staying back and two leaving for Karnal. "I have better relations with my Sikh partner than with my brothers," bemoans Premnath, a Sirhind industrialist who refuses to concede that they can ever be separated.

Sikhs are equally upset but feel helpless. "There was Bluestar, Woodrose, the November 1984 riots and now the terrorist killings. We Sikhs have lost so many lives. Still we have not killed a single Hindu in Punjab. The terrorists are not Sikhs. Let the Government catch them," says Gurdev Singh, a farmer from Jhabal village near Amritsar.

In this scenario, where police are helpless and political leaders rendered more or less irrelevant, looking into the future is a depressing pursuit. Most depressing of all, perhaps, for Chief Minister Surjit Singh Barnala fighting odds on all fronts—with rivals in the Akali Dal, with Haryana and the Centre vis-a-vis the accord and with terrorists. In sheer desperation, last fortnight he ordered a full-scale deployment of security forces. The worst-affected areas of Amritsar and Gurdaspur were handed over to the CRPF and the BSF, respectively. Under overall command of Ribeiro, inspectors-general of the two forces will be in charge of the two districts where 22 additional companies have taken the total strength of armed policemen to over 22,000. Terrorists have started shifting to Hoshiarpur, Sangrur, and Ludhiana, where the police think they can be met because they do not have so many hide-outs.

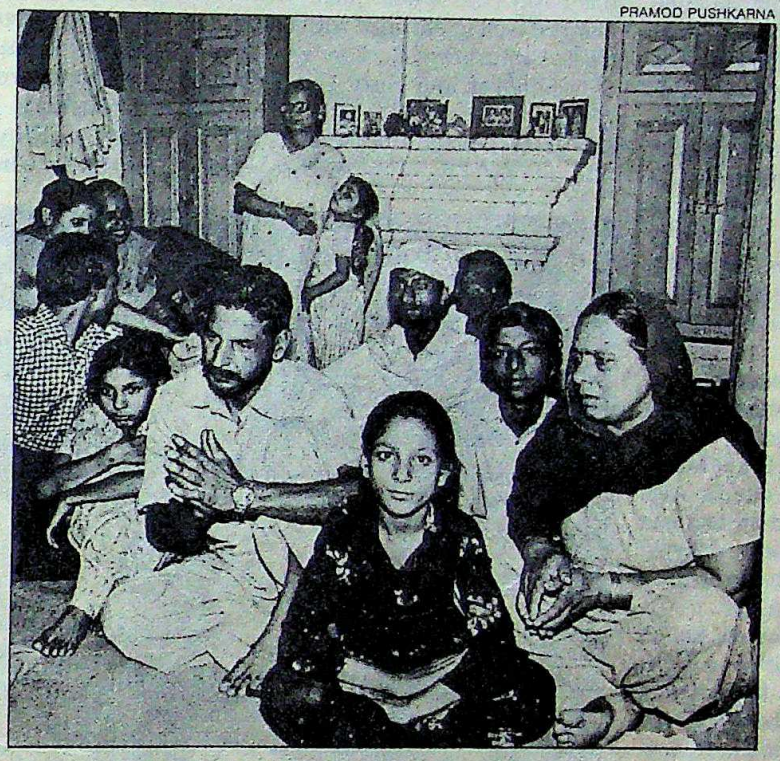
There is the promise of a new offensive at the political level as well. For the first time since the Akali Government took over, a minister, though a junior one, has picked up courage and toured the sensitive areas in Amritsar and Gurdaspur. Minister of State for Home Kanwaljit Singh initially had a tough time talking to Sikh peasants, particularly at Balpuria village in Batala sub-division where over 200 Sikhs urged him to tell the Akali leaders to stop quarreling and give political power to the youth. "We have to wean away the youth from this path. State terrorism or army deployment are no answer," Singh said later.

But that is precisely what is happening, as the tally of deaths crossed the 250 mark since Barnala took over. With more and more paramilitary forces being sucked in, it seemed the Government was being drawn inexorably towards the last choice in Punjab, calling in the army in at least the border districts. And when that happens, Punjab, within two bloody years, would return to the nightmare days of Operation Bluestar.

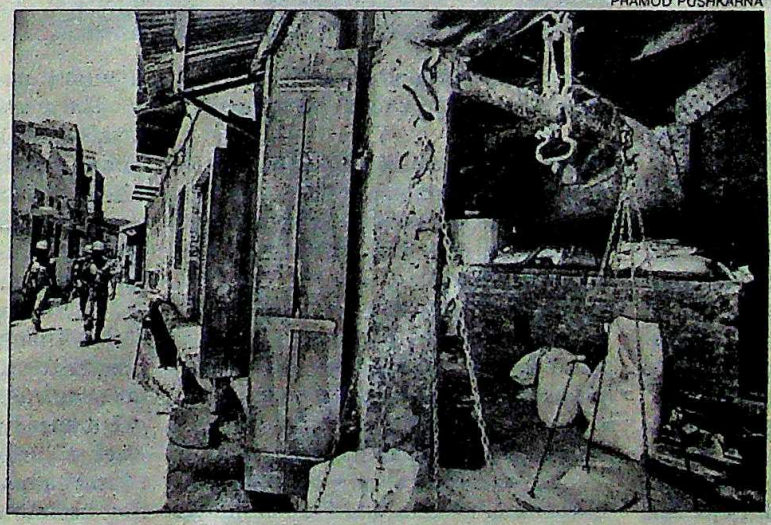
—GOBIND THUKRAL in Amritsar

Deserted streets in Fatehpur (bottom); and Hindu family in an Amritsar temple

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HARYANA

Bansi's Burden

FOR ALMOST seven years, he had clung on to the chief ministership of Haryana with a dubious mixture of political guile and blatant power-broking. In the market-place of politics, he is considered the consummate wheeler-dealer. But then, somewhat inevitably, the count-down for the transfer of Chandigarh to Punjab also set the final seal on his survival in office. In a rather ignominous exit, he meekly handed in his 'resignation' last fortnight, and was replaced by Bansi Lal, Union transport minister and former chief minister of the state.

The timing made it abundantly obvious that it was intended to remove a major irritant in the implementation of the Punjab accord. At stake was Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi's own credibility with the Punjab Government and the fact that the ruling party in Haryana was receiving a battering from the Opposition provided a convenient, additional incentive.

Bhajan Lal's exit followed Rajiv's growing conviction that with him in the driving seat, the Haryana Government would not only sabotage the accord but would be unable to handle the Opposition-sponsored anti-accord agitation. Exulted a dissident Haryana leader: "By forcing Bhajan Lal to quit, Rajivji has proved that he can be tough and decisive when the need arises and is capable of defeating politicians like Bhajan Lal at their own game."

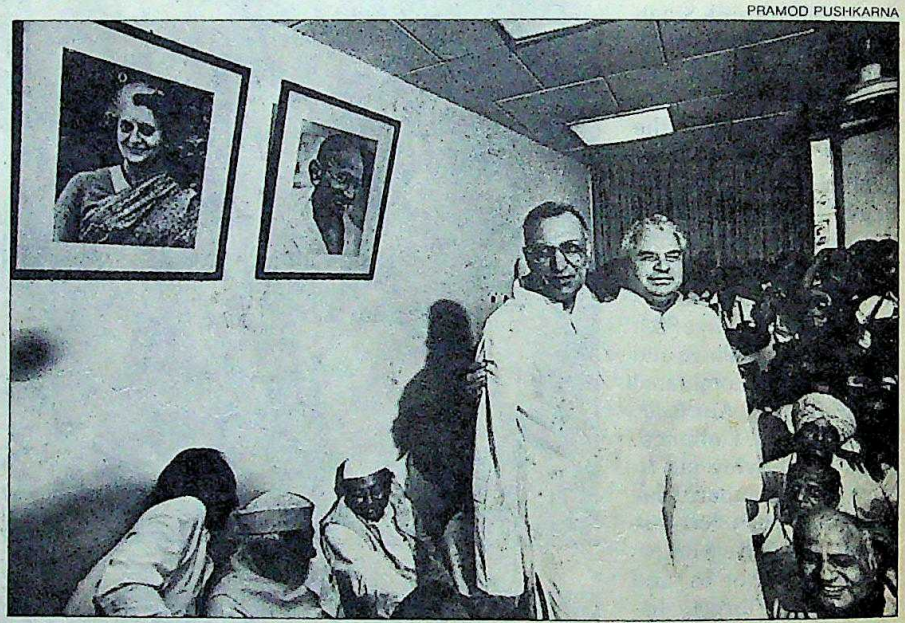
For once, Bhajan Lal was caught on the wrong foot. On the fateful day, he was scheduled to attend a meeting at the North Block office of Union Home Minister Buta Singh in New Delhi along with Punjab Chief Minister S.S. Barnala. However, before he could set off from Haryana Bhavan, he was summoned by Rajiv. Barely had he sat down when Rajiv dropped the bombshell. Charging that his actions were against the party's avowed stand on the Punjab accord, Rajiv said that he also had information that he was trying to build up his own image at the expense of the Centre. Rajiv's aggressive approach was enough for Bhajan Lal to realise that he had no choice but to abdicate. His resignation was handed over before he left the Prime Minister's Secretariat.

Though it did come as a surprise to everybody, including Central Cabinet ministers (even Buta Singh, who was handling the Punjab accord, was kept in the dark), the whole affair had been planned well in advance with only a few trusted ministers like Foreign Minister Shiv Shanker and party Vice-President Arjun Singh privy to the plan. The decision to sack Bhajan Lal was taken soon after the meeting of the Political Affairs Committee of the Cabinet, held on May 31 at the prime minister's residence to consider the report of the Venkataramiah Commission (see box) looking into the territorial dispute.

During the meeting, it was revealed that the Haryana Government had filed an affidavit with the commission reiterating its claim to both Fazilka and Abohar. Haryana maintained that the commission had no jurisdiction to consider anything else, other than sorting out the question of Abohar and Fazilka. Justice Venkataramiah was in the process of giving the finishing touches to his final report expressing his inability to sort out the dispute, which would have resulted in a dangerous impasse, like in the case of the Mathew Commission report. The Haryana Government, and Bhajan Lal, had been specifically directed by the Centre not to insist on Abohar and Fazilka and were advised instead to file an alternative claim to the commission, so that it could provide a face-saving solution to the state. Bhajan Lal's defiance was thus an unexpected snag.

Initially, Bhajan Lal feigned innocence, but subsequently, in a letter to the home minister, he regretted his action and at the same time sought an extension of the commission's term, due to expire on May 31. Rajiv conceded the request for an extension, but at the same time set in motion the process for Bhajan's ouster. He asked Arjun Singh to summon all the Haryana Congress MLA's and MP's to Delhi on the day when Bhajan Lal was supposed to meet Buta Singh.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



Bansi Lal (left) and Bhajan Lal after the election of the new chief minister

The meeting was ostensibly called to tackle the Opposition-sponsored agitation against the Chandigarh transfer and also to elicit the views of Congressmen on the territorial issues to be finalised by the commission. It was also a convenient coincidence that Haryana Governor S.M.H. Burney was also present in New Delhi. Though Arjun Singh maintained that there was no connection between the meeting and Bhajan's exit, the observers went ahead with the formality of asking each of the 58 MLA's present in Delhi to "elect" a new leader. Bhajan Lal, knowing his fate was sealed, was pressurised into proposing the name of Bansi Lal, his arch-rival in the state. Insisted Sitaram Kesari, one of the observers: "No one was imposed from above. It was Bansi Lal all the way. The party requires an experienced, loyal and tough chief minister".

Bansi Lal's induction in the state as chief minister paid immediate dividends.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Soon after his swearing-in, he spoke with a conciliatory yet firm tone on the question of the transfer of Chandigarh in lieu of Abohar and Fazilka to Haryana. Retracting on the stand he had taken earlier, during his stint as chief minister between 1968 and 1975, Bansi Lal asserted, "Why should we talk about the past? Let us think of the future now. I will agree to forgo Abohar and Fazilka if it is in the national interest." Coming from the chief minister of a state which was proving a major hurdle in the implementation of the accord, it clearly meant that Bansi Lal was prepared to sacrifice his own political interests for the sake of the prime minister and the party.

BHAWAN SINGH

Devi Lal with anti-accord poster at Samiti meeting in Rohtak: major threat

BANSI LAL'S strategy will be to focus on the water problem, a key issue for the Jat-dominated rich peasantry in Haryana, for whom Chandigarh has no emotional attraction. Bansi Lal had earlier told the prime minister that the people of Haryana would welcome any solution which would give them more water and less territory in return for Abohar and Fazilka. His assessment seems to be pretty close to the truth. A majority of the people who were interviewed by INDIA TODAY last week in the state seemed to share this perception. According to Ram Sarup, an old farmer of Dasiya Village on the road from Rohtak to Gohana: "We have no love for Chandigarh. Just get us more water. And we don't care whether it comes from Punjab or Pakistan." Admitted a Lok Dal leader from Haryana: "If Bansi Lal can get more water from Punjab we will not be able to collect a few hundred for our agitation".

But Bansi Lal is not willing to sacrifice his all at the altar of the accord. While reluctantly accepting the offer of chief ministership, he made it clear that he would be firm when it came to protecting the interests of the state. In agreeing to the transfer of Chandigarh without Abohar and Fazilka, he reiterated that he would run his government from Chandigarh for at least five years till the Central Government constructed a new capital for the state on par with Le Corbusier's creation. He also extracted a promise from the Centre that the construction of the Sutlej-Yamuna-Link Canal will be done by a Central agency and the Eradi Commission adjudicating the water dispute would be prodded into giving its report at the earliest. Said Bansi Lal, "I will do all that a chief minister is expected to do."

And that, apart from the tricky accord-related issues, is no mean task. He now also has to try and salvage the damage done to the party and its image by his predecessor. Under Bhajan Lal, loyalty to the party and the leader could no longer be taken for granted. Over 25 of the 62 Congress MLA's had won the state elections on opposition tickets and Bhajan Lal was able to lure them over in his inimitable horse-trading style and set yet another record in converting a minority party into a majority in the span of 48 hours.

Bansi Lal lacks this ability, and he has to carry the MLA's with him till at least the next assembly elections due in May 1987. Since Bhajan Lal has bowed out of office leaving behind the impression that he was hounded out by the Centre for espousing the cause of Haryana, Bansi Lal has to walk a wafer-thin tightrope in convincing his colleagues that he will not abandon the state's interests either, however selectively, in order to neutralise the threat Bhajan Lal could pose to the party. During the last three years, Bhajan Lal has been able to build up an image of a saviour of the Hindus and had also succeeded in keeping the Sikh extremists on a tight leash as far as Haryana was concerned.

Bansi Lal thus faces a related dilemma. He cannot adopt the hawkish postures of Bhajan Lal, but at the same time he cannot afford to create the impression of being a puppet of the Centre which would also mean committing political hara-kiri.

It was precisely because of this that he has put before the commission Haryana's case for the transfer of at least 483 villages from Punjab. The state Government also made it clear that it would like the transfer of Chandigarh to be linked with the handing over of the administrative control of Hindi-speaking areas to Haryana. And when the commission submitted its report, it was Haryana which gained, since the commission's recommendations mean that it loses nothing to Punjab. Nothing could have been so advantageous for the Government, and Bansi Lal, faced with a major agitation threat from all the opposition parties.

Bansi Lal's immediate problem is to counter the agitation, launched by the Lok Sangharsha Samiti led by former chief minister Devi Lal, who has given a call for a Haryana bandh on June 21 when Chandigarh is to be handed over to Punjab. Says Devi Lal: "Haryana's interest cannot be protected by those who survive on the base of the support of their leaders in Delhi. One puppet has been replaced by another." Added Dr Mangal Sein, leader of the Bharatiya Janata Party: "The question is not who rules the state but who ensures the safety of minorities in Punjab and puts down terrorism with a heavy hand. We will not tolerate any attempt to surrender the rights of our people."

During the last few months, opposition leaders have been touring the state extensively to mobilise the people, particularly the Jat community, into opposing the Punjab accord. A few MLA's have even resigned on this question. Now, with Bansi Lal in command, the agitation is sure to acquire a more ruthless edge since it is a test of strength for both the Jat giants, Devi Lal and Bansi Lal, who have old scores to settle. Bansi Lal has not forgotten the humiliation he suffered at the hands of Devi Lal's govermnent in 1977. In what was purely a politically vengeful action,

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the Haryana police arrested Bansi Lal on flimsy charges and brought him to the courts handcuffed. Earlier, Bansi Lal during his stay as chief minister had Devi Lal arrested and paraded in handcuffs. Bansi Lal, however, acts unruffled: "I have handled many such agitations in the past and will tackle this threat also. Wait and see. We will fight the battle both administratively and politically."

But it is destined to be a bloody battle. Not only does he have to assert himself politically with the unpredictable Bhajan Lal waiting in the wings to pull the rug if he stumbles, Bansi Lal will also have to neutralise the Jat-dominated opposition. Since he himself has a a sizeable Jat following, a chunk of the community is likely to desert Devi Lal leading to a period of political turmoil.

Bansi Lal's major problem, however, is to revive the totally demoralised Congress Party and build up a trusted team of his own. During the last three years, Bhajan Lal's only priority was to keep his government afloat at any cost, leading to a parallel neglect of the state's development. Both power and industrial production have suffered a sharp setback and industrial indiscipline in the state has been hitting new highs.

To reverse this trend Bansi Lal has already drawn up an action plan which he means to implement during his first 100 days in office. The plan, for which funds have been made available, aims at faster development of irrigation and power facilities in the state and a stringent check on wasteful expenditure. But the implementation of the plan requires the support of a committed bureaucracy. Bansi Lal's advantage is that he has already earned a reputation for his administrative skills. He ordered a major reshuffle of key departments like finance, power and revenue within a week of his taking charge and has brought in trusted civil servants who have earlier worked under him.

He has also drawn up an extensive touring schedule in the villages to counter the Opposition agitation. During the next few weeks he plans to cover all the major towns and important villages and woo the Jats back into the Congress fold by laying out his objectives and priorities. If Bansi Lal does succeed in neutralising the agitation, reviving the state's industrial health, and keeping the party together—a tall order—Rajiv's gamble of changing the leadership just 11 months before the state elections are due, could pay rich dividends.

—PRABHU CHAWLA

VENKATARAMIAH AWARD

No Solution

THE Justice E.S. Venkataramiah Commission's award on Hindi-speaking areas to be given to Haryana in lieu of Chandigarh going to Punjab has once again proved that judges do not sort out territorial issues. In the process, the Union Government has realised that exchange of territories is a political issue which can only be sorted out at the political level.

Venkataramiah: justice delayed

Though Justice E.S. Venkataramiah quantified that Punjab should transfer 70,000 acres to Haryana, he left his main job—to identify Hindi-speaking areas for transfer to Haryana—untouched. "It may not be too late for the Centre and the governments of Punjab and Haryana to settle this issue amicably by identifying the villages to be given without insisting upon proof regarding the question whether they are Hindi-speaking or Punjabi-speaking," the judge observed.

Immediate reactions to Justice Venkataramiah's award were predictable. While the Punjab Congress (I) welcomed it, the Akali Dal, both the ruling Barnala faction and the rebels, were greatly upset. Reflecting the general mood, Education Minister Basant Singh Khalsa said: "The Rajiv-Longowal accord is dead. Venkataramiah has even surpassed Mathew." And while the opposition parties in Haryana roundly denounced the award, the ruling Congress(I) accepted it.

Barnala avoided any direct criticism but the Punjab Cabinet expressed "its deep sense of anguish to find that the commission has made recommendations unwarranted by its terms of reference as also by the letter and spirit of the accord." It "urged the Centre to review the report and strike down the portions transgressing and violating the terms of reference".

The award, Akali Dal leaders felt, shows that the Congress(I) Government is now giving primacy to its political compulsions in Haryana. Said Punjab Finance Minister Balwant Singh: "The purpose of the accord was to solve the Punjab problem. But this award solves the Congress(I)'s problems in Haryana." Added the Revenue Minister Major Singh Uboke: "The report is shocking and shows the Centre's insincerity."

Haryana, on the other hand, was happy with the package of awards given by the commission: that the Centre should bear the cost of land, its development and construction of government buildings for the capital of Haryana. A cabinet meeting presided over by Bansi Lal accepted the award, forsaking the state's earlier claim to Fazilka and Abohar "in the national interest".

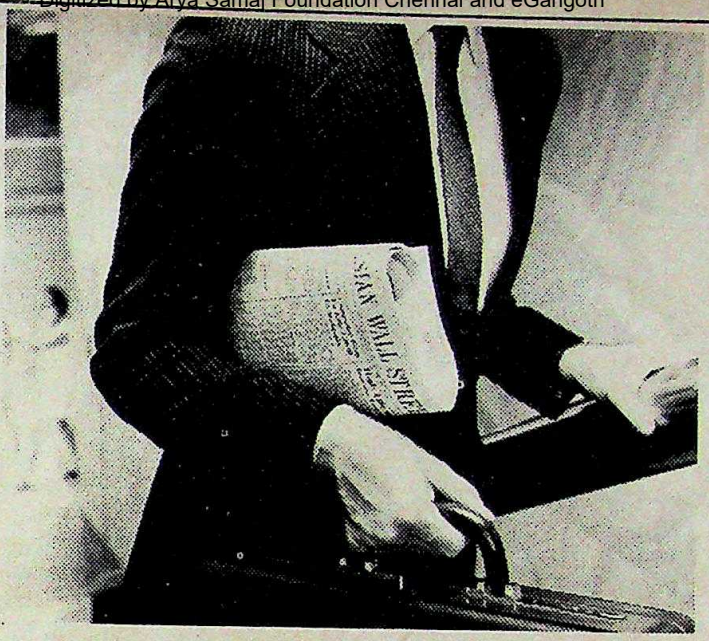
Committed to transferring Chandigarh to Punjab by June 21, the Centre stepped up its efforts to hammer out a political solution. At a night-long meeting with Barnala, Balwant Singh and Governor S.S. Ray, Arjun Singh offered due compensation to Punjab and urged that the award be accepted. But the Akali leaders were unconvinced. While Arjun Singh returned to Delhi, Dr Attar Singh, a teacher at the Punjab University, was asked to convince the Akalis that the Centre is sincere.

Late last week, however, it seemed the efforts at a compromise could bear fruit. Barnala, who had offered 45,000 acres in 31 villages to Haryana, indicated that a solution to the problem of the remaining 25,000 acres could be worked out. And suddenly it seemed that the clouds that had gathered over the transfer of Chandigarh to Punjab, and, consequently, over the Rajiv-Longowal accord, might dissipate in a new spirit of give and take.

—GOBIND THUKRAL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



IF YOU WANT TO GET AHEAD, START BY KEEPING UP.

It's easy to spot the people on the move in business.

They're already reacting to the latest developments before others are even aware of them.

They read The Asian Wall Street Journal.

All the business news you need.

Every business day, The Asian Wall Street Journal gives you important information that can affect you, your career, and your company.

No business magazine is as timely, no newspaper business section as complete.

The Asian Journal has access to the largest staff of business news experts in the world. They know what you need, while sparing you the unimportant and the irrelevant.

So if you're serious about getting ahead, you should read the publication that keeps successful executives on top of the business news.

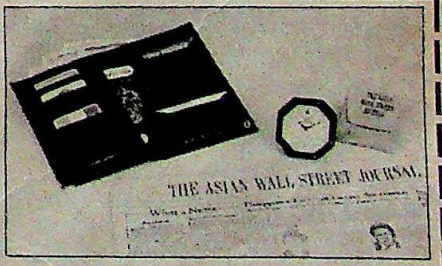
The Asian Wall Street Journal.

Subscribe now for a free gift.

Enter a new subscription for three months, and we'll send you a fine leather passport case, free. Subscribe for one year, and receive an elegant quartz analog travel clock, absolutely free.

To start your subscription to The Asian Wall Street Journal, please complete the coupon below and mail it today.

Return to: India Book Distributors
107/8 Arcadia Bldg, 195 Nariman Point, Bombay 400021 (Tel: 225220)



YES, please enter my subscription to The Asian Wall Street Journal for (tick one):

☐ ONE YEAR (253 ISSUES) Rs1,650. Send me the free travel clock with case.

☐ THREE MONTHS (64 ISSUES) Rs500. Send me the free leather passport case.

☐ I enclose my cheque for _____ payable to "India Book Distributors."

☐ Please charge my credit card.

☐ Diners Club
☐ Central Card

Signature _____
Card No. _____
Expiry Date _____

Name (please print) _____ Title _____
Company _____
Delivery Address _____
_____ Tel. _____

IT

THE ASIAN WALL STREET JOURNAL.

Incentive

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MUKESH PARPIANI/The Daily

BELGAUM

The Elusive Solution

BELGAUM seems a far cry from Punjab. Yet it was here that the Punjab formula of granting territory on the principle of language affinity fired the embers of a dying aspiration, and stoked a week-long agitation that pitted political friends against each other, deeply embarrassed the Janata Party Government in Karnataka and left in its wake seven people dead and the people of a water-starved city wondering whether the day of reckoning had come. For 30 years the desire of the Marathi-speaking people of Belgaum to merge their territory with Maharashtra has periodically hit this northern Karnataka district with gale-like force. Last fortnight's was the strongest ever.

The spark this time was a decision by the Ramakrishna Hegde-led Janata Party Government making the teaching of Kannada compulsory even in areas around Belgaum that are predominantly Marathi-speaking. The decision gave a fresh lease of life to the Samyukta Maharashtra Seema Samiti (SMSS), formed by the state opposition, which took the lead in the agitation demanding that the Karnataka Government take back its decision. Thus, the president of the Samiti, the veteran Janata Party leader S.M. Joshi, poured venom on Hegde and even the Congress(S) leader Sharad Pawar, a personal friend of Hegde, was belligerence personified. Across the border, the Maharashtra Ekikaran Samiti, which has a single-point demand of Belgaum's merger with Maharashtra as its political charter, joined hands with the SMSS.

The irony was complete when the Congress(I) Chief Minister of Maharashtra, S.B. Chavan, took the role of the peacemaker on the insistence of SMSS leaders. Chavan had a hour-long closed-door meeting with Hegde in Bangalore. Later, joined by ministers and officials, the Karnataka Government made the same point to Chavan that Hegde had made in two unanswered letters to Pawar: that there was no compulsion to learn Kannada in the first two standards. Complained Hegde: "If the agitation leaders had come to me, I would have convinced them that there is no compulsion." The two governments decided to set up a joint committee of officials which will tour the border areas once in six months and suggest measures to solve the problems.

Less than a month earlier, at a massive public rally in Kolhapur, the SMSS decided to revive the agitation for merger by sending batches of satyagrahis across the border. The Karnataka Government responded by prohibiting all public demonstrations in the area. But Pawar managed to elude the Karnataka police to storm the barricades at Rani Channamma Chowk along with a batch of over 100 satyagrahis from Maharashtra on June 1. Pawar's arrest and the rumour that he had been jailed sparked off a frenzy of violence which led to police firing on a riotous mob outside Hindalga jail in which three people were shot dead.

Pawar in Belgaum: stoking fires

The same night the 20-km pipeline to Belgaum from Rakaskop Dam, the only source of water supply to the city, was damaged at several places by axe-wielding mobs from predominantly Marathi-speaking villages. Water supply to the city dried up, and a desperate administration hastily cleaned the city's 8,000 disused wells and began supplying water to the citizens by private tankers.

An even more alarming situation developed the next evening when a 1,000-strong crowd set out to damage the Rakaskop Dam and raise its sluice gates. "That would have been a disaster," said a visibly harried B. A. Coutinho, deputy commissioner of Belgaum, "and we got the local Maharashtra Ekikaran Samiti (MES) legislator, B.I. Patil, to rush there to control the villagers." Near-disaster struck three days later when the Miraj-Vasco Express was derailed.

The same day the arrival of former Bombay mayor Chhagan Bhujbal, disguised as a Muslim businessman complete with a beard, in Belgaum sparked off a major riot, with running battles between the police and Shiv Sainiks and the stoning of several Kannadiga establishments. The mob even caught hold of a head constable of the Karnataka Special Reserve Force, Bhaskaran Nair, doused him with petrol, and set him alight. Nair was rescued by other policemen and survived with a badly burnt back.

The next day it was the turn of the Karnataka police to go berserk at Belgundi village, halfway on the road to Rakaskop Dam. After a police party broke into some shops and houses along the road, it was encircled by a 2,000- strong crowd, whereupon it opened fire on the mob, killing three villagers.

The analogy with Punjab is frequently drawn in Belgaum today, though the scale of violence bears no comparison. The analogy comes more out of the hope engendered by the Punjab accord that the Union Government would consider similar criteria—the village as the unit, and linguistic majority and geographical contiguity as deciding factors—to settle the long-standing border dispute between Maharashtra and Karnataka. The violent nature of the present agitation, however, was deliberate. "Some of us feel that violence is the only way of highlighting an issue we have been fighting for the last 30 years," said an MES activist. "You have to clamp the nose for the mouth to open."

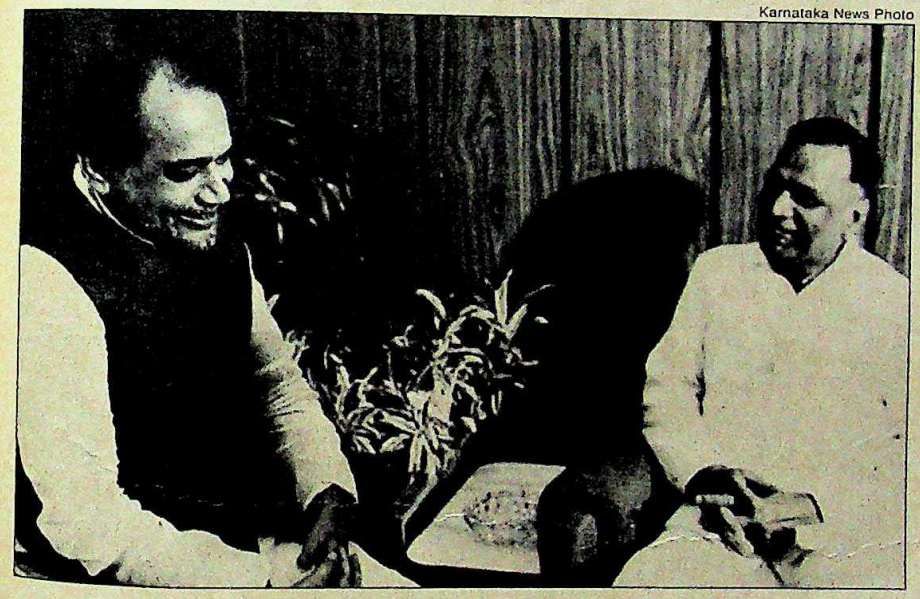
The MES was encouraged, ironically, by a reported assurance by Prime Minister

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NAMAS BHOJANI

Karnataka News Photo



Derailed train (above); and Hegde and Chavan: fighting for peace

Rajiv Gandhi that the Belgaum border dispute would be resolved once the Punjab problem had been settled. There are conflicting claims about when and where Gandhi gave the assurance. Apparently it was as much of a off-the cuff statement as the recent one in support of the Mahajan Commission recommendations which caused a furore in Maharashtra.

A further fillip was given to the cause of the Marathi-speaking people in Belgaum by the open rivalry between two MES factions led by former MLA B.B. Sayanak and the present MLA, R.S. Mane. Charges were traded about abandoning the merger issue, and last year the two factions made an unseemly dash to Bombay to stage demonstrations in support of the cause. Delegations also went to New Delhi to stage dharnas before Parliament and MES representatives attended an all-party meeting in Bombay last February to chalk out the movement's strategy.

But dithering by Maharashtra's political leaders to launch a full-scale agitation brought forth the threat from an MES leader from Khanapur, Y.V. Chavan, to immolate himself at Shivaji Park in Bombay on May 1, the anniversary of the state's formation. "It was a serious thing. I could anticipate what would happen from Bombay to Kolhapur if he did that," said Pawar explaining why he took the lead.

It was then that an all-party conference chaired by Janata Party stalwart Joshi at Kolhapur on May 5 announced the satyagraha plan. Interestingly, the satyagraha was not in support of the merger demand but against the introduction of Kannada as a compulsory second language in Karnataka schools. As far as the border issue was concerned, the Union Government was given the ultimatum of resolving the problem by November 1. "The Kolhapur resolution was a compromise pushed through by Hegde's friends in Maharashtra to give the Karnataka chief minister some room for manoeuvre even as the responsibility for settling the border dispute was passed on to the Centre," said a Janata Party leader.

The Janata Party's leadership of the border agitation against the party's own government in Karnataka left leaders like Madhu Dandavate and Mrinal Gore unhappy and brought strictures from party President Chandra Shekhar. But the venerable, 82-year-old Joshi, who is formally not a member of the party but a special invitee to its executive committee, remained defiant: "This is a tricky problem, but the Marathi-speaking people have been neglected by us for long. If we don't do something they will go to parties which do not follow peaceful methods."

Yet, a visitor to Belgaum, even while the satyagraha agitation was on, could only be struck by the remarkable intermingling of the linguistic communities in the life of the city, 42 and 40 per cent of whose citizens speak Marathi and Kannada, respectively. Both groups, besides sharing a common culture and religion, are inextricably linked by generations of inter-marriages and economic ties. Said Vijay Patil, a Kannadiga tax practitioner whose wife speaks Marathi: "You will hardly find a family in Belgaum which does not have a link across the language divide. Why, even some MES leaders are married to Kannadigas!"

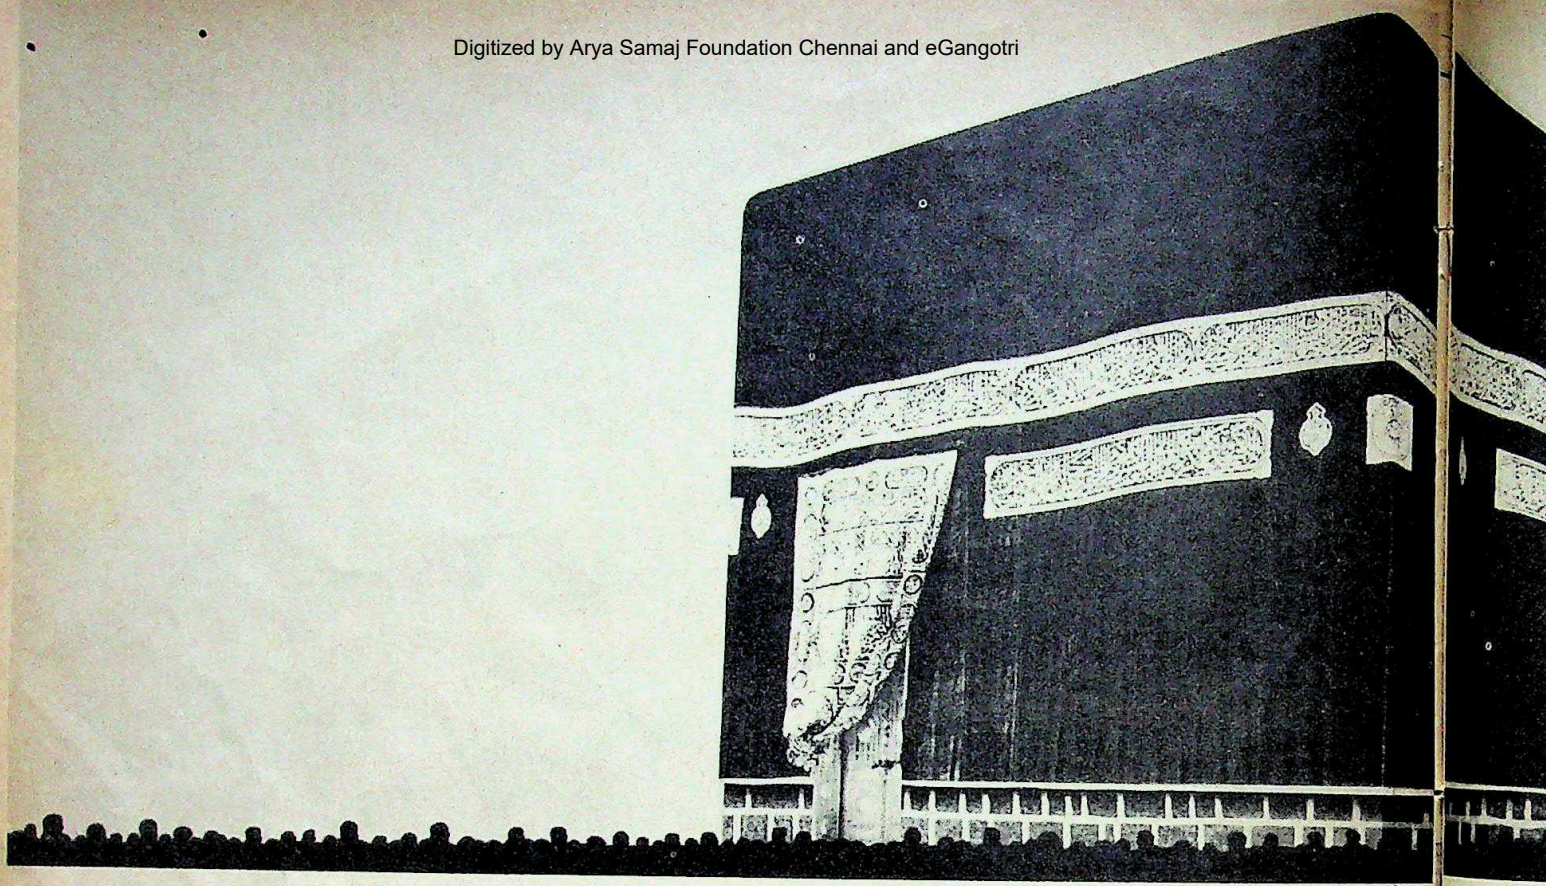
Hegde's Government, local journalists point out, cannot concede more than it already has—suspending the teaching of Kannada in schools located in the area given to Maharashtra by the Mahajan Commission—without facing a strong backlash from Kannada zealots in Belgaum and other parts of the state. Senior minister S.R. Bommai made the Government's stand clear when he said: "The Mahajan Commission has to be implemented in toto or the status quo maintained. There can be no other solution."

On the other side of the border, SMSS leaders were left with little choice at its meeting in Kolhapur on June 10 except to announce that the satyagraha programme will be extended. Both sides know, however, that the solution to the intractable border problem lies neither in Bangalore nor Bombay but in Delhi. Till the Centre moves decisively in the matter, Belgaum will continue to simmer, and erupt periodically.

—M. RAHMAN in Belgaum

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

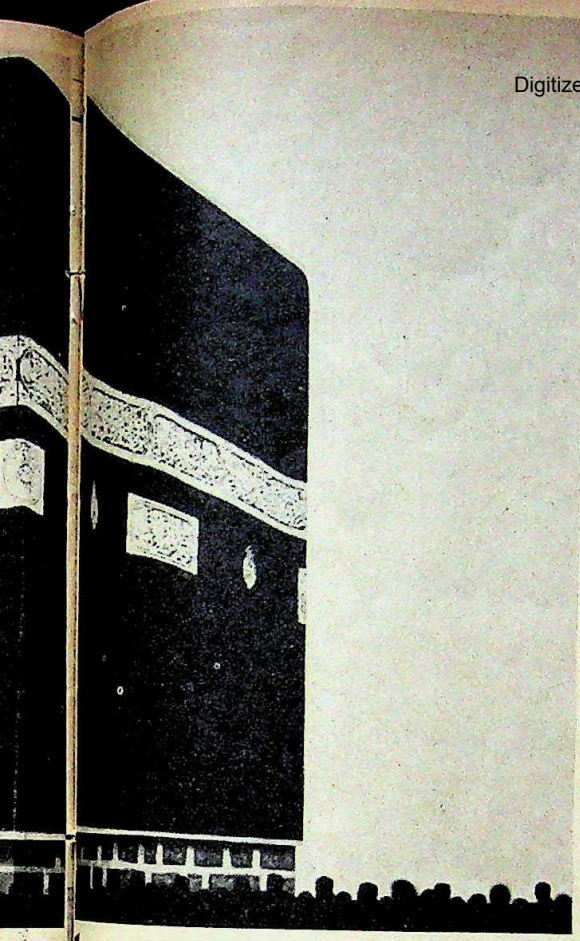
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



For Saudia, every flight is a pi gri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



pilgrimage.

At Saudia, we understand what your pilgrimage means to you.

After all, we're the national carrier of Saudi Arabia.

We aim to provide the perfect environment for your sacred journey:

Comfortable, wide-bodied aircraft, sympathetic service and fast connections.

In fact, our goal is to make every flight better than the last.

SCHEDULE

		Bombay Departures 1030 hrs	1945 hrs	1945 hrs	Delhi Departur 1045 hrs
		Thu	Tue Fri Sun	Mon Wed Thu Sat	Sun	Wed
DHAHRAN	Arr	1125	2040			1200
	Dep	1300	2215			1345
RIYADH	Arr	1405	2320	2105	1225	1450
	Dep			2235	1400
JEDDAH	Arr			0025★	1535

★ Arrivals next day

For reservations, and information, call your travel agent or nearest Saudia office.

Bombay — Office: 2020199 (5 lines). Reservations: 2020049. Telex: 011-3232. New International Airport Terminal: 6329991, 6320700, Extn. 552.

New Delhi — Office: 3310464-65-66-67.

saudia

SAUDI ARABIAN AIRLINES · A MEMBER OF IATA

Welcome to our world.

maa north 677/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ASSAM

The Perils of Power

THE ATMOSPHERE was electric in the top-floor room at the Stadium Guest House in Guwahati where the ruling Asom Gana Parishad (AGP) party was meeting for a crucial session. Chief Minister Prafulla Kumar Mahanta, 32, was under attack from his own partymen and he was furious that a vast majority of his party's MLA's were accusing him of dictatorial functioning.

Worse, some senior colleagues were threatening to resign. Leading them was Home Minister Bhrigu Kumar Phukan, 29, Mahanta's alter ego at the head of the Assam movement for six years. Phukan was upset with Mahanta's action of depriving him of the political, general administration and anti-corruption departments in the recent cabinet reshuffle. He felt this was part of a "campaign" to clip his wings.

Goateed Brindaban Goswami, the astute and soft-spoken education minister and the strategist who masterminded the agitation, was also offering to resign to devote all his to the party. To the flurry of resignation offers, Mahanta added his own, offering to quit if his partymen continued to accuse him of being power-hungry and dictatorial.

There were other angry voices. Bharat Narah, 26, the forest minister who has been under attack from his supporters ever since he married a Muslim girl and then also committed the "misdemeanour" of inviting former chief minister Hiteswar Saikia for his wedding, was by far the most vocal. "What crime have I committed that people should want my job?" he asked bitterly. "I invited Saikia because he was elected to the Assembly in the same December 16 election which brought us all to power."

The concerted attack on Mahanta had a significant consequence: Mahanta's authority has been curtailed. The AGP has now decided to set up a four-member political affairs committee which will take all the major political and administrative decisions in future. Hitherto, Mahanta was exercising this privilege.

So strong was the infighting that the party forgot one of the most important items on the agenda: the action to be taken against two legislators and an MP facing serious charges of misdemeanour. The MP, Gakul Saikia, was asked to explain charges of drunken misbehaviour at the Assam House in New Delhi and the circuit house at Dibrugarh. Legislator Bhaben Barua was asked to explain his presence in Darranga Mela, a village on the Assam-Bhutan border inhabited almost exclusively by prostitutes—he claims he had gone there to buy an Apso pup. The other MLA, Rabin Saikia, was accused of bullying police officers.

Matters came to a head last fortnight with the sudden expansion of the state Cabinet, increased now to a strength of 32, only a little smaller than Hiteswar Saikia's widely-hated council of 38 ministers. "This is the negation of all the norms we stood for," complained one legislator loudly. Other partymen accused Mahanta of patronising elements belonging to the Asom Jatiyatabadi Dal and its student wing, the Asom Jatiyatabadi Yuba Chhatra Parishad, and the Purbanchaliya Lok Parishad.

These groups, whose ideology borders on secession, had contributed little more than embarrassment and violence to the Assam movement. Five of the new ministers belong to these groups, much to the discomfiture of the All Assam Students' Union (AASU). Feeling left out and ignored, the AASU staged an angry rally at Guwahati the following morning against rising prices, its first act of defiance against the Government it had midwifed in December.

Even in that symbolic act of defiance, the AASU underlined the kind of problems facing the AGP Government. Irked by the fact that Guwahati Deputy Commissioner C.K. Das refused to come outside his office to receive their memorandum, the AASU delegation, flaunting the authority of "our own government" abused him, called him a dalal (agent) of the Marwaris and threatened to teach him a lesson. Das immediately handed over charge to his deputy and sought leave, the first IAS officer of Assamese lineage to clash with the new Government.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Outside the IAS cadre, however, more have fallen victim to the AGP Government's quixotic style of functioning. Retired Colonel Uma Sarma was once a conscience-keeper of the agitation. After the AGP came to power, he was reinstated as chairman of the Assam State Electricity Board. He is now back in retirement after he made the mistake of promoting a Bengali officer to the rank of chief engineer while there was an Assamese claimant to the same job. When he was pulled up by the Government, he quit.

The dissension and dissatisfaction, mismanagement and confusion, are all off-shoots of the same phenomenon: the AGP boys' failure to cope with the acquisition of power. Their most significant failure, so far, lies in the inability to work out a working equation with the demoralised bureaucracy they inherited. During President's rule and then under Hiteswar Saikia, the bureaucracy had been used to crush the movement. This is something the AGP leaders cannot forget. Their handling of officialdom reflects this bitterness.

In the six months that the AGP Government has been in power they have had two chief secretaries and three director-generals of police (DGP's), while deputy commissioners and police chiefs have been shuffled many times over. But nothing signifies the confusion better than the manner in which the Government humiliated the second Director-General of Police T.A. Subrahmaniam, an officer with 15 years of experience in India and abroad with the Research and Analysis Wing (RAW).

Officers were transferred, even suspended, despite his opposition and, on occasions, even without his knowledge. Mahanta and Phukan sent him contrary instructions on a matter as small as the posting of a deputy superintendent of police to Nowgong, Mahanta's home district. Mahanta's men wanted a raid organised on the house of a Marwari businessman, who is said to have lent his Maruti car to Bhrigu Phukan for a trip to Upper Assam. Kumud Narayan Sharma, said to be the guru of Mahanta, wanted a raid on the houses of three key agitation supporters who had been troubling him. Finally, Subrahmaniam decided to go on long leave, protesting against the reduction of "the DGP into a mere post office".

But Phukan defends his handling of the DGP, arguing that he had no choice but to get rid of an officer "who had no dignity of uniform, who did not know how to talk to ministers and who stood smoking a pipe while welcoming Zail Singh at the airport". Subrahmaniam denies the charges but refuses to say anything apart from a cryptic: "I am a faithful Hindu wife. I will not complain against my husband."

THE problem with the AGP ministers," said a senior officer, "is that they are trying run an open government in the 'Yes Minister' fashion but they also want revenge for what was done to them by the administration during the agitation. This makes for a self-destructive mix." This results in a situation where major government decisions are taken in consultation with only a few, trusted bureaucrats. Some of the orders recently issued by the AGP Government, considered to be major steps in fulfilling the promises made to the ethnic Assamese, reflect this state of affairs most tellingly.

By a diktat last fortnight, the Government declared that in future permanent residency certificates, needed for securing government jobs in the state, will be given to only those who have lived in the state for 20 years or more and have property. Legal experts feel that the circular will never stand the test of constitutionality.

Again, by a verbal order, the Government has placed a virtual ban on the registration of births, particularly in areas known to be dominated by immigrants. The idea is to prevent suspected foreigners from claiming citizenship for their children by dint of birth. But minority leaders have a point when they complain that they are being denied their "birth right". Arbitrary actions like these could lead to communal tension when the implementation of the sensitive parts of the accord begins.

But all this pales into insignificance before the great blunder the Government has made on the language issue, the perennial bug-bear of the polyglot state. Following close on the heels of a resolution passed by the Asom Sahitya Sabha in February, the Secondary Education Board of Assam decided to revive, out of the blue, its 1972 circular making Assamese a compulsory subject for students all over the state. This caused immediate consternation in the predominantly Bengali-speaking Cachar and Karimganj districts and also enraged a large section of the plains tribals, who have been demanding a separate state of Udayachal. The All Cachar Students Union (ACSU) has already launched an agitation and the All Tribal Students Union (ATSU) flexed its muscles at a convention specially called for this purpose.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The import of the circular in Cachar, where they used to study Bengali, Hindi and English, is that they will now have to study Assamese instead of Hindi. Similarly, in tribal areas, where they used to study Bodo as the mother tongue, Assamese will replace Hindi. "We have no objection to Assamese. But why are we being deprived of our right to study the national language?" asks ACSU President Pradip Kumar Datta Ray. "The circular has exposed the AGP's true pretensions. They want tribal lands but not tribal people, their languages or their heritage," alleges tribal student leader Ranauj Pegu.

Senior AGP leaders, including Brindaban Goswami, now admit that the circular was untimely. But they point out that it was issued by the Education Board which is a statutory body. They confess, however, that it has put them in a bind. If they do not go back on the circular there will be no stopping the separatist movements. History shows that Assam has split twice—in the separation of Meghalaya and Mizoram—because of the Assamese intellectuals' anxiety to thrust his language on the tribals.

On the other hand, if they get the circular withdrawn, the Assamese language lobby, led by the Sahitya Sabha will go for their jugular. Party spokesmen say they are trying to deal with the situation politically. Goswami is discussing with the tribal and Cachar students a new formula under which four languages will be taught in schools in two phases.

But in Assam the greatest danger today, much more serious than the dissensions and administrative follies of the AGP, is the threat of the accord going sour in the fashion of Punjab. Last fortnight Mahanta visited Delhi and angrily remonstrated before the prime minister and Union home minister seeking more active participation from the

Photographs by SHEKHAR GUPTA

Anti-Assamese slogans in Cachar

"We have no objection to Assamese. But why are we being deprived of our right to study the national language?"

PRADEEP KUMAR DATTA RAY
president ACSU

Centre in the implementation of the accord. But he later confided to close advisors that all he got were platitudes.

The AGP Government has been having problems with all the major clauses of the accord. The key clause, involving the detection of foreigners, cannot be put into effect because the Centre has not yet carried out the promised amendment to the Immigrants Determination by Tribunals Act of 1983 as this will provide further ammunition to the vocal Muslim communalist lobby. Similarly, work on the promised border fence has been suspended because the Government is disinclined to create tension on the border when it has its hands are already full with Punjab, Haryana, Belgaum, Gorkhaland et al. "Not only are they not building the fence they have even issued a circular asking us, the Assam Government, to stop survey for a road along the border," complains Phukan.

This has put Mahanta and his government on the defensive with the AASU leadership threatening to resume the agitation from August 15, the first anniversary of the signing of the accord. "We are extremely disappointed with the way things have gone," says AASU President Kartick Hazarika, adding: "Most Central Government undertakings such as Oil India, Post and Telegraphs, Indian Oil, have not even reinstated Assamese employees victimised during the agitation."

He also accuses the state Government of going slow on the withdrawal of cases against the agitation participants. "They have withdrawn 21,000 of the 30-odd thousand cases leaving out what they call as heinous crimes. This is ridiculous because the word heinous has such a broad definition," he complains. On this the AASU has already thrown a challenge to the Government by acting on its own. An example, last month, was the manhandling of Dr P. Bharali, the chief projects manager of Oil India Limited at Guwahati for his company's insistence on not treating six suspended executives as agitation victims.

The AASU's growing impatience can only spell danger for the AGP Government. "In case the drift continues we could end up in a Barnala-like situation with the new AASU leadership going its own way, against the Government," admits a senior party functionary. The AGP leaders are conscious of this and yet helpless. "People voted for us to implement this accord. If we fail they will never forgive us," admits Phukan.

But the immediate challenge is—how to cope with power. Brindaban Goswami defines it euphemistically, saying that the "party is too new to evolve a political philosophy, a style of functioning". But it does not have too long to do so because, with each passing week, with each misplaced circular or irrational transfer of an officer, the AGP will make it harder for itself to implement something as tricky as the accord that brought it into power in the first place.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA in Guwahati

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

APOLLO POLYGLAS

Radi

Yes! the Right Radial... for Indian Roads... for your Car

...and thousand of satisfied customers to prove it Righ

Doubles your mileage
Safeguards your suspens
Cuts fuel cost
Gives you a cushioned ri

APOLLO TYRES

A RAUNAQ ENTERPRISE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Why is Bangalore called the Epsom of India ? Well, no other city holds races eight months in the year. A total of 400 races are held, with around 1200 horses and stake money averaging Rs 1.5 crores. Making it the hottest racing track in the country.

But the Epsom of India is not just green turf all over.It's also part of the big race in technology.

With eight industrial estates skirting the city, Bangalore has one of the country's most extensive industrial belts. An estimated Rs.500 crores has been invested both in the public and private sectors, since 1970. Over the last 10 years more than 300 large and medium scale industries have come up, apart from the 9,000 small scale industries in the suburban industrial estates.

The real spread is largely due to the strong public sector base. Name the public sector giant and you'll find it here. BEL, ITI, HMT, BHEL, HAL, BEML ... and many other state-owned industries.

So, who's been part of this growth story?

In the growth story of any city, its newspaper institutions play a highly critical role. Not just in news reporting. Or in the reflection of views. Importantly, it's in giving talent and enterprise the wide audience it deserves. For public interaction. And support. Also to give readers a fair and accurate picture of developments.

It's a responsibility The Deccan Herald Group has lived up to in more ways than one. The Group, Bangalore's oldest publishing house, brings out four No.1 publications. Deccan Herald, the mainline English daily. Prajavani, the most popular Kannada daily. Sudha, the complete Kannada family weekly. And Mayura the most widely read Kannada monthly.

The 'listening post' — world-wide

The Deccan Herald Group tunes in to the world through a network of strategically based correspondents covering the US, the UK, Europe, the Middle East, Bangladesh, South East Asia and the UN.

It also widens its canvas with news and feature arrangements, with the Washington Post, the Financial Times, the Los Angeles Times, Asia Features and Gemini.

THE PACE IS HECTIC IN THE PENSIONERS' PARADISE

THAT'S WHY BANGALORE IS THE FASTEST GROWING CITY IN INDIA

Graph indicates the Reach of THE DECCAN HERALD GROUP of publications in Karnataka in their respective categories. (Deccan Herald reaches 76.3% of all adults reachable through English dailies.) Source: NRS III

PML-1879-C

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

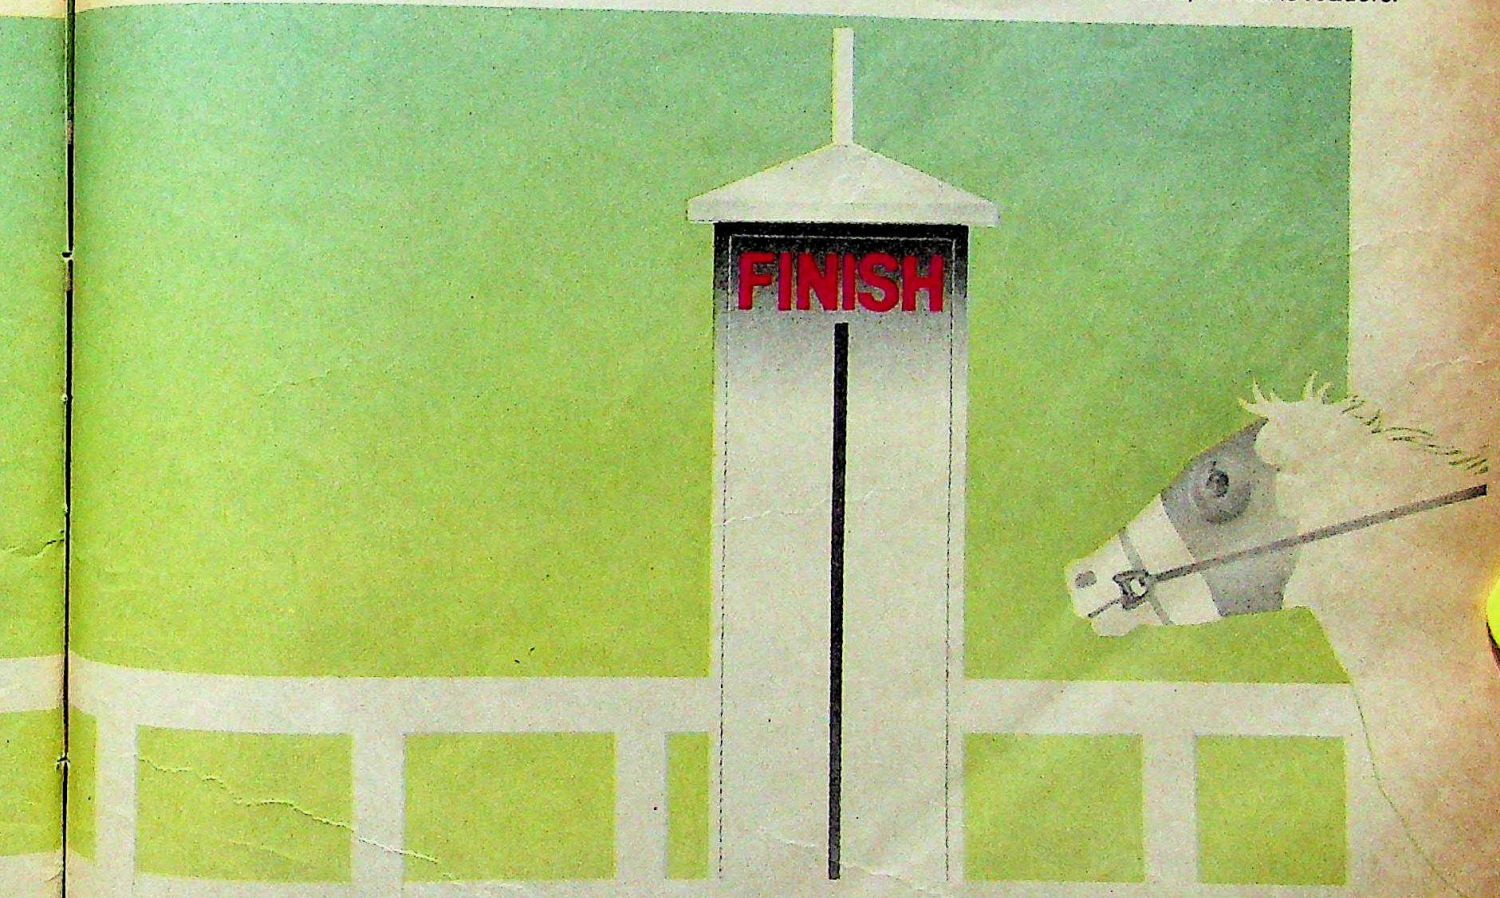
The nerve centre links up with the national network

The Group's Head Quarters in Bangalore is a hive of activity. Buzzing with news stories from all over. Right from up-to-the-minute despatches sent in by its fully staffed news bureau in Delhi, reports from correspondents in Bombay, Calcutta, Madras and other state capitals, to news in the pipeline from the national news agencies. All this, co-ordinated by a large bureau of staff reporters in Bangalore.

When a newspaper becomes an 'institution'

What started off as a small newspaper in 1948, is the largest, most modern publishing house in Karnataka ... among the foremost newspaper houses in the country. With sophisticated facilities in design, layout, photosetting and offset colour printing.

All of which means unparalleled state-wide influence. 'EXCELLENT COVERAGE' in other words. To readers it means news. And to advertisers, it means readers.



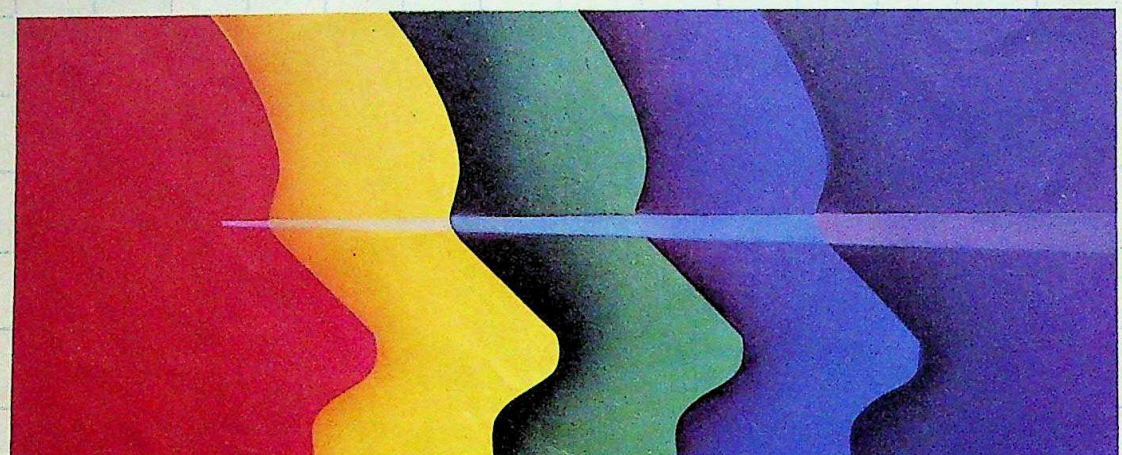
THE DECCAN HERALD GROUP

75 Mahatma Gandhi Road Bangalore 560 001

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Now presenting you the product of Computer Aided Technology CAT 1000



CAT – that's Computer Aided Technology; for you :

CAT. It has suddenly changed all the old concepts in TV manufacturing. It ensures that only rugged, well-tested, zero-defect components go into your Solidaire CAT 1000. Everytime. For instance our Digital Colour Analyser. It takes care of colour levels for life-like picture reproduction. And the Central Signal Supply System (CSSS). Its Pattern Generators and Crystal Controlled Modulators are of International Standards which ensure perfect colour balance among the three basic colours (R G B).

Just possess one and see; it'll make your house look beautiful :

CAT 1000. Its sheer presence. With hi-impact polystyrene moulded cabinet, anti-glare screen and concealed controls it's made beautiful, slim, sleek. To grace your decor and display. And with two soft-touch buttons you can increase or decrease the volume. For channel selection, too you've two soft-touch buttons. Plus the stand-by facility, easy band/channel selection controls, illuminated programme display in CAT 1000 make it a TV, you'll be proud to possess.

- Zero-defect components like LOT, SMPS, MOSFET, Electronic Tuner, Colour ICs etc from ITT, West Germany
- VCR, Video Games & Home Computer facilities

Cordless Remote Control

CAT 1000
Computer Aided Technology

COLOUR
Solidaire that seldom fails!

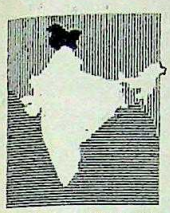
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

JAMMU & KASHMIR

Dual Strategy



WHEN he took over the reins of administration of Jammu and Kashmir last March, it was widely predicted that the volatile border state would turn out to be his Waterloo. But Governor Jagmohan has proved the Cassandras wrong.

During his brief period in office, he has managed to remove over 100 corrupt and inefficient officials, streamlined the recruitment system, amended various laws for punishing anti-social elements, established a monitoring system for implementing decisions and has made the administration more accessible to the ordinary people.

Jagmohan's acceptability in the politically hostile valley and the Jammu region is the outcome of the vigorous implementation of his 13-point 'Action Plan', which he drew within two weeks of his taking over. In his order of priority, Jagmohan decided that what was most urgently needed was a cleanliness drive to attract the maximum number of tourists to the state and thus revive the all-but-moribund tourist industry. To begin with, he ordered the cleaning up of the filthy Dal Lake and gave the municipal authorities a time-bound programme to finish the job.

He next set up a special task force for supervising the improvement of slum areas and roads in the valley and removed encroachments from public lands. He then personally supervised the progress of delayed construction works.

But Jagmohan's action plan, at another level, was also a subtle and effective way of neutralising the traditional hostility in the state towards the "markazi sarkar (Central Government)". He embarked on a strategy of approaching the locals directly with a view to solving their problems on the spot. He has launched a weekly janata darbar to which over 600 people come every week with their grievances. Says Jagmohan: "Kashmiris are very innocent and sentimental people. In the absence of any development, most of them suffer from economic problems and no one has bothered to listen to and design policies for them. Once they are convinced that the Government is meant for their benefit, they can no longer be misguided by anti-social elements."

Jagmohan, by inducting people from outside the state in key posts like chief secretary and the director-general of police, has attempted to introduce a bureaucracy that is neutral, a rare enough occurrence in Kashmir. Moreover, he has been able to promulgate over half-a-dozen ordinances amending various laws, including the draconian Public Safety Act brought into the statute books by the Sheikh Abdullah government. The amended Act is essentially aimed against the large number of 'anti-national' elements who have sought refuge in the state and provides for lodging detenus in jails outside the state. He has also set up recruitment boards for making governmental and public sector appointments to reverse the traditional trend of political patronage and influence-peddling which ignored merit.

The Dal Lake clean-up in progress; and (inset) Jagmohan: governor's gains

In a parallel move to minimise the scope of politically-motivated manipulations, the governor has appointed tribunals to decide on quasi-judicial matters related to land problems and revenue disputes. Earlier, these powers rested with ministers and as a result, over Rs 50 crore of taxes remained unrecovered. Jagmohan has also decided to withdraw the powers for the grant of liquor and other commercial licences from the political authority and give them to the tribunals.

Predictably enough, all this has created considerable resentment amongst the politicians whose powers he is trying to erode. Even the National Conference (Farooq) which had welcomed the imposition of governor's rule, has now started criticising Jagmohan's actions. They have accused him of diluting Article 370 of the Constitution, which gives special status to the state. The object is obviously to pressurise the Centre into calling for fresh elections in the state. Farooq made it clear that he would oppose the extension of governor's rule beyond the stipulated six-month period during his recent meeting with Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi. He maintained that he would be powerless to contain the hawks in his party if fresh elections were not ordered in the state after September. The state Congress (I) on the other hand, while opposed to the idea of fresh elections, is pressing for an extention of governor's rule by at least a year or, failing which, installation of a government with the help of fence-sitters in the state's market-like political arena. Both Rajiv Gandhi and his Tourism Minister Mufti Mohammed Syed have already ruled out the possibility of early elections, but a section of the Congress (I) is toying with the idea of persuading Farooq to accept the chief ministership with their support. But that eventuality can only take place after the high command is convinced that governor's rule has not helped the Congress (I) in improving its base in the valley. But if the success of Jagmohan's calculated administrative and political strategy is any indication, the prime minister might be in a position to risk a poll earlier than anybody imagines.

—PRABHU CHAWLA in Srinagar

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ARUN NEHRU

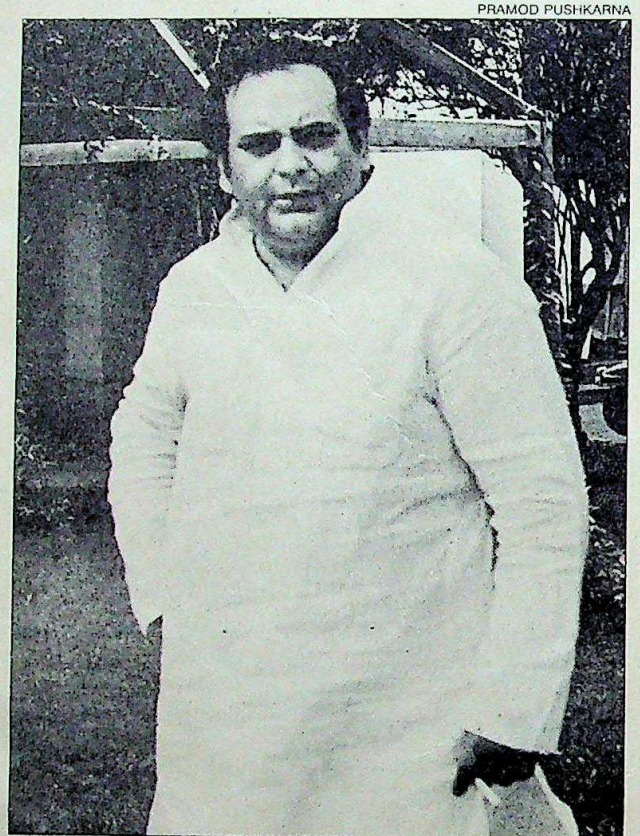
Political Palpitations

AS DOCTORS hovered anxiously around the corpulent patient in a Srinagar hospital, it seemed as if what they were really monitoring was the heightened political pulse in the Government and the Congress(I). In a sense, they were. The patient happened to be Arun Nehru, Union minister of state for internal security and believed to be the person with the most clout after the prime minister. And his medical diagnosis was linked inextricably to the political well-being of any number of politicians all over the country. Ever since Nehru suffered a heart attack in the early hours of May 31, the state of his health has become the country's most closely guarded secret.

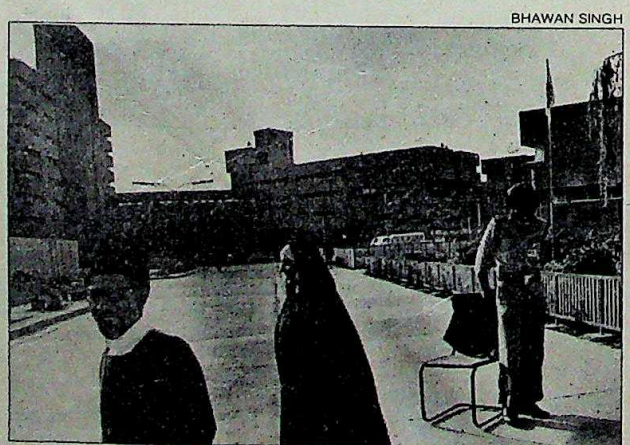
If any further proof of Nehru's importance in the current scheme of things was required it was provided by Doordarshan which televised a daily, and increasingly optimistic, medical report on Nehru for the first few days after the heart attack. But the grapevine throbbed with gossip and speculation about the extent of the damage caused to his heart and its implications for the nation. Srinagar's Sher-e-Kashmir Institute of Medical Sciences (SKIMS), where Nehru was recuperating, became the new Mecca for ruling party dignitaries, while back in Delhi, his political adversaries were busy floating rumours that he would need an artery bypass to continue in politics.

But at the institute, where a six-member medical team was assigned solely to Nehru, the signals by last week were that he was well on the way to a full recovery. In fact, it was more the drama and secrecy surrounding his sudden heart attack which fuelled speculation that he was seriously stricken to the point of being ruled out of active political life for some years. From the time he was rushed to the hospital by Jammu and Kashmir Governor Jagmohan at 6 a.m., the steady stream of visitors who descended on the hospital were kept at arms length. Commandos covered all strategic points of entry and metal detectors and physical frisking was carried out on all visitors to the first floor where his Intensive Care Unit (ICU) was situated. Even Central ministers like P. Chidambaram were only allowed to see Subhadra, his wife. Said a senior doctor: "The idea was to snap all contacts with the world so that Nehru was left to himself and his family members."

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



BHAWAN SINGH



Nehru (top); and the Sher-e-Kashmir hospital: temporary vacuum

The medical drama started at three in the morning when Nehru, who was staying with his family at a state government tourist resort in picturesque Dacchi Gaon, felt a severe chest pain and started shivering. Earlier, after dinner with his family and some friends, he had complained of strain but that was attributed to his hectic schedule during the day which had included a meeting in Governor Jagmohan's office and a visit to the local Congress(I) office. But on his return to the guesthouse he had seemed cheerful. Said one of the security guards posted at Dacchi Gaon: "Nehruji was in a really good mood throughout his stay at this place. He was enjoying his food and would go out for long walks with his daughter. He never gave us any impression that he had any physical problems."

But when he first arrived at the hospital in an ambulance from Dacchi Gaon, 16 km away, doctors say he had to be immediately admitted to the ICU. Jagmohan, who was the first to know about Nehru's illness, had contacted cardiologists and other specialists in the city and rushed them to the institute while he himself drove to Dacchi Gaon to accompany Nehru to the hospital. Since it was originally believed that Nehru had suffered a massive heart attack, he was immediately put on sedatives. Meanwhile, the prime minister, who is also Nehru's cousin, directed his aides to rush specialists and the necessary medicines to Srinagar. Dr S.P. Manchanda, a prominent Bombay neuro-surgeon, was the first to be contacted by the Prime Minister's Office and asked to rush to Srinagar immediately. Special arrangements were made to send Professor Khalilullah, a cardiologist at New Delhi's G.B. Pant Hospital, along with another cardiologist, Group Captain S.P. Verma. The three specialists closely examined their VIP patient over the next three days but as Dr Nagpal, SKIMS director, says: "We were able to minimise the damage because everything was available in time. We have with us a very cooperative patient

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

EXIT

All other ways of cleaning your toilet bowl.

ENTER

Harpic in India! "The cleanest way to a totally clean toilet."

Outshines the rest in keeping your toilet totally clean and safe.

Harpic's powerful formula goes much beyond superficial cleaning. It keeps your toilet sparkling clean and safe by killing germs.

Outdates the rest in convenience.

No messy handling of harsh cleaners. So simple to use. Just spray Harpic. After 20 minutes lightly brush and flush. No mess, no fuss!
A clean, clean way to a totally clean toilet.

Outperforms the rest in killing germs.

Harpic's special nozzle helps kill germs lurking even under the rim of the bowl, where other cleaners just cannot reach.

CLARION C-RCH-1

New Harpic
SEAL OF HYGIENE

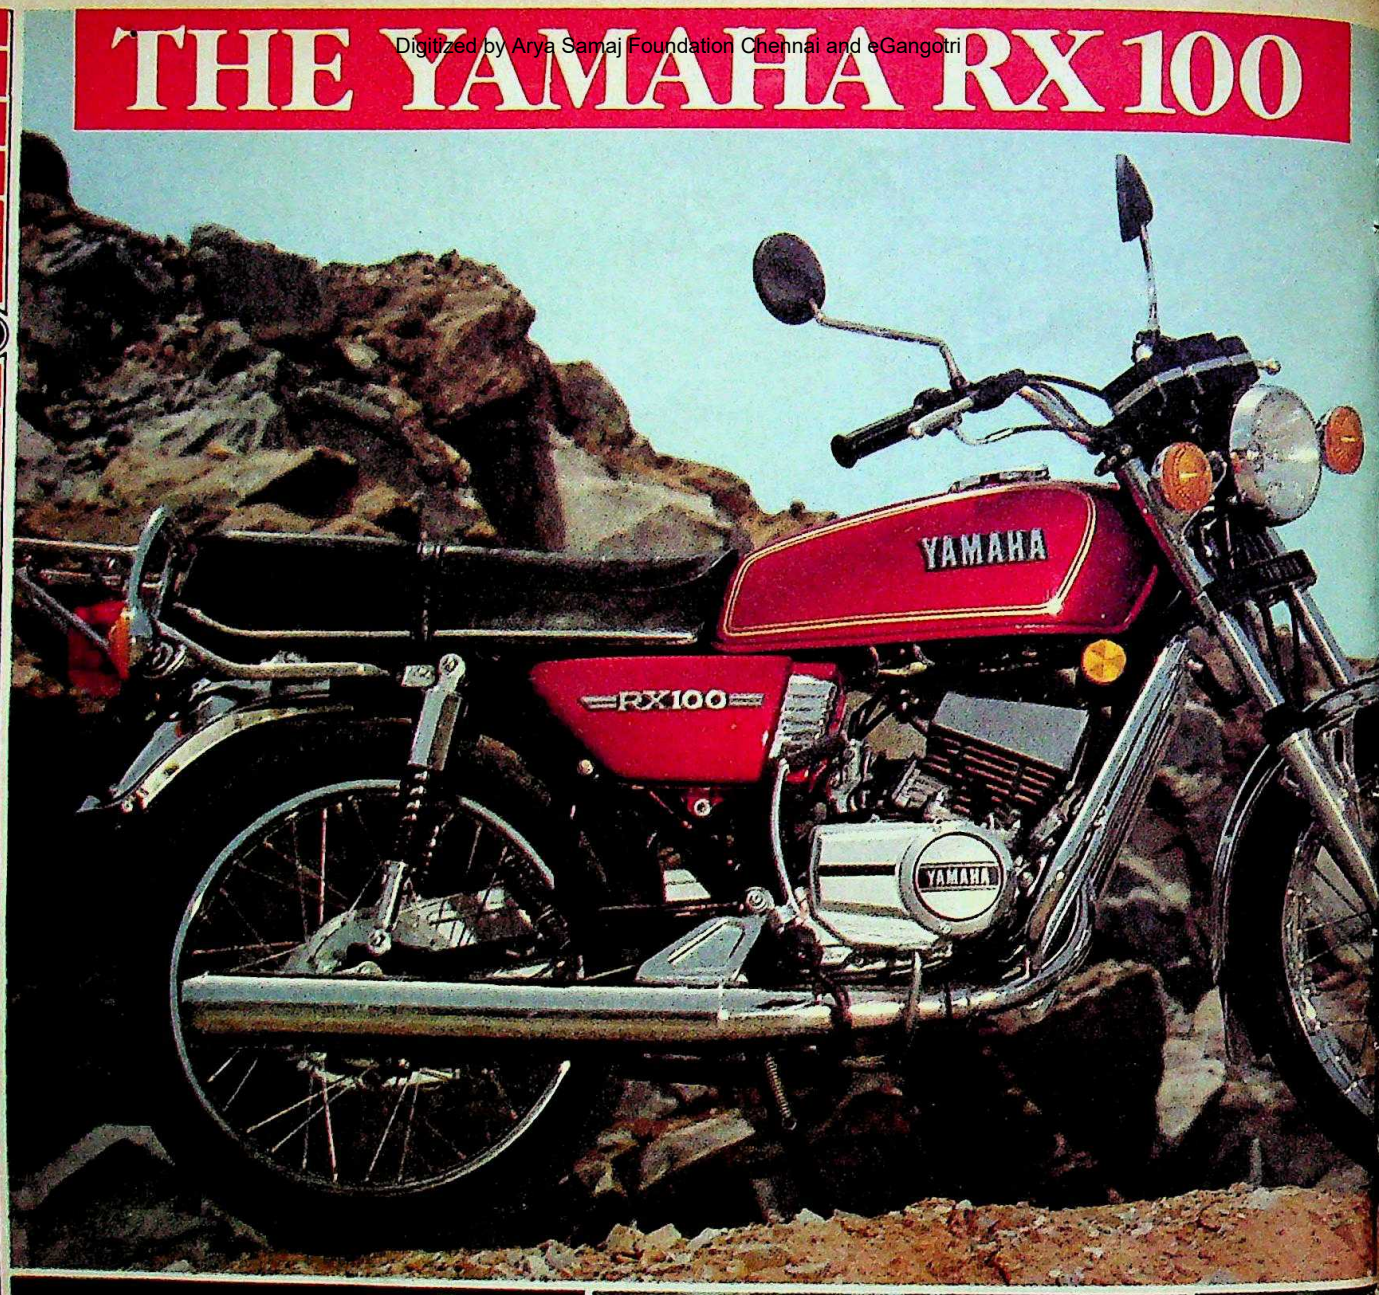
The international germ-killing formula that outdates the rest.

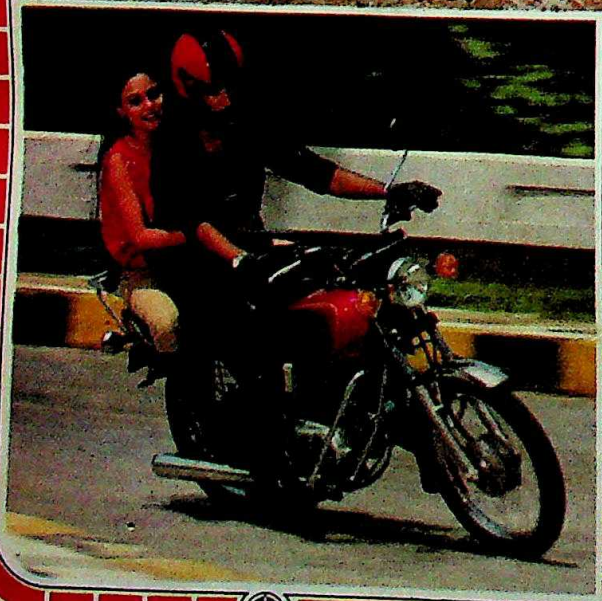
Harpic's special nozzle.

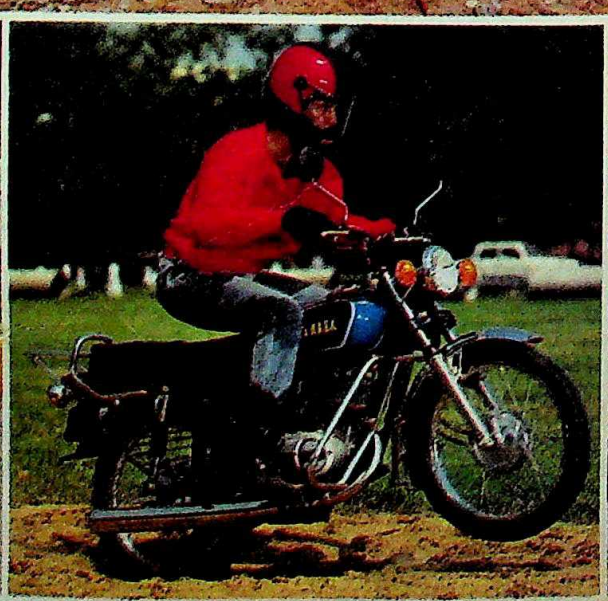
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE YAMAHA RX 100







YAMAHA

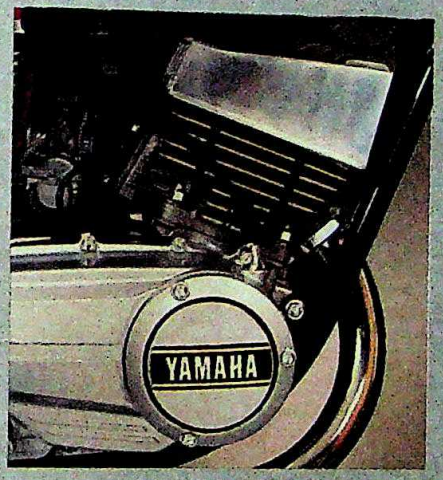
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

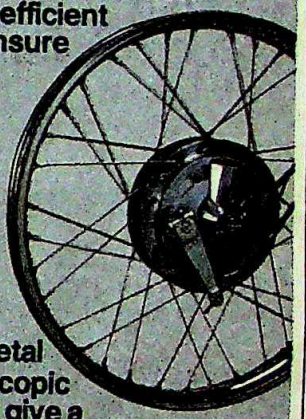
ESCORTS

Incredible pick-up. Smooth riding. Superb handling. That's the class of Yamaha.

* Powerful 2-stroke, 11 bhp engine that's unmatched in its class.



* Extra large brake drums for surer, more efficient braking,to ensure total safety.



* Unique all-metal Ceriani telescopic front fork, to give a new dimension to riding comfort and superior bike control.

* Longest wheel-base amongst 100cc bikes for superb handling on city roads and sharp curves.
* Exclusive double-cradle frame to ensure durability and complete engine protection.

RX100 AUTHENTIC YAMAHA

By far, the leader in its class.

On the roads today, the leader shows its class.
And a new era in Indian motorcycling has begun.

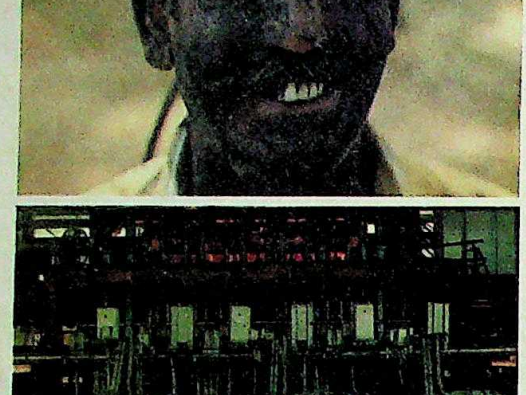
YAMAHA

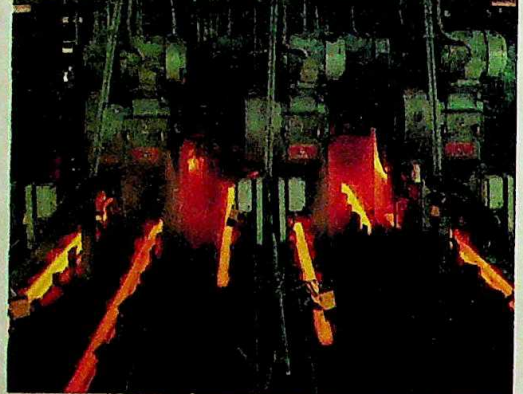
ESC 9035

YAMAHA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri





Link up with a leader

A company that speaks the same language as overseas business associates—the language of quality, of reliability, of discipline. An integrated steel plant that speaks the language of quality control from the raw material to the finished stage.

An innovative company which lays emphasis on research and development, where a spirit of self-sufficiency led to the establishment of the Growth Shop—a unique facility with the most up-to-date technology to produce machinery comparable to any in the world.

A company backed by a talented pool of engineers and skilled technicians, with the expertise to handle any project—feasibility planning to mineral exploration, designing steel plant equipment to developing mines.

A company where closer association of employees with management has created a sense of belonging and pride—resulting in over 50 years of industrial harmony. A company that has given the lead in action and in ideas.

TATA STEEL

The first and still the foremost

TIS 6217

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

and we expect him to take up his normal duties within the next few weeks."

However, other hospital sources maintain that Nehru has been advised complete rest in Srinagar for two weeks and even then, he will be confined to bed for another six weeks. Doctors say that it will be at least two months before he will be permitted to handle light work. But that is more a concession to his political importance than a question of health. Admitted one doctor: "If he were an ordinary person we would have allowed him to resume his activities within six weeks. But we cannnot take that risk in his case becuse of the nature of his job which involves a lot of mental stresses and strains. He can't be as active as he was before for some time yet."

Sources say that Nehru was extremely prone to heart problems because of his obesity. Nehru, 42, carries a weight of 91 kg on his 5 feet 11 inches frame and had been advised by his doctor to reduce his weight to at least 80 kg. During the last 15 months he had succeeded in shedding over 20 kg through yoga, playing cricket and controlling his diet. But despite this, his cholesterol and triglyceride level was higher than normal. The high cholesterol level led to deposits of fat in the coronary arteries which possibly led to a thickening of the blood vessels and finally blocking of the blood supply to the heart.

Doctors say the problem was aggravated by the acute tension Nehru has been under during the last few months due to the Punjab crisis. Home Ministry sources say that he was awake till the early hours of the morning for two days in succession at the height of the Punjab crisis and was also attending at least half a dozen meetings a day apart from the long Parliament session. It was during one of his routine medical checkups that he was advised to rest and he chose Kashmir.

But doctors, while refusing to divulge the extent of damage caused to his heart tissues, express optimism about his future health. They maintain that the arteries supplying blood to the heart are in perfect condition and claim that they have been able to revive the blood tissues which were damaged temporarily. According to them, the special Muga test—which screened his heart—confirmed that Nehru's heart muscles have suffered no permanent damage. But the fact that he will be on the sidelines for at least another two months leaves a major political vacuum which could not have come at a worse time for the increasingly beleagured government his cousin heads.

—PRABHU CHAWLA in Srinagar

INDIRA GANDHI CANAL

Dark Lining

THE JINX over the 28-year-old Indira Gandhi Canal Project was once again in evidence last fortnight when 45 engineers working on the still incomplete project were suspended on corruption charges. The suspensions came after an investigation confirmed that the canal lining was substandard for over 20 km along the main canal, which will be 445 km long when ready. The scandal is now certain to not only delay the completion of the main canal—at least a year beyond the original date of end-1986—but also raise its cost. The remedy being considered—a low density polythene film with a cement, mortar and brick-tile cover to reinforce the lining—will cost about Rs 5.5 crore, around the same as the original lining.

The corruption issue was first raised in the Assembly two years ago by BJP leader Bhairon Singh Shekhawat after he spotted tell-tale evidence in a brief report on the canal. The report pointed out that at a point where the main canal is 12 metres broad at the base and about 5.5 metres high and 36 metres wide at the top, the bed lining essential to cut water losses was totally inadequate.

Shekhawat's allegations compelled the authorities to appoint a three-man inquiry committee headed by the project's chief technical examiner. The inquiry—though obstructed by officials who refused to empty the canal for investigations—not only upheld the allegations but added some of its own; namely:

- the lining had already broken in most places, though the water flow was low;
- poor quality tiles were used in spite of an order against taking the consignment;
- there was much less cement in the plaster than recommended;
- clay was never bought even though its transportation costs were charged;
- sand packing on the sides was billed but not carried out.

In spite of the report, no action was taken until March this year when Kamla Beniwal, the Indira Gandhi Canal minister, announced that the engineers responsible would be suspended. There was a further two-month delay before the suspensions were actually ordered. Typically, however, while junior officials have been punished—those suspended include five executive engineers, 13 assistant engineers, 27 junior engineers—no action has been taken against an additional chief engineer and three superintendent engineers, even though the inquiry committee blamed them equally for the fiasco.

The suspended engineers later got together to submit a memorandum to Chief Minister Harideo Joshi. They charged the committee with partisanship and sloppy investigation. Demanding their reinstatement, they charged the authorities with shielding senior officials. They also accused the state Government of setting an impossible time schedule so that water could be released by the prime minister at the Charanwala Headworks on October 2, 1983.

Site near Bikrampur: slow progress

The engineers have also made a sensational allegation—that over another stretch of 60 km of the main canal, the lining is as defective. They want to know why the engineers for this section have been let off. More skeletons may well come tumbling out in the coming months.

Shekhawat is now campaigning to bring them to justice along with S. Kashyap, the then chairman of the Canal Board. Noted Shekhawat ruefully: "There is more corruption in the construction of this project than any other in the state. Well over a third of all money put in it is siphoned off. The engineers' lobby exercises so much money power that the state Government does not have the courage to take action against senior people." Given Shekhawat's dogged delving into the issue and the latest revelations, the prestigious project is obviously destined to remain a major source of controversy till well after its long-awaited completion.

—SREEKANT KHANDEKAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AMA-BMI-86

It is 20 years ..... when the first SENDZIMIR mill came to India at

BRALCO-DEVIDAYAL

Pioneering the thin guage technique of rolling Copper and Brass in India.

Bralco has produced over 50,000 tonnes of top quality thin strips since 1964 and the Automobile Radiator and Ancillary Industry alone has been supplied with 20,000 tonnes. In 1964, organised Radiator manufacturers numbered 10, using thick guage or imported strips. Today there are more than 40 units which are being supplied with totally indigenously rolled thin strips by us.

Not only Automobile Radiator and Ancillary Industry but also manufacturers of XLPE cables, lamp caps, clocks, fountain pens, electronic components, telecommunication components and switch gear specify Bralco quality.

Bralco means superiority in reliability, consistency and quality in Copper and Brass thin guage strips to the most exacting standards.

Radiator Strips upto 0.05 mm

BRALCO – manufacturers of non ferrous strips since 1919.

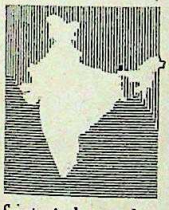
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Pro-Bhandari rally: muscle-flexing

SIKKIM

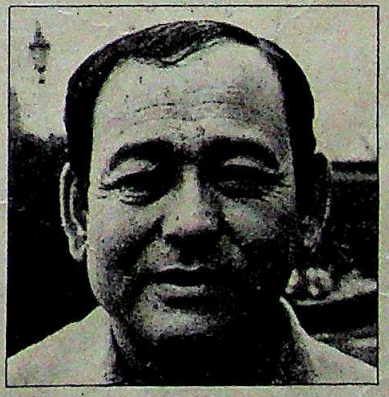
Show of Strength



WITH Nar Bahadur Bhandari at the helm, Sikkim has the uncanny habit of springing into the headlines when least expected. It happened yet again last fortnight when the 47-year-old chief minister of the tiny Himalayan state threw the gauntlet at the Centre giving a one-year ultimatum to accept his three "basic" demands: inclusion of Nepali language in the eighth schedule of the Constitution, grant of citizenship to an unspecified number of stateless Nepali settlers in the state and, trickiest of all, reservation of seats in the legislative Assembly for the Nepali community, which forms 75 per cent of the state's population of 3.2 lakh. Thundered Bhandari at his party's annual convention: "If these demands are not conceded within a year, I will show Delhi who Bhandari is. I will face the first bullet, go under the first tank. The Government of India can pump into my body all the bullets manufactured in all its ordnance factories."

For the Centre the tenor of his speech was perplexing as Bhandari has been having a virtual honeymoon with the Congress(I) high command. In December, he had driven at the head of a 100-strong car-cade into Assam to campaign for the party he had humbled so completely in the 1984 assembly election. The only MP from Sikkim, his wife Dil Kumari, conveniently absented herself from voting on the Muslim women's bill. Yet, he chose confrontation.

The maverick, however, has his reasons. He has been courting the Congress(I) in the hope that the Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI) cases against him will be withdrawn. But the Congress(I) demand for the merger of his party in return and the developments over the past couple of months put him firmly on the path of aggression.



"The Centre should keep out of it, we will pull him down on our own. Bhandari is scared."

MADAN CHHETRI
vice president (PCCI)

It began with a flurry of stinkers from Union Minister of State for Internal Security Arun Nehru, complaining about his inaction against secessionist elements and the sale of smuggled goods in Gangtok from a shop owned by one of his cabinet colleagues. Then, he was accused of patronising captain Yongda, a former officer in the late Chogyal's palace guard who allegedly had contacts with the Pakistani and Chinese intelligence agents who had launched the Naya Sikkim Party seeking demerger of the state from India. Bhandari made amends by arresting Yongda and his key supporters under the National Security Act just as pressure mounted.

Besides these, the Centre and the governor are also peeved at some of his administrative actions. These include:

► An unprecedented order divesting Chief Secretary K.M.L. Chhabra, a former Union Home Ministry joint secretary, of his usual role as the clerk of the Cabinet. Sikkim now has the unique distinction of having a chief secretary who cannot attend cabinet meetings.

► A notification doing away with the stipulation that the Government should consult the state Public Service Commission (PSC) while making selections to government posts. The PSC has consulted Attorney-General of India K. Parasaran, who has stated in writing that the constitutionality of the notification can be easily challenged by any "public spirited citizen". The commission, which came into being five years ago, has not selected a single candidate for any government post.

Bhandari, however, does not say anything directly on the chief secretary except that, "Arun Nehru offered me a new chief secretary but Jagmohan took him away to Kashmir", but officials close to him unhesitatingly say that Chhabra was victimised because of his "proximity to the Centre". And he dismisses the charge on the Public Service Commission, saying, "I have been asking Delhi for a chief secretary, for directors of education and health. I have been asking the Centre to give me outsiders for all senior posts. No one gives me these officers. On the other hand, they are all so worried about the posts of peons and clerks. Mind you, I am not going to give these away to the outsiders. I have to keep in mind the interest of the bhumiputras (sons of the soil)."

The Centre's pressure on Bhandari

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

was accompanied with a concerted attempt to rejuvenate the state Congress (I) unit: the PCC(I), lying in a state of disuse since the last elections, was hurriedly organised and former Indian Police Service officer Madan Chhetri was named the state unit's vice-president. Says Chhetri, a fellow Nepali who is being billed as the Congress(I)'s counter to Bhandari: "The Centre should keep out of it, we will pull him down on our own. Bhandari is scared."

But deep down, Chhetri and other Congressmen realise that with the kind of mandate Bhandari enjoys there is precious little they can do to topple him. Given Bhandari's unchallenged abilities as a political manipulator, the Congress(I)'s only hope of returning to Sikkim is by bringing home another prodigal—even if the price for that is consignment of three CBI cases to the archives in Delhi's Lok Nayak Bhawan.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA in Gangtok

NAR BAHADUR BHANDARI

"We don't want a Khalistan"

Nar Bahadur Bhandari, the maverick chief minister of the Himalayan state of Sikkim, is a nonconformist in more ways than one. Sartorially he is often nattier than any other chief minister in the country, with his favourite three-piece suits and ties. He blusters where other politicians would prefer to keep mum and is disdainfully indiscreet in the way he runs down his opponents.

A former schoolteacher, he enjoys the strongest backing any chief minister has in the country—30 legislators in a house of 32. Bhandari is conscious of this as well of having annihilated the Congress(I), his former party which had sacked him on charges of corruption and sedition.

Yet, with a CBI investigation pending against him, Bhandari had refrained from openly attacking the Centre but suddenly turned confrontationist last month. He spoke to Principal Correspondent SHEKHAR GUPTA in Gangtok last fortnight. Excerpts:

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Q. What explains your sudden ultimatum to the Centre to concede your demands within one year?

A. There is nothing sudden about this. These three demands—constitutional status for the Nepali language, regularisation of stateless persons in Sikkim and reservation for the Nepali community in the state Assembly—were the demands on which I came into power. Now people want results. Frustration is mounting. Delhi does not realise that, unlike Assam and Meghalaya, Sikkim became a part of India only about 10 years ago. Now do you want us to take a 100 years to become Indians? We are not seeking to break away from India. We are not asking for Khalistan. The problem is that I am a Nepali and being from the Nepali community is a curse now.

Q. While the language and citizenship demands are still easier to understand, what justification do you have in seeking seat reservations for the Nepalis who constitute 75 per cent of Sikkim's population?

A. The problem is that Sikkim is today such a good, peaceful state. We did not have even a single murder in 1985. Our high court has just seven cases pending. This, while so much golmal (commotion) is happening all over the country. So obviously, people like to come and settle down here. In 1973, the population of Gangtok was 12,000. Today it is 53,000. As a result, in the last election the Gangtok seat went to an outsider. The Sikkimese have thus already lost their capital. In the next election they will lose at least four more seats. Seat reservation thus is a genuine requirement for a state which has no more than 3 lakh original inhabitants. My fear is that an Assam-like situation should not develop in the state of Sikkim.

Q. You recently said that if your three demands were conceded, you will become the best Congressman in Sikkim. What did you mean ?

A. You must understand the politics of Sikkim. Parties do not count here, persons do. The same people who are with me today were earlier the Sikkim Congress. In fact, I had taken my party like a cake on a platter and presented it to the Congress(I). But, unfortunately, those people in Delhi do not even know how to eat cake properly. My point is straightforward. What does a small state like Sikkim, with just one MP, matter to the Congress(I) at the national level also when that lone MP (his wife) also supports them? They should just leave us alone here and I will be their best friend.

Q. But what went wrong when you were a Congress(I) chief minister?

A. The guiding principle of politics in India is: if a man seems to be getting a mass following, cut his roots. That is what was done to me. (Homi) Taleyarkhan, the then governor, planned the whole operation and pulled me down. But a week before she died, Mrs Gandhi had admitted to me her party's folly.

Q. Are you worried about the CBI inquiry into the corruption cases against you?

A. Five hundred CBI people came to Gangtok and dug up all official records. They went to each newly-constructed house in Darjeeling and asked people if it was Bhandari's. They have found nothing. I won't say it on record, but in case the Centre decides to proceed with the cases I will also give a fitting reply. Remember, the sanction to prosecute me was given by Gurung's two-man cabinet meeting in Taleyarkhan's residence. I can withdraw it the day I feel like.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ATLAS INTRODUCES THE FUNFLEET

Four Superbikes world-class!

SPEED UP ON CONCORDE
Super Racer. Rugged frame tubing. Tachometer Rat trap steel pedals with leather flaps. Extra free-wheels for high/normal speed option.

TRIM UP ON SPORTSTER
Adjustable bar. Tachometer for speed and mileage. Sleek hubs and mudguards. Calliper brakes, self-locking side stand, nickel chrome-plated carrier.

GROW UP ON SCOUT BMX
MIG welded fork and frame. Extra wide wheels. Adjustable handle with foam pads. Special chainguard. Front and rear, spoke and pedal reflectors.

Nothing as exciting has happened to bikes as Atlas Funfleet. 4 Superbikes. In 4 acrylic polychromatic colours. Sheer world-class. Gleaming with good looks, great technology. And you know Atlas keeps going strong—all the way to millions of fun miles.

AC-26

Atlas

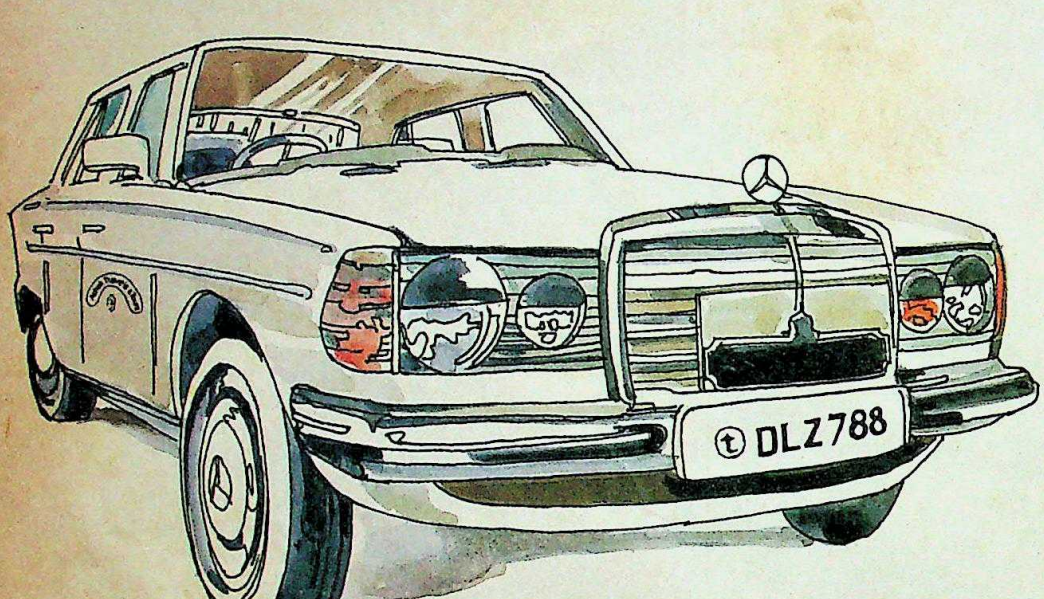
«FUNFLEET»

CONCORDE • SPORTSTER • SCOUT BMX • RAMBLER

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

We could talk about the foreign tourists who explored India with Ashok Travels & Tours last yea



But we would rat
our 'Discovery of India' pac non-resident Ind

India Tourism Development Corporation

CC-0. In Public Domain. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ast year.

d, rather talk about a' packages for nt Indians this year.

Ashok Travels & Tours offers non-resident Indians an unique opportunity to travel, see and discover India. Through a special 50% discount on stay at any Ashok property, till 30th September 1986.

From a trip into history to stay at royal palaces. From a trek in the mountains to a beach holiday. Experience India with the experience of Ashok. In the comfort and hospitality of our hotels, beach resorts and travellers lodges.

Special itineraries—ground transport, sight-seeing, guides and air-tickets—can be drawn up on request. From the economy-conscious to the luxury-minded there's a tour to suit every budget.

Ashok Travels & Tours offers the country's largest fleet of tourist limousines and deluxe coaches. And the facility of India's biggest tourist network.

The 50% discount is for all non-resident Indians booked through Ashok Travels & Tours. And the request coming through any recognised Indian Association overseas.

Destinations	22
Hotels	23
Beach Resorts	2
Travellers Lodges	3
Forest Lodge	1

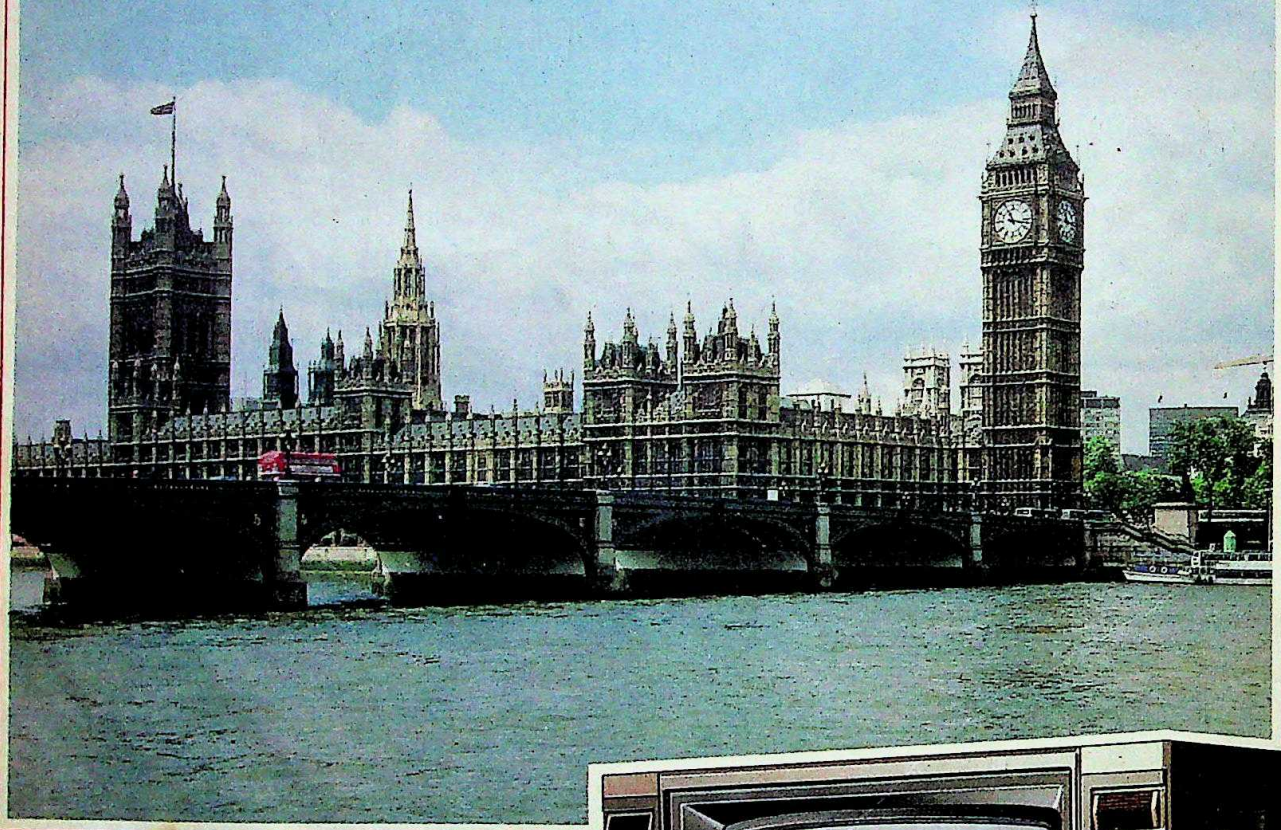
The Ashok Group

HOTELS • TRAVEL SERVICES • DUTY FREE SHOP

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The technology is Binatone. The success, worldwide.



Binatone technology combines the best of the East and West. This has made Binatone the single largest independent Electronics company in England.

The same technology that has planted Binatone's roots throughout the rest of the world, with production and R&D set ups in Japan, Korea, Hongkong, Taiwan, Germany and England.

Today, Binatone products are sold in 50 countries the world over and the corporate quest continues—to turn out products that meet the ever rising demands of a technology conscious world.

No wonder then, Binatone has outsold even Japanese products in England.

Since you buy a Colour TV only once in your lifetime, buy best, buy Binatone.

You won't find a better deal.

Binatone

Built better to last longer

Binatone Electronics Private Limited,
B-58, Site IV, Sahibabad Industrial Area,
Sahibabad-201010 (U.P).

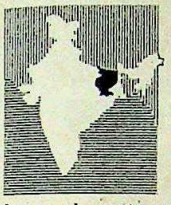
Arms Communications 185

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BIHAR

'Mafia' War



SEVEN years ago, the mafia labour leaders of Dhanbad had come together to dislodge Karpoori Thakur as the chief minister because he had dared to challenge their "authority". The same mafia gangs have again closed ranks against Chief Minister Bindeshwari Dubey, a trade union veteran of 45 years' standing in the area. The significant difference is that the mafia leaders are working in unison with Jagannath Mishra. "Our aim is not only to remove Dubey from the chief ministership but also to destroy his trade union base in the coalfields," boasted a Mishra confidant.

Last fortnight, Dubey brought the matter to the party high command's notice when he carried a report on Mishra's efforts to break his hold over the Rashtriya Colliery Mazdoor Sangh (RCMS) as the latest tactic in Mishra's six-month-old effort to dislodge him. Said Dubey: "Some politicians and exploiters known as mafia leaders have ganged up to destabilise my government as I have launched a crackdown against them." Dubey's complaint, and Mishra's statement challenging Dubey to prove his majority in the legislature party, prompted party General Secretary in charge of Bihar T. Anjiah, to send a letter warning Mishra of disciplinary action.

However, Mishra continued to assert that Dubey was trying to cover up the failures of his government by labelling the Dhanbad labour leaders as a "mafia" gang. Said Mishra belligerently: "Dubey has lost the sanction of the people and the working class. He has just become an ornamental head of the state and a liability for the party and Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi."

The Dubey-Mishra battle for Dhanbad came to the boil when both of them turned up in Dhanbad to address separate rallies of the Indian National Trade Union Congress (INTUC), to which the RCMS is affiliated. While Dubey, a past president of the INTUC, attended the official function, Mishra addressed a parallel meeting which was organised by Congress(I) MLA S.P. Roy.

Since strongman and District Board Chairman Satyadeo Singh and other labour 'leaders' had lent their support to Roy's meeting, Mishra's meeting drew a larger crowd. Spurred on by the large turn-out, Roy and his men stormed into the union headquarters, ransacked the office and removed Dubey's nameplates. Further damage was pre-empted by the police, who arrested them.

Not to be daunted, Roy called a special delegates' session where he 'disbanded' the RCMS, 'removed' Dubey from its presidentship and got Shankar Dayal Singh, MP and brother of Satyadeo Singh, 'elected' as president and himself as general secretary. "It was good drama but I am least bothered," remarked Dubey later. "Roy has no locus standi to call such a meeting. More than 75 per cent of the delegates were outsiders. Moreover, S.D. Singh's election as president was illegal as he is not even a member of the RCMS."

Dubey's supporters say the dramatis personae in the story have come together only because they have their own grouses against Dubey. Roy is now opposing him, says INTUC leader Balram Rai, because he expected to become a minister and Dubey had not obliged. S.D. Singh fell in with Roy's plan because Dubey had denied the Assembly ticket from Singh's constituency to his brother. The Rajput mafia leaders have never been kindly disposed towards the Brahmin Dubey but their opposition to him concretised during the last state elections. Dubey was then the state party chief and was instrumental in denying them Congress(I) tickets. After he became chief minister, Dubey added insult to injury by launching an offensive calculated to break their stranglehold over government contracts. Noted Dubey: "My crackdown led to their unity and they ganged up against me."

But Dubey committed one unpardonable error: he did not carry his fight with the mafia to the finish. Not only does the mafia continue to thrive, it pressurised Dubey to revive the auction system for liquor shops and to sack excise minister Indernath Bhagat after Bhagat opposed the step and ordered raids on some shops. With the people's support only lukewarm, the coming together of all his opponents has shaken the chief minister.

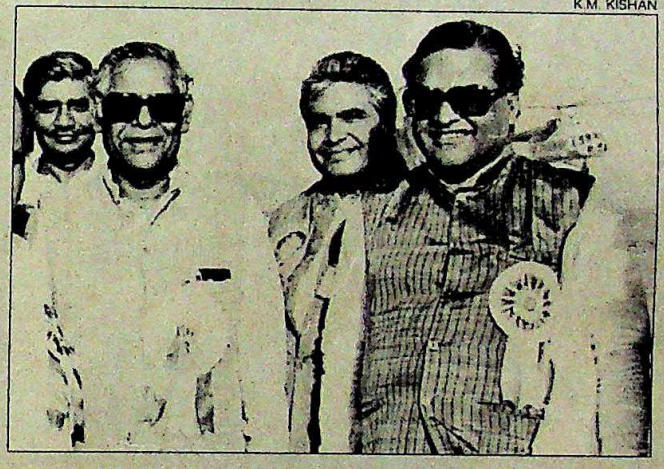
The heightening of tension in the coalfields has also begun to take a physical toll. Jagdish Narain Pandey, a trade union leader close to Dubey, was brutally murdered by some unknown persons last month. Though it was overtly unconnected with the Dubey-Mishra war, the people of Dhanbad regard it as a sign of things to come.

—FARZAND AHMED

"Some politicians known as mafia leaders have ganged up to destabilise my government as I have launched a crackdown against them."

BINDESHWARI DUBEY
chief minister

K.M. KISHAN



"Dubey has lost the sanction of the people and the working class. He has become a liability for the party and Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi."

JAGANNATH MISHRA

Dubey (left) and Mishra in more congenial times

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

India's largest circulated daily speaks Malayalam and the truth.

Malayala Manorama Established in 1888 Circulation – 6,45,605

Malayala Manorama with its circulation of 6,45,605 has been certified by the Audit Bureau of Circulation as India's largest circulated daily among English and vernacular dailies.

For Malayala Manorama's readers this comes as a confirmation of what they already know. That no other newspaper quite meets up with Malayala Manorama's standards for sheer content and coverage. For nearly a century now Malayala Manorama has been giving its readers the truth. And only the truth. And creating a lasting tradition of journalistic excellence.

Today it reaches over 57,00,000 readers and travels all over the world to wherever there is a Malayalam speaking community. And to every one of its readers Malayala Manorama's word is gospel.

Yes, today Malayala Manorama is not just read. It is believed.

Malayala Manorama

Published from Kottayam, Calicut and Cochin.

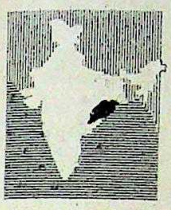
The living legend among dailies.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ORISSA

Hard Pressed



ALL ABUZZ with the sensational 'revelations' about Chief Minister Janaki Ballav Patnaik in last month's Illustrated Weekly of India, Orissa was like a theatre of the absurd last fortnight. Patnaik defied expectations by not going to the Press Council or the courts, but would not reveal his plans either. Asked Patnaik: "If a dog bites you, will you also bite the dog ?"

Even as pro-Patnaik journalists fired off a memo to the Press Council in Delhi to take up the case suo moto, a Rourkela lawyer and party supporter, Umakant Mishra, filed an obscenity case against the magazine in Rourkela. Janata Party worker Chittaranjan Mohanty added to the confusion by filing a case under the Orissa Press Act for scurrilous writing in Cuttack, demanding that the magazine's editor, Pritish Nandy, the article's writer and all others named be summoned and cross-examined. The cases will queer the pitch for Patnaik, who favours approaching the Press Council, since the council will not take up a case already in the courts.

Statements of support from his party, orchestrated by Patnaik, came in a torrent—88 party MLA's issued a statement condemning the write-up and the Youth Congress(I) and the party's women's cell called it a slur on Oriya girls and boys. But these were countered with demands for his resignation by dissidents within the Congress(I) and opposition leaders.

Patnaik and his supporters maintained that Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi was supportive and sympathetic and had asked the chief minister to take legal opinion before deciding on the future course of action. But dissident leaders quoted party General Secretary in charge of Orissa, T. Anjiah, as having told Patnaik that it would be irrelevant if all the 115 party MLA's backed him, since the issue was one of morality. Later, Anjiah said in Bhubaneswar that it was for the party high command to take a decision on Patnaik.

Even the dramatis personae in the Weekly story behaved in a puzzling manner. The youth who the Weekly claimed had been molested by Patnaik in his office was identified as Vishwanath Sethi of Balipatna village in Puri district

Eastern Press Agency

Dissident leaders say that the high command has given Patnaik a chance to prove his innocence or be damned.

Eastern Press Agency

Sethi admitted to having spoken to the Weekly's reporter on tape and of having gone to the chief minister for help but claimed he did not know what he had said about Patnaik's behaviour.

(the Weekly had given a nom de plume, Raju Jena). Contacted by INDIA TODAY, Sethi, a plain looking youth of 20, said he had been taken to Patnaik by Braj Kishore Barik, who was once close to Patnaik but was now in the Janata Party, when he needed some monetary help. Patnaik had heard him and given him money on more than one occasion.

Sethi, who runs a small kirana shop, admitted to having spoken to the magazine's reporter on tape when Barik had come a month ago with the reporter and the personal assistant of opposition leader Biju Patnaik. He says he first refused to speak but then agreed after Barik assured him that Biju babu would get him a job if he cooperated. "I then told them about my visit to the chief minister's house but I don't know what all has been published," said Sethi. When informed of what the magazine had quoted him as saying, he said that he did not remember what he had told them and added: "I will not speak anything against the chief minister who helped me and showed me sympathy."

Suktani Hota, an attractive widow of 32 from Jharsuguda in western Orissa, touted as a Patnaik paramour, complicated matters by issuing a statement saying she was being unnecessarily dragged into the controversy and denying that she had written to Sonia Gandhi complaining against Patnaik.

Most people still do not know what had been written since the local papers, normally quick to seize on anything anti-Patnaik, refrained from translating the Weekly's write-up. But the odd journalist who stepped out of line was soon pulled up. When Pragativadi Managing Editor Rabi Das commented that Patnaik must clear himself of the charges as his silence might be taken as confirmation, Patnaik ordered that Das must vacate his government house since editors were not entitled to official houses.

Official pressure held up the Weekly's circulation in the state (approximately 2,500) initially but then additional copies were rushed and eventually the magazine sold over 10,000 copies. It was retailed in the black, often loaned out on an hourly basis and some enterprising people made a fast buck by photostating the article and selling that for Rs 5. But since the magazine only sells in the urban areas, its impact was limited. However, Janata Party MP Sarat Deb, who had toured some rural areas, maintained that people were shocked even though they did not know the details.

But Patnaik's family was angry. Said

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Soumya Ranjan Patnaik, the chief minister's son-in-law and editor of Oriya daily Sambad: "I think this is part of an organised campaign by The Times of India group to malign and weaken Rajiv Gandhi, since Orissa is the only bastion of the Congress(I) in the east."

There was no clear answer to the basic question: had Patnaik misused his office for sexual favours ? Janata Party leader Damodar Rout, in a letter to the governor reproduced by the magazine, had alleged that Patnaik had converted the Chief Minister's Relief Fund into a "personal charity fund for purchasing pleasure" by sanctioning funds for "picnics and sightseeing by college students." But doubt emerged about whether Rout's letter had been sent to Raj Bhavan before or after the magazine's publication.

Reacting to the criminal case, the Weekly's editor, Pritish Nandy, said he would be more than willing to "take on Mr Patnaik". But Patnaik's men claimed that their leader was just waiting for the storm to blow over, as others have in the six years he has been in power. Now that Anjiah has clarified that the high command has no objection to Patnaik taking the issue to court, the chief minister cannot buck the decision much longer.

—FARZAND AHMED in Bhubaneswar

UTTAR PRADESH

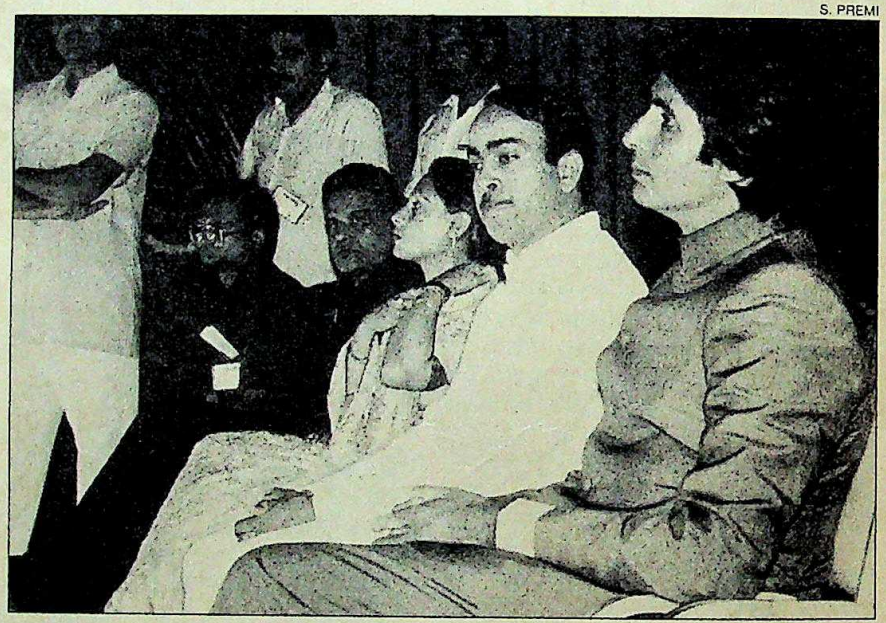
Side Show

BACCHANALIA is generally translated as riotous revelry; which was a fitting enough description of Amitabh Bachchan's rather farcical visit to Lucknow last fortnight for the premiere of his latest film, Aakhree Raasta. The only problem was that the riotous revelry was all on the part of the state Government and certainly not on the part of the sparse audience which showed up.

In fact, the real cinematic-type antics were more in evidence behind the scenes than on it. Already tarnished by accusations of nepotism in the manner in which the state Government bent over backwards to accommodate the film star-turned-MP, the show turned out to be a melodramatic farce. The state administration set what must rank as their fastest-ever timing in responding to a personally-signed letter from Bachchan on May 27 requesting permission for the charity show, its exemption from entertainment tax and security arrangements. All three were granted within a day. Said Transport Minister Sanjay Singh, the man behind the official miracle: "Amitabh Bachchan is doing the charity show for a good cause."

Singh personally telephoned the director-general of police and other top officials with the request for security. No less than five battalions of the Provincial Armed Constabulary and an equal number of policemen—twice the capacity of the 1,000-seat Novelty cinema, the venue of the premiere—were requisitioned by the organisers.

S. PREMI



Bachchan, Sanjay Singh and Jaya at the premiere: official stunts

Further accommodation was in evidence when the office-bearers of the Amitabh Bachchan Fans' Association were lodged in the state guest-house, as was Bachchan's Personal Assistant K. Srinivasan, who arrived in Lucknow on June 1 and was personally received by Sanjay Singh. A dozen government vehicles were left at their disposal. Sputtered Singh: "They are government taxis and anybody can book them."

But it soon became obvious that the response from the public hardly matched the moment. The organisers, realising that the collections would barely cross the Rs 50,000 mark, decided to bringout a souvenir. And presto! Official letters from the chief minister's Secretary S. Krishna, were immediately dispatched to all heads of public corporations asking them to release full-page black-and-white advertisements of Rs 5,000 or Rs 10,000 for the brochure.

The souvenir never appeared and neither, for that matter, did the fans. Despite a blitzkrieg publicity campaign, public response was lukewarm. Obviously, the city was not prepared to shell out the Rs 500, Rs 300 or Rs 100 required for the premiere.

Ultimately, the association had to resort to filling the half-empty hall with ministers, officials, chairmen of public corporations and members of the press, who were issued passes. Said association Chairman Ravi Bhushan Wadhawan: "We collected Rs 8.50 lakh on the premiere of Mard in Allahabad and we were expecting Rs 10 lakh from Lucknow. We are disappointed."

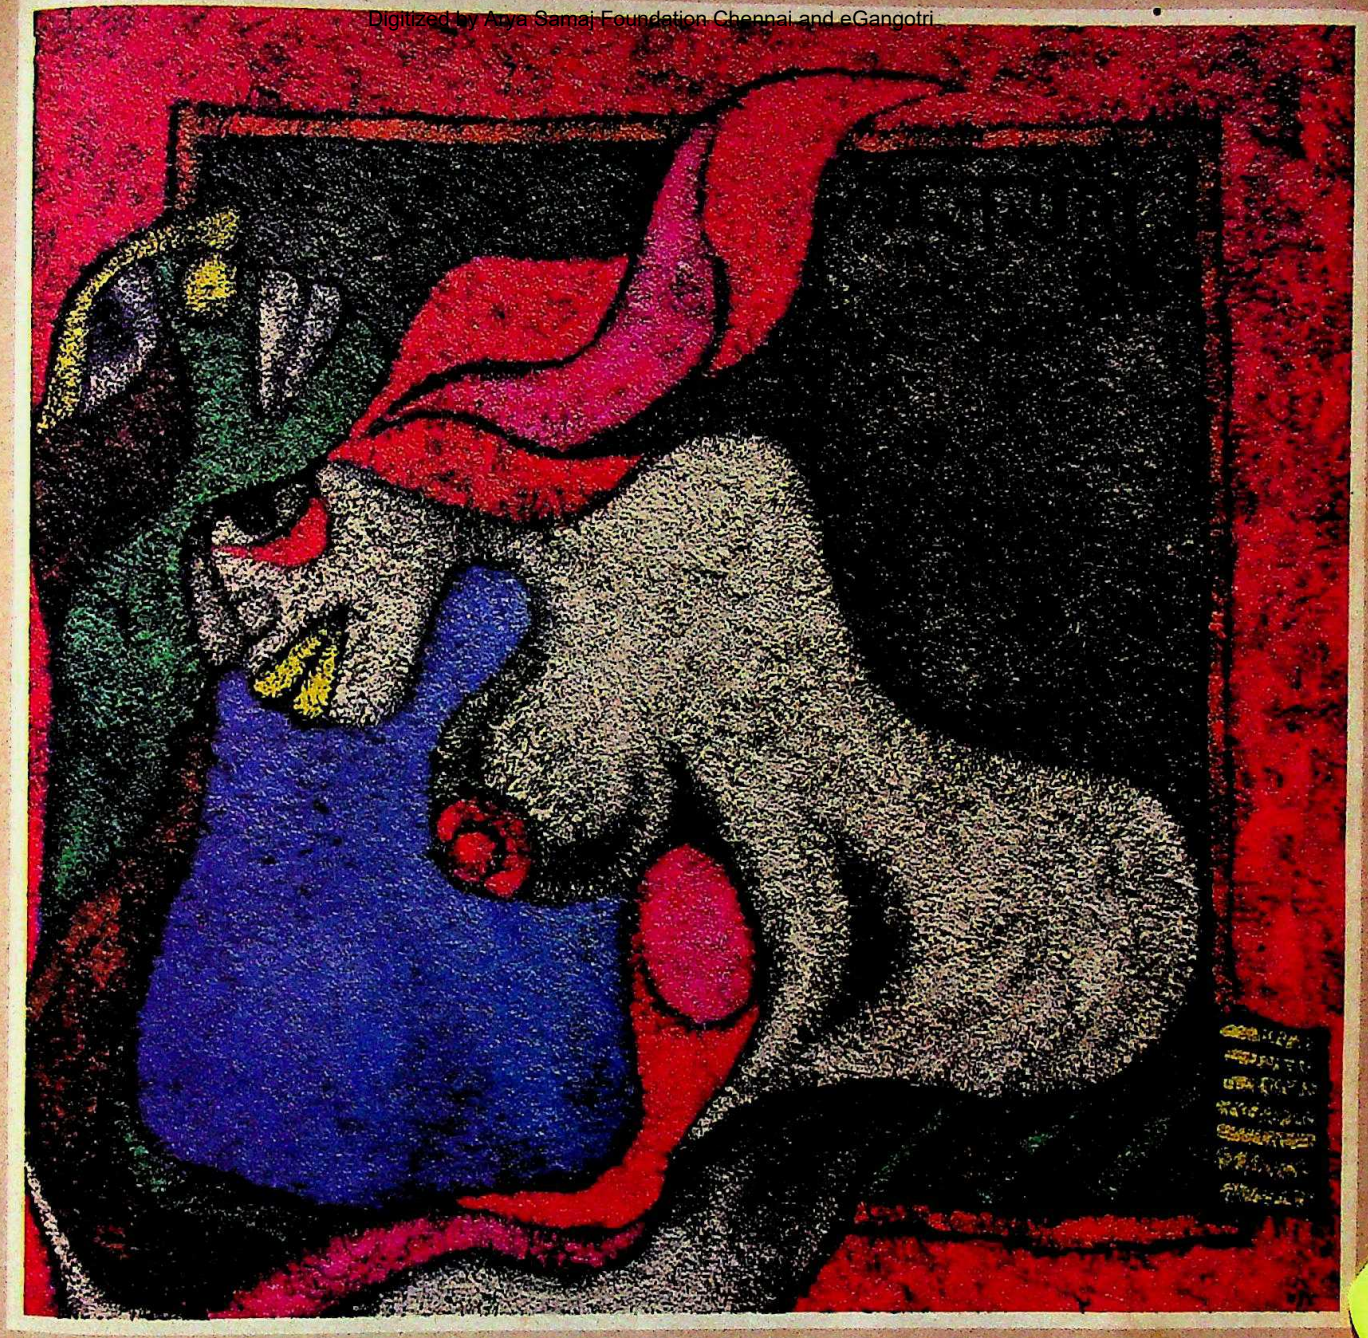
The start of the premiere developed into a mini-riot as the non-paying audience tried to gatecrash. The police retaliated and in the ensuing melee, a number of shops and vehicles were damaged and about 90 people injured. Amitabh hurriedly ended his speech and when an aide whispered something into his ear, announced a grant of Rs 15,000 for the Lucknow University Library by Nirmaan, his Allahabad-based charity organisation. Later, a further Rs 11,000 was announced by the producer of Aakhree Raasta, Raj Chopra.

Barely a month ago, on his last visit to the state capital, Bachchan had obtained a special grant of Rs 1.30 crore from Chief Minister Bir Bahadur Singh for his constituency of Allahabad. Now, here he was, in the flesh, doling out largesse to Lucknow. Except this time, there were not many people present to appreciate the honour.

—S. PREMI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



The third in a series of originals by Satish Gujral.
Created exclusively for Rajdoot Paints.

Colour, sensuous colour . . .

When the artist paints, colours take on a life all their own, flowing from the sensuous strokes of his brush to capture the viewer's imagination.

Here, Rajdoot Paints brings you another fresh perspective in colour — from your world of colour, which Rajdoot, now one of India's finest paint companies, is helping shape in its own different way.

The world of colour,
The world of Rajdoot.

Rajdoot® PAINTS

Rajdoot Paints Limited

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

9 to 5

Cool, unruffled, elegant and enduring through a hard day's journey from 9 to 5

9to5 Trousering & Shirting. Specially crafted for the 9 to 5 man.

Madura Fabrics
A quality product from Madura Coats.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Toyo Ceramics of Japan and Mitsugen Glazes of India

Shortly brings you a high performance product

Incomparable Ceramic Tiles for Exteriors as well as Interiors.
A wide range of colours and shades.
Yours to mix and match.
Designs and sizes to suit your needs and taste.
Lasts a lifetime and needs no special care.

The plant is being set up at Kolar, by Japanese technocrats.
Project Commissioning by November 1986.

MGL
MITSUGEN
GLAZES
BANGALORE

MITSUGEN GLAZES – not merely glazes but perfection

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Adsystems

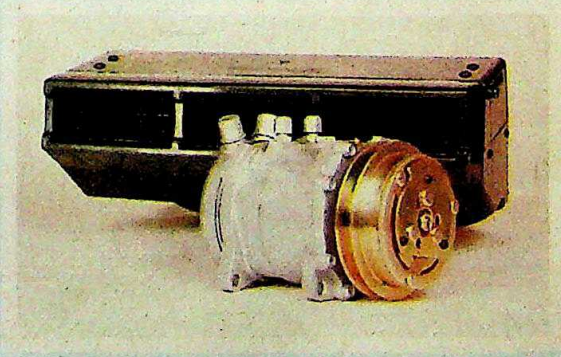
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A Business Decision

SANDEN VIKAS

Auto Air Conditioning Systems

A business executive has to take very many decisions in a day. Every decision more important than the other. This demands that he be fresh and alert. Always choosing the right from wrong. Our executive took the right one. He chose Sanden Vikas auto airconditioning systems for his car. The systems are known for their reliability, economy and performance. Now he can be fresh and alert at all times, even while travelling.



Supplied as original equipment for MARUTI 800, MARUTI VAN, CONTESSA and ROVER

— WITH A FLAIR FOR COOL AIR

Manufactured under licence and with technical collaboration of SANDEN CORPORATION, Japan.

SANDEN VIKAS (INDIA) LTD.

HEAD OFFICE: 12-A Shivaji Marg, New Delhi-110 015 Phones: 533881, 534258 Telex: 031-61478 SSN IN
WORKS: Plot No. 65, Sector 27A, Faridabad-121 003 Phone: 81-25943 Telex: 343 309 SVL IN
BRANCH OFFICE: B-2, No. 2, Ramachandra Road, T. Nagar, Madras-600 017 Phone: 447021 Telex: 041-8044 SVIK IN SANDEN SERVICE CENTRE: A-199, Okhla Industrial Area, Phase-I, New Delhi-110 020 Phone: 632889.

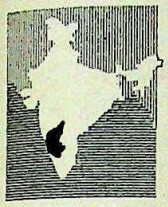
Bhumeeka 111

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KARNATAKA

Bangarappa's Blunder



FOR THE Congress(I) the jinx continues in Karnataka. In the three-and-a-half years that Ramakrishna Hegde has been in power, the Congress(I) has had an embarrassingly high turnover of state party chiefs and leaders of the legislature party. The latest to go was S. Bangarappa, who quit last fortnight as the leader of the legislature party after a week of eventful drama. Though he gave no reason for his sudden decision, the provocation unquestionably was a high court judgement which severely castigated him for purchasing some land that should have gone to the Government.

With the leadership issue wide open yet again—earlier Veerappa Moily had quit—the familiar fissures in the party took no time to emerge. Hours after Bangarappa's announcement, a dozen MLA's of the Vokkaliga caste shot off a telegram to party president Rajiv Gandhi asking him to continue with Bangarappa as the leader. They were prompted not by any great affection for Bangarappa. They merely wanted to pre-empt the chances of the other groups in the party, belonging to former chief minister R. Gundu Rao or former state party chief K.H. Ranganath, or even the possibility that a lone crusader former minister B. Basavalingappa or former speaker K.S. Nagarathnama could surprise them all. And Moily rushed to Delhi to lobby for himself, even though he still faces a judicial inquiry on the tapes episode. The high command accepted Bangarappa's decision till his appeal to a division bench of the high court was disposed off.

The case against Bangarappa relates to a petition filed in 1981 by four Harijans from his native Sorab taluk in Shimoga district. The petitioners alleged that about 42-acres of land owned by one Bindu Madhavachar and M. Raghavendrachar had been under tenancy to the family of Mugur Parsappa. But the land tribunal at Sorab had rejected the claims of Parsappa's sons and awarded the land to the landlords.

Bangarappa came into the picture when he bought a portion of this land from a tribunal member, alongwith two of his nephews. This action drew strictures from Justice P.P.Bopanna, who remarked: "There could be no doubt that the proceedings before the tribunal are shrouded by gravely suspicious circumstances and disturbing features." He referred the matter back to the land tribunal for fresh disposal of the claims.

BHAWAN SINGH

Bangarappa claimed the land had never been under tenancy but in another deal took ownership of 13 acres.

The case decisively established that:

► Madhavachar had named Parsappa as the tenant in an application filed in 1966 to take possession of half his land (under laws then in force, landlords could claim half their land under tenancy).

► Parsappa's sons, Lalappa and Basappa, claimed ownership of the land saying they inherited the tenancy from their father.

► The tribunal rejected Basappa's claim in February 1979 (when Bangarappa was a minister in the Urs government) saying he had given up his claim. But it recorded no statement from him.

► It also rejected Lalappa's claim in two separate orders in February 1979 and December 1980 on the same grounds. But his statements, supposedly to the effect that he had never cultivated the land, were recorded only by the tribunal members, not the chairman.

► In May 1979, K. Veerappa, a member of the tribunal, himself bought some 10 acres of the disputed land and sold it to Bangarappa in February 1980 for Rs 7,000. Later Bangarappa's nephews bought the rest.

Predictably, Bangarappa denied that there was anything illegal about the deal and claimed that the land had never been under tenancy. But he stood exposed when the court came across another deal dating back to 1976 when he was a member of a tribunal and signed an order conferring ownership of some 13 acres on himself! Snapped a disbelieving Bopanna: "I have come across quite a number of atrocious orders by land tribunals but this takes the cake."

As if that was not enough for Bangarappa, Bopanna slapped on a contempt of court charge on him for having said—through his counsel—that the case should be heard by another judge. No reasons were cited.

Later he appealed to the division bench of the high court and obtained a stay order. But by then his partymen had already started sniping at him. Party MLC L.G. Havanur told Bangarappa in a letter released to the press: "You must quit because the party cannot sit in judgement over the high court verdict." An infuriated Bangarappa initially told partymen that he was ready to quit but the high command had told him it would take a final decision on the issue. Even when he did finally quit, it was not clear whether he had done so on the high command's instructions or on his own.

For the Janata Party, the bickering in the Congress(I) served to take the public attention away from its own wranglings. A minister was asked to quit and then reinstated but hardly anybody noticed: l'affaire Bangarappa continued to hog the headlights. To the delight of Hegde, the Congress(I)'s name in the state had again been rubbed in the mud.

—SRINIVASA PRASAD

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE NEPALIS

Hounded at Home

FOR over a century now, the Nepalis have felt at home in India's north-east. But today, the 30-lakh Nepalis spread over the hill districts of West Bengal, Sikkim, Meghalaya and Assam suddenly find themselves branded as foreigners and encroachers and evicted. Alarmed by this development, the entire Nepali community is battling to acquire legitimacy and defend its rights in its adopted land.

The epicentre of this gathering storm is Darjeeling district where the Gorkha National Liberation Front (GNLF), primed by the eviction of 7,000 Nepali immigrants by Meghalaya in March, is waging a determined movement for a separate state called Gorkhaland (INDIA TODAY, May 16-31). And Nepalis all over the north-east are exhorting their leaders to come out in support of the Gorkhaland movement, while GNLF emissaries are fanning out all over the country preaching about the Centre's policy of "apartheid" towards the community.

There is a very real possibility that the movement could turn violent. Warns GNLF leader Subhash Ghising: "If justice is not given by the Central Government the political situation in Darjeeling will take a violent turn in the future." (see box) Adds R.P. Sharma, lawyer and convenor of the Joint Action Committee of Assamese Nepali Organisations (JACANO): "There are 18 lakh Nepalis in Assam and many of them are now saying that we should begin to arm ourselves."

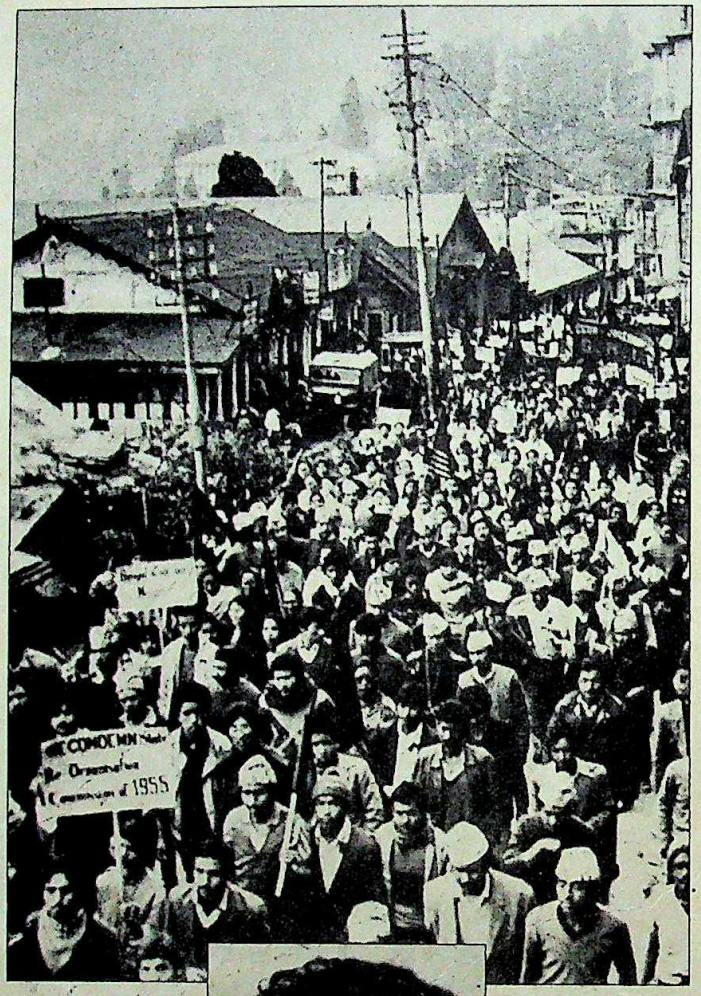
"The root of the present crisis is the feeling among us that Indians consider all Nepalis to be citizens of Nepal," explains Professor Nar Bahadur Rai of Shillong College, whose forefathers were among the first recruits for the Gorkha Regiment raised at Shillong by the British in the 1820s. Nepalis are not off the mark in their presumption. In 1979, former prime minister Morarji Desai refused to accord official status to the Nepali language, publicly declaring it to be a foreign language—a view held by officialdom since the Official Languages Committee president B.G.Kher pronounced it in 1956. "We have grown tired of explaining that we are not immigrant settlers but indigenous people of this country," frets a prominent Darjeeling-based Nepali.

The GNLF is taking advantage of the subsurface despondence among Darjeeling's 8 lakh-odd Nepalis and pointing out that the present-day Darjeeling district was carved out of parts of Nepal, Sikkim and Bhutan by the British and was never a part of West Bengal. Argues Ghising: "As long as we remain in West Bengal, we will not be treated as indigenous people."

Leaders of JACANO are just as bitter with the Union Government and the Assam Government. "Two years ago, we had been assured by the Union Home Ministry that Nepalis who had legally settled in Assam before July 1976 or those who had their names in the 1977 voters' list would be protected and not considered foreigners," says Sharma. Further, Assam Chief Minister Prafulla Mahanta had assured a six-member Nepali delegation that the accord would not be applicable to Nepalis.

But Mahanta told INDIA TODAY categorically: "The Assam accord is applicable to Nepalis and all other communities." Eviction notices have already been served on hundreds of Nepali families in Kokrajhar district, where the Nepalis have launched a peaceful agitation against the district administration.

Ghising's call for the abrogation of clause 7 of the 1950 Indo-Nepal treaty—which grants citizens of the two countries reciprocal rights in the matter of residence, ownership and prop-



"After 34 years of service to my country, if I can be insulted by a mere constable and asked to prove my Indian citizenship every time I return to Meghalaya, I think it is not worth living in the country."

MAN BAHADUR RAI
retired IAS officer

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SUBHASH GHISING

Key Figure

EX-CORPORAL Subhash Ghising, 50, undisputed leader of the separatist Gorkha National Liberation Front (GNLF), is the most sought-after man in Darjeeling today. Worshipful commoners yearn for a glimpse, lesser political leaders want to build bridges and the local police want to question and perhaps arrest him. But to all of them, Ghising is currently also the most elusive figure.

"I have 17 charges against me at present and the police have tried to arrest me several times in the past," Ghising wrote in reply to INDIA TODAY's queries last fortnight, explaining his inability to meet people openly. His present contact point is an anonymous house in the heart of Darjeeling town, guarded by Gorkhas attired in camouflage fatigues and hunter boots.

Ghising was, however, easily accessible before the May 12-14 bandh. At that time, he had seemed an unlikely candidate for persecution: a frail, gangly man seen lying in striped pyjamas, his bulging glaucous eyes giving him an expression of perpetual surprise. His tiny bedroom was crammed with hardcore supporters who addressed him as "Daaju"—elder brother. "We are not secessionists," he had explained. "Just as West Bengal gives identity to the Bengalis, we want a state that will confer an Indian identity to the Nepali-speaking people of this country."

Ridding Indian Nepalis of their "foreign" stigma has been Ghising's solitary aim since 1979 when the then prime minister Morarji Desai had shocked the community by publicly declaring Nepali a "foreign language", implying that all Nepalis are foreigners. "I had started becoming political since 1964 and in the earlier years was involved in helping our youth," recalled Ghising. Earlier, between 1954 and 1960, he had served on a short service commission in the 1/8 Gorkha Rifles from where he retired as a corporal, returning to Darjeeling to become a schoolteacher.

Ghising's political ambitions during the '60s and most of the '70s were secondary, busy as he was writing novels and poetry in Nepali. His 18-odd novels are racy pot-boilers published in pocket books. "His books are meant for adults," says a Ghising fan, citing as an example, his novel Neelo Choli, which describes the escapades of a Gorkha medical student, complete with boy-meets-girl situations and torrid sex scenes. "The only thing wrong with Ghising's heroes," comments the fan, "is that they have no character."

Curiously, it is Ghising's own integrity that is posing the biggest question mark for the Gorkhaland movement. Intelligence reports suggest that GNLF emissaries have established contacts with Pakistani and Chinese agents in Kathmandu, begging the question whether Ghising is leader or pawn. Though he has repeatedly refuted the allegation that his party has received foreign funds, Central intelligence sources insist otherwise.

Ghising at a rally: sole leader

Many educated Nepalis, moreover, still have quite a few reservations about him. The essentially patriotic Nepalis are troubled by his call to boycott the Independence Day celebrations, whatever the rationale, and by his claim that he has complained about the maltreatment of Nepalis to the United Nations and countries like France. "He should also not harp on the Indo-Nepal Treaty, which is a national issue upon which good relations between the two countries depend," says a professor of Kurseong College.

And CPI(M) MP Ananda Pathak claims that the GNLF has circulated a seditious pamphlet urging Gorkha soldiers of the Indian army to come forward for their cause. Says Pathak: "We know that the GNLF is planning to liquidate the opposition in the district. The people are being misled by Ghising's emotional claims."

People who have known Ghising for years also point out how jealously the GNLF chief guards his newfound eminence. The organisation has no second rank leadership to speak of and all rallies and meetings have to be led by Ghising. Leaders of other parties who have tried to get into the movement have also been warded off. On May 30, Pranta Parishad, another separatist organisation, had convened an all-party meeting in Darjeeling to build up a "joint and more effective movement" for statehood. The Parishad leaders, as well as the Congress(I)'s Dawa Narbula and Swatantra Manch (Kalimpong) leaders, who attended the meeting, were heckled by Ghising's supporters and the meeting ended in pandemonium.

Yet, Ghising is the key figure for any future possible settlement—a fact that even the Centre has ultimately realised. But to the Left Front, he is a potential Bhindranwale—an evil that must be stamped out at the earliest. Devil or saint, it is Ghising's handling that will determine the future of the Gorkhaland stir.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

erty, participation in trade and commerce and movement and other privileges in either country—has stirred a responsive chord among the Nepalis. "We look and speak like our brethren from Nepal," says retired IAS officer Man Bahadur Rai of Umlaka village in Meghalaya. "And because of this no distinction is made between us and the immigrants."

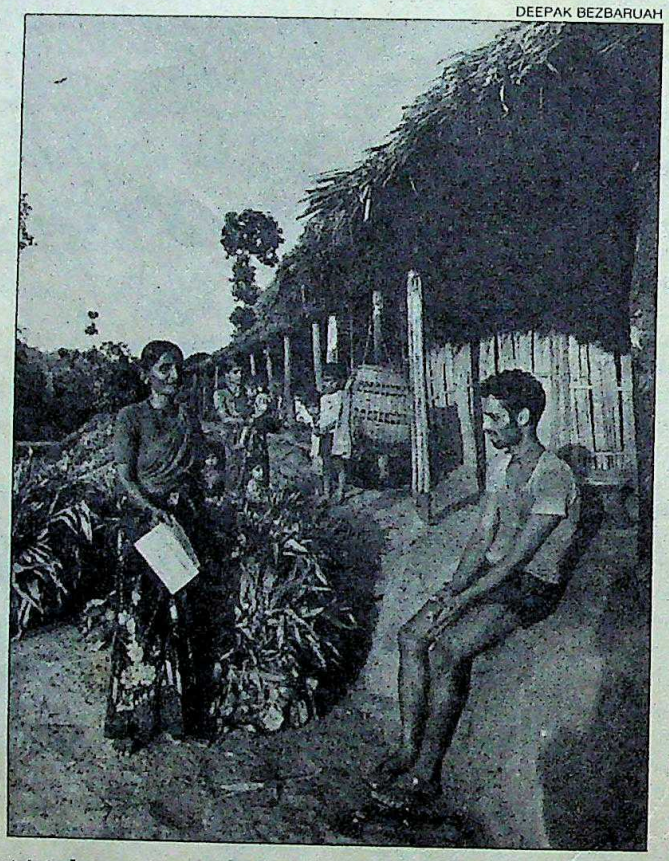
Rai recently had to suffer the humiliation of being ordered out of his car at the infamous Byrnihat check-post on the Assam-Meghalaya border, which has become a nightmare for the state's Nepali-speaking population since the Government has got tough on foreigners following the agitation by the All-Meghalaya Students' Union (AMSU). Rages Rai justifiably: "After 34 years of service to my country, if I can be insulted by a mere constable and asked to prove my Indian citizenship every time I return to Meghalaya, I think it is not worth living in the country."

When ultimately forced to justify the summary eviction of immigrants, without referring the matter to the foreigners' tribunal, the Meghalaya Government disclosed that since 1976 Nepali nationals entering restricted areas—comprising five north Bengal districts and the whole of the North-east—were to carry a permit but, "only a few Nepali nationals who entered Meghalaya after the crucial date applied for restricted-area permits (RAP's)". As a result, 1,956 Nepalis and 58 Bangladeshi nationals were deported. The Government later admitted that another 5,000 nationals left on their own, adding: "Some of those who wanted to leave the place on their own were also assisted by the police whenever required."

The RAP requirement represents a typical catch-22 situation created by an insensitive bureaucracy. Ananda Pathak, the highly respected CPI(M) Lok Sabha MP from Darjeeling who toured the North-east last month, confessed: "I was astonished to find that nobody, not even the state Government, could tell me where to get a permit." Enquiries revealed that the only office from where Nepalis could get RAP's was in Delhi. Wondered Pathak: "How can illiterate, starving Nepalis trickling into India on the assurance of the Indo-Nepal treaty be expected to trek all the way to Delhi to get a permit when no one even tells them it is necessary?"

Darjeeling district, however, remains the tinderbox and only the Centre can douse the tense situation there. Ghising has consistently maintained that he will have no truck with the West Bengal Government—a position that has hardened following the May 25 police firing in Kurseong which took a toll of five, including a Marwari shopkeeper. Till now, all that the Centre has done is to send a "secret" emissary to have talks with Ghising.

DEEPAK BEZBARUAH



Couple displaying expulsion notice

The power in Ghising's emotional appeal for Gorkhaland is making inroads both into the ranks of the CPI(M) and the Congress(I). CPI(M) trade unions have long had a stranglehold over the district's 78 tea gardens but during the "Gorkhaland bandh" last month, at least 27 gardens were totally closed. "All these years, I have been shouting about Nepali problems in Parliament, but all my warnings were ignored and today we are faced with a movement that will destroy us," laments Pathak.

The Congress(I)'s plight is even more embarrassing. The district's most prominent Congress(I) leader, Dawa Narbula, has demanded Union territory status for Darjeeling though the Congress(I) backs the Left Front's stand of total opposition to the demand. But Narbula has no intention of capitulating and has openly expressed the desire to dissociate the Darjeeling unit from the state body. State party General Secretary Subroto Mukherjee says Narbula will be expelled if he persists in flouting the party stand.

Finding their foothold in Darjeeling crumbling before the GNLF's advance, the Congress(I) and the CPI(M), instead of formulating a joint strategy, have been sniping at each other. To the Marxist charge that the Congress(I) was helping the separatists, state party President P.R. Das Munshi reacted by accusing the Left Front Government of ignoring the hill areas. Union Minister of State for Planning Ajit Panja followed up by remarking that the Marxists had failed to provide matching grants for Darjeeling's development. The chief minister countered this by claiming that his government was spending twice the amount on the hill people compared to those living in the plains.

But Basu seems to have realised that he will need the support of the Centre to combat the separatists. Declaring that Rajiv Gandhi had promised full support to contain the Darjeeling stir, Basu said at a public meeting: "The communists and Congress will work unitedly to save the integrity of the nation." Meanwhile, in Darjeeling, the Marxists have launched a determined propaganda campaign to convince the people that the Gorkhaland stir is an "anti-people and violent movement."

The next step of the GNLF's programme will be directed against the Centre and will include the blockade of timber and tea, a step bound to create unprecedented hardship for the hill people. For the first time in years, a leader has emerged who has a wide appeal. Unless the Centre steps in, the bush fire started in North Bengal could well become a wildfire in the entire North-east.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE
in Shillong and Darjeeling

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ANDHRA PRADESH

More Sops

IN ANDHRA Pradesh it is now the turn of the farmer. Prompted by Telugu Desam General Secretary N. Chandrababu Naidu, Chief Minister N.T. Rama Rao moved decisively last fortnight to woo the state's 74 lakh farmers when he dramatically unveiled an ambitious three-tier plan at the party's annual mahanadu (convention) in an obvious bid to firm up the party's political base.

Underlining his personal interest in farmers' problems, Rama Rao picked up a piece of chalk and drew the proposed organisational flow chart on a blackboard at a session of select activists of the party's farmers' wing, Telugu Rythu, as well as legislators and MP's. The state agriculture development board—presided over by the chief minister and comprising government nominees—will be the apex body, formulating policies and planning the strategies for production and marketing.

The lowest rung of the structure will be constituted of crop-wise cooperative farmers' councils in each of the state's 1,104 mandals. They will be in charge of issuing loans and arranging storage and marketing facilities. The next tier will have a cluster of state-level federations for various crops to regulate trade, arrange cash credit flow and recommend the minimum remunerative price.

The top tier will be the state farmers' council, comprising presidents of the mandal farmers' councils and the state federations to coordinate the activities of the lower-level organisations, assess overall needs and suggest priorities in farm research. Says Naidu: "The Central Government's pricing policy has affected the income of farmers and the federation is the only answer to their problems." Maintained Rama Rao: "There will be no government interference and the federations will be free from politics."

However, the plan has never been anything but political. The idea of a multi-tiered farmers' union was mooted by Naidu, Rama Rao's son-in-law, after a tour of the districts. Apart from Rama Rao's undoubted charisma, the Telugu Desam derives its popularity from the support of the Harijans and the backward classes, the main beneficiaries of the Rs 2-a-kg-rice scheme and the rural housing programmes. Naidu found, however, that the farmers wanted a better deal. Now, Naidu plans to tie up the plan with the party's needs: the mandal cooperatives will be used to give small zones of influence to Telugu Desam activists.

There is little doubt that the state farmer needs help. Maharashtra—thanks to its monopoly cotton purchase scheme—buys cotton at Rs 6.10 and more per kg. In Andhra Pradesh, the price crashed to Rs 3.50 per kg in the 1985 season. Other crops have hardly fared better. Paddy sells at Rs 120 a quintal instead of Rs 145 four years ago, and chilli prices (for the better varieties) have dropped from Rs 1,800 to Rs 500 a quintal. Telugu Rythu activists at the party convention argued that farming had been reduced to a gamble for tens of thousands of small farmers, even when they were assured of water.

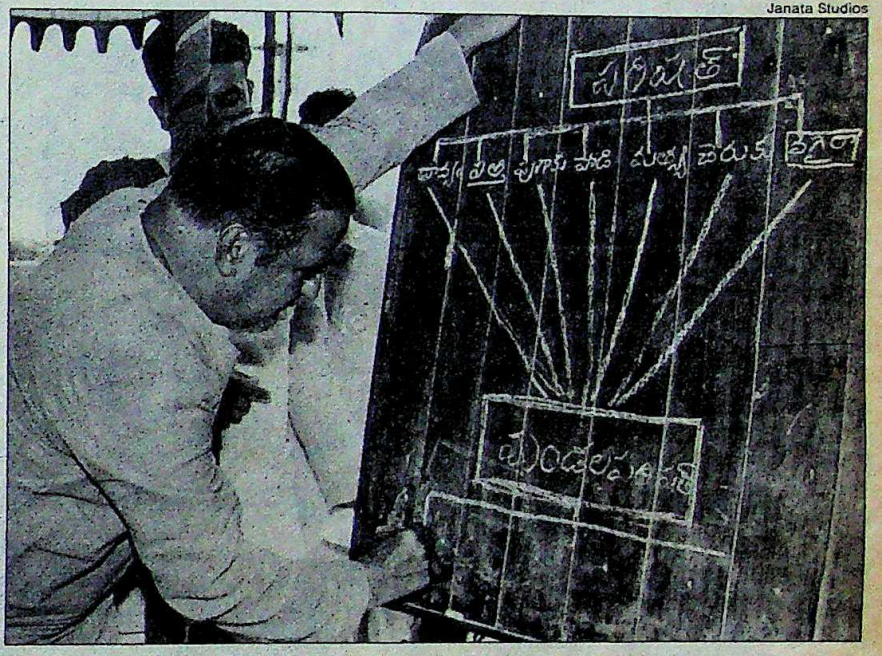
Though the federations are consistent with their demand, they are sceptical about the federation taking shape for another two years. Said one of Naidu's detractors: "A comprehensive farmers' federation from the mandal level is impractical." Opposition parties are equally unconvinced. Argued N. Giriprasad, state secretary of the CPI: "This plan will only create another set of intermediaries." But, said Naidu: "We are shaping the policy with caution; it will not be implemented in a hurry and made a mess."

Rama Rao has already announced that electricity arrears of farmers in drought-stricken areas are to be waived, cane-growers will get Rs 230 a tonne—Rs 10 more than last year—and cooperative sugar factories may be handed over to them. With the sops coming even before the creation of the farmers' federations, Rama Rao has left no doubt about his party's intentions.

—AMARNATH K. MENON

NTR outlining the farmers federation: political plans

Janata Studios



Naidu: moving force

The plan for mandal-level farmers' federations is basically political. Mooted by Chandrababu Naidu, they will be used to give small zones of influence to Telugu Desam activists.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KAMALAPATI TRIPATHI

The Flip-Flop Pandit

WHEN the contents of an angry letter signed by veteran Congressman Kamalapati Tripathi to Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi leaked out last month it seemed as if the party was heading for yet another split. The letter—bold in language, damning in its criticism of the way in which Rajiv was handling party affairs—appeared to herald the formation of a formidable army of "old guard" dissidents in opposition to the party's leadership. But the whole issue subsided in a whimper after Tripathi was roundly humiliated at a Congress(I) Working Committee (CWC) session last fortnight. Features Editor INDERJIT BADHWAR and Assistant Editor PRABHU CHAWLA looked into Kamalapati's background and spoke to dozens of his friends, opponents, as well as senior partymen in order to understand his motives as well as the political impact of his action. Their report:

Hlin baglamukhi sarvadushtanam vachmukhi stambhaya jivvhakdolaya kolaya buddhinashaya hlin on swahaha. (He who speaks against me, let a spike be driven through his tongue, let his brain be destroyed).

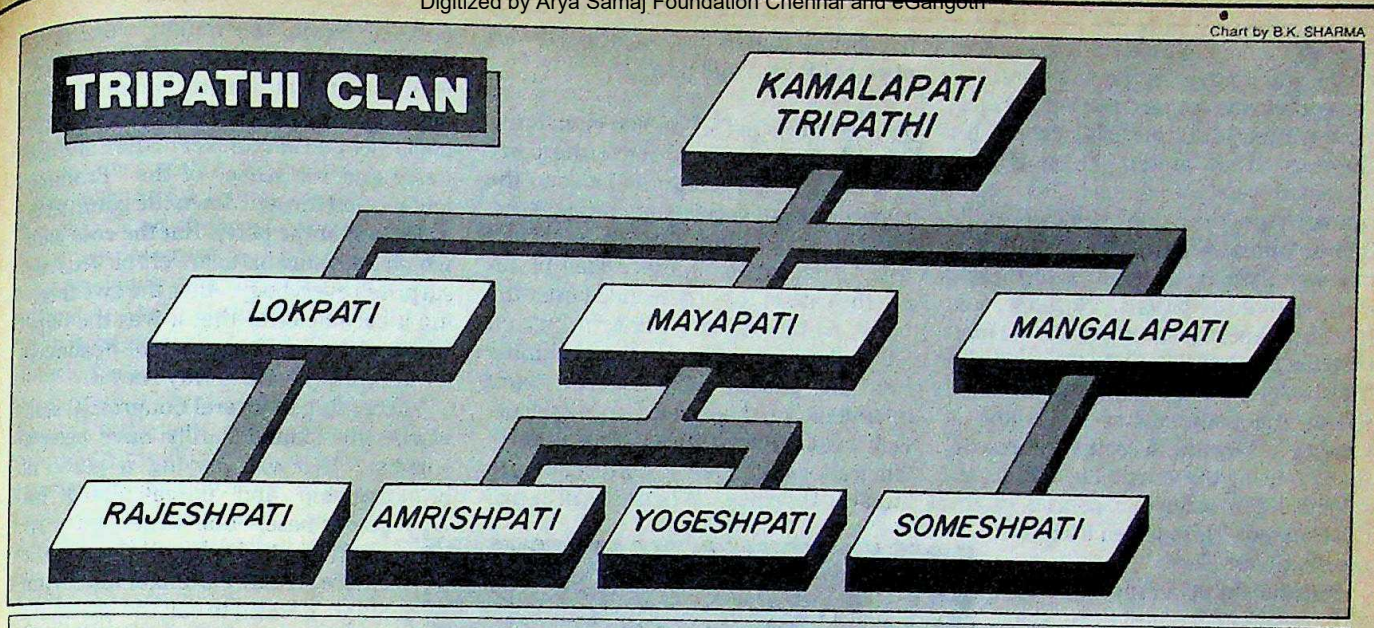
This Tantrik mantra is said to be a potent magical weapon employed by ardent Durga worshippers against their detractors. Last fortnight, it was invoked frequently by pundits for the well-being of Congress Working President Kamalapati Tripathi. The jaap was uttered to the counting of turmeric beads. The worshippers offered yellow flowers and a ghee-fed yellow flame surrounded by yellow rice to the goddess. The 83-year-old Brahmin politician from Varanasi had resorted to Tantric ritual often in the past in order to exorcise the demons of political or personal adversity. Last month, when Pranab Mukherjee was expelled from the party and Tripathi sensed he had a bigger fight on his hands than he had expected, Varanasi pundits travelled to 9, Janpath, Tripathi's Delhi home, with kamandals of Gangajal. But this time—as he prepared to face his biggest political crisis—censure or even expulsion by the AICC(I), the magic apparently failed him.

But there is little doubt that the rocket that Kamalapati Tripathi sent to Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi last month created shock-waves throughout Congress(I) circles. A Lok Sabha member from Uttar Pradesh, who read the text in his toilet, was so disturbed that he walked out of his bathroom forgetting to button his fly. Another Lok Sabha member who was holidaying in Pahalgam in Kashmir could not sleep because he spent the entire night discussing the implications of the letter with his wife. In Delhi, numerous groups of MP's and senior partymen huddled together in groups, speculating about the course of action Rajiv would choose to tame the rebellious Brahmin and tackle a situation which contained several ingredients that could cause the party to split. But Rajiv and his aides had done their homework well. Within 48 hours, an orchestrated campaign for Tripathi's ouster began with junior party functionaries demanding his expulsion from the party. It was Arjun Singh who set the ball rolling when he told newsmen that the leakage of the letter deserved action and that the high command had taken note of it.

A meeting of senior party functionaries, including Arjun Singh, V.P. Singh, P.V. Narasimha Rao and Arun Singh was held at the prime minister's residence where it was decided to summon the (CWC) to discuss the matter. This was the first time since Rajiv's election as prime minister that the cwc was being called to discuss just one subject. The strategy they decided upon was to humiliate the party's working president. With this in mind, the prime minister's office began sending out invitations for the crucial meeting on June 2 at 7, Race Course Road. Tripathi was kept on tenterhooks. He was invited for the meeting only at the last minute, following a private meeting with Rajiv. His sons, the ambitious Lokpati, 60, health minister in Uttar Pradesh, and the fiery Mayapati, 56, had advised caution. In the end, he offered an apology and was spared the ignominy of expulsion. In politics, the loser compromises. Panditji was clearly in retreat.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Kamalapati worked hard to promote interests of his family. Lokpati is UP health minister and his wife Chandra is an MP from Chandoli. Other sons are successful businessmen.

During the cwc session, Rajiv and Arjun Singh did not speak. But those who did blasted Tripathi for writing the letter. Sitaram Kesri, looking directly at him said that if the party tolerated challenge to the leadership "from any quarter, it will boomerang on us later on". Bhagwat Jha Azad urged "strong action" against dissidence. Rajiv picked Indira loyalists like Kerala Chief Minister K. Karunakaran to lead the attack in the form of a resolution which ridiculed those who "want to grab power in Indiraji's name". Despite unanimous condemnation however, Rajiv did not yield to pressure from senior partymen to expel him. During the meeting, members insisted that Tripathi withdraw his letter but the old man refused to do so. Said he: "I have written this letter myself and whatever I wrote in the letter has now been taken care of." When it became apparent that he would not withdraw it, he was made party to a resolution which, because it rebutted all the points in the letter amounted, in effect, to a humiliating self-condemnation. In his letter he had raised the question of Indira loyalists being side-lined, criticised Rajiv for his style of functioning and questioned the logic behind the Assam and Punjab accords. Referring to the use of Indira's name, the resolution said: "The cwc reminds the people that this is not for the first time when persons...have invoked the memory of a great figure in history to comouflage their selfish aims...The dramatis personae have changed but the

Tripathi's Charges

"Congressmen are puzzled and bewildered at the rapid disintegration of the party at all levels and shocked at the casual, ad hoc and inept handling of party matters by you and your so-called operators."

"My contention is that Congress is rapidly losing its contact with the masses and you are surrounded by a number of sycophants who were not only 'Indira-baiters', but most of them were 'Indira-haters.'"

"In handling some of the issues like problems in Punjab and Assam, you have shown impatience and your measures have not only been casual and ad hoc, but have aggravated the problems."

"This Government is primarily concerned with the welfare of the well-to-do sections of society. The pro-poor stance of your mother's policy is a story of the past."

CWC's Rebuttal

"Rajiv is carrying forward the task (of strengthening the party). The Working Committee notes that at this crucial juncture some individuals have chosen to raise baseless and diversionary issues."

"Disguised under the garb of loyalty to Indiraji, unabashed hankering for the accoutrements of power is writ large across the lengthy but confused chronicle of allegations against the leadership."

"The Punjab and Assam agreements reflected the desire of the people of India. The accords were universally welcomed as important steps towards the restoration of amity and trust."

"This Government has undertaken major incentives to accelerate growth and social justice. Anti-poverty programmes have been vastly strengthened."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

language and the motives are the language and motives of the wreckers."

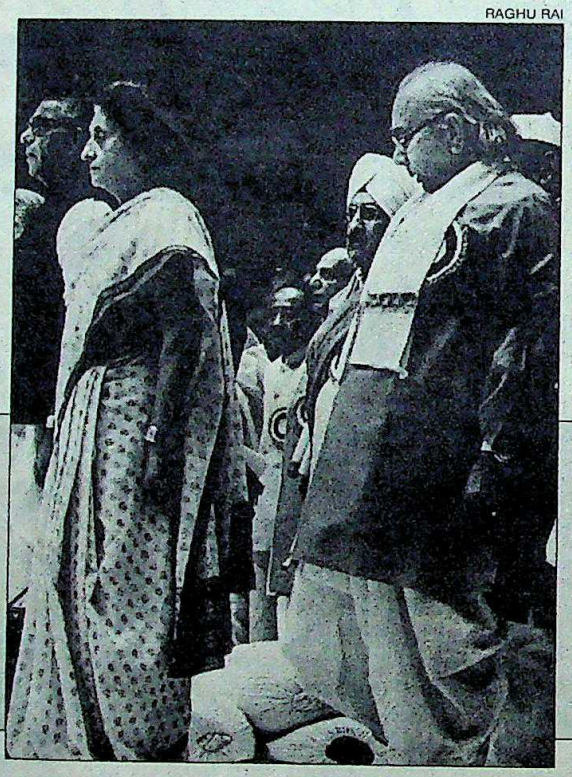
And the resolution delivered a critical blow to Tripathi and his side-kicks when it charged: "They protest too much and thereby reveal too much. Their main concern is not the vision of Indira Gandhi; their sole purpose is to make her hallowed memory their instrument of furthering their personal ambitions." Nothing could have been more insulting to the old man than the part which said that "some live in the shadowy past, oblivious of the rapid strides the country has made and is making". Tripathi accepted the resolution, ignoring the fact that he had earlier ridiculed the economic policies of the Government. He emerged from the meeting crestfallen.

But he put up a brave front before reporters, telling them that though he was satisfied by the proceedings, he would write again if the need arose. But for partymen, the writing was clearly on the wall. As Arjun Singh put it: "The Tripathi chapter is finally closed. It is clear that any attempt to create a separate centre of power will not be tolerated by the rank and file."

Tripathi survived by being purged. But it was clear that his following had evaporated. His house in Delhi, once a beehive of activity, is virtually deserted. Where hundreds used to flock to touch Panditji's feet every day, there are now only a handful of visitors. The only visible sign of activity at his house last fortnight was the pitter-patter of the feet of his grandchildren chit-chatting with aides manning telephones which rang rarely. As his following plummeted, his pooja hours soared from an hour a day to three hours. He receives visitors in a well-appointed living-room, looking like a wizened old bird. The face is remarkably free of wrinkles. But the voice is soft, shaky, and he strains to listen to questions. A large red round tilak adorns his forehead and his earlobes are coloured with vermillion powder. When he speaks it is obvious that he has lost little of the art of verbal thrust and parry.

Mrs Gandhi inducted Tripathi into the Congress Working Committee but she had an uneasy relationship with him...

"MY EFFORTS," he said in an interview, "were to make the party strong. I wrote the letter to the party president drawing attention to certain issues bothering the workers." When asked if he had sent another letter pleading the case of those suspended from the party, he responded: "I have not given journalists the right to cross-examine me." He praised Rajiv for his "pure intentions" and appealed to dissidents who are planning to hold a convention of "Indira loyalists" not to do anything to "weaken the party". When asked if he had written the letter at the behest of others, he shot back: "Am I such a fool? I have worked with Gandhiji, Nehruji, and Indiraji. I have been in politics for a long time and I know what is to be written."



RAGHU RAI

For more than 30 years, Tripathi had appeared to straddle the Congress like a colossus. He held important party and government posts like the PCC presidentship, was chief minister of Uttar Pradesh (1971-73) and Union minister (1973-1977; 1980). And, in the letter he wrote to Rajiv, he reminded him of his links with Gandhiji and Nehru and his mother, as well as his days as a freedom fighter. The tone of the letter was clearly that of a stern school headmaster chastising a novitiate student and hinting at dire consequences if the pupil failed to fall into line. In political terms, the nation was set to believe that the crunch had finally arrived—that Kamalapati, unchallenged doyen of the "old guard," self-styled guru, godfather and kingmaker of the Congress Party and the leader of the "Brahmin lobby", had thrown down the gauntlet in order to split the party. But the ease with which Rajiv and his followers picked it up surprised everybody. After the CWC meeting it became clear that it was the pupil who had the power to expel the headmaster and not the other way round.

According to several Congress(I) stalwarts, this should hardly have been a surprise. "He was playing a game of brinkmanship and miscalculated his power base," one senior party MP confided. And when Rajiv, on the advice of P. Shiv Shankar and Arjun Singh, decided to call the old man's bluff by expelling Mukherjee and suspending several others from the party and by convening an AICC(I) session to "discuss" his leaked letter, it became nakedly evident that the Emperor had no clothes.

"Seeing in this confrontation a fight between the old and new guard or between the Brahmin and Thakur lobby is nonsense, a creation of the press," one party official said. "It was clearly Kamalapati versus Rajiv. The old man felt his power—and that of his family—eroding, which he was hell bent to protect." He wanted to flex his muscle but he didn't want sudden death. Several of his partymen had written letters to the prime minister and to law enforcement agencies demanding inquiries into allegations of corruption and the misuse of his family's offices for personal gain. As one MP close to Rajiv put it: "There have been land ceiling violation charges against him and his family. He has enormous property holdings. He still needs the protection of the party." But Tripathi pooh-poohs these allegations as the handiwork of malcontents "whose dirty work I have not done. Neither Rajivji or Indiraji asked me to explain anything".

...She sacked him first as Uttar Pradesh chief minister and later as railways minister.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"But the advantage of being in power," said one Congress(I) Rajya Sabha member, "is that you can generally avoid investigations." Tripathi presides over a tripartite power base of politics and patronage. His son, Lokpati, as a minister, weilds power in Lucknow; Lokpati's wife, Chandra, 55, an MP from Chandoli, holds sway over Varanasi in her capacity as DCC(I) president; and Tripathi commands influence in Delhi. He likes to tell friends: "Main hoon siddhak, Lokpati hain sadhak aur Bahuji hain chatur sujan" (I am the wise one, Lokpati is the achiever, and Bahuji, Chandra, is the jack of all trades). And he has made it his life's work to protect and preserve this configuration of power. In Varanasi, his home base, friends and foes alike maintain that he has gained more from Congress than contributed to it. As a lawyer friend of the family put it: "Congress minus Tripathi equals Congress. But Tripathi minus Congress equals zero." The family, whose wealth is reputed to be in crores of rupees, owns apartment complexes, a circus exhibition ground, several businesses, including Jai industries and hundreds of acres of land in Mirzapur and Chakia. In Varanasi and its adjoining districts, no government official moves without the blessings of the Aurangabad darbar—Tripathi's family home. But this combination of political power and patronage was in distinct danger of unjelling. Lokpati had been passed over for chief ministership several times in Uttar Pradesh. Chandra remained only an MP, while Sheila Dixit, daughter-in-law of Uma Shanker Dixit, a veteran Congressman and rival, was made a minister of state. And finally, what hit home directly was Arjun Singh's being made vice-president of the party—a slight to Tripathi. During the AICC(I) session in Bombay where Rajiv vowed to drive the power brokers out of the party, Kamalapati felt ignored and unwanted. He had confided in a friend: "Pahle Congress ki sarkar hoti thi, ab hai sarkar ki Congress." (Earlier, it used to be the Congress Government, now it is the Government's Congress).

BUT THE power broker was not about to give up without at least one flex of his political muscle. And the timing seemed just about right. Rajiv's Government had bumbled its way into a price hike. The Punjab situation was getting messier. Communal conflagrations were flaring across the country. "The real purpose of the letter," said a minister who is close, both to Rajiv and the old guard, "was to show Rajiv as weak, indecisive, and unable to control his own party. It also served to test the right to dissent." It had also hoped to fire the imagination of partymen. For it is true that there has developed a sense of unease and malaise within the party—even among die-hard Rajiv loyalists, many of whom claim that Rajiv's style of governance has become faceless, mechanistic and has lost its sense of urgency.

The issues selected for inclusion in the letter touched upon several genuine grievances—electoral reverses, national disintegration and lack of cohesiveness and the presence of "turncoats" (former anti-Indira politicians) in positions of power. While several Congressmen agree on the turncoat issue—Rajiv's pampering of politicians like Margaret Alva(Congress(U), 1979), Arif Mohammad Khan (Janata, 1978), Amarjeet Kaur (Janata, 1978), K.C. Pant (Congress(S), 1977-79), who were abusive toward his mother or had hopped parties—they maintain that the other issues were often taken out of their historical context. "The declining electoral performance," said one MP "is really not pertinent. It refers to mid-term elections and municipal polls. But which party in power has ever won mid-term and municipal polls? The Opposition is always more successful." And, they were quick to point out that as far as bogus membership was concerned—one of the main issues raised in the Tripathi letter—there were more bogus members in Varanasi than anywhere else. In fact, a leading Congressman from Varanasi pointed out that Tripathi began to raise this issue only when he discovered that opposing factions within his own party had signed up more members in Chandoli—his pocket borough and Chandra's parliamentary constituency—than he had in order to pull weight during the upcoming organisational elections. "In the mirror of Chandoli," he said, "Panditji had a vision of India."

Tripathi was supposed to be the catalyst for the party split which never materialised. Rajiv's forces decided quickly to dispel the mirage of the Brahmin lobby. They calculated that A.P. Sharma (who incidentally is not a Brahmin though he is associated with the "lobby") was not as powerful in the trade union movement as he had once been. Sripat Mishra—like Pranab Mukherjee—had little or no following. Jagannath Mishra had a formidable power base but a bad image. "There is little doubt," said one of Rajiv's advisers, "that there was a conspiracy. We even heard there was talk of forming a new Congress which would be backed by V.C. Shukla, Gundu Rao, the Janata and even Bahuguna. We were not bothered about who was using whom. The main thing was to send a quick and effective message."

If Tripathi's base was proven untena-

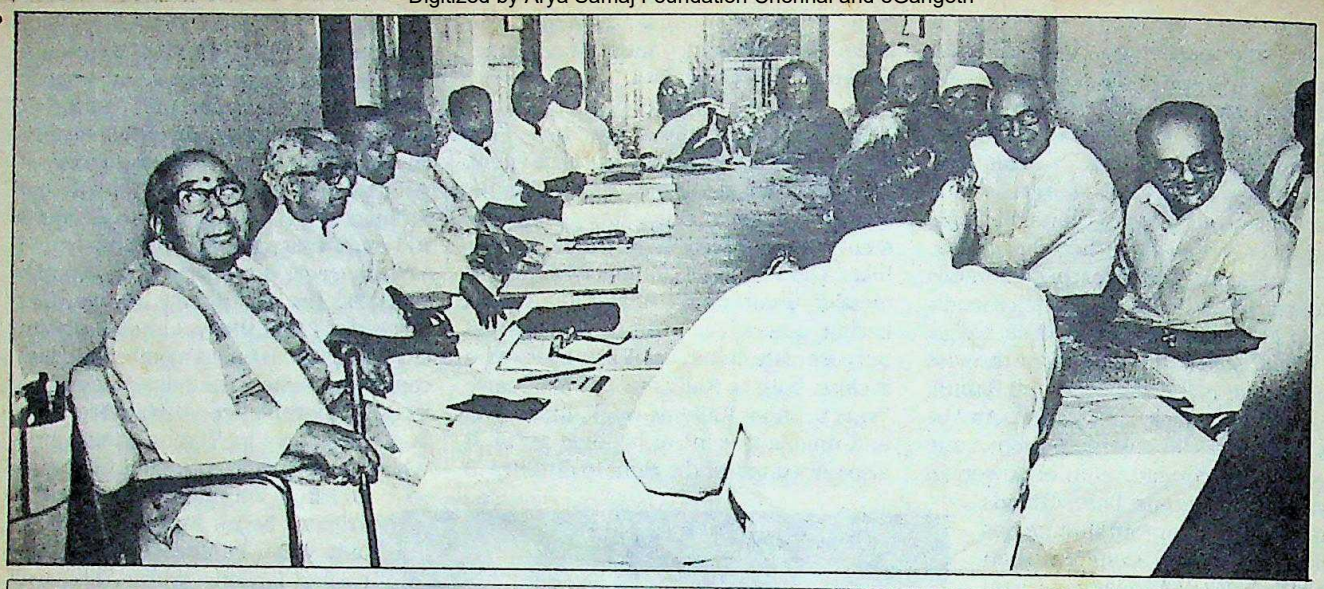
PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Tripathi was always nervous about Rajiv, who gave him little importance from the start...

...Cut to the quick, Tripathi responded by playing the Brahmin card, but did not receive the support he expected.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Tripathi was not invited to committee meetings, until the last minute. Here, behind closed doors, he was roundly humiliated.

ble within the so-called national Brahmin lobby, it is even more insecure in Varanasi and surrounding areas. Banarasis at all levels—paanwallas, Congress(I) workers, aging freedom fighters, lawyers—say that there could not be an image more false. A Sanskrit Vidyalaya teacher, Swami Keshavaracharaya, said: "There are 80,000 Brahmin families here. But we don't recognise Panditji as a leading Brahmin. He has done nothing for us." Says Satyen Basu, friend of Subhash Chandra Bose and Tagore and legendary freedom fighter: "The way he has played politics, he has disgraced Varanasi."

These sources point out that Tripathi, notwithstanding his much ballyhooed "loyalty" to Indira and the party, has played a duplicitous game throughout his career—in which he has used the Brahmin card as a facade. Following his humiliation at the CWC session, he was himself to admit during an interview: "What Brahmin lobby? It is a creation of the press. There is only a Congress lobby." But during the last MLA elections, even as he professed loyalty to the Congress(I), his supporters did not work for several Congress(I) candidates, particularly Dr Rajnikant Dutta, who was elected from Varanasi. And in the parliamentary elections his son, Mayapati, openly challenged Rajiv's aunt, Shiela Kaul.

Accounts of disloyalty—not loyalty—are legend in Tripathi's own backyard. In 1960, he deserted his Guru, Dr Sampurnanand and helped elect his rival C.B. Gupta as PCC president. When Gupta came into power, Tripathi said he would play the role of Bharat to Gupta's Rama. But later he was to desert Gupta and become a follower of Bahuguna.

MRS GANDHI first inducted him into the CWC in 1969 but, according to former MLC and AICC member Ishwar Saran Singh (Bhaiji) who was Tripathi's lieutenant for 25 years, he failed her during the first acid test of loyalty. In 1977, when Brahmananda Reddy and Y.B. Chavan were ousting Indira loyalists from Karnataka, Andhra, Tamil Nadu and Assam, she appealed to Tripathi to requisition an AICC meeting as a test of strength. He refused. But the following year, when the party convention was held and the Congress(I) formed, he pledged unswerving loyalty to Mrs Gandhi. In 1975, after Mrs Gandhi lost her election petition in the courts and a party meeting was called in Delhi, Tripathi and Chandra departed from Varanasi amidst the chanting of slogans: "Hindustan ka pyara hai, Kamalapati hamara hai" (Kamalapati is the beloved of the land) and "Aaj ki Chandra kal ki Indira" (Today's Chandra, Tomorrow's Indira).

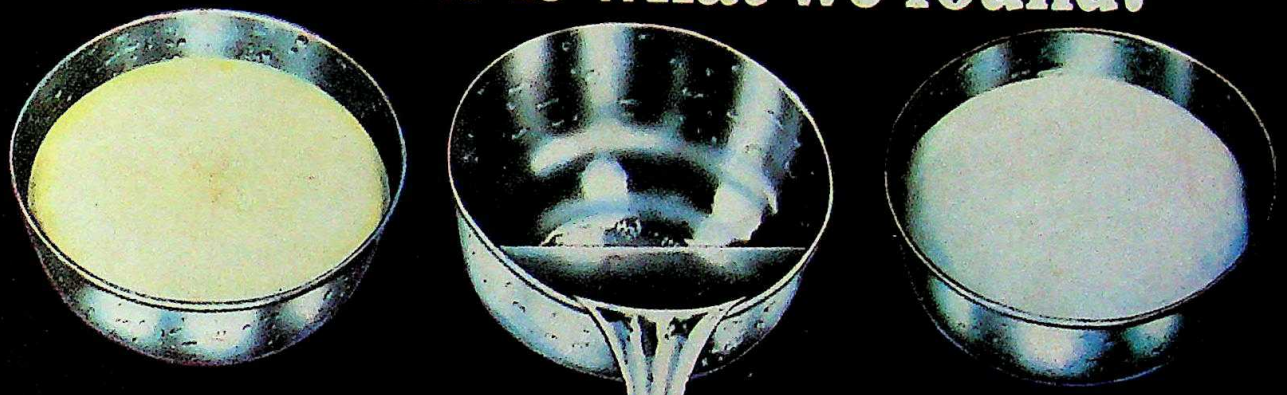
But Tripathi, who was sacked as railways minister by Mrs Gandhi for his ineptitude, remains only a Rajya Sabha member and Chandra, far from having metamorphosised into an other Indira, remains an MP, notwithstanding several efforts by her father-in-law to have her inducted into the Central cabinet. So too has Tripathi's lobbying to install Lokpati as Uttar Pradesh chief minister been a failure. According to family sources, Lokpati was the first to begin expressing nervousness when Pranab Mukherjee was expelled from the Congress(I). The family had not expected the high command to act with such swiftness. Originally, he had cautiously backed the rebel movement. But after the Mukherjee affair, he toured 42 districts in eastern Uttar Pradesh to test his grassroots strength. He had determined that a full-fledged rebellion would be unsuccessful and that the family would wind up losing its muscle. It was he who advised his father that the jig was up and so Kamalapati, who has jumped ship in the past quickly enough, began distancing himself from the rebels. His status now, said a relative, is like the sage Trishankhu. He has been left dangling in a sort of political limbo. And Rajiv, by not taking stronger action against him has emerged as merciful, respectful of older Congressmen, and willing to be tolerant in the interests of party unity. But Rajiv has made it clear that the sword is in his hands—he can either use it to cut off Kamalapati's roots by having Lokpati dismissed from the ministry and later denying Bahuji a ticket, or he can stay his hand in an act of Damoclean finesse.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The real facts behind the "zero-cholesterol" story...

We put SAFFOLA, corn oil and refined groundnut oil into a freezer for 4 hours. And this is what we found:



Corn oil froze.

Groundnut oil froze solid.

But SAFFOLA remained liquid. Even after 24 hours!

Why not try this test yourself?

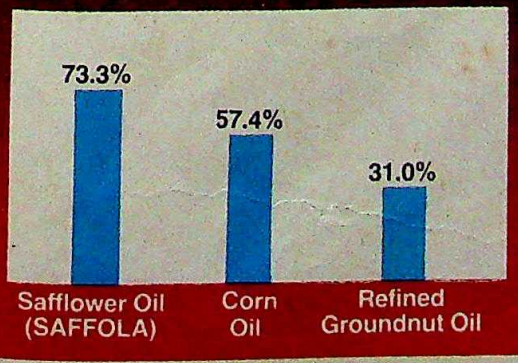
This clearly proves that of the three cooking mediums, SAFFOLA is highest in polyunsaturated fat – a substance that actually helps to lower cholesterol.

Yes, all vegetable oils are "zero-cholesterol". But only SAFFOLA, with the highest content of polyunsaturated fat actually brings down the cholesterol level in the blood. And that's what really counts!

Major research studies confirm that heart disease is directly linked to the level of cholesterol in the blood. "Lowering cholesterol levels markedly reduces the incidence of fatal heart attacks"

So when you cook, fry or bake with SAFFOLA, you're doing what's best for the whole family.

The cholesterol lowering factor (polyunsaturated fat) content in various oils.



Saffola

Good for your heart. Good for your health.

FSA/OIL/7/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The most famous little home computer in the world, is here!

Get ready to be amazed by the power of the most famous home computer in the world.

The Sinclair Spectrum.

The home computer that has conquered the world with its powerful capabilities — and easy-to-use features. The home computer that has established a standard in the industry and won millions of hearts, in homes all over the globe!

The most popular home computer on earth

The Sinclair ZX Spectrum and ZX Spectrum Plus are two clever little machines. You and your kids can work with them with great results. Education becomes fun for kids. Anything from doing Maths to learning English can be done — and enjoyed! What's more, with the Sinclair Spectrum's easy-to-use features, your kids will love to do their homework with the help of the computer, day after day!

The world's largest software library

The Sinclair Spectrum series is backed by a fantastic range of home computer software.

So you can choose from a great library of educational, entertainment — even business programs!

And, of course, there are hundreds of great games for the whole family!

Now available in India

The Sinclair Spectrum series is now available in India. You can buy the genuine Spectrum here, with the original warranty, and a wide range of Spectrum software — as well as reliable after-sales service.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

...undation Chennai and eGangotri

"As each day goes by, I begin to feel older, I want to shoot everyday. I feel that life is passing me by."
SABIA

"I like the Famous Five series and the Secret Seven, and of course Richie Rich."
SABIA
14-year-old actress

with the bottle or the affairs of Dev Anand, the venerable Dilip Kumar or Raj Kapoor with their heroines were mere whispers which only added to the mystique of these stars. Today some of the starlets embroider their private lives with titillating threads to satisfy the ever-curious film magazines. Often, they simulate affairs with their screen partners for the benefit of these magazines and in the larger interest of publicity. Kimi Katkar, the bare-almost-all Tarzan girl is romancing Sunjay Dutt in print; she is slated to appear with him in a few films. When we see her on the sets of a film with Govinda, there is hardly a word exchanged between the two: he remains ensconced with his friends in his make-up room and she downstairs with her mother. But the moment the photographers appear, the cooing and lovey-dovey vibes come on heavy.

Says Amit Khanna: "If Stardust had not come around, this mystique would have been dumped; peephole journalism has unnecessarily given a sheen to these stars. Imagine over 500 magazines and these young people even start believing that kind of shit."

Life, and work, for the fledgeling stars is certainly no bowl of cherries. The day starts at dawn and they are on the sets till late evening, bunny-hopping from one shift to another with little time for privacy or friends. Says Mandakini: "I don't go out with anybody. Just my family. I don't have time for friends." Most of them come from middle class backgrounds and live and commute from tiny bed-sitters in the suburbs of the city which reveal their one concession to their youth—cuddly teddy bears and comics. Their intellectual diet is limited to film magazines which they duly condemn but compulsively read, and comics. Mandakini says she used to read "classics like Harold Robbins and Sidney Sheldon". Most of them are also drop-outs from school. Mandakini left school in the tenth standard. Neelam quit school at the same level, and so did Khushboo. Sabia dropped out in the ninth standard and childhood also got dropped somewhere along the line between the nursery and the arc lights. She has a determined glint in her eyes when she insists that she wants to be a star ("I want to be like Sridevi"). She is already frustrated (her word) at 14: "I am 14 until the day I turn 15, not a day sooner... as each day goes by I begin to feel older. I want to shoot everyday. I feel that life is passing me by." Her only contact with her childhood are her toys and books: "I like the Famous Five series and Secret Seven, and of course Richie Rich," but the minute the photographer turns on the lights and begins to click, she is transformed into a sultry, seductive and voluptuous little Lolita.

Sixteen is no longer so sweet in tinseltown; the silver lining on the cotton candy clouds of the starry teenagers is indeed dark, with desperate producers looking for younger and younger faces, but mature bodies, each year. Says Rajeev Kapoor, Raj Kapoor's youngest son, who starred opposite Mandakini in Ram Teri Ganga Maili: "You shouldn't mistake youth for innocence. The girls mature very fast these days. They see so much of life." The young blood may fade out as fast as they have appeared on screen. For the moment, however, they have become an integral part of Bombay's film factory—the new princes and princesses of the silver screen and adolescent heirs to the Royal House of Illusion.

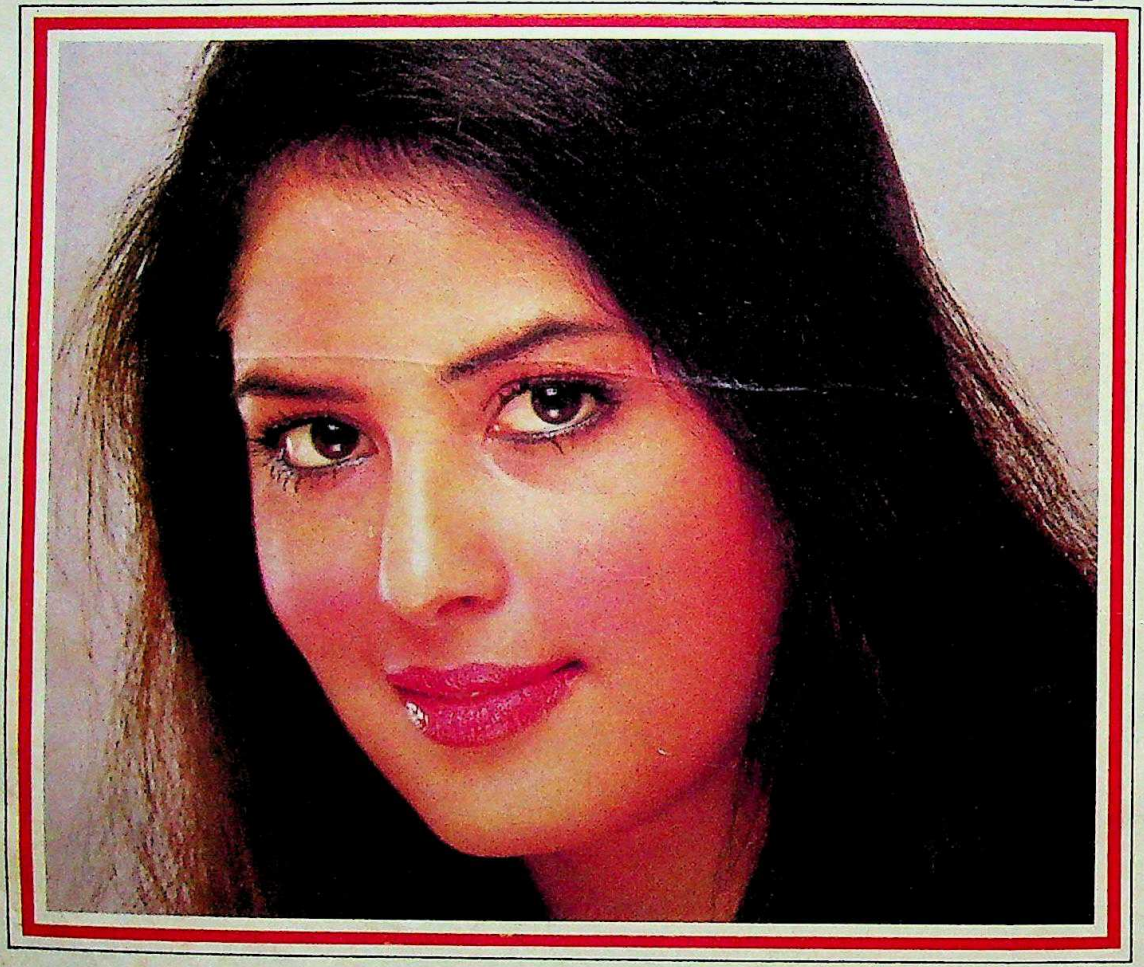
—MADHU JAIN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Tru-Tone From HELENE CURTIS
The Hair Dye you can trust

May you always look young!

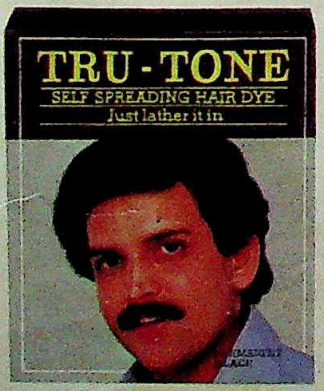


The Tru-Tone Hair Dye Range.

Choose the one that suits you best.

Tru-Tone Stick

Tru-Tone Regular and Tru-Tone for Men



Tru-Tone Self-spreading Liquid

Drip-proof Tru-Tone Gel

Tru-Tone Powder Hair Dye

For a free folder on hair dyeing, please write to J.K. Helene Curtis Ltd., Pokhran Road, Jekegram, Thane 400 606.

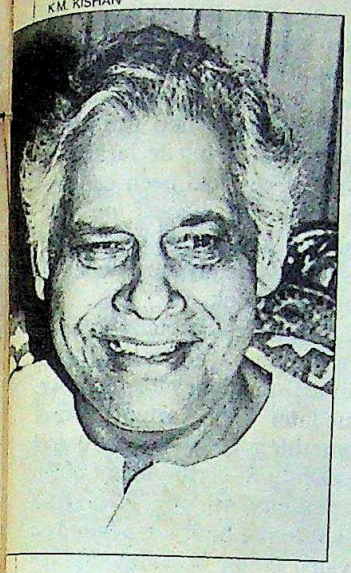
everest/85/JKHC/265

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cooler Climes

KM. KISHAN



Dubey: drawing the line

RUNNING a state like Bihar is no joke. And Bindeshwari Dubey, being the concerned chief minister that he is, has seen to it that those who run it—the ministers and bureaucrats—do so in cooler climes, or to be precise, air-conditioned climes. To facilitate the decision-making process, last fortnight the chief minister ordered that the offices of all ministers and secretary-rank officers should be provided with air-conditioners and those belonging to lesser ones be fitted with desert coolers. Not to leave anything to chance—or a power cut—the order also provided for a brand-new sub-station in the secretariat complex if need be. The cost of the whole exercise was estimated at Rs 1 crore, and the necessary funds were sanctioned forthwith. Said the government order: "The state Government is committed to creating a proper atmosphere and providing necessary facilities to its officers and employees for enhancing their efficiency." When it comes to providing facilities, the Bihar Government certainly knows where to draw the line.

Correspondence Course

IF KARNATAKA Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde has an air of the intellectual around him, it is not without reason. The chief minister is a veritable man of letters, though the letters in his case happen to be more of the mailbag variety. Ever since he came to power the first time, Hegde has kept up a steady correspondence with anybody and everybody—from party MLA's to the prime minister himself—with the subjects ranging from the state's small-scale industry to the absence of any statue of Mahatma Gandhi at North Block-South Block. The average rate of correspondence works out to three letters to the prime minister and some dozen others to sundry ministers and others every month. In the last five months alone, Hegde is said to have written 38 letters to Rajiv Gandhi, 14 of them dictated from the hospital where he was recovering from a slipped disc. "If they were letter bombs," a bureaucrat remarked, "the South Block would have exploded several times over." But for all the response that Hegde has got, the bombs could well have been duds.

BHAWAN SINGH

Hegde: man of letters

Thirsty Protest

WHEN the five-year term of Pallemalli Maheshwar, the popular gram sarpanch of Nacharam—a northern Hyderabad suburb—came to an end last fortnight, he stepped down with a strong sense of resignation. The leader had failed to keep his promise of providing drinking water to his 35,000-odd constituents, despite his sincere efforts to push chase a water supply scheme sanctioned way back in 1979. But he need not have despaired. For, not long after this, the suburbanites launched a spirited campaign for clean air and water. And Maheshwar was their natural leader. This time round, the leader decided to change tactics. To begin with, he 'impounded' a government water tanker and refused to return it until the piped supply came, threatening violence if pressurised. Intimidated, the authorities let him keep the tanker. And a triumphant Maheshwar gloated: "I have never received such support; and it will not go waste. The Government can no longer remain indifferent. If only I got this support three-four years ago." As they say, it is better late than never.

Civic Ploy

WEST Bengal's Marxist rulers are known to come up with ingenious schemes from time to time, though the means and the ends of these scheme may not always be for, of or by the people. The latest is a scheme to privatise all civic facilities in Calcutta. Last fortnight, the Marxist-controlled Calcutta Municipal Corporation (CMC) announced a scheme offering 11 major municipal markets and three public parks for redevelopment and maintenance to bidders for a 60-year period, during which they would be free to convert them into multi-storied commercial complexes. The idea, according to the CMC tender document, is to "augment and improve amenities and facilities to citizens" while simultaneously opening "avenues for private participation in civic services." There is one snag though: no formal proposal to this effect has been approved either by the Cabinet or the CMC. Since, in the absence of formal sanction, court cases could easily jeopardise investments in this scheme, developers are chary of jumping into something that might later turn out to be no-man's-land.

KALYAN CHAKRABORTY

Lake Market: commercial complex or no man's land

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BHOPAL

Real Life Drama

TRAGICALLY, it was the only show put up by renowned theatre personality, B.V. Karanth, that the city of Bhopal lapped up. As head of Bharat Bhavan, the high-profile government-sponsored centre for the arts, Karanth was considered too avant garde and too intellectual for the small-town audience. Till he played the lead role in a tragic real life drama that has rocked the city and sent shockwaves through the country's artistic circles. The bearded Karanth today sits brooding in a prison cell, charged with the attempted murder of his colleague and alleged mistress, stage actress Vibha Misra.

The actress is in a hospital bed, hovering between life and death, her attractive face and body hideously disfigured by third degree burns. The contradictory statements and confessions made by the key players in the tragedy have succeeded in distorting the details. But residents of Professor's Colony, where both Karanth and Vibha lived, were accustomed to the two visiting each other at all hours. Thus, nobody clearly remembers seeing Karanth arrive at Vibha's one-bedroom house on the morning of May 24.

Vibha's landlady, A.H. Qutbi, says she visited her around 11.15 a.m. and found her alone. But a maidservant, Ameena Bee, told the police later that she saw a bearded man arrive at about 9.30 a.m. and that she overheard Vibha and Karanth quarrel heatedly for over an hour and at one point, she heard Vibha shout: "You swine, you've burnt me."

Another neighbour has also said that he heard muffled screams but did not bother to check because he presumed Vibha and her colleagues were rehearsing. But the commotion was loud enough for Farooq Qutbi, the landlady's son, to investigate. He knocked at the door and after a gap of 10 minutes, Karanth opened the door. He was in a dishevelled state and his eyes were blood-shot. "He looked frightened and behind him we could see Vibha who appeared badly burnt," says Sita, another neighbour who arrived on the scene. Mrs Qutbi also says she saw Karanth standing dazedly in the bedroom doorway with burn-marks on his hands: "I could smell kerosene and asked him where it was coming from. He said the stove had burst but the smell was coming from the bedroom. I checked in the kitchen and I saw the stove in one corner. It was dusty and unused. In any case, the cooking was done on gas and there were two full cylinders lying there."

Vibha was rushed to hospital in a critical condition and when the police asked her to make a "dying declaration", she claimed that she had been cooking and accidentally set herself on fire. Karanth made a similar statement and added that she was already burnt when he came to borrow a book.

At first, the police accepted the story. Karanth was a national figure and highly respected in artistic circles for his work. But later they started to smell something fishy. Says Bhopal Assistant Superintendent of Police Alok Tandon: "When we went to the house, we found no evidence of burning in the kitchen but there were several signs of it in the bedroom. The clothes she had been wearing smelt of kerosene." What added to their suspicions was the fact that neighbours had heard sounds of a quarrel and the fact that Karanth had taken unusually long to open the door.

R.C. SAHU

The tragic scandal involving Karanth has rocked the city and sent shockwaves through the country's artistic circles.

Further investigation unearthed a series of letters the two had exchanged, which indicated that their relationship had become strained. In one letter, Vibha had accused Karanth of "spoiling many young flowers and forcing many abortions". The police, after interrogating Karanth, arrested him the next day. The drama heightened that same night when Karanth, in a sensational late-night confession, admitted that he had lost his temper and set Vibha on fire because she had called him impotent and threatened to leave the repertory company of Bharat Bhavan. Karanth admitted to throwing some kerosene, taken from the kitchen, on Vibha's back and then setting her alight. He said he then panicked and in trying to save her, burnt his hands.

The confession was puzzling. For one, the only portion of Vibha's body that is not burnt is her back. For another, why did Karanth confess if, as his supporters say, he was not capable of murder? A signed statement issued by leading artistes has claimed that Karanth was bullied into confessing in the presence of the press with a view to "sensationalising the case". Said Karanth's friend, actor and playwright Girish Karnad who visited Bhopal after the incident: "The role of the press and the police has been to show Karanth as guilty even before the case has gone to court. Karanth is a simple man who was under great strain after the incident and after he was wrongly told that Vibha had accused him of setting fire to her, he made that statement to the police." Karnad added that the press was led in to listen to the confession while Karanth's wife Prema waited outside, having been refused permission to see her husband. Artist J. Swaminathan, who heads the art section of Bharat Bhavan, also feels that police harassment got too much so that Karanth lost patience and admitted to the crime.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Among those who know Karanth, there is almost unanimous agreement that he is incapable of the crime. Clearly, he is a man of fiery artistic temperament, brilliant, creative and dedicated to the theatre. But even those who respect him admit that he had his weaknessess.

Wife Prema, herself an award-winning film director, admits that he had started drinking heavily in the recent past. "I used to sometimes joke about it and say that perhaps it would be a good thing for him to spend a month in jail so that he could kick the habit. Little did I imagine what would happen. But it is simply not true that he was drunk on the morning of the incident," she says. Prema also discounts the possibility that Karanth was having an extra-marital affair with Vibha but adds that even if he was, it would not have affected her relationship with her husband. They have been married for 28 years and have no children because, as she says: "We both felt this would be the only way we could dedicate our lives to our work."

Vibha in The Three Sisters; and entering Safdarjung Hospital

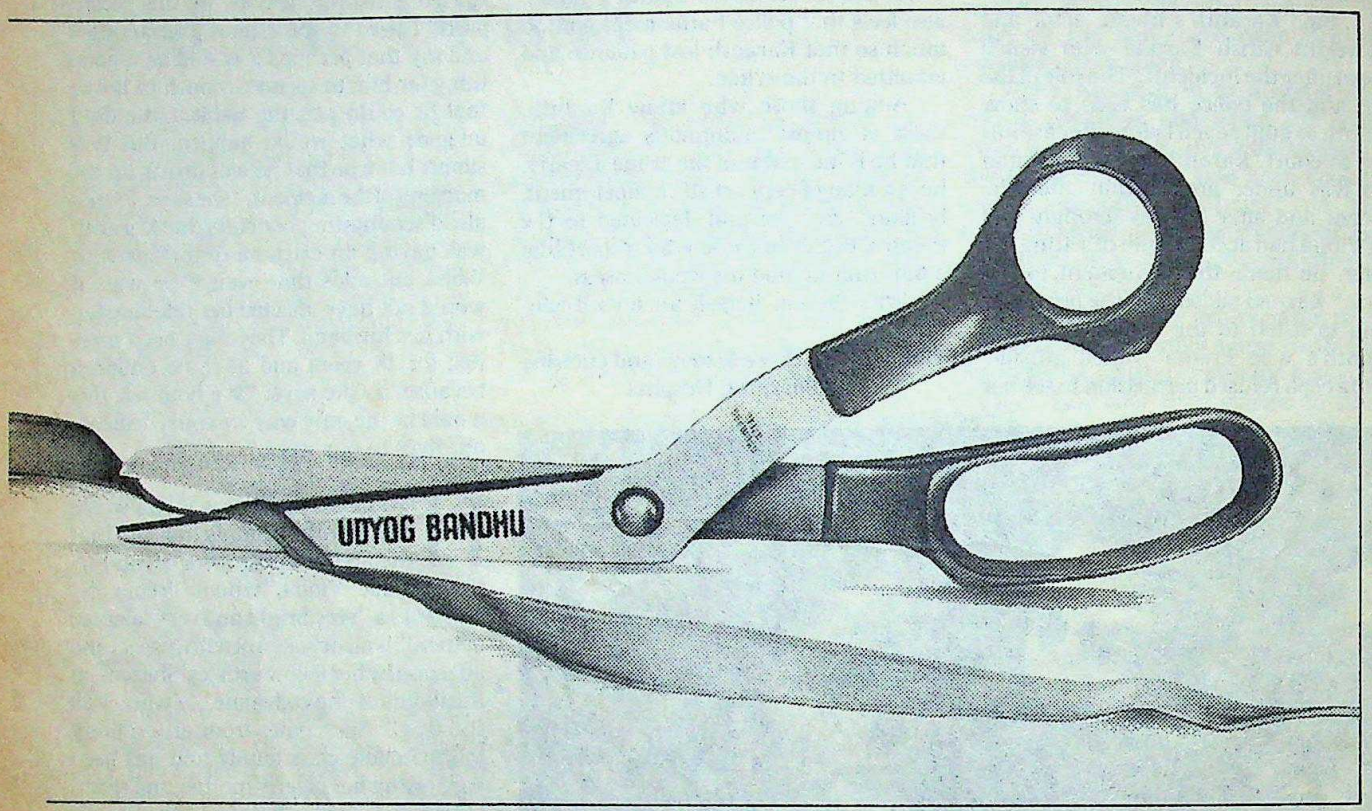
HOWEVER, the letters Vibha wrote to Karanth certainly indicate that their relationship went beyond artistic limits. Vibha, whom Prema describes as a "very bright and very talented actress", is also spoken of with respect and affection by her fellow artistes. She was, in the words of one colleague, "a winner all the way". She comes from an ordinary lower middle class family and has been supporting her elderly mother and sister. Mrs Qutbi describes her as a "very nice girl but she also seemed quite naive. When I went to see her in hospital, Girish Karnad and Anant Nag were there and she said: 'Look Aunty, they have left their shooting to come and see me.' I wanted to tell her that they had come to save Karanth but I didn't want to upset her". Doctors treating her at Delhi's Safdarjung Hospital, where she was moved in a state government aircraft, are astonished at her almost superhuman determination to live despite over 75 per cent burns.

That, of course, only adds one more odd piece to the jigsaw puzzle. If Karanth is described as the sort of man who would not commit murder, Vibha hardly seems the kind of person who would try and kill herself either. But in the eyes of a lot of local residents, the episode has confirmed what conservative Bhopal has always believed—that Bharat Bhavan is a modern-day Sodom and Gomorrah with the Karanth-Vibha affair indicative of what they describe as the "dung culture" of the centre. Petitions have been fired off to the chief minister by outraged citizens demanding its closure. And there has been criticism of Vibha's removal to New Delhi when the Madhya Pradesh police were still trying to question her.

Unfortunately, the local press has played up to the mood of the city by linking a personal tragedy with the Bhavan,

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



How to run to the finishing line without running into red tape

Often, when the entrepreneur sets out with his sight on the finishing line, he gets entangled in red tape.

Layers and layers of unending procedures.

Irritating delays that bring work to a grinding halt.

Udyog Bandhu is the answer to entrepreneurs' every problem.

Udyog Bandhu is a unique two tier body consisting of

(a) A Bureau—to provide guidance, information and liaison services to the medium and large industries.

(b) A High power committee—consisting of secretaries of various departments such as industries, Forest, Revenue, Excise, Sales Tax, Chairman Electricity Board etc. to monitor clearance and sanctions for new projects.

Udyog Bandhu cuts the red tape. To get the entrepreneur to the finishing line.

UDYOG BANDHU

Make use of our connections

UDYOG BANDHU
Chandra Bhanu Gupta Smarak Nav Chetna Kendra,
10, Ashok Marg, Lucknow-226 001
Phones : 31395 , 34615 Cable : PICUP Telex : 0535-274

Shems/UB/19

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

which is portrayed as a den of iniquity. One newspaper featured a cartoon which showed Karanth drinking Vat 69 with the devil's horns on his head and a knife and a can of kerosene by his side. The backdrop has three pictures under the caption 'Bharat Bhavan today'. One, titled 'art', shows a naked woman. 'Literature' shows a man reading pornography, while 'culture' features a couple making love. The people and press of Bhopal have already pronounced judgement.

But the Karanth affair is hardly likely to be confined to Bhopal or Bharat Bhavan. Already, opportunistic politicians have leaped into the fray in awareness of the fact that one of the founders and life trustees of the institution is Arjun Singh, Congress(I) vice-president. Meanwhile, leading personalities in the field of the performing arts like Karnad, Shyam Benegal, Rohini Hattangady and others have issued signed statements defending Karanth and Bharat Bhavan, indicating that the Karanth case is destined to become a major cause celebre that will extend far beyond the bounds of what appears to be a crime passionnel.

—TAVLEEN SINGH

BHARAT BHAVAN

Storm's Eye

BHARAT Bhavan, the eye of the storm unleashed by the B.V. Karanth-Vibha Mishra affair, has for long been the centre of controversy and criticism. So it was not very surprising that the Vibha-Karanth scandal threw up protest rallies and dharnas. Within hours of the incident, groups of women, theatre artistes and various other social and cultural organisations were up in arms demanding the Bhavan's reorganisation, even its closure.

One of the most prestigious arts complexes of the country, Bharat Bhavan is the brainchild of Indira Gandhi. In 1972, Mrs Gandhi proposed cultural set-ups in state capitals. Arjun Singh, then education minister of Madhya Pradesh, took up the proposal but had to shelve the plan when the Centre could not spare money for the project.

It was only when Arjun Singh became chief minister in 1980 that things began moving, and Bharat Bhavan was inaugurated by Mrs Gandhi in February, 1982. The state Government footed the Rs 2 crore bill for the building and sanctioned Rs 1 crore as initial capital. The Centre pooled in an equal amount and the state Government has been giving Rs 18 lakh every year and maintaining its building.

Today the Bhavan boasts of a repertory company famous for its productions, a collection of tribal art that is one of the best in the land and a museum and libraries that have enviable catalogues. It also has a well-equipped ceramic workshop, a library of folk music and a printing workshop. But the Bhavan also has more than its share of critics, who say its plays showed to audiences that were smaller than the cast.

Among the Bhavan's 10 trustees are Pupul Jayakar, Krishen Khanna, Habib Tanveer, Kumar Gandharva, Mani Kaul, Yamini Krishnamurti and Karanth, who resigned 'orally' after the scandal. Arjun Singh (who is also the chairman of the trust), Ashok Vajpeyi and J. Swaminathan are life trustees. Once again, there has been criticism of a politician (Arjun Singh) and a state bureaucrat who helped set up the project (Vajpeyi) becoming life trustees when the Bhavan has been set up with public funds. But Arjun Singh argued that "any trust is entitled to have its own trustees, no matter where the money comes from."

Inside the Bhavan: troubled times

BHAWAN SINGH

Bharat Bhavan has come under attack in the wake of the Karanth case.

The Bhavan has all along been accused of being an elitist island run by a clique of people who did little apart from promoting one another. Soon after the Vibha-Karanth incident, General Secretary of the state Janata Party unit Savita Bajpeyi was demanding a judicial inquiry into the functioning of the Bhavan, which she said had become "a den of debauchery for certain politicians and senior IAS officials." This was followed by protest marches and representations by the Self Employed Women's Association, the Janvadi Lekhak Sangh and various other groups demanding an inquiry into the Bhavan's affairs and urging its takeover by the state Government.

Vajpeyi felt that the criticism came mainly from those who believed that excellence was wrong because it was an insult to mediocrity. And if the institution was exclusive and elitist, according to him it was only right since "the best of art anywhere in the world is always elitist".

On the other hand, there were also those who have deplored the deliberate linking of the scandal to the affairs of the institutions. Reacting to the demand that the Bhavan should either be reorganised or completely dissolved, Arjun Singh says he will staunchly resist any such move. "I have a right to," he says. "I have been personally involved in the creation of this institute." Before the fortnight was through, the Government decided to order an inquiry by trustee Pupul Jayakar into the Bhavan's affairs. With Arjun Singh vowing to hold his ground, Bharat Bhavan seemed all set to slide deeper into controversy.

—TAVLEEN SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DELHI'S INITIATIVE

Electricity From Domestic Waste

- Delhi Administration with the assistance of the Department of Non-Conventional Energy Sources, Govt. of India is the first in the country to take the initiative to extract combustible gas and eventually generate electricity from a sanitary landfill at Timarpur. Landfills are used for disposing of municipal solid wastes.

- The process is simple. Using perforated pipes, a well is bored into a sanitary landfill and then a vacuum created at its bottom. The vacuum sucks the gas which is then fed into a nearby generator through pipes for producing electricity.

- Eight such wells have already been bored 200 feet apart from each other. One well is adequate for one acre of landfill to produce 100 kilowatts of electricity and thus ten acres can produce 1000 kilowatts (one Megawatt) of electricity. The Timarpur landfill is spread over about 80 acres and so has the potential to produce 8 Megawatts of electricity.

- The cost per well is approximately Rs 10 lakhs which includes installation of generators, compressor pumps and pipes.

- The cost of electricity so produced has been worked out to be just 10 Paise per unit as compared to about 60 Paise per unit through the conventional methods of power generation.

- At present there are about 50 landfills in use by different agencies like the MCD, DDA, NDMC and the Cantonment Board in Delhi. About 8000 tonnes of garbage is generated per day in the Union Territory of Delhi. This quantity is likely to double by the turn of the century.

- The gas is formed through bacterial action on garbage through fermentation process. This process is common in nature.

- The peak consumption of electricity in Delhi is 850 Megawatts per day and it is increasing at a rate of 15 per cent per annum.

- If the entire refuse of Delhi is systematically taken to the landfills, Delhi will have the potential to produce about 60 Megawatts of electricity a day which will be equal to about 8 per cent of the total peak demand. This per day generation can be further increased by 16 Megawatts annually. Electricity so produced can be fed into DESU's grid for distribution to consumers.

- A single landfill is sufficient for generating electricity for a minimum period of 10 years. After this the refuse can be taken out of the landfill and used as valuable manure. The emptied landfills can be refilled with urban waste and this cycle can continue indefinitely.

- At present the gas formed in the landfills is diffusing into the atmosphere and is polluting the environment. This new project would serve a dual purpose; help check pollution and keep the environment cleaner and also, to an extent, meet the growing electricity demand of the Capital.

If you have any ideas for augmenting the production of electricity through some other means, please write to

JAG PARVESH CHANDRA
Chief Executive Councillor
Old Secretariat, Delhi-110054

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DOLLAR BAITING

BUSINESSMEN have responded quickly to the finance minister's announcement of amendments to the Foreign Exchange Regulations Act (FERA) and the promise of a deal under which money stashed away abroad illegally can be brought back without the Government asking too many questions. The Finance Ministry estimates that as much as Rs 30,000 crore may have been kept abroad by resident Indians, and that even if a small part of this comes back to the country it will help relieve pressure on the country's foreign exchange reserves. Enthusiastic businessmen point out that Pakistan has tried a similar scheme and got Rs 600 crore in foreign exchange, while a scheme in China saw a million bank accounts being opened. If the estimates are correct, resident Indians have more dollars abroad than non-resident Indians.

EYEING ELECTRONICS

THE JK group is eyeing the lucrative electronics market once more. Although an earlier sortie into electronics was not successful (JK TV wound up soon after an initial splash), a JK team has gone to Japan to identify collaborators and possible items of manufacture. For JK Synthetics, this will be the second recent diversification from its existing lines of business, which are synthetic yarn and cement. It has already applied for Monopolies Restrictive Trade Practicies clearance to set up a 12,000-tonne white cement plant in Rajasthan. Production capacities at the cement unit are now being expanded by nearly 60 per cent.

VACANT SEGMENT

AFTER THE recent boom in toilet soap, with a host of new brands being introduced to capture the captive market, it now seems to be the turn of toothpaste. Ponds India has decided to diversify and enter the toothpaste market and is carrying out market surveys to identify a vacant segment in an area which is already very crowded, the effort being to get a fix on what would be the right image for its proposed product, and one that is distinct from the existing brands. Ponds has only recently moved out of its traditional lines of cosmetics and toiletries—creams, talcum powder and shampoo—and introduced three kinds of toilet soap (including herbal and sandal), and the company is clearly looking for new avenues for growth.

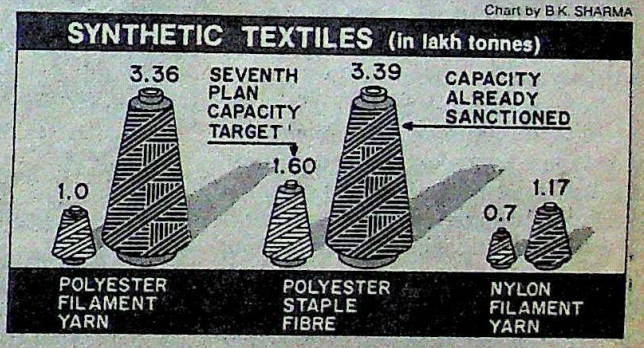
NEW VENTURE

STATE Bank of India plans to set up a new subsidiary, to be called State Bank of India Capital Markets, which will undertake a variety of activities including leasing, and merchant banking functions like the promotion of share issues and investment portfolio management for non-resident Indians. The venture, with an authorised capital of Rs 50 crore and an initial paid up capital of Rs 20 crore, will also handle some international banking functions and perhaps play a role in handling specific work relating to sick medium and small-scale companies. The new venture it is hoped should be off to a flying start because the State Bank of India already handles a quarter of the new lines floated in the capital market, and has a substantial chunk of the international business done by public sector companies. The subsidiary operation is expected to have greater flexibility because of its smaller size.

NEW FAVOURITE

THE SYNTHETIC textile industry has become a new favourite for companies seeking opportunities for growth. No fewer than 20 companies have already sanctioned capacities totalling 1.17 lakh tonnes of nylon filament yarn, against the seventh plan capacity target of 0.7

Chart by B.K. SHARMA



lakh tonnes. The sanctioned capacity for polyester filament yarn is 3.36 lakh tonnes, divided among 30 companies (seventh plan target: 1 lakh tonnes), while the rush for polyester staple fibre has resulted in 13 companies getting a sanctioned capacity of 3.39 lakh tonnes (seventh plan target: 1.6 lakh tonnes). In addition, existing manufacturers can expand because of a new stipulation regarding minimum economic capacities. This takes the potential capacity in all three sectors combined to 11.2 lakh tonnes, against the plan target of 3.3 lakh tonnes. Either the plan projections were hopeless underestimates or a good number of the sanctioned projects may never see the light of day.

CITROEN BID

ESCORTS has submitted a fresh proposal to the Government in its bid to get clearance to manufacture passenger cars. It has given a revised proposal for making a small Citroen car and also promises to reduce foreign exchange expenditure by achieving 60 per cent indigenous content in the first year and 80 per cent in the second. It also proposes a lower investment cost. The company's earlier proposal had run into problems with the Government, which decided that broadbanding did not permit a tractor company to manufacture cars. Escorts has now argued that its car manufacturing policy conforms to the spirit (if not the letter) of the broadbanding policy, and that there are significant complementarities in manufacturing cars and tractors, far more than in the case of cars and trucks.

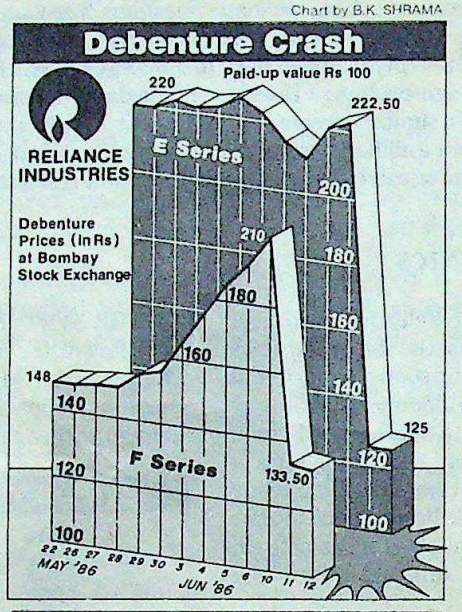
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RELIANCE INDUSTRIES

Embattled Giant

Chart by B.K. SHRAMA



JUNE 11 is a day that the investors in Reliance Industries will never forget. After weeks of buoyant trading, when the prices of the trail-blazing company's shares and debentures had scaled dizzy heights, this was the day of the big crash. And 1.5 million Reliance investors lost anything up to Rs 300 crore in a few hours of frenetic selling that followed a surprise government decision—a decision which rocked the company on its heels, sent shock-waves through the stock market, and brought the prices of two series of Reliance debentures tumbling from Rs 222.50 to Rs 125 in one case, and from Rs 210 to Rs 134 in the other. The company's shares accompanied the debentures for a part of the way down, dropping from Rs 389.50 to Rs 367.

Nothing of the kind had ever happened to the controversial company before. Worse, for the first time in its history, the Government had handed Reliance a public slap in the face, stopped its directors in their tracks just when they were about to take a major decision on converting the debentures into shares, and raised the inevitable questions about whether more steps were in the offing that would slow down the Rs 700-crore company's phenomenal climb up the growth charts. The even bigger question loomed large: had a company constantly accused of bending the Government to its will finally lost favour in New Delhi?

1.5 million Reliance investors lost Rs 300 crore in a few hours of frenetic trading.

The attacks came from other quarters too. For weeks the Indian Express chain of newspapers had been carrying on a relentless, hard-hitting campaign to expose what it saw as Reliance's misdeeds, a shareholder had filed a potentially troublesome case in the Delhi High Court, and the Reserve Bank of India (RBI) was investigating charges in the Express that, in violation of RBI guidelines, the company management had used the funds of 17 banks to buy Reliance debentures in 1984 and 1985. For good measure, officials from the Enforcement Directorate had gone to London to dig into the true ownership of companies that had bought Rs 22.5 crore worth of Reliance stock in 1982.

Even at the best of times, this would have been a handful. But Reliance was now particularly vulnerable because its founder chairman and industrial wizard, Dhirubhai Ambani, had been incapacitated for three months by a stroke that forced him to spend more than two months recuperating in San Diego, in faraway California. Ambani had only just returned home, almost fully recovered and—contrary to reports—his mind as razor-sharp as ever. And the Reliance board had decided to meet in order to clear the decks for a fresh burst of expansion.

The attacks on Reliance came at a particularly vulnerable time because Chairman Dhirubhai Ambani had been incapacitated for three months by a stroke.

The board was meeting to consider buying back Reliance debentures from investors, and offering Reliance shares in return. Also, since debentures are accounted for as borrowed money, this would at one stroke wipe out most of the company's debt (Rs 323 crore) while increasing the share capital. Since companies can usually borrow up to twice the total of their share capital and reserves, this would enable Reliance to go into the market and borrow another Rs 1,000 crore: money required to finance a clutch of petrochemical and electronics projects for which government clearances had come in. A great deal hinged on the decision to be taken at the board meeting.

There was one hitch. Some debentures can be partly converted into shares, and others can't. One set of Reliance debentures had already been partially converted into shares, and the rest were non-convertible. The second series was wholly non-convertible. So the board's decision to convert both into shares would require the ratification of the shareholders, and the Government's approval.

Once in the past, Reliance had managed to get similar government permission to convert its first four sets of debentures into shares. That was the first time such permission had been given, and remains one of only two such cases ever approved by the Government. Because of this past record, the stock markets assumed that Reliance would pull the trick off once again; so the debenture prices climbed steadily up the graphs in anticipation of the good news—in one case from Rs 149 on May 28 to Rs 210 on June 9.

This time, however, it was going to be different. On the night of June 10, Finance Minister V.P.Singh sat in his North Block office in New Delhi and decided that the Government would not allow any more non-convertible debentures to be converted into shares, a decision that he says he took to "curb unhealthy speculation"

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

in debentures. Within the hour, the news was on the agency wires to newspaper offices, and government officers telephoned Doordarshan with instructions to carry the item on the 9.30 news—unusual for a TV network that almost never carries hard-core financial reports.

Anil Ambani, Dhirubhai's younger son, was right then at Delhi airport, waiting for a delayed flight to take him back to Bombay in time for the crucial board meeting the next day. Anil did not hear of V.P. Singh's decision till he reached Bombay; the next morning the headlines screamed out the disastrous news, and the board finally met only to defer its decision on the subject, "pending clarifications" from the Government.

THE ONLY clarification that was really required was whether the Express campaign and ceaseless lobbying by Reliance's rivals had influenced the Government's thinking. Four weeks before V.P.Singh's decision, the Express had revealed on its front page that several companies linked to the Reliance management had borrowed money from banks at 18 per cent interest in order to buy debentures that earned only 13.5 per cent interest in one case and 15 per cent in the other. There was only one way in which this peculiar transaction could make sense: if the Reliance management intended to convert the debentures into the company's over-priced shares at some stage. The Express warned that this was precisely what the Ambanis had in mind. Forewarned, the Government decided to act.

But there seemed more to the line-up against Reliance than just the Indian Express. A week before V.P. Singh's decision, when expectations of the debentures getting converted were building up, a close friend of Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi had forecast to INDIA TODAY that "those debentures will never be allowed to be converted into shares." This came amid persistent reports that Nusli Wadia, chairman of the Bombay Dyeing and Manufacturing Company and a man who has permanently locked horns with the Ambanis, had gained access to the coterie around the prime minister. Wadia denies this, but admits to a close friendship with Ramnath Goenka, who owns the Indian Express group; and the embattled Ambanis were quick to argue that an unholy combine had got together against them. As evidence, it was pointed out that three times in the last year the Government had amended import rules or hiked customs duties in order to protect Wadia's company's operations—decisions which Wadia sees as legitimate.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

For weeks, Ramnath Goenka's Indian Express ran a relentless, hard-hitting campaign to expose what it saw as Reliance's misdeeds.

Dhirubhai Ambani's sons, Mukesh and Anil, accused the Indian Express of getting its facts wrong and twisting the figures to suit its arguments.

The duty hikes were meant specifically to help Wadia's plant for manufacturing dimethyl terephthalate (DMT), one of the two primary raw materials that can be used for manufacturing polyester yarn and fibre. But the Ambanis have concentrated on using the alternative raw material, purefied terephthalic acid (PTA), importing this till their own PTA plant goes on stream at the end of the year. Meanwhile, gallingly enough, Wadia's DMT plant has remained closed through all of 1986, duty hike or no duty hike.

There is little doubt that the climate in New Delhi is less favourable to the Ambanis than it has been in the past, and the thrust of the Express campaign is that it was Pranab Mukherjee as finance minister who helped Reliance with its non-resident investments, changes in duty levels when the company needed them, and clearance for several projects (though this is not something that directly concerns a finance minister). Nusli Wadia had suffered through this period, for after getting a couple of clearances during the Janata phase (Reliance spokesmen say Wadia was a Janata supporter), he found a number of projects that he had applied for during Mrs Gandhi's rule going to the Ambanis. This after the Goverment had told him the projects were reserved for the joint sector. So if Wadia had relatively easy going during Janata rule, and the Ambanis made hay after that, it now seemed that the wheel was turning yet again, though how completely remained to be seen.

With several guns now trained on Reliance, the key question was whether other government decisions would follow? Would the Express campaign against Reliance yield other fruit? For instance, the newspaper had run a series of reports on how the Reliance management was trying to bag the Rs 600-crore aromatics project (a downstream unit from the Mathura Oil Refinery), at Salempur in Uttar Pradesh. At one stage Reliance had been at the top of the list of companies short-listed by the Uttar Pradesh Government, but coincidentally, the state Cabinet met a day after V.P. Singh dropped his bombshell and postponed a decision on which company would get the project.

Yet a third coincidence: the Express ran another series of reports, disclosing the startling information that 11 companies based in the Isle of Man which had invested Rs 22.5 crore in Reliance stock four years ago had sold out, moved base or been acquired by companies in the Virgin Islands, which has even stricter secrecy laws and more flexible corporate regulations than the Isle of Man. The only objective, the Express argued, could have been to completely shroud in secrecy the real identity of the people who owned these companies, identities that had come into question following INDIA TODAY's investigations (see issue of January 15, 1984). Interestingly enough, this latest sortie from the Express appeared just when enforcement directorate officials had returned from an investigative trip to the Isle of Man.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AND THEN, of course, there was the court case in Delhi by a Reliance shareholder who took up from where the Express left off regarding the use of bank funds to buy Reliance debentures. The RBI had also stepped in to conduct its own investigations into the affair, which the Express had termed with typical panache the "Reliance loan mela".

Rarely has any newspaper pursued a company with such doggedness, or with such success. Even more uniquely, the Express reports were written not by a journalist but by Goenka's accounting and legal brain, S. Gurumurthy. The Reliance establishment—never one to take things lying down—responded with typical alacrity, accusing Gurumurthy of having business links with Wadia (which both Gurumurthy and Wadia denied), of getting several of his facts wrong, of deliberately twisting figures to suit his argument, and furiously denying all wrongdoing. "Look at these figures," said Anil Ambani. "Gurumurthy says we have cornered the bulk of the licences in half a dozen areas. But he has ignored a whole lot of licences that have been issued to others." In substantiation, out comes a detailed fact sheet to show that the Express is wrong. "Gurumurthy has twisted the facts," chips in older brother Mukesh Ambani. "He says the non-resident investment in Reliance has resulted in a loss of foreign exchange for the country. But he ignores the devaluation of the rupee and the capital gains tax levied by the Government. In fact, the country has gained foreign exchange. Is this honest journalism?"

But some Reliance spokesmen also contradicted themselves. One argued that investment firms linked to the Ambanis had not borrowed Rs 101 crore from the banks in order to finance debenture purchases (as the Express reported), but only Rs 24 crore. And of this, only Rs 8 crore were used for debentures; the rest went to finance trading activities and property acquisitions. Yet an unsigned rejoinder to the Express articles, clearly released on behalf of Reliance, put the loan figure at Rs 50 crore, and a third company source mentioned Rs 60 crore.

More convincingly, the Ambanis argued stoutly that neither they nor their companies had invested a rupee in the second set of debentures, totalling Rs 270 crore issued in 1985. And responding to the charge that they had used their position in Reliance in order to promise the banks hefty deposits, in return for which the banks gave loans to debenture investors, the Ambanis claimed that the deposits had no connection with the loans, and that some of the deposits had in fact been withdrawn as and when they had been needed.

Some Reliance spokesmen also claimed that the RBI had found nothing wrong with the bank loans, concluding that these did not violate RBI guidelines. But Finance Ministry sources confirmed that the RBI's interim report had in fact indicted two banks, and that investigations were continuing. The banks themselves denied any wrongdoing, arguing that the loans were good business, that the money was safe, and that no RBI guidelines had been violated. But a counter-view was expressed by State Bank of India Chairman D.N. Ghosh, who said: "I drafted the original RBI guidelines in 1970, when I was a junior officer. And this was not the purpose for which banks were supposed to give loans, according to those guidelines." A lot of the money was in fact lent to non-residents to buy Reliance debentures, including that by the Bank of Baroda, which, however, argued that if non-residents abroad could borrow from foreign banks they might as well borrow from Indian banks. But once again, this begged the question of whether RBI guidelines had been violated.

HARI OM GULATI

Bombay Dyeing Chairman Nusli Wadia was himself under attack in the form of a court case over charges of fraudulent account-keeping.

Meanwhile, there came the offensive against Wadia himself. A Bombay Dyeing shareholder filed a law suit in Calcutta, three days before the company's annual meeting of shareholders, charging the company with having doctored its books, not providing properly for depreciation of machinery, and with misreporting Rs 26 crore expenditure in order to convert a staggering loss into a modest profit. Calling the whole exercise a "glaring illegality and fraud", the shareholder—one K.S. Bhansali, who owns five shares in Bombay Dyeing—hired the most expensive counsel in Calcutta to argue that Wadia's company had no business declaring any dividend to its shareholders. Wadia argued in his defence that other textile companies had used similar methods for calculating depreciation, that his accounting practices were approved by two chartered accountancy firms and by the best-known lawyers, and that similar accounting devices had been employed by public sector companies with official approval. The high court restrained the company from closing its books of accounts and from paying out any dividend till it disposed of the petition.

If that was one round that went against Wadia, he was soon under attack on a dozen other counts. Reliance scouts worked overtime to dig up all the dirt they could on the chairman of Bombay Dyeing (which a senior Reliance executive derisively dismissed as 'Bombay Dead'), and winged their way to Nepal to unearth information on companies there which owned another company in India to which Bombay Dyeing was allegedly showing undue

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE PROVEN PERFORMER

ARCTIC AIRCONDITIONER

DECADES OF EXPERTISE
S YOUR GUARANTEE OF XCELLENCE & RELIABILITY

1 & 1.5 ton window type models on D.G.S. & D. Rate Contract Through

APS Electro Stampings (India) Pvt. Ltd.

Mile Stone, Mathura Road, Faridabad-121 002
ne : 81-24771, 81-24878 Grams : APSELECTRO

ches (Phone Nos.) : Ahmedabad (363569), Bombay (250187), atta (447654) Chandigarh (32456), Faridabad (812-2251)
abad, Indore (31859), Jaipur (75671), Lucknow (32264), as (812352), New Delhi (353311), Patna (24845), derabad (824179).

Available in 1.0, 1.5 & 2.0 Ton Capacity.
Also Split Type 1.5 Ton & 2.0 Ton Capacity

Mfg. by :

Electronics Limited

METICULOUS ENGINEERING DOESN'T COST YOU. IT PAYS YOU

Regd. Office/Sales H.O.
Atma Ram House, 1, Tolstoy Marg, New Delhi-110001
Ph-3315008-009-010 Cable-ARCTIC Telex-031-2670

CC-0. Digitized by eGangotri Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In life, the most beautiful things are a bit more expensive.

It's simply one of life's truths, that things of beauty are made that much more painstakingly.

Like Nuware tableware. Intricate, exquisite designs. From the purest ingredients. That don't break easily, stain, scratch or peel off.

We've even tied up with New Ornapress AG, Switzerland — the tableware people. To make sure you get the finest tableware available.

So make Nuware a part of your world. To greet your special guests. Or as an elegant gift. And then just sit back and hear them say: "Gracious! You've got style."

Send for our detailed information leaflet.

NUWARE

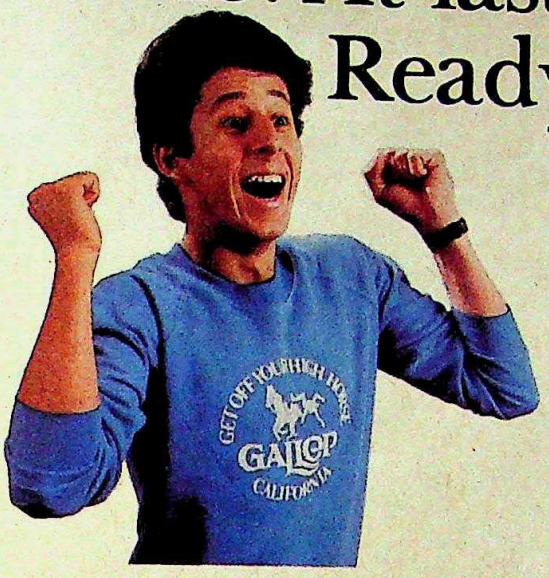
Melamine Tableware

14 Community Centre, New Friends Colony, New Delhi 110 065.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"18! At last! Ready for a bike!"



Here you are – the stylish, gutsy bike that'll take you anywhere you'll go.

Feel its lively pick-up. Watch the (pretty!) heads turn when you dart away at the lights.

Notice how the frame and engine are mated perfectly. That's what makes the bike a breeze to handle.

Notice the attention to detail. The chunky fuel tank. Die-cast wheels. Tinted fibreglass windshield. Sleek instrumentation. The generous saddle.

In fact, the only thing miserly about the bike is its use of fuel : 60 kms per litre in actual city traffic.

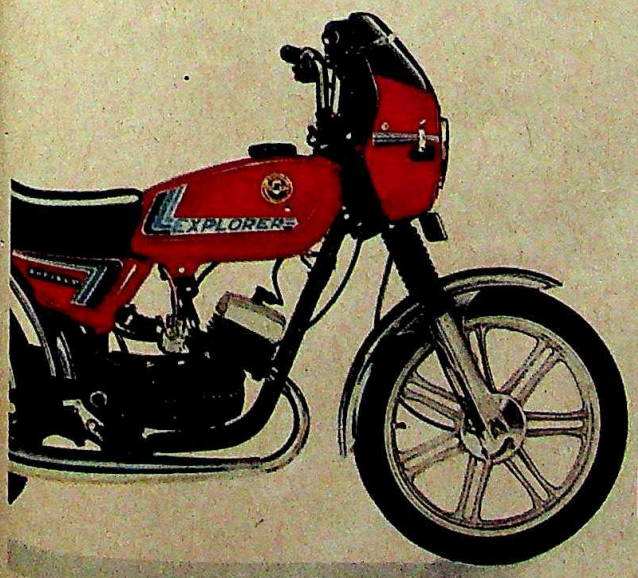
Unbelievable?

Wait.

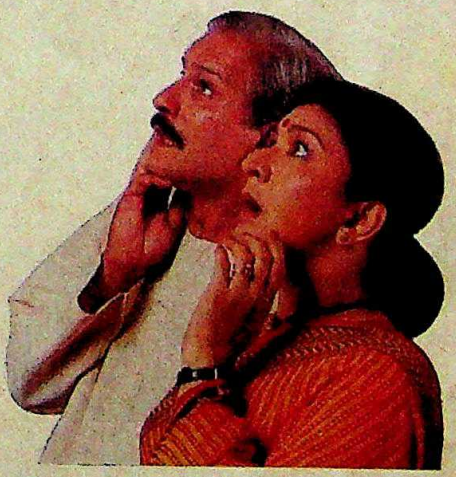
You haven't heard all.

Explorer is available, right away. You can walk into a showroom and ride out with it.

Today.



"18? Already? ... Ready for a bike?"



Let's set your mind at ease. Are you worried about stability? The Explorer's 50cc engine and compact frame are matched perfectly for easy handling.

Tipping the scales at a sturdy 82 kg, the Explorer is a stable, well-balanced bike.

Safety? The bike's so manoeuvrable it takes city traffic, and sharp corners with ease. Besides, the tyres on the Explorer are wider than those on larger bikes. You see, the rider is in full control.

On the other hand, the 120 mm dia brakes on the Explorer are the same as those on larger bikes. No other 50cc bike has these brakes!

You can depend on the Germans to give you a sturdy design. But if you're still not sure, ask any owner.

He is your best reassurance.

Incidentally, Explorer is a good Rs.5000/- less than most other bikes!

Explorer by Enfield

All that a man's first bike should be.

OBM 9621

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

5 for 2 Bonus!

The B-25 super micro

"Designed on a cluster concept... the B-25 on a standalone basis is at least 4 to 5 times as powerful as the IBM PC/XT... Supports MSDOS and CP/M."
– Smith Barney Research

- Affordable Power– Mini-computer power at micro-prices
- Built-in Clustering– to share data and peripherals as your needs grow, without forming islands of information
- Enormous Growth– to handle your growing needs without disruptive replacement of computers
- Multiple O.S.– Multi-User BTOS, Single-User IBM-PC compatible MSDOS

Marketing offices at:
Bombay, Delhi, Calcutta, Madras, Bangalore.

Tata Burroughs Limited

We provide total solutions

Shilpi TBL 8/86

Please send me a free brochure IT

Name: _____

Designation: _____

Company: _____

Tel. No.: _____

Address: _____

_____

Mail to — B-25 coordinator
Tata Burroughs Limited
216-A, Manish Commercial Centre
Dr. Annie Besant Road, Worli, Bombay 400 025

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

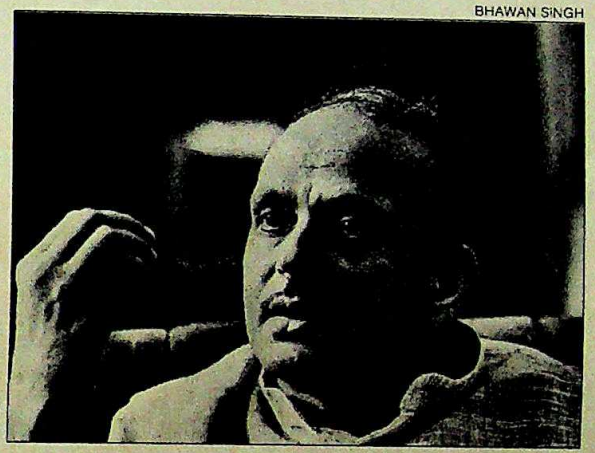
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

favours. The Nepalese companies are controlled by Wadia's father Neville, and by relatives of Minister of State for Railways Madhav Rao Scindia, who also happens to be a major shareholder in Bombay Dyeing. Soon enough, anonymous notes were doing the rounds with a series of charges against Wadia, including the accusation that his own companies had used bank funds to buy shares, and that he was diverting money from Bombay Dyeing into his own privately-held companies

As with the Ambanis denying all wrongdoing, so did Wadia too plead innocence: "Not one of my companies' share investments has been financed by bank loans; all the investments have been made, using retained profits." Had he set up a private company with his wife as chairman, and given it business from one of Wadia's publicly held companies? Again, a detailed explanation of the reasons for this, and the information that the entire deal was approved by the board of directors as well as by the financial institutions.

How much of the charges and counter-charges is true, and how much false, it is almost impossible to judge. But quite obviously, mud is being thrown by both sides in the hope that some of it will stick. And both sides tell the inquiring journalist: "The only chaps who benefit out of all this are you journalists. You must be having a good laugh."

BHAWAN SINGH



"If Reliance wants money, let it come to us with a proposal. We are not pro- or anti-anybody."
V.P. SINGH
finance minister

NEVERTHELESS, some of the charges are no laughing matter. The Ambanis say that telephone calls were made to E.I.du Pont De Nemours in the US (Reliance's collaborator), asking hopefully whether Dhirubhai Ambani had suffered a second stroke in San Diego. Inquiries were made at the RBI as to how Ambani was financing his extended stay in California (he had taken a permit for $ 1.5 lakh). And, the Ambanis allege, some of the information used in the Express reports on the banks was collected from the banks by men posing as officers from the Home Ministry. On top of all this, word went around that the minute Ambani returned to India from California, he would be arrested by V.P.Singh's men. Nothing of the sort happened, of course.

Yet other charges are now doing the rounds: that Reliance has imported second-hand machinery for its fibre plant from Germany and Canada (hotly denied by Anil Ambani, who said importing second-hand machinery was a Bombay Dyeing specialisation), that the Government is investigating charges that machinery imports have been over-invoiced by both Reliance and Bombay Dyeing, and much more. The battle is obviously getting vicious, and the market was rife with speculation that the Ambanis would give back twice as much as they got.

Other battles have already been joined. Reliance's 45,000-tonne polyester fibre plant in Maharashtra was commissioned last March. Around then, a proposal went from fibre manufacturers to the Government that the customs duty on imported fibre be raised substantially. But last fortnight the Mill Owners' Association of Bombay sent a furious telegram to the Government urging it to reject the duty-hike proposal.

Meanwhile, the word was whispered around that Reliance was having trouble with its fibre plant. Commissioned in March with a monthly capacity of almost 4,000 tonnes, the plant released no more than 15 tonnes in March, and less than one tonne in April. But it was explained on behalf of Reliance that the plant was under a process of testing, and that full production and regular market releases were just starting. The plant was in fact supposed to have been commissioned as far back as November 1985, and Reliance had got the Government's licence to import raw materials on this account. But full commercial production is still to get properly under way: a development that is thoroughly uncharacteristic of a company that prides itself on super-fast project implementation and record production in next to no time of starting operations.

The inevitable question: is Reliance slipping? In some ways, perhaps yes—given the performance of the polyester fibre plant. But in other ways, no. As Anil Ambani points out, his PTA plant will be commissioned a full year ahead of its twin in Taiwan, with both having started work at the same time. Also, despite having a clutch of projects in hand, the company is already busy with plans to ask the Government for expanded PTA capacity, and clearly intends to push for growth as hard as ever.

But that brings up the key question: will the Government oblige? The refusal to allow debentures to be converted into shares places unexpected limits on Reliance's ability to finance its projects, because projected borrowings of Rs 1,000 crore will now not be possible. And at the moment, the company has only one financial option, in the form of the proposed Reliance Capital Finance Trust. This is proposed to be set up as a leasing company with an initial share capital base of Rs 100 crore. And, unlike normal firms, leasing companies can borrow up to ten times their capital, giving this venture a borrowing capacity of Rs 1,000 crore. At least some of that money can be used to finance new Reliance projects.

But this Rs 100 crore share issue also needs government approval, especially since the Ambanis have proposed the unprecedented step of issuing shares in a new company at a 250 per cent premium. Finance Minister V.P. Singh told INDIA TODAY: "If Reliance wants more money let it come to us with a proposal to raise its share capital, and we will consider it on merits. We are not pro- or anti-anybody here." Nevertheless, if the Government turns down the proposal from the Reliance Capital Finance Trust, the political message will have come across loud and clear. No share issue proposal will be watched with greater interest by the corporate world, for on this hinges Reliance's image with the investing public, with other government departments, as well as the company's much-vaunted ability to keep burning up the rubber in the fast lane.

—T.N. NINAN with bureau reports

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SWRAJ PAUL

Coming to Terms

I WILL never sell my shares in Escorts and DCM," London-based corporate raider Swraj Paul had declared repeatedly through three years of slugging it out in the biggest, most celebrated corporate battle in Indian history. Yet last fortnight Paul agreed to finally sell his shares in both companies, at a loss of anything up to Rs 2 crore.

"I do not have the money to buy Paul's shares," Escorts Chairman H.P. Nanda had said early in the battle. Yet Nanda was busy last fortnight putting together Rs 9.5 crore to pay Paul for his 8.6 lakh shares in Escorts, even as the Shriram family that controls DCM scrabbled around to find the Rs 10 crore it needed to buy out the London-based businessman.

The peace pipe was smoked quietly on May 30, by Swraj's Calcutta-based older brother Jit, and by H.P. Nanda's older son Rajan, who is president of Escorts. If that marked the anti-climactic end of an epic battle that had been fought out in the press as much as anywhere else, H.P. Nanda was now strangely shy of the press, declining all comment. Paul was beyond reach, travelling through North America. And Bharat Ram, DCM chairman when the battle began, had retired and was uninvolved in the proceedings.

The crucial negotiations for a possible settlement began late last year, after Rajan Nanda had made persistent attempts to get Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi interested in the business of getting the two sides across a table. Rajiv is believed to have said that the affair should be sorted out to mutual satisfaction, and that his Government was willing to try and get the two sides to at least start talking.

Paul's broker Harish Bhasin said: "The two parties had no choice but to settle. These were the Government's orders." DCM Chairman Bansi Dhar said equally candidly: "The Government pressurised both parties." A third person said the prime minister had felt the only feasible solution was one that would not destabilise company managements while at the same time avoid sending negative signals to non-residents about the possible fate of their investments.

G.K. Arora, additional secretary in the Prime Minister's Office, then made some of the initial moves. After that the lead was taken by Finance Secretary S. Venkitaraman, who called a meeting attended by several officials and Jit Paul. By now the ball was rolling.

The initial parleys between Rajan Nanda and Jit Paul resulted in Nanda making three offers: that the Nandas and the Shriram family would buy Paul out at the price at which he had invested, or at the prices ruling in the stock market for the two companies' shares, or at Paul's cost price plus his interest cost for the period since his investment.

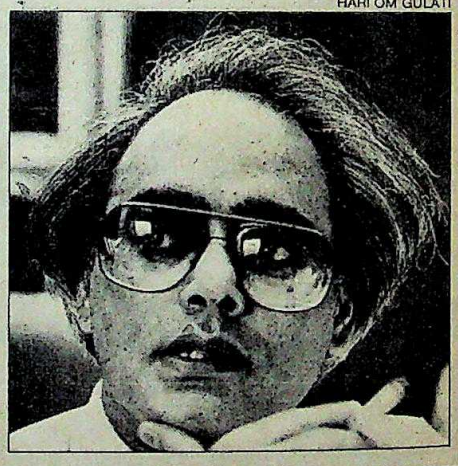
Jit Paul initially indicated that he preferred the last of these, because this would fetch him the highest price. But then came an inexplicable cooling-off period before the threads were picked up again. Eventually, Jit Paul and Rajan Nanda met no fewer than 20 times before a settlement was hammered out. Considering the public abuse that had been exchanged earlier between the two sides, there was a surprising lack of acrimony at the meetings, only some initial uncertainty about the other side's true intentions. But the meetings were short. As Rajan Nanda said, "with Jit Paul the meetings are never very long. He grasps issues quickly".

When the deal was finally clinched, Rajan Nanda said: "My only feeling was one of numbness. We had been through so much in 39 months." If that gave some indication of the toll that the battle had taken on the Nandas, the others were more down-to-earth in their response. Jit Paul, very much the phlegmatic man concerned with money, said mater-of-factly about the settlement: "Swarj has lost some money, but it is good to have closed the chapter." And a member of the Bharat Ram family said: "What was there to feel? I never had any doubt that a settlement would be worked out."

HARI OM GULATI

Jit Paul

Jit Paul and Rajan Nanda met no fewer than 20 times before a settlement was hammered out.



Rajan Nanda

At the end of a three year-long public slanging match, both sides also seemed to have developed a new respect for each other. "Rajan is a good negotiator," Jit Paul said. And Nanda returned the compliment: "Jit Paul has the ability to reduce anything to the basic issues, and bring this quickly down to what matters, money. He never puts ink to paper, but he is as good as his word. In fact I would like to see his signature."

Nevertheless, there was the occasional sleight of hand. When Jit Paul was trying to stall in the initial stages of the negotiations, he said he had to get a power of attorney from brother Swraj in London. But when everything was finally settled, it turned out that he had had a general power of attorney all along.

If the mood at the end was one of mutual respect and relief, there was tough, hard bargaining that went on for veral months. While the Nandas and ams initially made it clear that their offer buy out the shares at cost plus interest Paul's borrowing rate of 12 per cent was e most they could offer, the Pauls held t for 18 per cent interest, calculated arterly. Finally, a compromise was rked out at 15 per cent.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Pauls then insisted that they ould be compensated for the tax burden capital gains, and compensated also for e loss incurred because of e devaluation of the rupee nce the investments were ade in early 1983. But anda pointed out that it was ways the investor who bore e risk of an exchange loss, d that the tax burden deended on how the returns ere filed, and how the conrned income tax officer interpreted the tax laws.

The chairman of the Cenal Board of Direct Taxes was lled in at this stage, and he clarified that e Government could not give any prior arantees concerning tax. The Governent also explained that it could not do ything about the exchange loss that aul would suffer as this would set a recedent for all other non-resident inves-rs. That paved the way for the price to be aled down from the Pauls' initial deand of Rs 22 crore, and up from the itial counter-offer of around Rs 16 crore. he final figure: Rs 19.5 crore, against aul's investment of Rs 12.6 crore. Alough the Pauls say they will lose oney, the Nandas estimate that Swraj ill end up more or less even.

The formalities of impleenting the agreement were ing rushed through last rtnight. Paul's broker hasin was filing lakhs of are transfer forms (some of em eaten by white ants, d turned mouldy or dogared through three years of ing in forgotten cupboards) r registration. And applicaons were sent to the Reserve ank for permission to sell the ares.

Escorts was due to close its share gisters on June 3, in preparation for the mpany's annual meeting of shareholrs on June 26. But the register closing was st extended to June 12 and then again to ne 18 in the anxiety to buy Paul out fore the shareholders' meeting. DCM, pically, was going through the same ocess in a more leisurely fashion, and expected to complete the formalities in another couple of months.

Both the Nandas and the Rams were also scrabbling around to find the money needed to pay Paul. True to their normal style, the Nandas had taken advance action and identified the companies which would buy the shares: Escorts Tractors, a sister company that is a joint venture with Ford, and Goetze India, another company controlled by the Nandas. Both companies had prepared for the big pay-off by calling extraordinary general meetings of their shareholders late last year and early this year, getting the shareholders' approval for an investment of this order, and applying to the Government for permission to invest: the Companies Act prohibits any company from investing more than 30 per cent of its paid-up capital and reserves. Punjab National Bank seems to have been approached at one stage by both DCM anbd Escorts for a loan, but this was turned down.

Paul (left) and H.P. Nanda: settling accounts

"The Government pressurised both sides."
BANSI DHAR
chairman, DCM

The DCM management did not seem to have worked out all its options quite as smoothly, and seemed to be strapped for cash. A sister company, Shriram Fibres, would buy some of the shares, and a few friends and associates were being asked to buy some of the rest. If the family failed to find enough takers for all Rs 10 crore worth of shares, the only way out might be to offer the balance to the financial institutions themselves, who already own 42 per cent of DCM stock. Coming after a fight during which the institutions had been accused of backing Paul against the existing managements, this will be a strange denouement.

The Pauls themselves do not seem very clear as to what they will do with the money, and whether it will be immediately repatriated back to England. The original 13 investing companies are in fact selling their shares first to domestic companies of the Apeejay group (run by Swraj Paul's brothers in India), which are selling the shares to the Nandas and Bharat Rams. Paul may in fact end up keeping the money in India, instead of repatriating it abroad, and invest it in the Apeejay group's fertiliser and caustic soda projects.

The settlement among the giants leaves open the question of what happens to the few lakh shares of DCM that were bought last year by Paul's broker, Harish Bhasin. Most of these were acquired at prices much higher than those on the market today, and the agreement that has been hammered out says nothing about this lot, which too was not registered by the DCM management. Bhasin hopes that his shares will be settled soon enough, and he was busy last fortnight withdrawing the court cases that had been instituted following DCM's refusal to register the shares. But even if there is a settlement on this, Bhasin stands to lose large sums on his investment gambit. But he takes the loss philosophically: "It is all in the game."

That cliche in fact sums up all that happened during a double-pronged corporate raid unprecedented for its daring and for the shockwaves that it sent through the Indian business world. The man who said he would clean up Indian business has quietly sold his investments at a loss, and those who fought to keep him out (sometimes bragging that they would get him clapped in jail for violating the Foreign Exchange Regulations Act) are paying him a king's ransom in order to protect their fiefdoms. Neither side finally seems to have the inclination or the energy to ask who won, or who lost. •

—T.N. NINAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MARUTI

Bumpy Ride

LOGIC is not the strong point of the Indian automobile market, and there was ample evidence of this last fortnight, when Maruti Udyog announced its second price increase in three months, only to find the open market premium for its cars shooting up still higher, to Rs 30,000. To add to the illogic, although the people's car has clearly changed its definition of 'people' (the company price today is 34 per cent higher than two-and-a-half years ago), there were no signs yet of the interminable waiting list thinning down.

But all this could change very soon. A Maruti at Rs 73,500 on the road is not the same bargain as one at slightly more than Rs 50,000, and the price difference between the Maruti and the Premier has narrowed. So there is worry in Maruti Udyog offices, for as Managing Director R.C.Bhargava admits, "nobody knows what coefficient of demand Maruti commands right now". It is only when the company reopens bookings for cars next month, that some estimate of this can be attempted. Bhargava says: "If demand drops sharply, the Government will have to sit up and take notice." The Government itself does not seem overly concerned. Said Industry Minister N.D. Tiwari: "The segment of people towards which the Maruti was directed can still afford it."

The price hike had been coming, with the rising yen sending costs soaring. Then came the budget increase in customs duty and a new system of excise calculation, each of which hurt the little car. And though the additional excise burden was later reduced by 5 per cent as a special concession to Maruti, the Maruti management itself decided to compound matters by cashing in on the duty hikes to add a little profit margin. Of the total price increase of Rs 14,000 since March, Rs 5,000 is money for jam. Justifying this increase, Bhargava claims that the standard Maruti car was so far being sold at a loss. Said Bhargava, "It is only now that we will more or less break even."

If prices have changed, other things have too: the Maruti car itself, and the company's indigenisation schedule. On both counts, the company has faced steady bursts of flak. The new model gives more leg room (9.5 cm), has a sturdier body and is supposed to yield greater fuel efficiency (15 per cent more). But what happens to the 52,000 people who have bought the old model, and how are they going to get the spare parts? This problem will be particularly acute for the body panels since there are no facilities for their production in India. So Maruti now intends continuing to import body panels for the old model as replacement sets.

The new model also means a further setback to Maruti Udyog's indigenisation programme, which has come under fire from none other than Tiwari himself. The minister told INDIA TODAY: "There must be some deterrent if somebody does not adhere to the indigenisation programme which they themselves agreed to, unless they can explain it. What the exact nature of it (the deterrent) will be I will not mention just now, because I don't want to create a controversy."

That reprimand is well deserved. Last year Maruti Udyog was supposed to have achieved 42.5 per cent but did no more than 27 per cent. The target for this year was 57 per cent but has now been scaled down to 47 per cent. The introduction of the new model has instantly reduced the indigenous content of the car from 38 per cent to 31 per cent leaving a greater leeway that has to be made up.

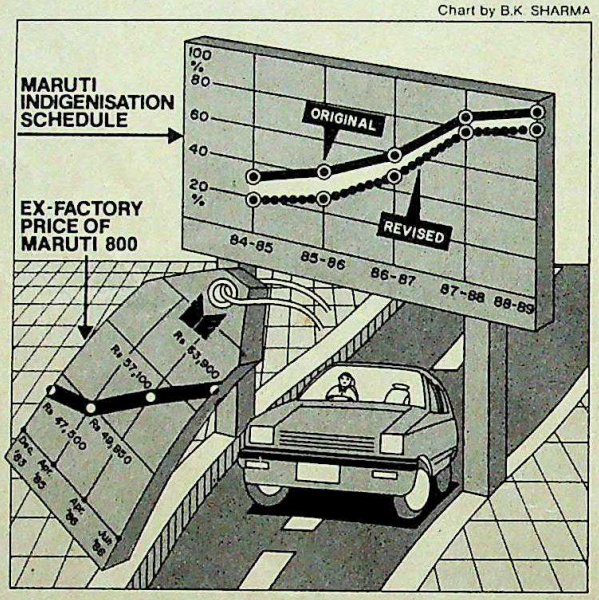
There are major differences between the old and new models in respect of components but Bhargava claimed that his company had given enough advance notice of the change of model to ancillary manufacturers, and that these had geared their facilities to suit the new model.

Maruti Udyog itself is now trying to hasten the troubled indigenisation process and has agreed to take a 10 per cent to 20 per cent equity stake in some six ancilliary projects—those for glass, seats, fuel tanks, steering gear, injection moulded parts and smaller pressed body parts. Four of these projects will be situated in the Maruti complex itself. The Steel Authority of India Ltd (SAIL), meanwhile, is trying to produce indigenously the kind of steel that Maruti requires, and this plan should go well since both Maruti and SAIL have a common chairman, V. Krishnamurthy.

But indigenisation or no indigenisation, there are many Cassandras in the automobile industry who now forecast that at its new prices, Maruti Udyog cannot ever hope to hit its full licensed capacity of 1.4 lakh vehicles. The response to the reopening of bookings next month will show whether that is true, or whether the expensive people's car still has a smooth ride ahead.

—TANIA MIDHA

Chart by B.K SHARMA

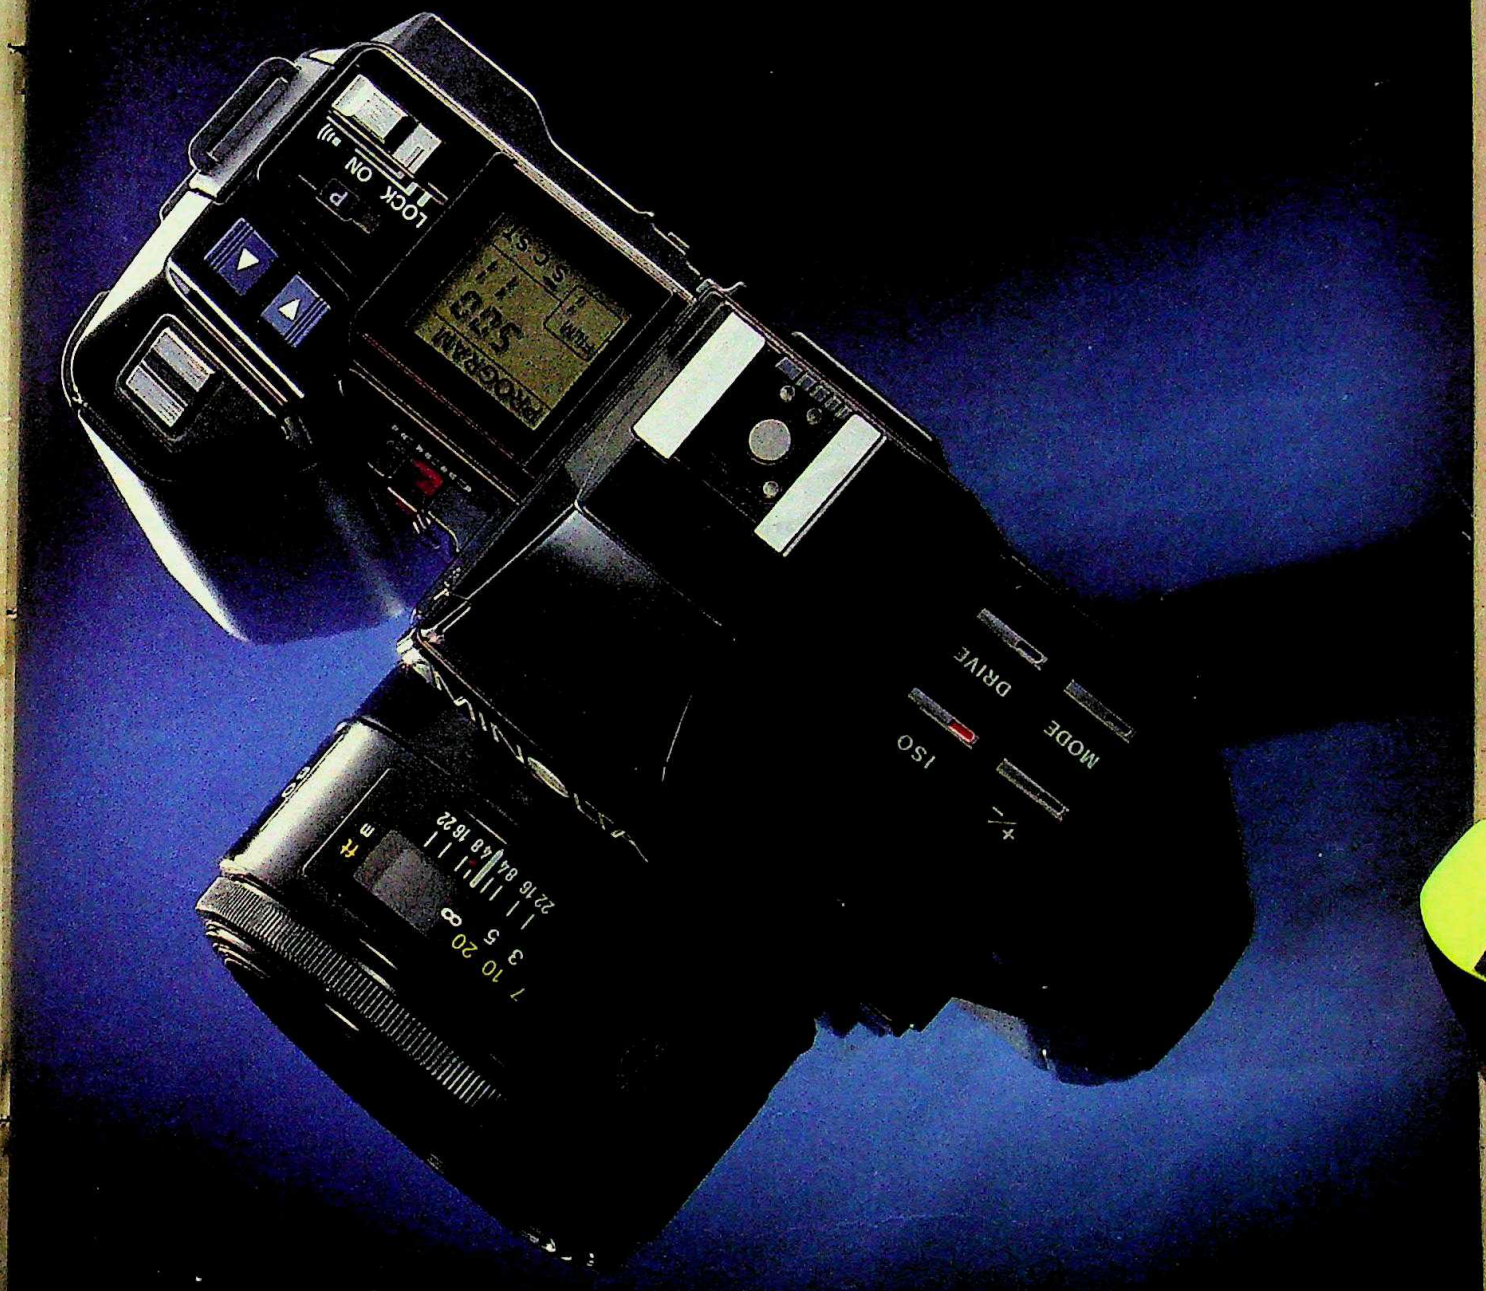


Production line of the new model Maruti

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Someday all cameras will be like the Minolta 7000.

MINOLTA



The Minolta 7000 has changed SLR photography forever with an astonishing standard of technical innovation. It gives you Minolta's Hi-Tech autofocus with computer controlled accuracy, so fast and precise that it becomes an extension of your eye, even in flash photography. Automatic Multi-Program Selection, so intelligent that it automatically makes all exposure decisions and settings for you, even selecting the right program for the Minolta AF lens you're using. Fully automatic film control that ends film loading, winding and rewinding worries. Touch control operation that assures quick, precise settings for all camera functions. And the world's widest array of AF lenses, from 24mm to 600mm. All in all, the Minolta 7000 lets you capture the split-second experiences of life as they happen, instantly, accurately and exactly the way you see them. Someday all cameras will be like the Minolta 7000. But for now, this is the one to own.

The Hi-Tech Autofocus SLR

7000

Minolta Camera Co Ltd 30, 2-Chome, Azuchi-Machi, Higashi-Ku, Osaka 541 Japan

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Fortunately for your child, there are guidelines concerning the materials used in his toys. Now how about his food?

A cautious parent chooses toys with care. Sharp edges, brittle material, toxic pigments are all eliminated before the toys reach the children.

Yet, few questions are asked about conformity to vital standards of safety in food containers.

Food containers should protect their contents from contamination and toxicity.

Their opacity should be proof against chemical reactions through exposure to heat.

Containers should have a long shelf-life, and should be easy to display and stack in any storeroom or kitchen. They should also be impervious to rodents and pests.

To all this, Tinplate is the answer.

Because Tinplate is still the safest, most versatile packaging material known.

The container is as important as the contents.

Issued in the public interest by:

TINPLATE

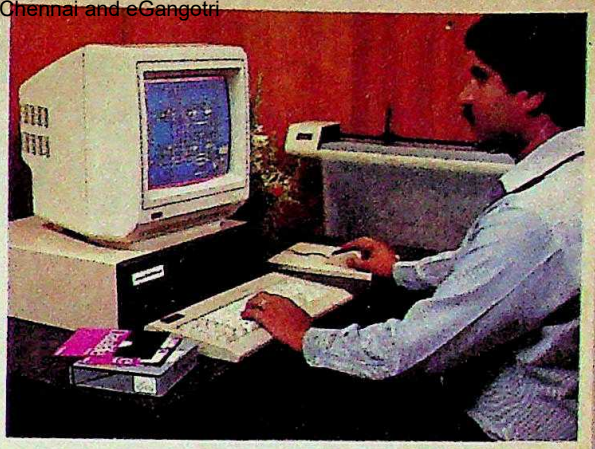
The Tinplate Company of India Limited
Registered Office:
4 Bankshall Street Calcutta-700 001

ACL/TCIL/P-2/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Something sensational has been going on in more than 100 drawing offices over the past year.



Productivity has been stepped up by over 400%, drawings have consistent clarity and accuracy, and there's push button retrieval of drawings. A transformation brought about by Omega Draftsman -India's first electronic drafting system.

In just a short while, a whole host of reputed drawing offices attached to public and private engineering industries, national laboratories, design consultants and architects have all opted for the Omega Draftsman.

Look at all that the Omega Draftsman can do and you'll know why!

Drawings of any size and to any scale can be created using basic elements such as lines, arcs, circles, splines, text, hatch. These can be stored, retrieved and edited to generate revisions and new drawings in a matter of minutes.

Not only that, the Omega Draftsman provides a set of unique features:

- drawings are automatically saved against power failure
- the entire screen is available to the user for creating drawings
- commonly used command options are distributed on the tablet and mouse for ease of use
- the speed of command selection allows the user to work as fast as he chooses
- a number of construction facilities are provided to aid drafting

All done through a complete drafting system consisting of a high resolution colour monitor, tablet and mouse, large capacity discs to store drawings and a choice of plotters.

The Omega Draftsman, for all its sophistication, is easy to operate. Commands can be selected by merely touching a single character key on the keyboard, while for beginners a menu is provided.

OMC as pioneers of CAD in India, have used their expertise to develop the most sophisticated software.

Yes, everything that has gone into the Omega Draftsman is designed to step up your drawing office efficiency.

For details regarding demonstrations contact any OMC office:

OMC COMPUTERS LIMITED

V Floor, Chenoy Trade Centre 116 Parklane
Secunderabad 500 003 Tel: 70556/823175

• C-11 SDA Shopping Complex, Opp. IIT Gate, New Delhi 110 016 Tel: 666971 • C/o Voltas Limited, NKM International House, 178 Backbay Reclamation, Bombay 400 020 Tel: 2026212 • Flat 44, Rest House Apartments, 14, Rest House Road, Bangalore 560 001 Tel: 568211 • 71 Nungambakkam High Road, Madras 600 034 Tel: 471034 • 162/B/240, Near Super Market, Lake Gardens, Calcutta 700 045 Tel: 467196.

OMEGA Draftsman

Sista's/OMC/29/86

ACL/TOIL/P-2/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

No other fabric can wear this name

STANROSE®

Standard Mills | Mafatlal Apparel | Surat Cotton Mills

- Suitings • Shirtings
- Sarees • Dress Materials
- Bed Linen • Furnishings
- Shirts • Fusible Linings

ngri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DIAMOND INDUSTRY

A New Edge

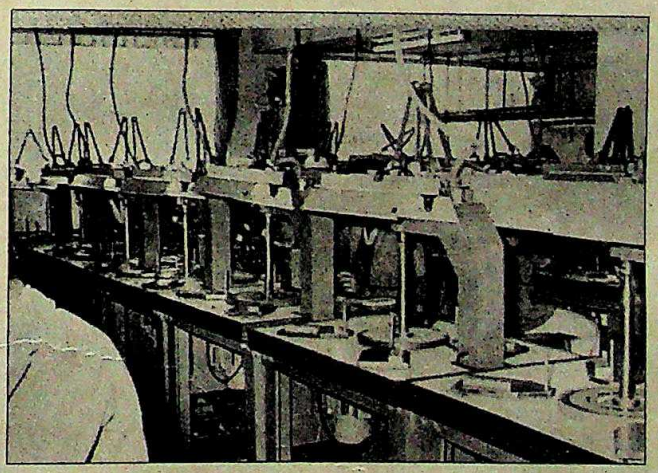
A TELEPHONE bill rip-off in Antwerp, tax raids in Bombay, searches and seizures, accusations and acrimony—hitting headlines is nothing new for the Indian diamond industry. But the free-wheeling business, which has grown from a scant Rs 28 crore in 1970-71 to Rs 1,334 crore in 1985-86, is shaking off its troubles, including a slump a couple of years ago, and heading once again for the big time. With renewed growth has also come the ambition to take on the big boys in Israel and Belgium.

Today, the diamond cutting and polishing industry is on a modernisation spree. Having established a virtual monopoly on 'makeables' (small stones with irregular grain structure), firms are now going over to the bigger, regular variety—'sawables'. "We already are the biggest," says Arvind Parikh, vice-chairman of the Diamond Exporters' Association, "Soon, we'll be the best."

That is no idle boast. Three factories to process 'sawables' are already operational and more are in the pipeline. With its prime asset of cheap labour, India has already ousted Antwerp from primacy in the small stones market, and diamantaires in Bombay give Israel one year before it too is outpriced.

In some ways, the new drive for modernisation and diversification has been more the result of market pressures than of deliberate policy decisions. "With the makeables market nearly saturated, this is the only way to maintain our track record of rapid growth," says Jatin Mehta, chairman of Su-Raj Diamonds, the first diamond company to go public—yet another manifestation of the change that's sweeping an industry long dominated by partnership firms.

There was an external spur too. The early '80s saw the diamond merchants in Israel and Antwerp come an expensive cropper. They had salted away hoards of gems which were reduced to pretty pebbles overnight when the market crashed. In its bail-out bid, the Diamond Trading Company, the marketing arm of De Beers which channelises 75 per cent of the world's production of rough diamonds, reduced the price difference between makeables, for which there was an undiminished Indian demand, and the sawables. The man on the street found that he could buy a better stone for a few dollars more. Many Indian firms decided to cut themselves a slice of this pricier cake.



Diamond cutting then and now: modernisation moves

"Quite a few of us did contemplate entering the new business," says Arun Mehta of B. Arunkumar and Co. "Eventually, only a handful took the plunge. But seeing our success, others are perking up now." But the laggards were not sitting back, depending on their traditional skills to see them through. "Everybody modernised," Parikh explains. "Some installed machinery and went in for larger stones. Others diversified into fancy shapes—marquises, pears and baguettes." This was necessary to survive. For though the 3,50,000 artisans in cottage-sized units in Surat, Navsari and Bombay earn only $80 a month each compared to the $1,000 earned by their Antwerp counterparts, traditional methods can produce only three stones a day compared to 15 a day turned out by modern techniques.

Those who did try to move upmarket have done well indeed. Su-Raj is already looking for sites to set up one or two more factories, as are B. ArunKumar and London Star, two other companies that have gone in for modern, mechanised factories.

India already has a one-third share of the $4 billion global trade in diamonds. The share of sawables in this is negligible so far, but the industry estimates that it could pick up 20 per cent of the sawable market too by 1990. Says a successful exporter: "We want to make India the last word in diamonds. Israel and Antwerp will eventually be left with only the top end of the market." This ambition hinges largely on how far the sortie into pricier sawables is successful.

"We can export diamonds worth Rs 3,000 crore by 1990 if everyone pulls together," says an optimistic Arun Mehta. There are, of course, some problems. More than half the machinery required will have to be imported. For a factory employing 100 people, the equipment cost alone will come to Rs 15 lakh. But thankfully, money is available for the asking and the Government seems awake to the needs of the gem and jewellery exporters.

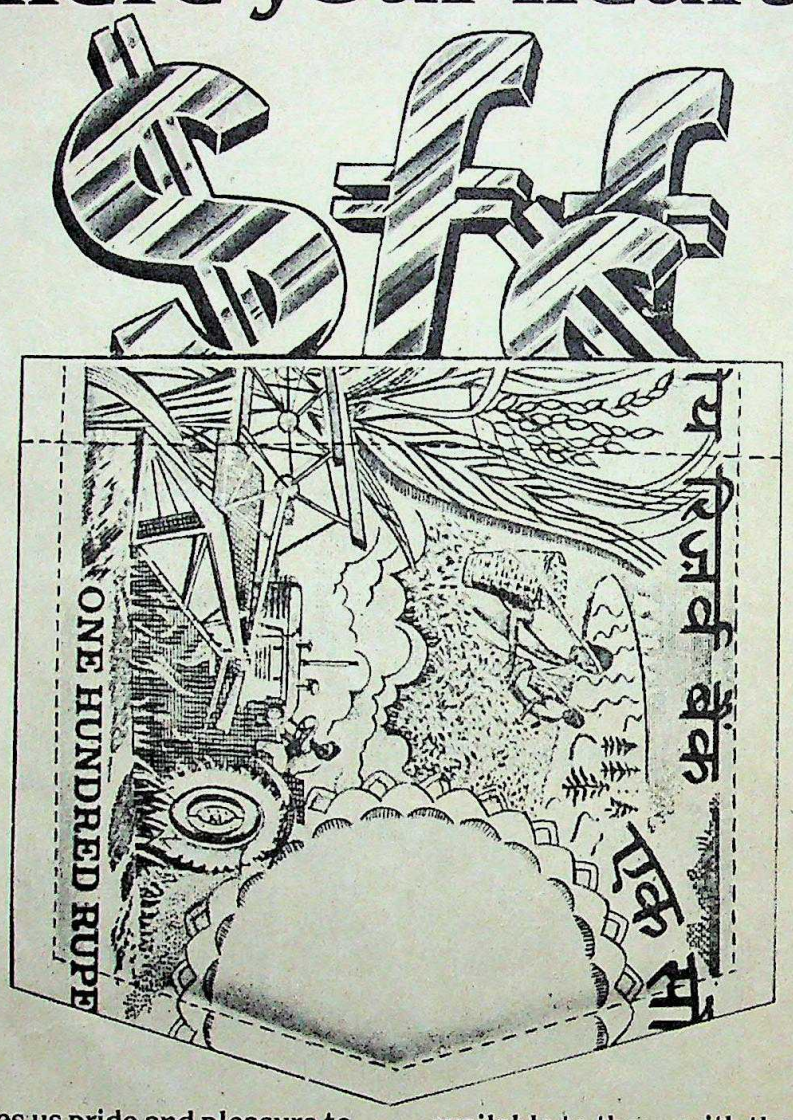
"All we have to do," Mehta adds, "is to think big. For this long, we have practised driving in a Maruti. It's time now to switch over to a Mercedes." There's no better mode of transport down the road to becoming No.1.

—PARTHASARATHI SWAMI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Keep your money where your heart is



It gives us pride and pleasure to announce that we are now authorised by the Reserve Bank of India to accept NON-RESIDENT (Ordinary) NRO and NON-RESIDENT (External) NRE Accounts in rupees.

Non-Resident Indians can now avail of the various schemes available to them, with the legendary service we have perfected over the past 80 years.

Just phone in and give us the addresses of your Non-Resident Indian relatives and friends. We will be glad to mail them our useful literature.

For further information contact our NON-RESIDENT INFORMATION CELL
ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICE:

80 Estd. 1906.

The Shamrao Vithal Co-operative Bank Ltd.

Maker Towers, 'E' 1st Floor, Cuffe Parade, Colaba, Bombay-400 005.
Tel: 213554 217585 217452 Telex 114808 SVCB IN GRAMS: SHAMVICOOP

P.P. Bhat
General Manager

D.A. Bijoor
Vice Chairman

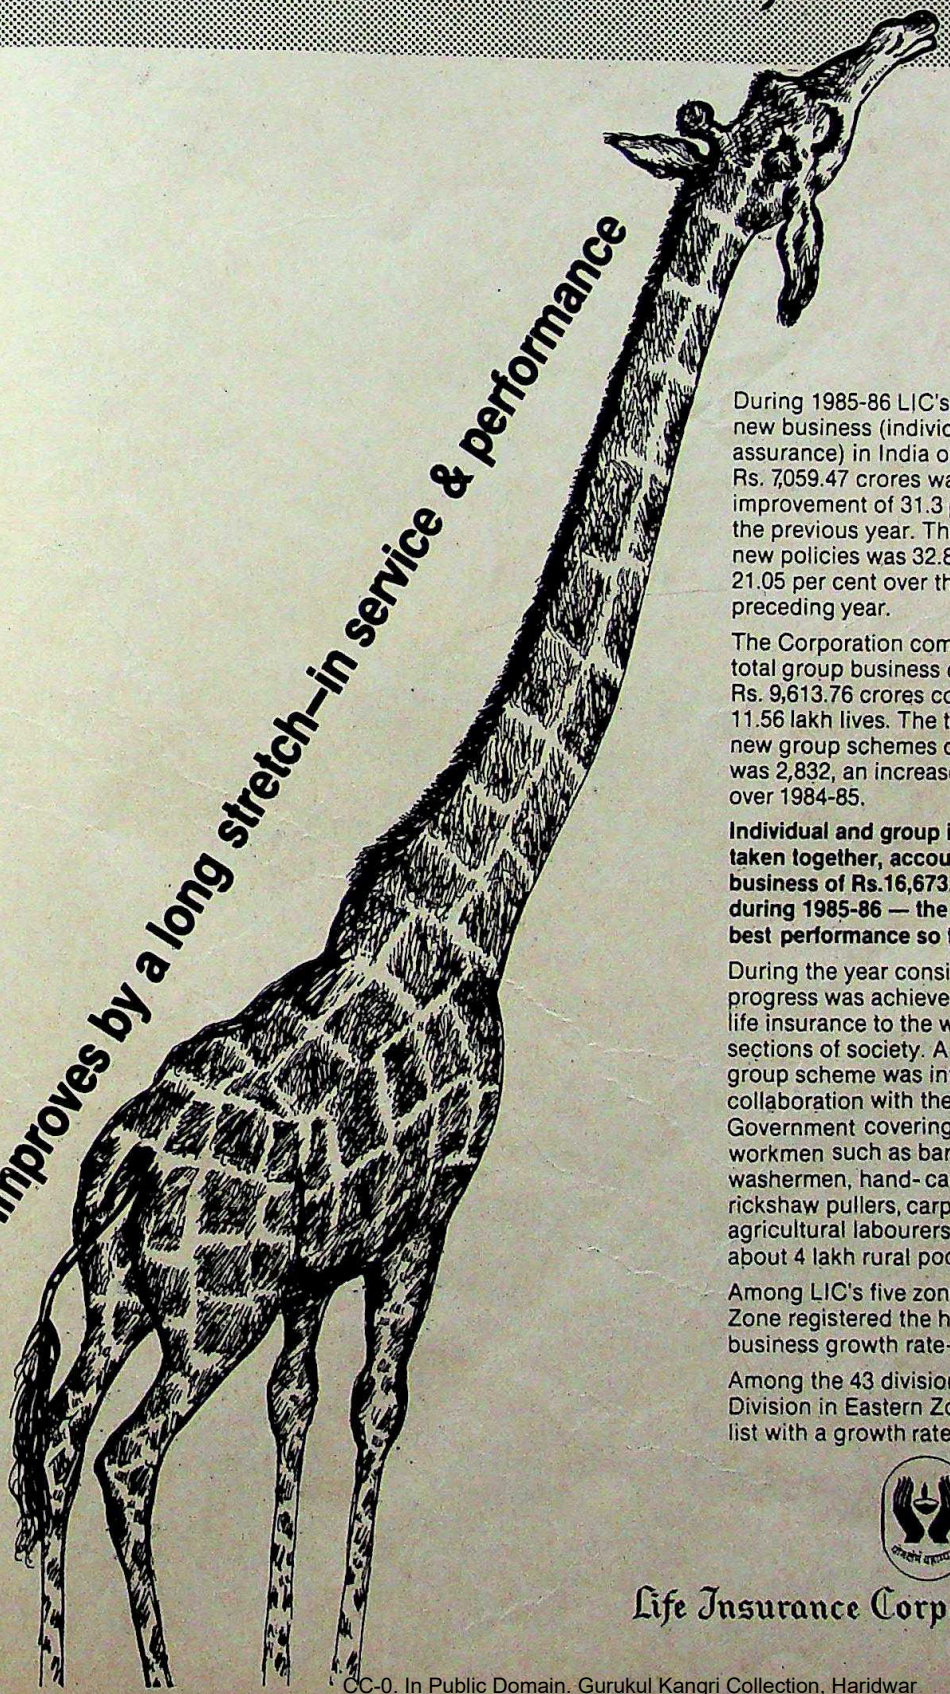
N.S. Rao
Chairman

Canco/SVC/5/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

New business crosses Rs.7,000 crores!



During 1985-86 LIC's completed new business (individual assurance) in India of Rs. 7,059.47 crores was an improvement of 31.3 per cent over the previous year. The number of new policies was 32.82 lakhs, up 21.05 per cent over the preceding year.

The Corporation completed total group business of Rs. 9,613.76 crores covering 11.56 lakh lives. The total number of new group schemes during 1985-86 was 2,832, an increase of 20 per cent over 1984-85.

Individual and group insurance, taken together, accounted for new business of Rs.16,673.23 crores during 1985-86 — the Corporation's best performance so far.

During the year considerable progress was achieved in extending life insurance to the weaker sections of society. A major group scheme was introduced in collaboration with the Tamil Nadu Government covering unorganised workmen such as barbers, washermen, hand-cart pullers, rickshaw pullers, carpenters, agricultural labourers, etc., covering about 4 lakh rural poor.

Among LIC's five zones, the Eastern Zone registered the highest business growth rate—35 per cent.

Among the 43 divisions, the Cuttack Division in Eastern Zone topped the list with a growth rate of 64.6 per cent.

Life Insurance Corporation of India

Canco/SVC/5/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NICCO

Aiming High

THE AMBIENCE at the Calcutta headquarters of the National Insulated Cable Company of India (NICCO) is deceptive, situated as it is in a hoary building that suggests a corporate relic of the Raj. But there's more to the company than meets the eye: television sets that will reach for a national market by the end of next year, with video cassette recorders and industrial electronic products to follow; a bid for a refinery in Assam which is pending with the Government; a Rs 9-crore car batteries project, now taking shape near the capital; a venture with a World Bank affiliate to lease out imported equipment; and plans to turn out a downstream petrochemicals product that could make the synthetic textile giants sit up in alarm.

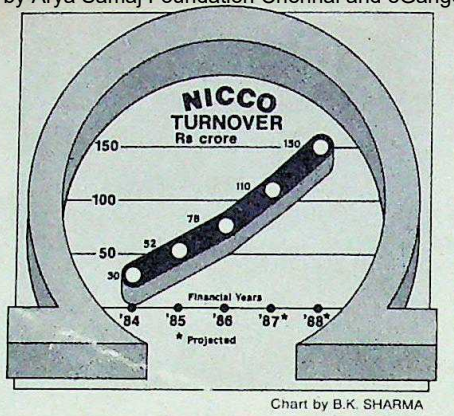


Chart by B.K. SHARMA

Clearly, this is no brown sahib corporation wearily soldiering on. In an unprecedented flurry of activity, NICCO and its five stablemates are shooting for the big time. Over the next two years, an array of greenfield projects and a corporate acquisition will get into full stride, almost doubling the Calcutta-based group's Rs 78-crore turnover figure for last year to a heady Rs 150 crore or more. Says a senior company executive: "The greenfield projects will add a dollop of turnover."

A Rs 18-crore jelly filled cables plant that is coming up near Calcutta may contribute up to Rs 30 crore worth of business next year. By then, Nicco Batteries also will get going (sales target: over Rs 15 crore). Webel Nicco Electronics, a loss-making West Bengal Government company that NICCO moved into last April, is putting up a factory in Calcutta to turn out 50,000 colour television sets a year and will hawk TV's worth some Rs 9 crore in two years. Finally, the high profile group recently took over Oriental Power Cables, another company that has been in the red. The Government has yet to formally clear some of the financial details of the takeover, but NICCO executives talk of speedily turning the company round and pushing sales to Rs 30 crore.

Certainly, these are ambitious goals for a group that was in the doldrums a decade ago. With annual sales of Rs 7 crore, NICCO was drifting along producing low tech cables. Nicco Steel, a sister steel rods and wires concern, was awash in red ink and had to be shut down, and the top management was riven by dissensions.

NICCO's television production line (top); and Kaul (left); and Sen: fast track

Enter Rajive Kaul. The former ITC executive married into the company and promptly gave the steel company to the Tatas to run, thereby assuring it of scarce raw materials. Next followed a series of rapid-fire expansion programmes. The group's flagship invested Rs 6 crore in power cables, a project that helped sales climb quickly. This was followed by sorties into engineering services, banking, and leasing. Managing Director Kaul was abroad last fortnight, but explained in a telexed response to questions that the diversification was meant "to have a wider product base which will guard against the cyclical fluctuations in any particular industry." Added group Deputy Chairman Abhijit Sen: "Our philosophy is to seize business opportunities whenever we see them."

That's true enough. The steel company, for example, will soon float a small welding company and a "metal stitching" or cast iron equipment repairing division to offset the cyclical fluctuations in the steel industry, while the foray into industrial electronics is meant to be "the profit cushion for the consumer electronics company." Some of the group's forays were calculated leaps into new terrain, but others arose from NICCO seizing the main chance. As a senior executive tells it, company executives wooed the visiting head of Furmanite International, the British company that specialises in sealing plant leaks, some years ago. The upshot: a collaboration agreement and the launching of the small but profitable Furmanite Nicco.

If quickly seizing opportunities is one hallmark of the NICCO group, canny tax planning is another. By expanding speedily and going in for in-house leasing, the group has saved on tax bills. Says a group executive: "Instead of paying taxes, we bought assets and took the depreciation on them."

Critics, however, are quick to point out that the group has been strapped for cash and so has expanded by joining hands with state governments in some cases, that it has been niggardly in rewarding shareholders, and that its bid for the Assam refinery is over-ambitious because it may not be in a position to raise the money for this.

It is true that the group went in for joint sector projects in Orissa (cables) and West Bengal (electronics) because it didn't have the cash to go it alone, and that NICCO's dividends have hovered around 12.5 per cent for the last few years. But Sen is equally quick to suggest that his companies are investing in the future: "The group's annual gross profit is around Rs 5 crore, income tax and dividend payments account for hardly Rs 50 lakh of this. So Rs 4.5 crore is being ploughed back every year." With the big projects five or six years away, the kitty should be full enough by then. So in the final analysis, prudence may pay off for a once troubled group that is now on the fast track.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI in Calcutta

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

first and finest

The Indian Market is, today, all set to welcome the excitement, of an exclusive new fabric, being introduced in India for the very first time.

Soft, Silky and Fur like this new fashion material is popularly known as Pile Fabric. Beautiful designs and rich colours intermingle smoothly on this fur texture whose classic impact can be felt on furnishings, readymade garments, rugs, car-seat covers, stuffed toys, bedroom blankets or you simply name it.

Manufactured on modern imported machinery, this versatile fabric complements its durability by needing a simple no-fuss wash. The dynamic Himgiri group are pioneering the manufacture of this fabric to enable leading fashion houses to celebrate the grandeur and potential of Synthetic Fur as never before.

So come — explore the texture, hue, and touch of a new Fur fabric, coming to your doorstep for the very very first time.

Himgiri
FABRICS

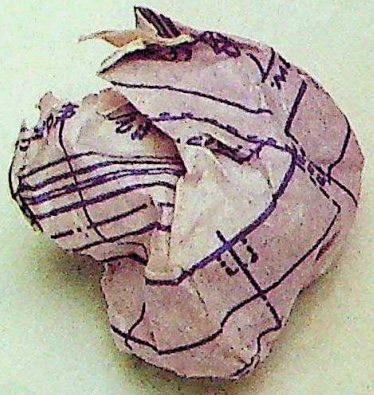
Furnishings
Rugs
Blankets
Bed Covers
Stuffed Toys
Shoes
Fashion Garments
Car Seat Covers

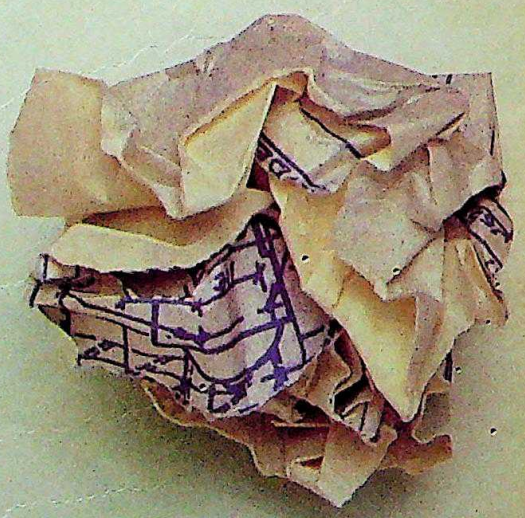
For Trade and Dealership Enquiries Contact:
Himgiri Fabrics Pvt. Ltd., J-32, Maker Towers, Cuffe Parade, Bombay 400 005. Phone: 211 555 Telex: 117 3821 BMCO. Grams: ANDOLAN.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Be prepared for the unexpected when you deal with Kilburn.





CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The engineers at Kilburn never cease to amaze.

Consider the case of Tamil Nadu Explosives.

They approached Kilburn for a rotary dryer to dry Ammonium Nitrate and Sodium Chloride.

All over the world, Dynamit Nobel, the consultants to T.N. Explosives, use rotary dryers.

But that was not reason enough for Kilburn's engineers to offer one.

They studied T.N. Explosives' process. After three weeks on the drawing board, they emerged with a paddle dryer instead.

A solution that proved to be immensely cost effective.

Resulting in savings of up to 60% in both capital and energy costs.

And space savings of up to 50%.

Consider Punjab National Fertilisers.

They wanted a rotary cooler for their soda ash plant.

After studying Punjab Fertilisers' requirements, Kilburn's engineers suggested a paddle cooler instead.

Tests conducted later conclusively proved Kilburn's decision to be the more cost effective.

The roster of Kilburn's achievements doesn't end here. Space and modesty permit mention of only a few:

Kilburn were the first to indigenously manufacture conveyorised band dryers, way back in 1979.

They built the largest pneumatic coal conveying system in Asia for IPITATA.

And a naptha dryer for BPCL – 36 Nm^3/hr of liquid is dried from 50 down to 5 parts per million.

The cutting edge

Kilburn is the only organisation in the country that caters to the entire spectrum of drying systems.

With a team of highly qualified design engineers. (They range from Aeronautical engineers to Metallurgists.)

Comprehensive pilot plant drying facilities to test solids, liquids and gases. (Recognised by the Dept. of Science and Technology, Govt. of India, as a full-fledged R&D unit.)

A quality control system so ruthless it would put Ghengiz Khan to shame.

And the backing of 5 international leaders.

Nara Machinery, Japan: Inventors of the paddle dryer and leaders in fluid bed and flash drying technology.

Bowen Engineering, U.S.A: Pioneers in spray drying and instant-coffee plants.

Pleq GmbH: Specialists in rotary thermal processors.

Babcock BSH: Leaders in industrial centrifugal fans.

Silicagel Gesselschaft: Leaders in solvent recovery systems.

A formidable amalgam of experience and expertise. Which has led Kilburn to make what many would call an unsound business decision: Offering comprehensive process guarantees.

For a customised solution to your requirements, write in to the address below.

It's something Kilburn's clients have come to expect.

KILBURN

Heat And Mass Transfer Systems

Mackinnon Mackenzie Building
Ballard Estate, Bombay 400 038. Tel: 269511
Telex: 011-5277, 011-2340

A Division of Macneill & Magor

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Wherever you work, Wonderfloor works harder...

Wonderfloor... for offices... banks... hospitals... hotels... railways... schools... stadiums... computer rooms... and your home...

WONDERFLOOR

VINYL FLOORINGS ...elegance at your feet

In collaboration with PEGULAN West Germany.

PREMIER VINYL
FLOORING LIMITED

C-1, Commercial Centre Safdarjang Development Area New Delhi-110 016 Phones: 661435, 660023

REGIONAL OFFICES: Executive Centre, 407 Jolly Bhavan No. II, New Marine Lines, Bombay 400 020, Phones: 294348, 294653, 250955. Mecleod House, 3rd Floor, 2 Netaji Subhash Road Calcutta 700 001. Phones: 231702, 231703. 190/1, IV Floor, Kota Shopping Complex, Brigade Road, Bangalore-560 001, Phone: 56

USINE
CROP INS Risk
ON P
A c had of pilot pro in 11 stat insured ag
some Rs 5
But th
kharif cro
Corporatio derwritten now seem with a maj
farmers w their crops soons had known tha poor. The ing Rs 73
alone, out claim of R total cour premium w Correct
lowed swi examining Union Agri sent expert districts i claims alon
They found Bhavnagar had extende farmers afte
the ground
Gujarat
ment officia groundnut in 20 years, tonnes aga tonnes in a
82. And the blight. The banks in An extended lo farmers (the pulsorily pro
as late as O ber, almost vesting end banks explai trouble and benevolence price: of the F from Amreli were agains
kharif seaso
"The ban
said K.N.Ar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CROP INSURANCE

Risky Venture

ON PAPER it sounded marvellous. A crop insurance scheme that had got off the ground after years of pilot projects, and 2.2 million farmers in 11 states and two Union territories insured against crop failure for a handsome Rs 537 crore.

But this exercise, launched for the kharif crop by the General Insurance Corporation (GIC) and fully underwritten by the Government now seems to have ended up with a major scandal in Gujarat. Farmers were allowed to insure their crops long after the monsoons had failed and it was known that the harvest would be poor. The GIC faces claims totalling Rs 73 crore from Gujarat alone, out of a country-wide claim of Rs 100 crore. But the total country-wide insurance premium was Rs 9.33 crore.

Corrective action has followed swiftly. The GIC is re-examining the scheme, and the Union Agriculture Ministry has sent experts to the groundnut districts in Gujarat, whose claims alone totalled Rs 67 crore. They found that in Amreli and Bhavnagar, cooperative banks had extended insurance cover to farmers after it was known that the groundnut crop had failed.

Gujarat agricultural department officials said that last year's groundnut crop was the lowest in 20 years, yielding just 3.9 lakh tonnes against the 22 lakh tonnes in a good year like 1981-82. And the fraud followed the blight. The district cooperative banks in Amreli and Bhavnagar extended loans to groundnut farmers (the insurance is compulsorily provided against loans) as late as October and November, almost a month after harvesting ended the kharif season. The banks explained that the farmers were in trouble and had to be bailed out. This benevolence has extracted a heavy price: of the Rs 30 crore insurance claims from Amreli and Bhavnagar, Rs 11 crore were against loans extended after the kharif season was over.

"The banks' lending was mala fide," said K.N.Ardanareswaran, additional secretary, Agriculture Ministry. "We are not satisfied. The Centre has asked each cooperative bank for its accounts. We have to disallow the claims."

The Gujarat State Cooperative Bank (GSCB) gave another explanation for the delayed insurance. They claim that the district banks' action was justified, as unseasonal rains in October had raised the possibility of sowing a delayed second crop. But state agriculture department officials pointed out that it was impossible to harvest groundnut in winter, since, apart from sufficient moisture in the earth, the crop also needs the right temperature and sunlight to flower. Scepticism about the GSCB's explanation mounted because both Amreli and Bhavnagar are considered Janata Party strongholds, and GSCB Chairman D.M. Patel belongs to this party.

"What was done in Amreli and Bhavnagar was not proper," said Gujarat Agriculture Minister Mahant Vijaydasji, and the Central Government has held back payments against the claims in Amreli and Bhavnagar. Payments are being made in the other districts and also in Maharashtra, where GIC Chairman A. Goenka handed over a cheque for Rs 4.27 crore. But Goenka claimed that even in Maharashtra, "the claims and losses will exceed the premium collected. The claims may exceed Rs 19 crore, while the premium was Rs 1.35 crore".

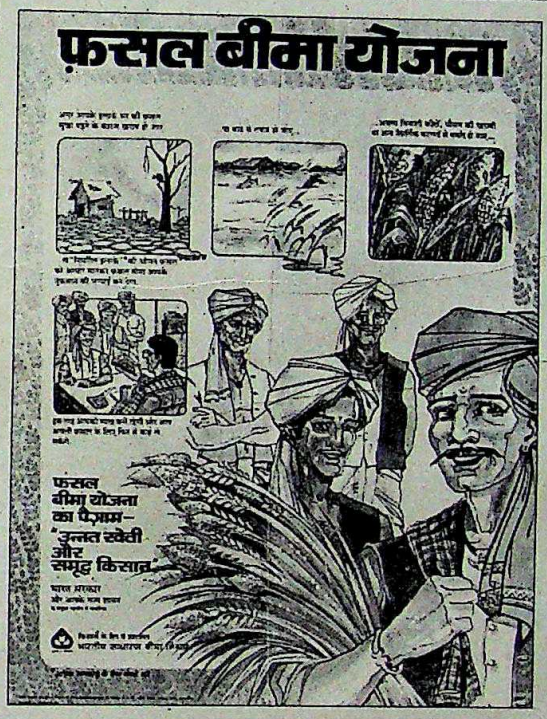
This experience in the very first year of crop insurance has brought home the need for closer supervision of the scheme, which is primarily implemented by local-level banks under broad directions from the GIC. "This case has demonstrated that we will have to frame clearer ground rules for crop insurance," said a GIC official.

But the crop insurance scheme is perceived, not as a commercial proposition, but as a way of encouraging lakhs of small and medium farmers to take the risk of shifting to an advanced form of agriculture. "It is one of the best things that has happened to the Indian farmer," said GIC Managing Director C.N.S. Shastri. "It institutionalises relief to farmers when the monsoon fails. But it also encourages the farmer to take more risks and introduce modern technological inputs. The scheme has proved its value in the very first year."

"Experience in other countries has shown that the crop insurance scheme becomes viable only in the long term," added Professor V.R. Gaikwad of the Indian Institute of Management, Ahmedabad. "We have found that it has changed a farmer's perception of risk. By instinct, when a farmer takes a risk he looks at what he will lose. After five years of crop insurance he will look at what he will gain."

However, the Union Government is worried that the objective of the scheme may be sabotaged by instances of fraud. Besides Gujarat, alarm bells went off in Maharashtra also, but an investigation into the pattern of loans in Ahmednagar did not reveal any fraud. "There is no immediate move to give up the scheme, but it may have to be done if instances of fraud recur," said a member of the Central team which visited Gujarat.

—M. RAHMAN with bureau reports



Crop insurance poster: tall claims

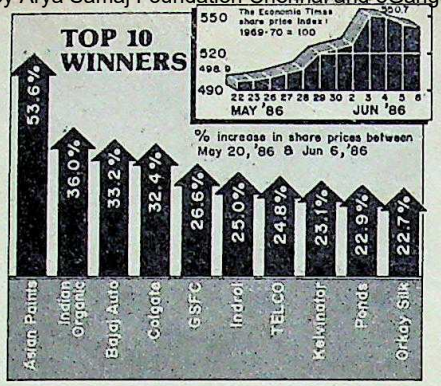
Scandal has followed the drought in Gujarat, with crop insurance being extended after the rains had failed, leading to massive insurance claims that are now being rejected.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

Buoyant Again



EVEN if quite unintentionally, Finance Minister V.P. Singh seems to have taken on the role of a master puppeteer controlling the bulls and bears as they storm around the stock exchange trading ring. His 1985 budget set off an unprecedented boom in equity prices, and his 1986 budget just as effectively dampened the euphoria. Last fortnight, Singh sent the bulls chasing bears yet again when he made a string of announcements that bolstered the trading mood, including the promise of reduced interest rates and some form of limited amnesty of violators of the Foreign Exchange Regulations Act. Other official announcements of further industrial policy liberalisations helped the new buoyancy, and the stock-market index climbed 15 per cent in the space of a month, to 550.7, bringing it very close to the all-time peak of 559.5 reached just before the last budget. Subsequent profit-taking brought the index down to 541.1 by the close of the fortnight, but the new mood of confidence marked a sharp change from the earlier listlessness and uncertainty about the future.

This upswing was helped by the decision of the Bombay Stock Exchange to bring 14 actively traded cash scrips on to the forward trading list, one example being Orkay Silk Mills which gained Rs 35 at Rs 173. Another example was Bajaj Auto. Besides, there were expectations of a bonus issue by Reliance Industries later in the year, after August. A bonus issue was similarly expected from TISCO, which might also come out with a convertible debenture issue when it announces the dividend for its financial year ending last March. Other companies also came out with long-awaited announcements of debenture issues.

Gains were notched up on virtually every counter, with advances recorded by Bajaj Auto, GSFC and TELCO. GSFC's rise was helped by the company's decision to split its Rs 100 share into Rs 10 shares in order to help buying by investors of limited means. Meanwhile, the news of a settlement being reached between corporate raider Swraj Paul and the managements of Escorts and DCM resulted in the shares of both these companies gaining fresh ground.

The new issues market also saw new life being breathed into it. After a slump around March, when several issues floated on the market met with a lukewarm response, investors seem to have started flocking in greater numbers once again to the new issues market.

The future now looks distinctly brighter than it did as recently as a month ago. The monsoons have arrived on time, and if they prove to be normal over the next couple of months (after years of successive droughts in a number of states), the markets should prove lively and cheerful about the future.

ACTIVE STOCKS

	1986 HIGH	LOW	CLOSE 6.6.86	Change in Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	45.00	26.00	29.25	1.75 +
Associated Cement	389.00	228.00	276.00	15.00 +
Atlas Copco	92.50	64.00	80.00	14.00 +
AsianPaints	225.00	130.00	215.00	72.50 +
Avery India	146.00	100.00	118.50	5.50 +
Bajaj Auto	3450.00	1950.00	3350.00	820.00 +
Baroda Rayon	490.00	315.00	360.00	nil
Bata India	82.50	54.00	62.75	2.75 +
Bayer	680.00	445.00	540.00	10.00 +
Bharat Forge	86.00	48.00	70.00	10.00 +
Birla Jute	97.00	42.90	51.25	0.75 +
Blow Plast	160.00	98.00	108.00	2.00 -
Blue Star	110.00	75.00	95.00	12.50 +
Bombay Dyeing	123.00	77.00	102.00	5.50 -
Brooke Bond	96.75	74.00	84.00	1.00 +
Ceat Tyres	520.00	240.00	410.00	nil
Century Spinning	1690.00	790.00	850.00	35.00 +
Chloride India	123.00	86.00	120.00	28.00 +
Citurgia	65.00	42.00	54.00	4.00 -
Colgate	307.50	200.00	290.00	70.00 +
DCM	58.50	32.62	40.00	2.00 +
Dunlop	74.50	49.75	68.25	5.00 +
Elecon	117.50	80.00	100.00	10.00 +
Escorts	107.00	69.00	103.00	8.50 +
Finolex Cables	70.00	36.00	63.00	2.50 +
Food Specialities	327.50	215.00	310.00	35.00 +
Garware Nylon	61.50	36.00	47.00	0.50 +
Glaxo	87.00	62.00	68.50	1.50 -
G.E. Shipping	36.00	21.25	26.50	1.50 +
Gujarat St Fertilisers	1820.00	925.00	1765.00	230.00 +
Gwalior Rayon	88.00	59.00	79.00	2.50 +
Hindustan Lever	163.00	124.00	155.00	8.00 +
Hindustan Motors	128.50	45.80	52.75	4.15 +
Hind. Dorr	505.00	380.00	485.00	35.00 +
IEL	84.50	61.50	68.25	4.25 +
Indian Hotels	157.00	115.00	145.00	15.00 +
Indian Organic	97.00	63.00	86.00	15.00 +
Indian Rayon	151.00	100.00	137.00	9.00 +
Indrol	390.00	200.00	310.00	40.00 +
Ingersoll-Rand	480.00	360.00	435.00	50.00 +
ITC	76.50	53.00	67.00	1.00 +
J.K. Synthetics	132.00	90.00	120.00	13.00 +
Kinetic Engineering	345.00	220.00	330.00	50.00 +
Lakme	195.00	120.00	145.00	10.00 +
Larson & Toubro	204.00	135.00	136.00	47.50 -
Lipton	69.00	46.50	63.00	6.00 +
Lohia Machines	70.00	42.00	52.00	nil
Madura Coats	92.00	53.00	59.00	4.25 +
Mahindra & Mahindra	86.00	52.00	55.00	4.00 -
Motor Industries	1000.00	605.00	920.00	95.00 +
National Organic	830.00	530.00	795.00	50.00 +
Nirlon	77.00	43.50	43.50	5.50 -
Orkay Silk Mills	186.00	111.00	173.00	35.00 +
Peico Electronics	104.50	48.00	56.85	3.85 +
Pfizer	125.00	78.00	102.00	1.50 +
Ponds	295.00	200.00	295.00	60.00 +
Premier Auto	870.00	555.00	812.50	57.50 +
Ranbaxy	160.00	105.00	137.00	19.00 +
Raymond	97.00	72.00	84.00	3.00 +
Reliance Industries	392.00	226.00	388.00	24.00 +
Shriram Fibres	88.00	49.00	59.00	4.00 +
SPIC	184.00	129.50	163.00	15.00 +
Tata Steel	1535.00	1090.00	1490.00	170.00 +
Telco	910.00	575.00	750.00	117.50 +
Vulcan Laval	162.50	85.00	112.50	15.00 +
Wimco	98.00	54.00	64.00	4.00 +

WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

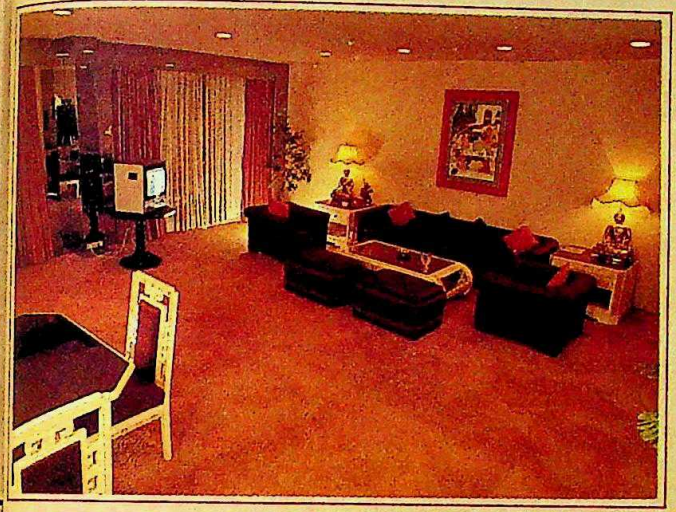
COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	8.8937	8.8511
Austria	Schilling	100	80.9795	80.6466
Bahrain	Dinar	1	33.2430	33.1210
Bangladesh	Taka	100	42.1732	42.1019
Canada	Dollar	1	9.1081	9.0733
Denmark	Kroner	1	1.5354	1.5286
Egypt	Pound	1	15.0320	15.0001
France	Franc	1	1.7761	1.7730
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	1.6297	1.6245
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	1.0913	1.0710
Iran	Rial	100	15.7300	15.6810
Italy	Lira	100	0.8001	0.7911
Japan	Yen	100	7.5645	7.5389
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.7610	0.7530
Kuwait	Dinar	1	43.7010	43.6001
Malaysia	Dollar	1	4.8714	4.8443
Mauritius	Rupee	1	0.9003	0.8919
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.5732	0.5601
Netherlands	Guilder	1	5.4670	5.0299
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7440	0.7010
Singapore	Dollar	1	5.7177	5.6901
Spain	Peseta	1	0.0730	0.0701
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4390	0.4201
Sweden	Kroner	1	1.7615	1.7544
Switzerland	Franc	1	6.8712	6.8625
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.6401	0.6320
Thailand	Baht	100	47.9910	47.8320
UK	Pound	1	19.0069	18.9681
USA	Dollar	1	12.7075	12.6825
UAE	Dirham	1	3.3730	3.3510
USSR	Rouble	1	17.6530	17.6010
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	5.6593	5.6465

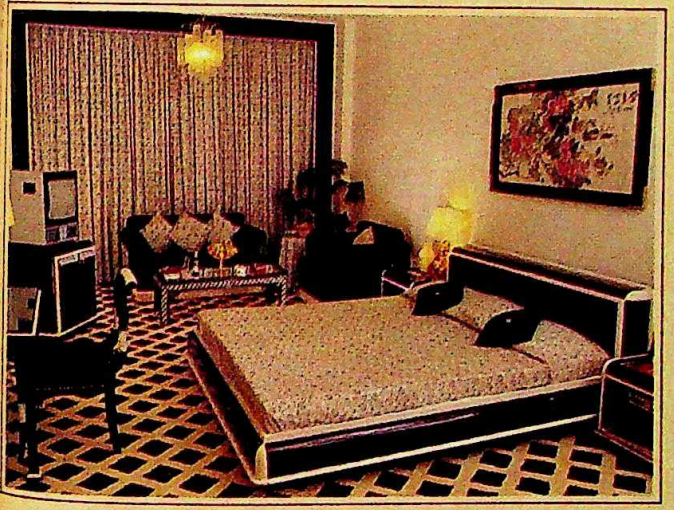
These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo Limited, New Delhi and quoted between the banks on 10.6.86.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Those rooms at Hotel Banjara look a little different since your last visit, don't they?





You may not recognise a lot of things at the Hotel Banjara.

Everything that can be changed is being changed.

Everything that can be improved is being improved. The facade. Corridors. Furnishings. Suites. Restaurants. Food. Right down to knives, forks and napkins.

That includes management and services. Especially services. Because the new management knows that service is what the hotel business is all about. And that there's no substitute for a warm smile, a sincere greeting and good old-fashioned courtesy.

All this adds up to just one thing: Hotel Banjara will soon become an exclusive and luxurious home away from home.

And since everything is changing, why should the name remain the same?

THE NEW DEAL

Hotel Banjara

People pleased to please you.

For reservations telephone: Bombay 62 8242; Bangalore 56 9234; Calcutta 47 0550; Delhi 66 7267; Hyderabad 22 2222; Madras 84 2813

HOTEL BANJARA, BANJARA HILLS, HYDERABAD-500 020.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Enterprise DIND 3

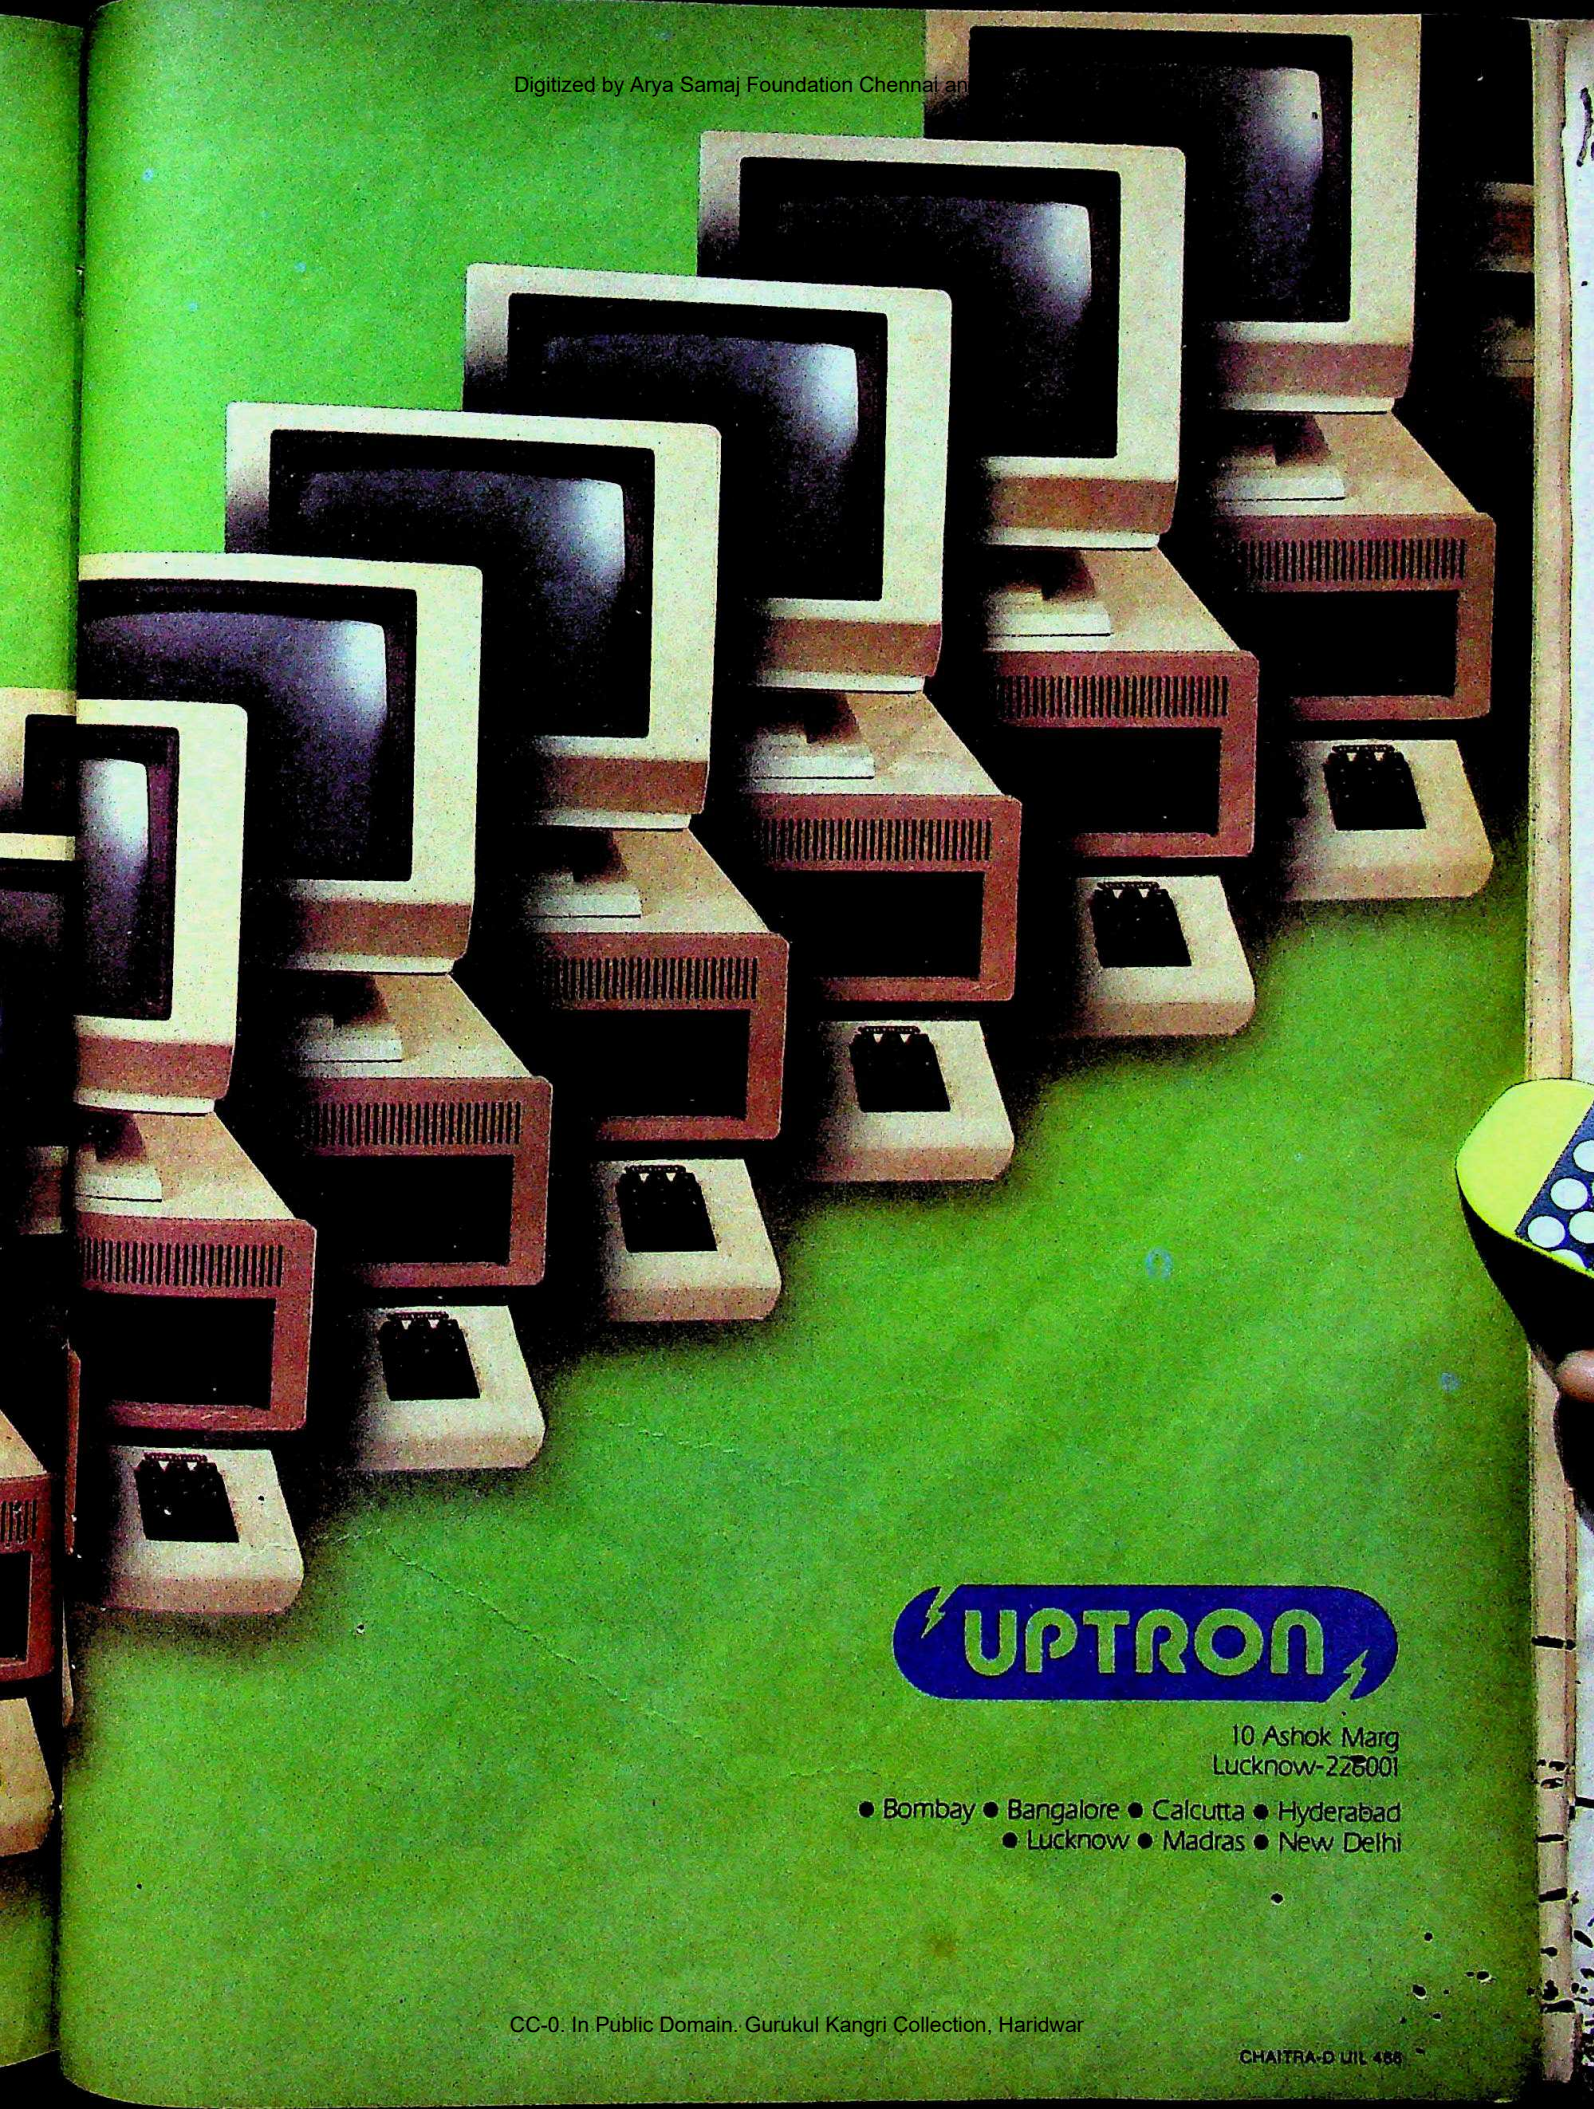
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When it comes to Uptron Computers and Data Communication, once is not enough...

for Air-India, State Bank, Dept. of Science & Technology, Hindustan Machine Tools, Indo Burmah Petroleum, Bharat Heavy Electricals, Hindustan Aeronautics, the Indian Institutes of Technology, Central Excise Dept., Indian Space Research Organisation and many others.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and



UPTRON

10 Ashok Marg
Lucknow-226001

● Bombay ● Bangalore ● Calcutta ● Hyderabad
● Lucknow ● Madras ● New Delhi

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

CHAITRA-D UIL 488

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BLUE RIBAND. A CUT ABOVE.

Blue Riband Lime Juice Cordial: superior, cool.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

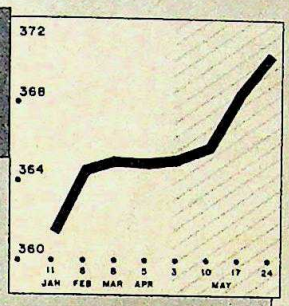
THE RATE of inflation is continuing to run at less than 5 per cent. There has been a sudden spurt, both in industrial production as well as in power generation. Money supply, however, has tightened to some extent. Gold prices are on the rise and the stock exchange was at its bearish worst before a sharp upswing restored the original balance.

All data are seasonally adjusted. Current trends are computed on the basis of the last six months data to which a regression is fitted.

Wholesale Price Index

1970-71 = 100

Current Trend
4.6% p.a.

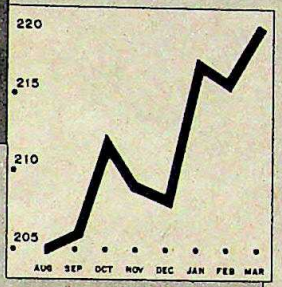


In spite of a 1% rise in wholesale prices in May, inflation seems to have remained constant at around 4.6% per year.

Industrial Product Index

1970 = 100

Current Trend
10.4% p.a.

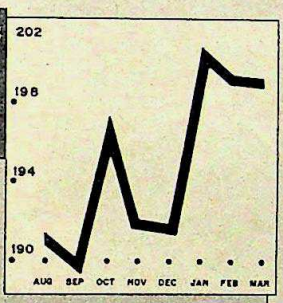


The index of industrial production has soared into double-digit growth for the first time in a long while, helped by a good power situation.

Manufacturing Output Index

1970 = 100

Current Trend
7.2% p.a.

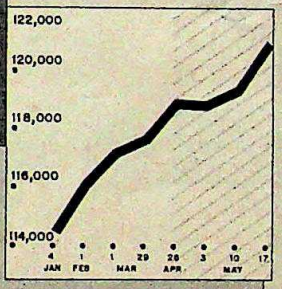


Growth in manufacturing output is good, at over 7%, but nevertheless, it clearly falls short of what is possible

Money Supply

Rs Crore

Current Trend
13.5% p.a.

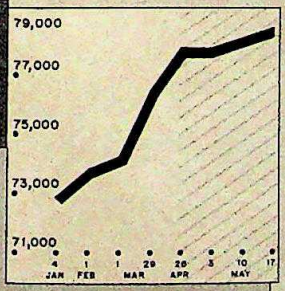


A 1.7% squeeze between 26 April and 17 May saw a drop in the money supply growth-rate. RBI seems to be moving to a "tight money" phase.

Commercial Bank Credit

Rs Crore

Current Trend
14.0% p.a.

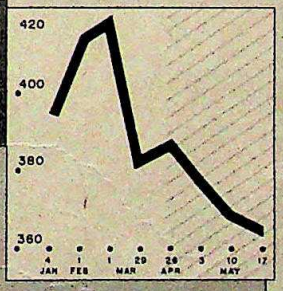


Commercial bank credit, in contrast, has picked up momentum, and the long-term growth rate has risen to 14%.

Share Price Index

1970-71 = 100

Current Trend
5.0% p.a.

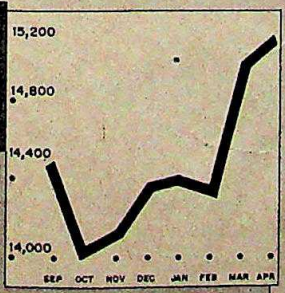


Share prices have crashed by 13% between March and mid-May. But there has been a sharp recovery since then.

Power Generation

Million KWH

Current Trend
9.6% p.a.

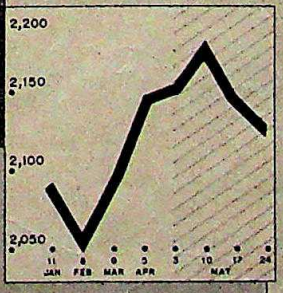


Power generation shot up by 4.89% between January and April which, in turn, lifted the trend to a healthy 9.6% per year.

Closing Gold Price

Rs per 10 gm.

Current Trend
5.1% p.a.



Though there was a fall in the middle of May, the 6% jump between February and May contributed to a growth in gold prices.

INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION

Growth of Items in February, 1986

	% Growth
Metallurgical Machinery	54.3
Motor Cars	45.03
Electrical Motors	35.08
Synthetic Rubber	32.71
Ferro-Alloys	26.73
Newsprint	19.07
Synthetic Resins and Plastics	18.54
Insecticides and Pesticides	16.84
Beverage Industry	15.84
Telecommunications	14.66
Explosives	12.82
Artificial Leather and Oil Cloth	10.37
Soaps and Glycerine	10.08
Drugs and Pharmaceuticals	8.36
Cotton and Blended Mixed Fabrics	8.14
Boilers Steam Generating Plants	7.68
Power-Driven Pumps	7.03
Iron and Steel (Metal)	6.73
Cotton and Blended Yarn	6.53
Motorcycles and Bicycles	6.03
Non-Ferrous Basic Metal Industries	5.61
Matches	5.49
Electrical Lamps	5.28
Storage Batteries	5.1
Construction Machinery	4.76
Tea	4.38
Sugar Machinery	4.22
Airconditioners and Refrigerators	4.12
Cosmetics	3.61
Inorganic Chemicals	3.41
Internal Combustion Engines	2.61
Dry Cells	2.33
Iron and Steel Pipes	2.01
Organic Chemicals	1.91
Paper	1.55
Man-Made Fibres	1.44
Mining and Quarrying	0.84
Dye-Stuffs	0.73
Typewriters & Duplicators	0.59
Cement (Hydraulic)	0.46
Coffee Curing Works	0.27
Grain Mill Products	- .04
Railway Rolling Stock	- .05
Paints and Varnishes	- .07
Dairy Products	- .2
Watches and Clocks	- .32

Of the 86 series considered, 41 of them with a total weight of 49.907 had a positive growth and 45 of them with a total weight of 38.068 had a negative growth.

SELECTED INDICATORS

	1986	1985
Petroleum Crude
Thousand Tonnes, May	2688	2468
Petroleum Refinery Products
Thousand Tonnes, May	3393	3453
Fertilizers
Thousand Tonnes, April	396.0	370.5
Thermal Plant Load Factor
Percentage, April	58.2	54.8
Rail Movement
Net Tonne-km., April	21.75	19.01

Compiled by THE POLICY GROUP/ICIM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BELPAHAR
REFRACTORIES
LIMITED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

a new name

TATA REFRACTORIES LIMITED

Our old skill in making refractories now under an illustrious name.

TATA REFRACTORIES LIMITED

a new dimension

naa /TRL 8623

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

V. PRABAKARAN

Profile of a Tiger

AMONG the militant Tamil groups battling for Eelam, he is already a legend in his comparatively short lifetime, a larger-than-life figure whose military exploits and derring-do have turned him into something of a folk hero. Tales abound of his unerring marksmanship and his ability to hit a cigarette at a hundred paces with a pistol or strip and reassemble a revolver blindfolded in seconds. To his enemies, including rival Tamil militant groups, he is a ruthless, blood-thirsty, over-ambitious desperado, intent only on self-promotion—and self-preservation. But in the context of Sri Lanka's increasingly bloody ethnic strife, Velupillai Prabakaran, 32, has become the predominant figure after the brief but brutal fratricidal battle between the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE) which he heads, and the Tamil Eelam Liberation Organisation (TELO), the two most militarily powerful Tamil groups. The TELO forces were virtually wiped out as was most of their top leadership, including Srisabaratnam, Prabakaran's arch-rival for the Tamil guerrilla leadership.

With TELO virtually out of the picture, the supremacy of LTTE, popularly known as the "Tigers", and its chairman, Prabakaran, is unquestioned, particularly after they reconfirmed their near-total military control over the island's northern peninsula. Prabakaran's writ now runs supreme in the north, with the LTTE not only collecting taxes from the locals but also controlling law and order.

Prabakaran remains something of an enigma. Stripped of the propaganda hype that surrounds him, he is still a mystery man with a paradoxically low profile. His movements are a closely-guarded secret, but he is known to spend most of his time shuttling between hideouts in Tamil Nadu, sometimes crossing the Palk Strait to don his battle fatigues and personally direct his troops in combat.

Born on November 26, 1954, in Sri Lanka's northern coastal town of Velvettithurai, he belongs to the fishing caste though his father was an educated government servant employed as a district land officer. As a student, he was inspired by historical military heroes like Alexander the Great and Napolean Bonaparte and by Indian freedom fighters like Bhagat Singh and Subhash Chandra Bose. As he says: "I was a studious boy in school, confined to reading books at home." When he was four years old, he was witness to the racial riots of 1958 and virtually grew up listening to stories of the brutalities committed by the Sri Lankan army on the Tamil population.

He was a student when he began playing an active role in organising protest movements against the Government and acquired a Marxist image. When he was 16, in protest against the Government's discriminatory education policy, the "revolutionary youth", as he describes his fellow-travellers, distanced themselves from the existing Tamil political party and formed the Revolutionary Youth Federation.

Prabakaran was 17 when he joined the "armed struggle" and began learning how to use hand grenades and small-bore revolvers. One version has it that he received some military training in Cuba. Whatever the truth, he rose rapidly in the guerrilla hierarchy as the movement expanded. In 1972, he was confident enough of his leadership abilities to form the Tamil New Tigers which he renamed as the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam in 1976, appointing himself as chairman of the organisation's central commitee and commander-in-chief of its military wing.

As a ruthless guerrilla fighter dedicated to spilling "the last drop of blood" for Eelam, Prabakaran's name first hit the headlines in 1975 when he assassinated Jaffna mayor Alfred Duraiappa. He also personally led the group that ambushed a military convoy in 1983, killing 13 soldiers and triggering off the 1983 Colombo riots. Says Tilakar of LTTE, a delegate to the Thimpu talks: "He is always intensely alert. This has helped him in our fights against the Sri Lankan army. He has an uncanny hunch about impending military attacks, helping him escape numerous attempts to capture him."

Prabakaran is the chief architect of the highly-disciplined and well-entrenched military set-up of the LTTE that has been Prabakaran is already a legend in his lifetime, a larger-than-life figure whose military exploits have turned him into something of a folk hero.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

elled on Fidel Castro's original guer- movement. It is a tightly-controlled nisation that has managed to keep its egy and movements secret through c executions of alleged informers. All members keep a vial of cyanide on person in case they are captured and red. However, Prabakaran's war nst TELO has been seen as part of his ing leadership ambitions. Says V. kumar, convenor of the Eelam Revo- nary Organisation: "Ultimately, rship is something which will have conferred on you by the people. It is ight to think that your status will go you artificially build an aura around self." Other militant groups have ised his recent penchant to issue uctions to his men in the battlefield the safety of his Tamil Nadu hideouts there are strong rumours that his ary authority is beginning to be ioned by his district commanders. ut in terms of discipline, Prabakaran always set a personal example. He 't drink or smoke, tea or coffee are taboo and he is very strict about field training and exercise. There is considerable mystery, however, about the source of LTTE's seemingly limitless funds. The Sri Lankan Government believes he is being funded by the communist bloc which he denies vehemently. But in the current conflagration, Prabakaran's destiny is linked inextricably with the Eelam struggle and the legend can only grow larger.

Dark-skinned, with close-cropped hair, a bushy moustache and a disarming smile on his thick lips, Prabakaran looks the antithesis of the legendary dreaded terrorist that he is supposed to be. He looks more like a prosperous and pleasant-mannered family man, which, incidentally, he also is. His wife Madivadani has just given birth to their second child, Dwaraka, a week-old last fortnight. Prabakaran is not normally accessible to the media. Last fortnight, however, he made an exception for INDIA TODAY when he agreed to speak to Assistant Editor PRABHU CHAWLA and Madras Correspondent S.H. VENKATRAMANI in the LTTE's Indira Nagar office in south Madras for an interview. Excerpts:

SHYAM TEKWANI

Q. What, in your view, will be the next chapter of the Sri Lankan problem?

A. Sri Lankan President J.R. Jayewardene (JRJ) will come to the negotiating table only if he has been able to gain some military advantage. Till then, he will only be continuing the military option.

Q. Don't you think it is possible for the Sri Lankan Government with all its resources to ultimately militarily crush your movement?

A. JRJ may think he can find a military solution to the ethnic problem. But he can only succeed in bringing about genocide on a large scale. We have with us young boys who are willing to die one after another till we are able to achieve our objective.

Q. How do you estimate LTTE'S strength vis-a-vis the Sri Lankan Army?

A. I cannot reveal any military secrets, but we have the capability to send the army out. I can assure you that LTTE is capable of mobilising enough support to defeat the Sri Lankan army.

Q. Do you have a specific time frame for achieving an independent Tamil state of Eelam?

A. I can't say specifically when we will attain Eelam. But we will certainly attain it. It will also to a certain extent depend on the international situation, the economic pressures that Colombo faces and will face because of our armed struggle.Once his foreign supporters realise that JRJ is not capable of holding the country together they will desert him.His guns, bombs and tanks have not been able to deter us from launching a sustained offensive aginst his regime.

Q. But don't you think you can negotiate an honourable settlement with the Sri Lankan Government?

A. We have crossed the stage of being able to visualise a solution within the framework of a united Sri Lanka. We have come to a point of no return with regard to the Eelam ideal.

Q. What is the geographical territory you want to liberate as Eelam?

A. Eelam was already existing. There was a distinct Tamil homeland. We are now trying only to retrieve that.

Q. Have you yourself been on the field?

A. Yes, I have taken part in a number of military operations. In fact, in our group, all of us have to.

Q. What was your first important military operation?

A. My first major military encounter was in 1975 when I shot and killed the former mayor of Jaffna, Alfred Duraiappa. Subsequently I have taken part in a number of military actions of our group; I was very much there in the Nilaveli operations, and I led the ambush on the military convoy that killed 13 soldiers in Tinneveli in 1983.

Q. Can you tell us how many people you have personally killed in the course

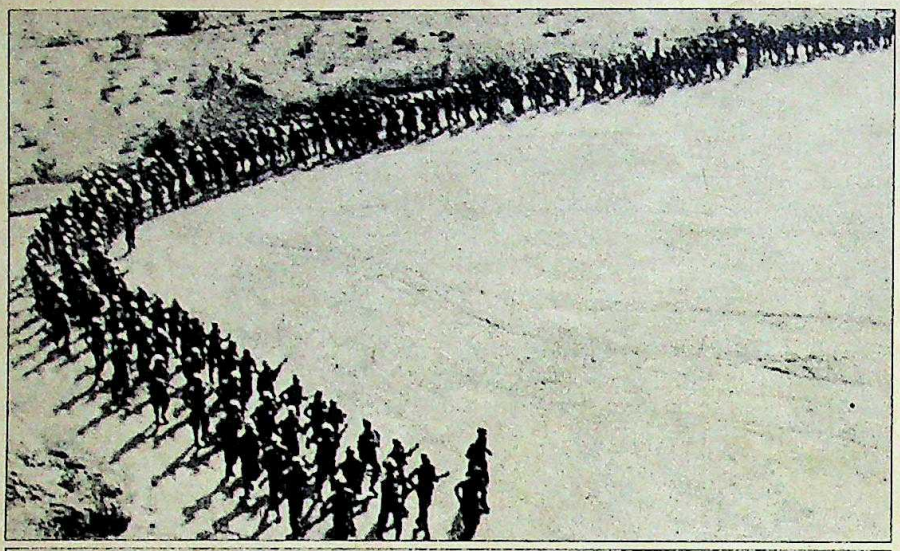
"I can't say when we will attain Eelam. But we will certainly attain it. We have crossed the stage to visualise a political solution."

V. PRABAKARAN
commander-in-chief, LTTE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



"I can assure you that LTTE is capable of mobilising enough support to defeat the Sri Lankan army."

of military struggle?

A. I cannot tell you that, but I have been in a number of our military actions. I can operate everything from a pistol to a rocket-ranger.

Q. What were the reasons for your waging a war on TELO? Don't you think disunity among the militants can only weaken your movement?

A. In our struggle we have to adopt a unified approach. Any disunity among us will be a weakness for the entire Tamil movement. But it is precisely this disunity that was developing. In my opinion, there must only be one dominant militant group to lead the struggle. And it is we Tigers who were able to foil the Sri Lankan Army's offensives in many cases. And it is very dangerous for the Sri Lankan Army to deal with a single unified movement. It is a single unified Tiger movement now.

Q. But couldn't you have brought about unity by discussions?

A. How could we discuss anything with the other groups when they were themselves hopelessly disunited within?

Q. Is eliminating the other groups the only way to a unified approach?

A. We did not wipe out any movement. We only taught TELO a lesson. TELO was killing our LTTE leaders, and if we had not tackled them the Tiger movement would have gradually ceased to exist. You will appreciate that even when we had problems with the Eelam People's Revolutionary Liberation Front, we were very patient. Even in the case of TELO, though around 100 militants were killed, we only took into custody over 400 TELO fighters and seized their arms and ammunition. The only principle was that these people need not wield arms if they cannot fight the real enemy. While our cadres were really keeping the Sri Lankan Army at bay, these other groups were indulging in antisocial activities. And Jaffna people said it was good for us to take total charge of the liberation movement.

Q. What do you say to Jayewardene calling you terrorists?

A. We are not terrorists. We are the representatives of people who want to get out of the clutches of state terrorism.

Q. What is your reply to Jayewardene's allegation that you are getting arms from communist countries?

A. If I was getting arms from communist countries, I would have given you an interview in Tamil Eelam.

Q. What political set-up do you visualise for Tamil Eelam?

A. It would be a socialist state of Tamil Eelam. And there would be a single political party supported by the people. I am opposed to the multi-party democracy. It is through the one-party rule that we can develop the Eelam faster. In a socialist set up people's needs are more important.

Q. Would you have parliamentary democracy?

A. No, it would be a people's democracy, a model similar to that of Yugoslavia where people elect a single party.

Q. What kind of foreign policy would you like to follow?

A. We will definitely like to be closer to the socialist block because these are the ones who are helping us now.

Q. Do you go to Jaffna these days?

A. My movements are a secret. But all my cadres are my trusted lieutenants. They keep in touch with me.

Q. LTTE has the reputation of having a strict code of conduct...?

A. We do impose a moral code. For example, we do allow our members to marry, but we wouldn't allow loose morals. We don't allow our members to drink and they generally don't smoke. We ensure a life within social norms.

Q. Jayewardene accuses you of launching your military struggle from Indian soil. How do you react to that?

A. Our struggle is taking place in Eelam. We are conducting the war there. And when necessity arises we will go there. We have no desire to fight from here. We are here to carry on an international political campaign and not to launch a military struggle.

Q. Can you name some of the countries which are helping Jayawardene?

A. Racist and authoritarian governments like South Africa, Pakistan, and Israel, and of course the SAS mercenaries.

Q. What is your equation with the Government of India now?

A. The Government of India is sympathetic to our cause. Our being allowed to stay here also shows the magnanimity of the Indian Government. India has been good enough to give refuge to all our exiled political leaders.

Q. What is your response to the Government of India's mediatory efforts?

A. We fully support the Government of India's peace initiatives. We support India's role fully.

Q. But India wants a solution within the frame-work of a united Sri Lanka. Whereas you are bent on Eelam. Doesn't that mean you are at cross purposes with India?

A. We are representing the political aspirations of our people. We don't think the Government of India will go against the aspirations of our people. India's support is important to us. But we also have a right to self-determination.

Q. What will you do if Rajiv asks you to get out because he doesn't take kindly to terrorism?

A. We don't think Rajiv will ask us to pack our bags. But then if we are asked to go we will have to go. Our homeland is always waiting for us with open arms. But we are convinced that he has full sympathies with the Tamil people.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LANKA

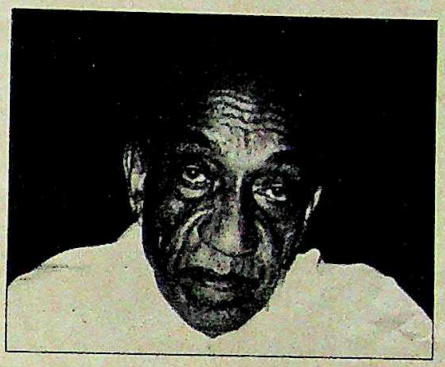
neasy Calm

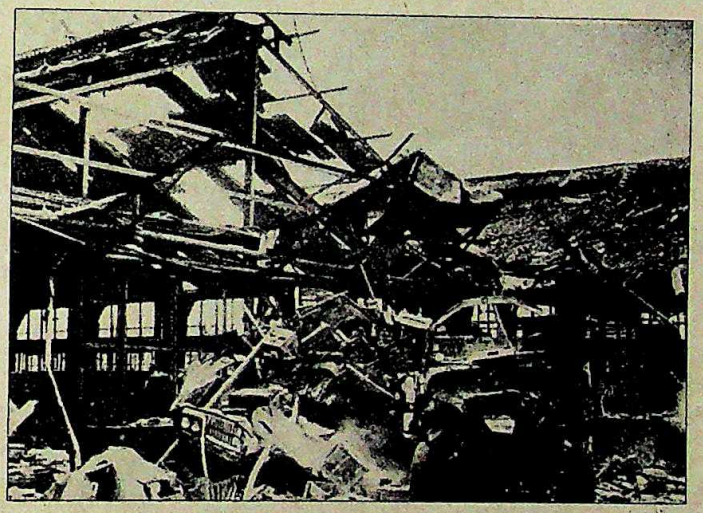
SUDDEN silence has descended on Colombo after five weeks of bombings—bombs in passenger planombs in the Telegraph Office, in s, in shops and in the railyards. And urse, bomb scares almost everywhere nd schoolchildren, office employees, hoppers streaming out into the street nic at the first whiff of a rumour. t least for the duration, the silence is uring though nobody is taking any ces. Army officers are now giving es to the newly-recruited personnel Ministry of Commercial and Indusecurity, itself a recent creation and a of the times. While the apparent to the routine diurnal round is me, a painful truth has gone home. mbo is not London, and is not Belfast. The citi- the predominantly Sine metropolis are not to the luxury of a distant r', nor can the military gists claim the compar- success of a cordon aire between the bloody, t north and east and st of the country.

peration Short-Shrift', -hour operation which into the fifth day, is still ocus of intense debate g the Colombo intelli- a that has lately pro- a growing number of air strategists. That symptomatic of the deeper social ational crisis the so-called 'ethnic ct' has produced. Like foreign policy, ry affairs have become a new, deing concern of a once insular elite did not believe either subject de- much attention in their island se.

routine turnaround of troops in the rn peninsula was the stated objec- 'Operation Short-Shrift', a needcocky choice of code-name, as it out to be. The only safe route in t of Jaffna Fort is by air or sea. So the airstrip and the Karainagar Naval s well as their perimeters had to be d. The Government says this was Yet two facts stand out. First, the e on attack aircraft and helicopter ips. Secondly, the failure of the e motorised column moving up Elephant Pass, the point of entry into the peninsula, to advance more than a few miles.

More significant was the non-military need for the operation and its timing. The bombs in Colombo had done more than kill and maim innocent civilians. It had battered popular morale and seriously damaged the Sri Lankan Government's credibility. A show of force was necessary. Besides, it has always been National Security Minister Lalith Athulathmudali's consistent position that the Government must negotiate a political settlement, but only "from a position of strength".





Bombed-out factory in Colombo; and (top) Jayewardene: confronting reality

The Chidambaram mission had returned to Delhi and reported a modest advance in the protracted and tortuous India-sponsored negotiations. Surprisingly, there had been greater progress on the far more sensitive issue of land settlement than on law-and-order powers for the proposed councils. And law and order or "internal security" is Athulathmudali's subject, while land policy comes within the purview of Irrigation and Lands Minister Gamini Dissanayke, the other "most likely to succeed" aspirant for presidential office after Prime Minister Premadasa. "It is only my negotiating stance. Nobody puts all his cards on the table especially before people who always ask for more. I am ever ready for reasonable compromise," Athulathmudali told INDIA TODAY.

Scores of left-wing Sinhalese youth have been detained under the Prevention of Terrorism Act (PTA) only to further alienate opposition and radical Sinhalese opinion and earn stinging indictments from Amnesty International and other human rights organisations. The militarisation process has been accompanied by the brutalising of a once fairly tolerant and humane society.

All appeals to western governments for money, arms and moral support have gone unheeded. Finance Minister Ronnie De Mel who has to worry about aid-cuts, a slump in tea, rubber and coconut prices, and rising debt-servicing costs, is an unrelenting critic of soaring defence spending. "Sri Lanka is not militarily important to the US. It is neither Pakistan nor the Philippines. Those who expect US military aid are living in a fool's paradise," he told Parliament last fortnight.

Whether it was the international reaction to the bombing and strafing of Jaffna or Delhi's tough warning or the bombs in Colombo which influenced opinion, the mood is once more for "peace". President Junius Jayewardene responded quickly to a proposal by the opposition People's Party for a resumption of the all-party talks adjourned in late 1984. The Communist Party, a member of the alliance, has supported the move but asked for "preliminary" steps. These include a withdrawal of the compulsory (paid) leave order on 300 Tamil employees in state corporations, a halt to arbitrary arrests and a guarantee that those detained under the PTA would be tried in three months or released (the draconian law permits detention for 18 months without trial).

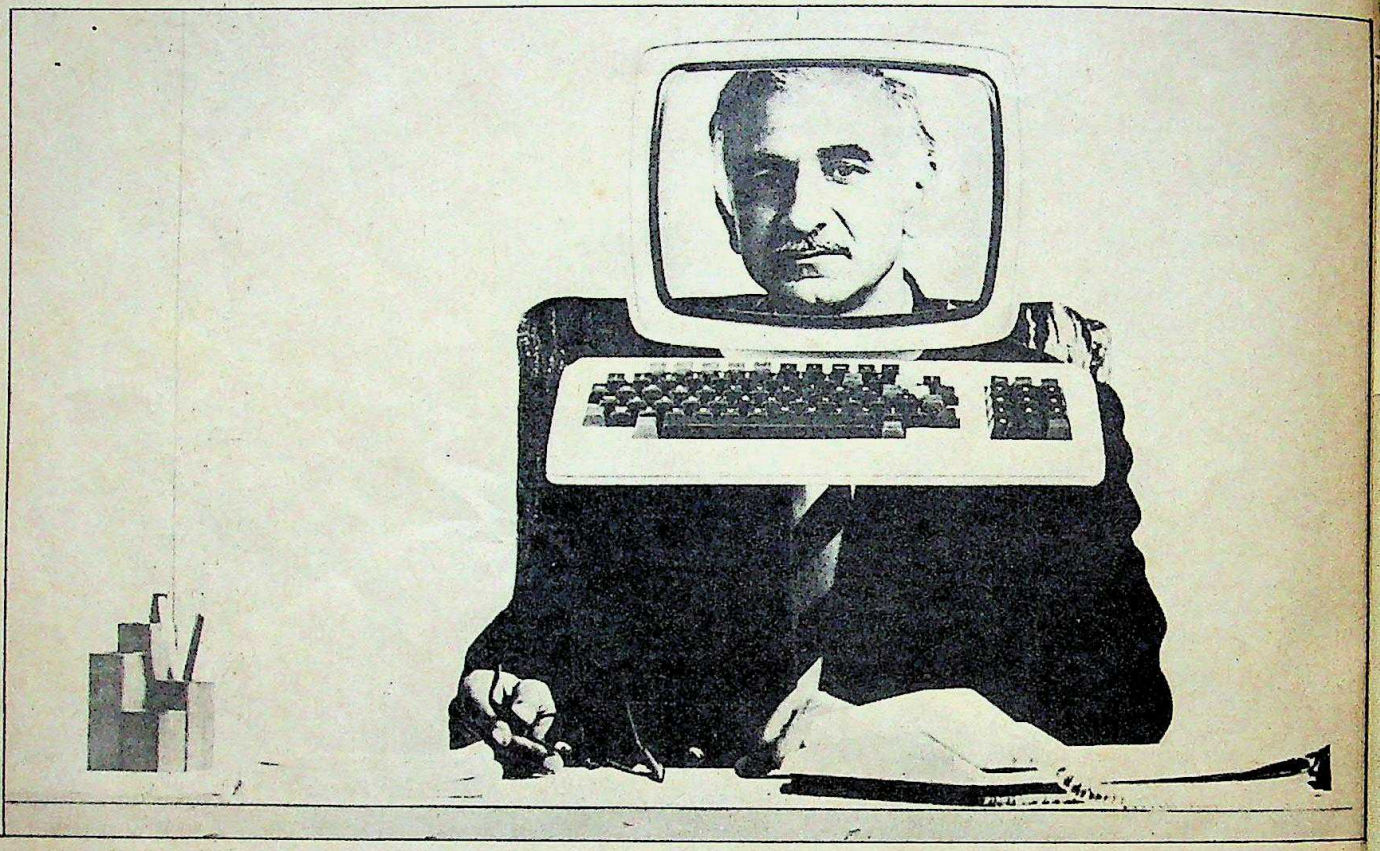
But in the context of the ethnic conflict, Jayewardene seems to have gauged the popular pulse. He held four meetings spread over three days with Indian High Commissioner Mani Dixit in Colombo last fortnight and has promised to respond quickly to India's request for a new package of "concrete" proposals. Till then, the silence that has enveloped Colombo will continue to be an uneasy one.

—MERVYN DE SILVA in Colombo

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Why today's top-managers must have a head for computers.



Fact is, the future of your company depends largely on how you exploit the opportunities computers are throwing up.

According to International Business Week, "For top executives to utilize computer technology fully, they must recognize that it has become too critical to leave to the technicians."

So whether your company already has a computer, or is planning to get one, it is imperative that you understand the essentials of this technology. Only then can you make sure your company gets the most out of computerisation.

That's where COMPUTERS TODAY comes in.

It's the one magazine that looks at new information technologies from the point of view of top management.

Read it. You'll get well-researched, well-analysed, well-presented information that's particularly relevant to the Indian corporate world. Written in a lucid, crisp style.

There's a regular section on 'managing Information Technology.' In it, you'll find articles on how to implement new technologies, the opportunities you can, and should, exploit, the pitfalls to avoid ... the kind of information that's an absolute must for top management.

Over and beyond this, COMPUTERS TODAY gives you the latest industry and product news—both national and international. In fact you will get to know anything that's happening anywhere in the field of computers.

If all this sounds like advertising hype, here's a fact that might interest you : more top-level decision makers read COMPUTERS TODAY than any other computer magazine.

So if you'd like to get in touch with what computers are doing to business today, mail the coupon to us. Fast.

Computers TODAY

I am sending a cheque/DD of Rs 72 in favour of Living Media India Pvt Ltd. Please make sure I get the next 12 issues of Computers Today regularly

Name: _____

Address: _____

Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.
Subscription Department
Thomson Press Building
Post Box 69
Faridabad 121 007
Haryana

INTERFACE-3805

From the publishers of INDIA TODAY

Computers TODAY

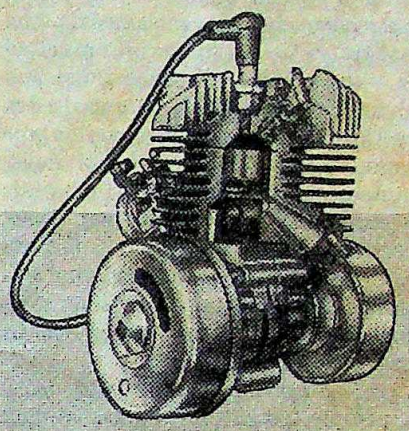
You could turn obsolete without it.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

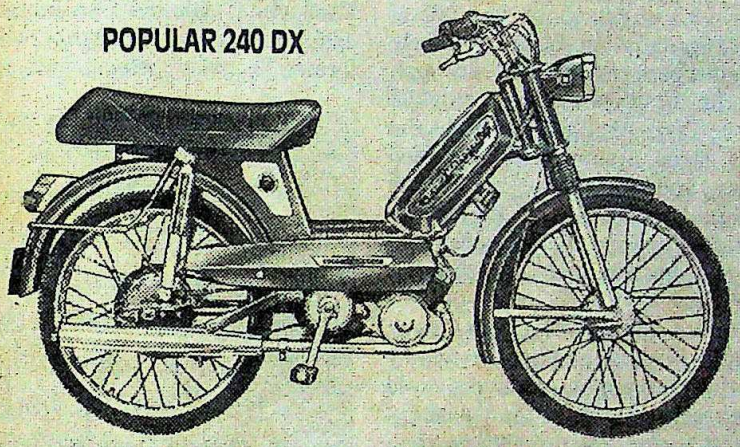
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE QUALITY OF HI-POWER 240 DX SERIES

STANDS OUT! IN SAFETY, STRENGTH, ECONOMY, ELEGANCE



POPULAR 240 DX



NEW

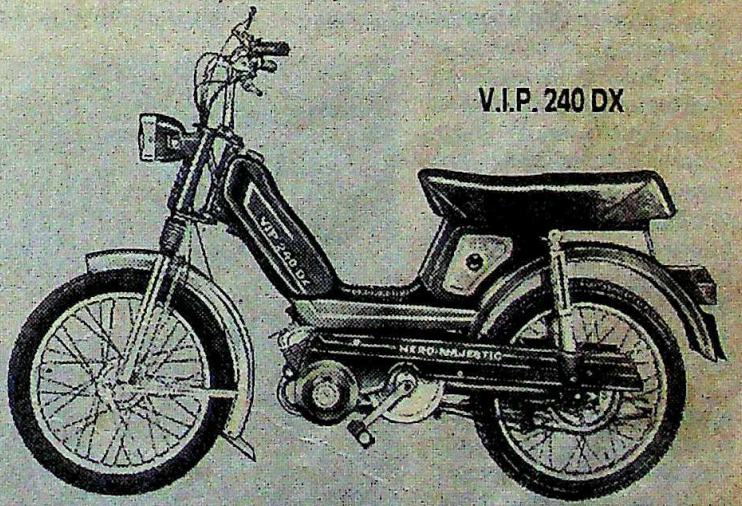
2.4 B.H.P. ENGINE FOR EXTRA POWER

SPECIAL FEATURES :

* PICK-UP (ACCELERATION 0-25 Mts)	:	Under 6 seconds
* MAXIMUM SPEED	:	55 Kms. per Hour
* FUEL CONSUMPTION	:	70 Kms. per Ltr.
* BRAKE PERFORMANCE	:	Improved by Leverage and Brake Lining.
* PAY LOAD	:	120 Kgs.

Hero-Majestic V.I.P. 240 DX and POPULAR 240 DX promise you a new experience in riding pleasure. Equipped with computer-aided power-packed engine, developed with technical know-how obtained from world's leading manufacturers of two-wheelers, for easy starting and faster acceleration, Hero Majestic moped has built-in sturdiness for minimum maintenance. Improved leverage and brake lining ensure better braking efficiency. Highly fuel efficient with a convenient pillion seat to carry two, make Hero-Majestic your best buy in mopeds!

V.I.P. 240 DX



Hero-Majestic

Great in Style. Strong in Performance. Low in Price.

MAJESTIC AUTO LIMITED
C-48, Focal Point, Ludhiana-141 010

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FARRUKH DHONDY

Mischievous Content

ASIAN fascists given labour cash"—ran the bold headline in London's mass-circulated eveninger, The Standard. For the benefit of nonplussed local readers, the paper explained that the "fascists" belonged to the UK branch of the Vishwa Hindu Parishad (VHP) and Labour Party councillors were accused in the Afro-Caribbean-Asian magazine programme—The Bandung File—of indiscriminate funding running to thousands of pounds. The weekly current affairs programme linked the VHP to the RSS harking back to the assassination of Mahatma Gandhi and implicated it for stepping up a vicious campaign of riots in India over the past decade.

Indian viewers could be pardoned if they felt that establishing the RSS-VHP link was not exactly rivetting investigative journalism. What the programme proved was that "fascists" were being funded by the deceased Greater London Council (GLC). In its heyday the GLC has, of course, been slated for its prodigal munificence, funding a melange of obscure Asian and Afro-Caribbean organisations, besides lending sturdy support to gay and lesbian causes. Its former overlord, the imperishable and politically ambitious Ken Livingstone, appeared quite bewildered on camera, perhaps shuddering at the thought of having showered his largesse to rapacious Asian Mussolinis. With appropriate contriteness, Livingstone admitted that the fundings were a "mistake" and he and his advisers didn't have much of a clue about these shadowy and largely unknown Asian organisations.

At one stage, the VHP had approached the Independent Broadcasting Authority about the film and threatened to seek an injunction. However, the programme went ahead. VHP organisers seemed apoplectic when documentary montage of Indira Gandhi's funeral were shown with the organisation being squarely blamed for communal riots in India. In a press statement, they stated: "After viewing the programme ... a wave of outrage and anger has swept through the entire Hindu society. This is a callous attempt to malign a section of the community who are constantly working for better relationship with different faiths and races." Although not every UK-based Hindu was smouldering in a towering rage over a programme that revealed very little which was pathbreaking news except to highlight the GLC funding, there seemed to be considerable resentment that it was so one-sided. Said one official: "Does it not look ridiculous, you talk of Asian fascists and what you see are elderly Hindu ladies performing puja?" Although one of the series' producers, erstwhile Trotskyite Tariq Ali, had stated that the VHP was given a chance to refute the allegations and that they had declined the invitation, the officials of the Hindu organisation insisted that the offer was withdrawn by Channel-4 at the last minute.

It did seem odd, however, that instead of opting for a robust investigative style by which the programme producers could have squarely confronted the VHP about its "fascist tendencies" or unsparing bigotry or its alleged incendiary role as provocateurs in communal riots in India, they had approached the organisation stating that the programme would focus on Hindus in the UK and how they had adapted themselves socially and culturally to life in Britain.

The organisation now says that it will work hard to limit the "damage" done to them. The VHP came to Britain 17 years ago, has a modest membership of 4,000 families and has branches in Bolton, Birmingham, Leicester, Northampton, Hounslow, Wembley, Croydon, Newham, Ilford, Manchester and Southampton.

Although Ali is the series' producer and overall responsibility for the programme lay with Farrukh Dhondy, a Pune-born Parsi who is Channel-4's commissioning editor in charge of ethnic programmes. A former "activist" who helped organis

The programme focused on the alleged incendiary role of the VHP when the producers had, in fact, stated that they would portray how Hindus in UK had adapted themselves socially to life in Britain.

Children at VHP function in Newham

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ladeshi squats during the '70s, dy was not limiting his activities to andung File—he was busy creating a r rumpus elsewhere with his four- "sociological thriller" on BBC-2, The of the Ghetto.

hetto tells the tale of a white Robin who bludgeons boarding houses for en Bengali families to squat whilst hing wits with a serpentine Bangla- businessman. It has been variously ibed as a sort of east-enders with ns (although Bengalis have very to do with turbans) or a white knight rown ghetto. Local press critics have d up its "authenticity" and Dhondy newest darling of this usually une-bor ureous lot.

hetto is produced by Stephen Gilbert

Dhondy: creating a rumpus who has gained a measure of notoriety when the BBC banned his play when one of its props showed a penis pickling in a jar. It is stylishly directed by Roy Battersby (formerly of the Workers Revolutionary Party), splattered with pieces of hard-edged dialogue and jazzed up by hard-driving music—guitars wailing out Lonesome Man Blues—rather than Rabindra Sangeet for London's squalid Bricklane Bengalis. Says Dhondy: "When there is a vacuum of power, all manner of indiscriminate forces like businessmen, adventurers, opportunists, do-gooders, rush in to fill it and subsequently fight each other." The principal adversarial roles are played with a degree of tautness—by Tim Roth as the anarchist white leader of the local squatocracy and Zia Mohyeddin, superb as the supple and mawky intriguer.

ROTH'S Mathew is straight out of Bombay's commercial films: champion of dispossessed Asians, he utilises his fist better than his brains—a white Amitabh Bachchan from Deewar set in the fetid purlieus of London's East End, inherited by Bengalis from the Jews and the Huguenots.

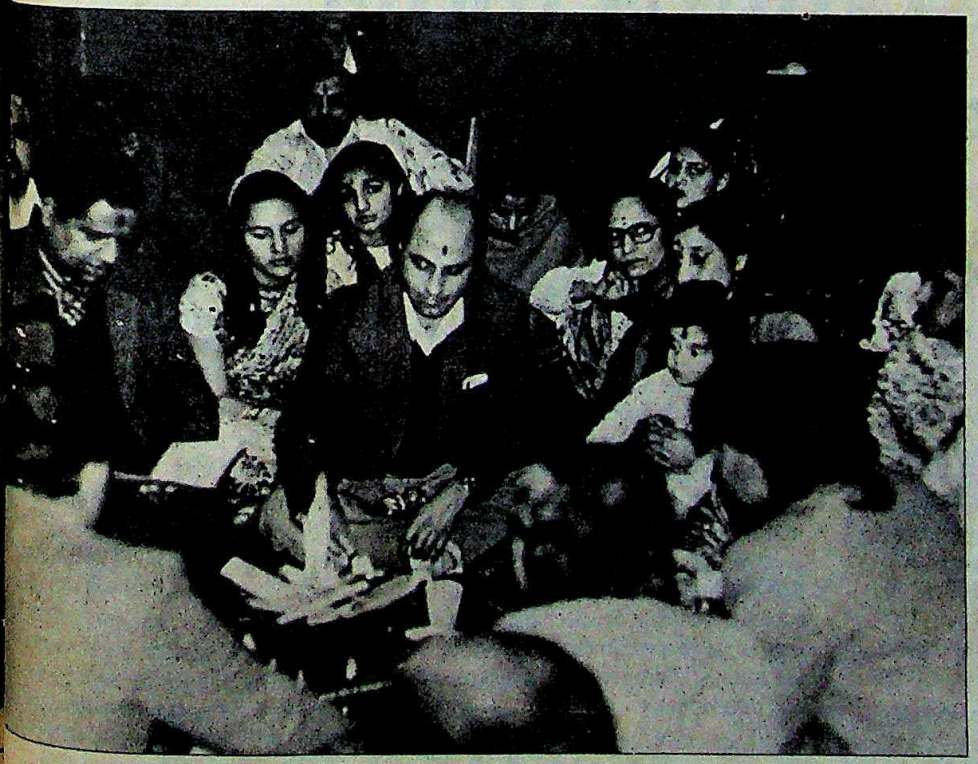
But after an impressive start, the rest of the series is so cumbrous that even the nimble editing, ingenious camerawork and the voluptuous bluesy music cannot camouflage its defects which are pretty easy to come by. The sardonic humour gives way to some wooden, turgid dialogue. Many of the supporting characters look and sound phony despite Dhondy's best efforts to weave in sociological home truths—rebellion in Islamic schools, loopy Asian businessmen laundering cash in a racket in illegal immigrants and almost predictably, the villainous GLC and labour councils. Dhondy very emphatically says that he is against the "gerrymandering betrayals" of the working class and labour movement by the Labour Party.

As a commissioning editor, Dhondy had scrapped minority programmes like Eastern Eye and Black on Black for their uninspiring content. He would like programmes such as The Bandung File to be "mischief" all the way. The one on the Vishwa Hindu Parishad certainly got up to it, though perhaps not with entirely happy results. Ghetto too got into "mischief" in a way Dhondy might not have expected: praised by English critics, but fiercely lambasted by many hurt and upset East End Bengalis. The Federation of Bangladeshi Youth Organisations (FBYO) sent letters to Britain's ethnic press in which it challenged Ghetto's pretensions to realism. Mincing no words, it bluntly said: "The Bengali speech in the film, as an example, was ludicrous in its non-resemblance to any comprehensible variation of the language spoken in greater Bengal."

The FBYO went on to accuse Dhondy for "persistently" kicking the backs "he rode on to get where he is". It concluded that this was hardly surprising "since the film, far from posing a challenge to the racist inclinations of the media, actually reinforces them. Such loyalty, of course, needs to be adequately rewarded". Dhondy had indeed received congratulatory thumps-on-the-back from the English press for Ghetto's so-called abrasive realism. But east London's Bengalis say the series is not set in the East End: it is dreamed up in some hallucinatory Ruritania. Despite the carping in some quarters over Ghetto or The Bandung File however, reviews by and large have been laudatory and full of praise. And it seems quite unlikely that Dhondy has said goodbye to airing more programmes brimming over with "mischief" content.

—RAMESH CHANDRAN

Havan during Makar Sankranti



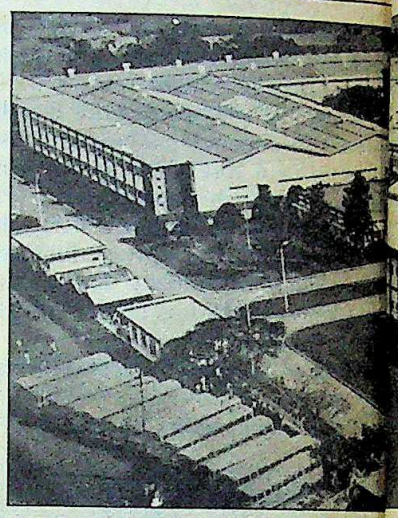
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

As a pioneer of electronics in India, Philips maintains the initiative: searching for new ways to bring the benefits of modern electronics to improve the quality of life.

Applying modern technologies, Philips India has introduced more firsts than any other company in the business: developed and manufactured specifically for Indian conditions.

In the years ahead, the Company stands fully geared to innovate and open new avenues in home entertainment and professional electronics.



Over 55 years of experience in India, true

But what's so unique about Philips India?

Firm roots and commitments in India

It was back in 1930 that a small beginning was made in Calcutta. This became the seed of what was to be later known as Philips India.

Over the years, the Company, as part of its corporate policy identified itself with national needs and aspirations and established strong roots in the country.

A responsible corporate citizen, Philips India has always kept the Indian interest at heart. Be it in the range of the Company's products that are in keeping with the needs of the nation, or in the pollution control and safety aspects of its factories. You can also see this consciousness in the Company's export programme and striving for self-sufficiency.

Today, the commitments of the Company are wide-ranging: in terms of its investments in people, technologies, plant and machinery, tool rooms and R&D.

But most important of all is the commitment of Philips India to its customers.

Total integration

From identifying the needs of the Indian household to developing, designing, engineering and bringing home a wide range of products, Philips India involves itself every step of the way. It has been a consistent policy at Philips to build an integrated infrastructure and manufacture everything from components to finished goods.

This policy has led to the establishment of a number of modern factories in different parts of the country, supported by extensive R&D facilities, in which an investment of over Rs. 55 million has been made—the biggest investment in the private sector in the areas of lighting and electronics research and development.

Highly qualified trained technologists research relentlessly with the latest instrumentation facilities. Skilled industrial designers continuously evolve new stylin that reflect the latest in function and desig

In fact, Philips India has introduced mor firsts than any other company in the industr

Building quality and reliability into every Philips product while keeping prices competitive are the many manufacturing complexes of Philips.

In design, layout, machinery and production methods, these factories rank amongst the most modern production centres in India.

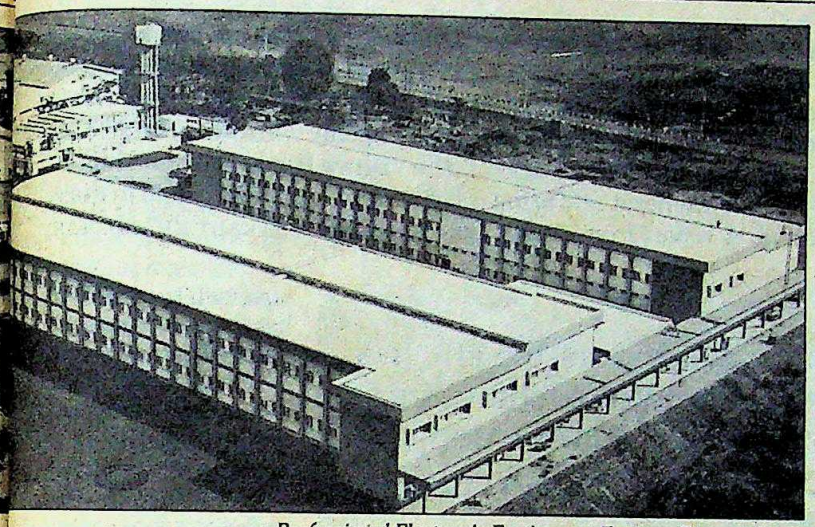
Ever since the very first radio factory begi its operations in 1948, Philips has been employing high levels of technology and constantly updating methods and process

An army of plant personnel – over 4700 people, the largest for any electronics company in the private sector – work day and night with computer-aided technologi in factories that together span more than 90,000 sq. metres of covered area.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and e

PHILIPS



Professional Electronic Equipment Factory, Pimpri, Pune.

Today, the commitments of the Company are wide-ranging: in terms of its investments in people, technologies, plant and machinery, tool rooms and R&D.

e area of components, the Company is aving a high degree of self-reliance by ucing materials like ceramics and foils.

f tool rooms that e no room for error ool room is the prime requisite for the ufacture of high precision components quipment.

recision engineering in electronics, ps has established one of the most sticated tool room facilities in India, ing over 4,000 sq. metres of space.

tners in Progress

rt of its corporate philosophy, ompany has developed a number of aries. As many as 1,000 ancillary units, her, supply components, pieceparts ub-assemblies amounting to about hird in value of the total production of ompany. A team of specially trained pany engineers regularly monitor the rmance and make sure that Philips gn, requirements, specifications and y standards are adhered to by them. gh continued technical and gement support, the total competence se suppliers improves over the years. has been the guiding principle behind ompany's policy of establishing a partnership with its suppliers and ancillaries all over the country, based on mutual trust and respect.

Ticking with the times

Keeping abreast with the latest technology, to maintain international standards, also requires trained personnel with up-to-date skills.

At Philips, training is to skill formation what the R&D is to product development. In fact skill formation goes beyond the training of its own personnel and extends to cover suppliers, dealers and small scale units as well.

Reaching out to you

Bringing Philips' products and services closer to you is the nation-wide network of Philips dealers and service personnel with a ready stock of over 7,500 and more types of spares. Because Philips India believes that its products and services should be readily available to all.

Most of the Company's dealers around the country are also authorised to service equipment. Six Philips service centres, a staff of 180 trained engineers and a large network of dealer-technicians trained by Philips India are equipped with extensive documentation and stock of spares.

The Company provides its dealer-technicians detailed training on all aspects of customer service. For example: in the last few years over 1,500 dealers have been trained by Philips India.

From design to service, only Philips gives you reliability

The Company's concern for customers extends from basic design, manufacture and quality control to service and availability of spares.

Yes, from design to service, only Philips India gives you reliability.

That is why Philips India, in over 55 years, has become a respected household name.

Trusted by people like you.

Tomorrow, the same pioneering spirit that has guided the Company in the past will steer it to innovate and set new records. Continuing a 55 year old commitment to the Indian household.

When it's Philips, you're sure

OBM/7610

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAJASTHAN

Conversion Convulsions

The Meherats form a unique community of Rajput Muslims. Scattered along various districts in Udaipur and Ajmer they claim direct descent from the family of Prithviraj Chauhan. For nearly 500 years—since they were converted to Islam—the community has been a shining example of the oft-repeated slogan 'Unity in Diversity'. They worship in the Islamic way but they also pray to Hindu gods and goddesses and they intermarry openly with other Hindu Rajput clans. But this Shangrila of religious tolerance is now undergoing an upheaval. The Vishwa Hindu Parishad has launched a massive and well-organised drive to reconvert the Meherat and bring them back into the Hindu fold in mass ceremonies. This has led to new tensions and hatred. A report from Senior Correspondent SREEKANT KHANDEKAR:

ONE EVENING last fortnight, darkness fell on village Shekhawas, on the northern tip of Udaipur district, in a way it never had. Birds chirped as they settled down for the night, but for furlongs around, their sounds were drowned out by two loudspeakers which blared Marwari bhajans and folk songs.

> Over the last five years, the VHP has been bringing the Meherat into the Hindu fold. 40,000 Meherat, Muslims have reconverted.

Men scurried about in the hamlet called Baba Ram Deoji Ki Badiya, laying durries and installing a generator which lit up eight dimly-glowing bulbs—a rarity in the village. As several hundred villagers gathered, the workers erected a tiny podium on which was placed a portrait of Prithviraj Chauhan.

The banners were revealing: 'Unity in Diversity', 'Conversions are a plot to divide the Nation', 'Declare with pride we are Hindus'. And the one that dominated the stage read: Vishwa Hindu Parishad Pariwartan Samaroha (VHP reconversion ceremony).

There was an inordinate delay in the arrival of the main speakers but the audience of about 500 did not complain. The music was frequently interrupted by announcements that counselled the villagers to remain patient. Finally at 10.30, when office-bearers of the Vishwa Hindu Parishad (VHP) arrived, the generator failed, plunging the assembly into darkness. But only briefly was this humble machine to halt the majestic progress of an ancient religion in central Rajasthan.

The will of the determined VHP is directed at an extraordinary community which lives largely in Ajmer district but spills into Udaipur, Pali and Bhilwara. The roughly three-lakh-strong Meherat take pride in being descendants of Prithviraj Chauhan. There are various versions of when and how they left Hinduism for Islam. Some say this happened 700 years ago, while others claim that mass conversions took place barely 300 years ago.

Local history has it that faced with a boycott by other Rajput clans, many of them returned to the Hindu fold within a few decades and they are now called the Rawat Rajputs. Th

Meherat conversions in Shekhawas

CC-0. In Pu

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

erat, the Kathat and the Cheeta, ever, stayed on but only just about. Cheeta take Islam seriously. But the erat, who include the sub-group at, present the strange picture of a munity that is confused about its ry. Their dilemma came through in 971 and 1981 census when most of declared their religion to be herat", not Islam and certainly not luism.

Until quite recently, the Meherat cele- ed Muslim as well as Hindu festivals. ing in their dress gave any evidence eir religious practices: al- all the men wore dhotis and as while women stuck to the tional dress common to all. true that the males were mcised, the dead were bur- nd marriage was by nikaah. ew of them wore beards or d mosques or knew their ous texts. They prayed in- stead to saints Tejaji and Baba Ram Deoji. Even if they saw the contradictions, it did not bother them.

But easily the most striking feature was the remarkable communal harmony that prevailed, untouched by the religious fanaticism that ruled elsewhere in the country. For instance, Rawat and Meherat Rajputs, with different religious attitudes, intermarried frequently, deciding individually on the nikaah or the agni saakshi. Sometimes, brothers within a single family professed different religions but no tensions arose.

Symbols of the new frenetic religious activity are the more than 50 temples and mosques that have sprung up over the past five years.

Photographs by PRASHANT PANJIYAR

But things have been changing dramatically. Over the last five years, almost unnoticed, the VHP has been carrying out its plan of bringing the Meherat into the Hindu fold. Going by VHP figures, an incredible 40,000 Meherat have been brought back into the Hindu fold. The Ajmer police, however, put the number at 10,000 and the truth lies somewhere in between these exaggerated and underplayed extremes. It is, in any case, the most ambitious attempt to extend the boundaries of Hinduism in recent times.

This is not the first time that an effort has been made to draw them to Hinduism. In the late '40s and early '50s, the Arya Samaj, assisted by the former ruler of Jodhpur, made a concerted effort, but it soon petered out. The VHP appeared on the scene in the late '70s. According to Uma Shankar Sharma, a pracharak of the RSS who is spearheading the VHP's work in the area, the impetus for "pariwartan" came from the Meenakshipuram conversions. Says Sharma: "We believe that the Meherat are basically Hindus who have strayed now observe some objectionable practices. It is our duty to correct this."

BUT at what cost? Last year, a man was killed in a fight between supporters of Islam and Hinduism in a village in Pali district over whether an old lady should be buried or cremated. And early this year, in another village, prohibitory orders were enforced because the two communities came close to blows over the rights on a village well. These may well be early indicators of future tensions.

Says Shafi Mohammad, headmaster of a Roopnagar school and secretary of the Rajasthan Cheeta Meherat (Kathat) Sabha: "The VHP's drive is compelling people to desert the middle-of-the-road path. It is giving rise to polarisation within the community. People within the community are too close to indulge in rioting but outsiders can ultimately provoke them. The whole area is sadly turning into a heap of gunpowder."

According to Ram Singh, a VHP worker of Surajpura village in Ajmer district, the process of persuasion has taken several months and it involves kirtans and meetings in which the history of the Meherat is narrated. Says Ram Singh: "We find that the Meherat are more willing to come to Hinduism than they were five years ago. But there is also greater tension than before."

ollection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Before conversion, villagers are made to sign a joint letter addressed to the VHP which invariably says that the villagers want to give up practices associated with Islam at a ceremony in which they will swear to adhere to "pure Kshatriya religion". The letter always ends with a request to the VHP to make arrangements and screen films on Prithviraj Chauhan and Baba Ram Deoji. A letter of request of this kind is the VHP's way of ensuring that the conversion ceremony is seen as purely voluntary.

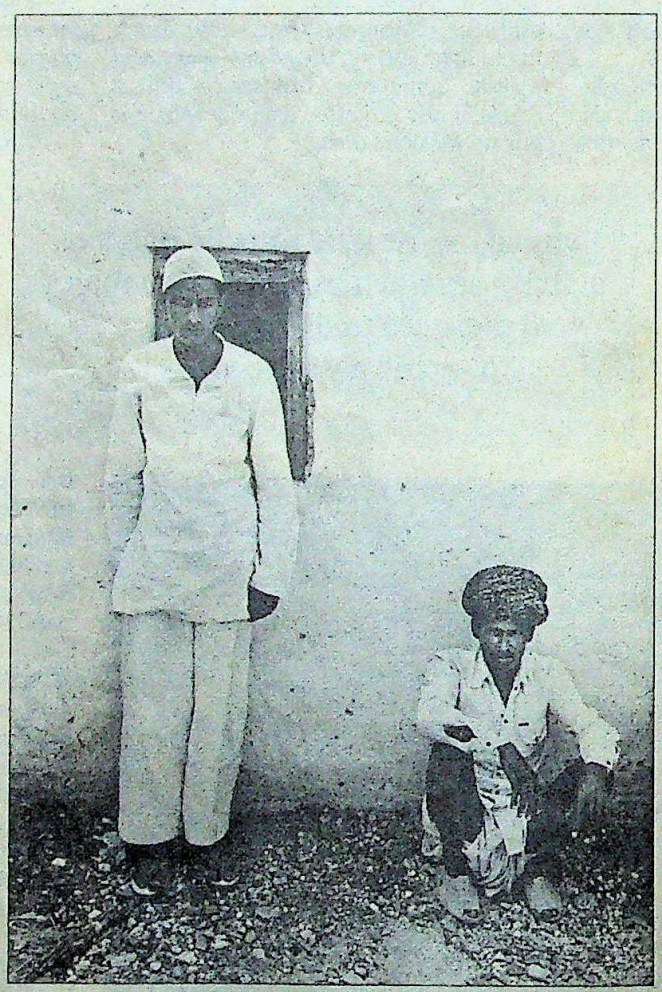
The key to the ceremony, it would seem, is these films, since the Meherat revere the two personages. In between reels of the films, speeches are made and an important one made by the Rawat Rajput Sabha is that so long as the fresh converts strictly follow Hindu traditions, give up circumcision, nikaah, visiting mosques and eating halal meat and burial, they will be accepted as brothers. This speech is particularly vital because the converts need to be assured that they will be accepted in Hinduism's intricate caste and subcaste heirarchy. Indeed, the VHP has been working among leaders of the Rajput subgroups, persuading them to accept the new Hindus.

The actual conversion involves a 30-minute-long havan in which shlokas to Lord Ganesh are recited along with the Gayatri Mantra. The men are given new towels and the women blouse pieces, and a sacred thread is tied around the men's wrists. It ends with a VHP worker asking: "Hum kaun hain (Who are we)?" And the villagers replying in chorus: "Hum Hindu hain (We are Hindus)."

The activities of the VHP have gone beyond just ceremony. The organisation runs about 30 balwadis, three small ayurvedic dispensaries, and two small hostels for boys at Masuda and Beawar. Symbols of the new frenetic religious activity are the more than 50 temples and mosques that have sprung up in this area over the past five years. This, in a region where for decades these places have been in neglect and ruin.

The VHP's aggressive work has had an adverse reaction too. It has forced the Meherat to closely question their mixed religious beliefs. Their search for religious identity has also driven thousands of them to Islam.

This has come as a boon to Muslim religious organisations which found it hard in the past to gain a foothold in this region. Organisations like the Jamiat-ul-Ulema-i-Hind and the Jamaat-e-Islami have now turned active, some because they want to spread the message of Islam, others because they see an excellent opportunity to make a political base for themselves. As Shafi Mohammad smiles and says: "The VHP has helped us unwittingly."



Shafi (left) and Sultan, Meherat muslims from Roopnagar: social tensions

Predictably, allegations about the inflow of foreign funds are made and just as quickly denied. What is true is that these Muslim organisations do send their representatives to the area more often now than before. More importantly, several dozen Maulvis have moved into mosques from various parts of the country. The villagers raise contributions to both build mosques and to maintain the Maulvis, and the rest is made up by these organisations. Neither the Hindus nor the Muslims are bothered normally to seek the district administration's permission for such construction.

In Suhawa village, for instance, a mosque is being constructed three years after the VHP held a conversion ceremony there. Supervising the building of it, Amanullah says that he and his elder brother, who is the Maulvi, moved to the village about two years ago. It is indicative of the open-mindedness in the community that the mason working on the mosque is Uday Singh who embraced Hinduism just three years ago. He sees no conflict and grins: "It has fallen on the shoulders of the Meherat to bear the responsibility of both religions." By way of testimony stands the house of Imanuddin nearby. On the walls are emblazoned not only the Islamic auspicious number 786 and the star and crescent, but also a Hindu swastika.

Superintendent of Police for Ajmer district J.P. Mishra finds nothing alarming about the activities of these religious organisations. He says: "If people voluntarily want to accept a particular religion, what can we do? As long as these organisations work overtly and covertly, and do not preach hatred, there is nothing to worry about."

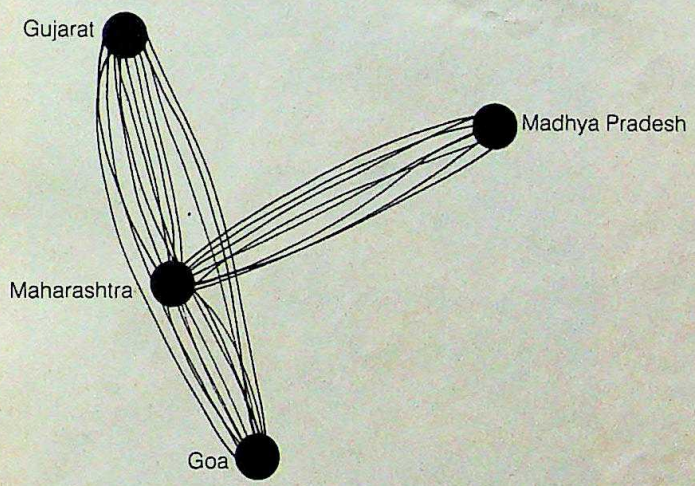
Mishra may not want to admit it, but there can be no doubt that social tensions are gradually rising. For instance, the relationship between villagers of Muslim-dominated Roopnagar and neighbouring Kolpura where many conversions took place have been frozen into polite formality.

Five years, after all, is just a fraction of a moment in the life of a religion. What the future holds will be decided by religious organisations, many of which are known to have used local conflicts to introduce a religious bias. And from there to violence is but a short step. The Meherat have displayed refreshing sanity so far, but if the current pattern of affairs continues, it cannot be taken for granted forever.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In a flick of an eye, in a fraction of a second, the new BBC computerised Load Despatch System can complete all this: Measure power generated in Gujarat, Maharashtra, Madhya Pradesh and Goa. Compare it with the power load needed. Assess surplus or shortfall. Instruct the surplus State's load despatch system to divert power to the deficient State. Store all this information. All it takes is just milli seconds. It's a more comfortable world with the latest generation electronics from BBC.



HBB has commissioned the country's largest computerised load despatch system.

To supervise the generation and distribution of power for the Western Region Electricity Board.

And it's been working efficiently ever since.

Ceaselessly adjusting the flow of electricity throughout the Western Region.

Co-ordinating between 36 power stations. In an area covering 8,51,000 sq kms. That's 29% of the country.

Compensating for voltage fluctuations and breakdowns. So you get electricity where it's needed. Fast.

BBC computer based Supervisory Control and Load Despatch Systems. Front line technology from Switzerland.

Designed for total reliability, with a hot standby back-up system. Dual computers to make sure nothing goes wrong.

Already installed in 120 projects around the world. Now working in India. For anyone lucky enough to live in the Western Region.

BBC
BROWN BOVERI
Hindustan Brown Boveri Limited
Electronic Systems Department
Brown Boveri House
Race Course Circle
Baroda 390 007

The latest generation in electronics and data processing just came to power. From BBC Brown Boveri.

SPEER 347 86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

City View

THE NEW LANDSCAPE
by CHARLES CORREA
The Book Society of India, Bombay
Price: Rs 65; Pages: 135

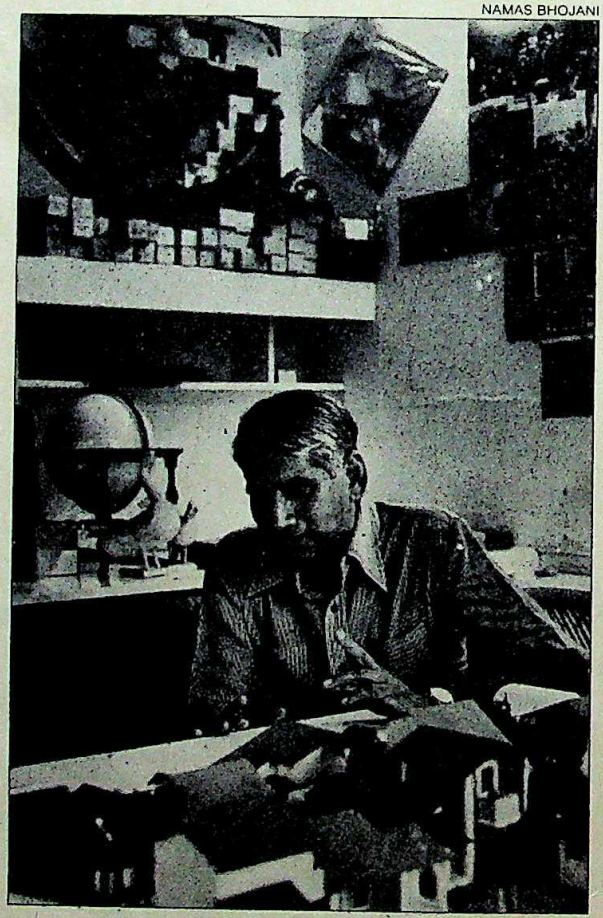
CHARLES Correa is known, both here and abroad, mainly as an architect. But his book shows that his heart lies in city planning. The New Landscape is an impassioned plea to abandon grandiose concepts of planning based on preconceptions of what cities ought to look like, which are borrowed from the industrialised countries of the "north", and to design not just cities but homes that meet the needs and suit the pockets of the people who will live in them. The message of the book is thus intensely human. In fact, this lucidly-written and brilliantly-illustrated book is suffused with a concern for human beings and the quality of their lives.

At the core of the author's thesis lies the conviction that each civilisation, each society, has already evolved not only the architecture, but also the patterns of urban development that most closely suit its climate, topography, economic activity, family relations and social habits. Thus the first necessary requirement in a town planner is humility. He must not only discard most of his "western" preconceptions (and this means most of what he has studied in schools of planning and architecture), but must study how people actually lived and still live in the traditional parts of his society. Above all, he must study how they designed their houses, how they built them, with what they built them, and how closely they grouped them.

The author's views on this subject bear the strong impress of the thinking of the late Constantinos Doxiadis, founder of the Institute of Ekistics in Athens, and perhaps the greatest town planner of our times. Like him, Correa believes that cities cannot, in the final analysis, be planned. They grow organically out of the needs of the people, and of those who are drawn to them. Since these needs are social—inasmuch as they are born of man's relationship with other men—cities become the personification of the societies that have built them.

From this there emerges a profoundly different concept of the function of the town planner. This is not to police the growth of a city but to guide it, not to deny people the right to build a home, open a shop or set up a factory, but to suggest when they may do so to their own greater advantage. Such a town planner will plan for small decentralised communities, not vast centralised cities; he will seek to shift employment where people live, and not concentrate it in specified "business" or industrial locations, forcing people to travel to them. In sum, wherever possible, he will allow natural growth to proceed unhindered.

NAMAS BHOJANI



Correa: human concerns

The author concedes, albeit implicitly, that the modern city cannot be a carbon copy of the cities of antiquity. Three major changes have upset the delicate balances between town and country which existed before: the industrial revolution, the revolution in transport and the revolution in health. Each of these has put limits to natural, unplanned growth, that must be reorganised. The first has created hazardous processes, materials and wastes that make it necessary to separate the living areas from the factories. The second has made it possible to travel 50 km by a suburban train in the same time as it took people of ancient Athens to walk or ride 3 km to work. This has expanded the physical limits of the city and laid the foundations of the megapoli of 15 and 20 million inhabitants that are springing up everywhere. And the third has created a rate of urban population growth that was never known before.

Despite this, the author argues, the essence of the planners' task has not changed because the needs and aspirations of the people who live in, and move to, cities have not changed. The challenge before him is to understand these and to ensure their fulfilment in the changed circumstances in which city growth is taking place today.

While there is a conceptual framework underlying Correa's book, his concern is not to elaborate on this. Instead, he has chosen to give a host of specific examples, leaving the reader to draw the general lessons implicit in them. In this he is aided by a remarkable choice of photographs and illustrations. From these as much as from his spare and direct text, there emerge some of his basic prescriptions for planners.

Lastly, it is necessary to note what Correa's book does not do. The New Landscape does not try to tackle the central problem that third world governments face—which is how to make shelter affordable to the poor. Roughly half the cost of a home is accounted for by land. Another half of the balance is attributable to the provision of services. Bringing these within the reach of the poor is possible but not easy. In fact, in scores of projects throughout the world, these costs have been brought down or are being brought down through the use of new technologies, simple materials and new methods of financing. Correa's book offers a valuable insight into how the problem of urbanisation and shelter can be tackled, but it does not provide a complete answer.

—PREM SHANKER JHA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When she won't accept diamonds
and can't be bothered with trinkets...
give her something she'll really love
...Amul Chocolates.

Six delicious varieties...
Amul Coffee, Amul Crisp,
Amul Bitter, Amul Milk Chocolate,
Amul Fruit & Nut, Amul Orange.

Amul Chocolates
a gift for someone you love

Soft and creamy, like Swiss chocolates...

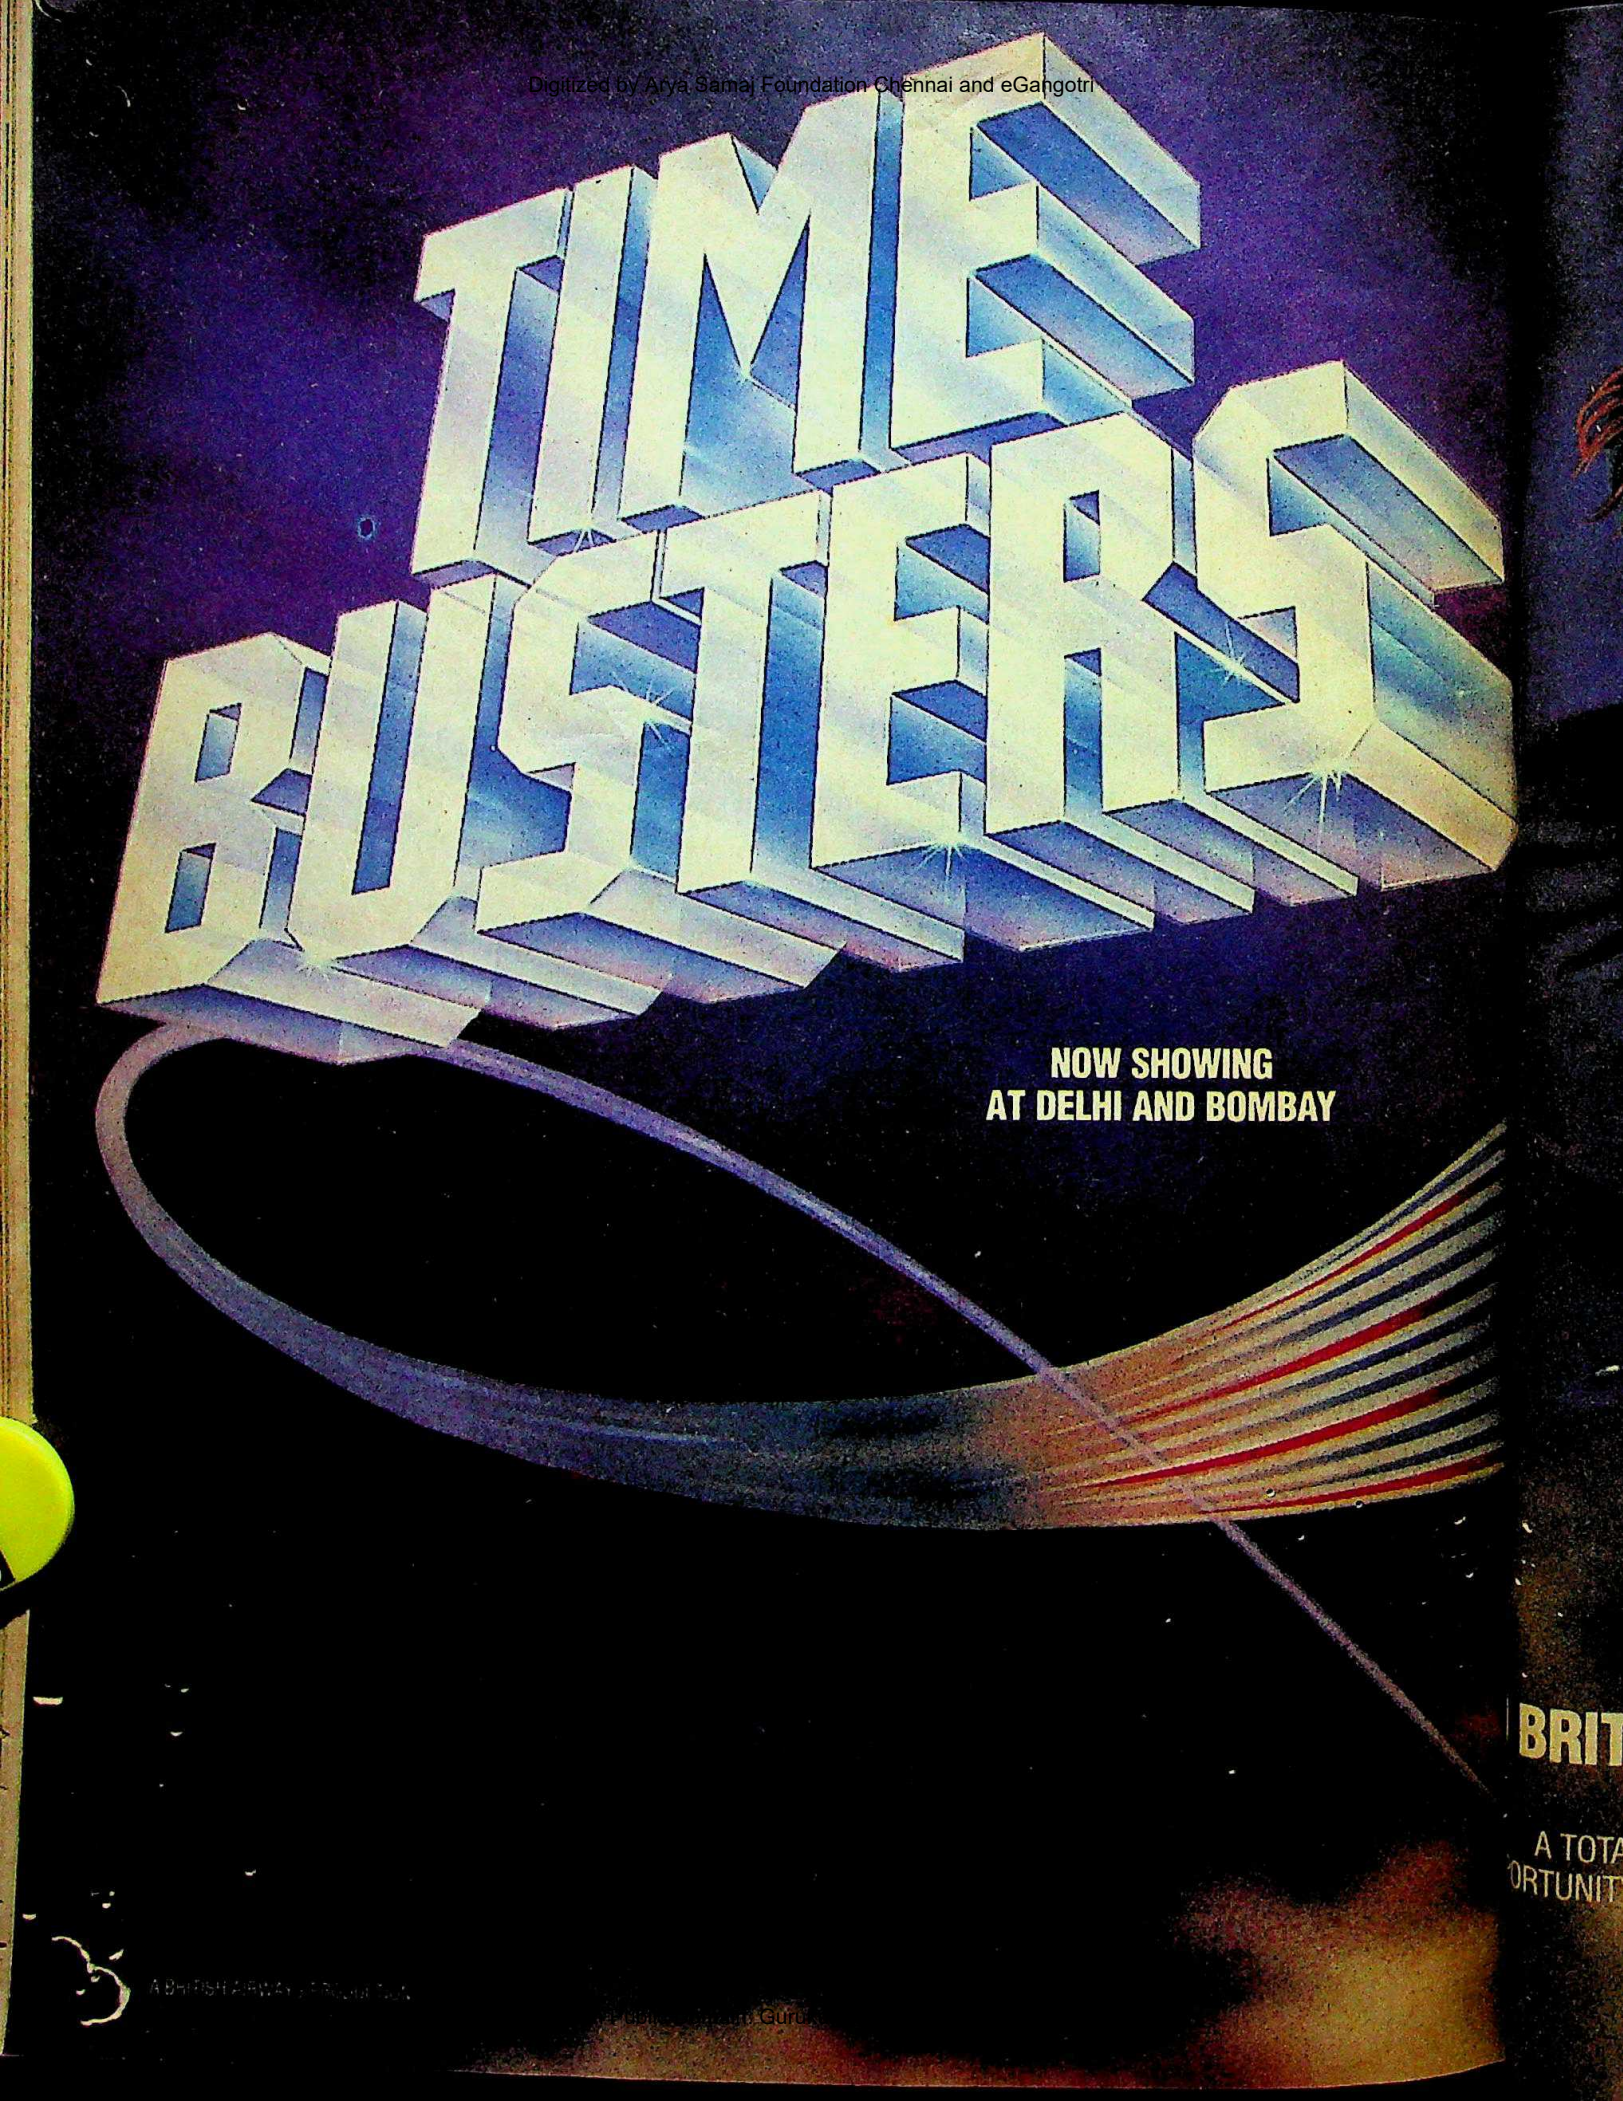
its creaminess sealed in silver foil...

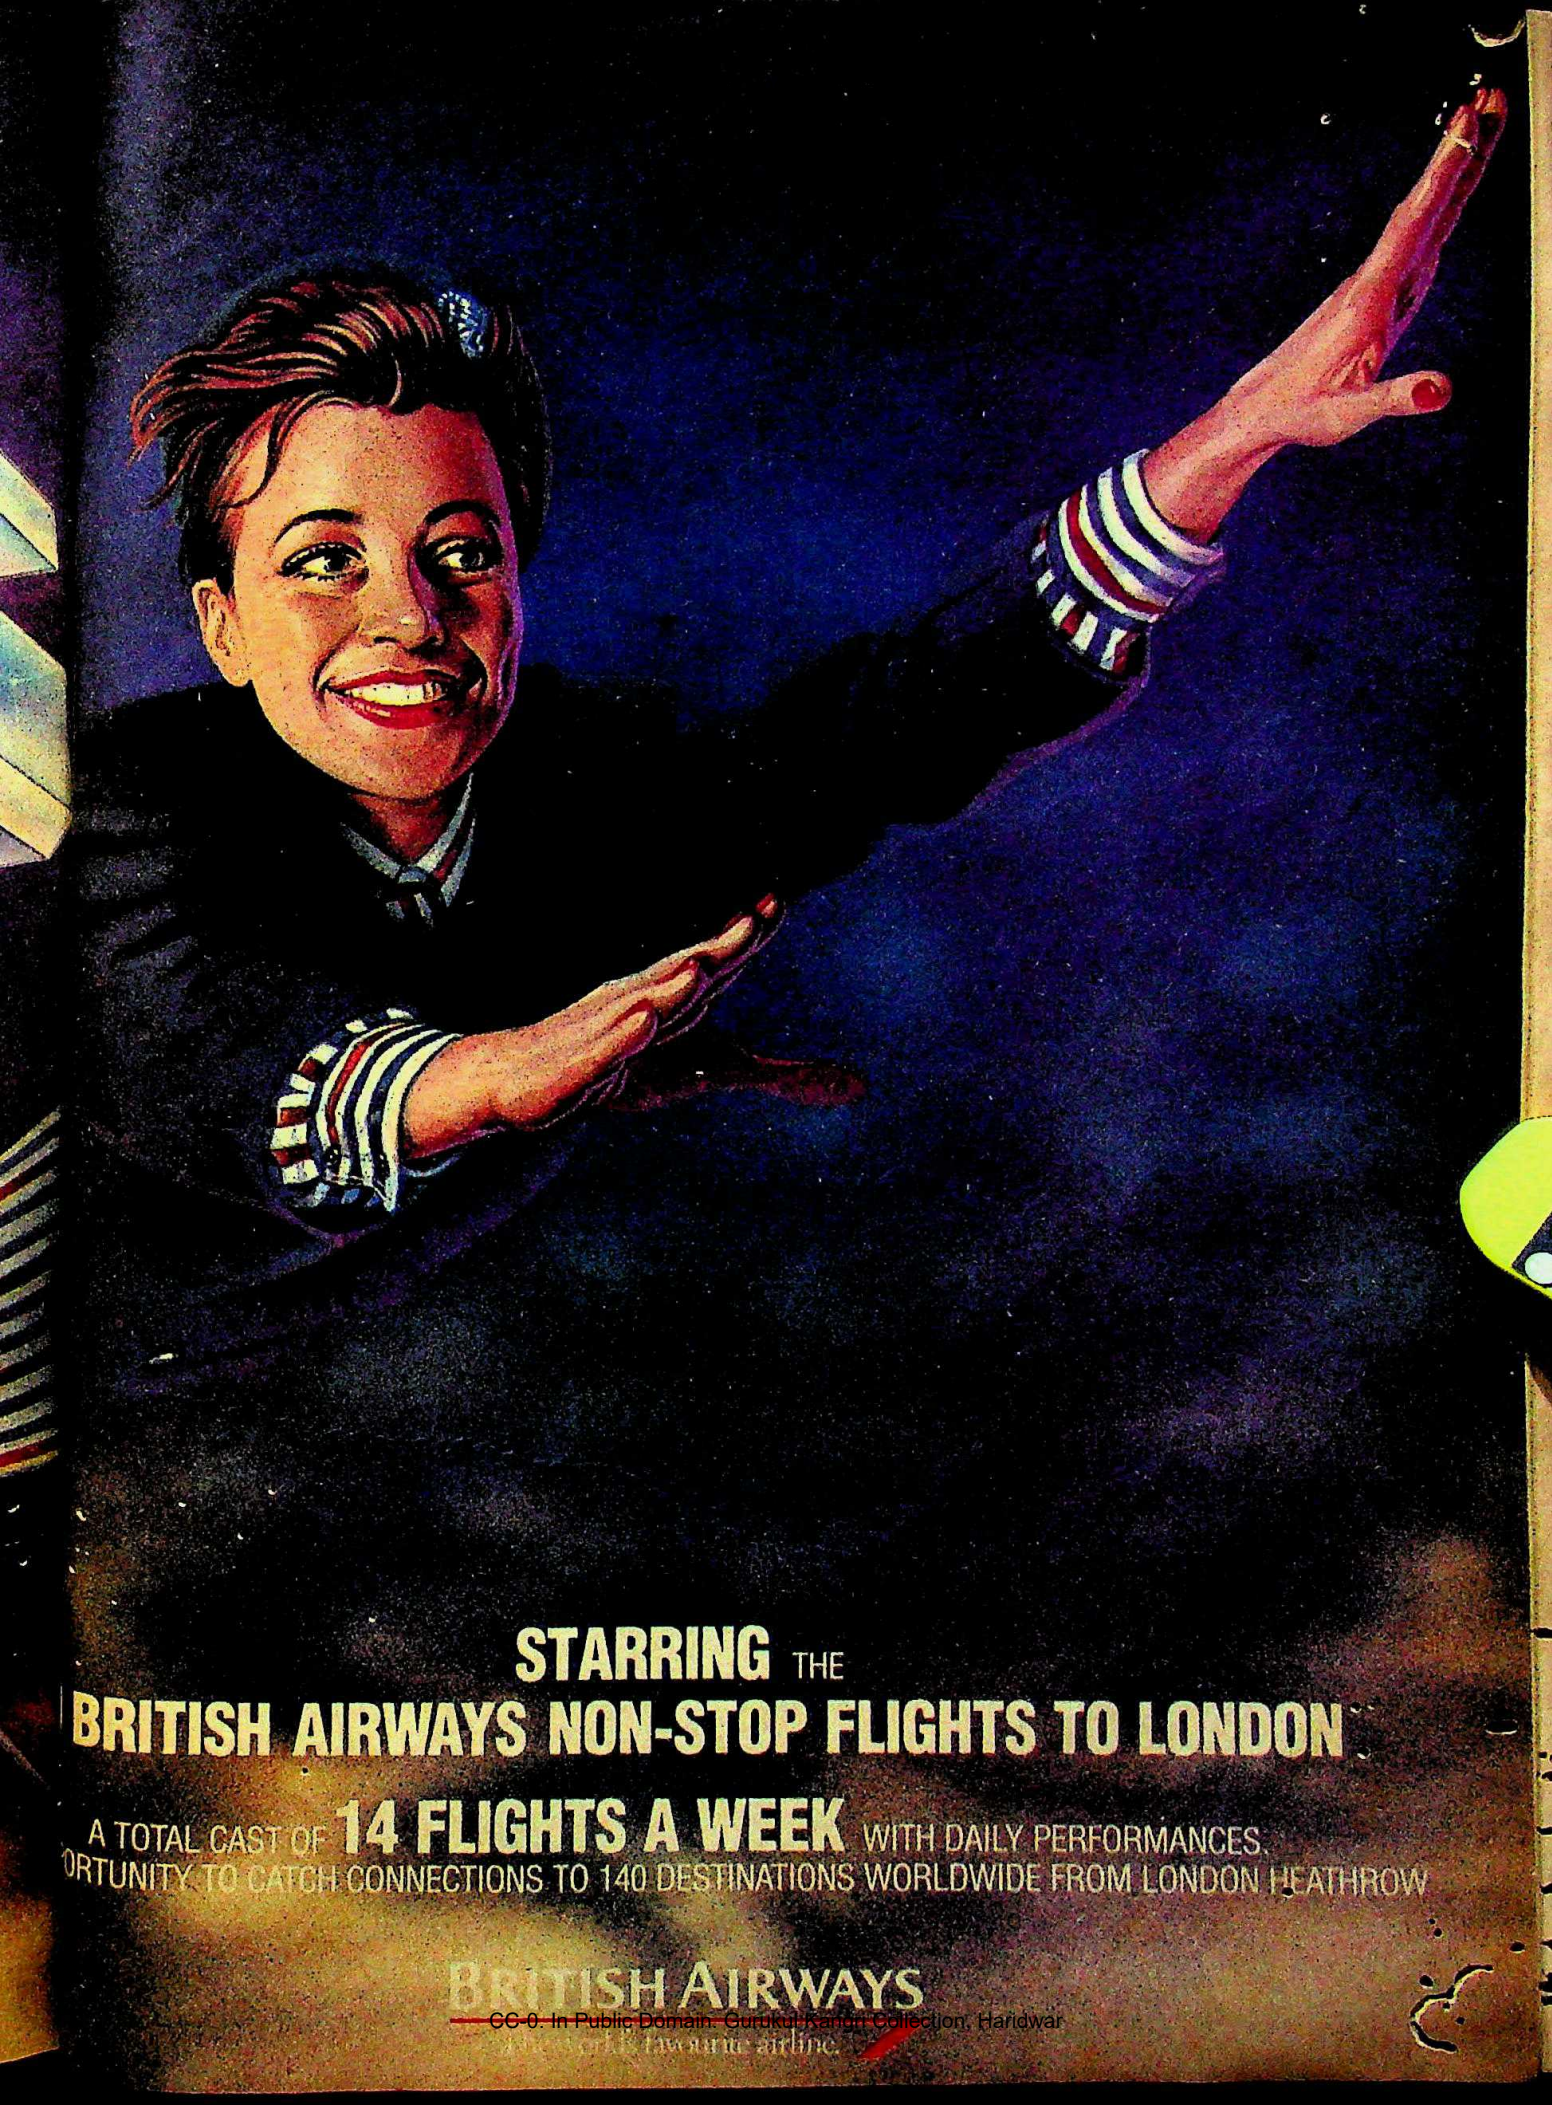
and foil-board carton to keep it fresh.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Marketed by: Gujarat Co-operative Milk Marketing Federation Ltd., Anand

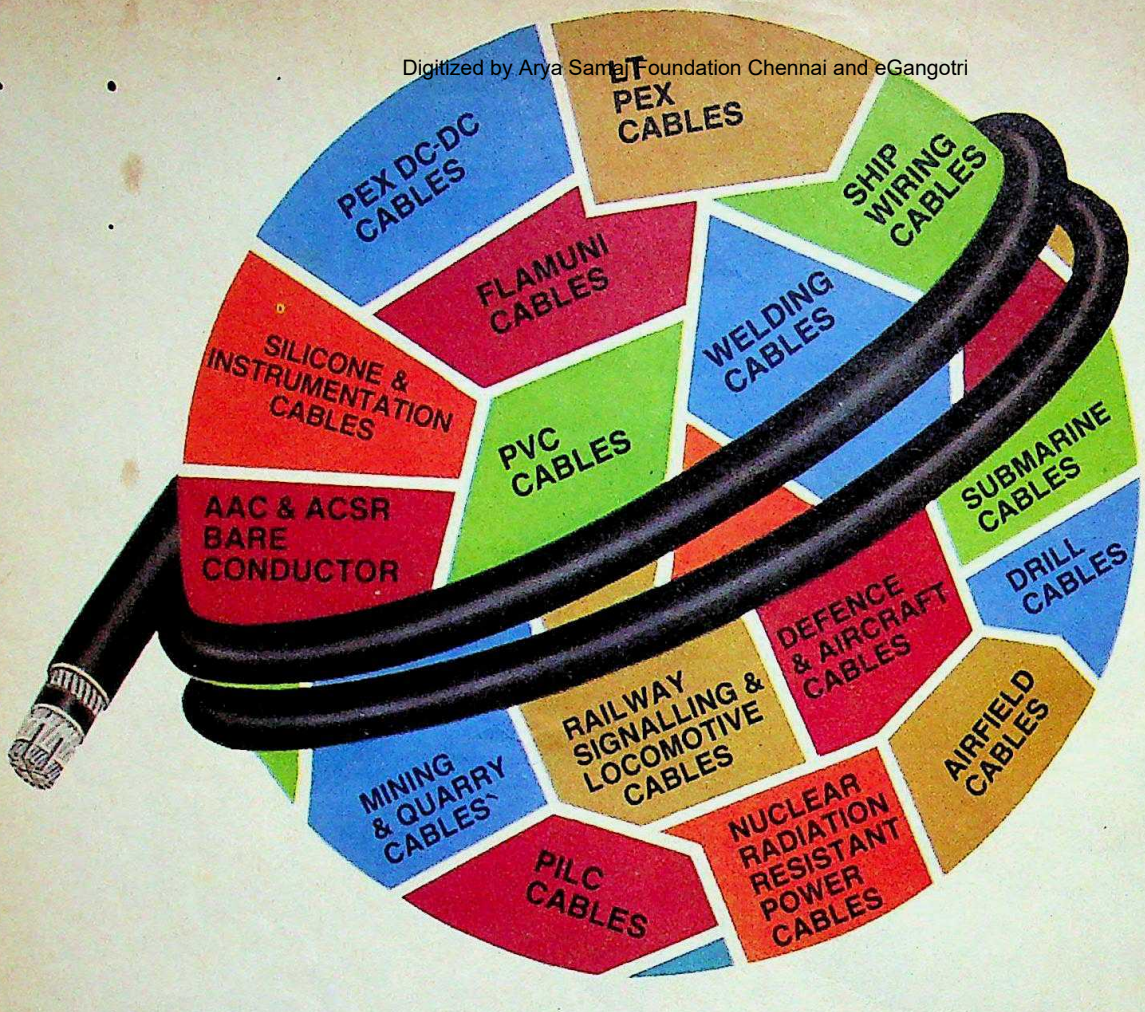
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri





CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



In this world of cables
WE HAVE THEM ALL!

There is a UNISTAR cable for every industrial application. UNISTAR cables are manufactured incorporating the world's most sophisticated technology with assured quality based on the most advanced quality control and R&D available in India. UNISTAR – the widest range of Cables in India.

UNIVERSAL CABLES LIMITED

P.O. Birla Vikas, Satna-485 005 (M.P.)
Tel. 2551, 2552, 2708 □ Telex No. 0766-202

BOMBAY: Industry House, 159 Churchgate Reclamation, Bombay-400 020.
Tel. 202 6340, 202 8019, 202 3170.

BANGALORE: 5, Palace Cross Road, Bangalore-560 020. Tel. 362674, 368179.

CALCUTTA: 27-B, Camac Street, Calcutta 700 016. Tel. 44-4351.

MADRAS: 20, Greams Road, 1st Floor, P.B. No. 737, Madras-600 006.
Tel. 472427, 477551.

NEW DELHI: UCO Bank Building, Parliament Street, New Delhi-110 001.
Tel: 384851, 382750.

UNISTAR®

C... Public ...rain. ... Collection, Haridwar.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AMA-UC-2866

TAGORE

Copyright Duel

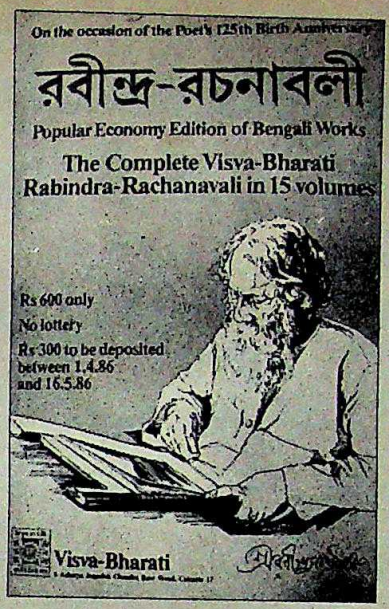
NOBEL laureate Rabindranath Tagore's 125th birth anniversary saw the bard's fans, starting with West Bengal's Marxist rulers, vie with one another in paying him homage. But the glittering functions organised in memory of the man only underscored a vital point—the lamentable lack of effort at popularising his written works. And critics point the accusing finger at Visva Bharati University, the sole copyright holder of his works, for the lapse.

Ironically, the university which has not even bothered to ensure that all of Tagore's works are available in print, is now lobbying to secure an extension of its sole copyright status which expires on December 31, 1991. The only concession made for the anniversary celebrations was the belated announcement that reprints of its 15-volume Rabindra Rachanabali (collected works), would be available for Rs 600, payable in advance. At the same time, its better produced and much-more-sought-after 29-volume Rachanabali has as many as 10 volumes out of print. The university is also not allowing private publishers to bring out any commemorative books incorporating material from Tagore's writings.

"There is absolutely no justification for an extension of the copyright period considering that Tagore's books, including textbooks are in short supply," raged Dadal Bose of Ananda Publishers, Calcutta's largest private publishing house. As he pointed out: "Visva Bharati has done nothing to ensure that Tagore enjoys more popular readership." He is particularly incensed that the university rejected their proposal to print 100 select poems to be chosen by Sahitya Akademi winner Sunil Ganguly.

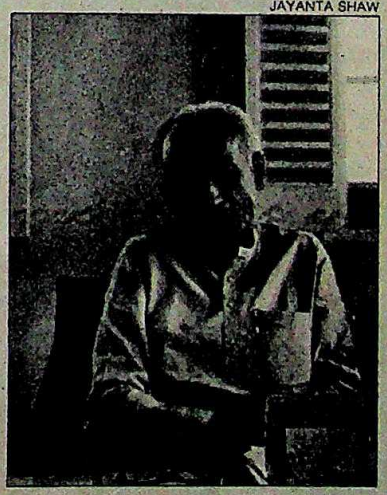
Earlier, the university had turned down a proposal by Ananda Publishers for bringing out the scripts of three Satyajit Ray films based on Tagore's novels—Ghare Baire, Teen Kanya and Charulata. Bose also claims that they are holding onto the copyrights of many important Tagore works without publishing them. A controversial biography of the poet by Prabhat Kumar Mukhopadhyay Rabindra Jiban Katha, was released only after two years of bitter wrangling.

The most devastating criticism of the university is that its publications are not always the most authentic or complete.



Tagore's birth anniversary underscored the lack of effort at popularising his written works. Critics point the accusing finger at Viswa Bharati University.

JAYANTA SHAW



Visva Bharati's Bhaumik

A prominent scholar and member of the university's publications committee says: "The so-called complete works being produced is not actually complete and does not contain significant portions of his political writings, lyrics and correspondence."

On the other hand, the state Government's edition of the collected works is a re-edited version containing all the material put together after Tagore's death in 1941. To top it all, the government edition costs just Rs 360 for 16 volumes compared to the university's Rs 600. Not surprisingly, all 50,000 copies being published by the Government have been booked in advance.

But all such allegations are dismissed by the university as the outpourings of private publishers out to make a fast buck. Said Visva Bharati's Publications Director J. Bhaumik: "We are interested in retaining the copyright after the statutory period not just for financial reasons. We are concerned about maintaining the purity of Rabindranath's works." He avers that private publishers, in their zeal to make money, cannot, be relied upon to bring out correct editions. "I am not saying that they will not bring out good editions but given the poor standard of publishing in this country, there is no guarantee," he adds.

The university is now frenetically lobbying for an extension of its copyright by invoking a UNESCO proposal for special copyright status to authors of national status. "Countries like Denmark, Brazil, Algeria, the GDR and Norway have already acted upon the UNESCO proposal and extended the copyright of their national authors," says Bhaumik. The only hitch with the UNESCO proposal is that the copyright, if extended, would have to be vested with the Government.

This might be difficult to accomplish since a special bill would have to be passed by Parliament. "Such a move would make a mockery of the Copyright Act. India cannot do it being a signatory to the Berne Convention of Copyrights," contended Bose. And reports that the university's influential Vice-Chancellor Professor Nemai Sadhan Bose is lobbying, has dismayed private publishers who have vowed to go to court if the university succeeds. The wrangling is because Tagore is perhaps one of the most lucrative of authors.

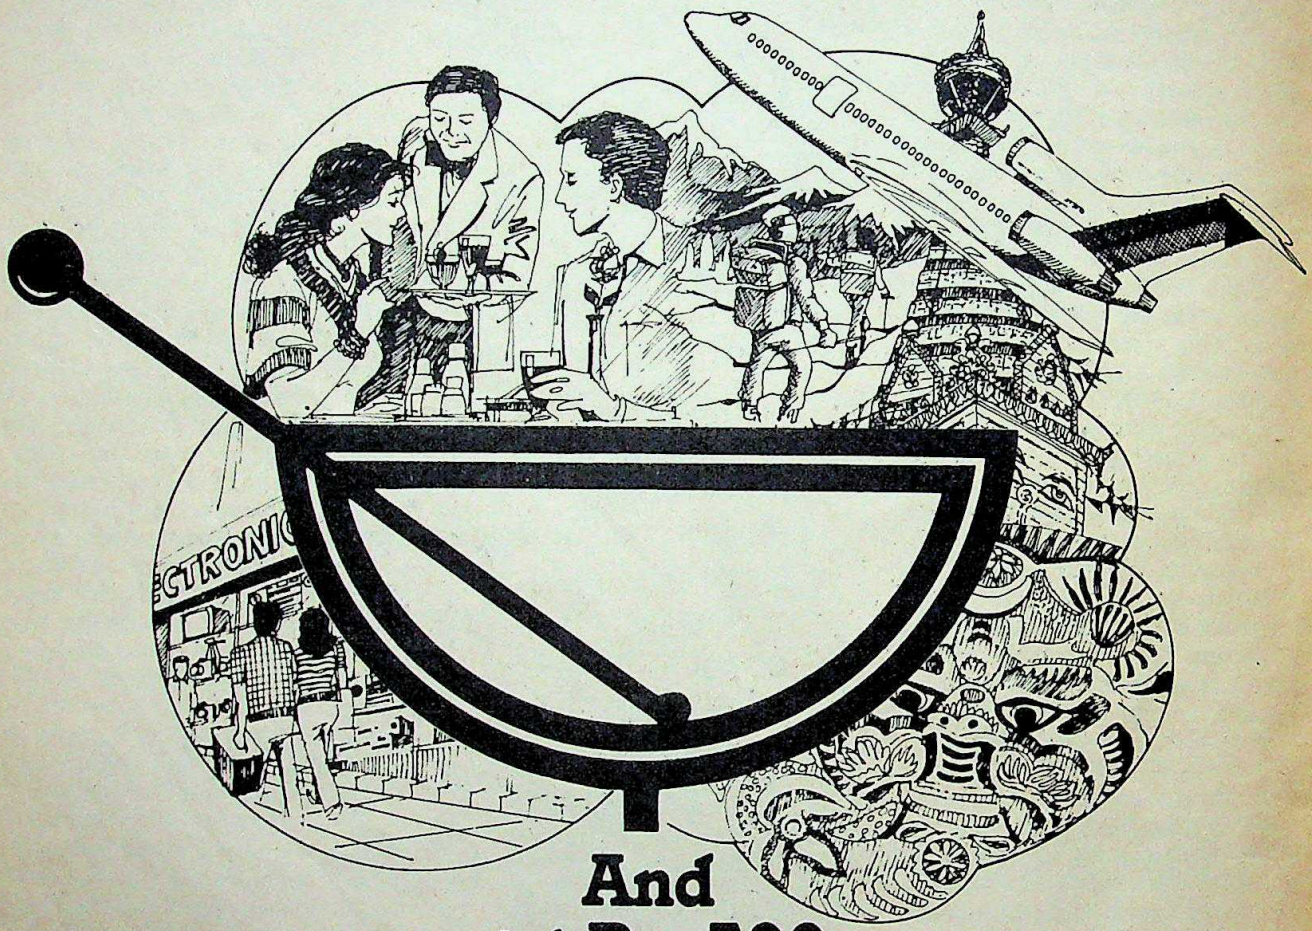
Visva Bharati's sales amounted to Rs 68 lakh in 1984-'85. In the same year, Tagore's 12 novels have sold about 1.14 million copies, making him by far the highest-selling Indian author. His collected works has sold over four lakh copies and demand remains unfulfilled. The Government's 50,000 copies was lapped up in a few weeks. That is, of course, the real reason why Visva Bharati's dog-in-the-manger attitude is causing such literary heartburn.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

This summer try the Nepal Punch.



And get Rs. 500 FREE.

This summer try an unbeatable combination. A holiday in Nepal with Rs. 500 (Nepalese) worth of FREE coupons. Good for your excess baggage, hotel stay, internal flights etc. A very special offer from the Hotel Association Nepal to every fullfare RNAC Delhi-Kathmandu-Delhi passenger. Valid May 1 to Sept. 30. So if you are a family of 4, you get as much as Rs. 2,000 FREE!

And discover a holiday of a lifetime

All the imported goods to shop, with no currency restrictions... mountain treks... temples and ancient architecture... the best hotels in the world to relax and cuisine from the world over to choose from.

Collect your free coupons from your nearest RNAC office or your travel agent.

Hotel Association Nepal.
1304-5, Bluestar Building,
P.O. Box No. 2151, Tripureshwar,
Kathmandu, Nepal

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Let's face it.
Safari is not a showpiece.
It's the luggage that roughs it out. Anywhere.

No matter how you travel, where and how often, Safari endures the worst conditions. That's the honest truth.

That's why we put so much into this luggage. The streamlined look, the sleek contours, the smooth finish are routine for our fanatical craftsmen.

Now consider the raw stamina of Safari. Made of the toughest material in an ultra modern plant, Safari endures shocks, rough handling, the pressure of other luggage on top of it, jerky take offs and turbulent landings. It never gets rattled by anything, anywhere.

Safari. It survives.

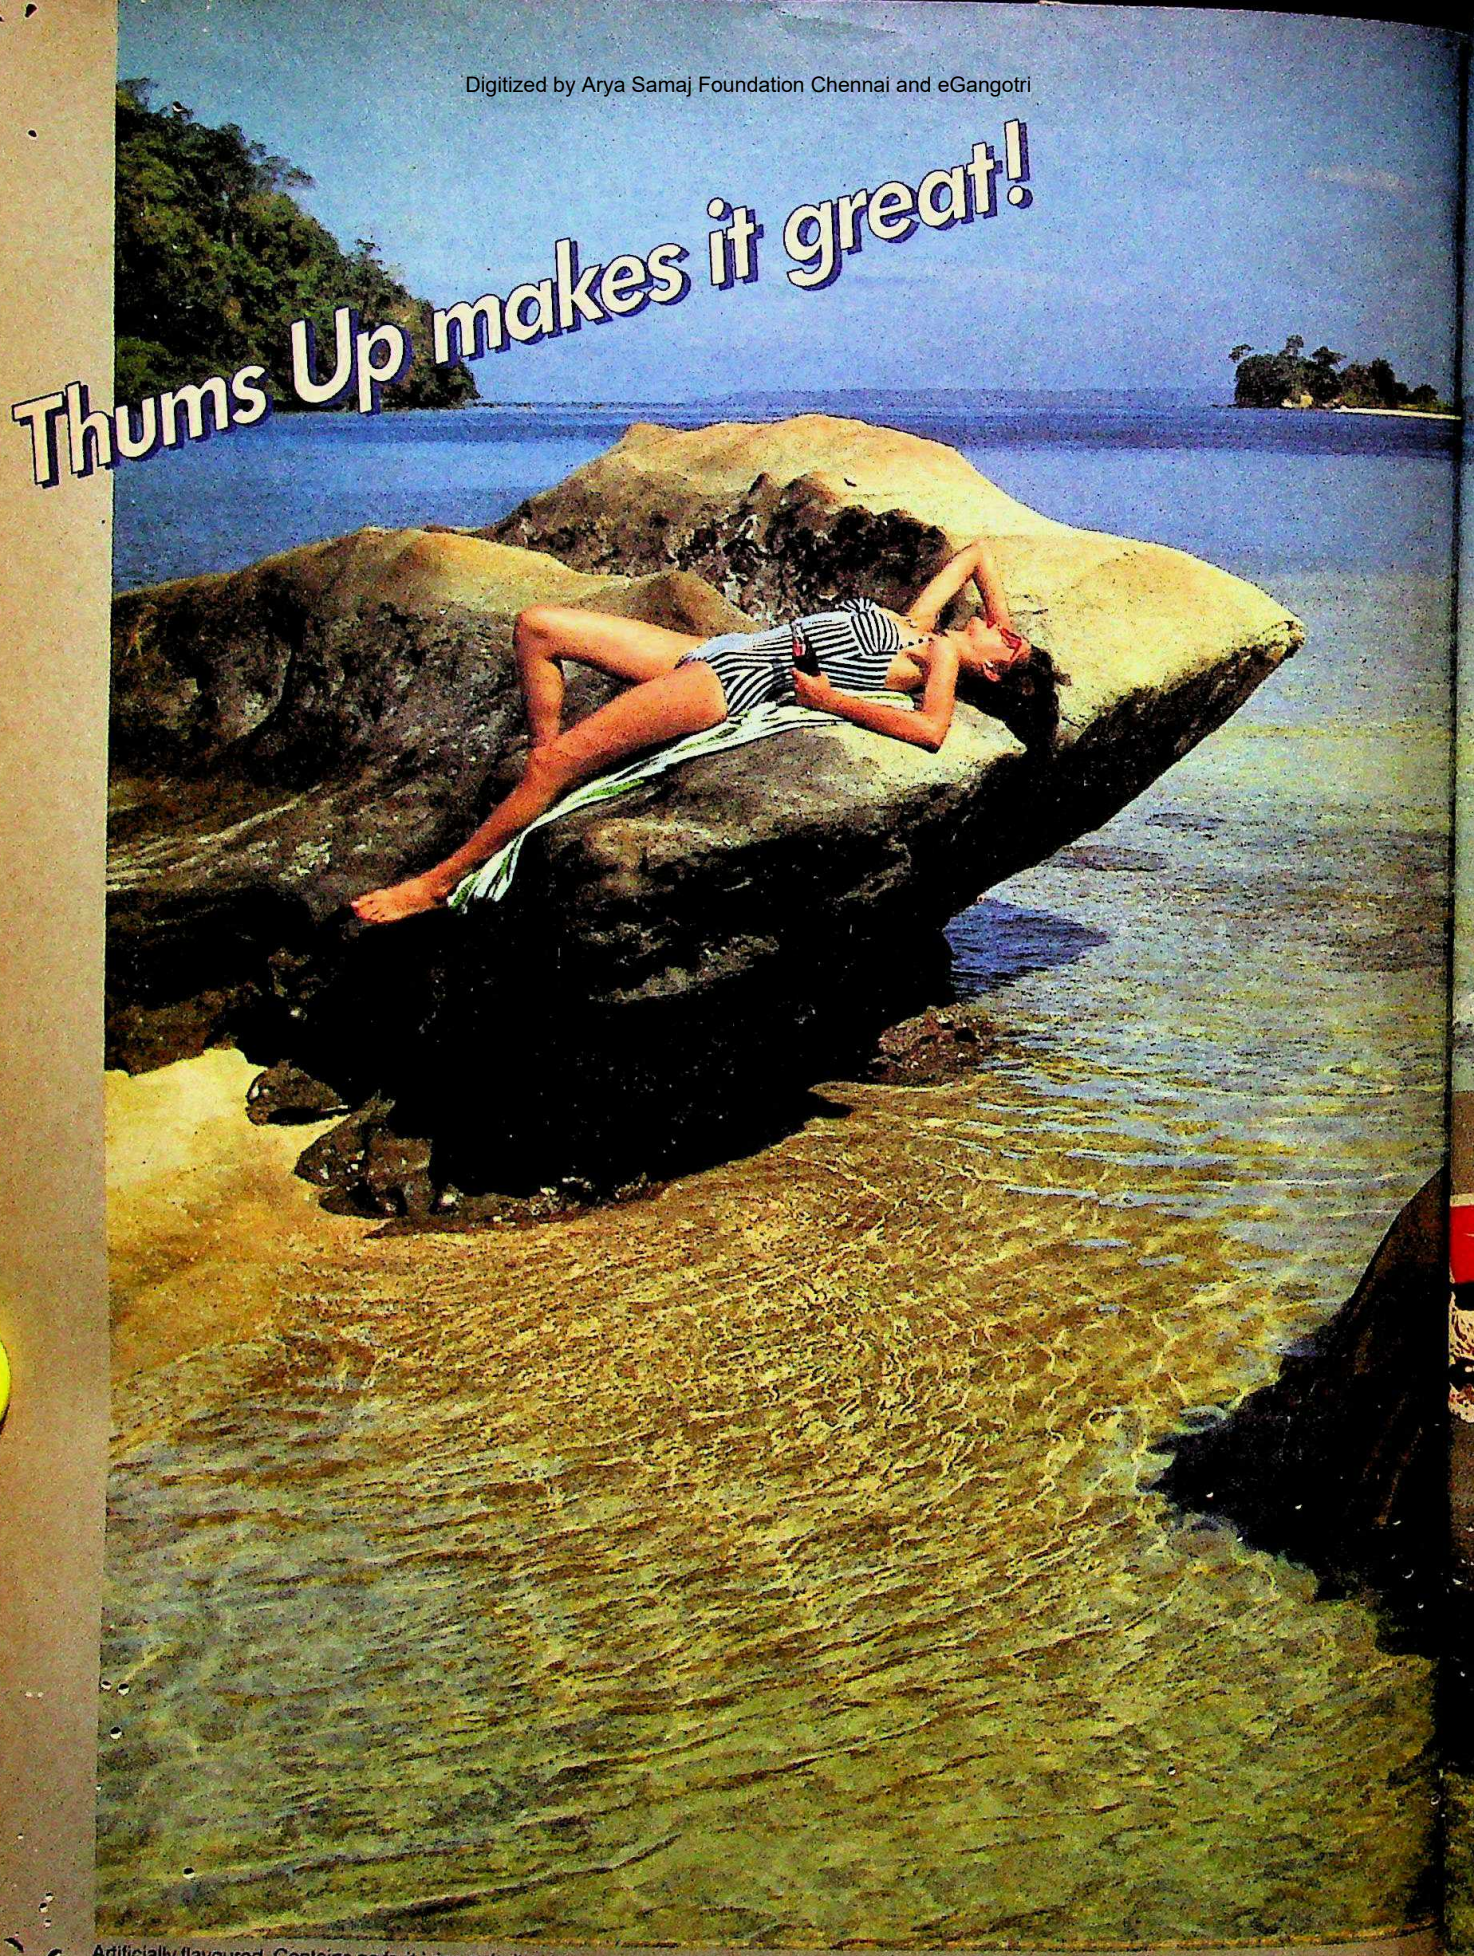
safari

The luggage that knows its business.

ULKA-SL-800-86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



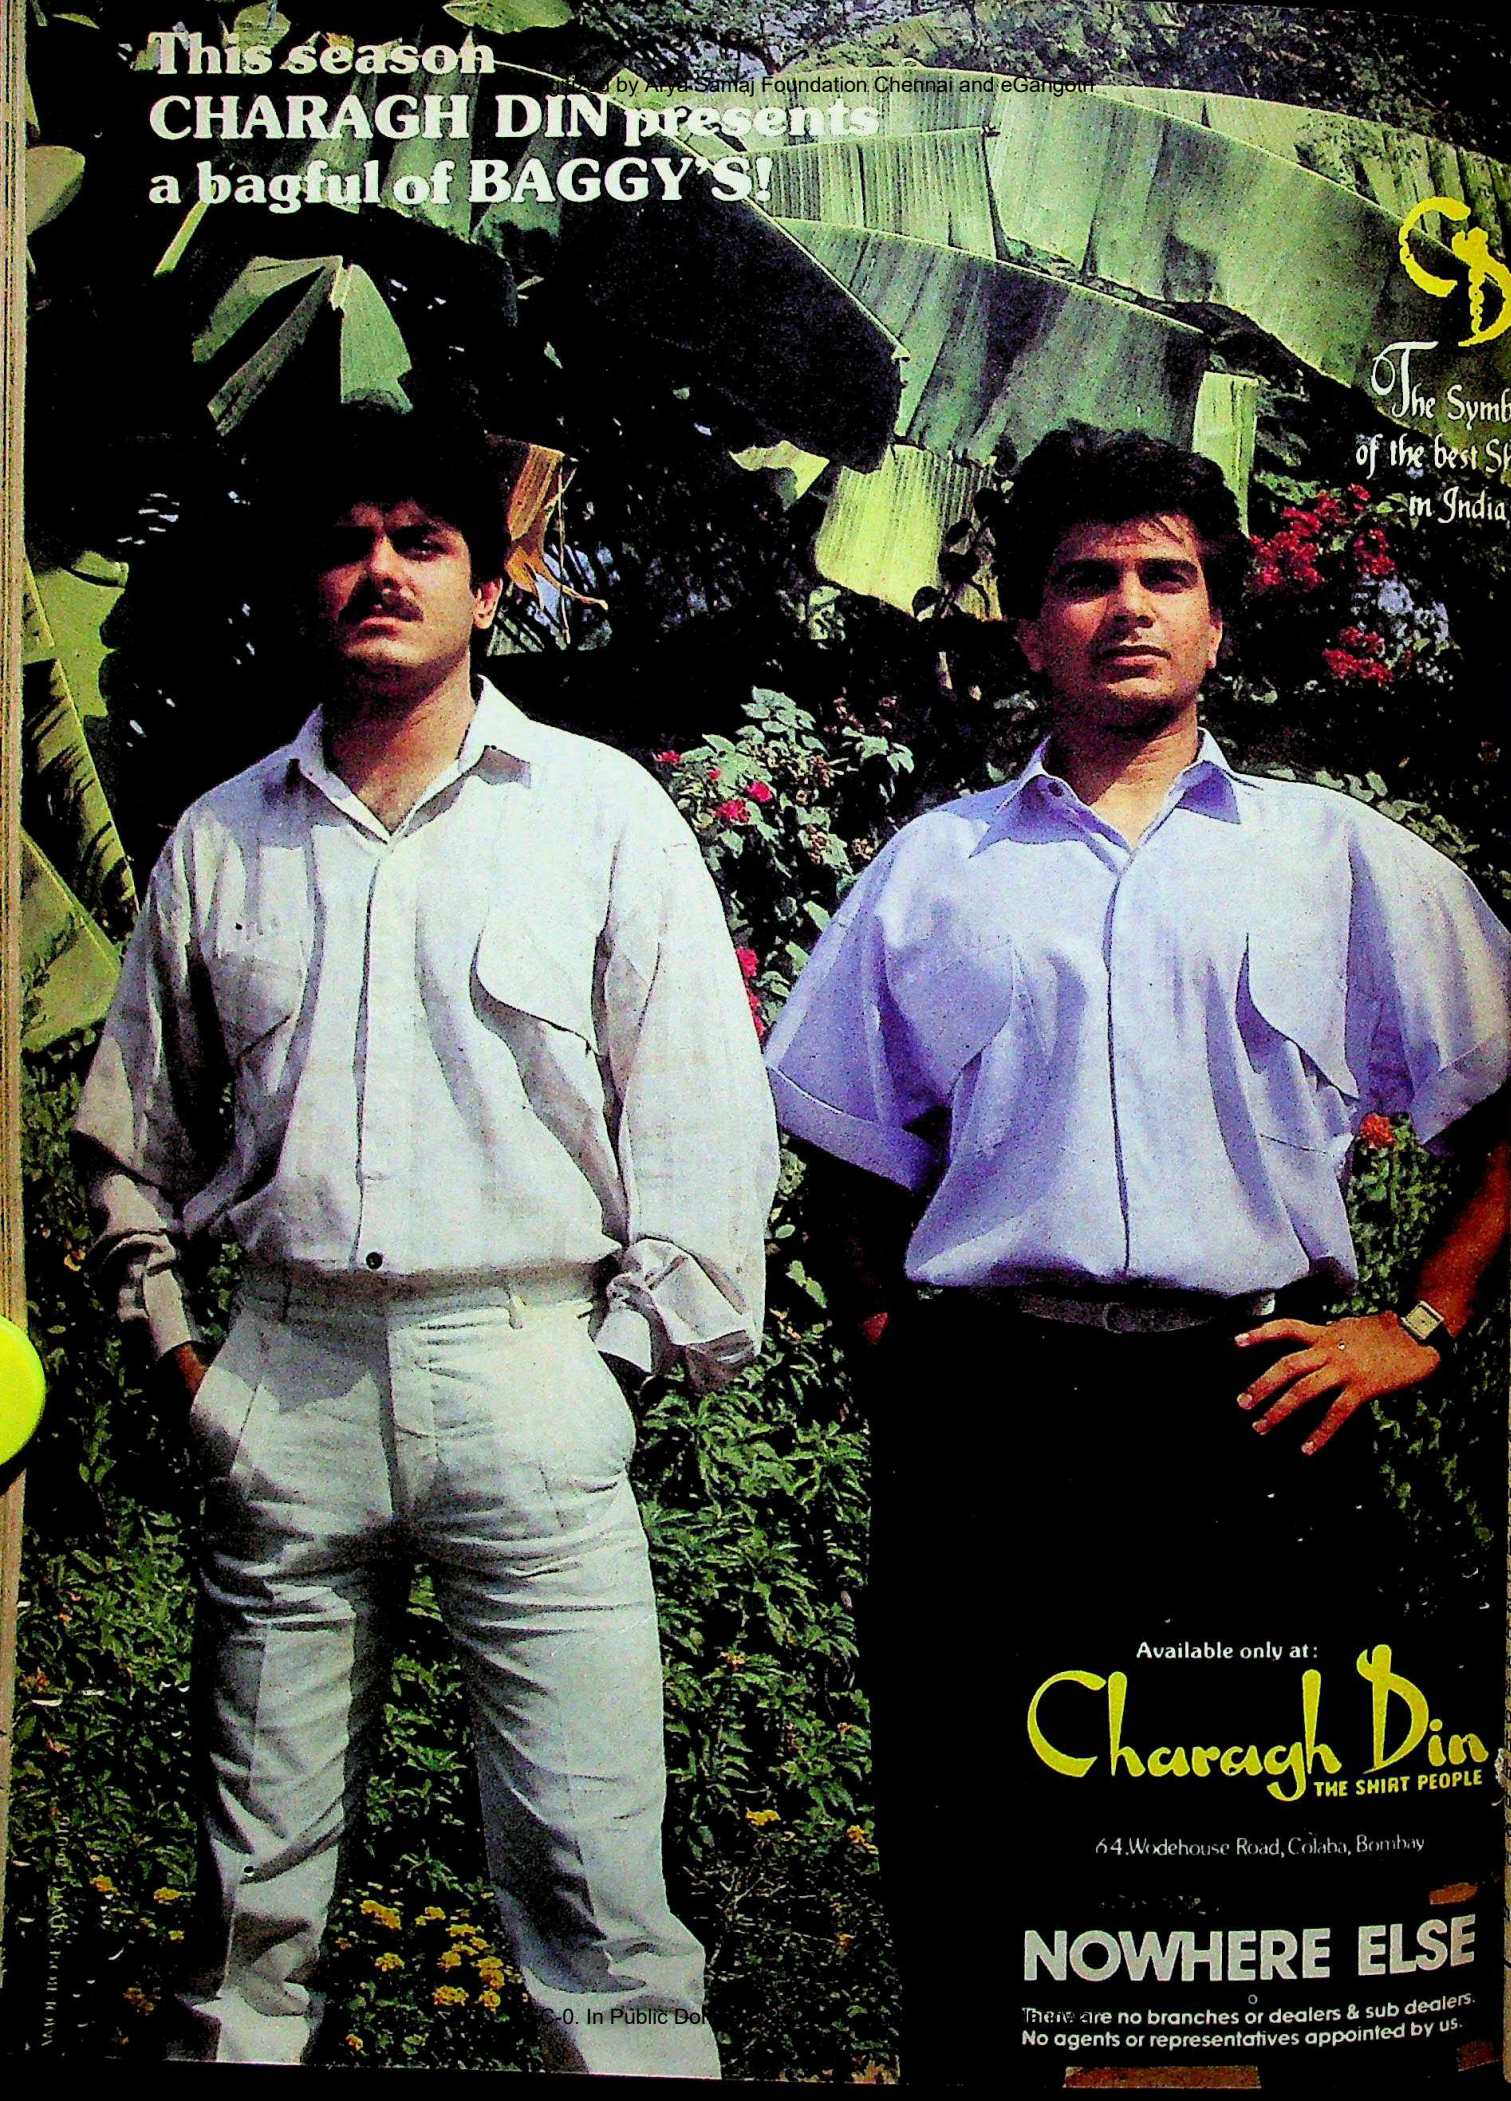
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

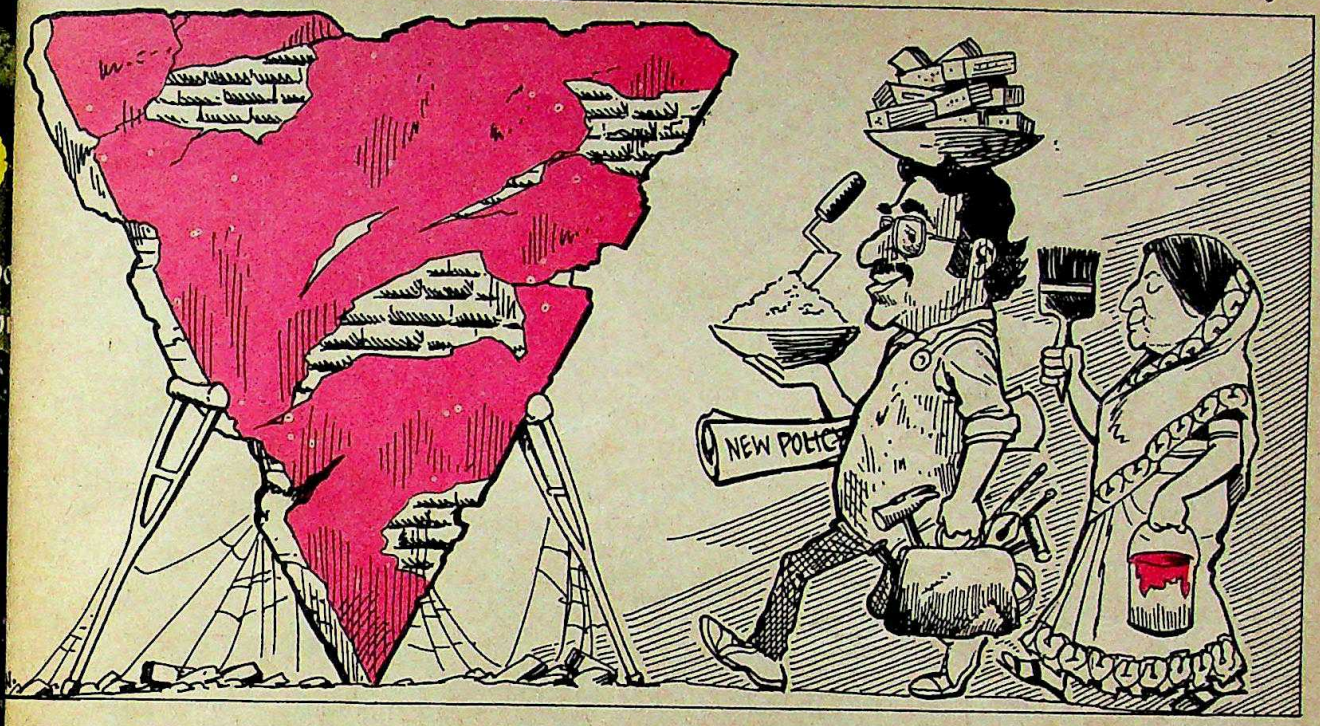
Trikaya.PE.9.86

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



CC-0. In Public Domain.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



AMILY PLANNING

A Giant Leap

FOR OVER eight months now, the Department of Family Welfare in the Union Ministry of Health has been witness to steadily mounting excitement as work on a new family planning strategy gathered pace. Last fortnight, the final nuts and bolts of the policy, which will give the programme a quantum jump, were finally put into place and proudly exhibited to an approving Rajiv Gandhi at a three-hour audio-visual presentation in the Committee Room of the Parliament Annexe.

The stage was thus set for a radically restructured campaign to be launched on September 1, aiming to achieve targets in three years that were originally meant to be reached by 2001! With almost vaulting ambition, the new policy seeks to halve the population growth rate in the next three years, and to halve the infant mortality rate as well. Couples accepting family planning will go up in giant leaps from the present 35 per cent to 60 per cent by August 31, 1989. At that level, family planning experts say, the population will grow at no more than 1 per cent annually, against the 2.2 per cent that has been the rate for the last quarter century.

These goals are to be achieved through the phenomenal task of creating a 2 million-strong corps of women volunteers, in addition to the million family planning staff that already exist, preparing a computerised register of all eligible couples in the country (much like an electoral roll), involving people from all walks of life in a manner that has never been attempted, and offering a whole new range of generous incentives.

With vaulting ambition, the new policy seeks to halve the population growth rate in the next three years, and to halve the infant mortality rate too.

If the aims are ambitious, so has been the effort. Conscious that the family planning programme had reached a plateau, Rajiv Gandhi set out the strategy soon after he took over last year: the programme had to be so recast that it became a people's movement rather than a government programme imposed on a reluctant populace. That, the prime minister said, was the only way to drastically bring down the birth rate, which has stagnated at 3.3 per cent after 1979.

Following this, in March 1985, Arun Singh, then Gandhi's parliamentary secretary, summoned three market research agencies—MARG, MRAS and Mode—and commissioned them to do a study of attitudes to family planning. Five states—Uttar Pradesh, Madhya Pradesh, Rajasthan and Bihar (the Hindi belt, where the programme has been slack) and Maharashtra (a representative case)—were parcelled out and a record 32,000 respondents interviewed. Singh's brief to the agencies was simple: don't ask us for any directions or data, find out and tell us what is holding up the programme.

After Singh became a minister, K. Krishna Kumar, 47, the deputy minister of health and family welfare, took over the baton. The research findings established that there were good socio-economic-cum-cultural reasons why large families were preferred, and that the main drawbacks of the family planning programme were under-utilisation of the infrastructure and the poor quality of services. But the good news was that the cumulative impact of the 35-year-old programme had prepared it for lift-off.

Also, a good base had been laid by last year's performance, which recorded a new high of 19 million acceptors, 20

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA'S BIGGEST FURNACE

ORDERED BY HEC BUILT BY GEC

For HEC's 60-tonne UHP Arc Furnace, GEC beat stiff competition to win India's biggest furnace order.

Sixty tonne ultra-high-power electric arc furnace, the country's biggest indigenously-built furnace. To be designed, manufactured, installed and commissioned by GEC Furnace Division for Heavy Engineering Corporation, Ranchi. A triumph of technology and value.

HEC will use this furnace to produce large forgings and castings for thermal power plant turbines. The furnace will be equipped with a range of exclusive features: water-cooled side panels, roof and secondary conductors, split shell cage construction, micro-processor based automatic melt-control, high-power thyristor controlled DC drives and a mechanised charging system.

YET ANOTHER GEC FIRST

Furnace specialists of long standing, GEC built India's first arc furnace, heat treatment furnace, channel furnace, induction tube welder, medium frequency induction melting furnace with static inverter generator, axle shaft hardening machine, UHP arc furnace and ladle refining furnace.

To customers, the GEC UHP arc furnace is a high-value product of update technology and wide experience. Backed by invaluable GEC engineering, from concept to commissioning.

GEC FURNACE DIVISION

The General Electric Company of India Limited
1 Taratalla Road Calcutta 700 024.

GEC First in Furnaces with Range and Technology

TRADE MARK GEC REGISTERED USER – THE GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY OF INDIA LIMITED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

per cent over 1984-85 and 40 per cent over the previous high of 1976-77. Particularly impressive was the growth in the four Hindi-belt states. This established that the climate in the country had become favourable for a massive thrust on the population front.

The new policy also incorporated the cumulative wisdom of all the 125-odd studies carried out by the Department of Family Welfare ever since family planning was made part of government policy in 1951. Says Kumar, who called three national-level seminars on family planning before hammering out the new policy: "The policy reflects the broadest possible consensus of expert opinion in the country on family planning." Adds Union Minister for Health Mohsina Kidwai: "Ensuring people's participation in the family planning programme is the main thrust of the new policy."

Specifically, the most important new steps proposed are:

► Shifting the accent from sterilisations to spacing children. No target has been set but the number of couples practising preventive methods at the end of the campaign will be far in excess of the 14.5 million couples target for the seventh plan.

► Preparing an eligible couples register, pretty much like an electoral roll, which will be displayed at all 83,000 health sub-centres and also given to the million workers in the family planning programme as their 'medicentre catchment area'.

► Setting up popular FP committees in every one of the thousands of blocks and panchayats in the country, with the participation of officials, non-officials and opinion-makers.

► Creating a women's corps of 2 million volunteers, with each volunteer being assigned 60 couples to work with, modelled on the neighbourhood health worker scheme in China. The volunteers, all of them acceptors, will have the incentive that the best among them will be given regular government jobs in the programme.

► Establishing the two-child norm by providing more incentives for couples limiting families to two children. These will include an 'honoured citizen' status entitling them to extra benefits, an old age pension for the needy, low-premium insurance policies and a national lottery. To counter the preference for sons, long-term bonds maturing at the time of marriage will be given free to those with two daughters.

► Using the skills of four lakh practitioners of Indian systems of medicines for the programme.

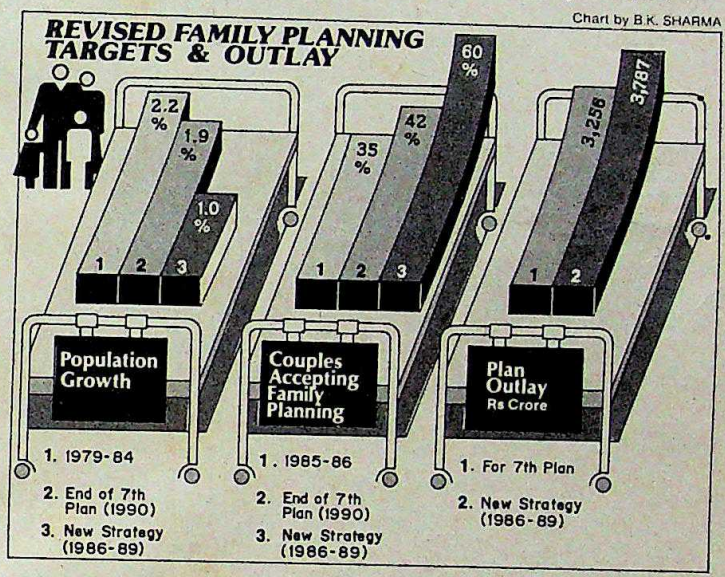
► Involving the organised industrial sector (which has 25 million employees) by making it obligatory for all industrial units to provide incentives and family planning services to employees.

► Involving the corporate sector by giving tax incentives not only for activities directly related to the programme (like running a medicentre) but also for linked activities, like employing adolescent girls in areas where child marriages are common.

► Involving the country's 35,000 cooperatives (with a membership of 120 million) by creating FP cells in all apex cooperatives.

► Making FP motivation part of the curriculum for the country's 50,000 medical students.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA



THE POLICY also recognises that the programme cannot succeed until it tackles the social realities which have a bearing on the size of the family, for instance the low status of women in society. Thus, the new strategy outlines various action plans for delaying marriages and raising the female literacy rate. For the former it suggests removing the lacunae in the Child Marriages Act and giving incentives for keeping girls in schools; for the latter, it suggests a linkage with the Department of Education's crash programme to increase female literacy in nine backward states.

Similarly, it also pays great importance to reducing infant mortality through universal immunisation, promotion of breast feeding and oral rehydration therapy. Again, the woman volunteer will not only preach family planning to her target couples; she will also propagate the entire range of government policies with a bearing on the health and status of the woman and her child.

The new policy also attempts to tie up with the Government's ambitious anti-poverty programmes, since poverty and high fertility feed on each other. The 'honoured citizen' card, for instance, will entitle holders to extra benefits under the anti-poverty programmes. Says Kumar: "We expect that people with small families will rise faster above the poverty line."

The working of the family planning departments will be streamlined. The eligibility couple register will be computerised; the National Informatics Centre has assured the ministry that this can be done. Avenues for promotion will be opened up for FP workers. Programme management will be improved at all levels.

The policy will mean an additional expenditure of Rs 531 crore more than the Rs 3,256 crore sanctioned for family planning in the seventh plan. Though the Government is yet to formally adopt the new policy, work has already begun to establish the inter-ministry and inter-department linkages that will be necessary. Rajiv is taking a personal interest in working out the details: apart from sitting through the three-hour presentation, he also held an hour-long meeting to identify the linkages necessary. Says Kumar: "Once the campaign gets under way, the next 36 months will be like 36 waves for us. Even if we do not achieve all our targets we will go far beyond the seventh plan goals." And there are few who will grudge Kidwai and Kumar the accolades if the new strategy does eventually mark a giant leap for the programme.

—AJAY KUMAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

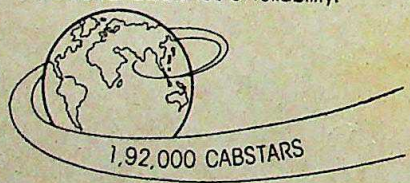
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Move the 'right' way ...

... as BEST, Bombay, Delhi and Andhra Pradesh Police, Electricity Boards and many private fleet operators are doing today. Because Allwyn Nissan Cabstar is a proven vehicle that not only gives optimum performance over a wide range of payloads but also permits a wide range of applications.

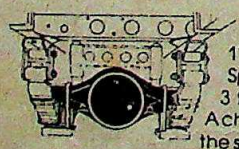
A vehicle proven beyond any doubt

Priced lowest for the class of features offered, Allwyn Nissan Cabstar has already shown its superiority. The proof: the performance of over 1600 Cabstars on the Indian roads; and that, of 1,92,000 Cabstars throughout the world ... That's the Cabstar assurance of reliability.



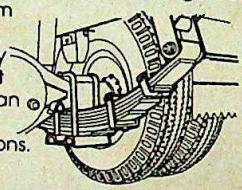
Strength that others can't match

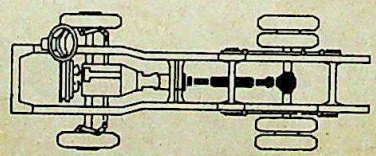
The 75HP Cabstar engine is extremely powerful. Power that's backed up by many unmatched features, apparent from just one quick look.



A pressed steel rear axle that's 1½ times stronger. Springs that are 3 times stronger. A chassis with double the strength.

A single- piece propeller shaft that's 50% bigger and two times stronger. A corrugated body for maximum strength. In short., a vehicle specially engineered to last longer under Indian road, load and operating conditions.

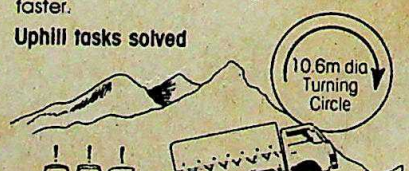




Easy does it

A major constraint overcome : low-flat bed platform with three sides opening, makes loading, unloading easier and faster.

Uphill tasks solved



Its gradeability is 29%. Result : it climbs where other LCVs struggle.

Again, its tight turning circle – 10.6m game for any sharp bends. Add to it line circuit brakes, absent in some c latest vehicles. Six wheels, as agains conventional four, make tyres last lo aided by uniform load distribution, er by the structure of the vehicle.

A nice place to work

Unlike other LCVs, a noiseless, vibra free, spacious cab, adjustable seat latest dashboard instruments, all-we ventilation, single piece windshield, easy steering and a hundred and one innovative features, make driving safe, and a real pleasure.

The right commercial vehicle

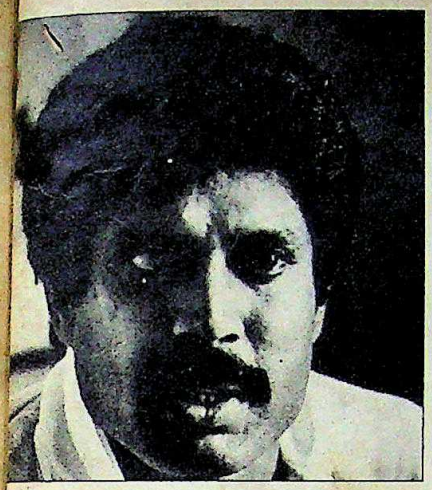
Allwyn Nissan Cabstar easily wins on p to performance ratio... More load on less Minimum maintenance cost and excelle dealer network for efficient after-sales service. Ready availability of spares. Gre versatility and reliability. Sleek look. Tomorrow's design features... Yet price low... That's Allwyn Nissan Cabstar, the Right Commercial Vehicle, far more profit for diverse transportation needs.

NISSAN NISSAN

ALLWYN NISSAN LIMITED
Allwyn Bhavan, Sanathnagar,
Hyderabad 500 018

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



ndon Express Press

Kapil (left) and Vengsarkar en route to his century: setting the pace spinners in the game today. With Kapil back among the wickets in a user-friendly climate and Sharma showing new-found aggression, the much-maligned Indian attack was suddenly seen firing away on all cylinders.

Till the Test win, however, it had been a dismal tour for the Indians, saddled with the first half of the English summer for the second consecutive time due to the ineptness of the Indian cricket board. Rain had robbed 40 per cent of the playing time in the run-up matches against the counties and apart from highly professional performances in the two one-day internationals, there were no signs of visible enthusiasm for the Indian visitors.

In fact, the spotlight in the first month of the tour was hogged by off-the-field events as Indians had numerous complaints about loony gate keepers, obstinate "old ladies" and insensitive officials. Some of the "incidents" seem trifling, but team members felt that they were too numerous and were representative of the general lackadaisical attitude of the hosts. Amongst them:

► Raj Singh, the popular and articulate manager of the team, was made to stand around and wait for 20 minutes at Old Trafford for his team's complimentary tickets while officials nearby pretended to be busy.

► Vice-captain Ravi Shastri was turned away from the Texaco (one-day) Trophy post-match cocktail party by a mulish usher because he did not have a printed invitation. In fact. no one had been issued invitations. The entire team boycotted the reception.

► At various county matches Indians were refused "second helpings" of deserts by crotchety "old ladies" guarding the ice cream as though they were the crown jewels. The south Indian members of the team—inveterate coffee drinkers—were consistently refused coffee since only tea was being served. Things improved only after Singh threatened to order hampers from the team's hotel.

► Sunil Gavaskar—now on his eighth visit to Britain—was stopped outside Lord's by another of these over-zealous commissars who seem to spring up all the time in these important cricketing venues without the foggiest notion of who the players are.

These series of events were reminiscent of a graver incident involving Gavaskar four years ago at The Oval. Fielding at silly point to Ian Botham, he took a crunching blow on his ankle, fracturing it in the process. He was rushed to the hospital by Singh with no other English official. At the hospital, Singh had to ring the hospital superintendent for having an X-ray done on Gavaskar and threaten to call the press before action was forthcoming.

ALTHOUGH the incidents clearly irritated the Indian team, Raj Singh, prudent as ever, played them down, attributing them to "mismanagement" and "lack of detail". Unlike in India, there is no liaison officer between the team and the county officials. The Test and County Cricket Board (TCCB) has to be contacted for every trifling need.

After the TCCB's attention was drawn to the matter, things improved dramatically. Said a player with a chuckle: "Even naans and Indian curries were served at Lord's, perhaps for the first time." Explains Singh: "We have a young team. A happy team and a very healthy one. Some of the boys work hard and work up an appetite. So if they want second helpings, why deny it to them?"

The Indian win will not only mean that crotchety county hosts will take the team more seriously, but also that cricket pundits will need to reassess a side they had dismissed as having "depth in batting" and a "competent one-day side", but lacking the ability to bowl England out twice. Especially for players like Phil Edmonds, the Indian win might have had a strangulating effect. In his new book with Simon Barnes, Edmonds predicted a cakewalk win over India after the catastrophic West Indian tour. The last over when India won and which Edmonds bowled, was rich in irony as Kapil cut, drove and pulled him for three fours and a six. The TCCB, in its own way, is pleased at India's fine win at Lord's, since at both Headingley and Edgbaston sell-out crowds are expected.

—RAMESH CHANDRAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TIMES OF INDIA

Changing Face

THE TIMES, they'r a finally changin.' Six months after speculation about changes in the top hierarchy of the multi-edition The Times of India, arguably India's leading newspaper, began circulating in journalistic circles, rumours turned into fact last fortnight. From July 1, Arun Shourie, 45, will take over as the paper's executive editor in charge of all news coverage. The formal announcement came only late last week after Shourie was called to Bombay, though Ashok Jain, chairman of the Bennett Coleman and Company, the paper's owner, and his son, Samir, had been talking to Shourie for several months. Said Ashok Jain: "We are happy Arun Shourie has joined us. There are only two winners of the Magsaysay award for journalism in India—Shourie and R.K. Laxman—and we are proud to have both of them with us."

Shourie's was not the only decision taken in a fortnight that was marked by much commuting of the company's top brass between Bombay, Delhi and Calcutta; even the fate of Girilal Jain, the paper's editor since October 1977, was finally decided. Jain, who should have retired on July 26, 1983, but was on a three-year extension, will finally leave the paper at the end of the year. With these twin decisions, the stage has been set for the drastic, if gradual, overhaul of the paper that the slim and soft-spoken Samir Jain, 32, has been advocating for over a year in the face of stiff resistance from the paper's editors including Girilal Jain.

For the Times, this prolonged tussle has been debilitating. Two senior journalists, Delhi resident editor Inder Malhotra and senior assistant editor Prem Shankar Jha, quit in the last two months as word spread that Samir Jain was looking for outside talent. Malhotra did not disclose his reasons for leaving but an insider revealed that he put in his papers two days after Samir Jain circulated his first note on January 30 saying, among other things: "The job of an editor is not just writing fiery columns or editorials." Jha, on the contrary, made it clear that he was quitting because he was opposed to the policy of bringing in outsiders.

Though Girilal Jain does not agree with Jha's stand, he showed what he thought of Shourie's appointment by reproducing, on the day after it was finally decided to take him on, an extract on the paper's edit page from a recent article in the British magazine Spectator in which Paul Johnson had argued that while proprietors were free to hire editors, all other appointments were the sole prerogative of the editor. Shourie was first contacted by the owners, though Girilal Jain admitted that he "was a party to the final decision".

Girilal jain (left); Shourie and Samir

Arun Shourie's appointment, with Girilal Jain's concurrence, marks the beginning of the changes proposed by The Times of India's heir, Samir Jain.

After the appointment letter to Shourie was issued, Ashok Jain said: "We want to expand our organisation and Shourie's appointment is an important step in that direction." Samir Jain, who believes that people in the company should not talk to each other through the press, could not be reached for his comment. Shourie was contacted but did not wish to say anything.

But Girilal Jain, who has long been wrestling with the dilemma posed by Samir Jain's proposed changes, said: "I knew that change was necessary but what I questioned was whether it was practical. Besides, I am an old-fashioned editor who believes in the primacy of the editorial page. But my relationship with the Jains has never been strictly employer-employee so I could not even say 'no' to them. I have been wanting to quit but finally agreed to stay on to give the Jains some breathing time to introduce the changes."

Girilal Jain and other senior members of the Times staff in Delhi, including special correspondents and assistant editors, who submitted a memorandum against the changes proposed by Samir Jain to Ashok Jain, were upset not so much by what Samir Jain has been advocating, as by the act of intervention of the management in the running of the paper. Said Girilal Jain: "We have had a most non-interfering management. When Samir suddenly started calling the shots, many of us found it difficult to adjust."

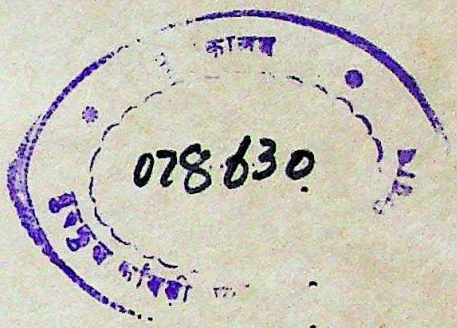
The specifics of what Shourie will do have not been made public though Shourie met Ashok Jain, Samir Jain and Ram Tarneja, the managing director, first in Delhi and then in Bombay. The crucial questions still begging for an answer were: Would Girilal Jain's authority be reduced only to the editorial page? Or would a separate executive editor (views) be hired as was done by Samir Jain in the Navbharat Times? What happens when Girilal Jain goes? Girilal Jain says categorically: "As long as I am there, I am the boss," but also has no hesitation in admitting that even though he may be going only by the end of the year, mentally he has already quit.

All that is certain is that the Rs 80-crore Times of India group will continue to face turbulence till such time as the changes are accepted down the line. With Shourie in charge, readers of the "old lady of Bori Bunder", as the paper is often rightly described, are in for a jolt or two. And, most important, with brother-in-law Suman Dubey slated to take over as editor of the Indian Express from the same date, news coverage in two of the country's leading newspapers will come to take precedence over comment. The face of Indian newspapers is finally changing: exit the thinker-editor, and enter the hands-on editor.

—AJAY KUMAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

VA 123/1/09

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri